As each one spoke into the microphones of assorted broadcasters, it occurred to me that they had become part and parcel of the first Real People campaign. They were added to the burgeoning list of publicly certified Real People.

Real People? Sometime in the last few elections, we stopped talking average voters. It seems that nobody wants to be a mathematical mean in this Lake Wobegon of a country where all the children are expected to be above average. Nowadays, hardly anyone running for office refers to his or her constituents as ordinary people. The word ordinary has become a synonym for dull.

Nor does anyone wax lyrically today about the little people of America. The venerable notion of the common people has become both uncommon and unpopular. Even talking about Joe Sixpack is seen as talking down to Joe Sixpack. Not to mention his wife.

At the same time, we became so subdivided and targeted by class, race, gender, region and ZIP codes that it was hard to find a single word that applied to every person or even every registered voter. So we have opted for "real people."

The fact that we look to Real People, that we prefer the questions they ask and the answers they give, that we find trustworthy, is surely connected to our growing suspicion about experts. We have turned away from a passion for expertise to a search for authenticity. A desire to find the real thing.

This search started long before this campaign or even the Coke commercials. It began when people grew cynical about actors selling products and the advertisers moved on to such characters as Frank Perdue, Lee Iacocca and Victor Kiam. Today, advertisers in pursuit of the patina of authenticity, shoot commercials as if they were documentaries or home videos.

As a trend, the shelf life of Real People may be fairly short. The spotlight can turn the fresh face into the famous and therefore the dubious. Turn a camera on and any political outsider can become an insider.

But so far, the un-star-studded cast of Real People at debates and on television, have become out hit parade. Something refreshing has happened. Mark it down in your datebook. In the campaign of 1992, real people were the real thing.

Billy Joel at Villanova? It happened

By SUSAN SFARRA

Waking from a nap one fine afternoon, I rubbed my eyes and gazed around my room. My bleary eyes skimmed across the familiar objects and came to rest upon something glimmering in the far corner of the room. Slowly, my eyes began to focus on a white object. Curious, I crossed the room to investigate. Bending down I picked up what turned out to be ... the White Book, I mean the Blue Book (my confusion is understandable).

Disappointed by my discovery I began to toss the Blue Book aside once again, when for some strange reason (I attribute this act to not being fully awake) I opened the Blue Book and began to page through it. The usual policies were spelled out (yawn). Then, reaching the monthly calendars of events, I noticed these interesting little blue entries. I read on. As it turned out, this was not just an ordinary Blue Book but the Sesquicentennial edition which listed various events occurring on campus throughout the past 150 years.

Suddenly, I was filled with anger, disgust and envy. I felt cheated. In this book were names like Harry Chapin, Billy Joel, Peter, Paul and Mary, The Righteous Brothers and James Taylor. They had all performed at the Field House (and at the time of their performances were rather popular). Think about it, even the Tommy Dorsey Orchestra was a hot band for a 1937 Villanova Junior Prom.

Yes, I felt cheated. What do we get in 1992? A James Taylor look-alike! Dave Binder's "Fire and Rain" performance was alright, but how about the real thing?

The other day I was discussing this issue with a friend of mine, Andrew Eldrich. He agreed that good musical entertainment is sorely lacking on the Villanova campus. Furthermore, Andrew made an interesting point. He said, "The lack of entertainment on campus is sending students (many of whom are underage) to the local bars." I agree with him. Now, I am not saying that the absence of entertainment on campus can be directly related to drinking among students. I am just pointing out that the closest live entertainment offered is at places like 23 East Cabaret, The Main Lion and Marita's, which are bars.

Alright, but you don't have to go to a bar to hear live music. Great bands can be found at The Tower and The Mann, but why should students be forced to take the train or drive to be entertained? Aren't we trying to foster a community atmosphere on campus? Why not get some of these same bands that students go to see at these places to perform at Villanova?

Ah, but it is not that easy. While the Student Programming Council (SPC) is programming, individual clubs have shown interest in bringing bands to campus. However, because of the monopoly the SPC has over sponsoring concerts, these groups cannot offer music to the rest of the student population.

I am not blaming the SPC. I understand there must be a lot of headaches and red tape they have to deal with in organizing a concert. I imagine it costs money to get a decent group. The people in duPont Pavilion do not seem very cooperative (once the basketball floor is down, it is down for good). Also, there was not much support for the last concert which featured hometown boy Tommy Conwell. Give the SPC some credit; they tried. They booked someone who could offer relatively cheap tickets and scheduled the concert around other university functions. Yet, in trying to please everyone, the SPC succeeded in pleasing no one. If planning a concert is really that difficult, why not ask for some help from those groups that are interested in giving Villanova some good entertainment? Try scaling things down. Start with some smaller bands and work from there. Just try something.

Yes, this is Villanova's 150th anniversary celebration. The administration is celebrating with some "fun" symposia lectures, "Alternate Visions of Catholic Education" and "Leadership, Human Values and Advocacy" just to name two. Oh, and "The Music of Two Worlds" festival looks great. It is very cultural and everything but how about the students who are not interested in Latin-American and Spanish music and dance?

I am glad I found that Blue Book. Paging through it I was not only reminded of Villanova's pride in its past, but made aware of the need for Villanova's pride in its present, and its future. This is a time for Villanovans to celebrate, and I ask you, "What better way to celebrate than with music?"

Tom and Pete — I was so impressed by your readings! Maybe next time you'll show up . . . how do you expect the world to recognize genius when they don't have a chance to hear it? How very literary. Pete: I don't know why I liked 'nic-wit' so much, but I really did. Thanks for the laugh. Tom: you may be funny. You may be verbose. You may be editor-in-chief. And, granted, you are a Villanova male. But you're wrong! Maybe most 'Nova chicks are true to form, but we're not all that bad. There are a few exceptions. Take heart.

To the owner of a red Ford Taurus station wagon that was parked in the side lot Thurs., Oct. 29: I think you might have something of mine. Don't laugh. It was cold. Your car door was unlocked. We took shelter for a few minutes! Who knew I'd leave a jacket behind? Contact the Villanovan office to return it if you can. Thanks.

Fletch (C.B.) — Good luck w/your new career. Don't pick up those good habits that your mother and I never taught you. Let apathy and laziness be your guide. Love, Pappy Tenaj — The horror forced upon you is almost over. Time to torture our buddy Chad. Love, J.

19 West and friends: Rob — who owns that red Ford Taurus? J: squeaky squeaky. KC: we've all heard your singing — Don't give up your day job. D: a child in a nightgown, aren't there laws? Kath: read the feat. sect. Al: on his shoulders? In a dress?

TA and Ms. Modesty: Thanks for all the support you've given me over the past few weeks. You're the best. (This time I'm saying it.) Biggen

He said: love is not at 'Nova

By TOM COLLINS
Editor in Chief

There are a few things immediately thought of when the word "Villanova" is spoken. Catholicism, basketball, trees, bad relationships with surrounding communities. Some things do not come to mind. Like dates. Or relationships. Or love, although I must say I have been in love with many women in my four years at Villanova. Unfortunately, I have never uttered a word to most of them.

I am an authority on why men and women cannot have relationships at Villanova, simply because I have had none. In an agreement with the psychology department, I am now officially a guinea pig for new experiments to see what happens to a man who goes through his college years dateless.

In fact, the last exclusive relationship I had was when I went on an Aunt Jemima kick a few years ago. Although the relationship was mostly one-sided since she was always in the kitchen, at least I received a hearty breakfast before I left for school. She needed space, as they say, and I moved on to Mrs. Paul. She moved on to Jack Daniels.

I unwillingly accept my role as a female's "friend" instead of boyfriend. Whenever another man sees me with a woman, he asks the female, "Is he your boyfriend?" Her response, instinctively, is "Oh him? He's just a friend." For some reason women must stick in a "just." But that is who I am. I am "just a friend."

But please, although I am sure I fascinate, we must move on to the point of this article: Why men and women cannot date or have an exclusive relationship on this campus. I, of course, must argue the man's side. Simply because I am a man.

I am not one of "those men," a group women commonly refer to in such phrases as "You're one of those men," or "Don't be like one of them."

I remember anniversaries. I do not take women to McDonalds on anniversaries ("But honey, we met here. Remember I spilled my Shamrock Shake on you." Incidentally, the McDonalds milk shake solidifies if you do not consume it within 15 minutes of purchase). I do not do the Dutch thing. I do not look at other women on a date. I do not expect anything in return. I do not purposefully offend and ignore. As a result, I do not have a girlfriend.

In women's minds, men are the enemy. Indeed we are. But women are not perfect. Here are five good, solid reasons why:

1. OTHER MEN/ BOYFRIENDS

Of all the women I have known that have not had boyfriends, they all have one thing in common: They hate men.

Of all the women I have known that have gone out with men, they also have one thing in common: They hate their man.

I see a pattern here.

For some reason, women just don't like men as boyfriends. As "just friends," yes. Boyfriends, no. Even if they are nice, they are too nice.

"But Christie, although this may not sound so wonderful, he is one of the nicest guys I know," I say.

"Tom, I know. That is the problem, he just cares too much. I hate that. We don't fight. It's boring," she says.

But more significantly, women, especially at Villanova, seem to

To all you freshmen women out there, I hope this warning will not reach you too late, but HOLD ON TO YOUR BOYFRIENDS FROM HOME. Granted, you may be blinded by the beautiful men here at Villanova. Maybe they may reduce you to a quivering, drooling puddle of admiration, blinded by their clean-cut good looks and monstrous egos. They might have even sent you racing to the phone during the first few days of Orientation to break up with your childhood sweetheart. But please take a small piece of advice! Scope. But don't expect any more from them than perhaps a phone call on Sunday night when they are hungry or need the notes from the class you are in together.

Yes, fellow campus co-eds, I hate to break it to you at such an early stage, but relationships with Villanova men do not seem to work. I can hear the disbelieving scoffs already. "What do you mean? Are you insinuating that these fine, innocent, upstanding, collegiate men have intentions that are less than honorable?" Sorry to say, not only are their intentions sometimes disreputable, but often they are downright crude, rude and socially unacceptable. For every true-blue, honest-to-gosh, dedicated sweetheart out there, tens upon thousands of slimeballs exist.

Okay, okay. Take a breath, exhale, relax. Welcome to the world of male-bashing at Villanova. I have heard it rumored among many of my totally platonic guy fyriends that this is the sole means of recreation among Villanova women. Yeah, as if we did not have more productive ways to spend our hours.

I can just imagine what 'Nova men envision as a typical Villanova "night out with the girls." The scene: a crowded dorm room filled to the rafters with screechy-voiced women downing Diet Pepsi and Smartfood. The topic: immature men, guys with bad hair, men who cheat, men who lie, men who have no excuse to live, men who deserve to die. Please! Guys, face reality! Most women must deal with men on a daily basis. If we really felt that way about you, there would be a lot less men still breathing today.

Not only do I know these things from personal experience, but my five roommates, and as a matter of fact most of my sorority will concur with me on this. I've heard tear-laden stories so gruesome Days of Our Lives should take notice. Yet most women I know manage to pass the day without spewing forth venomous death-threats to every man they pass.

Granted, with their slightly warped priorities and twisted logic, men do leave much to be desired in the eyes of most women. But these little faults do not prompt the vicious hate tirades men imagine. Rather, they inspire sad pity in the hearts of 'Nova women, and a concentrated effort to re-educate men in the ways of relationship etiquette.

The purpose of this article is to point out to men the areas in which they are lacking, spelling out exactly what they are doing wrong and how to remedy the situation. In this endeavor, I also hope to give a little support to all the women out there who may think they are alone in this struggle.

Career counseling aids Villanovans

By CHRISTINE MULLER
Staff Reporter

For one-fourth of the undergraduate population at Villanova, this year will probably contain more stress and present more difficult decisions than any previous period in their lives. This chosen group — the seniors — are now enduring a process only slightly reminiscent of the college application process in preparation for the reality of life after college graduation.

However, to ward off despair, the Career Planning and Placement Center located in the basement of Corr Hall offers students opportunities to clarify and pursue their career goals. Open weekdays from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. year-round, the center provides personal assistance for seniors at every stage of the job or graduate school search. Director Nancy Dudak, Assistant Director and Pre-law Adviser Dave Leibig and Career Counselor Brenda Shuck are all available in the center, while a pre-med counselor is based in the biology department.

The Career Center provides career counseling with a resource library, an on-campus interview and recruiting program, job listings for employers not available oncampus and a national database service. In this way, "students can start their own search for employer information to complement our program," said Dudak.

Other services offered by the center include resume and reference letter assistance, interview preparation — complete with videotaped practice interviews, resume referral and graduate school information. Part-time job listings and a Value Program in which participating Villanova alumni act as career consultants for students considering their particular line of work are offered as well.

Students reflect on campaign

By HILLARY FIELD
Staff Reporter

Villanova has survived the 1992 Presidential election and student convictions have weathered the campaigns. Though this campus will always be taken for granted as "Republicanland," all three candidates found a following here. One fact remains: all students, whether Republican, Democrat, Socialist or Independent, took their wallets into the voting booth with them. Meet 10 fellow Villanovans, the voters and the motivation behind their decisions.

Christina Affuso, a sophomore biology major, voted for George Bush because he has the most experience of all of the candidates. Affuso said she voted for Bush because of his strength in foreign policy and the trickle-down economic theory. She believes that Bush has taken a bad rap for the global recession, and tax-and-spend measures will not help the situation, only make it worse.

Affuso saw the dirty politics as pointing out the opponents' bad points while also pointing out your own. Always a registered Republican, the mudslinging had little effect on her decision. Affuso felt that no matter who won the election, there will most likely be little change because the president is so limited in his power.

Kristin Bohmert, a senior sociology major, voted for Bush because of his experience and stability as well. Bohmert described herself as "up in the air," about her decision because she agrees with Bill Clinton's liberal views yet finds herself very Republican in nature.

Bohmert was bothered by the dirty politics in the campaign because voters did not get any answers from the candidates yet she was unaffected by it since it "went in one ear and out the other." Graduating in the spring, Bohmert said the election results will most affect her chance of getting a job, since there are fewer and more demanding interviews.

Kelly Burns, a graduate student studying philosophy, voted for Clinton because she wanted a change from Bush, who "lied an awful lot with a campaign about truth, she said. The mudslinging bothered her, especially Bush's actions in the debates.

Burns said that no candidate is an angel and you cannot buy into it all. If Ross Perot ever won, Burns said she would move to Canada. She foresees a strong improvement in education and environmental issues with Clinton as president.

Thora Forizs, a junior economics major, voted for Bush because of Clinton's potential economic policies, including the inheritance tax and the small business taxes. Although not 100 percent sure, she feels Bush is not as damaging as the other two could be.

Forizs found the dirty politics tiresome and the ruin of a presidential campaign. Though she did not like Clinton because of it, it made Forizs less happy about voting for Bush. She feels voters in general are paying less attention to what is important. The entire election has made Forizs frustrated, "I don't feel good about it at all," she said.

Anne Giangiulio, a freshman liberal arts major, voted for Perot because, "the economy is our major concern," and Perot, being a self-made man, can relate to voters' domestic concerns, she said. She found the dirty politics entertaining, though she took everything she heard with a grain of salt. Giangiulio feels her future is determined by who we put in office this year because whoever wins will control the economy when she graduates from college.

Freshman Mary Rossetti, a student in the honors program, voted for Clinton because of Bush's dealings with the Haitian exiles, the Gulf War and Perot's lack of experience. Though she thinks Clinton can help the economy, Rossetti feels her choice resulted from a lack of choice. One reason she voted for Clinton was because of how he handled the mudslinging during the campaign. "He approached it directly, saying 'let's cut through it,' " she said.

Rossetti questioned the ethics of the candidates doing it but feels her decision was not affected by the dirty politics. She hopes Clinton will help the economy by the time she graduates. Rossetti believes "the reason you vote for someone is that he will make America a better place for us."

Christopher Saldi, a senior accounting major, voted for Clinton because he feels that Bush has neglected the country for four years to focus on foreign affairs, disregarding the economy and education, while Clinton is in touch with the younger Americans and interested in fixing the economy. He thought the dirty politics were not as bad as they had been in the past, but they will be an aspect of every election.

Students enjoy summer abroad in Cadiz, Spain

Villanova students visit a Roman aqueduct in Segovia, Spain.

By GRETCHEN FISHER
Assistant Features Editor

The Villanova Summer Program in Cadiz, Spain, proved once again a success when 39 students participated in the program this past summer. The Cadiz program has been expanding and improving during its five years in existence, building a respected reputation in the Villanova community, with colleges across the nation and also abroad.

Dr. Mercedes Julia, the program's director, noted that 50 percent of Spanish minors and majors at Villanova have participated in the Cadiz program.

The program began with a tour of various Spanish cities such as Madrid, Toledo and Segovia, followed by five weeks of immersion in the Spanish language and culture in the city of Cadiz in southern Spain. The students lived in either a dormitory or in the homes of Spanish families.

This year the students who participated in Villanova's program were placed in classes with students from the University of Texas and from European countries. Students were in class for four hours, five days a week. Lectures and extra-curricular activities such as flamenco dancing, wind surfing and excursions to such events as bullfights were also offered to students.

Various students who spent their summer in Cadiz described their favorite aspects of the program.

"The Villanova-Cadiz Summer Program has been one of the most educational, exciting and eye-opening experiences I've had at Villanova. I've learned that being bilingual does not simply mean being able to use words and conjugate verbs. It involves being able to function in as well as appreciate two cultures. I not only improved my proficiency in Spanish this summer, but also gained insight into the history, art and people of Spain. I can honestly say that I've done as much learning outside of the classroom as I have inside — maybe more. I would highly recommend this program to anyone interested in becoming bilingual."

Benjamin Alfonsi

" In the North, we saw the Roman Catholic influence in our visits to Toledo, Segovia and Avila, and in the South, there was the prevalent Islamic influence in Cordoba and Granada. Our stay in Cadiz has left me with many fond memories and experiences which I will be able to look back on for years to come. The daily classes, trips to the beach, afternoon siestas and shopping made each day pass more quickly than the next. The Spanish culture, both literally and figuratively oceans away from anything found in the United States provided constant excitement. Flamenco dancing and bullfights stick out in my mind the most — these two Spanish traditions reflect the pride inherent in this culture."

Christina Favaloro

"As the waves broke on the shoreline and the moon lit the faces of a hundred Spaniards throwing a giant "fiesta," I truly felt like the world was mine. So, I took off my shoes, grabbed my "cerveza" and lay in the soft sand at the beach; I had conquered the language barrier."

John Demers

"After a while, a siesta at 3 p.m., dinner at 9 p.m., and going out at 12 a.m. became a part of my everyday routine. Although I learned a lot of Spanish in my classes, the best learning experience I had was going out at night with my Gaditano friends. Since none of them knew English, I was forced to speak Spanish with them. It was very interesting learning about their way of life, and they were curious about the lifestyle in the United States. At the end of classes, I was sad to leave behind my Spanish friends, but I know someday I'll see them again."

Julia Danielak

"In general, I liked the freedom and respect being treated as an adult. I strongly recommend living with a family. The people were friendly and helpful and very tolerant of my Spanish. One warning: be prepared for a liberalism nonexistent in the States. Tight, shorter clothes and children running about at one at night tends to raise your eyebrows. 'Studying in Cadiz aids your Spanish ability, but also places you in a rich culture with overall friendly and vivacious people."

Stacy Couch

"The best experience I had through this program was my interaction with such a rich culture, the likes of which I had heard of but truly had no understanding of until living in it, in Cadiz. This vast culture which is a mix of Northern European, North African, and of course Southern Europe was very unique. This experience, as well as touring the different parts of Andalucia and Morocco made my trip a unique learning experience."

Patrick Tighe

"Cadiz is not a tourist attraction and no one speaks any English. Therefore, one learns a great deal more in Cadiz as opposed to taking Spanish at Villanova. Most Spanish people are friendly and will politely correct one if (e or she says somet(ing incorrectly. Cadiz has a good location because it is so close to many interesting places to visit such as Sevilla, Morocca and Portugal."

He said: What are women looking for?

enjoy going out with jerks. Women call it the Evil Man Theory. I call it dumb. If a woman was ordering a man at dinner instead of a meal (for some women, the meal is hard enough. "What should I get, Tom? You order for me"), it would go something like this: "I'll start out with the Obnoxious Pig for the appetizer, then I think I'll try The Guy That Burps in Public Steak for the main meal. And for dessert, I'll have The Guy I Don't Know If I Want To Spend The Rest Of My Life With, But It's Better Than Being An Old Maid Toffee."

The selection process of women is very annoying. It seems to me they like to find the worst possible man for the moment, and go with it.

I equate this process to the hose dropping while washing a car. After applying the water from the hose, we must drop the hose instead of gently placing it on the ground. Deep down, we truly want to squirt ourselves in the face.

2. THE PAST

No matter when the relationship begins, a man will be held accountable for his lifetime activities when with a woman. And the woman possesses every right to (1) Bring up the past at any time; (2) Apply it to the present state of the relationship; and (3) Conclude that the man is an insensitive, uncaring piece of filth.

For women, life is one big footnote.

"But Tom, I remember that time you yelled at me in the King of Prussia Mall for no good reason. So what if I was crying because you wouldn't get your picture taken with Santa Claus. I was upset. You just don't care, do you?"

Women forgive. Men forget.

3. OTHER WOMEN

When men are involved in a relationship, no woman other than that man's particular girlfriend can be considered remotely attractive. Cindy Crawford must suddenly develop a skin condition that allows that guy's girlfriend to factually state, "Cindy Crawford has ugly elbows. And that black thing on her face is not a beauty mark, but a mole."

Test prep courses aid students

By ANN McNEARNEY
Staff Reporter

Every year thousands of seniors move on to the competitive job market, or whatever their desire may be. However, many of these students move on to further education and have to prepare for the "dreaded words": LSAT, MCAT, GMAT, NCLEX or the GRE. All of these abbreviations are entrance exams for going on to Law, Medical, Management, Nursing, or Graduate school. Some students prepare for these tests on their own, but even more students are preparing for them in other ways.

All college students remember the SAT's we needed to take to get this far, and many took classes to get past those successfully. Now the same kinds of classes are available to students preparing for the graduate exams. The Stanley H. Kaplan Educational Center offers packaged programs and classes to help students better prepare for the exams.

For instance, in the Kaplan package for the LSAT, students are given nine sessions of practice LSAT tests, a home study kit to help review and preview the skills taught in each lesson, a computerized diagnostic test, home-study materials, individual tutoring and a two-hour law school seminar.

Although expensive, Kaplan guarantees that if you are not completely satisfied with your test scores, you may repeat the classes free of charge. In fact, many students are eligible for financial assistance when enrolling in these courses. According to Kaplan, the number of GRE test takers has gone up more than 50 percent in the past two years so competition, as you all know, is up there.

The actual tests themselves cost a considerable amount less though: $71 for the LSAT, $140 for the MCAT, and $45-90 for the GRE. However, when considering the amount of assistance received in the Kaplan courses and the possible success after only taking these exams once, perhaps it's really worth it after all.

The center also hosts Career Days. The first general Career Fair was held Oct. 6, and another will be held March 16, 1993 for those companies who could not make hiring decisions earlier. Students also have the opportunity to participate in a Graduate School Fair and a Nursing Fair.

However, with a persistently sluggish economy, the class of 1993 is facing different circumstances than most graduating classes. "We're finding some of the recruiters who have come every single year have brought fewer interviewers ... so competition has become keener for interview slots," said Dudak.

She noted that the process also seems to be taking longer because students must schedule more interviews while not always hearing from firms when told they would. She pointed out that "a job might be open at the time, then the interviewer goes back and is told not to hire any more." She advises seniors to consider lesser known companies as potential employers, since many of the larger corporations are laying off present employees.

Dudak asserted that "part of our job is to help students develop ideas [about a potential career]. It's most important for them to be able to communicate well and articulate to the employer" in the interview.

"I can show you lists of employers, but not how to speak to them," she said.

Dudak advises future classes, in order to prepare for their senior year, be ready with resumes and interview etiquette. "We're certainly available if a question comes up in a student's mind," she said.

Men just do not understand

1. Fraternities:

A man may insist that a fraternity does not change "the person inside him." PLEASE! Nothing against the Greek System, but it is my firm belief that fraternities are detrimental to relationships. There is no denying that when you put that many men together in a bonding situation, there will be a little peer pressure (not to mention many bizarre rituals of the brotherhood). But I'm sorry to say, this peer pressure usually leaves us women out in the cold.

Now, at this point men start accusing their girlfriends of being too stifling and not allowing them to "hang out with the boys." But did you ever notice that when that men tells you he is opting for a night with his buddies, he naturally assumes you will be spending the night home by yourself. The thought never occurs to him that, although there is a chance you would rather spend the night with him, you do have other friends. He seems to forget that your social life does not begin and end at his beck and call.

2. Men are Clueless

But women, the sad thing is that men actually have no idea they have done anything wrong when they cancel out on you last minute to go to Smoke's with their brothers and neglect to invite you. Then they have the gall to promise to call you at 2 a.m. when they are drunk. Do they think this is a compliment? The last thing I want to hear at 2 a.m. is some drunken amnesiac with a slurred voice trying to remember my name while assuring me he still remembers his. I truly wonder whether they believe they might have something pertinent to say to you at this point. Maybe they expect you to be at home, faithfully awaiting their call so you can come and pick them up at the bar, along with 10 of their friends voted most likely to puke in your car.

Do you see our dilemma ladies? Even after that, they tend to ignore you completely for the rest of the weekend and call on Sunday pretending nothing is wrong. There is nothing more annoying than having them call when you are most livid. Then proceed to talk your ear off, using their most wheedling voice and pathetic pet names, guaranteed to grate upon your nerves. Please guys, at least have the common courtesy to realize that something is wrong if you are greeted with dead silence, even if you can't figure out that the reason has anything to do with you.

3. The Ex-Girlfriend

She's there when you are in his room! She's there when he's in his room by himself! She's there when neither of you are in his room! You begin to wonder if he's even mentioned to her that he is dating you now. He thinks it is cute, flattering and you are being irrational. You try the rational bit, but it does not work. They're just friends now, you say (convincingly). She was a big part of his life, you say (with some doubt). My ex-boyfriend would be dead if he hung around me this much, you say (with certainty).

4. After the First Kiss

Tell me, women — what is the thing you hate most about this particular topic? Is it that men are so irrational about the subject after it happens? Even if they are your best friend the day before, a kiss, or whatever, after Kelly's, makes them panic, suddenly restricts their freedom and causes them to lose your phone number mysteriously. Why is this? Do they not think that you are mature enough to handle the situation for Worse, if you are in the presence of your girlfriend, you may not look at another woman. You must keep your eyes locked squarely on your mate. That's the law.

4. MINIATURE GOLF

America is a simple place. For centuries, there have been three places for dates: Restaurants, movie theaters and miniature golf.

As a result, if women wanted to be serenaded in the old days, they were forced to keep up with proper food etiquette, the movie scene and their putting. For years I wondered what my sister did when she locked herself in her room from ages 12-16. I know now she was practicing her putting stroke.

Men, on the other hand, in their formative years, concentrated on Little League baseball. As a result, men faced a distinct disadvantage when going out on dates.

Such traditions continue today. I am a case in point.

I played baseball throughout adolescence. Yet on my first-ever date (five years, 62 months and 1887 days ago, in fact), I floundered and flopped to an obviously seasoned veteran. I was completely overmatched.

But that is not the gripe of man. Women often apologize for winning, and often refer to the game as "Putt-Putt." Do not take pity on us. And it isn't called "Putt-Putt," "Mini-Golf" or any other variation, it is miniature golf.

5. "I'M SO FAT"/THE TEST

This problem can also be called "Knowing The Right Answer." For a man, the relationship is a continual test of avoiding disaster by skillfully avoiding wrong answers. You don't have to be perfectly right, just don't be partially wrong. Some call it politics.

To women, these are thought provoking, objective tests. There will be three grades: Satisfactory — the relationship may continue until the next test tomorrow; Incomplete — further prodding is necessary; and unsatisfactory — It's time to give up the ghost.

To men, the questions are, in relationship lingo, "Vietnam." We don't know how we got here, we know we're fighting a war we can't win and we're just hoping to escape alive. It's pretty much like watching Women's Bowling on ESPN Late Night.

The two most obvious examples are the "I'm So Fat" and "If I Were Dead" questions.

The "I'm So Fat" test should be easy for the pro, but often results in an Incomplete. At least once in a relationship, a girlfriend says, "I'm so fat. I oinked today." Something like this may run through a man's mind: "You know, she did have three orders of ribs and a couple sides of coleslaw and potatoes at dinner. What is she getting ice cream for? Oh God, she's retaining water. No, no. She had a Diet 7UP."

Only a complete moron would agree with the question. But just a simple "No, you're not. You're still beautiful to me," can result in an Incomplete: "What do you mean? I'm still beautiful? Have I gained weight in your mind? Still? What does that mean? You think I'm retaining water, don't you?"

Although the food question is difficult for first-timers, the most difficult question, in my opinion, is, "If I were dead, would you ever love somebody else and get married?" It has many variations, but too many to delve into at this time. I do not know any right answer. This question is possibly the trump card simply because men automatically think and often ignorantly blurt out, "Who cares? You'd be dead."

A possible solution to any wrong answers and terminations of wanted relationship due to The Test is the invention of an I'm Sorry For (Blank) card line. This invention would help men by offering many possible ways to say sorry for something they did not know they did wrong.

Men do not know what they did wrong; often, they don't know they were wrong. Granted, forgiveness is at the discretion of the woman. Women often get mad, but rarely explain why to clueless men.

But these cards may help struggling male youths. Some examples of the cards are: "I'm Sorry For Not Knowing I Was Supposed To Be Sorry"; "I'm Sorry For Not Saying I Miss You Over The Phone"; "I'm Sorry For Agreeing With You That Our Friend's Girlfriend Was Somewhat Attractive"; "I'm Sorry For Being A Jerk; It's Just That I'm A Man" and "I'm Sorry, Here's A Rose And I Made You A Tape."

Generic, yes. Effective, possibly.

I cannot offer many solutions on "Why Men And Women Cannot Have Relationships At Villanova." I can only offer reasons why it is the case. If you are involved in a relationship with another Villanova student, kudos on your coup. But if you aren't, at least you do not have to deal with phone voices (on a regular basis), annoying nicknames said while on the phone, 'I Miss You's' on the phone, boyfriends or girlfriends on the phone and having to listen to annoying messages on the answering machine. In fact, you do not even have to listen to the answering machine.

I am of the firm belief that when your boy/girlfriend does not give

Straight from the alert registered voters in 201 Dougherty come the Top 10 funniest moments in the presidential election.

10. Earthworms endorse Bush.
9. Clinton wins — Hilary, that is — in a bake-off against Barbara.
8. "What's that? My hearing aid was turned off," said James Bond Stockdale (yes, that is his real name).
7. "I'm all ears," said Perot.
6. Bush calling Gore "Ozone Man."
5. When Clinton couldn't remember if he inhaled or not.
4. Potatoe farmers endorse Quayle.
3. "Bush taking credit for the Cold War is like the rooster taking credit for the sun rising," said Gore.
2. "You're right. I have no experience. No experience running up a multi-trillion dollar debt," said Perot.

And the No. 1 most humorous element of the 1992 presidential campaign, stretch your memories back folks, (drumroll please, Jerry) was:

1. 1-800-426-1112 — Jerry Brown's toll-free number.

She said: Men need a clue

what it is? Here's a Fun Fact — It is better to tell the person that you just want to be friends with them, rather than ignore them like the plague.

5. Dating, Seeing, Going Out

Someone should take the time to come up with definitions written in stone to clarify the meanings of these terms. They are so ambiguous. And, if you think about it, they can be used to weasel out of nearly any situation.

"Well, dear, there's nothing wrong with the fact that I hooked up with that (vacuous, blond, sleazy) other girl because you and I are just seeing each other," he says.

"That's funny! Didn't seeing each other have a different meaning last week when I was talking to that lacrosse player in your Biology class? Or were we going out then?" you say.

And exactly when does one move across those oh-so-vague lines that delineate hooking up, dating, seeing each other and going out (even if I do have them in the right order, which I doubt)? And finally, the $25,000 question: Why are men allowed to switch the definitions and the terms of the relationship depending upon the weather, what day of the week it is or the level of their hormones. Isn't it odd how, on Friday nights, he seems to think that you are just dating, and on Sunday afternoons, you're back to going out?

6. Birthdays and Anniversaries

Is it me or have you all noticed that women go out of the way for their boyfriend's birthday? What about men, you might ask? While there may be the occasional exception, women are lucky if they get a card for their special day. Is it so hard, guys? Women say they are happy with a small note or card (and it is true, if it accompanies a large gift). But they would not turn down diamond earrings either. Just be sure to show you care and remember.

While I could go on and on about this matter (men provide plenty of fodder for our gentle corrections), I would not want to be accused of being unfair. Women are sometimes at fault for not telling their men what they are doing wrong. But, guys, now you know! No more excuses. All in all we still love you guys, or at least we are dedicated to reforming you. And that is probably one of the most common problems with relationships at Villanova. We let you get away with too much.

"People must look beyond it because what's being raised has nothing to do with being a president," he said.

Saldi foresees the election directly affecting him when he graduates in the spring. "Taxes will be raised regardless of who is president and it will be harder to live next year, but with that will come more opportunity," he said.

Mark Schellings, a freshman liberal arts major, voted for Perot because he sounded honest when the others did not. Schellings felt the mudslinging was not necessary, yet it has partially affected his opinion of the candidates. He is not sure how this election will affect him, except to say that the job situation will hopefully improve in four years when he graduates.

Kyle Watson, a sophomore engineering major, voted for Clinton because he agrees with Clinton's views about promoting change and feels that Bush has not done well in his term in office. Watson saw the dirty politics as unfair, with too much being questioned about Clinton's character. Watson feels the election, with Clinton's victory, will bring a change in the economy for a better future when he graduates.

you a "Hold on" when he/she has a call on the other line, if they immediately blow you off for the other caller, it is time to get out of that relationship.

We are men and women of the '90s. We don't have to stand for such irresponsibility, ignorance. We need not be tolerant of such phone infidelity.

One final note. For some reason, women expect men to change. For the better, meaning personality.

"If he wasn't such a jerk, I'm sure we'd have a better relationship. Why can't he once understand my feelings? Why can't he change?"

Women must get something straight. Men won't change their ways. We change tires. A tire or two, yes. In touch with women's feelings, no.

An eating disorder is not about food or weight. It's about not fitting in. Not feeling loved. Not being good enough.

Eating disorders–anorexia, bulimia and compulsive overeating–are more common today than ever. They strike mostly women, and can appear at any time from the early teens to middle age. Often, they're triggered by a move toward independence: going away to college, getting married, getting divorced.

All the willpower in the world won't cure an eating disorder. For that, a patient must heal her damaged self-esteem and learn healthier ways to cope with anxiety and stress. And that takes help. Expert help.

That's why the Eating Disorders Program at Belmont Center for Comprehensive Treatment is staffed by a compassionate community of professionals. Psychiatrists, psychologists, nurses and dieticians, all focused on helping our patients deal with food in healthier ways. Therapists work with patients to heal the causes of their eating disorders. A simple exercise like tracing the outline of her body can help a woman develop a more realistic image of herself.

Nurses and dieticians help patients learn to control the foods that once controlled them. By supervising them as they plan, shop for, cook and eat healthy meals together.

And when patients leave Belmont's supportive environment, outpatient therapy helps build on the progress made during their stays.

The name Belmont may sound new, but we've been helping keep families together for more than 50 years as Philadelphia Psychiatric Center. Recently, we changed our name to fit better with our broad range of treatment programs, both inpatient and outpatient, for emotional problems and addictions.

If you've been using food to try to fill the holes in your life, isn't it time you figured out what's really missing? Call Belmont at 215-456-8000 and talk to someone who knows what you're going through.

'Leave' examines family relationships

By ERIC CHEUNG
Assistant Entertainment Editor

During the last weekend of October, Villanova Theatre unveiled Patrick McDaid's "Compassionate Leave." It was the first in a series of plays, entitled "NOVA: A Festival of New Plays by Villanova Playwrights." In a world where "family values" are debated constantly, McDaid's work rings true. "Compassionate Leave" was the tale of a man attempting to find his own identity under the heavy constraints of an Irish family.

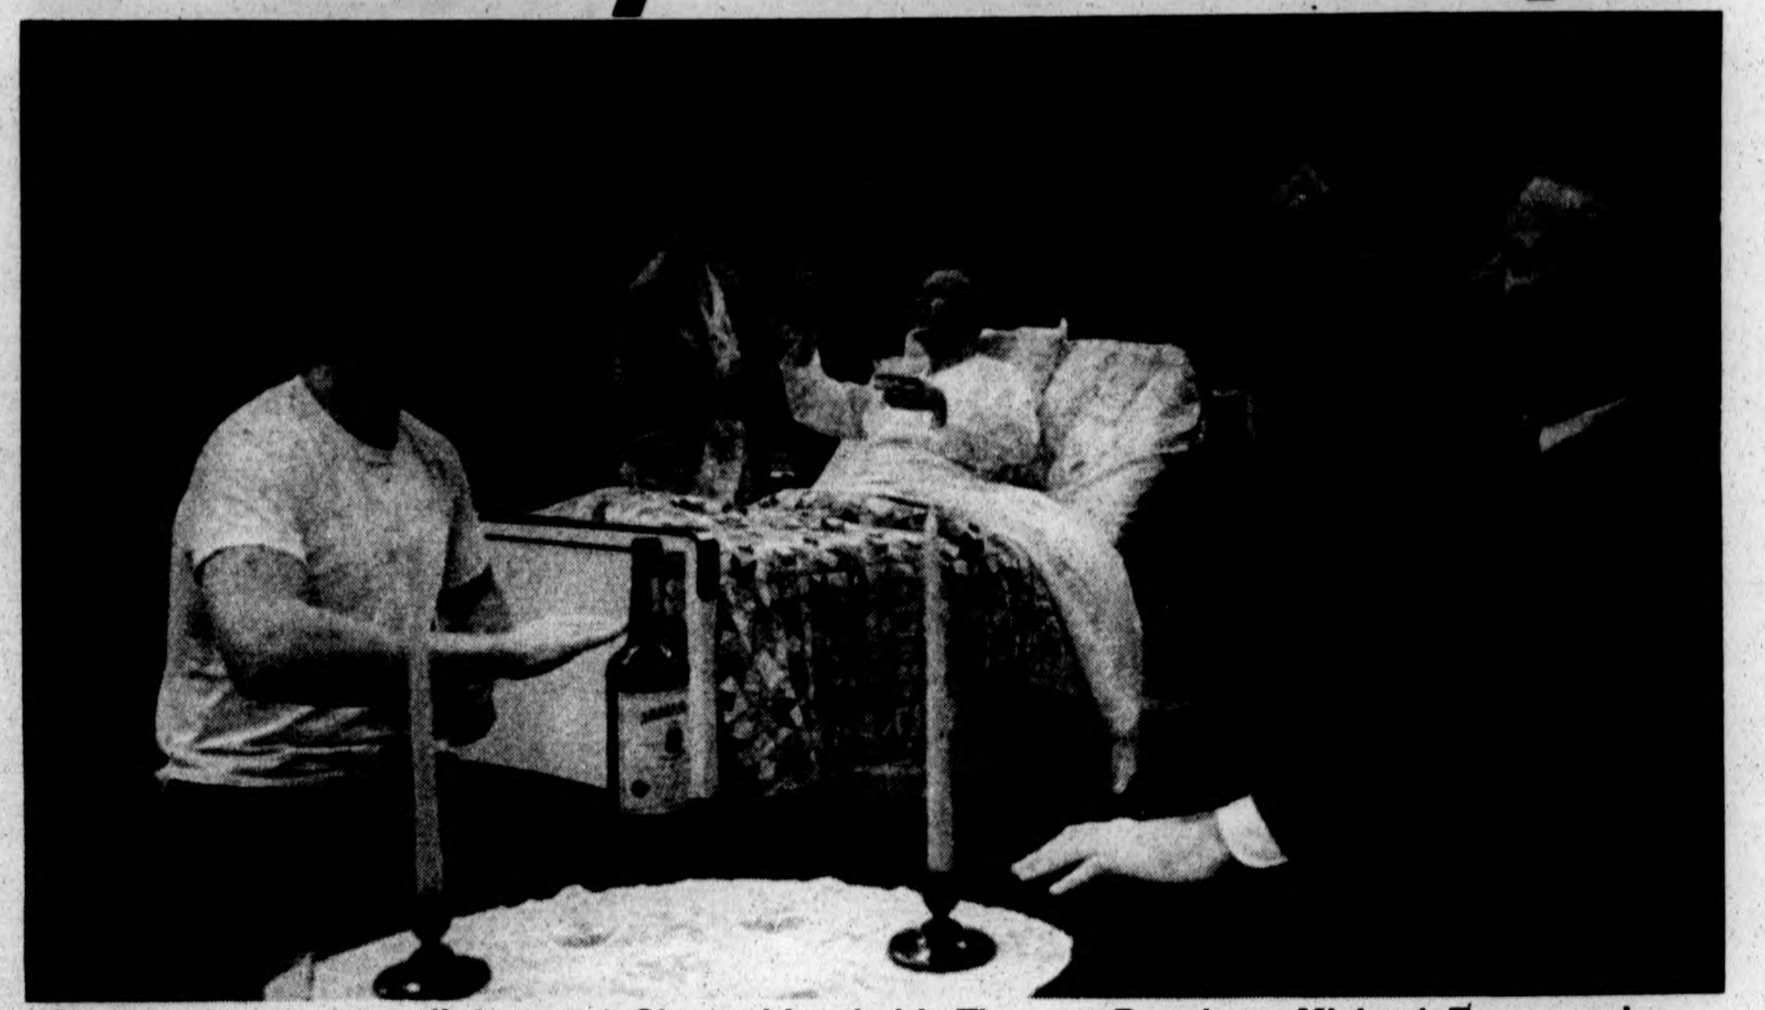
The play takes place at the O'Donnell's Philadelphia home during the spring of 1968. Daniel O'Donnell (played by Michael P. Toner) is the proud father who lies in bed, dying of a cancer he avoids talking about. Wanting his family around him during his final moments, he sends for his son, Mick. It is Mick (performed by Simon Linscheid) that the story centers on, for it is he who faces inner-conflicts between his own identity and his family's.

Mick appears as an aloof man returning from the Vietnam War for reasons he is unwilling to reveal. Strikingly enough, he has returned to a family who goes about its business as though nothing unusual has happened. Kathleen, the strong mother (Theresa Donahue), is doing her chores and barely breaks her daily routine to acknowledge Mick's return.

Almost the very moment that Mick steps foot in his home, he is part of the household again with responsibilities to attend to and unspoken codes to follow. As Kathleen puts it "we know how to behave" echoing the relationships that have kept this family together for so long. There is no shame among family members, even when Daniel requires assistance to use the bathroom or when he cannot distinguish between memories or realities. No one bothers to fight Daniel's impending condition. Their basic acceptance of Daniel's death is steeped in Irish traditions, where the scream of a banshee signals the end of life and where the window near Daniel must be open to allow his soul to exit.

However, Mick had left this family partly to escape this claustrophobic lifestyle. His father was a glorious revolutionary for Ireland against England. In fact, once a group of British soldiers refused to shoot him because he had fought so bravely against them. Unfortunately, in Mick's case, war was not glorious. His own actions were even less so, as he reveals his misjudgement that led to the tragic death of his comrade. The conflicting emotions of failure and dread in the eyes of his heroic father, coupled with new experiences of having this same father an invalid, shines through on Mick's face. Being in a repressive environment that prefers introspection to sharing of feelings makes for an interesting struggle.

family members: Walsh (Michael Friel) and Marty (Rose Malague). Walsh, an old friend of Daniel's relates wonderful tales of the old days. His affections for Daniel become our own as we sense how irrepressible this revolutionary was in his youth. Meanwhile, Marty turns out to be perhaps the most pivotal role of all.



"Compassionate Leave" featured Simon Linscheid, Theresa Donahue, Michael Toner and Michael Friel, which finished at Vasey Theatre Nov. 1.

An American girl, Marty is seen as the outsider to the O'Donnell familly. She is still trying to learn "how to behave" and follow the differing "codes" this Irish family follows. It is her love for Mick, a love that was left unrequitted when Mick went to war, that breaks the barriers to his heart as well as to his family. But love is not enough for this progressive-minded woman. She does not want just Mick's heart but his entire being. Her nurturing love forces into the open all the secret fears and hatreds that both divides and unites this family. She learns "how to behave" and in the end is accepted.

These poignant themes could never have been brought to life were it not for the talents of the actors. Simon Linscheid displayed Mick's frustration openly. Though he tackles a complex character, Linscheid performs with such feeling that we cannot help but think Mick a real-life person.

Linscheid's performance was balanced by the equally compelling Rose Malague. Her character, Marty, becomes the focus who holds the power to unlock the secrets of the O'Donnell family. Because of this, we understand the depths of her love which makes love possible in such an environment. Theresa Donahue and Michael Toner also had superlative performances. Through them we come to understand the parents who are not unlike our own — sturdy on the outside but hiding an overwhelming love inside.

It is by far the accessibility of "Compassionate Leave" that ultimately leads to its success and irresistability. No one can come away from this play and not feel closer to one's own family.

The struggles of one Irish family become a symbol for all families. Though everyone feels the need to find independence in this world, we inevitably realize that we can never completely break the bonds of our family. McDaid's brilliant play does much to enhance the phrase "family values."

Musical Theatre enters its third season

By MARY GRACE BONTEMPO
Staff Reporter

One would think it impossible for the Villanova Student Musical Theatre to top the success of last year's Mini-Musicals and spring hit "Guys and Dolls." For their '92-'93 season, however, this group of creative and energetic students intends to do just that. Entering its third year, the Villanova Student Musical Theatre kicks off its exciting season with the Mini-Musicals. This entertaining musical revue of song and dance numbers from "West Side Story," "Blood Brothers," "My Fair Lady" and "Forty-Second Street" will be performed Nov. 19-Nov. 21 at 8 p.m. in St. Mary's Auditorium.

This season, Student Musical Theatre has added two new dimensions to promote its expansion and the involvement of more students. In addition to the "minis" and the spring production, a talent show and a cabaret/dinner theatre will also be presented. Plans for the talent show which is scheduled for Dec. 5 are under way, and all students are encouraged to audition this weekend. The cabaret/dinner theatre will take place in April, after the February production of "A Chorus Line."

As Nov. 19-21 rapidly approaches, the final touches are being added to all the hard work put forth since September. Come and take the journey from the timeless love of "West Side Story" in the '50s to the streets of present day Liverpool in "Blood Brothers," back to 19th Century England in "My Fair Lady," finally ending up gazing at the bright lights of '40s Broadway in "Forty-Second Street."

Sundays focus on lush guitar strumming

By MARK McCREARY
and
THOM ARNO
Staff Reporter

The Sundays rolled out of bed in 1989 with their beautiful debut album Reading, Writing and Arithmetic and quickly gained critical and popular acclaim. The single "Here's Where the Story Ends" was the main source of their success, while it perfectly highlighted their impeccable, classy format for a pop single. Reading is an album chock full of lush guitar strumming and smooth rhythms, fleshed out by vocalist Harriet Wheeler's delicate, almost child-like vocals. Rolling Stone proclaimed them as the best new band of the year, and everything seemed bright and rosy in the Sunday household. Then they disappeared.

Well, it's 1992 there is no one to vote for, and the Sundays have just released a brilliant second album, Blind. "I feel fine/don't wake me up yet/o the young and the old they get everything/and it's my turn," (from "I Feel") opens their second disc, and lead singer Harriet Wheeler seems to take a more direct approach and defiant stand in her lyrics. Perhaps the only criticism of their debut was the idea that the music was there, as was the voice, but the lyrics might have lagged behind. While it is true that Ms. Wheeler does have a voice that gets you all hot and bothered, it may be agreed upon that the lyrics the first time around were lax. A bold reaction to this was not only the printing of the new lyrics, but a confident assertiveness exuded by Wheeler. "Love" states: "Just love yourself/Love no one else/It's enough/They can say what they like but the still can't take that." It can be understood that the Sundays collectively responded professionally to the criticism, because Blind is a stellar follow-up.

While it may not be as easily accessible as their first go-round, Blind is much more sophisticated musically. However, the band did not totally abandon the craft they perfected a couple of years ago. Possible, they took the extra time between albums to improve on a near-perfect formula. While Reading was structured around the same tempos, Blind has its softer moments. "24 Hours" is a quiet number full of graceful guitar runs and fingerings and muted vocalizations. Wheeler tries unsuccessfully to downplay her lyrical independence with: "Few true cares have I/as the world turns around/I was blind but/now I'm still blind."

The Sundays probably will not hit the same level of popular success they achieved the first time out. It is almost as if it is too daring for the massses, although the core formula is still evident. The best suggestion would be for the band to embark on a tour of small clubs across the country. A small, intimate atmosphere may be the best backdrop for the Sundays' art. Either that, or, they can hope for a better established band to take them under their wing for a nation-wide tour. Here, the Sundays' unique style might overshadow a more convoluted act.

Neil Young reemerges in legendary style

By CAROLYN POPPE
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Remember Neil Young's lyrical folk tunes of the '70s and how enjoyable they once were? Whatever happened to that sound of his?

Neil Young reemerges in classic style from his '80s slump with the recent release, Harvest Moon. The album mirrors his 1972 release, Harvest, a successful gamble with a pure, acoustic sound that began the legend of Neil Young. With that same raw rhythm guitar and sharp vocals, Harvest Moon uncovers his legendary musical history and takes a trip back with his listeners.

Young shines when he is on his own in both albums. He had established Buffalo Springfield with Stephen Stills in the '60s, going on to make a name for himself along with Crosby, Stills and Nash in their 1970 album, Deja Vu. From that he singled out that soft, unplugged but whiny sound, as in "Helpless," and stuck to it. Young's work evolved through his on-and-off excursions with CSN, as well as with his band, Crazy Horse. But it is those visionary solo efforts from masterpieces like After The Gold Rush and Harvest, on which his listeners linger today.

Young returns to his old form for his listeners, realizing what they want. (That bomb with his "Bluenotes" in '88 was a big hint.) He breaks free of his attempt at heavier guitar work and tough vocals, and settles back to those finer days of simple guitar and inspired song.

> Young takes listeners back on a 'musical ride.'

But while Harvest offered the work of Neil Young the dreamer, when he's "24 and there's so much more," Harvest Moon offers the work of a mature, reflective Young. He proves to be still a romantic dreamer, but looks back in realization of age.

Young's parallel between albums is a strong one. He returns with a country sound, including rhythmic acoustic, a little banjo and the classic "Heart of Gold" harmonica. Songs like "Dreamin' Man" and "Harvest Moon" retain this purity, resulting in two genuine and moving tracks. "You and Me" parallels Harvest so clearly that its words can literally be replaced by those of "Old Man" without altering the song. Listeners will not be annoyed by this repetition of style, but will easily reminisce along with Young.

Lyrically, as well as stylistically, Young takes the listeners back on a "musical ride." He uses the words "again" and "still" noticeably often as he travels to more memorable days, referring to his love and old friendships. He traces his life with musical landmarks in "From Hank to Hendrix." His fans who have been with him through those years will appreciate the journey.

But Young, being a product of the '60s, has never been quite able to get off the peace and love train (remember his '88 project with CSN, American Dream?) Now in '92, his editorial commentary is mostly evident in "War of Man," the first release from the album. Here, though, the unbending cruelty of war is not pounded in an opinionated way, but offered to the listener, saying simply, "no one wins." Nice track.

YOUNG ~ HARVEST

Young reflects on his life without regret, but his age certainly hits home in Harvest Moon. All the memories of his relationships marked by music overwhelm him, especially in "One of These Days." But although he gets overly sentimental, the listener still believes in Young the dreamer.

His Harvest years prove not to be too far from Young today. His old friends remain, some of whom help him on vocals throughout the new album, including James Taylor. Even his image flashes us back — still the same fringed-leather look from the '70s. But listeners will appreciate the writing most of all, feeling that old folk Neil Young sound that has remained through the years.

Somehow, without re-releasing the same regurgitated old tunes, Young has reached back to the '70s and grabbed a hold of what he once was with Harvest Moon. It is an album about getting older and about discovery. A satisfying musical retrospection done in classic Neil Young style, Harvest Moon bounds toward the next generation of greatness.

Samples shake Chestnut

By MEGHAN DONAHUE
Staff Reporter

While the kids were out trick-or-treating Saturday night, Halloween festivities were kept inside at the Chestnut Cabaret in Philadelphia, with a fledgling band called the Samples. Stopping off on a zig-zag tour of the East, the group appeared as the costumed quartet of lead vocalist/guitarist Sean Kelley as a hard-rocker wearing a black mop of heavy-metal hair, keyboard player Al Laughlin as the Appleman, drummer Jeep MacNichol a black and white-faced convict, and guitarist Andy Sheldon a smurflike Captain Kirk. Nothing less than a great show could have been expected from such an innovatively-attired foursome.

Warmed up by an invigorating performance by opening act, the Winebottles, the Samples began slow and subdued with the environmentally-conscious melody, "Nature." The atmosphere during the show ranged from frenzied commotion to quiet absorption generated by the band's selection of music. Picking up momentum with the familiar singles, "Feel Us Shakin" and "Seany-Boy," the show bursted into near-chaos with the thrashy "Underwater People" and "Won't Be Back Again." The reggae-inspired song "My Town" pleased the crowd along with some impressive new material as Andy Sheldon and Sean Kelley tested out their recent song-writing efforts while slowing things down a bit. A rarely-heard live rendition of "Moonlit Trese" and the bizarre moaning of "Little Whale" sung by Vince Sendia of the road crew, gave the performance an added dimension of originality.

Both vocally and instrumentally well-executed, the Sample's performance offered studio-quality sound enhanced by the spontaneous improvising that makes a live show worth the admission. Although the band's stage presence was characteristically tame, they appeared to be enjoying themselves and their audience, comprised mostly of collegiate types. Several Villanova students were tossed into the air and even keyboardist Al Laughlin dove into the outstretched hands of the dancing swarm below. Close to the stage, spectators were forced to shield themselves from limbs being thrown in all directions.

In an interview with keyboardist Al Laughlin, the self-proclaimed "fire" of the act backstage before the show, said he prefers the "packed and energetic" crowd of the East to the more mellow audiences out West. A ski instructor and free-lance comedian with no previous musical experience, Laughlin said he met the other members of the band through a dating service in Boulder, Colorado. He generalized Samples fans as "clean-cut, white baseball hat people" but mentioned that their following is growing more diverse. As far as his own musical tastes are concerned, Laughlin said, "I kinda like Lawrence Welk," adding more seriously that he has been influenced by ska, reggae, punk, and English beat. He described the Samples' style as "The Grateful Dead meets Nirvana."

Although as impoverished musicians starting out in Boulder, their frequent visits to the free samples section of the supermarket earned them their title, it can also be applied to their music. An imaginative blend of various styles, it incorporates folk, rock, reggae, and ska sounds. Their first self-titled album contains a combination of haunting melodies sung with expressive, poetic lyrics and more upbeat rhythms reflective of the varying contributions of the group's individual members. No Room, a second album released in April, is even more of a communal effort and will undoubtfully enjoy increasing popularity if its appeal can equal that of their live performing success.

Media bashes candidates

By AARON NICODEMUS
Entertainment Editor

There have been many things in this year's political race to bring a smile or two to our faces, like Bill Clinton's botched marijuana inhale, George Bush's 1988 promise of "Read my lips, no new taxes," and Ross Perot's paranoid exit, then entrance, then finger-pointing accusations. The candidates have given us quite a show.

And through it all, the media kept us updated on every single dubious, scandalous, preposterous or ludicrous action of each and every one of them. With or without the press, we might have enjoyed just watching these men make themselves look foolish. But they had plenty of help.

And now after a long political race, there is finally a winner. And whether or not you are happy with the outcome, surely there is at least one chuckle still left to be found. This year's candidates provided the ammunition, and Saturday Night Live's political satirists came through with the punchlines on their "Presidential Bash" Nov. 1.

SNL always has been a favorite of college students. While the material is amusing, it always seems to be even funnier the day after, when you are explaining the skits to your friends. There might be one line, one silly line, that gets repeated over and over (like "Pepsi, no Coke" or "Way outta my league") to uproarious laughter. The true genius of SNL, however, lies in its ability to take something true and make it hilarious. Essentially, it makes us laugh at ourselves.

Recently, Saturday Night Live has been accused of losing its edge. Competition like "In Living Color" began to steal away viewers. SNL skits lacked the originality, the spontaneity, the comic fervor that drove their earlier counterparts. Names like Nora Dunn and John Lovitz were no match for ex-SNL heavyweights like Dan Akroyd, Bill Murray, Eddie Murphy or John Belushi. Despite such valid criticisms, political humor is the one aspect of SNL that endured the hard times.

Dana Carvey led the way with his outrageously funny and accurate portrayals of President George Bush and more recently, Ross Perot. Carvey had done such an admirable job that the president even acknowledged the comic's talented impersonation. As for his Perot imitation, it was flawless. As the Texas billionaire, Carvey ran the show from start to finish, spinning his homespun common sense and fast-forwarding parts of skits that were not "side-splittingly funny."

Phil Hartman was a little less impressive as Bill Clinton. While he had an unlimited pool of material to draw from (Gennifer Flowers, inhale/exhale, foreign protesting), his Southern drawl and attempt at Clinton's mannerisms somehow seemed off the mark. But his hair, like Clinton's, was impeccably groomed.

Interspersed amongst the current campaign attacks were flashbacks to 15 years of political barbs, performed by Chevy Chase as the bumbling Gerald Ford and Dan Akroyd as the mild-mannered Jimmy Carter. These sketches recalled SNL's finest moments, when the struggling show produced its most memorable lines.

It is important that when we deal with an issue as important as the presidency of the United States, we still keep things light. Shows like Saturday Night Live make that effort worthwhile. It proves that no one is above being made to look like a fool. Even if that fool is running our country.

FAST FORWARD: Two action/ suspense films are due to be released today that should make for an entertaining night out. The first is "Jennifer Eight," a crime thriller starring Andy Garcia as a Northern California detective on the trail of a ruthless and calculating serial killer. Uma Thurman stars as the blind victim that Garcia tries to save from becoming Jennifer Nine.

The second flick is "Passenger 57" starring Wesley Snipes as a security expert who takes a vacation only to have his plane hijacked by terrorists. Shot in close quarters, Snipes puts his professional talent and athletic ability to work to save the passengers from death.

REWIND: Whoopi Goldberg stars in the summer hit "Sister Act," now out on video. Before you rush off to the nearest Blockbuster, though, think about this: Disney movies, while they are real knee-slappers for 6-year-olds, might not make the grade once you hit puberty. Without the charm of cartoon imagery or audience reaction, "Sister Act" is merely sub-par.

Blondes break rock mold

By COLEEN KENIREY
Assistant Entertainment Editor

The Cutting Edge

4 Non Blondes are a San Francisco band who have just released their debut venture. Bigger, Better, Faster, More! Lead singer Linda Perry's voice is the dominant factor of this music. Perry has the potential to become the next great female rock vocalist, joining the ranks of Stevie Nicks and Chrissie Hynde. Her hoarse voice punctuates and controls every song on the album.

Perry transforms words into winding sonorous notes which range from low, throaty murmurs to high-pitched emotional screeches. These powerful vocals are the body of the songs and on every track the listener cannot avoid confronting them. Although the music itself is laudable, it takes a back seat to Perry's voice, which is always first to invade the listener's ears.

"Superfly" earns the distinction of the album's best song. It is funky rock and roll at its finest, featuring raucous electric guitar. Although the track consists of the same five lines repeated many times, the guitar riffs and Perry's vocal electrification of the lyrics keep the listener interested.

"What's Up" is another winner, in which the best remains relatively steady and the singer again leads the direction of the song, alternating between fast and slow tempos. The song which launched the 4 Non Blondes' local hometown popularity on the alternative scene was "Dear Mr. President." It is an intriguing social statement which hits a topical chord during an election year. Perry belts out emotionally charged verses such as, "Oh Please Mr. President will you lend me a future/ 'cause you'll just get it back/ from the little blind woman/ with the kid on the corner/ and the people all over doin' crack."

"Drifting" succeeds with a more mellow sound, but "Pleasantly Blue" and "Morphine and Chocolate" are not as engaging. "Drifting" possesses a dreamy, acoustic guitar base which accurately fits its subject matter. In contrast, "Pleasantly Blue" sounds repetitious to an annoying degree and "Morphine and Chocolate" is tedious and bland.

"Morphine and Chocolate" indirectly alludes to the band's turbulent period when Perry in particular was plagued by drug problems. This song has a triumphant mood, however, with the lyricist admitting that substances are mere substitutes which "could never substitute my art!"

"Drifting" does a better job of addressing the negative effects of drugs as it creates the sad image of a "tangled puppet" who pops pills and thinks, "I might be a mess but I sure can survive." Themes of self-destruction and confusion are undercurrents throughout the song. The hazy quality of the music suits the topic of the track and creates an illusory, surreal feeling. "Drifting" is depressing but very real as a portrait of a drug user.

4 Non Blondes, as their name implies, represent a deviation from conventional ideals. The band's name itself was chosen as a distinction from the fair-haired yuppie culture. Perry also breaks the traditional rules of feminine beauty with her long dark dreadlocks. Another distinguishing characteristic was their original all-female line up. However, this recently has been changed with the addition of guitarist Roger Rocha.

The band has always tried to avoid being judged purely on the basis of gender. They do, in fact, stand out on the basis of pure talent as musicians, which is displayed throughout Bigger, Better, Faster, More!

FRESH CUTS: Eugene Kelly, leader of the Glasgow rockers eugenius, has been described by Nirvana bassist Chris Novoselic as, "just so cool — he can turn weed into marijuana, sugar into cocaine and diet pills into amphetamines." Although that may be a bit of a stretch of his abilities, Kelly did turn the remnants of popular British band The Vaselines into what is now eugenius.

The band, formerly called Captain America, opened for Nirvana at a show in Edinburgh and their Seattle friends have also covered several Vaselines songs in concert. Eugenius's fan club has recently begun to extend beyond the realm of other musicians with their new album, oomalama. Their grungey guitar rock, exemplified by tracks like "Down On Me," "Bed-In," "Buttermilk," and "Oomalama" has earned them the devotion of college radio. Other slower songs such as "Hot Dog," are also effective in showcasing the pure guitar simplicity of this album. Listen in because eugenius is on the rise.

Lively AC/DC set revitalizes proven hits

By JOHN KAZMIERCZAK
Staff Reporter

It is seldom that one is able to find a true bargain in today's selection of new musical releases. With AC/DC Live, however, AC/DC once again proves to be the exception rather than the rule. Not only is their new release an excellent set of live songs, but the double collector's edition set (there are a total of four configurations of this album offered) encompasses almost every major hit that AC/DC has ever released.

The material for AC/DC Live was culled from the 153-show, 21-country tour the band embarked on following the 1990 release of The Razor's Edge. As mentioned previously, this material has been released in a variety of formats, probably to best maximize sales. There is a two CD/cassette version, called the "Collector's Edition," that features the most material (23 tracks in all), and is presumably more expensive, intended for hard-core fans. For less serious devotees, there is the single CD/cassette option (on which this review is based) which weeds out some of the less-known tracks and consequently is less expensive. A number of assorted CD and cassette singles are also in the works.

AC/DC, composed of drummer Chris Slade, bassist Cliff Williams, rhythm guitarist Malcolm Young, lead singer Chris Johnson and "... trouser-dropping, school-cap-doffing, duck-hopping guitarist and energetic showman Angus Young," (their publicist's words) is the type of band that reaches its pinnacle in concert. When melded with the crowd's energy and approval, songs such as "For Those About To Rock (We Salute You)" and "Who Made Who" are transformed from strong but somewhat canned-sounding tracks to ferocious, primal anthems. Interestingly, most of the cuts run for no longer than five minutes, which is relatively brief for a concert album. This is mainly attributable to AC/DC's no-nonsense approach to music; no speeches, few extended flashy solos, just pure, unalloyed rock 'n roll. Johnson and Angus, the two frontmen, take surprisingly few opportunities to improvise upon their songs. For the most part, they're all business.

Musically, the band sounds tight, organized and well-practiced. Specific highlights include Johnson's vocals on "Moneytalks" and "T.N.T.," Slade's bass riffs in "Dirty Deeds Done Dirt Cheap" and, of course, the cannon finale of "For Those About To Rock (We Salute You)."

As one enthusiast of AC/DC commented, "Here was an unabashedly serious band of musicians ready to grab listeners by the collar, shake them senseless and get them crawling back for more." It cannot be said that this album contains any new material, just more of everything that made AC/DC such a hit in the first place: more energy, more charisma, more unapologetically raucous rock. For anybody who likes down-and-dirty rock and roll, lock up your first-born, turn up your amp and buy this album — AC/DC is back with a vengeance.

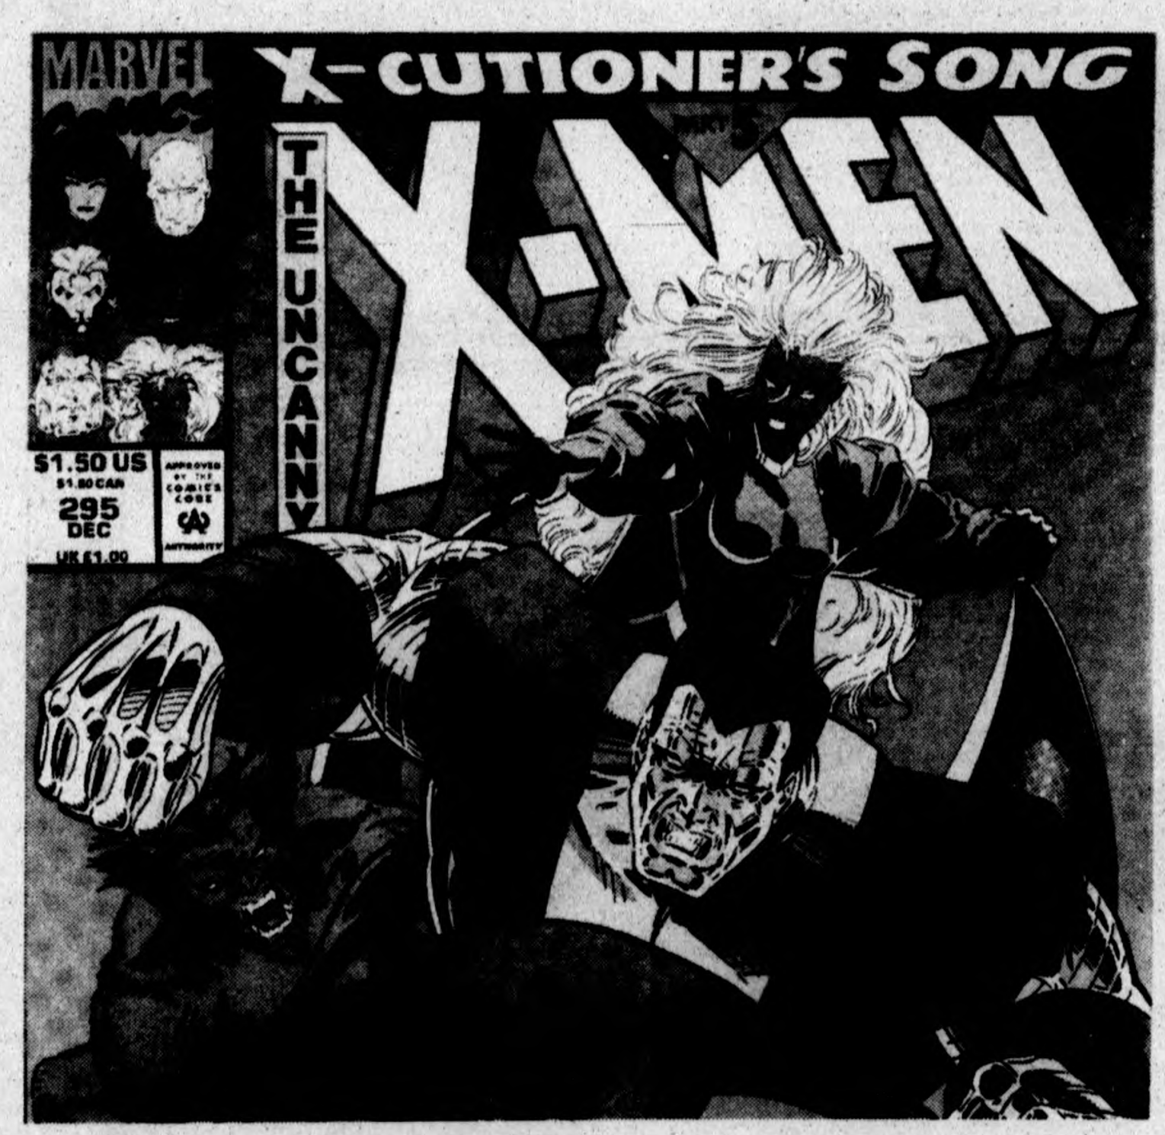
Comics overlooked as art



By HAL JORDAN
Staff Reporter

Comic books are a funny medium. There are so many types by so many artists and writers that one who was interested in them could easily become lost. Creative teams constantly change so that a great book one month could degenerate into mediocrity the next. The following is meant as an introduction to what books are currently well-done.

Marvel Comics' Uncanny X-men has been the most successful comic of the last decade. Volumes could be written on each member of the team and its various incarnations, but the merry mutants are currently involved in a nasty bit of business called "The X-ecutioner's Song." When this storyline is resolved next month, expect great things from new artist John Romita Jr.

Big news hit the comic world last year when a team of hot young Marvel artists left the company to form their own: Image Comics. Though most of these books are beautifully drawn and terribly written, Jim Lee's Wildcats is something to smile about. Lee is the James Cameron of comics and his books have a visceral intensity and stylistic flair that would remind one of a Terminator movie.

For those who prefer drama and fantasy to action, D.C. Comics' Sandman is the best there is. For the past few years, writer Neil Gaiman has weaved a haunting and intelligent tapestry of stories and characters that revolve around Morpheus, the Dream King. The artists change often, but they are all of a caliber that is rare in mainstream comics.

Finally, it would be unfair to go without mentioning the ever-popular Batman. Whatever you think of the recent movie and animated series, the Dark Knight currently has two good titles to his name: Shadow of the Bat and Legends of the Dark Knight. Both have creative teams that change with the stories, but the high quality remains consistent. In addition, the miniseries Batman: Sword of Azrael features fantastic artwork by newcomer Joe Quesada.

These books are mostly mainstream efforts, but there are plenty of independent publishers and translated foreign titles as well. "Superhero" comics are only the tip of the iceberg, if one goes to their local comic shop there can be found a variety that is amazing.

Thousand Yard Stare debuts in America

By DANIELLE SANTUCCI
Staff Reporter

Thousand Yard Stare makes their American debut with Hands On, a Stephen Street produced, pure English pop release.

Following in the recent tradition of Ned's Atomic Dustbin, The Stone Roses and Ride, thoughtful lyrics are paired with the latest U.K. Top 40 sound. Unfortunately, that long, melodic instrumental with dance rhythm has already been played out. The atmospheric music detracts from, rather than focuses on, a strong lyrical performance by songwriter Stephen Barnes.

Thousand Yard Stare are a group of childhood friends who grew up in Slough, a small town in a borough of Berkshire, England.

The group first joined together in November 1985. Their strong local following propelled their recording debut, Weatherwatching EP, to outsell major releases by The Farm and Happy Mondays at local record stores. Released on the band's own label, Stifled

The band's next EP, Keepsake, arrived in June 1991 also on their own label. October of the same year saw the release of Thousand Yard Stare's "Seasonstream," which hit No. 65 on the national charts and appears on their current album. The group was no longer just a local band.

The alternative 'rave' scene may not be ready for another band in the same 'Manchester' mold.

"Comeuppance," the first single to be released from Hands On, is a powerful song about an English farmer dreaming of prosperity: "Tighter rural belt each notch you earn/Aching for acres as yet unturned." With no reference to cars or girls on the whole album, this is serious pop. There are everyday worries like on the last track "Wildshire:" "I think the tide is changing, but not that much, Not that much."

Although an underground sensation in the U.K., the "Yardies," (as they are more commonly known) will have a tough time in the United States. With so much similar sounding music at the moment, the alternative "rave" scene may not be ready for another band in the same "Manchester" mold.

Quite possibly overproduced by famed dance re-mixer, Stephen Street, Hands On certainly has its moments, but if Thousand Yard Stare intend to make their mark, they need to find a unique sound of their own.

VILLANOVA 1992-1993 STUDENT SEASON BASKETBALL TICKET LOTTERY APPLICATION

For the third year, Villanova University's student season basketball tickets will be sold by a lottery method. The lottery application appears below, and is the only valid application for student season tickets.

"There are 1,844 tickets printed for the student section, and with the exception of tickets used by the band and recruiting, all of those tickets will go into the lottery," explained Villanova Athletic Director Dr. Ted Aceto.

Student season tickets are for sale at $115. This package includes 13 duPont Pavilion games and all four games scheduled for the Spectrum in Philadelphia.

Students wishing to purchase basketball season tickets must fill out the application in full. A self-addressed, stamped envelope must accompany all orders, and the full application must be returned to the Athletic Ticket Office in the Nevin Field House by TUESDAY, Nov. 10, 1992. All applications from seniors and graduate students will go into one computer file, all applications from juniors into another, and so on. Each class will be treated equally.

Once the applications are entered into a computer, the computer will randomly select the recipients of the 1992-93 men's basketball season tickets. Notification of selection will come via the applicant's self addressed, stamped envelope. A coupon sent to the applicant will signify that the tickets are being held for them; if the applicant's check is returned, they were not selected to receive tickets.

The actual tickets can be picked up at the Field House Ticket Office. You must bring your notification coupon, along with a valid Villanova identification card.

Men's season ends at 9-8-1

By MICHEL DAVIES
Staff Reporter

You do not have to be an expert on human nature, or even a coach for that matter, to see that the leaders of the men's soccer team (9-8-1) are not quitters. After back-to-back losses to Seton Hall and UConn put the Cats out of Big East title contention, team morale was at an all-time low. To most, it appeared that 'Nova would finish the season without much enthusiasm. But this was not the case. Instead the team took a couple of days off, refocused and came out ready to win its last two games.

"For a while there, we really hit rock bottom. But after the loss to Seton Hall, the leaders of this team got together and decided that we really weren't going to let it end this way. We were determined to win the last two games," senior Eric Hinds said.

The Cats began their mission with a 4-2 victory over Providence, and from the outset it was quite obvious the team had no intentions of lying down. The Cats went on an offensive explosion, as Hinds scored his career-high eighth goal of the season, putting him second in total team points.

"We were on a counter attack, and I got a really great pass from Joe [Roy] on the 15-yard line; from there I just hit the ball hard and it went by the keeper at the near post," Hinds said.

Other scorers were Roy and Ken Santos, who added two goals. Roy scored his ninth goal of the season to set the record for most total points (assists and goals combined) in a season by a Wildcat player. In addition to his record setting point total, Roy was named to the All-Big East team along with Santos. It marked the second time Santos received this honor.

"We were really happy to have two players named to the team," said Santos. "That shows that even though we didn't do very well in the Big East this season, other coaches and players are beginning to respect Villanova soccer."

"It really just wasn't our year," said Hinds. "We were constantly plagued by injuries. We lost Kenny (Santos), Van Dusen and Sean Whitely all for big parts of the season, and that really hurt us."

After the big win over the Friars, the Cats' season was down to one game. St. Joe's University ventured up the Main Line to play an energy-filled Wildcat team.

"It was my last game, and a lot of other seniors' last game. There was no way we were going to let ourselves lose to them on our home field," said Santos.

And that ended up being the case. But this time, in contrast to the Providence game, it was the defense that did the job. Chris Naylor notched his first career goal, while Santos finished his career with one of his most spectacular plays, as 'Nova won 2-0.

"I got the ball at my chest with my back to the goal, spinned, and hit it lefty. Luckily, it went in," said Santos who is naturally right-footed.

After the two victories, the Wildcats can feel better about their play and their chances next year as they head into the off-season. With several good recruits and the emergence of some freshmen, who received plenty of playing time this year, it appears that Villanova soccer is headed in the right direction.

"We will definitely be around next year supporting this team in whatever capacity we can," said Hinds. "You can count on us playing a big role with the development of this up and coming talented team."

Swimming teams open with three straight wins

By MOIRA DONAHUE
Staff Reporter

The Villanova men's and women's swimming and diving teams kicked off their seasons Oct. 24 at Rutgers University. If this relay was a sign of things to come for the Wildcats, the team and Head Coach Chuck Horton have a great deal to be optimistic about this season. Both men's and women's teams swept the meet, defeating Rutgers, LaSalle and Rider College, earning 130 points and 121 points, respectively. The women's team won all 10 relays, whereas the men's team won seven and placed second in three races.

The men's team, under the leadership of senior tri-captains Jim Fagan, Scott Fraser and Eddie Paradise, were victorious over Drexel University this past weekend. The men's 4 x 100-yard medley relay team consisting of Sean Kelliher, Paradise, Fraser and newcomer Tom Forrest, won the first event and set the precedent for the subsequent 146.5-92.5 Wildcat victory. The team of Kelliher, Tim Jogan, Robert Drumm and Chris DesMarais won the 4 x 100-yard freestyle relay by an impressive five second span over the Drexel squad.

In other events, Dan Thomas won the 50-yard freestyle (22.46) and finished sixth in the 100-yard free. Brett Loper claimed the 200-yard backstroke (1:56.26), while Paradise captured the 200-yard breast (2:08.87). Paradise also finished second in the 200-yard individual medley (1:59.85). Jogan finished second in the 1000-yard free (9:42.32) and third in the 500-yard free (4:44.84), while Drumm placed second in both the 500-yard free (4:42.60) and the 200-yard free (1:46.36). Langhans came in third in both the 200-yard butterfly (1:55.65) and the 200-yard free (1:48.50). Also scoring was Pat Donahue, who came in third in the 1000-yard free (9:46.25) and fourth in the 500-yard free (4:48.70).

The men's team was helped with second place showings by DesMarais in the 200-yard fly, Forrest in the 100-free, Kelliher in the 200-yard backstroke, and Mike Schwankl in the 200-breaststroke. Sophomore Matt McGarry swept both the one and three-meter diving events for Villanova. Freshman Brian Yodice scored a double third place finish in his first effort for the Wildcats.

Coaches Horton, Liz Kennedy and Dave Warner expect great results from this young men's team. Although 15 of the 20 men on the squad are freshmen and sophomores, the Wildcats are looking forward to bringing home the Big East Conference title this year for the first time ever. After last year's second place finish, the remaining five juniors and seniors will be expected to lead the men to victory against rivals Pittsburgh, Syracuse, and Miami.

On the women's side, continued excellence is expected this weekend when the team faces LaSalle at home. The Cats are coming off their best season ever, including such milestones as winning their first Big East Conference Championship, their highest NCAA finish (24th), and an NCAA individual champion (Lisa Flood, 200-yard breaststroke).

Junior co-captain Flood, who finished 14th overall in the 100-yard breaststroke in Barcelona, is expected to lead the team to a repeat as the Big East champions. Flood holds four individual school records and is a member of two additional record-holding relay teams. Senior co-captain Jenny Miller, as well as seniors Mary Dowling, Amy Burton and Brett Northrup are leading point scorers who will head up the experienced women's team.

Sophomore Tara Ryan is a triple individual school record holder in the 100 and 200-yard back and 100 fly. She is a member of two record-setting relays and will be counted on to provide critical points for the Wildcat women. Also expected to round out the women's team is junior Sarah Dykstra, a school record holder in both the 50 and 100-yard freestyles, as well as a member of all five school record-holding relay teams and senior Kathy Koerber, a fourth-place finisher in the 200 individual medley at the 1992 Big East Conference meet.

Hoops schedule

Downing at small forward. Columbia is proud to finish near the top of the Ivy. Villanova should not look past the Lions to the Orangemen in the Big East opener January 2.

St. Joseph's (at the Spectrum)

On paper the Hawks are possibly the best nonconference opponent the Wildcats face this year. Coach John Griffin's team went from high hopes to sub-500 in '91-'92 when junior guard Rap Curry injured his knee in December. The team never did come together and it finished 6-10 in the Atlantic 10. All-conference candidate Bernard Blunt (19.7 p.p.g.) and forward Carlin Warley (11.6 p.p.g.) return to the starting lineup with Curry. St. Joe's will look to replace the production of graduated guard Craig Amos and center Matt Goukas. The Cats should try to win the battle up front, as the tallest Hawk is only 6-foot-8.

It is obvious that this year's nonconference schedule is not loaded with national powers. The schedule killed the Cats last year, knocking them from NCAA bid contention. It should help the team prepare for the Big East season. Villanova will not have to play perfect basketball to win all of these games. The Cats will be able to learn the new system with a little less pressure on themselves. It seems obvious on paper that the Cats should go 8-0 out of conference. But these are Division I teams who would absolutely love the chance to beat a Big East opponent. Villanova should not and will not take any of these teams lightly, because as history has shown us (Penn, Hawaii, Furman, S. Illinois) the Cats are sometimes prone to lose the ones they should win. The team faces embarrassment in the event of an out-of-conference slipup. This year is different; no brutal schedule, and a slate of teams the Cats should beat. No doubt, any more than one loss out of conference will beckon the "NIT, NIT" chants around the Big East. And right they will be. Villanova will not be able to shoulder any more than one non-conference upset come Selection Sunday. The power rating will not carry the Cats this far. Let's hope the Cats use the schedule as a positive stepping stone leading to the Big East Conference battles.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Jeff Johnson and Kevin Mosley

This week the Villanovan recognizes both members of the Villanova backfield, fullback Johnson and tailback Mosley.

In the Cats' 34-3 victory over Rhode Island, Johnson and Mosley each ran for over 100 yards, the first Villanova tandem to do since 1989. Johnson, with 112 yards on just 12 carries, leads the team with 548 rushing yards in eight games. Mosley, with 121 yards on 26 carries, has come into his own as a first-year starter and leads the club with five touchdowns and rushing yardage per game at 74.4.

Both will be looking for more success as the 6-2 Cats travel to New Hampshire (3-4-1) tomorrow at 1 p.m.

Water Polo slides to 1-2 week

By ERIC WARREN
Staff Reporter

Entering the Mid-Atlantic Conference Championships last weekend at Princeton, Villanova needed to finish within the top four in order to receive a bid for the Eastern Championships.

The Wildcats beat Army for the first time a year ago at these very championships. In the opening match of the tournament, the Wildcats came out ready to wage war with the Cadets. The game came down to whose defense could limit the other team's goals. 'Nova, which trailed 3-2 at the half, was able to work its halfcourt offense when it counted in the third and fourth quarters and came back to win the game 6-5. Senior Mark Verotsky led all scorers with three goals, while Steve Steinbrook, Jim Floerchinger and Brian Pearce each added one of their own.

"The win against Army was big. John O'Keefe played an excellent game in goal to seal the victory," said 'Nova coach Dan Sharidan.

The win placed 'Nova against the top seed in the tournament, Slippery Rock. The Wildcats came out strong against the No. 12 team in the nation. At the end of the first quarter, Slippery Rock led by the score of 5-4. The rest of the game, however, belonged to Slippery Rock as it cruised to a 17-5 victory. Verotsky scored all five 'Nova goals in the loss. Goaltender O'Keefe saved 14 shots on goal.

Navy had already handed Villanova two losses in the regular season. 'Nova was able to keep the game close throughout the first half and were only down 5-4. In the second half Navy showed why they are a perennial top-20 team, claiming an 11-4 victory.

"The score is in no way indicative of how close the game was," said Sharidan.

O'Keefe had 13 saves in goal and kept the Wildcats in contention throughout the game. Verotsky rifled in two goals and Pete Trout and Floerchinger added one apiece.

The Wildcats finished fourth in the tournament, the highest in its history. Verotsky was selected to the Mid-Atlantic Conference All-Tournament team.

"Had we placed higher, goaltender John O'Keefe would have made the All-Tournament team also; he played spectacularly throughout the weekend," said Sharidan.

The Wildcats will compete in the Eastern Conference Championships this weekend.

Volleyball on comeback trail

By JUSTIN SCHREIBER
Staff Reporter

Going into its match with Drexel Oct. 27 at Jake Nevin Fieldhouse, the Villanova volleyball team was working on an impressive four-match winning streak. Chalk up the Dragons as number five, the Cats easily defeated the Dragons 15-10, 15-13, 15-3.

Senior Vicky Dispenza turned in an impressive performance with a team-leading 26 assists, six digs and four service aces. Senior outside-hitter Pam Clifford also had a fine day, recording a team-high 10 kills.

The next victim for the Cats was Big East foe Boston College.

Riding a wave of confidence due to their winning streak, the Cats again had an easy time. They defeated B.C. in three straight (15-7, 15-6, 16-14) to even their overall record at 12-12, and their Big East record at 3-3. Dispenza again led the Cats in assists with 54, many of which went to Clifford, who hammer home 20 kills and five service aces.

"Pam Clifford had a great match," said Head Coach Ron Twomey.

Also in the Boston College match, Mara Austins chipped in with a team-high 13 digs, while Becky Kulbago added 16 kills and 10 digs.

With a six-match winning streak nicely tucked under their belts, the Cats prepared to take on Providence College at Providence Oct. 31. Being the number one team in the Big East conference and one of 'Nova's more formidable opponents of the year, Providence served as a crucial test for the then surging Wildcats.

The match did not start off well for the Cats as Providence took the first game, 15-4. 'Nova battled back in the second game however, winning 15-5 to even the match at one game apiece. In the end, though, the Friars proved to be too much for 'Nova as they won the next two games, 15-13, 15-12, to defeat the Cats. The loss snapped the Cats' season-best winning streak at six, and dropped their record to 12-13 overall, and 3-4 in the Big East.

The Cats had nothing to hang their heads about as both teams played an excellent match. Twomey, for one, was pleased with his team's effort.

"It was a really close, highly contested match," said Twomey. "It was a good match for our team. It's just a question of playing a little bit better, sustaining our defense, and getting our offense to put the ball down."

With the season beginning to wind down and the Big East Tournament set for Nov. 21-22, the Cats could not have picked a better time to come together and play as well as they have been recently.

"We've done really well through the past month or so," said Twomey. "The team has really gelled mentally."

The Cats' strong showing against Providence, the first-place team in the Big East, is further evidence of their improvement and bodes well for their chances in the Conference tournament.

Nevertheless, it is imperative that the Cats play well in their three remaining matches if they are to be truly competitive in the tournament. To go into the tournament playing poorly with a few bad losses lingering in the backs of their minds would almost assure the Cats of a unceremoniously quick exit.

"If we want to succeed in the tournament we need to win these remaining matches," said Twomey. "It's pretty much as simple as that. If we continue playing inconsistent volleyball with these three matches there is very little reason to believe we could throw it all together and have a dream tournament."

VILLANOVA (6-2, 4-2) at New Hampshire (3-4-1, 1-4)
Tomorrow, 12:30 p.m.

TV: None, RADIO: WXVU, 89.1 FM

Last Week: Villanova 34, Rhode Island 3
New Hampshire 43, Boston U. 14

OUTLOOK: New Hampshire, the defending Yankee Conference tri-champions have fallen on hard times in 1992, struggling to escape seventh place. To do so, however, U.N.H. will have to knock off a 'Nova squad, which they failed to do last year and which cost them an unbeaten conference record.

Do not feel too sorry for the other Wildcats, though. Senior tailback Barry Bourassa, who is second on the Division I-AA career all-purpose yards list with 5,927, returns to an offense that was hard-hit by graduation but is ranked second in the league, averaging over 400 yards a game.

The major concern for 'Nova is to contain Bourassa, something the Cats were successful at last year in the 33-7 win. UNH's defense is vulnerable at stopping the pass, so look for the Cats to try establishing a running game first but going more with the pass as the game progresses.

New Hampshire is capable of putting a lot of points on the scoreboard. That means the offense has to avoid turnovers and create more scoring opportunities. If not, the game will be a lot closer than it should be.

Flowers blooms for x-country

BY SEAN KELLY
Staff Reporter

Amidst the sometimes crowded pathways of the Villanova campus stands a soft-spoken young lady who epitomizes what it means to be a superior yet modest athlete. In a school that prides itself on excellence in women's cross country, freshman standout Megan Flowers is precisely the type of athlete that the program thrives upon. In her first year as a collegiate harrier, this Fort Worth, Texas native has definitely taken the entire nation by storm.

Her high school years were filled with promise that her future in the sport of cross country running would flourish. Flowers' vast list of high school accomplishments ranged from a third place finish in the Millrose Games her sophomore year to being named an unbelievable three-time All-American at the Kinney Nationals. Planted within this prominence are Flowers' two Southern Regional Championship trophies. Even in her high school years, it would have been difficult to argue that Flowers was headed anywhere but greatness.

Coming out of high school, Flowers was not the No. 1 recruit in the nation, but she was right up there with the best. Even the number one women's cross country team in the nation saw enough in her to recruit the budding star. There was really no question in Megan's mind about coming to Villanova.

"I was really impressed with the entire team and head coach Uncle Marty [Stern]. The older girls were all so nice to me and I liked the school because it was a private institution that could offer me a great education," said Flowers.

> Being on a team that wins the national championship would be a dream come true for me.
> Freshman Megan Flowers

At this point one would understandably assume that Stern and company would be waiting for their young recruit with open arms. While this was more than likely the case for them, Flowers was not as sure as everyone else about her position on the 'Nova squad. With her modest attitude, Flowers admits, "My first goal when coming here was to make the team. I was nervous about being on a team with big-name runners like Cheri Goddard, Carole Zajac, and Nnenna Lynch. I just wanted to make the team first."

Flowers pushed away her early-season nerves and found her spot on the team. She was well on her way to proving herself to the collegiate world after strong performances in practice. Flowers surprised a number of people in her first meet at the Indiana invitational.

"I was really surprised at how well I did," said Flowers. "Jen Rhines and I were together during the race and were waiting for a swarm of runners to go by us at the one mile mark, but they never did."

In the three meets prior to the Big East Championships, Flowers placed fifth in two of them and an impressive third at the Boston College Invitational. After these performances, she stunned an extremely competitive and talented Big East Conference when she finished seventh at the Big East Championships. This outcome was especially sweet for the freshman considering the fact that she was not feeling 100 percent at the time of the race.

The adjustment from high school to college competition has not been overly traumatic at all for this lady harrier. The pressures of competition have sometimes affected Megan, but she contests that, "There are the nicest girls on this team who are always there to help me if I am having a bad day. The older girls are like older sisters for me."

One factor in Flowers' promising career that could cause pressure to a young runner is the fact that she is arguably the number one freshman in the country right now. For Megan, though, who admits that she often has the thought of being No. 1 on her mind, the high ranking makes her more determined. Jen Rhines, Villanova's other highly-ranked freshman, is among the other team members who help Flowers to work even harder.

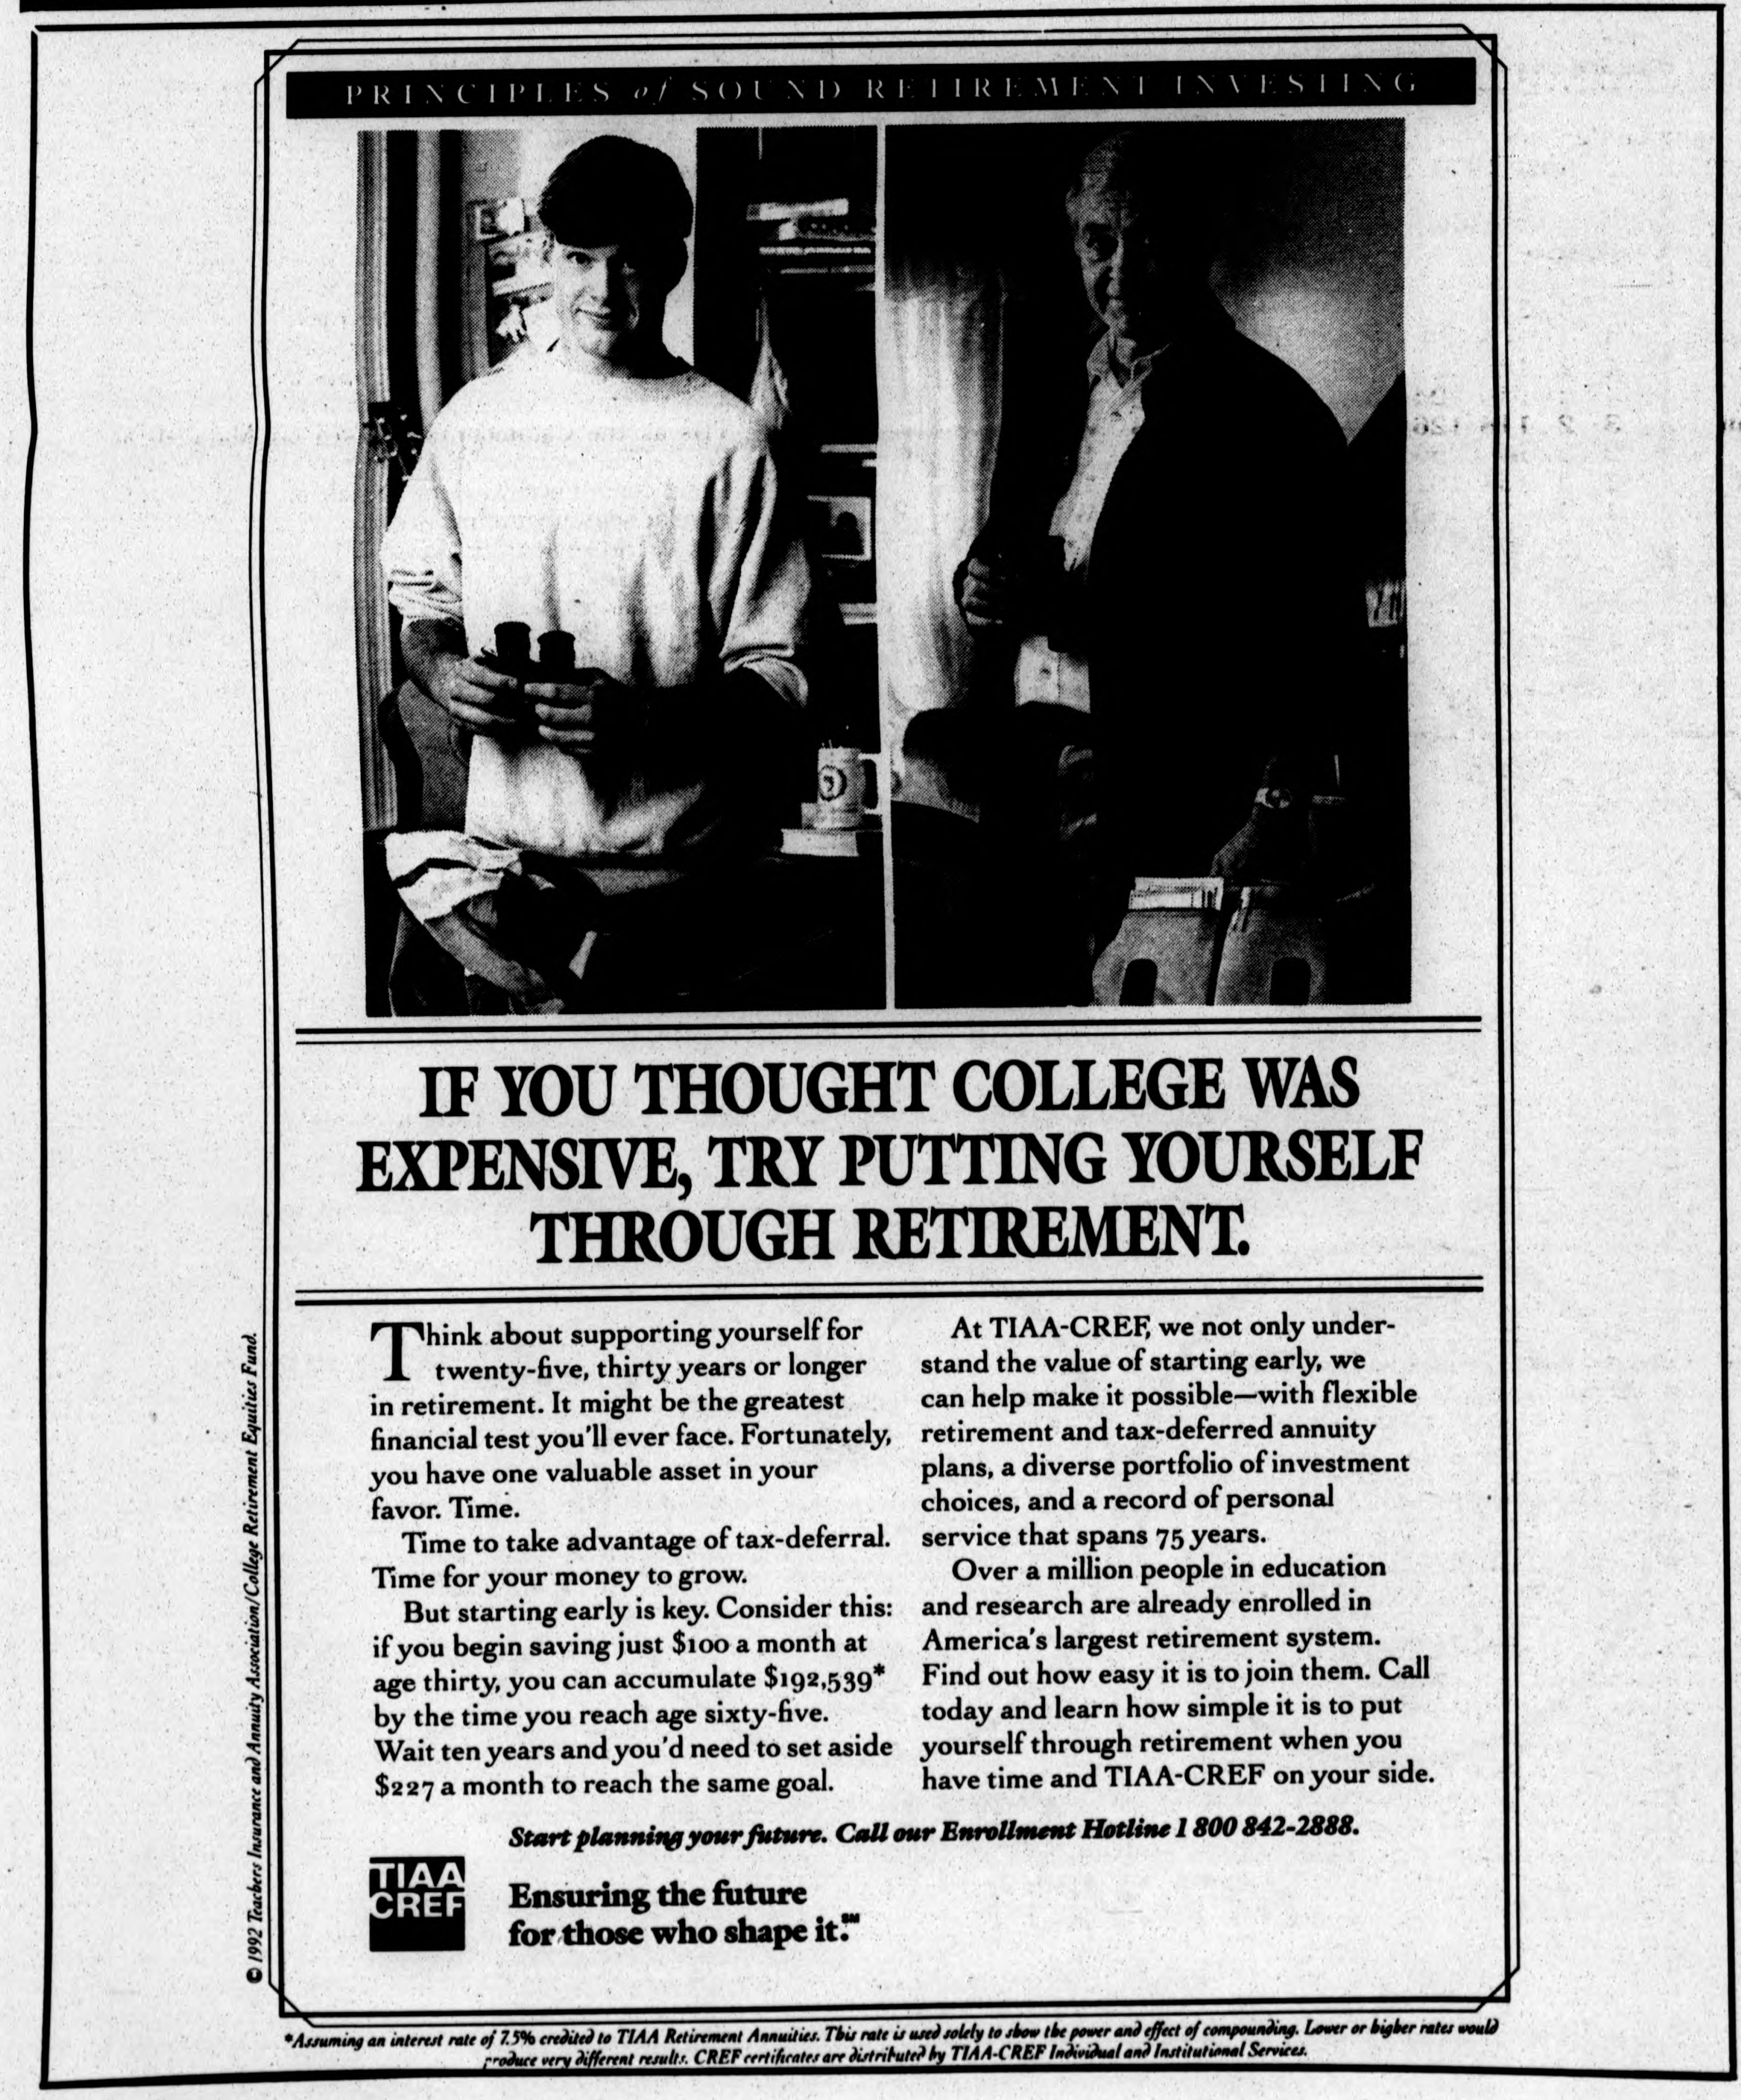
It is not every day that a freshman can step into an organization that is already well on the road to an NCAA Championship; so for Flowers, the thought of running on a National Championship team leaves her almost speechless.

Overflowing with excitement, Flowers blushed when she said, "Being on a team that wins a National Championship would be a dream come true for me. I've heard about Villanova runners since high school and now to be on the same team and to be able to win the NCAA's with them would be such a gift."

The championships on Nov. 23 have been getting the freshman runner considerably nervous as of late.

"Every time I think about it I get butterflies. 'Uncle Marty' has been telling us all to take it just as any other race." Similar to her coaches and teammates, Flowers too, has been trying to instill in herself the familiar one-meet-at-a-time-mentality.

It seems too good to be true that such an athlete could still have three more years to continue improving. Not surprisingly, Megan Flowers is refreshingly down-to-earth. She admits, "I'm a family girl so I want to please my family. Hopefully I can rise to the expectations of my team and coaches." The future for 'Nova's up-and-coming superstar appears to be rich with promise. Her private yet self-important goals, for the most part, remain unknown to most as she keeps them hidden in her heart. Without a doubt, these goals will someday become reality as she continues down the path of extraordinary accomplishment.



PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

IF YOU THOUGHT COLLEGE WAS EXPENSIVE, TRY PUTTING YOURSELF THROUGH RETIREMENT.

Think about supporting yourself for twenty-five, thirty years or longer in retirement. It might be the greatest financial test you'll ever face. Fortunately, you have one valuable asset in your favor. Time.

Time to take advantage of tax-deferral. Time for your money to grow.

But starting early is key. Consider this: if you begin saving just $100 a month at age thirty, you can accumulate $192,539* by the time you reach age sixty-five. Wait ten years and you'd need to set aside $227 a month to reach the same goal.

At TIAA-CREF, we not only understand the value of starting early, we can help make it possible—with flexible retirement and tax-deferred annuity plans, a diverse portfolio of investment choices, and a record of personal service that spans 75 years.

Over a million people in education and research are already enrolled in America's largest retirement system. Find out how easy it is to join them. Call today and learn how simple it is to put yourself through retirement when you have time and TIAA-CREF on your side.

Yankee Conference

By FRANK SCHNEIDER
Staff Reporter

This week in the Yankee Conference featured all teams playing intra-conference contests. Offense continues to be the story with two teams scoring over 43 points. As of Monday, Nov. 2, there were five Yankee Conference teams ranked in the I-AA top 20.

Maine 13

Delaware kept itself on top of the Yankee Conference with a 57-13 blowout of Maine. The Blue Hens' potent offense was led by quarterback Bill Vergantino. Vergantino accounted for three Delaware touchdowns (two passing, one rushing). He rushed for 65 yards and passed for 93. Delaware scored a conference season-high eight touchdowns. The Blue Hens' defense was led by Yankee Conference Defensive Player of the Week Tim Jacobs. Jacobs, a senior cornerback, had nine tackles, forced two fumbles and returned a fumble 76 yards for a touchdown.

Maine's offense sputtered for the most part and the Black Bears' defense could not stop the Blue Hens. Tailback Ben Sirmans rushed for 162 yards and a touchdown.

Connecticut 30
Richmond 28

Connecticut upset 13th-ranked Richmond 30-28. Connecticut's defense was impressive as it has been all season with Mark Chapman continuing to lead the league in interceptions. He raised his total to six on the season. However, the story of the game was the play of two freshmen on offense. Tailback Wilbur Gilliard rushed for 157 yards and two touchdowns to earn him Yankee Conference Offensive Player of the Week. Zeke Rodgers earned Yankee Conference Rookie of the Week. He threw for 229 yards and two touchdowns.

The Spiders were led on offense by the conference's leading rusher, Uly Scott. Scott rushed for 146 yards and three touchdowns. It was his sixth 100-yard game of the season.

Massachusetts 22
Northeastern 10

UMass won its sixth game in a row by a score of 22-10 over Northeastern. UMass is now second in the Yankee Conference behind Delaware and is now ranked No. 20 in the nation. The Minutemen's top performers in the game were Phil Lartigue and Jim Maguire. Lartigue, an inside linebacker, had 11 tackles and a quarterback sack, helping the UMass defense to hold Northeastern to 171 total yards. Maguire kicked field goals of 19, 40, and 42 yards. He also extended his PAT streak to 32 consecutive, one shy of the UMass record.

New Hampshire 43
Boston University 14

New Hampshire easily defeated Yankee Conference doormat Boston U. 43-14 this week. UNH was led by quarterback Jim Stayer. Stayer threw for 319 yards and two touchdowns. Barry Bourassa accounted for 274 all-purpose yards to move into second place in all-time I-AA all-purpose yardage with 5927. He scored on a 53-yard pass, rushed for 73 yards, had 92 yards receiving, and 102 yards in kick returns.

John Schaeffer had 12 tackles for a weak Terrier defense.

William & Mary 14

James Madison had its best defensive performance of the season in a 21-14 win against William & Mary. JMU has still allowed the most points in the Yankee Conference with 280, but with the help of Chris Parrott (tied for the Yankee Conference lead with six interceptions) has a +3 turnover ratio. The Dukes were led on offense by Kenny Sims. After sitting out the first quarter with an injury, Sims rushed for 155 yards and a touchdown.

The Tribe's top performer was Adrian Rich who had 10 tackles in defeat.

Hoops open with soft schedule

By PATRICK MEILER

... Midnight Madness was a success. The first-ever Midnight Madness at Villanova proved successful. Everyone had a good time and the night started off the year in high spirits. Lastly, most Villanova fans would like to say thanks to the freshman class, especially Kerry Kittles, for deciding to remain at Villanova University. On to the season ...

... Let us take a brief team-by-team look at Villanova's non-conference opponents.

At American University — Dec. 5

The Eagles will be out for revenge as the Wildcats open their season in D.C. American, predicted to finish in the middle of the Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) is led by 6-foot-6 senior-forward Brian Gilgeous (19.8 p.p.g.). He is the leading candidate for CAA Player of the Year. Gilgeous is joined by 6-foot-10 senior Craig Sedmak, a forward/center who scored 13 p.p.g. last season. Depth is a problem for American. The Eagles lost their other three starters from last year's 11-18 team. Newcomers will be counted upon by Coach Chris Knoche.

At St. Mary's (CA) — Dec. 12

Villanova continues the tradition of playing a road game near one of its seniors' hometown. Calvin Byrd will hopefully lead the Cats to victory in this one. St. Mary's lost its two leading scorers from a 13-17 club of a year ago. In addition, the 1992 West Coast Conference (WCC) Freshman of the Year, Booker Newberry, transferred. The Gaels were a slow-down halfcourt type team last year. Seven players who did start at least two games last year do return. The Cats will focus their attention on swingman John Levitt (9.0 p.p.g.), point guard Darrell Daniel, and forward Brian Brazier. Look for Alaskan Jumoke Horton, a 6-foot-8 270 pound freshman to clog the middle.

Pennsylvania — Dec. 15, Spectrum

The Cats had better not overlook Big 5 member Penn Dec. 15. Penn, some believe, will unseat Princeton atop the Ivy this year. Coach Fran Dunphy, whose team had a blazing 14-4 finish last year, loses two starters (point guard Paul Chambers and forward Vince Curran) to graduation. He gladly welcomes back a solid nucleus of players, including guard Jerome Allen (12 p.p.g.), forward Barry Pierce (12.9 p.p.g.), and forward Shawn Trice (8.4 p.p.g.). Vanderbilt transfer Matt Maloney will join Allen in the backcourt. 'Nova will look to win the battle inside, as the Quakers' weakness lies up front.

Vermont — Dec. 22

The Catamounts will hope to spoil 'Nova's duPont Pavilion home opener. It should not happen. Vermont lost its point guard, as well as the best player in the school's history, Kevin Robertson (17.6 p.p.g.), to graduation. It does return three starters from a 16-13 middle-of-the-pack North Atlantic Conference team. Look for 'Nova to focus its defense on forward Dave Ostrosky (11 p.p.g.), and three-point gunner Brian Tarrant (13.7 p.p.g.). Freshman guard Eddie Benton, winner of the Dapper Dan Classic three-point shooting contest, will also vie for playing time.

Lehigh — Dec. 30

The Engineers travel south to face the Cats at duPont three days after Christmas. Lehigh is in the non-scholarship Patriot League. They finished in fourth place last year and return only one starter, Chuck Penn (14 p.p.g.). Translation: Christmas has passed. An upset here and I transfer. Next.

Columbia — Dec. 28

The Columbia University Lions invade duPont just two nights after Lehigh. Columbia returns four starters from a 10-16 team that finished 8-6 in the Ivy. The lone graduation loss is a big one, forward Russ Steward, the Lions' leading rebounder and all-conference performer. The backcourt will be Columbia's strength. It is led by guard Buck Jenkins (16.8 p.p.g.) and Mike Jelinsky. Jelinsky returns from an injury and is backed up by Omar Sanders (6.7 p.p.g.). Look for forward Par

No. 1 N. Iowa 34 Indiana St. 13

Quarterback Jay Johnson threw a 60-yard touchdown pass and added another one on the ground to give NIU the victory in Indiana. Northern Iowa, 8-0 overall and 3-0 in the Gateway Conference, retains its No. 1 ranking. Indiana St. is 3-6, 1-3.

No. 2 Idaho 52 N. Arizona 14

With its victory, Idaho improves its record to 7-1 and moves up to the No. 2 slot in the rankings.

No. 3 (tie) The Citadel 7-1 Idle

No. 3 (tie) Northeast Louisiana 6-2 Idle

No. 5 Marshall 30 W. Carolina 38

WCU quarterback Lonnie Galloway threw four TDs as the Catamounts knocked off Marshall at WCU. The loss marked the end of Marshall's eight game conference winning streak and its 10 game regular season winning streak.

No. 6 Delaware 57 Maine 13

The Blue Hens capitalized on five turnovers by Maine and chalked up 433 yards on offense to rout the Blake Bears. Quarterback Bill Vergantino was seven of 13 for 93 yards and two TDs. Delaware halfback Lanue Johnson rushed for 96 yards and two touchdowns.

Delaware, now 7-1 overall, can clinch the Yankee Conference title with a victory over Connecticut next week. Maine is 4-4 on the season.

No. 7 Mid. Tenn. St. 10 No. 16 Georgia Southern 13

Chris Wright ran it in from a yard out with 30 seconds to play to give Georgia Southern the win. The Eagles were led by quarterback Joe Dupree, who had 104 yards on the ground. Dupree was replaced by Charles Bostick on the final drive. Bostick ran for 28 yards and completed a key 16-yard pass. MTSU drops to 6-2. GSU is 6-2 and ranked No. 16 in Division I-AA.

No. 8 Samford 49 Alabama-Bir. 3

Samford improves to 7-1 and retains its No. 8 ranking with the rout.

No. 9 Youngstown St. 28 E. Illinois 19

The Penguins rebounded from a loss to Northeastern to defeat Eastern Illinois at Youngstown. Youngstown upped its record to 6-2. The loss was E. Illinois' (3-6) third straight.

No. 10 Florida A&M 42 Morgan St. 32

With the win, A&M improves to 6-2 and cracks the Top 10 for the first time this season.

Cats bounce back with romp over URI

The Cats are back.

Left for dead a week ago after two consecutive losses, 'Nova snapped its two-game losing streak and returned to its familiar winning ways with a 34-3 drubbing of hapless Rhode Island. The 6-2 Cats shot back to 11th in Division I-AA, and kept their hopes alive for a post-season berth in the playoffs going into tomorrow's contest at New Hampshire (3-4-1, 1-4).

"This was a game to get our confidence back," said Head Coach Andy Talley. "We played solid defense and got a boost from the offense."

Especially from the running back tandem of Kevin Mosley (26 carries, 121 yards) and Jeff Johnson (12 carries, 112 yards), who became the first pair of backs to each rush for more than 100 yards since 1989.

"This is indicative of Jeff for the past five years," said Talley. "We need a tailback offense and running game on offense, which they give us. Kevin Mosley ranks right up there with the top backs in the league."

While the offense was clicking, the 'Nova defense arose from a poor start and stifled Rhode Island after allowing URI to drive down to the Cat goal line on its first possession. They held the Rams to a field goal and never let them threaten again.

As the defense repeatedly forced the Rams to punt, the offense went to great lengths in establishing a potent running game against a Ram defense that is last in the Yankee in total defense. Piling up a whopping 524 total yards, quarterback Tom Colombo continually led the team down the field and left no doubt as to the Cats' superiority.

Although the Cats, now tied for third in the Yankee at 4-2, had control most of the game, they did not play with much emotion and failed to capitalize on many big plays, except for Brad Parpan's fourth quarter 46-yard TD pass to a diving George Brown. This business-type fashion, though, did not concern Talley, who said after the game that it is hard to motivate a veteran team that knew they would win the game.

And this is a veteran team that knows it cannot suffer another loss this season, especially at UNH, where they have never won.

"We have to get up for this game," said Talley. "If we win at UNH, I think we're on our way. Our goal of winning the Yankee may not happen but our goals of making the playoffs and winning the National Championship would make up for that."

NOTES: 'Nova's sixth win of the season guaranteed the team another winning season, the eighth straight under Coach Talley ... The Cat defense ranks second in the conference in total defense behind Massachusetts. The offense currently stands at fifth in the conference ... After tomorrow's game at UNH, the Cats finish the regular season with home games against Fordham (Homecoming) and Maine. Get your tickets now.

Field Hockey ends season at 12-7; breaks for Big East Tournament at Boston College

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Assistant Sports Editor

Ending the regular season on a positive note, the Villanova field hockey team bludgeoned hapless league rival Georgetown 7-0. This game gave the Cats a split for the week, as they had lost to Lafayette earlier by the score of 2-1.

The Lafayette match took place Oct. 27, and both teams went into the game with similar records. Villanova (now 12-7) hoped to reinforce its No. 18 ranking against its 10-5-1 opponent.

Lafayette, however, built a two-goal lead early in the first half. They netted one goal at 14:57 into the game, and followed it up a mere 36 seconds later, taking their 2-0 lead into halftime.

We were sick of 1-0 games and we wanted to score big. We knew we could do it against a team like [Georgetown].

Head Coach Jackie Gerzaek

The Wildcats came charging out in the second half, and scored at 2:28 into the period. The goal came when junior Staci Verzera drove home a Bree Hawthorne-Melissa Rea setup on a corner hit.

Frustration mounted for 'Nova as the period wore on. The Cats racked up five penalty corners in the final 10 minutes of the game, but none of them yielded the tying goal. Lafayette withstood the Villanova offensive surge and left the Main Line with a 2-1 win.

On Sunday, the stickwomen had a chance to redeem themselves when they hosted an 0-15 Georgetown team. Villanova had beaten the Hoyas 10-0 in the '91 season, and hoped to head into postseason play with a win.

"We were sick of 1-0 games, and we wanted to score big," said head coach Jackie Gerzabek. "We knew we could do it against a team like this."

It was Senior Day at Villanova Stadium, as the game marked the final home appearance for seniors Rea, Krista Saponara and Kathy Pearce. Rea was the first one to do her class proud, scoring the first goal for the Cats after a corner hit had been broken up.

At halftime, the score was a deceptively close 1-0 lead for 'Nova. Junior Kate McKee widened the lead when she broke loose of the G'town defense and scored goal number two. Saponara made her Senior Day presence felt when she scored off a Hawthorne assist at 9:00, making the score 3-0.

Georgetown seemed to tire out from that point on, and the Wildcats capitalized on an uninspired Hoya defense. Sophomore Barbara King scored twice late in the game. She also notched an assist on a picture-perfect corner, combining with Hawthorne and Verzera for the triple assist to a Rea goal.

Pearce was not tried much by the Georgetown attack in this game, but that did not lessen what has been a triumphant season for her. Pearce missed the end of last season with a knee injury and underwent reconstructive surgery. Through determination and an effective rehab program, she returned this year to do a solid job at the sweeper position.

The Wildcats will travel to Boston College this weekend where they will play in the Big East tournament. In all likelihood, they will be matched up against the Orangewomen of Syracuse.

"It's going to be a good match," said Gerzabek. "We took [Syracuse] 1-0, but I think we outplayed them more than the score showed. I think we're a better team than them."

Soccer finishes year with win

By BOB TRAVISANO
Assistant Sports Editor

Everything that needed to be said has already been said. Predictions, excuses, expectations and bad memories all fall to the wayside after a bad season. Most would blame the poor display on the fact that it was a rebuilding year. That would be a valid explanation provided that a barrage of injuries is also included in the equation. The team also played its first season under new Head Coach Shelley Chamberlain. When a new coach takes over a program, it takes a long time to implement any kind of game plan, regardless of the sport. If anyone seemed fit to run the Villanova women's soccer team, it sure was Chamberlain.

Another key piece to the puzzle was also lost in the mix — All-American Tina Conti. For the past three seasons Conti led the Cats in scoring. If the focal point of the offense is no longer on the team, there is certain to be some kind of void.

The last game of this season was against SUNY-Stony Brook. Earlier in the season, 'Nova tied this team to capture the championship in the Stony Brook Tournament. With a confident edge, the Cats went into this match fighting. Playing to a stalemate for the entire first half, an occurrence the women have become familiar with this season, neither team scored until deep into the second period. Stony Brook cashed in with 15 minutes gone in the second. From then on, it was another defensive struggle that featured no more goals for the next 20 minutes.

With 35 minutes gone in the half, 'Nova found the heart to put one through the posts for a score. Minutes later and with only 14 seconds left in the game, the women scored again to ice the victory on the foot of Eileen McCarthy. The equalizing goal was scored by Nikki Thelen off an assist from Rose Miller. This up-and-down game epitomized the roller-coaster season experienced by this team.

It is a tribute to the team that they pulled out a victory so late in the last game of the season. On the game, Danielle Fagan registered eight saves and a startling 187 on the season. The explosive scoring tandem of Sandy Ross and Sarah Levandusky combined for 22 total points on the season. Following them were McCarthy and Rachel Moreau with seven and five points respectively.

Merchant target of complaints

By KATE SZUMANSKI

Two resident advisors of St. Katherine Hall, attempted to purchase a one-half keg of birch beer from Rosemont Beverage for a "happy hour" dormitory function Oct. 30. The students, Bernadine O'Leary and Lauren Peduzzi, claim they were treated in a rude and unfair manner by the person who handled their business transaction.

The proprietor of Rosemont Beverage, John Michalski, claims he followed the rules of his business and did not treat the student customers in an unfair or rude manner. O'Leary plans to pursue this matter the Better Business Bureau.

"I ordered the keg Oct. 26 from Rosemont Beverage over the telephone and was told I needed to put down a $45 deposit on the tap at the time of purchase. It was not specified what type of deposit would be acceptable, cash or check. I assumed my out of state check would be acceptable," said O'Leary, a graduate student.

"We went to Rosemont Beverage on Nov. 6 at 4 p.m., and Bernadine attempted to pay with an out-of-state check, which could not be done. He [Michalski] wanted $45 in cash or a local check with either a Bryn Mawr, Radnor or Villanova address on the check," said Peduzzi, a senior.

"We went back to the dorm and found a resident who had Mainline Federal checks. We returned to Rosemont Beverage with the local check, at which time the businessman asked to see this girl's driver's license. He became very angry because her license was issued out of state," said Peduzzi, adding that he had previously "offered to accept the out-of-state check and license" to keep in his possession until the tap and keg were returned.

"He began yelling at us, telling us we are college students and our check won't be good anyway," said Peduzzi. "We finally arranged to pay with the local check and leave the student's driver's license at the store. We also agreed to return the tap and keg to Rosemont Beverage that same night," she added.

As the students were leaving the store, Peduzzi told Michalski, "I understand you have these policies and rules regarding your business, but you do not have to be so rude in explaining them."

Upon hearing this "he became very angry, yelling that he had not been rude and threw the license and check at us, demanding the return of his tap," said Peduzzi. "We had already paid for the tap and keg and in a sense had a contract," Peduzzi said.

Tradition and festivity highlight Homecoming celebration

By ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWSKI and KATE SZUMANSKI
Assistant News Editors

Although the University's Sesquicentennial Homecoming Weekend celebration officially begins today, this past week has been marked by activities designed to encourage enthusiasm within the Villanova community, said Danielle Lesko, festivals coordinator of the Student Programming Council (SPC).

Activities held during "Wildcat Spirit Week" included an Oreo cookie giveaway, a game of 150 musical chairs and the building of a 150-foot long hoagie and ice cream sundae. Today, students, faculty and staff were asked to wear Villanova memorabilia and blue and white in honor of "Spirit Day," said Lesko.

"We wanted to do something extra-special and different in honor of the University's Sesquicentennial celebration," said Lesko. "Hopefully, we have made this year's Homecoming celebration especially memorable."

Student Government President Ken Batchelor said, "Spirit Week was a great idea. It is a nice lead-up to Homecoming Weekend, especially since the theme was geared toward the 150th Anniversary of the University."

The Homecoming Dance will be held this evening at the Mile Post Inn. The Homecoming Court consists of 10 students who have been nominated by different student organizations. The 1992 Homecoming Court consists of the following students: Ken Batchelor, Chrissie Berardi, Kathy Breen, Joe Cooper, Ryan Fannon, Patti Herman, Frank Ingarra, Kelly Ann McGowan, Liz Murphy and Chris Randazzo.

Also this evening, the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences is sponsoring the annual Medallion Dinner which honors five alumni for service in their chosen fields, said Donald Leatherbarrow, acting director of the University Alumni Association. The black tie event will be held in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center, added Leatherbarrow.

Veterans receive recognition

At 11 a.m. Nov. 11, 1918, an armistice between the Allies and the Central Powers ended the fighting of World War I. The armistice was a cease-fire, leaving vast problems unresolved.

With over 10 million dead, huge areas of Europe lying in ruins, and a satisfactory peace settlement yet to be negotiated, the news of the ceasefire produced mammoth celebrations.

Two years after the war ended, France and England observed the anniversary by paying tribute to their soldiers who had died in the war.

In 1921, the United States followed their example by honoring their own dead. With much ceremony, an unknown American soldier found in France was brought to Arlington National Cemetery in Virginia. Engraved in the marble tombstone above his head are the words, "Here rests in honored glory an American soldier known but to God." There he stays as a reminder to the brave men and women who gave their lives for their country.

Although Veterans Day did not become a federal legal holiday in the United States until 1938, during the 1920s annual observance became a tradition. Graves were decorated and red artificial poppies were worn to signify the wild flowers in the battlefields of Europe. For many years buglers played taps at main intersections in many cities, and for two minutes all traffic and business stopped in honor of the dead.

But for those who experienced the Holocaust of World War II, the armistice of 1918

Hunger Awareness Week to raise consciousness

By JANE PAPACCIO
Staff Reporter

Hunger Awareness Week has been an annual event at the University since the fall of 1972, said the Rev. Owen Jackson, O.S.A. In the early 1970s, there was terrible hunger throughout Asia, the Middle East and Africa. The Social Action Committee, which is part of the University Senate, mandated to work against world hunger by starting a Hunger Awareness Week at the University, Jackson added.

Campus Ministry decided to adopt Hunger Awareness Week in order to make it a steady vehicle to aid starving people throughout the world. By transferring Hunger Awareness Week to the jurisdiction of the Campus Ministry, the founders hoped to involve students, faculty and members of the Villanova Community, Jackson said.

The week before Thanksgiving marks the beginning of Hunger Awareness Week at the University. It consists of numerous activities which contribute their earnings to hunger related charities throughout the world, said Jackson. While the main goal of Hunger Awareness Week is to raise money for charities, another is to raise awareness of the fact that there is a hunger problem in our society, added Jackson.

According to Oxfam America, an international relief organization, "The world grows more than enough food to feed everyone, but one-fifth of the world's people are too poor to feed themselves."

This year's Hunger Awareness Week marks the University's 20th annual fast, Jackson said. The fast will take place on Nov. 19, when University students and faculty will be asked to give up their lunches to aid in the fight against hunger. The objective of the fast is to get everyone on campus "to fast on the Thursday before Thanksgiving to heighten the awareness that people go hungry all over the world more frequently than just one meal," said Jackson.

For every student or faculty member that does not eat lunch in one of the University dining halls, the University donates $3 to the charity of the year, Jackson added. Generally, four out of every five students gives up their lunch.

While Thanksgiving is a time of plenty for most, for people throughout the world, it is still a time of famine, Jackson said.

Another important event taking place during Hunger Awareness Week is the Run for Hunger. Students and faculty who choose to run get sponsors to support their efforts. The proceeds from the Run for Hunger will go toward the construction of an educational center in Chulucanas, Peru, said Jackson.

In the past, the Run for Hunger revenue has donated money to various charities to build schools in the Philippines and soup kitchens in Haiti and South Africa, Jackson added.

A movie entitled "Local Heroes, Global Change" will be played at various times throughout the day in the Connelly Cinema Nov. 17. The Hunger Awareness Committee has invited faculty to bring their students to the show. The movie explains the efforts made to change society so that it can feed its' people.

There will also be exhibits of handmade crafts from many developing countries throughout the week. The international crafts are original, and the profits will go to those who made them, Jackson added.

There will also be a letter writting campaign at all Masses

HATFIELD, England

The European Community's (EC) chief trade negotiator said that he was confident that Europe and the United States could beat the deadline for settling a farm-subsidy dispute that threatens to turn into an international trade war.

The French, however, continued to plan for possible retaliation against the United States.

EC commissioner Frans Andriessen, speaking after a two-day meeting of European Community trade ministers, said he had no immediate plans to meet with U.S. negotiators.

DETROIT, Mich.

Malice Green, 35, was beaten to death with a flashlight Nov. 5 by two police officers as five other police officers watched or took part. Green died of head injuries in a hospital emergency room.

His father's plea for continued peace was closely echoed by the Police Community Relations Council.

Police Chief Stanley Knox said Friday that he had suspended the officers without pay. An internal investigation was underway, but Knox would not elaborate on what charges would be sought.

BERLIN, Germany

Tens of thousands of people demonstrated against racism, expressing a widespread opposition to violence against foreigners.

About 40,000 people rallied in Stuttgart in southwestern Germany, 15,000 in Hanover and 1,000 in Darmstadt — all under banners protesting rightist, anti-foreigner violence.

The wave of violence has claimed 11 lives this year in hundreds of attacks on asylum-seekers and shelters.

NEW YORK, N.Y.

A top judge in New York state was arrested Nov. 7, accused of trying to extort money from a former girlfriend by threatening her and her daughter.

FBI agents arrested Sol Wachtler, chief judge of the New York State Court of Appeals, on the Long Island Expressway in the city's borough of Queens.

Wachtler, 62, was accused in a criminal complaint of making threatening calls to a New York woman after their relationship had ended.

WASHINGTON, D.C.

The Supreme Court gave companies that fund their own health insurance the right to sharply cut the benefits paid to medically treat AIDS and other catastrophic diseases Nov. 9.

The justices refused to hear an appeal filed on behalf of John W. McGann, an AIDS patient whose total medical benefits were cut from $1 million to $5,000 after he disclosed his illness to his supervisors.

McGann's employer, H & H Music Co. of Houston, said it wanted to save money on its medical insurance. Two lower federal courts ruled that such companies have "an absolute right" to alter the terms of their benefits.

HARRISBURG, Pa.

A surprising election campaign is underway that could result in the removal of Robert W. O'Donnell, a Philadelphia Democrat, as speaker of the House, and change Pennsylvania's political horizon.

The challenge for the speaker's seat is being mounted by Majority Leader H. William DeWeese of rural Greene County. A sitting speaker has not been dumped by his own party in Pennsylvania since 1921.

The outcome could affect O'Donnell's expected bid for governor in 1994 as well as the fate of others with ambition for higher office.

University professor discusses life on Indian reservations

By KERRY LATTANZIO
Staff Reporter

Dr. Barbara Wall, director of the Center for Peace and Justice Education, spent this past summer on four Indian reservations, including the Hopi in Arizona, the Rosebud and Pine Ridge in South Dakota and the Black Feet in Montana. She chose these reservations because each has a Tribal College.

It was interesting to find out how Indian culture is worked into the curriculum of these institutions and how Indians see the importance of having a college in their community, said Wall.

"I wanted to investigate the possibility of Villanova entering into a partnership with these colleges so that we might learn from each other, as well as share resources," Wall said.

The largest of these colleges dating back 20 years, is the Navajo Community College. It is located in the Navajo Nation, of which the Hopi Reservation is a part, added Wall.

Sintegleska University, which has a very strong department in Sioux, or Lakota studies, is located on the Rosebud Reservation, said Wall. All education majors must be Lakota studies majors as well, Wall said. This curriculum is required so that they will know their own culture well enough to teach it, added Wall. Courses in Lakota philosphy involve participation in traditional rituals, said Wall.

"They don't have the divisions between religion and philosophy that we have, but their spirituality influences their world view and logic," she said.

The college also provides services for substance abuse counseling, said Wall. Substance abuse is a widespread problem on Indian reservations, Wall added.

Another aim of the college is to combat the negative self-worth and negative attitude that many Indians have towards their heritage, said Wall. They try to foster a love of tradition and the tribe, she added.

The Black Feet College is very small and struggling to build a library, said Wall. Once that library is built, they will need many books, she said.

Wall asks that people who have books that they do not need consider donating them to this library. She also asks that students donate their books at the end of the semester, rather than selling them.

"Another Indian institution that I hope Villanova can help is the White Buffalo Calf Women's Home for Children," said Wall.

Wall is very enthusiastic about the time she spent on the reservations. "I found the Indian people very gracious, open and willing to share. I want to go back," Wall said.

Literary arts journal recognizes diversity

By MARYANN PULLIA

A new campus magazine with an international focus is being formed on campus. The magazine, Passages, will be a literary arts journal of international and intercultural exchange.

Amy Lilly, a senior English and honors major and the magazine's editor, organized the formation of the magazine after returning from a semester in Italy. Lilly said she has lived abroad several times in her life and has come to value intercultural experiences, adding that she is creating the magazine to provide a forum for other study abroad students, foreign students and faculty who have spent time abroad to share their experiences.

Hitchcock speaks on educational changes

By CHRISTINE FINGERHUT
Staff Reporter

The Sesquicentennial committee on lectures and conferences sponsored a lecture entitled, "The Truth that Frees — Catholic Universities and Their Traditions Nov. 10. Professor James Hitchcock of St. Louis University was the first of three speakers scheduled to address the topic of "Alternate Visions of Catholic Higher Education."

According to Hitchcock, the crisis of Catholic universities is a result of the crisis in the Catholic Church following Vatican II. Many people began throwing away traditions in coming to grip with the modern world, and as a result, Catholic higher education went through changes very quickly, said Hitchcock.

There has been a loss of Catholic identity in the years since Vatican II, especially among today's young people in terms of fundamental religious knowledge, added Hitchcock. Hitchcock said that this loss cannot be remedied solely on a level of academic training. Individuals must gain a sense of Catholicism by understanding why Catholics do and have done certain things, such as liturgical practices and invoking saints, he added.

Hitchcock said the vision he has of a Catholic university is to acquaint students with the richness of their religious traditions and to teach them what it means to be a Catholic. He said that this is not a universally shared vision. It will never again be possible for any institution to claim complete Catholicism, because professional education is essentially secular, particularly medical schools and business schools, sasid Hitchcock.

This series of lectures is part of the ongoing Sesquicentennial celebration. Speakers are scheduled to address this topic again on Nov. 20 and Dec. 1. The series will culminate with a breakfast with University President, the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., Dec. 3 to discuss the various aspects of this issue.

South campus dorms renamed and blessed

A dedication ceremony was held for the newly named McGuire Hall and Caughlin Hall on Nov. 6, outside the residence halls formerly known as New Male and New Female.

New Male was dedicated to the Very Rev. Francis X.N. McGuire who graduated from Villanova College in 1932. McGuire was just 35 when he was named Villanova's president in 1944. It was he who founded Villanova's College of Nursing and the School of Law.

Under McGuire's leadership, Villanova's charter was amended and Villanova College was inaugurated as a university. McGuire also founded the University's Development Foundation and served as its director from 1954 to 1959.

A life member on the Board of Consultors of the Law School, McGuire holds honorary degrees from Villanova, LaSalle University, St. Joseph's University and Long Island University. He was an Alumni Medal recipient

New Female was dedicated to the Dr. Edward J. Caughlin, III. Caughlin first became involved in the advancement of the University in 1957, and his gifts have benefitted the College of Commerce and Finance, Falvey Library and the School of Law. Caughlin has also supported the University's past two capital campaigns.

Caughlin was awarded a Doctor of Commercial Science honorary degree from the University in 1968, and in 1992, he was elected to membership in Villanova's President's Forum.

After the introduction of the honorees, there was a reading by a Villanova student and granddaughter of Caughlin, a reflection from the Rev. Edmund Dobbin, O.S.A., president of Villanova, and an unveiling of the hall plaques.

The dedication ceremony concluded with a benediction and the reading of the Irish Blessing by coordinator for Residence Management of the South Area Joan Tebeau.

WARTIME VILLANOVA

The two world wars of the 20th century have had a significant impact on American colleges and universities. Villanova is no exception.

World War I brought the first military training unit to Villanova. Within two weeks of the American declaration of war against Germany (in April 1917) Villanova students were forced to drill on Mendel Field under military direction. In September 1918 a Student Army Training Corps (S.A.T.C.) began to train army officers at Villanova. There were 274 men in the corps that fall. Most of them lived in Main College Hall (the present Tolentine), where a half dozen or more men were crammed into rooms designed for two persons.

Such close quarters undoubtedly hastened the spread of the deadly influenza epidemic which struck the United States that autumn. By the end of September, 173 students were down with the disease. On Oct. 1 the Army imposed a quarentine on the campus, complete with guard posts at all the entrances. Three students died before the plague abated late in the year.

When news of the Armistice reached Villanova on Nov. 11, 1918, three companies from the S.A.T.C. unit paraded through Bryn Mawr, where the Rev. James J. Dean, O.S.A., the college president, was one of the speakers at a local ceremony. Afterwards the men marched back to campus where they lighted a huge bonfire and burned the German Kaiser in effigy.

The S.A.T.C. became a ROTC unit after the war, but it soon folded for lack of interest. In the years which followed, Villanova students and faculty shared the nationwide revulsion against war which intensified into an outspoken isolationsim by the middle 1930s. Only the Japanese bombing of Pearl Harbor on Dec. 7, 1941, shook Villanovans from their opposition to another world war.

The American declaration of war in late 1941 actually posed a serious threat to an all-male college like Villanova, since most of its students would be eligible for military service. Fortunately, the government allowed college students to join the Army Enlisted Reserve program and remain at school until they were called into active service. The Villanova reserve unit received its call for April 5, 1943. The men had a farewell dinner at the college the night before and left from the Villanova train station early the next morning.

Villanova was saved from an even more drastic decline in enrollment by the Navy V-12 program. It was one of twelve such installations which were established on college and university campuses throughout the United States. After World War II it became a permanent Navy ROTC unit at Villanova.

Villanovans learned of Japan's surrender on Aug. 14, 1945 from the ringing of the college bell. Many entered St. Thomas of Villanova Church to give thanks and then slipped out onto Austin Field where the band congregated for an impromptu parade. A local fire truck showed up and added its clanging bell to the celebrations. At least 65 Villanovans had given their lives to make this victory possible.

The restoration of peace brought a flood of students to Villanova, many of them taking advantage of generous veterans' benefits which paid all their college expenses. For Villanova it marked the beginning of a massive postwar expansion which reshaped the campus forever.

Campus call box vandalized near main tennis courts

By JENNIFER MUNDY
Staff Reporter

Sometime early Monday morning, Nov. 9, one of the new call boxes located near the tennis and basketball courts was vandalized, presumably by students, said Jeffrey Horton, director of Public Safety. The damage included a broken solar panel, as well as the destruction that resulted from the entire unit being pried out of the ground, said Horton.

The reparations, which include repairs and reinstallment, are estimated to cost the University between $3,500 and $4,500, he added.

There are two main reasons why Villanova has installed these emergency phones, said Horton. The first is that their presence makes a statement that the University is serious about campus security. The second is that the phones provide a quick and efficient way for emergency calls to be received by the Department of Public Safety. The emergency phone system has become the standard campus security nationwide, Horton said.

"Initially, the University wanted to install over 30 emergency phones on campus for this year," said Dave Mann, the senior investigator of the University's department of Public Safety. "However, because of budget restraints there have been 15 installed at the present and we are trying to get another one for the law school, Mann said.

The reason for the high price tag is that the phones are cellular, said Mann. There are no wires invovled. When one of the receivers is picked up the call automatically goes to the Public Safety Department, added Mann. The staff of the Department of Public Safety can tell where the call is coming from. This will enable a rapid response time in the event of an emergency, Mann said.

The most disappointing aspect of this incident is that the call boxes were put on campus for the students' use, and now one of them has been destroyed by some students, said Mann. The aim of these emergency phones was to enhance campus security, Mann said. The removal of this particular call box is particularly serious.

"Now, the closest phone to where the damaged one once stood is the one between Sheehan Hall and Vasey," said Mann. This is a considerable distance, especially in the event of an emergency, said Mann. Mann did note that the Department of Public Safety had anticipated problems with the call boxes from the first day of installment.

Culture magazine

Seniors Eileen Morris and Paul Abeln, the two associate editors, also spent last semester abroad. Morris and Abeln see a need for this magazine on campus because Villanova is often considered a very homogeneous campus.

"Actually, it's amazing how much diversity we do have here," said Abeln. Lilly, Morris and Abeln have met Villanovans from Russia, Croatia, Egypt, Nigeria and many other parts of the world through their study abroad experiences.

"These people's views on our country and culture are as valuable as the views we gain when we go abroad. They both help us to understand our own culture more," said Lilly. Lilly sees the magazine as not merely a tool for promoting overseas study and travel, but as a forum for the expressions of the variety of cultures represented at the University.

Passages will be a bi-annual publication. The first issue will appear in early March and the staff is now looking for submissions.

"We have a great core staff of students who are excited about the magazine," said Morris. The staff is currently in search for future editors, said Morris.

"We need underclasspersons who have an interest in editing and international affairs. Study or former residency abroad is not a prerequisite for editorship, added Morris.

Submissions should be dropped off at the International Students Office, Corr 102. Additional information concerning Passages can be obtained at the office. "Submissions can be anything from photos and artwork to poems and journal entries written abroad — and anything more standard," said Lilly.

Veterans Day observed

ceased to have relevance. No longer was it considered to be the beginning of an era of lasting peace, but a brief interlude of tranquility before an even greater horror. For this reason, in 1954 a bill was passed specifying that Armistice Day thereafter be known and commemorated as Veterans Day for veterans of every war.

The University's ROTC held a ceremony at Widener University in observance of Veterans Day. W. David Eckard III was the guest speaker. He is a Vietnam War veteran and a 1966 graduate of the Pennsylvania Military College, now Widener University. Two buglers played taps, a cannon was fired and the flag was lowered to half-mast. A reception followed.

The NROTC program at the University participated in a celebration commemorating Veterans Day, said Captain Sandy Stoddard, commanding officer of the University's NROTC program. NROTC was invited to participate in a Veteran's Day commemorative program in Wayne, said Stoddard. The celebration was organized by the National Battlefield Monument Commission, he added.

"Our participation in the program consisted of presenting the colors for the Pledge of Allegiance and a bugler to play taps in the opening ceremony. Then four members of Whiskey Company gave a demonstration of one of their drills," said Stoddard.

Homecoming Weekend

As a part of Saturday's Homecoming activities, the Villanova Wildcat Club in conjunction with the Varsity Club will be honoring both Sunbowl and Liberty Bowl teams of the early 1960s, said Leatherbarrow. The Head Coach of Fordham University's football team, Larry Glueck, was a member of both the Sunbowl and Liberty Bowl teams, Leatherbarrow said.

After the Homecoming football game, the Alumni Club of Greater Philadelphia along with the Student Alumni Association will be sponsoring a post-game reception in the Butler Annex, added Leatherbarrow.

"I am really excited about this weekend. I think it is one of the nicest weekends for the University community. My only concern with Homecoming is that it seems that tailgating spots are limited to season ticket holders. I hope that doesn't discourage any alumni who are not season ticket holders who would like a spot. It would be nice if all alumni and seniors of age could have spots," said Batchelor.

"I look forward to the positive spirit and the renewed acquaintances especially with recent graduates who I may have known from classes or living in the dorms," said the Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., dean of Students. "On the down side, after a certain point in the day, there becomes concern about how many students and alumni may be intoxicated. By in large, it is a positive day," added Stack.

Changes have been implemented into the program for the 1993 Homecoming Weekend celebration, according to the Office of Student Activities. "As we look towards the next 150 years, it seems appropriate to build on old traditions and develop new Homecoming programs that are more reflective of the current generation of Villanova students," according to a memo from the Office of Student Activities.

"The Homecoming Court will be replaced by Villanova Spirit Awards, which are intended to recognize outstanding student leaders for their service and dedication to improving the welfare of the University community. It is believed that this change will act as a great testimony to the quality of character of all Villanova students," according to the Office of Student Activities.

"I refused to give the tap back because we had paid for the keg," said O'Leary.

Michalski asked O'Leary to return the tap, but she refused to do so. "The businessman threatened to call Radnor Police if he did not receive the tap back, which he in fact did," said Peduzzi.

"One of the girls was cursing and screaming in the store, at which time I handed everything back to them and asked for my tap back. She refused to return the tap, at which time I called Radnor Police," said Michalski.

The police officer settled the matter and the tap was given back to the owner of the store. "We received the money back for the price of the keg and took our business elsewhere," said Peduzzi.

Michalski said he was "doing the students a favor" by agreeing to accept the check in the first place.

"Nobody accepts checks because we get burned every-time," said Michalski. Michalski said many of the checks he receives from students bounce, and he always takes a risk in accepting them.

"As a consumer, I feel I have the right to express a complaint without being treated in a hostile manner," Peduzzi said.

O'Leary plans to pursue this matter and is filing a customer complaint against Rosemont Beverage with the Better Business Bureau.

Gays may be allowed in ROTC

By College Press Service

If President-elect Bill Clinton holds to his campaign promise, gay and lesbian college students will be able to enroll in ROTC programs and not be forced to hide their sexual orientation.

Clinton has vowed to do away with Department of Defense policy that bars gays and lesbians from being in the military. This practice also applies to Air Force, Army and Navy ROTC units on college and university campuses.

"I have to believe him," said Neal Snow, a University of Maine senior who was recently dismissed when he told Air Force ROTC officials he is gay. "If Clinton had said it just once, I would have questioned it, but he said it many times."

President Bush, before and during the campaign, said he would maintain current policy, which states, in part, that "homosexuality is incompatible with military service. The presence of such members adversely affects the ability of the Armed Forces to maintain discipline, good order, and morale . . ."

The current policy is likely to remain intact until Clinton alters it by executive order. The next step is up to the new administration.

The military's ban on gays and lesbians often conflicts with universities' equal opportunity policies regarding race, religion, sexual preference and other factors.

"The armed forces now exist as the only sector in which this discrimination exists. The armed forces remain the only holdout," said Robert O'Neil, a law professor at the University of Virginia. "It doesn't make sense. It has remained intractable, but with a Clinton victory it may become moot."

There have been movements at schools nationwide to get rid of ROTC units because of the gay and lesbian policy.

When Snow was dismissed from the Air Force ROTC unit, the University of Maine faculty senate voted to support Snow's right to remain in the ROTC program. The school also wants the armed forces to alter its policies regarding people with physical limitations who are not allowed in the military.

Hunger

Nov. 15. The campaign is meant to persuade congress to write legislation to raise money for the Headstart program and the WICK program, both of which deal with the growing numbers of malnourished children in the United States, said Jackson. Twenty percent of all children in the United States are malnourished; every 5th child in America is hungry.

"Every day, 60,000 people — two-thirds of them babies and small children — die from hunger and related diseases," according to Oxfam International. The programs and activities of Hunger Awareness Week at the University are designed to help in the fight against hunger in foreign countries and at home, said Jackson.

Cancer Society sponsors Great American Smokeout

By KATHRYN HOLUB
Staff Reporter

Villanova will participate in the American Cancer Society's Great American Smokeout on Nov. 19 to encourage students, faculty and staff to give up smoking for 24 hours.

Ann Marie McCarthy, a registered nurse who works at the infirmary, is coordinating this event. There will be a table in Connelly Center from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. for students, faculty and staff to visit, said McCarthy. Survival kits containing candy, gum and literature on cigarette smoking, smokeless tobacco and breaking the habit will be distributed to participants in the Smokeout, McCarthy said. Information and sign-ups for the American Cancer Society's Fresh Start program will be available for smokers interested in participating in an on-campus program to help them stop smoking, she added.

Smokers will be encouraged to trade in their cigarette packs for apples, said McCarthy. Bryn Mawr Hospital will provide a machine to measure lung capacity, McCarthy said. There also will be contests and prizes for both smokers and non-smokers, McCarthy added.

McCarthy hopes that non-smokers, especially former smokers, will actively participate in the Smokeout. "Non-smokers and former smokers can participate by adopting and supporting a smoker for the day," said McCarthy.

The American Cancer Society stresses that smokeless tobacco is not a safe alternative to smoking, said McCarthy. The use of smokeless tobacco by male students on Villanova's campus seems common, she said. Its use can lead to a decrease in the ability to taste and smell and an increase in dental problems, according to the American Cancer Society, added McCarthy.

The American Cancer Society estimates there are about 50 million cigarette smokers and about 38 million former cigarette smokers in the United States today. It also predicts 168,000 new cases of lung cancer and 146,000 cancer deaths in 1992. Cigarette smoking causes 87 percent of lung cancer deaths among men and women, according to the American Cancer Society.

Most people who smoke would like to quit, says the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. According to the surgeon general, the increased risk of death begins to drop shortly after a smoker quits and declines for about 10 to 15 years until the risk of death returns to nearly the same level as someone who never smoked.

In an article appearing in the Oct. 30 edition of the Villanovan entitled "Task Force Raises AIDS Awareness," it was stated that one in every 30 college students is HIV infected. The sentence should have read, "One in every 300 College students is HIV infected." The Villanovan apologizes for this error.

Peace Award

Call for Nominations

The Center for Peace and Justice Education requests nominations for the Fourth Annual Adela Dwyer St. Thomas of Villanova Peace Award. The award will recognize outstanding contributions to the understanding of the meaning and conditions of justice and peace in human communities. Candidates may include, but need not be restricted to, scholars in the academy whose work on and devotion to these issues is especially exemplary.

Nominations will be forwarded to a Committee composed of members of the Villanova University community. The committee will select the award recipient following careful consideration of the list of candidates and supporting materials.

Cermonies for the award will typically be held on campus during October and will include a formal address by the recipient(s) who will receive $1,000. Nominations with supporting material should be sent no later than November 20 to: Dr. Barbara Wall, Director, The Center for Peace and Justice Education.

Homecoming should be fun and safe

The other day a senior told us: "I regret my experience at Homecoming two years ago. My biggest concern was finding beer. I missed the point of the whole weekend."

Her words struck home. For many undergraduates, Homecoming means one thing only — tailgating. One beer after another transforms the day into a blur of jumbled, half-remembered images; the entire event loses its significance. People view Homecoming Weekend as simply another excuse to get drunk — but on a larger scale — and some become destructive. (Remember the Student Activities van last year?)

Let us take a moment to reflect on other aspects of the weekend. Hopefully, we will remember these things tomorrow as we wander among our peers and those who have gone before use.

As the senior remarked, "Last year I realized how meaningful the weekend is for alumni and upperclassmen who get to see old friends and share memories." (Unfortunately, some alumni drink as heavily as the students, and they mar others' experiences as well.)

According to one estimate, 20,000 people will be on campus tomorrow. They return to celebrate many things. It is our 150th anniversary, and our campus has grown significantly. The St. Augustine Center for the Liberal Arts and the newly-renovated Church are the crown jewels of recent developments.

Students from at least five or six decades will return. Although times change, we share much in common with them. Let us welcome past generations of Villanovans with smiles tomorrow, not drunken cries.

Editors pack bags, say goodbye

A year ago at this time, we began our reign as the 1991-92 Editorial Board with an editorial concerning the highly controversial and very sensitive issue of multiculturalism that was magnified by a flyer distributed during Homecoming Weekend. We took a stand on the issue and voiced our opinion, receiving flak from the right and the left.

Throughout the past 20 issues, we have tried to present the campus with news about the University, provide a forum for discussion of national and campus issues and, above all, be objective and fair while upholding the integrity of the newspaper.

Now, with this issue, we end our reign after one of the most eventful years in recent University history. We covered and were involved in many controversial issues and landmark events at the University. Through it all, we received praise and criticism, but rarely indifference. We found that the University community, for the most part, is not apathetic; it truly cares.

Some of the issues covered and debated during this year included: the Sesquicentennial, the Core Curriculum, the DSA controversy, abortion, Rollie Massimino's departure and Election '92. Indeed, we have been fortunate enough to be involved in a key time for both the University and the nation. Hopefully, we helped make a difference, whether by providing information or making you think.

We hope that you've enjoyed this year as much as we have. Don't forget ... Get It Every Friday.

Article slanders Villanova men

To the Editor:

I just want to say thank you to Jodi Vacaro for her wonderful article in the Nov. 6 issue telling all of the girls on campus to stay away from me because I am insensitive, forgetful and immature. In her article, "She said: Guys, learn a lesson," she didn't actually name my name because I don't think she has ever met me, but she decided to classify all men at Villanova into one group: slimeballs. In all fairness, I know that there are plenty of guys here and everywhere that do fit into this category; however, there are more than a few of us non-slimy ones.

While I am not saying that Tom Collins' counter-article, "He said: love is not at 'Nova," is completely fair toward women, his article was less of an attack and it was more light-hearted. Jodi Vacaro, however, took it upon herself to tell men what we are doing wrong. I was hoping her article would help me to understand women a little better, but, unfortunately, it didn't.

I would never hang around with an ex-girlfriend while I was with a current girlfriend. I've had that done to me and I know how it feels. After I've kissed a girl, I try to talk to her more. And I don't know where girls find them, but I have never met a guy that forgot his girlfriend's birthday or their anniversary.

I am not saying that Jodi Vacaro is completely wrong, because she does have a lot of good points. I only want the girls to know that there are nice guys out there, and if you look, I think you'll find that there are quite a few of us.

Bus trays, stop whining

To the Editor:

Since its implementation, the new process of students busing their own trays in the dining halls has drawn much attention. Many students have complained about the hassle involved with sorting and disposing, mostly because of the time it takes to do this. Basically, they do not want to have to do it. Well, stop the complaining.

Villanova's Dining Services began this process for a number of reasons. The most important of these reasons is the fact that this new system will drastically cut down on waste; waste that is not only paper but also food. Hopefully, this will also cause the students to realize just how much goes to waste each time and cause them to think twice about how much they take the next time around.

Because of student complaints about how long the process takes, Dining Services is pursuing numerous options. The current process could be streamlined in a couple of ways. First, instead of sorting the silverware, one may be able to simply put all silverware in the same container. Second, two lines instead of one could speed up the process also. What everyone needs to realize is that Dining Services is trying to work out the kinks to make this process easier.

Moreover, they have proposed a conveyer system that will help this process by asking students to simply remove trash from their trays. However, they have not reached that stage yet, so your understanding and cooperation is appreciated. It is a big task for 1,500 students, but it is a change for the better.

Why not give blood?

To the Editor:

As a staff volunteer who has been trying to recruit blood donors for the Villanova Fall Semester Blood Drive, I feel compelled to express my frustration. I realize that there are some very "real" reasons for some individuals not giving blood. But unless there are medical reasons, or if a person does not meet a limited number of other criteria, there is no logical reason for someone not to take a few minutes, and to give blood ... blood which is so desperately needed.

People say, "let the other person do it ... I don't give blood!" WHAT IF EVERYONE SAID ... "LET SOMEBODY ELSE DO IT?

Student says, "Lying can get you anywhere"

By PETE SHAUGER

Remember when you were little and your mom told you that lying was a bad thing, and that it was always better to tell the truth, even if the truth was unpleasant? "You know, Petey, you should always tell me the truth. Even if the truth is painful, remember I will always love you the same. Now, isn't there something you'd like to tell me?" And then me, driven to tears by this moving speech, "I'm sorry, Mommy (sob, sob, sob) ... I ate the cookies, and I'd do it again!" Then the classic chase scene: "Come back here you little cookie-stealing, bed-wetting, rascal!" "You'll never catch me, you meal-cooking, bed-making, crazy lady!"

> "I'm sorry, Dr. Smartguy, but instead of preparing for your test last night, I watched a really good documentary on earthworms called 'Hail to the Slow Ones'."

In those days, it seemed like everything was going my way. I had the love of a good woman (Dear ol' mom), hours upon hours of uninterrupted television and unlimited Cheerios. But sometimes, a 5-year-old just has to break free of the cushy life style. He (and I say he because my sisters broke free at age 3) has a desperate need for rebellion, but has few opportunities to actually rebel. So when asked a simple question like, "Petey, did you open the Wheat Thins?" I had to lie. I had to jeopardize what I had come to know as "the good life," even though mom had already taken the time to dust for fingerprints (we don't call her the "Food Police" for nothing).

Now, 15-and-a-half years later, I find myself experiencing a reversal of fortune. The woman who has loved me unconditionally for so many years (on the condition that I eat all my beans and that I don't track mud through the house and that I don't stir up dust and that I turn that racket down) is not enough anymore. I seek to replace the love of my mother with the love of another. But it seems that I am forever in that endeavor. (Like I always say, they'll love it every time if you say it in a rhyme.) Fortunately some things haven't changed. I still have the Cheerios and the television.

But to get to the point, the heart of the matter, the reason why I've called you all into my office — whenever I back myself into a corner and it would be in my best interest to lie, what do I do? I tell the truth.

As a 20-year-old, probably nobody's going to chase me around the dinner table if I lie, except for maybe Chad (boy, has he got a temper sometimes! I could tell you some stories! but I won't). Quite the contrary, lying seems practically encouraged to compete in the real world.

Here at Villanova (which incidentally is not part of the real world — it is somewhere to the right of the real world, I think) I have had countless opportunities to lie and have even seized a few of them. But never when it mattered. I would lie about why I missed a class even if the teacher didn't ask where I was, even when the teacher didn't take attendance. But if there was a test that I didn't prepare for, I'd go up to the teacher before taking the test and say, "I'm sorry Dr. Smartguy, but instead of preparing for your test last night, I watched a really good documentary on earthworms called "Hail to the Slow Ones." I made popcorn, too. I hope you will take my honesty into consideration when you grade it."

My freshman year I heard a guy make up an excuse for not turning in a paper saying that his girlfriend had been in an awful car accident and that he had to go home to see her immediately. He used the same excuse on three separate occasions for three separate teachers. Each time he called up the respective teacher he forced himself to cry. I was impressed with his talents, but there was one problem I had with his method.

And this may not go for everyone, but since I don't have a real girlfriend, I take my imaginary girlfriends very seriously. When I break up with them, I want it to be a natural thing, you know, like maybe just to go our separate ways. I am not a possessive man. But I am too sensitive a guy to place even an imaginary girlfriend on her deathbed merely because I didn't want to study for a test or write a paper. I mean, if I'm going to go to all the trouble of conjuring up a girlfriend, why should she suffer just to save my grades?

So who knows, someday I'll be able to lie with the best of them, maybe even get myself some kind of lying award if I'm lucky. And if I do, I'll be sure to thank the Villanova Honors system for showing me that lying can get you anywhere.

"Student says" is really a middle-aged housewife who says she just isn't gonna take it anymore.

Native Americans lose lands

To the Editor:

What would you do if one Sunday you arrived on campus to find the doors of St. Thomas Chapel locked and the building itself slated for demolition? Furthermore, what if you discovered that not only was your place of worship in jeopardy, but that a decision of the Supreme Court would effectively end your religion? This scenario may sound ridiculous to many, but it is reality for modern Native Americans.

In 1988, the case entitled Lyng v. Northwest Indian Cemetery Protective Association came before the Supreme Court. This involved a site that was held sacred to three Native American nations but was located on national forest land. The Forestry Service chose this site for a program that would involve clear-cutting as well as the construction of a permanent paved road through the heart of this sacred earth. Needless to say, this would destroy the holiness of the place; furthermore, because of the unique reverence given to this area, to destroy the site would be to destroy the tribes' religion.

The Supreme Court recognized this dilemma, stating that "the government does not dispute, and we have no reason to doubt, that the logging and roadbuilding project at issue in this case could have devastating effects on traditional Indian religious practices." However, despite the awareness of the disastrous effects that the Forestry Service plan would have, the Court decided against the tribes, stating that even though the road and timber harvesting would "virtually destroy the Indians' ability to practice their religion ... the Constitution simply does not provide a principle that could justify upholding the respondents' legal claims."

The Court took a very literal interpretation of the First Amendment which states that Congress shall make no law prohibiting free exercise of religion; after all, no law was preventing the tribes from practicing their traditional way or hindering access to their sacred site. In this manner, the religion of three Native American nations was destroyed, with the Stars and Stripes waving all the while.

If this disregard for human rights bothers you, there is something you can do. On Nov. 17 and 19, I will be running a booth in Connelly Center where there will be more information, petitions you can sign, as well as the addresses of individuals you can contact to help in the fight for Native American religious freedom. And your help is desperately needed.

COMMENTARY

Reflections on elections: Englishman gives opinion

By DAVID HOWELL

For the first time in a generation the United States and Great Britain both held general elections in the same year. The result of Nov. 3 in America was significantly different though from that of the British outcome on April 11. However, Bill Clinton's victory and John Major's re-election are just one of the many differences between elections on either side of the Atlantic Ocean.

With the general comparison between the Conservative Party and Republicans and between the Labour Party and the Democrats, both nations had, until Nov. 3, similar recent political histories. The Conservatives have been in office since 1979, a period encompassing four election victories, while the Republicans' run is broken at 12 years. Both of the broadly right-wing had enjoyed considerable success in the 1980s and the relative strength of the respective economies ensured continuous re-election to office against weak opponents.

It seems clear after President Bush's defeat that it was the problems of the present economy that allowed a Democratic candidate to rigorously contest, and win, the 1992 election. It appears, therefore, all the more perplexing how the Conservatives who are arguably in charge of a far more desperate economic situation still managed to win when their political mirror image in America could not do so?

This year saw for the first time a British election adopt a more American feel and style.

Some of the answers to this question lie in factors unique to the two countries. Major clearly benefitted from a long-term mistrust by British voters of Labour candidate Neil Kinnock who was running in his second election. The Conservatives also gained by making a late surge after the polls had prematurely closed, forecasting a comprehensive Labour victory. Also the long-term belief that the Tories are the party of employment and growth was constantly focused on during the election and appeared to convince both wavering supporters and the floating voters.

Britain, however, did not have an independent candidate to galvanize the electorate, stimulate discussion on economics specifically, or to act as a political catalyst. It remains to be seen the exact extent and to what key areas Ross Perot did damage to Bush's re-election effort, but the findings should prove significant. By concentrating on the economy (the Republicans' Achilles heel), Perot's mass number of "infomercials" served to perpetually highlight the failings and inadequacies of the first term under Bush. Major or any of his predecessors have never had to deal with both a confident and able opposition party and a billionaire businessman at the same time.

This year saw for the first time a British election adopt a more American feel and style. Slick commercials, talk show appearances, "soundbyte" answers to the press and "lightning stop" campaigning by trains, planes and automobiles all made the 1992 campaign very different from previous ones. Hugh staged rallies for the party faithful also became the norm but possibly the most significant development was the greater emphasis placed on "personality politics" by the parties, the media and the public at large. Many analysts and commentators feel that the election process is now on the "showbiz" trail of the American system.

Now that the campaigning styles of the two countries are more similar, the main difference that remains is the actual length of the election itself. While it appears that the American version goes on for the best part of a year, the British Parliament is dissolved on a chosen Thursday by the present government and exactly three weeks the country goes to the polls. Obviously the country is infinitely smaller, but 21 days is a very short time for the respective members of Parliament to contest the 647 seats available.

Another notable difference is that in Britain you vote for you local candidate, and the prime minister is only assured of his job if his party is the "first past the port," whereby it has to reach the magic number of 324. In this respect, Major is no different from any other British politician contesting the election: if he does not win his own constituency, then he is not elected to the Parliament. Consequently, if he is not elected, he cannot become prime minister.

In hindsight, it appears that with Europe in turmoil and Britain in the depths of a two-year depression the people may have made a mistake with their votes back in April. However, British political parties do have a tendency to fire the boss if he is not steering the ship to well. (Major may find himself out of a job in the near future.)

As for Clinton's election, it seems to me that the American people made a conscious and deliberate decision to try a new man and new approach to solving the nation's problems. We will never know how Britain would have fared under the Labour Party or America under a second Bush administration. Let us just hope that both elected leaders, as well as other world statesmen, can get us back on a road to recovery and renewed prosperity.

Entertainment says, "You're fired"

By AARON NICODEMUS
Entertainment Editor

Before I retire as Entertainment editor, I would like to take the opportunity to set the record straight. Last week in the "Students Says" article, Pete Shauger asked, "How many bad music reviews have you read in the Villanovan?" Of course, I would answer "None." But just for arguments sake, let's say that some lesser quality, up-and-coming band is profiled by a staff reporter. Shauger's statement made it sound like the article itself was bad. Never was this the case. The band itself should take all the blame. I mean, if they send us their album, FOR FREE, how much can it be worth? Nothing, probably.

Let me remind Mr. Shauger that many of these so-called "bad" bands turn out some pretty amazing stuff. Anybody heard of the Spindoctors? Blues Traveler? Matthew Sweet? Those with a close ear to their favorite radio station would hear quality songs by each one of these artists. I believe it is as important to cover the bands that are entertaining us regularly in our local area as the marquee names that drop by once every so often.

And since it's all in fun, let us take a look at who is casting the stones. Mr. Shauger has written some pretty amusing stuff. That article where he lived in a dumpster was a hoot. How about the time he equated concrete paths with repressed sexuality? Or the way he formed his entire personality from television? Mom Shauger must be bursting with pride, because her finger has Mr. Shauger completely wrapped around it. And without his good friend, Chad, who knows what sticky situations Mr. Shauger would find himself in. Probably up to his ears in credit-card debt with the lovely Mom Shauger there to foot the bill.

So the Entertainment section holds firm in its belief that it is producing quality material that people actually read. I could be kidding myself, because how many Villanova students have time for anything more than the "Top 10" and "Igdoof"? The few that do get past those stumbling blocks read the entire paper from cover to cover, ads and all, I'm sure.

Mr. Shauger will continue to crank out his tongue-in-cheek articles week after week, saying this and saying that. Mr. Shauger even had the honor of writing an article in the section he lambasted. Well, let me say to all you prospective student writers out there that Entertainment suddenly has an opening. We have all these free CD's to give away and now our chief recipient of this bonanza shuns them like so much garbage in his dumpster.

With that said, I officially put the proverbial final knife in the back of my colleague. I expect a massive reprisal in the next issue, if he deems me a worthy opponent.

A conservative plan to save the planet

By JOHN SHANAHAN

Can a conservative be an environmentalist?

The answer, of course, is yes — conservatives like to breathe clean air as much as anyone else — but it is necessary to strike some balance between production of goods and services and environmental protection. An effective environmental policy should try to have as much as possible of each.

Admittedly, some in the conservative movement have erred on the side of emphasizing economic growth, while ignoring the extent of our environmental problems. To protect the economy, we conservatives have fought the environmental movement step by step, and we have lost step by step. Thus, people wrongly have believed that their only choice was either to support the environment through costly regulations or support economic growth at the expense of precious natural resources.

Conservatives, correctly, have fought to block heavy-handed regulatory initiatives — which last year cost America $115 billion, or more than $1,000 per family. But we should have gone further and acknowledged that the environment must be conserved, and then promoted market solutions. It is a basic conservative truth that the best way to protect common resources is by providing incentives to individuals to act responsibly.

It is time for conservatives to change their way of thinking.

Any rational discussion of environmentalism must incorporate human values, wants and needs concerning the environment. How do we apply conservative values to protecting the environment? History has shown that the best way to put goods to their most highly valued use is through the marketplace.

But how does letting markets function protect the environment?

Take a look at Africa: In the late 1970s, the government of Kenya banned elephant hunting as a means to save the species. The result has been a decline in the elephant population from 65,000 to 19,000.

Zimbabwe, by contrast, witnessed an increase in the size of the elephant herd from 30,000 to 43,000 over the same period. Why? Because small Zimbabwe villages that own the lands on which elephants graze charge safari operators for the right to conduct hunts. The villages profit directly and thus have an incentive to increase the size of their herds and, consequently, their income. They also have a strong incentive to prevent poaching, because poachers cost the villagers income.

Zimbabwe, as well Botswana, Namibia and South Africa all reward the conservation of elephants by letting the conservationists profit from their protective policies. And in each country, herd sizes are increasing.

In addition to applying market principles to the environment, conservatives must articulate a message to environmental scofflaws: Make the polluter pay. Polluters should bear the total cost to society of their resource use and environmental degradation. But they also should reap rewards for conservation and environmentally sound practices.

Environmental protection must rest on economic accountability: We must create a system in which pollution has its costs and protecting the environment its economic rewards. Owners of resources generally are wise and responsible stewards of their property. On the whole, they will automatically choose the best mix of development, conservation, and preservation.

The government, in contrast, will not always act as a wise and responsible steward of resources, because it is not economically accountable for its actions. If elephants die, if rivers are polluted, if resources are misused, individual bureaucrats do not suffer direct economic consequences.

The challenge to conservatives is to seek market arrangements whenever possible to uphold environmental values, and to pressure government to use a free market, rather than a command-and-control government approach, to solving environmental problems.

COMMENTARY

Baby boomers enter White House

By ELLEN GOODMAN

It was past midnight by the time Bill Clinton and Al Gore arrived, like elated and tardy rock stars, at the final concert of a grueling national tour.

They were puffy around the eyes and raspy around the vocal chords. But if, as Paul Simon once wrote, every generation throws a hero on the pop charts, this was their moment. The baby boomers' bus tour was, finally, headed for Pennsylvania Avenue.

In the din of victory celebration in front of the Old State House in Little Rock, the music played the subliminal message of this campaign, "Don't Stop Thinkin' About Tomorrow." The two men in their dark suits and white shirts, requisite presidential attire, reached down into the crowd against the final refrain: "Yesterday's gone, yesterday's gone."

At that hour and in that place, it was possible to see and hear one era ending and another beginning.

At the end of this exhausting election, George Bush, a 68-year-old World War II veteran, the last Cold War president, has been replaced by Bill Clinton, a 46-year-old baby boomer and veteran of the war over the war in Vietnam. When all is said and counted, we have witnessed the most striking generational change since the 70-year-old Dwight David Eisenhower was replaced by the 43-year-old John Fitzgerald Kennedy.

But what a different change it is this time. At JFK's inaugural, the bareheaded president issued the eloquent and strident declaration of his generation's ascendancy. "Let the word go forth from this time and place," he said, "to friend and foe alike, that the torch has been passed to a new generation of Americans. ..."

In that same sentence, JFK offered up the clear, unified description of the men who had just taken power. They were, he said, "born in this century, tempered by war, disciplined by a hard and bitter peace, proud of our ancient heritage."

Where could Bill Clinton find such a clear description for the transition of his generation? These are the baby boomers who have gone through the population like the proverbial pig through the python. Until now, demography is all they've had in common.

Everything that united the World War II generation, divided the baby boom generation. George Bush's war was "the good war." Their generation knew what was expected of men and women. They shared a single attitude toward authority — respectful. They even agree on their drugs — cocktails and cigarettes.

But their children disagreed, and often bitterly, with each other. They disagreed about war, about the roles of men and women, about sex, drugs, rock 'n' roll. They disagreed about taking authority or questioning it.

Distributed by Tribune Media Services
HATFIELD '92
THE ONE PLACE "TRICKLE DOWN" HAS WORKED IN AMERICA...

As the years went by and the predictions of boomer victories went sour, it seemed that the baby boom generation had trouble coming into power because they couldn't resolve their own deep divisions. In a tough and grueling way, this campaign did some of the work of resolution. In many ways this campaign was about generational change.

Bill Clinton's life showed all the fault lines of the baby boom years. Indeed he often had a foot on each side of this great divide. He opposed the war in Vietnam, though he didn't head for Canada. He admitted trouble in his marriage, though he didn't get divorced. And he tried marijuana, but he didn't inhale.

His wife too worked this fault line. She kept her name and then took his. She earned four times his salary and delivered his message. She wrote briefs and baked cookies.

The Last Warrior of the Cold War generation bet the bank that he could divide and conquer the baby boom generation one more time. The Bush campaign inflamed hard feelings about the Vietnam War, pit traditional against non-traditional families, working against non-working mothers.

Some of it backfired. Much of it just didn't work. It sounded like ancient history. The stuff of the Cold War.

It may be that this generation has been through enough, seen enough, to make peace with itself. To put aside the conflicts of its wonder years for its middle years.

It may be Bill Clinton's place in the intragenerational wars that fuels his real passion to mediate conflicts, to find a center that holds. As he said again to the crowd, "We need a new spirit of community, a sense that we're all in this together."

One thing we do know. The bumper crop of postwar children were Young in capital letters. They were often less eager to take power than to challenge it. They didn't trust anybody over 30. As a whole, they deferred adulthood, put off marriage, postponed parenthood. And delayed believing they could run the country.

Now, guess what. There's a baby boomer going to the White House. Turn the music up. It's time.

Giving Tree Angels

This year, beginning with the Sunday after Thanksgiving, the Giving Tree Angels will be available in the Church after each of the Sunday Masses. Each angel represents one gift of warm clothing to a member of an inner-city, poor parish. We encourage individuals and groups of individuals (floors of a residence hall, fraternities, sororities, etc.) to select an angel and support the Christmas needs of someone less materially gifted. It is the best of the Christmas spirit.

Mini-Musicals

Come aboard Student Musical Theatre's exciting melodious journey. This year's musicals include: "West Side Story," "My Fair Lady," "Forty Second Street," and straight from Britain "Blood Brothers." Performances will be held in St. Mary's Auditorium at 8 p.m. on Nov. 19-21. Tickets are $6 for adults and $4 for students. They are available at the door and at the Connelly Center ticket office.

Philosophy Forum

Interested in total intellectual stimulation while having one of the greatest times of your life? Sound impossible? Obviously you have never attended the philosophy forum. If interested, please come to St. Augustine 108F every Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. New members are always welcome.

Romeo and Juliet

As part of the University's Sesquicentennial celebration, the Cultural Film Series presents four screenings of Franco Zeffirelli's adaptation of William Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet" in the Connelly Center Cinema on Nov. 14 at 7 p.m.; Nov. 15 at 3:30 and 7 p.m.; and Nov. 16 at 7 p.m. Dr. Joseph Kinney, department of English, will lecture before the screening and lead a discussion afterwards Nov. 16. Tickets are $2 for Villanova students and $3 for the general public.

Writing Center helps students make the grade

By JOHN MULLIGAN
Associate Editor

Time: 4:30 a.m.
Place: Mendel Computer Lab
Scenario: Your 10-page paper is due at 10:30 a.m. It has already been extended three times. Your dog could have written a better paper. The soda machine is out of Pepsi, the computer-lab assistant is snoring in the corner and your girlfriend is out with your best friend. Life stinks, and you know it. If only you had gone to the Writing Center . . . Everybody else did, and they are sleeping now.

The solution: Recently moved to the Dalton Room of Old Falvey (the library annex), the Writing Center offers services to all students. Students bring papers and essays of all types for review and improvement, according to Karyn Hollis, director of the Writing Center and assistant professor of English.

"We have friendly consultants who collaborate with students to improve their writing," said Hollis. "Of course, we do not write papers for students, but our expertise in writing combined with the student's class knowledge usually produces a better paper."

"I knew I needed help with my writing," said Danielle Frei, a freshman mathematics major. "The tutor helped me make my paper more organized and logical."

"Everybody can benefit from a visit," said Hollis, who hoped that people did not think that the services were offered only for weak writers. "Everybody benefits from constructive criticism of a rough draft."

Three graduate students and 21 undergraduates work as tutors. Prior to starting work, they were trained extensively in a semester-long course on tutoring, said Hollis.

"The training session really increased my own writing skills," said Dana Bogacki, a junior communications major who works in the Writing Center.

"It's true. The place really helps," added Mike Portas, a junior consultant. "We're real people. I even like to bring my own papers here."

Consultants work with students at any stage of the writing process, from brainstorming ideas to proofreading papers, according to Hollis. If a student brings a rough draft of a paper, consultants check their response to the assignment, the thesis, the organization and development of their ideas and any sentence or word-level concerns.

"Once the students get here, they realize it's not just for remedial help," said Tricia Adolph, a senior consultant. "It's really helpful."

The Writing Center is open Monday-Thursday, 1:30-9:30 p.m., and Friday, 1:30-5:30 p.m. Students are advised to call 645-4604 for an appointment, said Hollis, who noted that consultants have seen over 600 students this year. "We have already met last year's total."

"Hey, people keep coming back," said John Gorman, a junior political science and honors major, "so we must be doing something right."

"If we have studied, dissected, and even memorized the Bible without discovering God's word of judgement for turning our back on the poor and forgotten, we are still Biblical illiterates." This anonymous quote was taken from the July 1992 issue of "Common Life," a newsletter printed by the Philadelphia Catholic Worker.

The Catholic Worker program was started by Dorothy Day as a newspaper in Chicago. "Houses of Hospitality," offering short- and long-term help to those in need, soon began to form in cities all over the country to reach out to poor and disadvantaged people.

Bill Lynch and Patty Burns-Lynch are the founders of the North Philadelphia Catholic Worker Community, which will celebrate its fifth year of service on Nov. 15. Their main headquarters are located on Fourth and Jefferson Streets with another building about a block away.

These Houses of Hospitality are staffed with full-time, live-in volunteers and they offer a home and support to people in need. A near-by empty lot has been turned into a garden, allowing city residents to experience the growth and life that nature represents. This is something to which they may not be exposed very often.

The Philadelphia Catholic Worker has a very unique after-school program that brings together neighborhood children and area college students every week. The program itself has been in existence for four years, but the end of last year was the first time Villanova organized a group of students to participate in it. The Villanova program is a new committee that is part of the Villanova Committee for the Philadelphia Homeless (VCPH).

Villanova students travel to the city three times a week to meet local children in grades one through eight who come to the Catholic Worker after school. The children are tutored by Villanovans from 3 p.m. until 4 p.m., and afterwards there is an hour of "structured free play."

"The kids find out about this through word-of-mouth. They are

Nurturing Network aids college women

By KRISTIN BERNARDYN
Staff Reporter

Interested students and staff of the University attended a meeting held Nov. 5 to plan for advertising the Nurturing Network and extending its presence in the Villanova community. The Nurturing Network assists pregnant college women and tend to their individual needs and the needs of their unborn children.

Unplanned pregnancies are a reality for many young women, especialy for those 19 to 24 years old. Women in this group also undergo over half of the nation's abortions each year. Someone you know might be faced, now or in the future, with an unplanned pregnancy. The Nurturing Network helps women seek confidential advice regarding alternatives to abortion and provides counseling on education or career plans.

The Network now has a chapter at Villanova University. Whether a mother prefers to raise her child or to place her child up for adoption, the Nurturing Network provides confidential services in all areas. The organization provides pregnancy testing, continuing education options, job placement, medical care for mother and child and alternatives for off-campus housing. They make available information about parenthood and adoption and provide support for the physical, emotional and financial challenges that accompany unplanned pregnancy.

Also available on campus is information about what assistance a pregnant woman can take advantage of at Villanova. For example, a student at Villanova might not realize that she has the option of living in a nearby family's home, staying in the dormitories or transferring to another college during her pregnancy.

Presently, anyone who would like to contact The Nurturing Network may call Kathy Byrnes in the Dean of Students office in Dougherty 207A at 645-4200. The infirmary also will provide information after normal business hours.

Special Olympics transforms campus

Strings of balloons filled the air, pastel colored booths lined the quad and athletes brought home medals and lasting memories. Villanova students captured the spirit of the fourth annual Special Olympics during the weekend of Nov. 6-8. Athletes from various counties across Pennsylvania participated in soccer, volleyball, equestrian, long distance running and roller-skating competitions.

The preliminary competitions formed the divisions for competition on Saturday. The qualified teams played in the finals on Sunday.

"We have added a lot to basics behind the festival. There should be superior quality events. All areas have worked upon last year's festival," Kim Myers, a member of the management team for human resources, said.

The Quaker String Band and the Villanova Dance ensemble performed during opening ceremonies. Several student organizations performed outside Connelly Center.

The separate organized committees of hospitality, medical assistance, sports events, athlete escort, information booths, food services, awards ceremony and hotel administration worked together as an interwoven system.

Resident Assistants speak out

By SUSAN BURNS
Staff Reporter

"Spidermen" climb up to the first floor of Sheehan through ground floor windows past visitation hours, students carry cases of beer into dorms in backpacks and under jackets and wild parties rage behind locked doors, with students hiding or disguising their alcoholic beverages.

Why? Why do students risk their disciplinary standing every day to escape the terror of the resident assistants R.A.'s and the absolute horror of being "written up?" And why do the R.A.s write up students for thise "innocent violations?"

Well, okay. The violations are not entirely innocent, nor are they usually legal. Most students have been reprimanded for one "crime" or another (some for several Crimes), and feel that R.A.'s are out to get students and make their lives a living hell. Contrary to popular belief, most do not enjoy this action.

"I hate to do it. I really don't think there is one person who enjoys writing people up. We are not sadomasochists," St. Monica Hall's head resident, Amy Darcy said, adding, however, that discipline is a part of the job description.

Helen Goff, a senior, is an R.A. in Sheehan Hall, where reprimands average from five to 10 per weekend, with parties and visitation violations being the major incidents. "There is definitely a practical side to it. Date rape, suicide attempts, near fatal conditions — when I approach a party it could be that I am preventing one of these events by breaking it up."

> There is an inescapable confusion about where to draw the line between giving warnings and writing people up.

The procedure for writing up a student is a complex one that can be demonstrated by using an actual case that occurred last year, recalled by one sophomore male student. But it is a common scenario, as many R.A.'s can attest.

One Friday night in Fedigan Hall, some friends borrowed a trash barrel from the hallway and filled it with ice. They smuggled a keg of beer into a room on the second floor, placed it in the barrel and hid it in the closet. Then the party began. The R.A. on duty, hearing noise, told the students to leave. They left willingly, but bragged about the keg. The R.A. overheard, and re-entered the room and asked to investigate the refrigerator and the closet.

He wrote up the student, who was then referred to Steve Pugliese, director of Judicial Affairs. The student was charged $200 for the keg and other paraphernalia and referred to the Center for Alcohol and Drug Assistance for a one-night alcohol seminar.

Because the student complied by opening the door and his refrigerator, his penalties were less severe. "We can't make you do anything, but if you decide not to, it doesn't look good for you," Darcy said of the policy of acting on suspicion.

"Every situation is different. We have to try to see why people are acting a certain way," said Sullivan R.A. junior John Stanick, adding that the type of weekend, that of a holiday, big game or extended vacation, mostly defines the attitudes of students.

However, students question what defines the attitude of the R.A. "It was a Friday night, my two friends and I were leaving Sullivan at 2:06 a.m. One R.A. and

Native American lecture held

By HILLARY FIELD
Staff Reporter

As we commemorate Christopher Columbus' voyage to the New World, the Center for Peace and Justice Education has initiated a lecture series that highlights the American Indian culture in the invasion of America. Professor James Axtell, Kenan Professor of Humanities at the College of William and Mary, spoke Nov. 9 about "Reaction to the Invasion of America" which focused on many different voices that hold opinions about Columbus' "discovery," both in the past and in the present.

Axtell's lecture began with the voices of those who have been affected by or have affected change as a result of Columbus' voyage. First there were the Spanish explorers, who, according to Axtell, justified their conquest of the New World by "their duty to convert barbarous to civilianness." They brought with them the Catholic faith and European technology as well as a Spanish court system with European laws. When faced with atrocities, Spanish judges were quick to overlook or dismiss. Ultimately, approximately 12 million Indian lives were lost due to Spaniards.

Axtell also pointed to the African voices who felt they suffered equally as much from the colonization with enslavement and displacement. Africans were brought over to replace the Indian slaves which resulted in the European slave trade.

A strong voice of today and yesterday belongs to the Native Americans. In retrospect, the Native Americans believe the death of their people was for Spanish profit.

Axtell reminds us that the "reaction" is not just a human one, but all-encompassing. Biologically, the Europeans imported diseases, increased the population, eroded the soil and caused the extinction in 400 years that evolution would only cause in 1 million years.

With the destruction of human life and the earth, it would seem that there is a tremendous guilt factor to be found on this 500th anniversary, that we should not be celebrating but bemoaning the actions of our forefathers. Axtell stressed that this should not be.

Favorite pizza places rated

By LAINIE CURTO
Staff Reporter

Being away at school for the first time, I undoubtedly anticipated that my life would change in some way, although not once did I consider that my eating habits would be included in that change. I can honestly, and almost pathetically, say that food now takes up about 60 percent of my daily thoughts.

In an attempt to rescue my body from the daily intake of "sick food," (which seems to be the easiest to stomach) i.e., yogurt, jello, soup and salad, I have found myself ordering out on more than one occasion. However, this too has its shortcomings. Being the typical car-less and money-less freshman like myself, many college students have been forced into the equally monotonous diet of pizza, which seems to be the cheapest and most easily attainable food for on-campus residents.

Of course, there is some consolation.

My grandmother always told me that "variety is the spice of life." Well, this idea can be applied to pizza as well. Who says you can only order plain or pepperoni, one slice or the whole pie? Nowadays, there is an array of toppings, shapes and sizes of pizza that are virtually limitless. In fact, in my quest to find variety, I have come across several decent, and even a few recommendable pizza parlors.

The first type of pizza I had when I came to Villanova was from Campus Corner. They have unusually good sauce that buries the Pit's "marinara sauce." Also, being a crust lover, I especially enjoyed the Corner's crispy crust.

Another notable pizza came from Dominos, a favorite among campus students. It is not a rare occurrence to see the red and blue uniform of the Dominos delivery man walking from dorm to dorm, pie in hand. Although the pizza is very thick and doughy, they have above-average toppings, notably the spicy pepperoni.

After sampling two decent pizzas, I was disappointed by my third encounter, which was with Pie in the Sky Pizzeria. Their sauce was very tangy, and the crust was burnt black. I probably would not order from them again unless I was in a hurry, as the delivery was quick.

The weekend ended on a good note, however, as I took a trip down to Philadelphia in search of an off-campus snack to those of you who get away from the dorms and schoolwork for a couple of hours. On a recommednation from a friend, I walked from Suburban Station to a little pizza place a few blocks down, by the name of Joe's Pizza. The name may sound a bit common, but the pizza is far from average.

At Joe's, you will get large slices with plenty of cheese and sauce that tastes like homemade. And, unlike many other places, they do not skimp on the toppings. My only complaints about this pie was the floppy crust and oily topping. Overall, I would highly recommend Joe's Pizza if you are in the area; with one word of warning: napkins — bring plenty of napkins!

My advice to any student that is looking for an escape from school food is this: Try to find a few different kinds of affordable places to eat. Delis and diners are inexpensive and provide quick service, and usually have decent food available. Pizza is a great low calorie and convenient meal, but after a weekend of pizza-testing, I am ready to go back to "Spit" food.

Video game keeps players addicted

By ERIC CHEUNG
Staff Reporter

Flying fireballs, pink energy blasts, murderous stilettos, flying warriors, spinning thugs and gushing, glorious blood. No, this is not some drab action movie coming to a theater near you. Indeed it is something more mature and worthy of a student at Villanova to see. It is an arcade game.

Well, friends, were you to enter the game room and turn your heads rightward, your eyes would behold a truly incredible sight. No — no, no, behind the trash can! Yeah, that's the one. It says Mortal Kombat. Inexplicably you are drawn to this wondrous game and marvel at its graphics.

Mortal Kombat is a game of martial arts competition. You choose from among seven characters who your alter-ego will be in this world. The plot is simple. Shang Tsung, a menacing man, has somehow brought you to his abode to fight for his pleasure. The only way to free yourself is to win all the different combats.

First you need to fight all six of your opponents, and then you must fight yourself in a mirror match. You can use all manners of kicks, ducks, punches and flips to defeat the other person. If you are the first to win two rounds you move on to the next match. Though it takes time to get all the fundamental moves down correctly, after playing for a while it becomes almost second-nature.

But what would any video game be like if you could not beat your best friend up, vicariously anyway. Mortal Kombat allows for two players to battle each other and usually this provides the most amusement. Of couse, if you have no friends you can always face the computer, which becomes progressively harder.

Well, back to the dream. I see that you already have gone through $5. When you find yourself with less than $20 every week, you can consider yourself an addict. Fortunately, I am in the process of recovering from this serious problem. I am determined not to spend any more money on the game. That's it, my mind is made up. Too bad it is such a money-guzzler or I would play it all the time. Well, no one seems to be playing it right now. I guess one more game never hurt anyone . . .

Native Americans

There is a need to recognize humans as individuals, not to label others by their actions. The atrocities committed were those of individuals, not every Spaniard or European, according to Axtell. One cannot take the blame for the actions of our ancestors, it is unnecessary and unproductive. Instead, we must take action through our own moral conduct today.

Axtell asked the audience to examine the past for three reasons: to appraise action, not to will a burden on the past, do justice to the past (which is not the same as passing a sentence but setting the record straight for future precedent) and finally learn from the past. "Re-encounter with each other and the past will change in the future," Axtell said.

Genocide, a term coined for the Holocaust, is now used in relation to the Native Americans. Axtell sees this term as "moral blackmail" and simply not true. In reality, there were approximately five real attempts at genocide. The notions for genocide never came from Europe but from the atrocities of individuals, he said.

While Axtell asked for a public and private effort to hear the voices of the post-Columbus era, he raised the question of why people focus on the year 1492. There have always been injustices committed against others, Columbus' discovery was certainly not the beginning. Axtell feels that this is an anniversary that brings out the voices to remind us that "our advantages are built on others' disadvantages."

Axtell concluded with the belief that we must focus on the individual's own actions. Imperialism is too broad a concept to give credit to the atrocities done to the Native Americans and this land. Instead, it is the people behind the concept that must be recognized for their actions and implications.

there because they want to be," said Greg Mooney, co-chairperson of the Afterschool Program Committee.

Mooney feels the volunteers are excited and happy about being part of the program. There are about 40 volunteers all together and there is room for more. "We would prefer a weekly commitment, but there is room for people to try it out," said Mooney. "The response has been so positive we want to get as many people involved as we can."

There are about 30 children who come to the Catholic Worker everyday. Most of them bring their homework, and when they are done, they can read or use flashcards until it is time to play.

"The most discouraging thing is that these kids slip through the cracks in the educational system," said volunteer Heather Balcezak. "The leaders try to always use positive reinforcement which is important for the kids, because they are so used to seeing negative things. It is encouraging how much they appreciate us. They just want to be loved like every other child."

Trish Zwaresh is another volunteer who explained that through this program Villanovans can show these children the attention they do not get at home. "These are the kids that have witnessed so much bad and unfortunately not enough love. That is what we bring them," said Zwaresh.

"This is an opportunity for Villanova students to see what life is like for these kids, who are only 20 minutes away but in a completely different world," said Becky Umland, co-chairperson of the Afterschool Program Committee.

Umland explained that the neighborhood where the Catholic Worker is located is an unsafe area. The volunteers are told to park their car in front of the house because the people in the neighborhood respect the Catholic Worker a great deal and nothing will happen to it.

The volunteers at the Catholic Worker are called passive anarchists, which basically means they believe in people coming together to make a change. They are not affiliated with the government and rely completely on donations. Umland said the atmosphere in the house is laid back and welcoming. "Everyone is equal and a member of the family."

Students who are interested in finding out more about this program or how they can become involved can contact Umland or Mooney through the Campus Ministry Office located in the basement of St. Rita's Hall.

"Working with these kids puts a lot into perspective for us. It helps to break down the barriers between Villanova and Philadelphia," said Mooney. "This means a lot to them but I am getting much more back."

"The reason I came out for the volleyball event is because I wanted an event that was actually part of the weekend — I chose a competition event," Volleyball Chairperson Sean Gaffney said.

U2 captures tour in documentary

By MAURA RURAK
Staff Reporter

"I have a weakness for belly dancers," says Bono on the latest release from Zoo TV. Apparently so. A documentary created from the same insane footage that created Zoo TV brings Achtung Baby home to VCRs everywhere. Achtung Baby — the Videos, the Cameos and a whole lot of interference from Zoo TV explains absolutely nothing about the mystical phenomenon of U2. At the same time, however, it explains a whole lot.

Beginning with The History Mix, short clips of previous concerts and videos are spliced together to give a collage of what led to Zoo TV. Within minutes you are whipped through "Gloria," "I Will Follow," "Bullet The Blue Sky" and "When Love Comes To Town."

"I can't even say the bloody word... Is it achtung baby?" says Larry. Immediately, the video flashes to the Hansa studios in Berlin, where the latest album was recorded. Rare footage is included along with short comments from the various members of U2. The Edge shares thoughts about the creation and meaning of Achtung Baby while Bono retaliates with "It's just a con."

Three different video versions of "One" are shown, two of which were played on MTV with the third reserved for concert time. The videos for "The Fly," "Mysterious Ways" and "Until The End Of The World" remain unchanged. The dance mix of "Even Better Than The Real Thing" shows obvious editing tricks while interviews are dubbed over "So Cruel."

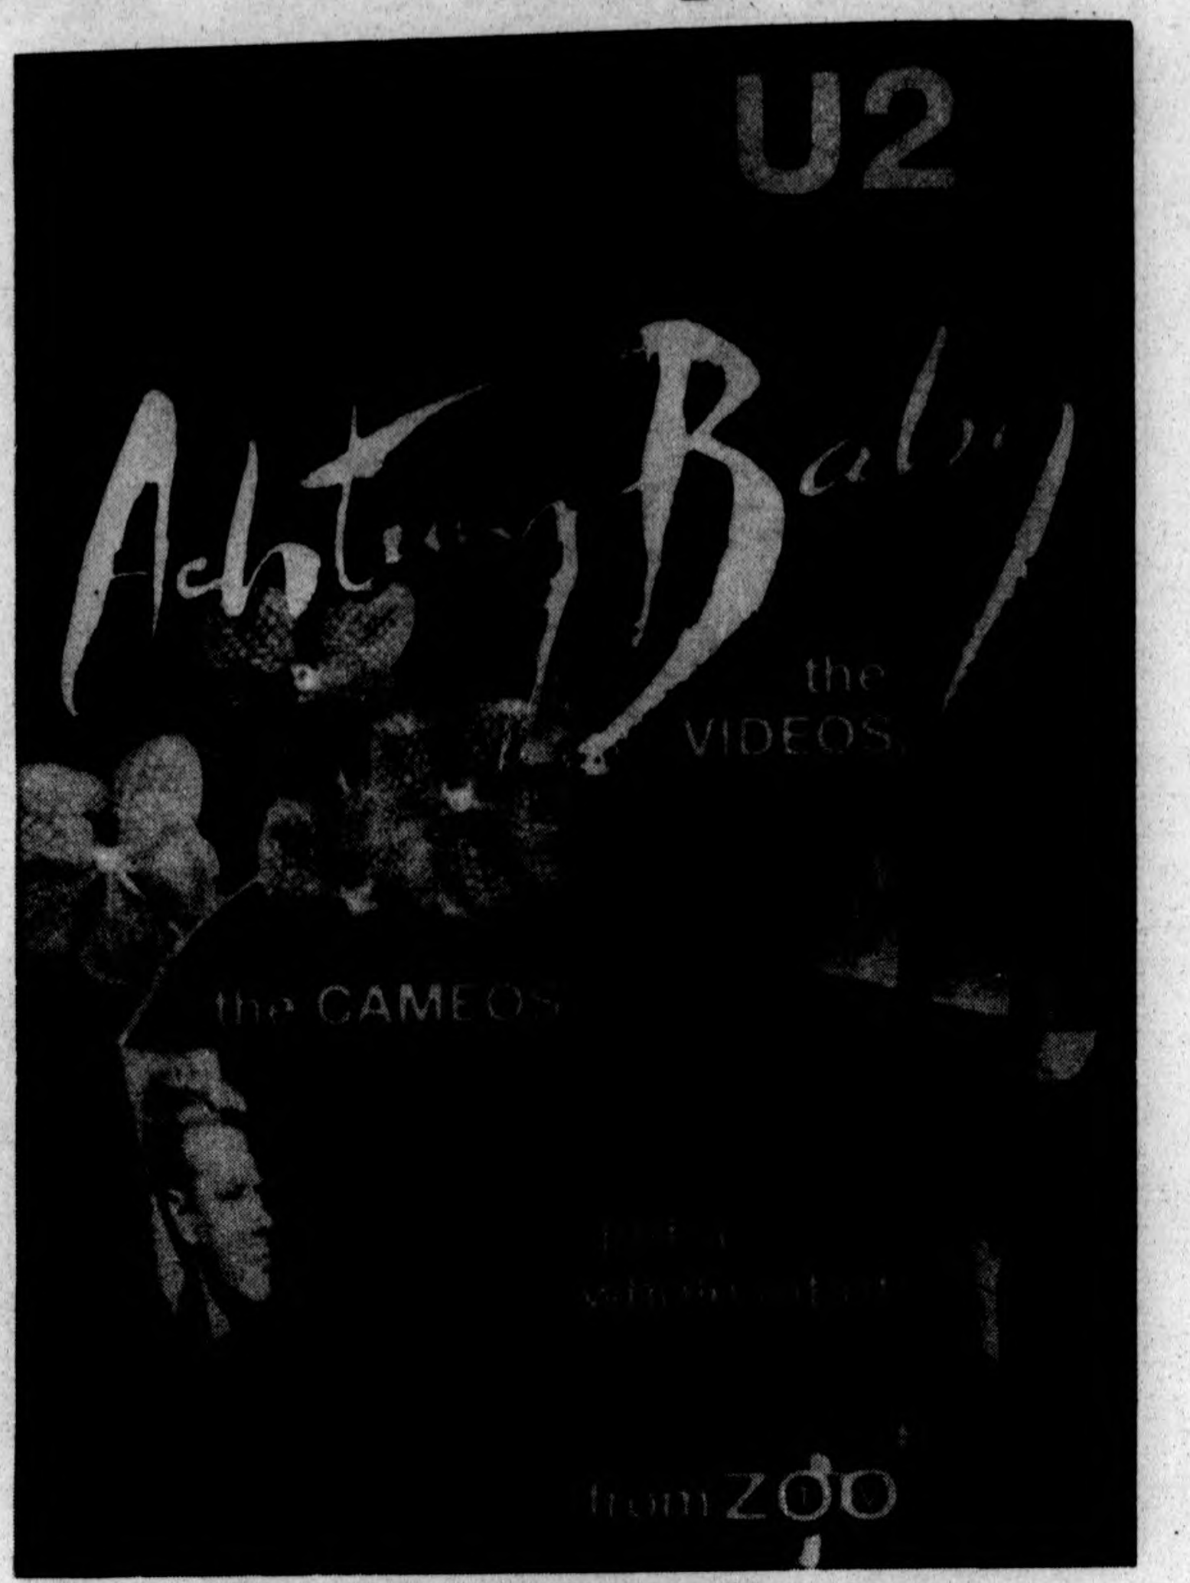
Time on the tape is devoted to the mammoth touring schedule the band undertook last year. Clips from the stage show give insight on the technological intricacies that are behind Achtung Baby. "I love this satellite stuff — crossing borders. That's what U2 is all about," answers Bono when questioned about the large satellite dish that broadcasts over 50 international channels on Zoo TV. Some of that magic is captured on this video.

It seems only natural that a concert which included 50 television sets on stage, four large video screens and overwhelming visual effects should be preserved on film. Even so, it is somewhat disappointing that a wider variety of songs were not chosen. Out of nine tracks "Even Better Than The Real Thing" is played three times to match the three time showing of "One." "Trying To Throw Your Arms Around The World" is missing as is "Love Is Blindness." The focus is undoubtedly on the viewing of this video, not just listening to it in the background.

The video spans from Morocco in October 1991, to Berlin, February 1992 and then to Dublin this past July. Achtung Baby — the Videos, the Cameos and a whole lot of interference from Zoo TV adds to the aura and mystery about this Irish band. As Edge states, "Our best music is still ahead of us. Watch more television."



'Jennifer' combines style and suspense

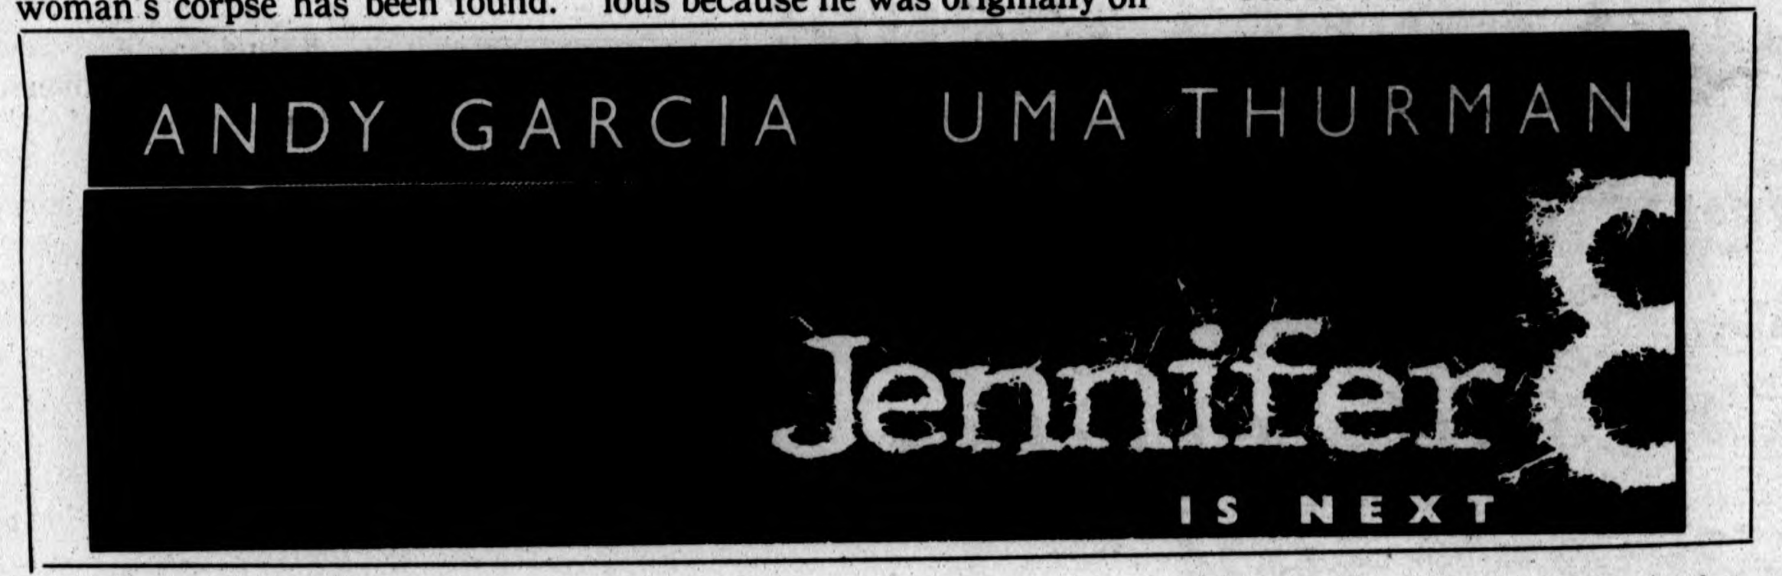
By CATHERINE C. GRAHAM
Staff Reporter

"Jennifer 8" is a stylish suspense thriller written and directed by Englishman Bruce Robinson ("With nail and I," "How I Got Into Advertising"). Robinson imbued his American feature debut with a dark and moody atmosphere.

In "Jennifer 8," Uma Thurman stars as Helena Robertson, a confused blind girl targeted by a serial killer who preys only on the beautiful and sightless. Helena lost her parents and sight in a tragic car accident when she was 14 years old. She now resides in a desolate institute for the blind.

Andy Garcia is John Berlin, the detective who comes to her rescue. He is a burnt-out Los Angeles cop who joins a small Northern California town's police force. When Berlin arrives in the small town of Eureka, his former partner, Freddy Ross (Lance Henriksen) is already on the force.

In the first scene of the film, Berlin reunites with his buddy and they scour through a rain-soaked garbage dump where a woman's corpse has been found. Deducing that a severed hand belonged to a blind person (the fingertips are worn down from reading Braille) and that it was in the freezer for a long time, Berlin runs a computer search and finds a pattern: eight blind women have been killed and mutilated, all with .22 revolvers, and all within a 300-mile radius of San Diego. When Berlin announces this is the work of a serial killer, the local cop, John Taylor (Graham Beckel), is furious because he was originally on the case.



Other supporting castmembers include Kathy Baker as Ross's wife. She stands by Berlin until the bitter end, even when everyone is accusing him of being the murderer. John Malkovich plays a remarkable role as an FBI interrogator. He has a peculiar name (St. Anne), and he acts well in a noteworthy scene where he grills the suspected murderer in such a gruff, official manner, you get anxious watching him.

The love affair between Garcia and Thurman is unconvincing because we only see Thurman smile occasionally; whereas, she is usually so very much alive in her roles. Another far-fetched event in the movie is after Ross's wife, Margie, helps Helena get dressed up in a red sequin dress for a Christmas party; Helena retreats to the bedroom in tears when she loses her way and everybody is talking too loud at the same time.

The film has a dark and moody atmosphere.

The photography and lighting are dark throughout the film. Even the scenes shot outside in the middle of the day are shrouded in shadows and fog. At times, the screen is just a blur of darkness along with a lot of scenes with rain (this is appropriate for a movie about blindness).

Christopher Young's soundtrack is a succession of ominous orchestrations that also work well in this motion picture. Overall, "Jennifer 8" is an involving mystery that keeps the viewers on the edge of their seat.

Alice rocks hard with Dirt

By THOM ARNO and MARK McCREARY
Staff Reporters

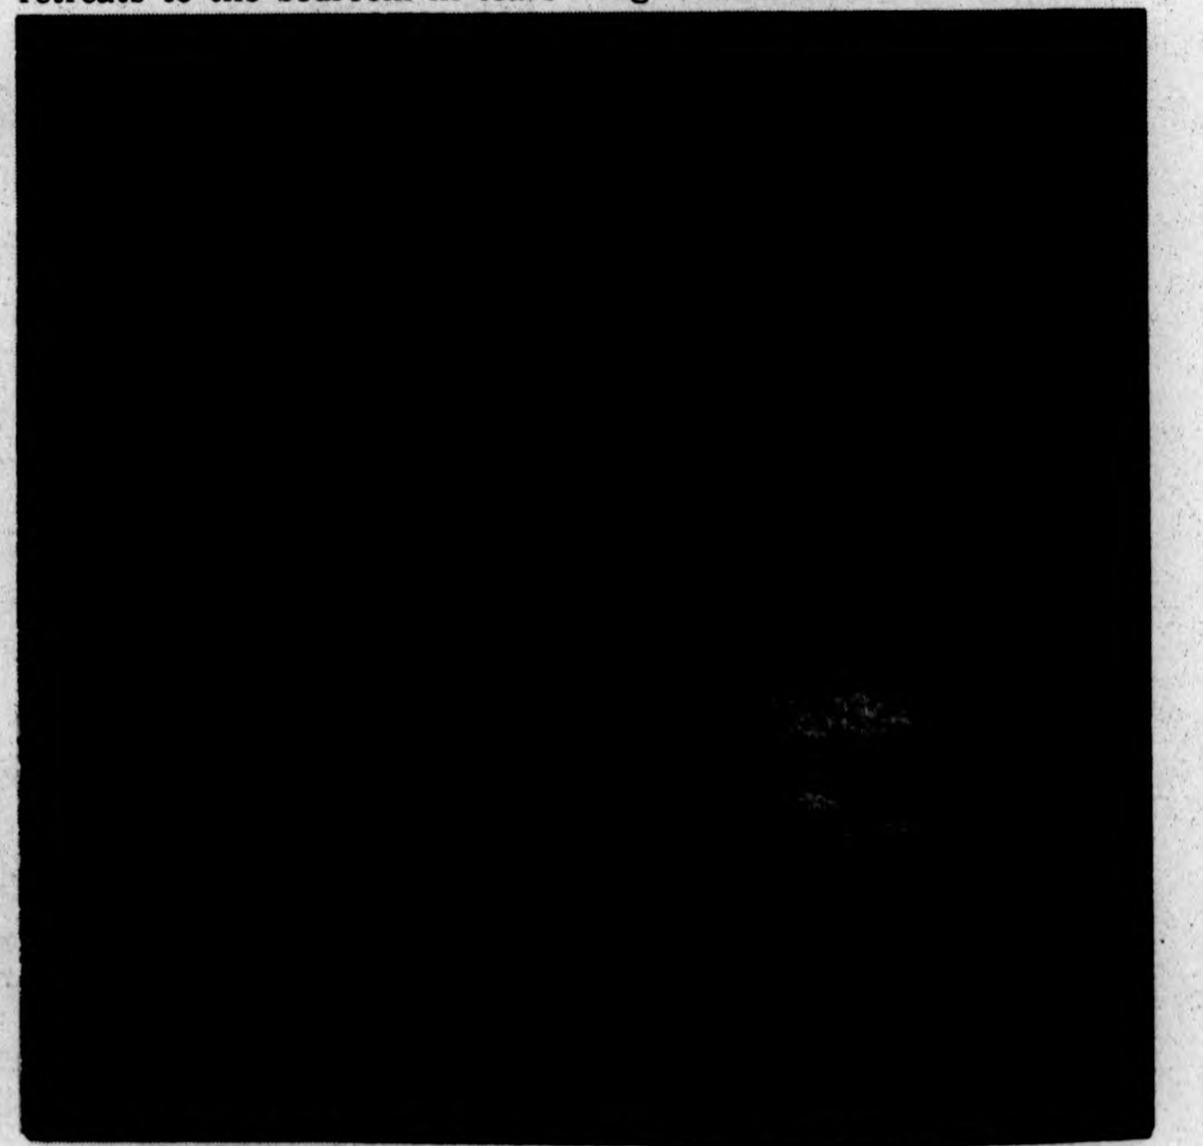
When the average music listener thinks of Alice In Chains, almost immediately the word "Would?" comes to mind. They then proclaim, "Alice ... he's great!" Well, kiddos, there is a lot more to this band than a cut from the soundtrack to "Singles" has to offer. Enter Dirt, the latest CD from Alice In Chains.

The CD immediately sends your eardrums in panic with the opening cut, "Them Bones," setting the tone for almost the entire remainder of the explosive CD. But beware, previous fans. Those who have heard the five-cut EP, Sap, are in for a big surprise. The only tracks that even come close to the melodic beats mellowing out of Sap are "Rooster" and "Down In a Hole." So, what does that leave? That leaves 10 tracks, including "Them Bones" and "Would," to satisfy your hard rock desires. But do not be misled; this is the kind of rock that you are looking for, and the kind that makes you realize that not all acts from Seattle are afraid to let their hair down.

With their first release in 1990, Facelift, Alice began a career destined for greatness. Their singles "Man In the Box" (of MTV fame) and "Sea of Sorrow" are what led to the success Alice found in their first endeavor with Columbia Records. It was followed with the aforementioned Sap, which never seemed to get the attention that it deserved.

With in-studio appearances from such Seattle stars as Chris Cornell (Soundgarden and many other cameos), Mark Arm (Mudhoney and Green River), and Nancy Wilson (Heart and The Love Mongers), this EP offers music that is considerably much more relaxed than their first LP. With Dirt, Alice has found their place where they feel most comfortable.

One track, "Rooster," is about Jerry Cantrell's (vocals and guitar) father, and his experiences in the Vietnam War. Immediately the tempo changes with one of the more appealing songs of the disc, "Junkhead." The title is exactly what it seems to be, singing such lyrics proclaimed by Layne Staley (vocals and guitars) as, "A good night, the best in a long time. A new friend turned me on to an old favorite. Nothing better than a dealer who's high. Be high, convince them to buy." Why get uptight about the blatant fact that this song is about heroin, and instead enjoy good music. And good music is what is further frequented with further tracks such as "Angry Chair" and "Rain When I Die." By track eleven (of twelve), the listener has heard about all the music one can handle, and the mood is appropriately sequestered with "Down In a Hole." The CD winds up with our neighbor's favorite song, judging by the number of times it is played daily, "Would?" of "Singles" fame.



Alice In Chains is a band that has been around for quite awhile, but just has not received the "popular" audience that they so deserve. That was then, and this is now. And now it is time for you "hip and happenin" 'Novans to check out the new Alice. Why not give it a shot. Maybe you will discover something that you like just as much as those crazy Spin Doctors.

Superman's death used to save dying art

By HAL JORDAN
Staff Reporter

Recently, D.C. Comics made it clear that they intend to kill Superman in Superman #75. Will they actually go ahead and waste the Man of Steel? Let us look logically at this.

Superman has enjoyed many highs and lows during his 55 years as a comic book character. Currently, his books (like many D.C. comic books) have not been selling as well as they had before. The creative teams have tried several twists to increase sales. The most significant of which was having him reveal his secret identity to Lois Lane and asking her to marry him, to which she said yes.

Will they actually go ahead and waste the Man of Steel?

Now, if one has read many comics over the years, they can detect a trend regarding the "deaths" of characters. Unless a character is blown to smithereens on a two-page spread and one sees every atom of his body burst like a soap bubble and every superhero in the galaxy attends his funeral, then he is just not dead. Even then, there is still a strong chance he will be brought back.

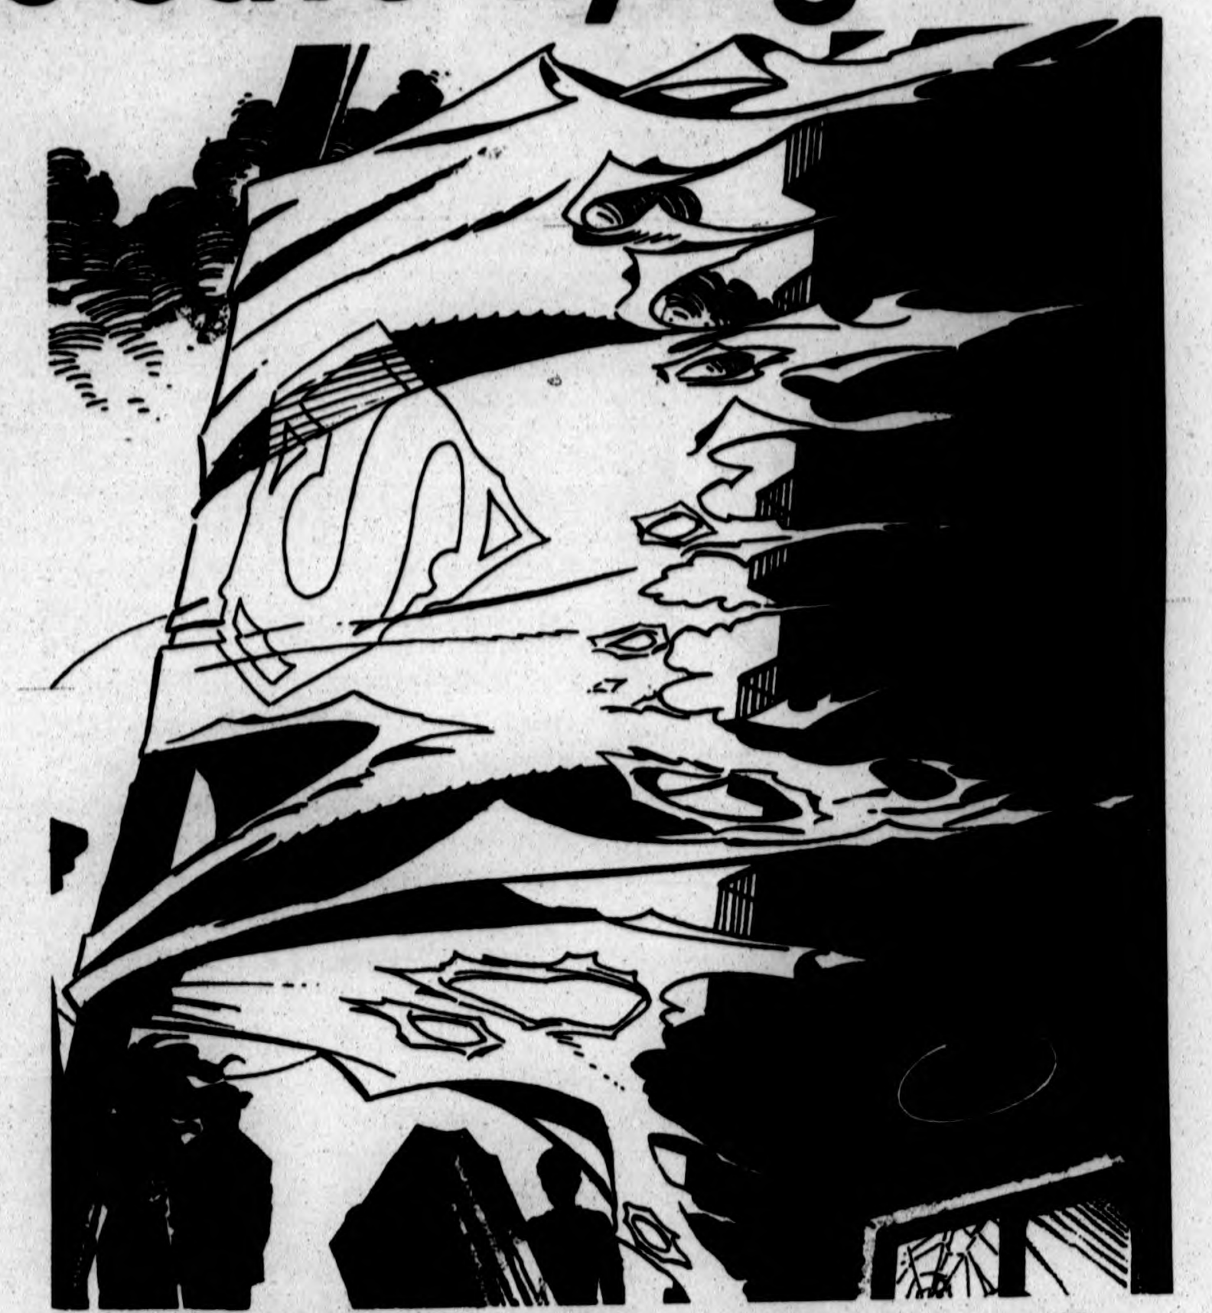
A major American company does not just terminate its corporate symbol. Would the Walt Disney Company kill off Mickey Mouse in a cartoon? It is a financial suicide, and comic books are unfortunately a business as well as an art form. Where legends like King Arthur, Robin Hood, and Sherlock Holmes are given their last adventure, comic book characters just live on and on.

It also seems a little cheap to have Superman die at the hands of a psychotic escapee killer from a mental hospital named "Doomsday," as they have announced. Is this an opponent that is worthy of finally defeating the Man of Steel? Someone who is not even capable of rational thought?

I do not think so.

Despite the fact that this event has been well-publicized and Superman #75 has sold out of its first printing before it even reaches stores, D.C. Comics will not keep him dead. They may bury him for a year, maybe even five years, but they will bring him back in some reincarnation or another. People will demand it.

And after all athose years of romancing Lois Lane, does anyone really expect her to be left waiting at the altar?



Canadian band lets loose at the Cabaret

GORDON
BARENAKED LADIES

By PAT KENNEDY
Staff Reporter

If you are looking for a new band, this is the one. "They are gonna be huge," said one devout fan of Barenaked Ladies, the newest rock sensation out of Canada. One hundred-plus fans packed the Chestnut Cabaret Nov. 10 to hear the humorous, alternative performers from Scarborough, Ontario. So impressed and overwhelmed were the fans, that Barenaked came out for a second encore.

Ever since their album Gordon came out earlier this year, the band has topped the Canadian charts and hoped to impact the States. Right now in the United States, they are not so well known, but the band hopes to change that. Although their trips south of the border have been limited to the club performances, eventually they hope to expand to the college circuit.

"Currently, album sales in the U.S. are around 25,000 and growing," according to Barenaked drummer Tyler Stewart. Many fans have found that they cannot purchase the album because the record stores have sold out. It seems that Barenaked fever has hit the alternative music lovers. "We are catching on in the U.S.," Stewart added.

The band had topped the Canadian charts.

Barenaked has been together for quite some time. After spending their summers together, they have finally released their first big album Gordon. They have played on numerous occasions in Canada, where their success has been phenomenal. Their recent mini-tour in the United States has been fun.

"The best part about touring here is that this is our first time on a big 'rock-and-roll bus'," said Stewart. Stewart added some profound advice to his listeners, "Don't plant your bad days, they'll grow into weeks."

Steve Page, the lead vocalist was ecstatic about the turnout Barenaked received. He was surprised to see that so many people knew the words to the songs. Although he is skeptical of the impact Barenaked will have on the United States, he said he would love to do the college circuit. Page also offered some advice to all, to "never let your bodies surprise you."

The concert was a success. By performing in such a popular place as the Cabaret, Barenaked converted skeptical listeners to fans. Hopefully in time, the rest of the United States will find out what the crowd at the Cabaret found out Nov. 10. Barenaked is for real and well worth the hype. So come along and join the Barenaked Ladies bandwagon, eh?

Metheny revitalizes jazz

By CAROLYN POPPE
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Jazz as a musical form has quietly existed for an age, evolving continuously, but it only recently surfaced to mingle among popular music. Suddenly, it seems, "Windham Hill Records" has become a household word, brass genius Branford Marsalis appears nightly on the Tonight Show to lead its musical group and Spyro Gyra has made its way into almost every album collection.

Jazz artist Pat Metheny makes the next move onto this open-minded scene. More and more people are discovering his stunning guitar work and magical composition. The speed and precision he executes on any guitar, from synthesized guitar to a 42-string "Pikasso," cannot be overlooked.

Metheny has actually been recording for over 15 years. At the age of 19 he was already playing with many legends of jazz, and by 24 he was labeled one by jazz buffs.

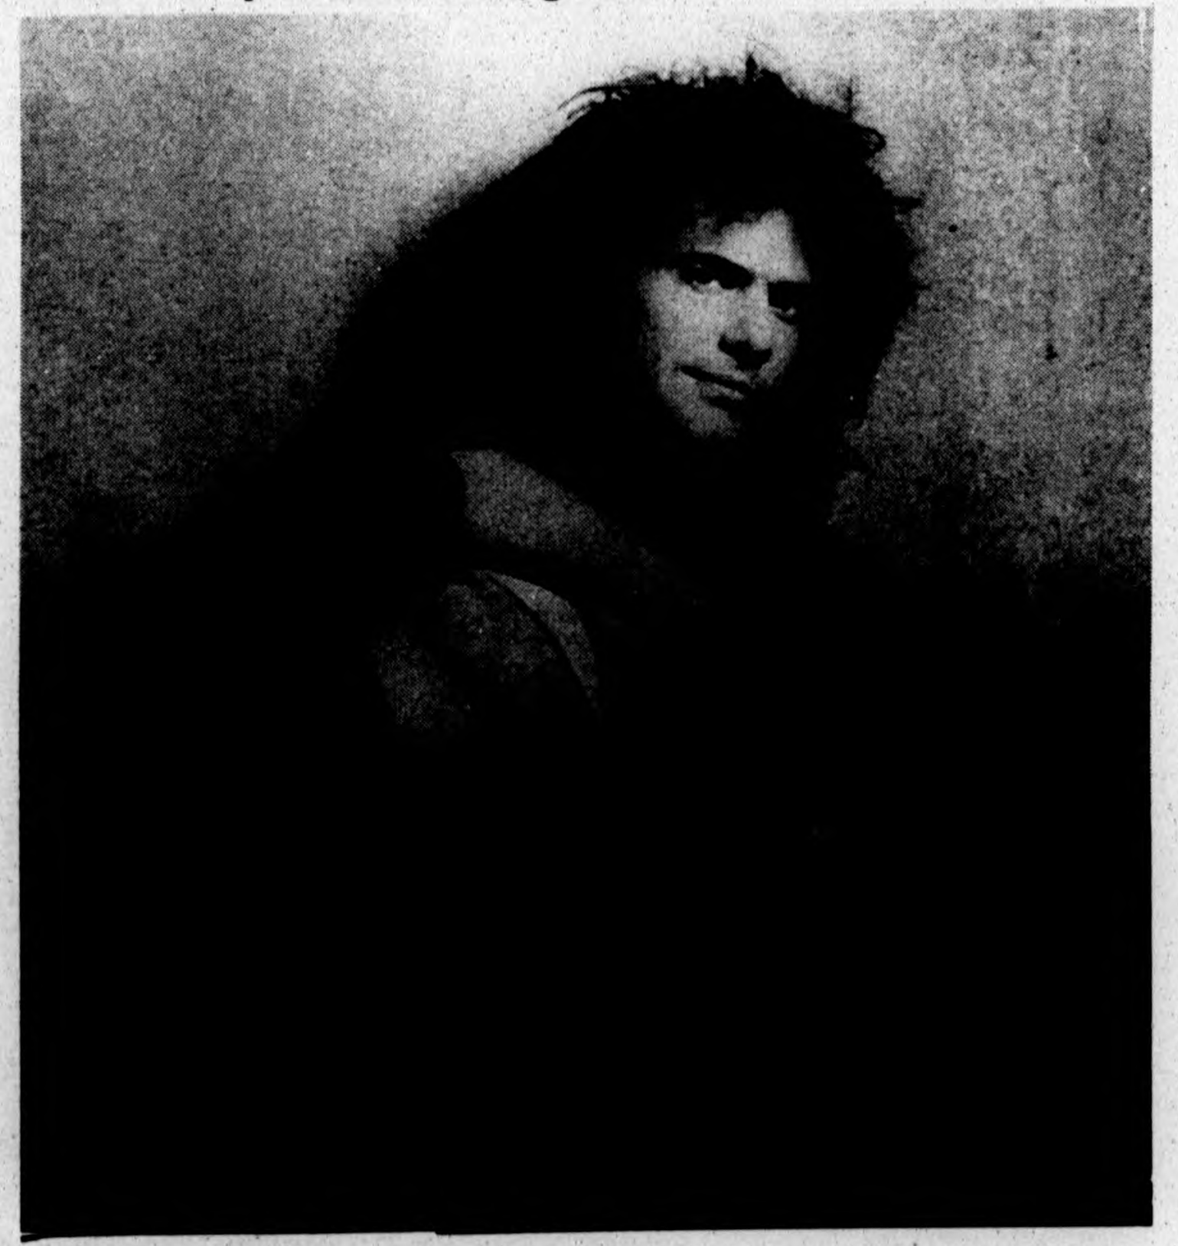
But his musical style does not reflect jazz in the classic scense. Metheny's unique, detailed arrangements derive from his deep jazz roots, but have progressed so much that only the soul of jazz remains identifiable in his music.

The result of this offspring of creativity is breathtaking. Metheny always achieves mastery with any jazz piece he plays, whether solo or playing within the many permutations of musicians that have graced his stage. Listeners remember best his performances with The Pat Metheny Group. With Metheny's talents at the helm, the Group advanced to make their name known with 1987's Still Life Talking and 1989's Letter From Home.

His speed and precision on any guitar cannot be overlooked.

With the Group, Metheny smoothly blends his subtle, quick electric and acoustic guitars with pianist Lyle Mayes' moving fingerwork, Steve Rodby's soft base and various percussion and synthesized sounds. The resulting resonance is full and never pushy. Most distinctive for many people, though, are the low, mystifying vocals that hover over the Group's pieces, reinforcing the guitar work. The vocalists hardly ever sing lyrics; that would not follow with Metheny's style or personality. The vocals are instead "ohs" and "ahs," harmonizing and suggesting the pattern of feelings each tune follows.

1992 offers Pat Metheny's new solo work, Secret Story. Metheny feels that the creative outpouring on this album is much more revealing and risk-taking than anything he has done before. Using everything from a wild-sounding Cambodian tribal choir to the soothing London Orchestra, Metheny mixes an array of sounds and instruments to achieve the perfect mood and quality for each tune. The album ventures in unchartered directions. To those who have never heard Metheny's style before and give it only half a chance, the album may be unsettling. For those who sit down and really listen to what Metheny tries to express, the experience may well be unforgettable.



Metheny smoothly blends his subtle electric and acoustic guitars.

Metheny will interpret his music on stage at the Tower Theatre in Upper Darby on Thursday, Nov. 19. Performing has always been Metheny's life-blood and this will be his first tour that breaks from tiny jazz theatres. He will concentrate on his new album, but accompanied by the bassist, percussionists and vocalists from the Group, Metheny will also bring us back to his earlier jazz days.

Tower's stage will light up next week, touched by Metheny's magic, as will his audience. The concert should not only be an enjoyable performance, but an important step towards the new age of jazz that is emerging.

'Passenger' lacks style

By AARON NICODEMUS
Entertainment Editor

Nic's Picks

A fear of flying is natural: a big metal machine can lift itself off the ground, soar at dizzing altitudes and move at high speeds while completely controlled by a stranger. That's enough to cause travelers to second-guess their means of transportation. To make things worse, all the metal detectors in the world do not seem to prevent the true aviatory nightmare: a hijacking. While there are plenty of targets to prey upon, terrorists always seem to pick planes. "Passenger 57" is action, suspense, melodrama and guns — but it has all been done before.

Wesley Snipes stars as John Cutter, a security expert who gets caught in an aerial terrorist hijacking. He is haunted by memories of his dead wife, who was murdered in a convenience store hold-up he tried to prevent. Flight 163 is his ticket to L.A. and a promising job offer with the airline as its chief security specialist.

Whisked onto the plane by two FBI agents is a ruthless Irish terrorist responsible for at least a dozen bombings and hijackings. It soon becomes apparent that the flight is loaded with bad guys (even the stewardess and baggage handlers are trained killers). Snipes does his best to thwart their plans by draining the fuel and forcing an emergency landing on a small Louisiana airstrip.

So far, so good. The plot has plenty of potential and decent spurts of action. The bad guys are hard and ruthless, and Snipes corners them, one by one, and kicks their faces in. He then falls onto the runway, is unjustly accused of collaborating with the assassins and later chases the killers on a ferris wheel and merry-go-round at a county fair. The goods are delivered.

But the true heart of the film seems lifeless and forced. Unlike the "Die Hard" series (the film seems like a chocolate cookie cut from the same mold), "Passenger 57" is content to let the action rule. Subtle dialogue, memorable lines, plot twists or even humor are nowhere to be found. What is left is 90 minutes of chases, shooting and hand-to-hand combat. Snipes seems dry as Cutter, while none of the emotion driving his exploits are revealed or ever considered. The stereotypical love interest (a headstrong stewardess) is completely contrived.

"Passenger 57" delivers on action, with the usual explosions and fist fights. But unlike the "Die Hard" or "Lethal Weapon" series, the audience never gets a chance to savor the hero. Snipes' performance adds up to little more than those dubbed karate movies: his feet and hands do the talking and little attention is given to his character. Consequently, no one cares. The supporting roles are more of the same. "Passenger 57" makes for decent video viewing but not worth a trip to the theatre.

FAST FORWARD: Seeing as it is Friday the 13th, and the movies of that fame have been done and redone to excess, a new "classy" horror film has arrived to take its place. Out today is "Bram Stoker's Dracula," Francis Ford Coppola's reincarnation of the famously bloodthirsty Transylvanian. "Dracula" stars Gary Oldman and Keanu Reeves, with Winona Ryder as a supple vampire and Anthony Hopkins as the vampire-killing expert.

REWIND: The Hollywood tradition of panoramic films may be nearing its end. "Far and Away," out in video stores today, is one example. Often half of a film's profit is derived from video sales and rentals, so the importance of a smooth transition from the big-screen to the television is becoming more and more important. "Far and Away" may seem tight on video, and the fact that the panorama does not overwhelm a home audience makes the viewer concentrate on the plot. Here is where "Far and Away" is particularly weak. Tom Cruise and Nicole Kidman look nice, but they get lost in the scenery.

CLIPS: "The Mayor's Wife" begins its run at Villanova's Vasey Theatre and was written bv Villanova graduate Marian Hammonds Warrington as part of the theatre's "Nova: A Festival of New Plays by Villanova Playwrights." The play addresses racial and social issues through the eyes of an African-American woman. "The Mayor's Wife" will run at the Vasey Theatre Nov. 11-15 and Nov. 18-22.

Melon ignites Cabaret

By COLEEN KENIREY
Assistant Entertainment Editor

The Cutting Edge

Blind Melon enchanted its small but devoted following at the 23 East Cabaret Nov. 5. Expectations for the band were high due to their performances on the "MTV 120 Minutes" tour, and as opening act on the Ozzy Osbourne/Alice in Chains and Soundgarden tours. They seemed to be a band who had stepped into the limelight even before their first CD was released, and on the Cabaret stage they proved why so many people have been talking about Blind Melon.

The crowd rushed the stage when the Los Angeles band began its set, which covered almost all of the debut album territory. Melon fans danced and screamed along as the musicians enthralled them with a vibrant performance that realized the potential of the debut recordings. Their natural and unique style translated to the live setting as spontaneous and unpretentious. The fans responded to Blind Melon as faithful longtime followers, so the band also appears to have begun its career with an instant popularity.

The rousing opener was "Soak the Sin" which introduced the audience to the charismatic stage presence of tattooed singer Shannon Hoon. Hoon and his bandmates addressed those at the foot of the stage with an interactive attitude, which made the fans feel central to the entire show. The vocalist brought energy to the stage and he, along with the rest of the band, made it apparent that they were right where they wanted to be.

"I Wonder" followed, slowing the pace slightly. The song featured some stellar guitar moments from Christopher Thorn and Rogers Stevens. "Tones of Home" and "Change" caused the faster tempo to rebound and kept the stage-rushers dancing, only to resume a mellow, subdued mood on "Sleepyhouse." Although the show featured many such alternations between fast- and slow-paced offerings, there were no lulls or moments of boredom, this factor simply added an interesting variety.

Following "Dear Ol' Dad," Hoon engaged the crowd in a snap-along at the beginning of "No Rain." It was possibly the best aspect of the night, as the audience members truly participated in a way that would be impossible in larger stadium venues. The singer turned the microphone on the fans several times, commenting about how pleasing the intimate atmosphere was, since he could reach out and touch his audience easily. "Seed to a Tree" stirred the Cabaret crowd, which favored slam dancing in several instances.

The band returned to the relaxed pace with "Drive" before wrapping up an excellent set. To the protests of the fans, Hoon responded that the closing song, "Time" would be equivalent to two songs. As promised, the closing song did not disappoint anyone, but actually left them wanting more.

Each musician displayed his abilities, particularly memorable were drummer Glen Graham on "Change" and bassist Brad Smith on "Seed to a Tree." There was a sense that the band was still becoming accustomed to its new status, but the attention which they have been given is well deserved. Their outstanding CD heralded Blind Melon as a live performance-oriented band and their appearance at the 23 East Cabaret fulfilled the prophecy.

Although the two opening bands did not connect equally well with the audience, they provided some interesting moments. Day of Reckoning took the stage first, before the full audience had arrived, but the applause made it obvious that a few of their supporters were already present. They offered a strong beginning to the evening and verified their local favorite status, as the guitarists stepped down to the dance floor and jammed with a few air-guitar masters. One fan even booed when the band was compelled to terminate their last song due to stage time constraints.

Flowerhead, from Austin, Texas, followed Day of Reckoning. Their music left the crowd disinterested because it lacked a certain degree of originality, although it was powerful. When the band headed into "Kabloom," the lead singer joked, "This is a cut off our smash album in '77 … everyone smashed it." The Flowerhead performance also featured two T-shirt contests, one of which resulted in a tie and prompted the band to suggest a wrestling match to determine the winner.

Songs tell of Vas Llegas

By DANIELLE SANTUCCI

Carnival Art churns out hearty, twisted guitar-driven psycho pop with vast time and tempo changes on their third project, Welcome to Vas Llegas.

Carnival Art is a Los Angeles-based band conceived in 1989. Their debut album, Thrumdrone, was released in 1991 and an EP, Holy Smokes, followed earlier this spring. Their new album, Welcome to Vas Llegas, has been regarded as their most mature and cohesive work to date.

Cohesive it may be, but it is not mature. Lead singer and songwriter Michael P. Tak wails and screams the lyrics. While the lyrics are well written, they are not well understood.

The band worked with the idea of Vas Llegas as both a place and a concept to link all of the songs together. Carnival Art uses Vas Llegas more as a state of mind than a place on the map. Vas Llegas is an emotional "state" ranging from abandonment and despair to love and addiction.

The songs tell the story of this "place." The first minute and 40 seconds of the song welcome us to Vas Llegas. "Bullet Surprise" tells about depression and anger expressed through a man who locks himself in his room and speaks to no one. He waits to die and is afraid to do it himself.

The idea that there is a Jekyll and Hyde inside all of us is evident in "Which is Wig." The song describes how everyone is evil at one time or another, yet we blame others for their evil toward us. "Here is where it's never there/ Outside on the in/ All around on everyone/ Always on the move."

Carnival Art almost redeems themselves with "Little Elvis." With the vocals being intelligible and the music clean, we hear the story of a man just trying to "be." The bounds of the song reach beyond Vas Llegas and extend into a relatable world. "But still he just an't reach/ He can stretch but :'s too deep/ So he rocks himself o sleep/ And dreams up dreams again."

The rest of the songs tell a depressing, sometimes crude story of life in Vas Llegas. The album does convey the real world but in too warped a sense. Vas Llegas is a place where you end up, comparable to hell. Why would you pay to go there?

Da Skills Dat Pay Da Bills is the first album by 24-year-old Positive Knowledge Allah, formally known as Darryl Gibson. The Bronx-born and bred rap artist has worked with other known writers and performers in his field such as Grand Puba, Professor X, MC Lyte, Audio 2, Daddy-O, Big Daddy Kane and others.

Positive was involved in such artistic endeavors at the tender age of 12, with his first "crew," The Disco Cousins. Twelve years later Positive claims, "I'm just expressing myself musically to the best of my ability. I flex a lot of styles, and I rap on what's real. I don't follow any trends. My motto is: as long as you're different, there will always be a spot for you."

On Da Skills the seventh track, the song "Nightshift," boasts intellectually stimulating and flattering lyrics such as, "Cupid, throw back your bow/Let the arrow flow/And, yo/Hit the ho."

Aside from this, the content of "Nightshift" is clearly the most enjoyable out of all the tracks on Da Skills Dat Pay Da Bills. Here is the only situation where the combination of lyrics, beat and sampling seem to work together to produce some sort of unity.

The heinous wining and seemingly forced lyrics, accompanied by the '70s-like horn sampling in Mr. K's "I Got a Man," make it almost unbearable to sit through. Musically, this piece screams tasteless, warped disco with accompanying tasteless and warped lyrics such as, "I'm Big Daddy Longstroke/Your man's Pee Wee Herman/Your man's a headache/I'll be your aspirin." Beautiful.

Granted, Positive K is clearly trying new combinations of different styles, but he somehow misses the mark. He uses decent samplings and backbeats which might work in different organization. However, a majority of the tracks on Da Skills Dat Pay Da Bills sound forced, with flat and droning lyrics that really do not coordinate with the samples or beats. It seems as if Positive's focus on uniqueness and variant styles has taken away from the backbone of his music's unity.

Overall, I could not recommend this album to anyone, not even my proverbial worst enemy. Positive's new and original ideas should be applauded, but not recorded. According to Mr. K., "It's only right that I say som'n clever. So you could hold your head and say, 'Damn, I never.' " And believe me, you would if you ever have to listen to this album.

Swimmers now 2-0; beat LaSalle

By ERIC WARREN
Staff Reporter

Having been beaten by the LaSalle Explorers in each of the last three seasons, the Villanova men's swimming team entered last weekend's dual meet eager to change the course of history.

The men were led by junior Chris DesMarais, who kicked off the victorious 400-yard medley relay comprised of seniors Ed Paradise and Scott Fraser and freshman Tom Forrest. DesMarais won the 200-yard individual medley in 1:56.25 and destroyed the competition by almost five seconds in the 200-yard backstroke with a time of 1:50.91, just shy of his own school record of 1:50.61.

"DesMarais was the surprise swimmer of the meet: this puts him up with the top swimmers in the Big East," said Head Coach Chuck Horton.

Villanova swept the 1000-yard freestyle as sophomore Pat Donahue touched the wall in 9:43.66 and was followed by freshman Tim Jogan (9:46.46) and junior Glen Langhans (9:48.46). The Wildcats also swept the 500-yard freestyle as sophomore Rob Drumm bested the field in 4:38.66, followed by Jogan (4:39.57) and Donahue (4:45.48).

> We're doing everything right. The men are setting themselves up for an outstanding season.
> Head Coach Chuck Horton

Three freshmen have been added to the squad to aid sophomore Matt McGarry on the diving board. Garrett Means won the one-meter and Brian Yodice won the three-meter diving. Although they are young and somewhat inexperienced, 'Nova should now be able to limit the amount of points that diving powerhouses such as the University of Miami and other schools in the Big East are able to rack up.

"We're doing everything right. The men are setting themselves up for an outstanding season," said Horton as 'Nova cruised to a 135-99 win.

"Our distance looked really solid. We only have six upperclassmen, but our freshmen and sophomores are pulling a lot of the load," said Horton. The Cats improved to 2-0 in dual meet competition. Their next meet is Nov. 21 at the University of Maryland.

Wildcats lose local recruit to UMass

By PAT MEILER
Staff Reporter

Tyrone Weeks, the 6-foot-6 forward from Franklin Learning Center whose services were prized by the Villanova coaching staff, has verbally committed to the University of Massachusetts. A Daily News article noted Weeks' decision was made Nov. 8.

Weeks mentioned UMass' policy on SAT scores played a part in his decision. Weeks has yet to achieve 700 on his SATs. UMass and its Head Coach John Caliperi have made it policy to lessen academic requirements in accepting scholarship basketball players. They will enroll Weeks regardless of his board scores.

Future star Donta Bright, a freshman slasher at UMass, will sit out '92-'93 as a result of his inability to meet the 700 minimum. Villanova's policy has been not to accept Prop 48 players, but the present policy is quite unknown. Needless to say, this is an early blow to the Lappas staff. Weeks was a coveted talent capable of contributing to a program immediately. We will have to wait and see if he does pass his boards, and if he contributes at the next level.

A note on last week's article. The Lehigh and Columbia game dates were in error. Lehigh will come to duPont Dec. 28, and Columbia will face the Cats Dec. 30. The St. Joseph's game is slated for Feb. 6 at the Spectrum. Also, because of the Villanovan space constraints, the Hofstra team capsule was left out.

Hofstra travels to the Pavilion on Feb. 11. The Flying Dutchmen and Head Coach Butch van Breda Kolff were 20-9 in 91-92. They lose two starters, and their former conference (East Coast) disbanded in the off season. Thus, their independent schedule is brutal, with 20 road games.

Hofstra gladly welcomes back senior forward Demetrius Dudley, who ranked 20th in the nation in scoring last year (21.7 p.p.g.). Look for the Cats to focus their attention on Dudley. Other returning starters include guard John Mavroukas (7.8 p.p.g.), the East Coast Conference Rookie of the Year in 91-92, and guard Stephen Kiernan (5.6 p.p.g.).

After Dudley, the frontline is untested. John Burke, a 7-footer, will get a shot at center, while six-foot-seven junior Pat Cosgrove will play the other forward position. Freshman Matt Carpenter will vie for frontline playing time.

Villanova will look to capitalize on its pressure man-to-man defense in this game. Hofstra is not an extremely athletic team. It returns only two players with over three rebounds per game in 91-92. Thus, Villanova should look to win the battle of the boards.

The Cats will play against Big East teams the rest of the way in 1993. This season will show Villanova fans whether or not a softer out-of-conference schedule benefits the Cats come Selection Sunday.

Women gear up for ECACs

By SEAN KELLY
Staff Reporter

On one particular Saturday early last October, the women's cross country team traveled a short distance from home to Lehigh University for the Paul Short Invitational. At the time, the Wildcats were well focused on beating talented runners from Penn State and Providence. However, one of the reasons they were at the meet in the first place was to get a feel for the course on which they would soon be racing again.

It has been over a month since 'Nova dominated the field at that important meet. Actually, it has been almost three weeks since the harriers raced in a meet altogether. Not since Oct. 24 at the Big East Championships has Villanova's women's cross country team faced any competition other than its own members.

For Head Coach Marty Stern and his runners, the past few weeks included what was arguably the most important training period of the season. From day one, the Wildcat mentor has stressed the importance of staying healthy and strong throughout the season. Overtraining is something that he has been concentrating on avoiding at all times. With the extremely competitive schedule that Villanova faces each season, it is even more important than most cases to pay closer attention to resting periods. It is no accident that women's cross country team's campaign includes weeks off between its more difficult meets. With the East Coast Athletic Conference (ECAC) Championships this Saturday at Lehigh University, the team spent three weeks of rigorous yet careful training in an effort to be in perfect form and condition for the meet.

The Cats will be facing mostly familiar faces at this weekend's championships, including Georgetown, Penn State and Providence. Of course any opponent familiar with Villanova cross country is unquestionably an intimidated one, considering the lady runners have not let any of these opponents come close to putting their winning ways to rest. One of the nation's top five teams, Cornell, will be facing the Wildcats for the first time this season. If the Big Red is anything like the other competitors, it need not even think about placing anywhere higher than second. The Cats have not fallen from the No. 1 spot in a meet since Ronald Reagan was in office and they are not about to leave that location anytime soon.

This is not to say, however, that the harriers will have an easy meet for themselves. Many of the teams are among the NCAA Division I's Top-20 list. This makes the displacement points Villanova has been capturing that much more consequential. Since most of the Wildcat runners have been finishing somewhere in the first 10 positions, none of the other schools are able to obtain the low-point totals needed to win the meets. To give you an idea of how important the displacement scores are, no team has come closer than 13 points to 'Nova the entire season.

The women's cross country team can continue its streak of fours this weekend if they capture their fourth straight ECAC Championship trophy. After this, they can finally put all their attention on gaining a fourth-straight NCAA crown in Indiana on Nov. 23.

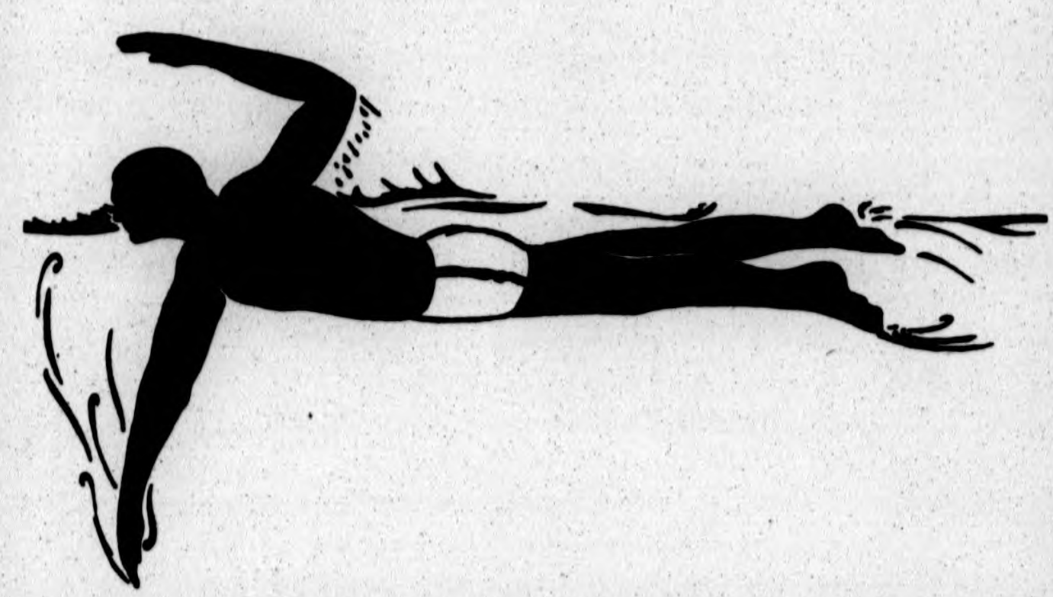
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Tammy Kouser and Eileen Rothenback

This week the Villanovan recognizes swimmers Tammy Kouser and Eileen Rothenback.

In their debuts for the Villanova swimming team, both set team records and helped the Cats to a 165-140 win over La Salle in a dual meet. A freshman, Kouser started the meet off with a bang, recording a 57.02 time in the 100-yard backstroke during the opening leg of the 400-meter medley relay. Later in the meet, fellow freshman Rothenback set a record of her own when she notched a time of 2:04.06 in the 200-yard backstroke.

Both Kouser and Rothenback should be key contributors for the women's swim team as it defends last year's Big East Championship.



Ice Cats open season 1-1

By ED FITZPATRICK
Staff Reporter

The Villanova hockey team's success in the upcoming season relies heavily upon its 11 freshmen's ability to mature quickly in order to survive the rigors of college hockey. The IceCats are clearly in a transition year, but as Penn found out, they cannot be taken for granted.

Villanova got off to a promising start with a 5-4 victory over Penn on Oct. 30. Freshman forward Chris Paquette overcame first-game jitters and scored two goals in his debut as a Wildcat. Paquette called the game a "good tune-up for the season."

The following weekend, the Cats suffered a pair of heartbreaking losses to Bentley College and Wentworth Institute of Technology. Bentley pulled out a tight 4-3 win in 'Nova's first road game of the year. Less than 15 hours later, the Cats lost another heartbreaker, this time to Wentworth 8-7 in OT. Two goals each by Keith Curran and Joe Galea were not enough to pull it out.

'Nova aims to overcome its inexperience and make the playoffs.

"We are trying to build confidence and maturity quick, as well as build for the next four years," said Coach Chris Meyer. He believes the team's youth and enthusiasm will overcome their inexperience and lack of depth.

Meyer is counting on a big year from defenseman Steve Flynn, the lone senior on the squad, as well as sophomore Ryan Stattenfield and junior John Demers. The Cats hope that they have just the right amount of experience to assist the many freshmen.

Despite high hopes and a promising start, it could be a long season for the Cats.

Fordham (1-7) at VILLANOVA (7-2, 5-2)

Tomorrow, 1:30 p.m.
TV: None, Radio: WXVU, 89.1 FM
Last Week:
Villanova 27, New Hampshire 21
Fordham 21, Bucknell 0 (Oct. 31)

OUTLOOK: The Cats take a break from Yankee Conference action to host Patriot League rival Fordham. Coming off a 27-21 comeback win at New Hampshire, the Cats are excited to return home for Homecoming with their playoff hopes still intact.

For Fordham, this game is not very meaningful. After starting the season 0-7, the Rams come to Villanova on the heels of their first victory in 12 games, a 21-0 whitewash of Bucknell. Led by All-American linebacker candidate Mark Blazejewski, the Rams strength lies in their defense, where they return nine starters from last year.

As the Cats try to reach playoff form, they are still fine tuning their struggling offense. Quarterback Tom Colombo is coming off a 14 of 29, 152-yard performance against New Hampshire. He should be able to boost his state this weekend.

Although Fordham presents the Cat offense with problems, 'Nova is near full strength and will be pumped for the Homecoming crowd. It is important for them to put up some early points and not have to rely on the defense to bail them out like last week against UNH.

Delaware clinched the Yankee Conference crown with a win over UConn.

By FRANK SCHNEIDER
Staff Reporter

For the second straight week, three Yankee Conference teams placed in the NCAA I-AA Top 20 poll. Delaware ranked third, Villanova ninth, and Massachusetts 16. This week was also the sixth time in 1992 that at least three Yankee Conference teams were ranked in the Top 20.

Maine 40, Boston U. 11

The University of Maine passed the .500 mark with a 40-11 win over Boston University. Leading the Black Bears was Yankee Conference Offensive Player of the Week Ben Sirmans. Sirmans carried the ball 30 times for 146 yards and three touchdowns. The Black Bears' defense was led by linebacker Dan Girard who had 14 tackles and recovered a fumble. Boston's top performers included John Schaeffer, who had 12 tackles for a bruised Terrier defense.

Massachusetts 17, Richmond 13

The University of Massachusetts continued to roll in conference play with a 17-13 squeaker over Richmond. The Minutemen were led by two of this week's Yankee Conference award winners. Pacing the UMass defense was tackle Brian Corcoran, who had nine tackles, one sack and returned a fumble 31 yards for a touchdown. He spearheaded a Minutemen that held QB Greg Lilly to just 87 yards passing. The other award winner was Andrew McNeilly, a freshman quarterback and the Yankee Conference Rookie of the Week. McNeilly connected on 12 passes for 158 yards and a touchdown. The Spiders were led by linebacker Eric Johnson, who had 15 tackles, a fumble recovery and an interception in defeat.

Northeastern 35, Rhode Island 26

Northeastern defeated hapless Rhode Island 35-26. Northeastern was led by quarterback Ralph Barone, who finished 17 of 28 for 252 yards and four touchdowns. He also rushed for 92 yards. Rhode Island tight end Darren Rizzi led the Rams' offense with seven catches for 77 yards and two touchdowns. He currently leads the conference in receiving.

Liberty 34, James Madison 31

JMU continued to give up the most points in the conference, losing to Liberty 34-31. JMU's top performer was running back Kenny Sims, who set a school record for rushing touchdowns in a year (12). He had 19 carries for 115 yards. The Dukes allow 31.4 points per game and 455.9 yards per game.

Delaware 33, Connecticut 7

Delaware remained unbeaten against Yankee Conference opponents with a 33-7 trouncing of Connecticut. Delaware clinched a share of the Yankee Conference title with the win and has now won four titles in the last seven years. The Blue Hens have a chance to become the first undefeated team in conference play since 1985. They have won 12 straight Yankee Conference games. The Blue Hens were led by Lanue Johnson, who rushed for 105 yards and three touchdowns. UConn was led by freshman running back Wilbur Gilliard, who had 246 all-purpose yards in defeat (93 rushing, five receiving, 148 kick-off returns).

William & Mary 44, Colgate 26

William & Mary defeated Colgate 44-26 in an impressive offensive display. The Tribe's offense was led by quarterback Shawn Knight, who finished 13 for 16 for 232 yards and three touchdowns. He also rushed for 62 yards. The Tribe's defense was led by Keith Booker, who had 10 tackles and is sixth in the Yankee Conference in tackles.

Men open season

By MICHEL DAVIES
Staff Reporter

In a school where basketball attracts the majority of fan interest during the winter and spring months, it is difficult for a small program such as the men's volleyball club to get the recognition it deserves. But this year, with numerous returning starters and a batch of young players, the team should attract more interest from the student body.

> This is a very strong team. We are solid at every position offensively. I look for this to be a very good year for Villanova volleyball.
> Head Coach Ron Twomey

In their first tournament of the season, the Wildcats made their way up to Bucknell University. The Bucknell Tournament promised to be a difficult one with strong teams such as Albany and Maryland present.

"From what I understant this tournament had a lot of the top EIVA (Eastern Intercollegiate Volleyball Association) teams in it," said first year Head Coach Ron Twomey. Twomey also coaches the women's volleyball team.

Although the team did not fare well at the tournament, failing to advance past pool play, Twomey was not discouraged.

"We didn't serve or receive very well, and that's something we can work on. We practiced it heavily on Monday night and we will continue to emphasize it this week. I'm really not too worried about it because we didn't even have a defensive system implemented for the tournament."

One area that the Cats are very strong at, however, is hitting. Junior setter Mark Gilrain anchors the offense with solid assists, and juniors Rob Walsh and Gary Sica and senior Brian Walheim, will pick up and contribute heavily to what should be a potent Wildcat offense.

"This is a very strong team. We are solid at every position offensively. I look for this to be a very good year for Villanova volleyball," said Twomey.

A true measure of how good 'Nova volleyball really is will come the weekend of Dec. 2, when the team hosts a large tournament at Jake Nevin Field House. A successful tournament for the Cats could lead to a dominating season for the team.

'Nova laps LaSalle in 165- 140 win

By MOIRA DONAHUE
Staff Reporter

The first regular season meet for the women's swim team took place this past weekend at home versus LaSalle University. The Wildcat women dominated the Explorers in their first dual meet, which resulted in a score of 165-140.

Freshmen sensations Tammy Kouser and Eileen Rothenback set school records in their first collegiate dual meet. Kouser's record came in the first event of the meet, when she led off the 400-yard medley relay with a 57.02 split in the 100-yard backstroke. This time shattered the existing record set last year by over two seconds.

Later in the meet Rothenback set her second school record of the day, this time in the 200-yard backstroke. Her time of 2::04.06 was more than a full second faster than the previous school record. Rothenback went on to capture first place in the 200-yard individual medley (2:08.69) and placed second in the 400-yard medley relay (3:59.86) along with the team of Amy Burton, captain Jenny Miller and Sarah Dykstra. With the time of 3:53.80, Villanova's women also claimed first place in the 400-yard medley relay with the team comprised of Kouser, Lisa Flood, Michelle Pulaski and Meghan McCaffrey.

In individual events, 'Nova was led by two-time event winners, senior Mary Dowling who won both the 500-yard freestyle (5:02.48) and the 1000-yard freestyle (10:19.84) and sophomore Meghan McCaffrey, who was fastest in the 50-yard freestyle (24.30) and the 100-yard free (53.31). Also contributing to the Wildcats' victory were freshman Karen Mellian-Smith in the 200-yard free (1:17.15) and senior Jenny Miller in the 200-yard butterfly (2:09.90). Miller also swam to a third place finish in the 200-yard freestyle (1:58.08).

Great showings were turned in by freshman Tracey Bell, whose effort resulted in a second place finish in the 200-yard freestyle (1:57.71) and a third place in the 100-yard freestyle (55.02). Dykstra achieved two second place finishes in both the 50-yard freestyle (24.81) and 100-yard freestyle (54.38). Junior Lisa Flood swam to second place in the 200-yard individual medley (2:11.99).

Diver Lisa Galpin scored a second place finish in the one meter diving event with 194.75 points. Galpin scored 180.525 points in the three meter event.

The Villanova women's swim team continues its season next weekend with an away meet at the University of Maryland on Nov. 21, beginning at 12:30 p.m.

Comeback spurs Cats past UNH, 27-21

The defense helped produce three of the four touchdowns in 'Nova's come-from-behind 27-21 victory.

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Sports Editor

In a season filled with ups and downs, there is only one thing certain about this football team. — the defense can win games.

Trailing 21-0 late in the third quarter and facing the possibility that their post-season chances were disappearing, the No. 9-ranked Cats pulled off a furious comeback to keep their playoff hopes alive. Led by the defense, 'Nova (7-2, 5-2) was barely able to escape New Hampshire with a 27-21 triumph, leaving the Cats two home wins away from their second-straight playoff berth.

If not for the play of the defense in the fourth quarter, the Cats would have returned home knowing that a season of greatness was not to be. Instead, the team enters tomorrow's game against Fordham (1-7) with new life and a second chance thanks to the defense.

After a Kevin Mosley one-yard TD run put the Cats on the board, safety Matt Smith forced UNH quarterback Jim Stayer to cough up the ball at midfield on the last play of the third quarter. Nose guard Tim Matas recovered for the Cats and proceeded to lateral the ball to lineman Mike Hoffman, who took it all the way for a touchdown to cut the margin to 21-14.

The defense was not finished.

When UNH got the ball back, linebacker Mike Jones intercepted a Stayer pass and returned it to the 4-yard line, setting up the tying touchdown by Mosley. Finally, a Hoffman interception led the Cats to the game-winner, another touchdown run by Mosley.

The Cats defense accounted for 20 points, proof of the impact that turnovers have on the final outcome of a game. Not only did the defense take pressure off the offense, but it definitely established itself as one of the top in the country.

And it could not come at a better time for the Cats, who are striving to reach their peak for the playoffs. The defense continually seems to improve, falling victim only to the occasional big play. Now if only the offense could get back in sync.

"Our passing game needs to improve," said Head Coach Andy Talley. "We threw to Scott Donald eight times but he was getting triple-teamed. This week we're hoping to dump the ball more to our backs as Eric [Hunt] is totally healthy. I don't think they can overcome our defense so we should be able to keep turning it over to the offense."

Talley has settled on Colombo as his primary quarterback and is encouraging him to step up more in the pocket. Although Fordham has only one win, the Rams' defense is solid, according to Talley.

"People are having problems against Fordham's defense," said Talley. "They have a kid, [Mark] Blazejewski, who is really a great linebacker."

NOTES: The Homecoming contest against Fordham begins at 1:30 p.m. in Villanova Stadium. Talley is 3-0 against the Rams ... The Cats defense is ranked second in Division I-AA in rushing defense and fifth in fewer points allowed ... Next week's game at home against Maine (5-4, 3-3) is the final regular season game. If the Cats win both, they will open post-season action Nov. 28, which is over Thanksgiving weekend. The Cats have a good chance of hosting a first-round playoff contest.

Water polo ends best season ever

By ERIC WARREN
Staff Reporter

The Wildcats closed out the finest season in the team's history at the Eastern Championships held at the U.S. Naval Academy Nov. 7-8. The Eastern Championships bring together the top eight teams on the East Coast with the opportunity to make the NCAA Tournament. Villanova received its first ever birth to the tournament by placing fourth at the Mid-Atlantic Conference Championships. 'Nova ranks seventh in the East with a 13-12 record.

It was a great effort by the entire team. This win caps off the greatest season ever for Villanova water polo.
Head Coach Dan Sharidan

The men from 'Nova opened up the tournament against the top-seeded Minutemen, ranked 13th in the nation. Their defense stymied early Wildcat attacks, and UMass got out to a 4-0 lead. As the Cats continued to struggle with their shooting, UMass used the counter-attack to its advantage, and went on to win 9-3. Jim Floerchinger had five steals and goaltender John O'Keefe saved 11 shots on goal. Senior co-captain Marc Verotsky scored two goals and sophomore Ryan Engstrom added another goal in the loss.

'Nova's second opponent of the tournament proved to be another Top 20 team, Brown University. The counter-attack of the Brown Bears was instrumental in opening up a 6-1 lead. The Wildcats were able to launch a comeback and entered the fourth quarter trailing 8-6. However, the depth of Brown proved too much for the Cats in the fourth quarter, as the final score read 12-7 in favor of Brown. Verotsky set the pace for 'Nova with three goals and Floerchinger, Brian Pearce, John Driscoll and Brooks Gregg each had one goal apiece.

"O'Keefe was once again outstanding in goal. He kept us in the hunt for most of the game," said Head Coach Dan Sharidan.

The final game of the tournament and the season pitted 'Nova against the University of Arkansas. The Cats took the lead early on and led 5-2 at the half. The Razorbacks launched a major offensive attack in the third quarter by scoring five goals, leaving the score tied at seven entering the fourth quarter. 'Nova then turned up the intensity on the offensive front and the defense halted any Arkansas counterattacks. When all was said and done, the scoreboard read 10-8 in favor of Villanova. Pete Trout and Paul Cera had four and three steals respectively and O'Keefe again proved the determining factor, saving 13 shots on goal. Verotsky finished his final collegiate water polo game with five

Stickwomen out of Tourney

By ALEX SCOFIELD

History has a way of repeating itself, and unfortunately for the Villanova field hockey team, it did last Sunday at the Big East Championship Tournament.

In the first round of last year's Big East Tournament, the University of Connecticut put the lights out on the Cats' season, beating them 2-0.

It was the same story for the stickwomen this year.

The Wildcats went to Alumni Stadium on the Boston College campus with high expectations.

"[The Huskies] were very beatable. We were a better team than them," said 'Nova head coach Jackie Gerzabek. "We played them tough and beat them [1-0] during the regular season."

Unlike last year's tournament game, the Cats were the favorite to win. They entered the weekend ranked 16th in the country, and were seeded second in the tournament. UConn, with the weakest record of any of the four tournament teams, was seeded third.

For most of the first half, the game was a scoreless tie. But late in the period, Connecticut overwhelmed the Cats for a fateful minute-and-a-half that would cost 'Nova its season.

At 14:13 into the period, UConn's Kristin Kelly scored on an assist from Heidi Papoosha. A mere 70 seconds later, Heather Graver added an insurance goal for the Huskies, putting them up 2-0.

"We seemed to break down as a team," said co-captain Melissa Rea. "Everybody was excited before the game and seemed prepared, but we didn't come together."

Despite outshooting the Huskies 10-1 in the second half, the Cats were unable to put a dent in Connecticut's lead. 'Nova also had four penalty corners that proved fruitless. Neither team scored in the second half, and UConn duplicated its 2-0 win of the '91 tournament.

The game was the conclusion to a 12-8 season for the Wildcats. After the sting of an early departure had faded away, 'Nova's co-captain viewed the season as a success.

We were ranked 16th going into the tournament, and that's a successful season no matter how you look at it.
Senior co-captain Melissa Rea

"We were ranked 16th going into the tournament, and that's a successful season no matter how you look at it," said Rea, who led the team in scoring with 10 goals and eight assists. "The [1990] Big East championship was a highlight, but on the whole this team was more important to me. The talent we had was so incredible this year. It was definitely the best team I played for."

The season's highlight was a string of seven consecutive victories, lasting from Sept. 20-Oct. 15. Sophomore goalie Chrissy Thomas recorded shutouts in the first six games of this streak, a Villanova record.

"Chrissy played really well and was really strong," said Gerzabek. "She had a couple of mental lapses, but she bounced back and played really tough."

Other leading scorers for Villanova were junior Bree Hawthorne (five goals, seven assists), sophomore Barbara King (six goals, five assists) and junior Staci Verzera (eight goals, one assist).

Though these three return next year along with defensive standouts Kate McKee and co-captain Marianne Connelly, the team will have to contend without Rea, Krista Saponara or Kathy Pearce, who will all graduate this spring.

"Melissa brought her good play to the team, and people would play just as well around her," said Gerzabek when commenting on her seniors. "Krista was always up for the very big games, and was always a very intense player. Kathy came back from the adversity of a knee injury. She brought her toughness to the team and was always working really hard."

Gerzabek now owns a career record of 31-28-1 after three seasons at the Villanova helm. If the team can fill in the holes left by its three seniors, that record is likely to move further and further over .500 in the '93 season.

Parking policy proposed

By ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWSKI
News Editor

The University Student Government will be presenting a proposal endorsing changes in the University parking policy to the Parking Appeals Committee, said Ken Batchelor, Student Government president.

The proposal has already been approved by the Student Life Committee of the University Senate, said Batchelor. Once the proposed changes in policy are presented to the Parking Appeals Committee it will be the decision of the committee whether or not to recommend the changes to Jeffrey Horton, director of Public Safety and the Rev. Patrick Rice, O.S.A., vice president of Administration.

"Currently off-campus residents with daytime parking permits cannot park in Main Lot between the hours of 2 a.m. and 7 a.m. without registering their car with the Public Safety at the North Gate. We propose allowing said students to park in Main Lot on a 24-hour, seven day a week basis," said an excerpt from the proposal being put forth by Student Government.

Student Government justifies this change, noting that many students study in various buildings on campus which stay open early into the morning, such as Bartley Hall Cafeteria which remains open until 3 a.m. and Tolentine Hall which is open for use 24 hours a day.

"For students studying at any of these places, it is a great inconvenience to contact Public Safety (via phone or by going to the North gate) to register a car. Students pay $75 to purchase a parking permit to register their cars with Public Safety. This

Homecoming Weekend marred by excessive drinking

By KATE SZUMANSKI

This year's Homecoming was marked by damage to residence hall property, vandalism and hospitalizaitons due to overconsumptin of alcohol, fights and traffic accidents, said Jeffrey B. Horton, director of the department of Public Safety.

Michael Schaefer, a 1992 University graduate, ws hit by a car while crossing Lancaster Avenue in Rosemont Nov. 14 at 5:30 p.m., said the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of Students. The vehicle that hit Schaefer fled from the scene of the accident, added Stack. Schaefer "was taken by helicopter to the University of Pennsylvania Hospital, where his condition has reportedly improved from critical," said Horton.

"This is the type of thing the University doesn't want to see happen," said Horton, adding that it is not known whether or not this accident was connected to Homecoming Weekend.

Many fights inside the football stadium and inside dorms, namely Stanford Hall, occurred during the weekend, said Horton. "One of these fights inside the football stadium led to the hospitalization of a grandmother of one of the Fordham football players," said Stack. The woman, who was caught in the middle of a fight, was admitted to the hospital and released later that day, added Stack.

Senate meets today

By KATE SZUMANSKI
News Editor

The University Senate will meet today in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center at 4 p.m., at which time the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., University president, will deliver the annual State of the University Address.

Following the State of the University Address, the minutes of the Oct. 30 meeting will be voted upon for approval, according to the Senate agenda. Any announcements and correspondence will then be read.

The University Planning and Priorities Committee will present its annual report to the Senate, according to the Senate agenda. The Committee has identified priorities in two categories, operational and capital:

"Operational priorities are expenditures which, in general, relate to the ongoing operations of the University, including building and land maintenance. Capital priorities are those expenditures which, in general, relate to land or buildings but which are non-maintenance in nature. Within the operational and capital priorities, the Committee has listed items in two categories, highest and high," according to the Committee's report.

According to the Committee's findings, the highest operational

Bar owner dispells shut down rumors

By LARISA EPATKO

The owner of Smokey Joe's, a restaurant and bar in Wayne, must appear before an administrative law judge to answer for 24 citations that people receive outside the bar.

"We're not going to be closed down," despite the rumors stating otherwise, said Pat Ryan, owner of Smokey Joe's. He plans to distribute letters to his customers explaining the entire situation.

Township offices and the licensing department of the Liquor Control Board questioned the township about police activity and violations in the bar's general vicinity.

From March of 1991, to July of 1992, police issued about 24 citations to people for disorderly conduct, urinating in public and public drunkenness. If the incidents take place within 150 yards of the bar, "we get pinned for it," Ryan said.

About 130,000 people frequented the bar within the indicated 17-month period, Ryan added.

For seven years Smokey Joe's has employed a township police officer to patrol the area around the only bar owner on the Main Line to do that.

The hired police officer might have written 20 of the citations, said Ryan, "so I might have shot myself in the foot." But he will continue hiring the township police. "It makes people behave and makes me feel better."

The one or two police officers sitting across the street from the bar provide a good presence and discourage loitering, Ryan said.

Smokey Joe's has not had any liquor violations. When the bar was raided four times by police, they discovered only three minors out of an average 1,500 customers, said Ryan.

"The students are generally well-behaved," Ryan said. "There have never been any fights or any trouble" within the bar, he added.

"We've done everything we can ... but we can't control what happens on the outside," said Ryan. When about 150 patrons leave at closing time, people should expect some noise, he said.

"Since 1985, when we opened here, we've tried to develop a relationship with the students that this is a fun place to go," said Ryan.

Alumni Medallion award dinner honors outstanding graduates

By TIFFANY CHRISTENSEN
Staff Reporter

The 13th annual Alumni Medallion award dinner was held in Connelly Center Nov. 13. At the dinner, which was sponsored by the Villanova Alumni Association and the College of Arts and Sciences, medallions were presented to six alumni who have demonstrated excellence in their chosen fields.

Recipients included: Philomena McAndrew, '74, assistant clinical professor of medicine at the University of California; Rocco Barbieri, '59, president of General Felt Industries; Donald Kempf Jr., '59, a partner with Kirkland & Ellis law firm; Jerome Canady, '76, founder of the Canady Clinic; Francis Bonner, 58, president of the governmental consultants and lobbyists group Bonner Associates; and Richard Faulk, '59, U.S. Consul General, Pakistan. These alumni earned Villanova degrees in various disciplines including biology, education, mathematics, history, economics and political science.

"It was a very nice affair ... the recipients were really happy with it," said Donald Leatherbarrow, acting director of the Alumni Association.

Over 150 people attended the awards dinner, including many friends and family members of medallion recipients and other Villanova alumni.

Before the presentation of the awards, the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., University president, commended the alumni for their achievements and welcomed them back to the University for the Sesquicentennial Homecoming celebration. Other speakers included Kevin Reilly, president of the Alumni Association, and the Rev. Kail Ellis, dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences. Entertainment was provided by the University Singers and the Women's Glee Club.

The event was a success in "honoring graduates of the Arts and Sciences college that have really been remarkable in their fields of expertise," said Leatherbarrow.

Dr. Gershon Shafir, professor of the University of California, discusses the Palestinian-Israeli conflict.

Palestinian-Israeli conflict focus of campus discussion

By KATHLEEN COONEY
Assistant News Editor

The Center for Arab and Islamic Studies and the history department sponsored a lecture concerning the Palestinian-Israeli conflict Nov. 12 in the St. Augustine Center for the Liberal Arts. A question and answer session followed the lecture.

Guest lecturer Gershon Shafir, professor of social history at the University of California, spoke about his new book, Struggle Over Land and Labor: Origins of the Palestinian-Israeli Conflict.

Shafir attended Tel Aviv University, where he studied economics and political science. He received his master's and his doctorate from the University of California at Berkley. Shafir also taught at Tel Aviv University before teaching at the University of California.

Shafir sought to answer three specific questions throughout his lecture. First, he asked what general problems were involved in the formation of the Palestinian society. He then attempted to explain this phenomenon by examining the formation of Israeli society as an internal affair, rather than an external affair.

To the immigrants, the idea of the land and labor market was less important than the consequences or their conditions, said Shafir.

Shafir explained how the second wave of immigrants tried to create a new Palestinian society. The regions that make up Palestine were part of an empire during the period of World War I. He said there were six stages of this immigration or two groups of three.

The first stage of immigration lasted from 1882 to 1903, when approximately 40,000 immigrants entered the Palestinian region, said Shafir. There goal was to create a pure settlement colony composed of farmers, Shafir said.

Then the second wave entered Palestine between 1904, and 1914, and the settlements were transformed into ethnic colonies, Shafir said. The second wave tried to copy the model of French plantations in Nigeria where they used the ethnic plantation system, added Shafir. In the ethnic plantation system, Arabs were employed so there was little opportunity for Jews.

The third through sixth stage began to blend together, said Shafir. During the third stage, the French's assistance was terminated and the plantations were transformed, Shafir said. The focus moved from the land to the labor market, added Shafir. The Jewish immigrants entered the labor market and attempted to lower the wages in the fourth stage, he added.

In 1905, the fifth stage began when a group of Jewish workers struggled for conquest of the labor market, said Shafir. They sought to monopolize all manual labor, but they had only limited success, Shafir said. The Jews also attempted to establish a homogenous Jewish society and in 1909, under the influence of the Germans, they began the work of colonization in Palestine, added Shafir. Lastly, in the sixth stage, the Jews tried to produce the Prussian government's method of colonization.

Lecturer discusses Indian theology

By JOSEPH SOLE
Staff Reporter

Native American expert Vera Palmer delivered a lecture entitled "Traditional Christian Views in Native American Theology" in Bartley Hall Nov. 16.

Palmer began the lecture by emphasizing that Native American tribes in the United States are culturally, ethically and morally diverse. Because such diversity exists within Native American tribes, Palmer said she did not speak for one specific tribe.

Indians and their culture are virtually unknown to the average American, said Palmer. In the religious sense, the "divine sacrifice is the main reason why the dominant culture misinterprets Native American religious views," said Palmer, adding that divine sacrifice differs from traditional Christian views in vital ways.

One differing aspect of Native American theology is the intricate bond between man and nature, said Palmer. "Indians view man and land as one entity," Palmer said. This view permeates the Indian view of Christianity; all objects that exist, human or non-human, are important to an Indian's life, said Palmer.

The meaning of "other" for the Native American is defined as a "spirit," added Palmer.

The Native American view of sacrifice also differs from the traditional Christian view, Palmer said. Sacrifice to a Native American is a reciprocal process. A sacrifice can be offered, but not without the guarantee that something will be given back in return, added Palmer.

"Power is even between giver and receiver. Life exists on content, not entitlement," said Palmer. This view differs from the traditional view in that the giver is not submitting to a superior power, added Palmer. Palmer also stressed the importance of eliminating ignorance toward the fascinating culture of American Indians.

Palmer is in the master's program at Bryn Mawr College and is a member of the Iroquois Federation.

Blue Key Society recruits members

By JENNIFER TRZASKA
Staff Reporter

The first two weeks of November marked the beginning of the selection process for new members of the University's Blue Key Society. The organization, headed by President Dana Graskin, consists of approximately 85 students who serve Villanova in many areas of campus life.

The Blue Key Society is involved with the Admissions Office through conducting campus tours, high school recruitment, information sessions and phone-a-thons for perspective students, said Laura Savino, a member for the past four years.

The members try to "give others a positive impression of our school through its activities," Savino added.

The Blue Key Society is active with important events such as Alumni and Parents' weekends. Members can be found at Masses on Sundays, collecting and distributing tickets and working at various functions during these events, said Savino.

Admittance to the society is very competitive. This year, approximately 280 students sought membership to the Society. After completing a written application consisting of six questions, applicants attend a short interview conducted by two members of the organization. Selected students advance to a longer, second round interview and a final decision is made after the completion of that process.

Through this procedure, the Blue Key Society tries to find members who are role models for the Villanova community who are marked by responsibility, dedication and enthusiasm, said Savino.

Senior Tricia Adolf said that confidence and being able to handle oneself in difficult situations is of great importance. Members get as much out of the Blue Key Society as the time and effort they put into it.

"Blue Key has given me many opportunities to meet new people and share my experiences at Villanova with others," said Savino.

Sesquicentennial Minutes

REV. DENNIS J. GALLAGHER, O.S.A., Ph.D.

STUDENT LIFE

The rhythms of student life at Villanova have shifted greatly over the years. In the early decades students enjoyed very little free time. When they were not taking meals and attending classes, they were required to be in the study hall or their rooms with only brief periods to walk, play on the grounds or exercise in the small gymnasium. Daily prayers and Sunday Masses were also compulsory. In 1870, the college organized debating and dramatic societies, in addition to a coronet band with eight members.

Social life at Villanova changed greatly after World War I. The first student dance on campus, a Thanksgiving dance, was held Nov. 28, 1918, and sponsored by the Student Army Training Corps. Beginning in 1920, many dances took place in the new Alumni Hall gymnasium, while more elaborate balls migrated to one of the hotels in downtown Philadelphia. After the opening of the Villanova Field House in 1932, virtually all dances took place there. The most important of these was the Belle Air Ball, first hosted by the senior class in 1922, a winter social event that would endure at Villanova for more than four decades.

For this and other lavish affairs the college brought in one of the big name bands of the period. Among those who performed on campus were Ozzie Nelson (1933), Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey (1935), Isham Jones (1935), Glen Gray (1936), Jan Garber (1936) and Les Brown (1942).

Another long lasting social tradition, known as Junior Week, began in 1924. Taking place during the second week in May, members of the junior class received their college blazers and walking canes for the first time. The week's events came to a climax with the annual blazer ball, to which juniors wore their blue blazers and white duck trousers in honor of the college colors of blue and white. In 1934, another Villanova tradition, Mother's Day, was added to Junior Week, as mothers were invited to visit the campus on the Monday after Mother's Day.

In the decades just after World War II, campus dances were organized around particular themes. In 1951, the juniors adopted a Parisian motif for their prom, complete with a 30-foot Eiffel Tower rising from the Field House floor. The following year the seniors chose the popular musical, On the Town, for their theme and constructed an 80-foot model of the Brooklyn Bridge as the centerpiece of their decorations.

As part of the counterculture of the 1960s, students rejected organized dances and many other aspects of organized social life at Villanova. In place of balls and proms, students now preferred performances by popular musical groups. In 1965, Villanova hosted Peter, Paul and Mary, and in 1967, Simon and Garfunkel came to campus. The rock concerts of recent decades are a continuation of this trend in student social life.

A formal dance held April 1, 1932, celebrated the opening of the newly constructed Field House.

Public Safety releases Oct. crime report

By MELISSA LEE
Staff Reporter

The University's Department of Public Safety has released its crime report for the month of October. During the month there were two simple assaults, both with clearances, which are arrests or referrals to the judicial affairs panel for further prosecution, said Public Safety Investigator James Conway.

Two burglaries committed had no clearances, and of 12 thefts committed, only one received a clearance. During this time two Villanova employees were arrested by the Radnor Police for stealing from Donahue Hall. Both were then discharged from their duties at the University.

Eleven acts of vandalism took place on campus, resulting in two clearances. There were two liquor violations, one resulting in an arrest by the Radnor Police. There was also one case of public drunkenness.

Six other crimes were committed, among them traffic violations, a citation for a false operator's license, and solicitation, for which there was an arrest.

In accordance with a newly passed law, Public Safety officials must disclose their crime statistics. "It is part of our job at Public Safety to keep the public informed, by means of the Freedom of Information Act," said Conway.

Interest in B-ball ticket lottery drops

By LAUREN WURST
Staff Reporter

In order to purchase basketball tickets for this season, students must go through a lottery system. Students fill out an information form, write out a check for $115 and return all paper work including a self-addressed, stamped envelope to the ticket office in Jake Nevin Field House. If students want to join the Wildcat Basketball Club, an additional $20 is required.

Each application is entered into the computer according to an individual's class, "a process that takes an incredible amount of time," said Lee Donar, ticket manager. The computer then randomly selects who will receive season tickets.

Each class is treated equally. "However, this year is a little slower," added Donar. "Everyone who applied will get tickets," he added.

There were 1,744 sets of tickets available to students, which includes 13 games to be played at duPont Pavillon and four Spectrum games. Because things were a little slower this year, a split ticket package was not offered, said Donar.

The notices were sent out to students on Nov. 13 by means of the applicant's self-addressed, stamped envelope.

The original application deadline was scheduled for Nov. 2. The deadline was extended one week because the application advertisement did not appear in the Oct. 30 edition of the Villanovan.

Weekend assessed

This year's Homecoming was typical of Homecoming Weekends of recent years past, said Stack.

"A number of alcohol overdoses as a result of pre-Homecoming partying led to the hospitalization of numerous students," said Horton. "One student was put into intensive care as a result of overconsumption of alcohol," added Horton.

"The ground floor bathrooms of Sullivan Hall were trashed during the weekend, even though the number of outdoor bathrooms was tripled this year," said Stack. Also, a St. Mary Hall security card reader was damaged during the weekend, said Horton. Whether this card reader was damaged as a result of Homecoming Weekend, however, is not known, said Stack.

"For the majority of people in attendance, Homecoming Weekend was a good time," said Horton. "Unfortunately, certain incidents have marred this year's Homecoming," added Horton.

"What starts out as a good-natured reunion of friends turns into a large, uncontrollable party. Inevitably, a mess over and above the physical trash occurs," added Stack.

"When you consider the number of people [present] and alcohol consumed, these incidents are expected to happen," added Horton. "The amount of alcohol consumed was absurd," said Stack, adding that "underage drinking among undergraduates was another problem. The longer the day goes on and the more alcohol that is consumed, the less and less respect there is for people and their property. People not only begin to feel uncomfortable, but unsafe as well," said Stack.

"A Homecoming committee is working to make changes in the Homecoming celebration for future years in the hopes of improving the weekend," said Horton.

Professor writes text about peace and justice education

By ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWSKI
News Editor

The Rev. Owen Jackson, O.S.A., has authored a new book on peace and justice education titled, Dignity and Solidarity: An Introduction to Peace and Justice Education. "I was teaching a course on peace and justice and realized that there was nothing out there that would provide a good introduction to Peace and Justice Education for students," said Jackson.

The book was written for two reasons, said Jackson. It provides students with a compilation of all the notes on peace and justice education which Jackson has been collecting over the last 10 years in one place, Jackson said. Also, the book is designed to help other instructors to teach peace and justice education courses since it is a relatively new field in education, added Jackson.

The book was written over the course of five summers, from the summer of 1985, until the summer of 1989, said Jackson. By 1989, portions of the book were sent out to various publishing companies, he said.

"I received a lot of rejections at first. Many companies told me that the book was too big or that 'social justice was not a hot topic,' " Jackson said. "Some told me that their publishing house did not do textbooks or Catholic stuff. No one told me that the book wasn't good," he added.

In July 1990, Loyola University Press sent a letter to Jackson requesting that he send them a final version of the manuscript. The completed book was sent out in September of 1990, only to be sent back with the request that further editing be done, said Jackson. Further revisions were made and the book was then published in 1991, added Jackson.

The book is broken down into four main sections under the following headings: "Inclusion," "Perception," "Values" and "Influence," said Jackson.

Each section is designed to answer a specific question, said Jackson. For example, the section titled "Inclusion" seeks to answer the question "Who is included in your world?" This section is designed to help the student get a broader view of the world and the differences within a pluralistic community, Jackson said.

The second section of the book, "Perception," is devoted to answering the question, "What is going on in the world?" and focuses on major social problems such as sexism, racism, militarism, poverty and hunger, said Jackson.

The third section of the book, "Values," is the "heart of the book," said Jackson. This portion of the book encourages students to examine their own value system, he added. "Show me your checkbook and your calendar and I'll tell you what kind of person you are. Where do you spend your money and where do you spend your time?" Jackson said.

The final segment of the book, titled "Influence," will hopefully have students asking, "What can I do? How can I change things?" said Jackson. "Many courses start here, but I think you need to go through the whole process to get here," added Jackson.

Jackson will appear at Borders Book Store in Rosemont on Nov. 24 at 7:30 p.m. to read selected passages from the book.

priorities to consider when determining tuition rates include maintaining the quality of academic programs, paying attention to inflation in the national economy and comparing rates at competitive institutions. "To attract diverse individuals and retain those who are on fiscally tenuous ground, it is of great importance to keep tuitions at levels as close to the rate of inflation as possible," according to the report.

Another operational priority categorized as highest includes continuing "to increase resources allocated for student financial aid based on financial need, academic merit and meeting goals of diversity," according to the report.

The Committee has also listed as a highest operational priority insured "funding to enhance the geographic diversity and minority recruitment of the student body, the faculty and staff [and] availability of support services for those with special needs," according to the report. "To enhance Villanova's reputation nationally and to increase the degree of cultural and social interaction available on campus, significant strides in these areas must still be made … ," according to the report.

Operational priorities listed as high include the continued development of "security campus-wide with special attention to residence halls," according to the report. Another high operational priority includes the replacement of "obsolete computing and related equipment at the rate of 20 percent of holdings per year," according to the report. The Committee also lists as a high operational priority the expansion of "the campus Wildcard system to include access to vending and laundry machines."

The highest capital, short term (1-3 years) priorities include planning the renovation of the areas vacated by relocations to the St. Augustine Center for the Liberal Arts and increasing "the number of available classrooms and diversity in classroom size," according to the report.

Other short term priorities include the design and construction of a pedestrian crossing at the Lancaster/Ithan intersection and of residence facilities on west campus, including a provision for crossing at Route 320, according to the report.

Another short term priority includes "planning and implementing significant upgrading of telecommunications," according to the report. "Improving connectivity throughout campus to include funding for telephones and computer access from dormitory rooms [and the] extension and integration of the voice, video and data communications network throughout campus" are listed as potential upgrades, according to the report.

High short term capital priorities include the "continued implementation of environmental safety measures, development of requirements for renovation of and addition to Mendel Hall and development of plans for renovation of and an addition to Bartley Hall," according to the report.

High long term (4-10 years) capital priorities include the "investigation, planning and development of additional parking facilities, development of a feasibility study for a health-care facility, exploration of the feasibility of a Performing Arts facility and renovation for food service operations," according to the report.

Following the presentation of Council chairperson will present the results of the Faculty Affairs Committee's findings regarding the Outstanding Service Award. The Outstanding Service Award is "to be presented annually to a faculty member in recognition of his or her exceptional contributions to the University," according to a University Senate memo.

Alcohol search policy irks student leaders

By College Press Service

A videotape made by a student government task force shows that Jacksonville State University students are searched at football games for alcohol and weapons, but most alumni, faculty and parents are not.

David Nichols, director of public safety, said the screening policy at student entrances is a safety mechanism to prevent weapons and alcohol from being carried into the Paul Snow Stadium.

However, video footage of searches at a recent football game showed that regulations were strictly enforced by University Police officers at the two student entrances, while other entrances used by alumni, faculty, staff and parents, were watched carelessly, if at all.

"My main concern is that students are being discriminated against," Student Government Association President Sam Witherspoon said. "If they're going to do it, they need to do all the gates or they don't need to search any of them. Students are being targeted directly."

A student government task force gathered photographs and video footage to illustrate the problem and presented the evidence at a student Senate meeting.

> My main concern is that students are being discriminated against … Students are being targeted directly.
> Sam Witherspoon, Student Government Association president

Senators were outraged at the video, which showed students being screened carefully while non-students entered at other gates carrying cups, coolers and grocery bags.

The Senate took advantage of Homecoming Week activities, urging students and organizations to place the motto "All or None" on their cars, floats and displays.

The SGA also approved a resolution that affirms its support for screenings, but calls for them to be conducted at every entrance to the stadium, with "every person entering the stadium being screened in a consistent and legal manner."

President Harold McGee contends that random screenings are conducted at all gates, but the task force disagreed.

"It's enforced only on students," said SGA Vice President Toby Schwartz.

The public safety director said he would like to screen all gates equally, but University Police does not have enough officers.

Students speculate that the other gates are not being screened because the university does not want to offend alumni.

School Nixes Trek' Building

MONTREAL — A McGill University senate advisory group has quashed a student initiative to officially name the student center after "Star Trek's" William Shatner.

Last spring, students voted to name the building after the actor who played Capt. James T. Kirk of the USS Enterprise. Shatner studied commerce at McGill in the 1950s.

Derek Drummond, director of McGill's school of architecture and a member of the advisory committee, said the group could only name buildings after people who have given the university a lot of money, or contributed to the school in some other way and are dead.

"William Shatner's problem is that he breathes," Drummond said in the Oct. 30 issue of Canadian University Press.

Alex Usher, a coordinator of the attempt to get the building's name changed, said he was "disappointed, but not exactly surprised," considering the difficulties of naming a building after a living person.

"I suppose I can understand the dead part," he said. "Otherwise the person might go on to do something really weird."

Usher said students intend to call the building the Shatner Building, regardless of the university's decision. McGill students voted by a margin of 51 percent to change the name of the building in a referendum that prompted the largest voter turnout in 15 years.

Bush's Next Job: Yale President?

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — George Bush, U.S. president, Republican, Yale '48, will be out of work on Jan. 20, 1993.

Conversely, Yale University is conducting a massive search for a new president. A match made in heaven?

"It is only rumor," said Yale spokeswoman Martha Matzke.

A 10-person search committee is looking for a replacement for former Yale President Benno C. Schmidt Jr. About 300 names have been sent to the committee, and Matzke said it could be possible that Bush's name is on the list. However, the members are working under strict confidentiality, so whether or not Bush is on the list and is a serious contender is not known.

Another Yale alum mentioned? President-elect Bill Clinton, law, class of 1973. He, however, has a new job.

Student Makes 10,000 Phone Calls

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — A spurned college student in Austria has admitted making more than 10,000 harassing telephone calls totaling $30,000 to Harvard University students.

The Austrian student, who would dial the Harvard prefix and then random four-digit numbers, called an average of 10 students a day over the past three years, and sometimes would threaten to kill women who answered the phone.

He was finally identified when a female student told Harvard police she suspected the caller might be a student she met in 1989.

Officials doubt that legal action can be taken because of international red tape. Detectives located the caller in Austria and recommended to his family that he receive therapy for his behavior.

Parking policy

should be a one-time registration, valid at any time of the day during the year of issue. We seek this change primarily in the interest of student services and needs," the proposal states.

According to the proposal, Student Government suggests this be implemented by a repealing of the rule and an end to ticketing of cars with valid permits between these hours.

A second change in University parking policy being sought by Student Government is one that would allow students to utilize parking spaces in the new St. Augustine Center for the Liberal Arts parking garage between the hours of 6 p.m. and 7 a.m. Currently, this parking structure is reserved for use by faculty and administrators with special permits only.

Student Government sees one justification for this change as an increase in student safety. "Students studying on campus between these hours will no longer have to walk from Main Lot to their destination. By parking at a central campus location such as this, it will be much safer for students to enter and leave campus during these hours," reads an excerpt from the proposal.

Another main justification for this change is that the opening of the parking garage will give students easier access to University facilities.

Student Government is suggesting that "students enter campus through the North Gate and proceed to enter the garage through the main entrance. The entrance to the garage behind the library should be blocked off. This would allow for easier control of who enters campus. A disadvantage is that once a car passes the date, there is no way of knowing where the car ends up. Posting someone at the entrance of the garage is probably not feasible."

A suggested alternative to this plan would have students entering the garage through the entrance behind the library. At the same time, the other point of entry onto the campus would be blocked off. This would allow vehicles access to the garage and lots behind Mendel and the library, but not access to the campus.

The proposed changes, justifications for said changes and suggestions for their implementation will be presented to the Parking Appeals Committee at their next meeting, said Batchelor.

Homily hits Homecoming hard

This being the first official editorial of the 1992-1993 editorial board, we had hoped to fill this space with evidence of strong convictions and opinions entirely our own. But a message came to our attention much more effective than any other idea we would pass on.

At the 10 p.m. Mass last Sunday, the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., presented his homily to a crowd of Villanovans coming down from the elation of Homecoming Weekend. He hoped to kindle some interest about the events of Hunger Awareness Week.

Stack opened with a sobering, but familiar statistic: Every day, 60,000 human beings die from causes related to lack of nourishment. The congregation greeted this statement with concern.

Then Stack described the unfortunate incidents that were byproducts of this year's Homecoming. Following the unhappy tradition of many past years, the tailgating grounds were destroyed. A recent graduate was struck by a hit-and-run driver. Many random fights broke out, one even injuring an innocent older woman. Untold numbers of revelers became sick from the amount of alcohol they consumed. Some were rushed to the hospital.

In light of these occurrences, Stack announced, the Administration had decided to make this year's Homecoming Villanova's last. The congregation greeted this statement with stunned disbelief.

After the shock had subsided, Stack asked everyone to gauge the difference of the two reactions. Villanova is not yet ready to ban Homecoming Weekend, but it took that threat to force a reexamination of what starvation really means.

What is yet another lost weekend compared to the loss of life that occurs every day? If you did not get involved in Hunger Awareness events this week, do not wait for next year to question your priorities. Get involved today.

Editors embark upon term inspiredby past

This issue of the Villanovan marks the first edition of the 1992-93 editorial board. As we begin our year-long journey, it is only fitting that we look back at the most important reason that this newspaper exists. You.

The Villanovan has lived through many wars in its 68 years of publication, including the United States' most recent campaign in the Persian Gulf. During those tense months, the Villanovan explored political, moral and social implications of the war. The newspaper served as an important outlet for students and faculty members to voice their opinions on the validity of waging war.

The newspaper has also refereed many wars within the University, such as the continued debates about abortion and multiculturalism. Student groups such as the College Republicans and the Democratic Socialists of America are some of the many campus organizations that have turned to the Villanovan when they wanted to express their views on a subject. Most recently, the editorial pages were filled with opinions from the University community supporting their favorite candidates and bashing the others.

The Villanovan is proud to be such an outlet for the many voices in the Villanova community. We hope to continue the strong tradition that has been established before us and make the Villanovan an even stronger voice in the year to come.

Homecoming should evoke pride

To the Editor:

Homecoming Weekend is a time for the entire University community to come together and share in a common bond. It is the one weekend out of the year when alumni are reunited with past classmates, and are given the opportunity to meet the current generation of students. The events of this past weekend has caused me to write this letter.

Through my position in Student Government I am in touch with many active alumni and administrators. Some of these alumni and administrators approached me during homecoming and after, about their disappointments with the behavior of the student body. A few of the problems that happened during the day seemed to involve more of the undergraduates than alumni.

I do not wish to make some of the incidents that occurred during the day seem bigger than they were, but I do believe that these incidents need to be addressed. Those students who were involved in fights and rude behavior are giving the rest of the student body a bad name. The students involved in the isolated incidents do not realize that their actions are perceived to be the actions of the student body.

Students need to realize that it is these few incidents that stick out in the minds of the administration and only initiates more rules on the part of the University for next year. It is a shame to think that the few problems of the day could begin to outweigh the overall positive effect and good time which Homecoming is all about. Changes need to happen concerning Homecoming, though these changes need to come from both the students and the University.

Last year the University was unhappy when a Student Activities van was practically destroyed during a Homecoming celebration. This year, I kept hearing that changes were going to be made in order to prevent similar problems. It seems that the only noticeable change was the closing of lower Bartley for tailgating purposes. This action I believe helped to instigate some of the problems that occurred, since the area within duPont was dangerously crowded.

It seems that the University forgets that Homecoming is a day that undergraduates are involved in, as well as alumni. Student leaders were not invited to be a part of the planning for this year's Homecoming. Maybe if the presence of the undergraduates during Homecoming is acknowledged, together we can work to reduce the amount of problems that occur. I would hate to see the University create more rules, like the closing of Bartley lot, without consulting student leaders.

The administration needs to work with the students and not just lay down more rules that will create more problems in the end. On the other hand, the students involved in the problems on Saturday have to learn that Homecoming is not just for them, but rather a time to welcome back the alumni and support our football team.

As an advisor to the consumer club, I enjoyed reading the story on "Merchant target of complaints" by Kate Szumanski in the Nov. 13 edition of the Villanovan. Our club is always ready to help students with any consumer grievances by contacting our president, Jason Kokoszka '93.

Since one of the mistreated students, Lauren Peduzzi, happens to be one of my students in my Principle of Marketing class, I was delighted to see her make good use of one of the major concepts of marketing, namely, the Marketing Concept. Unhappy student explains why he's leaving town

By THOM ARNO

Three years ago, a deceptive little treat arrived in my mailbox. The Villanova student viewbook, with its glossy cover depicting a serene religious background, was sent to my home with the enticing words: "We're interested in you . . ."

"Villanova? They won it all back in '86 and their coach does Rolaids commercials, right?" When I spoke to more athletic friends, they couldn't believe I hadn't heard of Villanova's 1985 NCAA Championship under Rollie Massimino. There seemed to be a mysterious mob sheen over the school, so I decided to investigate.

The book was nice enough, sundry-blood-oath testimonials from the varied student population dictating how much a Villanova education would do for "you." There were pictures of good Christian girls in argyle sweaters and unholy (if you get my meaning) jeans, and boy-next-door types. Pretty typical, but not bad. Who'd have known a little less than two years later I'd be in the back of a Ford Astro on my way down to the 'burbs of Philadelphia?

Freshman year I felt relatively confident. I was a safe, non-confrontational liberal away from home. I thought at such a "conservative" school I'd get into some interesting discussions in class. There'd be lost weekends in Philly . . . all that. But this viewbook-fed illusion was demolished. My hopes were dejected by the close of year one. But I was reassured, partly from Villanova literature, that I was not alone; that these feelings are not uncommon for college freshmen.

This summer I made up my mind to transfer to the University of New Hampshire. However, before making this important decision, I promised to give Villanova a second glance; at least another semester. This is where I am now. I have about 3-4 weeks of school left and then it's time for something new. Without sounding like another art-loser perspective on why 'Nova blows, these are the reasons for my decision.

I feel isolated here. However, I don't believe this is primarily the fault of the students. There is a definite sense of commonality here (and I'm not simply speaking aesthetically). The statistics don't lie. It's a white, upper-middle class, Catholic school. Most of the students are from the New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania area. Is this their fault? No. If students are so "lucky" to get admitted here, why not attend?

One thing that must be addressed is the age-old problem of student apathy. This was one of my ultimate concerns with the school. As I said, I don't have problems with conservativism; I'd much rather converse with people of different political affiliations then have an empty quasi-philosophical rag session with another liberal. However, to call 'Nova a conservative shcool is too much of a credit. That implies that the majority of the campus has an opinion. At least on something.

This leads directly to the problem of class segregation, which may be attributed to people who aren't willing to break out of their middle-class molds. Frat boys, Tri-Delts, art freaks, granolas, stoners, those three kids who look like the Beastie Boys (they hang out in the Connelly Center smoker's lounge, you've seen them). This simply must end. That's why there's no association on campus. There is, of course, the main clique, the Greek scene. While I personally have my problems with fraternities and sororities, it would be inexcusable for me to ask for the school to change itself for my needs. This would perpetuate the problem. However, if two out of every three students go Greek, the system has to recognize itself as the forbearer of student activity. It should ultimately be up to the Greeks to dismantle "Heathers"-ish cliques and other means of student isolation. The question of whether this will happen, sadly, may be rhetorical. That's why I feel it necessary to depart.

And my aspirations as a history major have faded into a laughable joke of what should have been. However, to be fair, the problem lies more in the lack of variety of classes than the instructors themselves. Possibly, if I were majoring in business or mechanical engineering, I'd suffer through the remaining two and a half years. Then again, maybe not, for even in these salary-oriented fields, the whole "M.B.A.=B.M.W." jargon may be another myth. Ironically, the University does not do too much to downplay this belief. Yes, the Villanova name does carry clout, but it doesn't mean much if there isn't a job where you can hang that degree.

Notice how the ridiculous cost for attending this school is not even a reason for my transfer. But, this school is not worth the thousands of dollars we must shell out to attend. It's not that I can't afford the bill, it's simply that I can't justify it. A final theory concerning the cost: it really must not drain the wealthier families' pockets who send their kids here. However, if you were paying a majority of your tuition out of your own pocket wouldn't you feel more of an urge to participate and utilize everything you're paying for? If your family had a "Don't-worry-about-it" philosophy, why would you care about anything outside of your social life and your degree? Mull over it while you're here. I'll be doing it somewhere else.

Environmental abuse jeopardizes future

By DANNE W. POLK

This commentary replies to the arguments that appeared in Philip DeCicco's commentary, "Where are so-called environmental jobs?" — the Villanovan dated Oct. 9, 1992. DeCicco's commentary responded to ideas upheld by Megan O'Donnell.

Guess what? I do not think you understand that the efforts to create a five-state 22.7 million acre greenline zone in the Northeast is an attempt to extend the future. The efforts to save this land, once held sacred by the American Indians (you speak so highly of), is an attempt to stop the same kind of liquidation tactics used by the Maxxam corporation in their hostile take over of privately-owned Coastal Redwoods in Northern California, forests which were once the homeland of American Indians who were themselves liquidated because they were in the way of employments and huge profits.

Now, there are less than five percent of ancient Redwoods left standing. And where are they? They are in reserves, made possible by groups of concerned citizens who could see further into the future than those who could think of nothing more than immediate needs.

There is something about the notion of the integrity of the ancient forests which we Westerners have difficulty understanding. The inability, I believe, is due to the deeply embedded human-nature antagonism we inherit from Modernism. For myself, it was a Native American teacher who helped me gain some meager understanding that genuine interrelatedness with the natural environment proves the concept of private property to be a form of slavery, and that logging and culturecide go hand in hand. Upon coming to this insight, I began to consider other meanings a living forest might have.

It is good that you bring up the New England forests. For example, the forests of New Hampshire's White Mountains were completely devastated a century ago. For years, the skies were continually black from slash and burns. And now the White Mountain forests are back, not as they were originally, of course. The diversity of the region is not as extensive, the indigenous people have been removed, many of the wild species were driven to extinction, and the entire forest is a single age. But now the trees are again large enough for 'harvesting,' and the forests are expansive enough for developers to begin thinking of profits again.

And while in recent years Northwestern forests have experienced intensive abuse, in comparison, the New England forests have been left relatively alone. And now that the Northwestern forests are practically exhausted, it is merely a matter of time before developers turn their sights on New England. I fear for such a wonderful place.

Currently only a little more than 1 million acres of New England's 33.5 million acres is public land. More than 80 percent of Maine is privately owned commerical forest. If what has taken place in Northern California is any indication of what could happen in New England, millions of acres of these revitalized forests could be lost, and the integrity of a once devastated environment again defiled.

We have reason for concern, since 10,000 miles of logging roads have been carved into Maine's back country since 1974. The stage is being set. I have the same despair that Thoreau wrote about when he visited the Maine Woods in the middle of the last century: we have no understanding of these woods. The people who have control of the land seem to relate to the forests only in utilitarian ways.

It is fairly easy to see that 'business as usual' in the timber industry does not promote sustainable employment. As we come to the brink of eco-disaster (and if you deny this, you need to take history more seriously) there will be lots of traditional ways of doing things, ways of believing, ways of living 'from the land' that will just have to stop. Saving 22.7 million acres of New england 'wilderness' seems very sane to me. It might go against the old Yankee idea of independence, but interdependence is a broader concept, a concept which the history of ecology has produced.

I applaud your concern for your friends. Unemployment is a sad and disturbing situation. But if business goes on as usual, how long will it be before the whole human race becomes 'unemployed?'

If we take the World Watch Report (1992) seriously, if things do not change, if history fails to move in another direction, our children will not even have a world where forest products make any difference or have any meaning. It is not a matter of promising environmentally sound jobs, it is a matter of demanding and creating them. I believe the other alternative merely hastens a more long-term cultural disaster.

Student says, "Or should I go home and watch TV ?"

By PETE SHAUGER

It was a pretty big dilemma there for a while — should I go to Homecoming and pretend to have a good time in the cold weather for over five hours, or should I go home and watch television for over five hours. In the end I based my decision on the flip of a coin. I figured that Abe (Abe Lincoln, that is) had never steered me wrong before, and he would never intentionally let me do anything I'd regret. Unfortunately, I don't think they had television in Abe's day; therefore he probably wasn't aware of what might happen to me if I was removed from the general vicinity of a television for an extended period of time. Also, he probably didn't read my book "The Comparative Dynamics of Television and the Simple Mind: The Pete Shauger Saga," which would definitely have prevented me from attending Homecoming. However, Abe's ignorance in the matter, for which I am not holding him responsible sent me to Saturday's festivities.

On Sunday, I sat down in front of the television, stared deeply into its all-powerful screen and reflected on what I had done the day before and what I should have done.

By attending the festivities, I was able to watch some really wacky, side-splitting, knee-slapping mud wrestling. My alternative: going home and watching G.L.O.W. (Glorious Ladies of Wrestling) on television.

By attending the festivities, I was able to hobnob and rub elbows with thousands of people that I didn't know or care about. My alternative: going home and rubbing elbows with my dear sister until successfully knocking her off the couch and onto the floor, securing a blanket around my tootsies (my feet) and watching television.

By attending the festivities, I was able to walk up to any fence I could find and wave as passing cars honked at me while I relieved myself in the cold, cold wind. This was my attempt at dispelling the myth that Villanova is a dry campus. My alternative: flipping through pages of Car and Driver while enjoying private commercial breaks in the bathroom.

By attending the festivities, I was able to see old friends as well as new friends. However, many of them barely remembered me, let along the fact that I attended Villanova with them. My alternative: pressing the mute button on the, yes you guessed it, television, while taking the time to talk to friends on the phone who do remember me, or at least the general concept of me.

By attending the festivities, I was able to watch rowdy alumni attempt to relive a part of their past which, I'm sorry to inform them, they can never regain. My alternative: going home and playing a rowdy game of "Who's got THE CLICKER." Unfortunately, my dad, who is usually asleep before the game begins, is usually sitting on "The Clicker" ("The Clicker" is the Shauger term for the Remote Control.) The once lighthearted game turns into a gruesome and unspeakable game of chance called "Who's Gonna Get THE CLICKER Out from Underneath Dad." (Warning: Both of these games are trademarks of the Shauger family and should not be played without the proper safety gear. Also, "The Clicker" is not available in stores, does not grow on trees and is definitely not a toy.)

By attending the festivities, I was able to watch grown men turn what started out to be mild mannered barbecues into the Battle of Bunker Grill. My alternative: from my comfortable perch I could have watched my dad do the same thing in our back yard. As it turns out, my dad just sat inside and watched television. But he tells me that if I had come home, we could have watched a wide variety of fascinating cooking shows on public television.

The more I thought about it, the more depressed I got that I didn't choose to stay home and watch television. I mean, you don't really appreciate what you have until you've lost it. Uncountable hours of television were lost, wasted, flushed down the toilet, frittered away, shot to h-e-double hockey stick, all because of a misguided flip of the coin.

But I must somehow come to grips with the choice I made on Nov. 14. I must learn from this mistake and then move on.

Oh yeah, I forgot to tell you the moral. Actually there are two — choose the one that best suits your needs: 1. Never let a coin decide your fate, even if the figure on the coin seems to be a wise person. 2. If the choice comes down to television and something else, choose television (unless it's a date, then try to incorporate television into the date.)

Blaming Columbus negates modern ills

By MAUREEN MEYER

In this year of the 500th anniversary of the voyage of Columbus to the New World, there has been much talk of the exploitation of the Native American peoples of both North and South America. It has been asserted that perhaps we should not so unquestioningly honor and esteem Christopher Columbus as an admirable adventurer and explorer. After all, he invaded the Americas and claimed them as European territory, completely disregarding the many people who had homes there and whose ancestors had occupied the land for ages. He paved the way for others in the future who would come and ravage the two continents, destroying the precious tribal homelands of the indigenous peoples.

However, Columbus was only one man. He is not and cannot be responsible for the 500 years of oppression of the Native American that have followed his arrival onto this part of the globe. We have to look within ourselves to find who is really to blame for this subjugation.

In claiming that blame must be placed on Columbus for all of the exploitation, we attempt to purge ourselves of guilt. But we, like our own predecessors, are certainly not guilt-free. It is certain that, had it been someone other than Columbus discovering the New World, the oppression would have proceeded unchanged along the very same course that it followed in actuality. The burden of this suppression lies squarely on our own shoulders, not on those of some long-dead explorer. We are just as culpable as Columbus and his fellow explorers were, if not more so. We are the ones who continue the victimization even today, with complete knowledge of what we are doing.

This is not to say that Columbus had no knowledge of what he was doing; I could not comment on that one way or another. Rather it is to suggest that we should not blame another when we ourselves are equally guilty. Only when we stop the racism and the discrimination and treat all Native Americans with the dignity and respect they deserve as fellow citizens and human beings can we afford to place blame on anyone else.

HOMOSEXUALS IN THE ARMED FORCES? HEY, WE'VE GOT STANDARDS AND TRADITIONS TO MAINTAIN!..
NAVY PILOTS CONVENTION
TONIGHT'S ACTIVITY: GROUP GROPE
BRANCH ©1992

There is something to be said for learning from the past and from the mistakes of others; however, it seems that in the continuing saga of the repression of the Native American, we fail to get beyond the stage of identifying the problem that we are supposed to be learning from. As a consequence, we are repeating history again and again, instead of learning from it.

Therefore, maybe we need to try a new approach. Instead of trying to rewrite the history books now with the hope that people will eventually learn from Columbus' errors, we should concentrate our energies on changing the history of the future right now and worry about writing it when there is actually something to write. When we have truly achieved equality for all people in the United States of America, we can add new chapters to our history books that tell of conquering opposition in the battle for justice and peace at the same time that we rewrite the old chapters of history to tell the true tale of the flawed past.

Instead of spending time condemning Christopher Columbus for whatever may have happened 500 years ago, we need to take responsibility and try to change our own world here and now. Then maybe the people of the future will have nothing to condemn us for in another 500 years.

Gay soldiers battle for military acceptance

By ELLEN GOODMAN

Over the past week, the armed forces have gotten messages from two branches of government, the judiciary and the executive, that the long-standing ban against gay and lesbian soldiers and sailors is coming down. First a federal district judge issued a temporary order making the Navy reinstate Keith Meinhold, a sailor discharged last August after revealing he is gay. The judge said it was likely that a trial would find the ban unconstitutional.

Then, Bill Clinton reaffirmed his promise to lift the rule after he takes office. He can issue an executive order, the way Truman did when he integrated the army racially in 1948. Clinton hopes to do so in a way that will mute the culture shock, though to describe this as culture shock is a bit like calling a 9.0 earthquake a little rumble.

We are witnessing another confrontation between the military and the civilian worlds, between the culture of diversity and the culture of uniformity. Uniformity, as in uniform.

Anyone who has done time in the military can tell you that the armed forces are designed to stamp out differences in boot camp democracy. It is less interested in preaching individualism than in teaching order.

But anyone who has ever seen one of those World War II movies — with "Tex," "O'Malley" and "Brooklyn" fighting the Nazis — also knows that even in the 1940s, the military was dealing with diversity. In the 1950s, when the South was still segregated, the military was newly integrated. And in the 1990s, it has been on the front lines as well as the rear guard of advancing women.

The pressure to accept homosexual soldiers presents another challenge in this long line. That doesn't make it easy.

The traditional hostility to gays — to gay men at least — comes straight from the playground taunt: "Sissy!" Prejudice linked gay men and all women in a sisterhood of weakness that disqualified them from fighting "like a man."

Homosexuals were exempt from the draft and, if discovered, driven out of service. In 10 years, some 17,000 men and women — including top guns and top nurses — have been dismissed.

The difference is that, today, military leaders acknowledge that there are thousands of homosexuals in the military, fighting and leading. The image of gay men and lesbians as security risks has been debunked.

The last, tenuous but tenacious argument left is that removing the ban would somehow give permission for "openly homosexual" behavior. (Gay parade grounds?) And that it would undermine morale and discipline.

In a careful and tempered statement last year, Gen. Colin Powell put it this way: "It is difficult in a military setting where there is no privacy, where you don't get a choice of association, where you don't get a choice of where you live, to introduce a group of individuals who are proud, brave, loyal good Americans but who favor a homosexual life style."

When you parse this tought, it consists of two ideas. One idea is that both prejudice and homophobia are so rampant that the mere presence of an acknowledged gay or lesbian is unacceptabley disruptive. That, I am afraid, is what they said about mixing black soldiers with white.

The other idea is that homosexuals are sexual predators who put other soldiers sharing quarters and showers at risk. This seems to be a particular worry to men, yet there is no evidence that gay men are more sexually aggressive than straight men. This may be killing with faint praise, but it's true.

More to the point, at least the original point, the military has every right to make rules and regulations about behavior. There may be good reason for a military "incest taboo" among shipmates and prohibitions within platoons. There are rules against harassment. But it's still the sexual behavior that counts, not the sexual orientation.

This fall Canada dropped its ban. Now, its our turn. The military should worry about how its people make war, not love.

Blue key unlocks campus for prospective students

By ROSEANNE MILLER
Staff Reporter

Think back to your high school days. It is your senior year and you are having the time of your life ... with, of course, one exception. The decision about which college to attend is hanging over your head like a big, dark cloud. Make the right choice and the cloud will pass. If you make the wrong choice you had better grab your umbrella because it is bound to pour. It is a grueling choice which inevitably one must make. However, one thing that seems to diminish the doubt is looking at the schools. Yes, your campus tour of any given school will either make or break your decision about whether or not to attend a certain school.

Here at Villanova, those responsible for this important aspect of the college decision are members of the Blue Key Society. These students give over 750 campus tours throughout the academic year. Tours are a very big part of the society, but Blue Key also offers much more. The Blue Key Society is a service organization that assists the University. In effect, their primary service is public relations. Aside from the tours, which are the most well-known elements of the Society, Blue Key plays a major role in other activities. These include phone-a-thons which work to communicate with interested or accepted high school seniors, high school recruitment and Parents' Weekend activities.

Members assist in Alumni Weekend, Sibling Weekend, Special Olympics and many other services and social activities with which Villanova is involved. A new activity in which Blue Key lends a hand is information sessions with prospective students. This enables prospective students and their families to speak with members about Villanova life and the application process.

Currently, Blue Key is in the process of recruiting new members for the society. Approximately 280 students applied to the society with about 125 students making it to the second-round interviews. Senior Dean Libutti, who is co-chairman of recruitment along with Franco Barbalinardo, said that Blue Key "usually accepts between 30 and 65 new members each year." Libutti also commented that the type of people the society is looking for are those who are "dedicated, with a strong love for Villanova." He said that being a member is a positive experience because it allows one to "show personality and enthusiasm for Villanova." By working hand-in-hand with the Admissions Office, members have direct involvement with prospective students and their views of Villanova. Libutti also said that members really serve as "ambassadors to the school ... willing to help out in any area."

Another member, sophomore Julie Oates, agreed that Blue Key is a "very positive experience." She added that no matter what they do, the members always remember "to have fun with it."

Those applicants who have made it to the second round of interviews seem very enthusiastic about the whole experience. One junior who is applying for membership commented that his first interview was very relaxed and very fair. "The interviewers really tried to get to know you as a person and didn't try to stump you with their questions," he said. One sophomore who applied to the Society said that she was interested in becoming a member because "Blue Key is involved in almost every activity on campus and being a member is a great way to be involved and meet new people." Second-round interviews, which will be the basis for the selection of new members, are being conducted this weekend.

Eating disorders prevail among college athletes

Special to the Villanovan

Check out those athletes strolling around campus. Are you envious of their slim, trim, healthy look?

Don't be fooled. This is not necessarily well. A shockingly high percentage of college athletes are suffering from eating disorders such as anorexia and bulimia, that can have serious health consequences.

According to The Physician and Sportsmedicine Journal, the prevalence of eating disorders among college athletes may range as high as 25 percent. Swimmers, divers, wrestlers, dancers, gymnasts and track and field competitors are the ones most often troubled by anorexia or bulimia. Anorexics experience dramatic weight loss from continuous self-starvation and severe dieting. Bulimics practice bingeing and purging accompanied by frequent weight fluctuations.

The statistics are frightening among athletes:

- Twenty six percent of females and four percent of males were found in a survey to have used laxatives, diuretics or self-induced vomiting to control their weight.
- Of 42 intercollegiate female gymnasts at a major athletic conference, a survey showed that all 42 were dieting, that 26 were using at least one form of weight control such as diuretics or laxatives. The study also found that of 28 competitors who were told by their coaches that they were overweight, 21, or 75 percent, resorted to purging methods.
- Seventy-one percent of females and 57 percent of males regularly ate "somewhat" or "much" less than they wanted.

In general, statistics show that 45 to 60 percent of women college athletes have an eating disorder.

"We definitely believe eating and weight disorders in athletes are becoming more of a problem," said Jack Wilmore, an exercise physiologist at the University of Texas.

It is troubling to know that, due to the secrecy and denial factors involved with the disorders, many victims do not realize they have a problem until they are hospitalized or incur a serious injury.

The health risks of anorexia and bulimia can be serious. Electrolyte imbalances can cause cardiac arrest, declines in hormone levels may lead to osteoporosis, declines in bone density and amenorrhea, the lack of menstrual periods. Stomach acid expelled during vomiting may erode tooth enamel, leading to tooth decay.

It is possible that athletes may be more susceptible to eating disorders for many reasons. The psychological factors that are associated with the process of competing or the concept of winning at any cost can make an athlete more vulnerable. There are also physiological and environmental factors associated with sports.

Athletes are self-sufficient, physically strong and gifted people who present an illusion of being indestructible and are reluctant to admit problems or seek help. Acknowledgement may mean loss of scholarship, less playing time and may result in strained relationships with coaches and parents. Pressure to compete and fear of failure may also cause stress.

In swimming, as with many sports, body weight can be a performance factor. Physiologically, excess fat may have a negative effect on performance. Athletes and coaches are highly motivated to have body weight at an optimal level to facilitate the best performance.

It is very hard for an athlete's body to drop below its optimum weight. The body fights to maintain this balance and excessive attempts to disrupt this balance are detrimental to performance and training.

Belorussian art relates culture

By SUSAN SFARRA
Staff Reporter

The Villanova Art Gallery is proud to exhibit a new installation, "With Love From Minsk," a collection of works by artists from the city of Minsk, Republic of Belarus. The exhibit, which will run until Dec. 31, is a celebration of Belorussian art and its new expression since its political independence from Soviet rule in August 1991.

"This is one of the main exhibits to be held during the 150th anniversary celebration," said Brother Richard G. Cannuli, O.S.A., chairperson of the Department of Art and Art History, director of the Art Gallery and curator of Villanova's art collection.

This unique exhibit was made possible when the curator of the exhibit, Vladimir Adashkevich, met Cannuli in the spring of 1990. Cannuli then travelled to Minsk and selected works for the exhibit.

The artists being featured are Maria Isaionok, Nikolai Isaionok, Svetlana Katkova, Zoia Litvinova, Alla Mossienko and Leonid Rizhkovsky. The works of these artists are well-known outside their countries and have been exhibited in places such as Italy, Poland and Great Britain.

A reception will be held Nov. 21 from 5-8 p.m. in the Art Gallery of Connelly Center. Adashkevich will be available to answer questions on behalf of the artists at that time.

Much of the art is typical of joyous Belourussian folk art, but some pieces also echo the more somber, contemporary concerns of the people. The Republic of Belarus is still suffering from the tragic effects of the Chernobyl nuclear power disaster. Proceeds from the sale of this art work will be donated to a hospital for children in the Chernobyl area.

A warm welcome has been extended to all students to view the artwork and learn more about Belourssian culture. "We believe this cultural endeavor is one of the first of its kind to be held in the United States since diplomatic relations have been established between our nations," said Cannuli.

'Nova custodian moonlights as an area entertainer

Robert Girifalco leads a double life, dividing his time between Villanova custodial work and the local entertainment scene.

By KRISTIN BERNARDYN
Staff Reporter

Not only are there many talented students at Villanova, but the University also has a very talented staff. Meet Robert Girifalco, who has worked in custodial services at Villanova since December 1992. Actually, his life's true vocation is music and entertainment. Girifalco's father played all sorts of music on the piano and influenced his son to begin playing at about four years of age. From then on Girifalco honed his musical skills, studied acting, took lessons to develop the range of his voice and worked to achieve his dream of becoming a professional entertainer and recording star.

According to Girifalco, he has his own unique "piano stylings." Many different influences in his life have contributed to the development of a style which is entirely his own. What is Girifalco's type of music? In his words, it is "classical-contemporary jazz with rhythm and blues tendencies." In addition to performing the "classical standards," such as Gershwin show tunes, Cole Porter, Broadway songs and jazz, he composes his own songs and does various impersonations, including Jerry Lewis, Jimmy Stewart, Jimmy Durante, Johnny Mathis, Bing Crosby, Frank Sinatra and some cartoon characters.

> Presently, Girifalco is in the process of shopping for the best contract deal for his compact disc, which will be released sometime next year.

Although Girifalco's act consists of more solo piano and vocal work, sometimes he makes appearances with his producer's band, Raphael Paris and Flex, which plays all kinds of music. Some of the local places at which Girifalco performs either by himself or with Flex include: Evviva, Yangming, Marita's Cantina, Mel's International, General Wayne Inn, Ambler Cafe, and Ribbit.

Girifalco also works at private parties and casinos. Other appearances include weekly spots with Raphael Paris and Flex on Channel 44 Public Access Television and a spot in 1987 on the Ed Hurst Steel Pier Show to promote his single "Top Cat" and the flip side standard "More."

Environmental Group urges Villanovans to care

By KEVIN RITKO
Staff Reporter

In 1986, Rick Hannebury had a dream. Just kidding. Actually six years ago Rick Hannebury, currently an auditor for the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), made an effort to increase newspaper and office paper recycling. Out of his efforts emerged the Villanova Environmental Group, which has since become known to the average Villanovan as V.E.G.

The mission of the group is to promote environmentally sound behavior at Villanova. This is attempted chiefly through education. V.E.G. meets every Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Center for Peace and Justice Education where, through student presentations, guest speakers or the use of multimedia techniques, members discuss current issues. However, since the days of Hannebury, the problems that are now on V.E.G.'s agenda have become more difficult to resolve.

Encouraging recycling during last weekend's Homecoming became more complicated than expected because, even though many students and alumni made an effort to separate their recyclables, all of it had to be thrown out because it became contaminated. V.E.G. volunteers distributed bags to tailgaters in an attempt to prevent this, but inevitably trash was also mixed in, making the recycling efforts of the maintenance department impossible. Superintendent of Grounds, Kevin O'Donnell, estimated that 12,000 pounds of aluminum which could have been recycled was trashed due to contamination. According to O'Donnell, contamination is "the mixing of any other materials with recyclable materials." Because cardboard, glass and food were mixed with the cans, approximately $3,000 worth of aluminum was lost.

The futility of recycling efforts at Homecoming seems to be just one more example of the difficulty in meeting the tremendous challenge of making what one frustrated V.E.G. member termed "the Villanova mentality," more environmentally conscious. As evident from the zero percent of recycling at Homecoming, the Villanova community has many areas where V.E.G. would like to see an improvement. The fact that after six years of V.E.G. objections, the Connelly Center still uses styrofoam is yet another point of frustration for the group. These types of disappointments have had a visible strain on the group's overall morale.

Megan O'Donnell, the current president, expressed dismay with the members' "lack of initiative" in recent months. Pat Kennedy, the Recycling Committee chairman, added that "membership retention is a problem for us right now." V.E.G. member Keith Leiberman, a senior studying engineering, who, because of his academic schedule, is unable to attend every meeting, said, "I applaud members like Megan, Pat and Darrel, who are so committed. But it must be frustrating for them because, despite all the great ideas, nothing ever seems to get accomplished."

According to O'Donnell, out of the 50 or so members only 20 attend consistently. Therefore, she is now taking steps to make activities and projects more accessible for members who, like Leiberman, cannot attend every meeting.

Beginning in January, O'Donnell hopes to provide a monthly calendar of events to be mailed to members, enabling them to sign up for only those activities they know they can attend. Students interested in lending a hand with the noble causes of V.E.G. can do so by attending Tuesday meetings at 7:30 p.m. in the Center for Peace and Justice Education.

College athlete eating disorders

"We really believe there is an extraordinary amount of pressure on young athletes to decrease their body weight to such low levels that they slip into disordered eating," said Barbara Drinkwater, an exercise physiologist at the Pacific Medical Center in Seattle.

There also is the issue of pressure from coaches or parents. Unaware of the power of their influence, they may make demands that are unrealistic for their athletes or their children. This can send powerful messages to those athletes prone to eating disorders because they interpret demands differently. These individuals do not separate their value as a person from their physical image.

Amateur sports in this country have seemingly lost their focus. Coaches also face enormous pressure. Winning sports programs mean big money to most colleges. Due to the financial challenges facing universities today, money becomes a motivator for coaches to win at any cost.

Most coaches and trainers may not recognize the symptoms of an eating disorder. Some may even choose to ignore symptoms as long as an athlete's performance is up to par.

"They likely don't realize the serious consequences to a person's health," said Director of Activities Therapy Jill Losher of The Willough at Naples, a licensed psychiatric hospital in southwest Florida. The Willough specializes in the treatment of eating disorders and chemical dependency. "Coaches, trainers and athletes have little knowledge of eating disorders or how to help an athlete with one," said Losher.

Most researchers agree that coaches do not cause eating disorders in athletes. They may, however, trigger or exacerbate the problem through inappropriate coaching. For this reason, the NCAA had developed videos and written material to help create an awareness of the problem and how to address it.

The Willough at Naples is also sharing its expertise in the treatment of eating disorders by conducting workshops for coaches and athletes and helping them conduct assessments and interventions when necessary.

The best news is that there is help and hope for athletes with an eating disorder. Early intervention and treatment can save an athletic career. More importantly, it can save the athlete countless physical problems and mental anguish. For more information on eating disorders or a free Mini-Guide to Food Addiction, call The Willough at Naples at 1-800-722-0100.

Yearbook competition rates Bell Air a quality publication

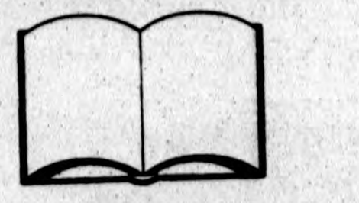
By TARA BRUNO
Staff Reporter

According to Webster's Dictionary, a yearbook (yir'book') n., is a book published annually, presenting information about the previous year. Webster obviously has never leafed through the pages of Belle Air. The Villanova yearbook is more than an annual record of information. Belle Air publications reach above and beyond the call of duty. The 1991 yearbook staff used the tools of creativity, design and text to capture the spirit of Villanova life and present it beneath the cover of a nationally recognized book.

The award-winning 1991 yearbook was objectively evaluated by independent judges at the Associate Collegiate Press (ACP) Convention. The 1991 yearbook was one of the eight yearbooks in the country to recieve the Pace Maker Award at the ACP Convention. The book also scored a Medalist Rating from the Columbia School Press Association (CSPA).

Faculty advisor Dr. Joseph Kinney of the English department has noticed a significant improvement in the yearbook's appearance and content. This is Kinney's third year as faculty advisor of the Belle Air. He said he has recognized an increased surge of energetic creativity in the areas of interior design, layout and cover design. The cover has moved from a traditional look to a more professional and creative design, and the writers have expanded their field of coverage to all organizations and aspects of University life.

"Try Not to Stare" was the theme of the 1991 yearbook. "The theme of the yearbook reflected the year in many aspects," said Patty Cogan, the 1991 Editor in chief. Progress in appearance, academic standing and athletic competition was illustrated in the first eight pages of copy.



The 1991 October edition of US News and World Report gave a report on America's Best Colleges and ranked Villanova first of the regional colleges. Villanova's tradition of superior athletic performance was upheld in 1991 as well.

The 1991 yearbook staff sacrificed time during Spring, Christmas and October breaks to crank out a superior quality product that thanked these accomplishments. Production of the 1991 book began in the Spring of 1990, and the staff nurtured their creation during the summer months.

contract deal for his compact disc, which will be released sometime next year. The CD, titled Living on a Dream, It's Funny How the Mind Works, will include eight of Girifalco's original songs and six standards.

Since Girifalco's family resides locally, they are able to support his career by attending his performances. Nova's performer is one of eight children raised in Bala Cynwyd. His father is a world-renowned physicist who teaches at the University of Pennsylvania.

Girifalco said his family recognizes the potential for his success as an entertainer but they are also aware that getting a big break in the business is not easy. However, Girifalco has always known that he has a special gift. His dream has always been to share that gift with as many people as possible. He expresses these feelings about setting high goals and achieving them in the lyrics of one of his own songs, "Living on a Dream," in which stated, "It's funny how the mind works living on a dream/If you don't have a dream, you're never going to get anywhere/If you don't grab your dream, then who's to blame?/Just believe and you'll receive and things will come your way."

When Girifalco works nights in Dougherty Hall, any students who are around sometimes hear him playing piano or singing in the hall. One student working for WXVU had the idea to share Girifalco's talent with the radio station's listeners. Anyone interested in hearing Girifalco's music can see him perform live in the area or listen to WXVU, the campus radio station, where Girifalco's music recently debuted.

The 1992 yearbook was not entered in the (ACP) Convention because the staff did not intend to create a competition oriented book, but a book geared more toward the University. Expectations for this year's book are competitive.

"I hope that we can continue in the tradition of the award winning 1991 yearbook. Hopefully, in the next few weeks, the staff can present a yearbook that is not only another nationally recognized yearbook, but also one that is enjoyed by the Villanova community," said Kinney.

The 1993 yearbook will be submitted to both the ASC and CSPA conventions. According to Belle Air Editor in Chief Jim Downs, entering into competition trains the staff to follow systematic guidelines and ignites motivation.

The organization of this year's staff is tightly structured. Each section has two editors, two section editors and additional contributors. "It is a more defined network. The staff definitely has more dedicated people involved this year," said Downs.

The 1993 yearbook will capture a different angle of University life. Articles and photos will record and present a more realistic, objective definition of Villanova. The pride, colorful tradition, community life and Villanova spirit of the past 150 years will be brought to life and preserved beneath the cover of the 1993 yearbook.

Homecoming antics entertain

By MARYBETH GOELLER
Staff Reporter

Homecoming Weekend. Two blissful days during which Villanova becomes an exciting, out-of-control campus that leaves Public Safety in a state of disarray. The duPont parking lots are jammed with students, faculty, family, friends and alumni tailgating before the big game. For some, it is a time to become reunited with long-lost friends while others consider it an event where they can make new friends. Surely, Homecoming is something that no one will ever forget (if they can even remember it), leaving most with memories that will be etched in their minds for years to come.

To the majority of Villanova students, Homecoming is a weekend in which various groups of people come together and interact with one another. Diverse groups of people come together for a common reason. Sophomore Stacy Barton, had some friends from home visiting, who were all surprised at how everyone here showed so much enthusiasm and spirit for their school, both at the game itself and during tailgating activities.

Homecoming means a lot of different things to different people. One aspect that everyone enjoys are the events that make up tailgating. This year sophomore Dan McDonough said that "mudsliding was right up there along with losing 113 cases of beer." Mudsliding, a "new event" at Homecoming this year was quite a spectacle to observe.

Unfortunately there was no DJ allowed at this year's tailgate. Although the absence of music was apparent to some, the harmony that filled the air was present everywhere. "I just can't believe how great 'Nova was for that one weekend. Too bad it's not like this all the time!" said freshmen Emily Peterson.

Of course the whole reason for Homecoming is the football game. This year Villanova played Fordham, coming out with a thrilling victory. Even though not everyone makes it to the game, many faithful fans attend rain or shine, hail or snow. One such diehard football-crazed person is sophomore Toni Schito who eschews tailgating activities for the game every year. "I admit it is a little hard to leave the tailgate, but hey, what's Homecoming without the game?"

After the tailgate is over and everyone goes home to rest, the night begins. However, there are those who do not quite regain the strength to go out on the town. "I had planned on hitting the Yorkshire, but I took a nap for 20 minutes and I woke up at 10 a.m. on Sunday," said junior Kathy Bransfield.

For those who did make it out, it was a good time. Senior Kevin O'Donnell made it to Marita's. He remembers "walking home, doing a few shots and not remembering much else."

All in all, Homecoming '92 was as great as ever. We all have great memories of the event (some more blurred than others). And so another Homecoming Weekend goes down in historv.

The papers may be written specifically for this competition or based on work completed at the University during Spring, Summer or Fall 1992.

LENGTH of papers, excluding footnotes and bibliography:
Undergraduate students - Double-spaced, typed papers with a maximum of 20 pages.
Graduate students - Double-spaced, typed papers with a maximum of 25 pages.

AUTHORS: Collaborative efforts from students are welcomed. Both men and women are encouraged to submit their work. (All authors must be students enrolled at the University during the time the research was completed.) Please indicate whether you are an undergraduate student or a graduate student and your declared major along with your Social Security number on title page.

EVALUATION AND AWARDS: All papers will be evaluated by a panel of faculty members. Cash awards of $300.00 will be given to the top ranked undergraduate and graduate papers. Papers will be presented at a conference to be held at the Connelly Center during National Women's Studies Month in March 1993. President Dobbin will present the awards to the recipients on Wednesday, March 24, 1993.

SUBMISSION INFORMATION: Please submit four (4) copies of the paper to Dr. Barbara E. Wall, O.P., Center for Peace and Justice Education, by Feb. 22, 1993.

Should You Get A Chase Card For The Long Distance Savings?

[Call your parents collect and see what they think.]

If they accept the charges, you can tell them about ChasePhone.℠ It lets you use your Chase card to make long distance calls at MCI®'s low rates. And that's just one of the unique ways we'll help make your life a little easier at school.

That's because we've created Chase Student Services℠* — an entire group of special benefits just for students.

For example, when you take off during Winter and Spring Break, Chase Student Travel will take off with you. In fact, you'll get 5% off the lowest prices you find on airfares, train tickets, car rentals and even hotels.

Or, if you're moving off campus, we'll even write a credit reference letter to help you get an apartment.

Best of all, we won't ask you to fork over an annual fee for the first year.

So look in your mailbox around Thanksgiving for an application. Or, pick one up on campus and apply for your Chase card today.

And the next time you call mom and dad, they may actually be happy to hear from you.

Powerful drama is an instant classic

By ERIC CHEUNG
Assistant Entertainment Editor

"The Mayor's Wife," portraying the spirit of the African American female, will be shown until Nov. 22.

For the weekend of Nov. 18 through Nov. 22, the Villanova Theater presents its final showing of Marian X's "The Mayor's Wife." This is the second play in an ongoing festival honoring Villanova's playwrights during the Sesquicentennial celebration. It is an unforgettable piece of work that should be considered an instant classic. "The Mayor's Wife" weaves a tale that no one can afford to miss.

In the tradition of other popular black writers, Gloria Naylor and Alice Walker, Marian X presents the strength of the African-American female. The plot is complex and filled with emotionally moving scenes. Additionally, she picks up on a commanding theme that dominated the first play in this year's series, "Compassionate Leave." While the former enlivened the stage with Irish culture and taditions, Marian X's play focused on her African heritage, letting the audience hear as the spirits of her ancestors continue to call to her.

"The Mayor's Wife" is enjoyable from the outset as an intellectual puzzle. The play opens sometime in 1990 with Dora, the mayor's wife, being placed in her jail cell. At the start you learn that she has chopped off all her hair, she was blamed for her husband's death, and that she is a quiet woman who refuses to talk with her cellmates. This sets the tone for much of the play to come. Each clue is an important piece of the puzzle that comes together in the end. It is the talkative and motherly Miss Faisa (in jail for killing those responsible for her family's death) who initiates the storytelling. As the play progresses, Dora becomes more comfortable and releases bits and pieces of her life.

Almost immediately you experience an example of her mother, Esther, and her father, Perry's, torrid relationship that ended in separation. Dora goes on to live with her grandmother, Lizzy, whom she rebels against. Despite her mother's disappearance, Dora still is in love with her and her lifestyle as a dancer. A fateful meeting with Esther shows Dora the truth, that she has no room in her mother's life.

From then on, Dora loses any affections for her family and thereby loses touch with the spirit of her ancestors. She contents herself with living her life the way she wants. For a few carefree years in college, she dates a free-spirited thinker, Judd, and develops her own affinity for dancing. However, her very choices betray her as she finally gives her love to a power-hungry man, Franklin. After this she loses her identity and succumbs to the wishes of an ambitious husband.

Franklin at first appears to be a knight in shining armor, a man who went to college with a purpose in mind. Franklin is the admirable African-American, firm but caring, who will stop at nothing to free his people. Meanwhile Judd takes a seemingly non-productive role in life of being true to oneself. However, Franklin becomes part of the system he was once intent upon changing, when he is elected the first black mayor of his town. Judd is furious at his former classmate because Franklin achieved success by placing his rebellious brethren in jail. Through all this, Dora becomes more indifferent towards the life around her. Franklin and Judd are the warring parts of her heart who fight to have the security of the way things are or the happiness of the way things could be. We learn that Franklin had married her only for the money her grandmother could provide him. Dora no longer has any self-respect and Franklin reflects this when he tells her that her sole purpose now is only to smile at the crowds during special functions.

"The Mayor's Wife" is also a tale about the generations of women in Dora's family who lost touch with one another. Lizzy's mother Brazilia, died before she ever got to know her. Despite her early life as a prostitute, Lizzy would pull herself up from degradation to become a real estate agent. Her relationship with her daughter, Esther, sinks into turmoil as she never gave the love Esther needed to have confidence in herself. For that reason Esther only knew how to depend on herself and she passed that on to Dora, when she left her. Even Dora's own daughter, Frankie, has resentment toward her mother. Dora is as concerned with Frankie not making the mistakes she made, that she forgets to love

Pop singers offer worthy Christmas album

[redacted]

By MAURA RURAK
Senior Reporter

A Very Special Christmas 2 showcases holiday classics covered by yesterday's and today's hottest stars. The second volume of the 1987 A Very Special Christmas includes 19 tracks filled with the magical spirit of Christmas. As before, all proceeds are contributed to Special Olympics and their support of special athletes throughout the world.

Many surprises appear on the CD. The legendary Frank Sinatra teams with bubble gum princess Cyndi Lauper for a charming "Santa Claus Is Coming To Town." Jon Bon Jovi sings the blues on "Please Come Home For Christmas" and the religious "What Child Is This" gets jazzed up by Vanessa Williams. Ann and Nancy Wilson give a rendition of "Blue Christmas" and Wilson Phillips offers a respectful "Silent Night."

The always controversial yet undeniably talented Sinead O'Connor offers a quiet and haunting "I Believe In You" in contrast to Run D.M.C.'s house version of "Christmas Is." Randy Travis gives a country twist to "Jingle Bell Rock," while Michael Bolton croons "White Christmas." "Rockin' Around The Christmas Tree" covered by the team of Ronnie Spector and Darlene Love is a prelude to the soulful "Merry Christmas Baby" by Blues queen Bonnie Raitt and the famous Charles Brown.

A Very Special Christmas 2 represents the true meaning of Christmas. All the artists have donated their time and efforts to this album in support of those less fortunate. Boys II Men dedicate their Christmas song to their road manager who died in May. "We will miss your earthly presence, but your spirit and teachings are still alive in us all." The late Keith Haring donated all the album and label art which has become a trademark of the Very Special Christmas collection.

Christmas would not be the same without the traditional holiday songs. Now, they have been covered with a modern pop twist that will appeal to everyone. Following the same standard of excellence that made A Very Special Christmas a staple for all collections, the second volume continues in promoting holiday spirit and the value of giving by supporting the Special Olympics.

"For music alone has the power and universal language capable of reaching all peoples, all races, all languages, all continents with the joyful Christmas message of love and hope for all human kind," said Eunice Kennedy Shriver, founder and honorary chairperson of Special Olympics International. A Very Special Christmas 2 is a worthy album for a worthy cause.

Colvin's rich vocals resound on Fat City

By JOHN KAZMIERCZAK
Staff Reporter

Shawn Colvin's latest release, Fat City, exemplifies the old adage that something may equal more than the sum of its parts. She incorporates extraordinarily sweet, smooth vocals, mated to intelligent, emotive lyrics and a revolving-door cast of top-notch backup musicians to produce an album that may prove to be the eyebrow-raiser of the year.

Balance between lead vocals and the background accompaniment, which proves to be a common downfall for artists who are primarily vocalists, is achieved flawlessly. Her vocal range is extensive, deftly shifting from a lonely, desolate cry on "Monopoly" to a rich, warmly resonant tone in "Round of Blues." Most impressive, however, is the intense, heartfelt emotion that her voice conveys; she has obviously reached deep inside herself to produce this level of intensity.

As previously noted, each new song seems to herald the introduction or departure of a backup band member; only bassist/producer Larry Klein and guitarist John Leventhal remain for the duration of the album. Contributors include ace drummers Jim Keltner (of Little Village fame), Denny Fongheiser (last heard on Alannah Myles' latest record, Rocking Horse and Booker T. Jones on his Hammond B-3 Organ. Bruce Hornsby, with whom she performed a duet on his 1990 release A Night On The Town, provides piano and vocal backing on "Climb On (A Back That's Strong)."

Colvin's ballads feature minimal variations in style and tempo, which lends the album a sense of linearity and continuity. Transitions between tracks are graceful and unobtrusive, each song flowing easily into the next.

The only obviously week point to Fat City is its choppy beginning. The album's first two songs, "Polaroids" and "Tennessee," sound a bit stilted and lack the smooth, polished sound that characterizes the rest of the album. By the fourth track, "Round of Blues," Colvin hits her stride and never looks back. The album builds towards its emotional peak with songs such as "Set The Prairie On Fire," climaxes with "Kill The Messenger" and gently finishes with "Don't Know Why." The innovative method in which Colvin integrates all of her tracks is quite effective. When one listens to the album from start to finish, the effect is superb.

Fat City's most distinctive feature, the one that measures its success, lies in the deceptively subtle way Colvin's voice captivates the listener. She works her magic not with screaming or gimmicks, but with honest, forthright emotion. This album is a must-buy for aficionados of low-key female vocalists.

Local band utilizes a mixture of styles

Twitchen Vibes experiments with a variety of sounds on their latest album.

By BETSEY DONOHUE
Staff Reporter

Local Philadelphia band, The Twitchen Vibes, was originally founded by Eastern College students, Charlie McGloughlin and Bill Reaume in 1988. Later joined by Scott Fraser, Julie Prey and Doug Davidson, the Vibes have most recently released the mini-album, Farms on Fire.

Incorporated within the four tracks of Farms on Fire is a complex medley of styles. Musically, the use of both acoustic and electric guitars tends to give the Vibes an experimental feel. The folksy acoustic and bluesy electric styles do provide an interesting contrast. However, there are moments when the two simply do not complement each other. A prime example of this can be found within the title track. The two styles seem to fight each other in some sort of musical competition switching back and forth the dominant lead. These switchovers have shaky transitions and prove to be somewhat distracting.

The album is a complex medley of styles.

A variety of styles is also evident in the drums. According to Fraser, "I love playing with the Vibes because they let me do all sorts of ridiculous beats without ever asking me to play a standard four-four rock beat." Within the four songs, the percussion ranges from simple toe-tapper to all-out punkish chaos, with a garage-band essence running through the mini-album.

McGloughlin and Prey's multi-melody lyrics and harmonica are reminiscent of children's public television sing-alongs. Some harmonies are lovely, others are flat, but they are all extremely fruity. The lyrics give the Vibes' music folk undertones with their "de-de-de's" and "la-de-da's," which again provide yet more aspects to clash.

Overall, the Vibes should be applauded for their effort to create something different in today's music industry. However, they seem to be trying just a bit too hard. The range is vast: folky harmonies, melodic acoustic guitar, harsh blues bass, brassy rock electric guitar and punkish rhythms. But there can be too much of a good thing after all.

Accordingly, The Twitchen Vibes' inclusive style is terribly difficult to slap a label on. In different circumstances, this might be a positive marker of a revolutionary band. However, this is simply not the case. What we have here is a recipe for a new sound using dashes of old spices, but not a pinch of fresh ingredients. Hence, we definitely have a cake here, but it really is not all that tasty.

Scary Ween make their own kind of music

By THOM ARNO
and MARK McCREARY
Staff Reporters

Ever since 1990, Ween has been churning out some of the most incredibly scary and confusing music this side of Frank Zappa. This is not to relate the Pennsylvania-based duo to F.Z., but their oddity has to refer back to some musical innovator. The Ween brothers, Gene and Dean, have managed to isolate themselves from anything existing in modern music. Not as quirky as They Might Be Giants, or as demonic as Mr. Bungle, or as acidic as GWAR, Ween thrives on its own ability to remain undefined; Ween is "Ween music."

The brothers Ween have actually been together since birth, but their recording career began in 1990 with the release of God Ween Satan: The Oneness. Although they had recorded six albums up until this point, God was possibly the first album any record company would touch. A small label, Twin Tone, picked up on Ween and gave them a shot. it is a song-based album, with the brothers on vocals and guitars, and Casio drum tracks providing the back-beat. Such curiosities as "Puffy Cloud" contain immortal lyrics as: "Drift away on a puffy cloud, go away on a puffy cloud, my brain is dead from too much pot, cuz Gene and I smoke too much pot." Other songs like "El Camino," "Papa Zit," "Fat Lenny," and "Never Squeal" give the listener a total base of what Ween is about. It is chaotic, it is subtle, it is all that.

God basically went nowhere, but that is not surprising, because it is great music. Gene and Dean ventured onward and presented 1991 with The Pod, which featured their brother (or close friend), Mean, on the cover "doin' up some Scotchguard powered bongs." The liner notes state the band inhaled five cans of Scotchguard during the album's creation. The Pod is a frantic album, chock full of distorted vocals, out of tune guitars, snorts and giggles. "Pollo Asado" has the band ordering food from its favorite Mexican restaurant. The lines include: "Ok, that'll be $16.07/Out of twenty? Ok, $16.07 is your change." "Pork Roll Egg and Cheese" went on to become a favorite of Matthew Sweet, and the entire album was the second favorite album of the year for Faith No More's Mike Patton.

Ween is back like a bad itch.

PURE

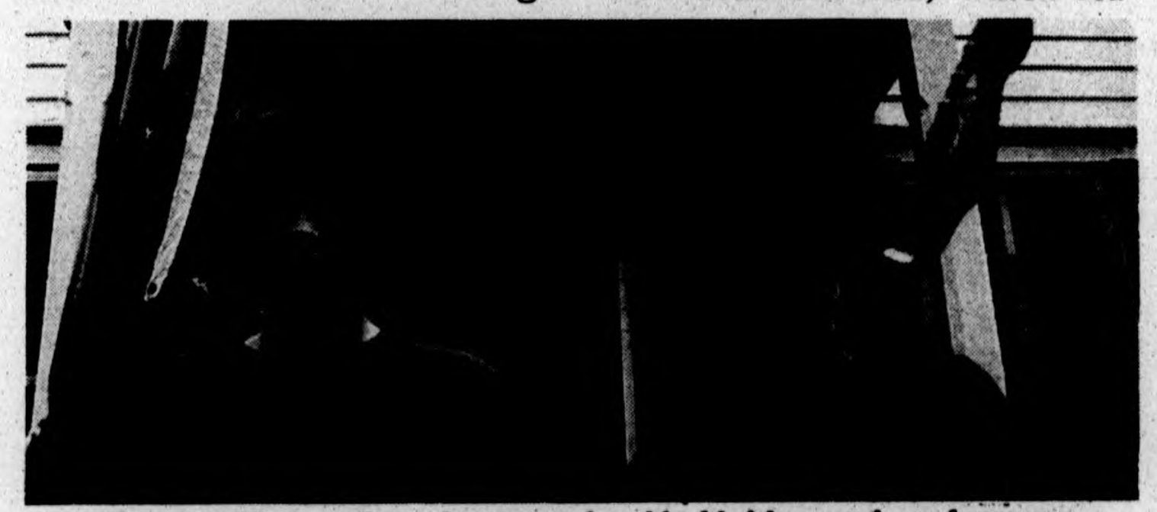
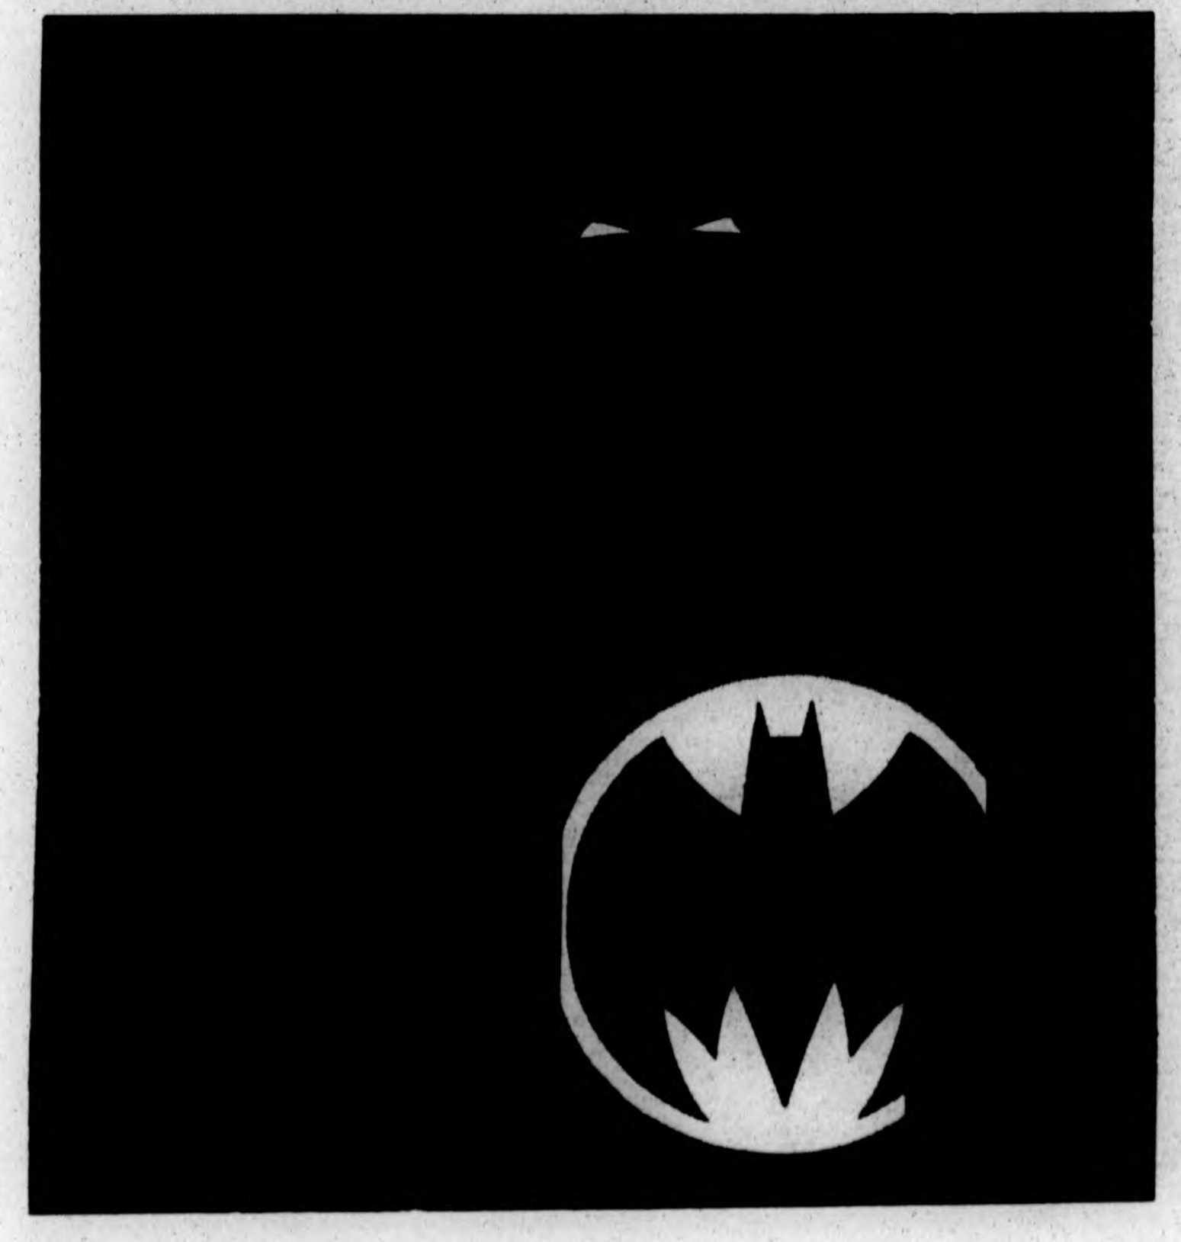
Well, in 1992, Ween is back like a bad itch. The band has just released Pure Guava on Elektra Records, and they deliver the goods big time. While not a total departure from their previous albums, Ween has, uh, matured. The songs are longer, the packaging is not as cheesy and Gene and Dean have beefed up a bit. They look healthier. If the inside cover, which features their circle of friends strewn about the front porch of some desolate house does not scare you (a pregnant woman is packing a 1.75 liter of JD), the music will. "Tender Situation" is a breathy number about the possibilities of love. "Hey Fat Boy" states: "Hey fat boy, c'mere, you killed my mother, I'm gonna kill you." "Little Birdy" is about a little bird. But you knew that.

The 19 songs may be a bit tough to stomach in one sitting, but you will be sure to find your favorite tracks after a listen or two. Ween is presently on tour to promote their album and their past career, really. You should listen to Ween. You can scare your friends. . . and impress them.



The new Ween album is guaranteed to frighten and confuse you.

Comic book reprints recreate old legends



By HAL JORDAN
Staff Reporter

The beginning comic reader may be somewhat frustrated as he starts reading a certain title. Many comic writers assume you have been reading their books for quite some time and do not bother to provide character and plot introductions. As many comics have 30 or more years of history behind them, new readers may be confused by what is going on. Buying back issues of your favorite title can be costly. With that in mind, comic publishers have taken to reprinting many of the best titles in trade paperbacks. Here, new readers can enjoy the creme de la creme of comics, as well as gain knowledge of the title's history.

For X-men fans, there are quite a number of trade paperbacks available. The Dark Phoenix Saga is generally considered the X-men's Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Heart's Club Band. A nine-issue storyline that is considered a bible of modern superhero storytelling. In terms of art, the title's best issues are collected in The Asgardian Wars, a story in which dozens of X-men are transported to the home of the Norse Gods to do battle with hordes of monsters. Art Adams' pencilling on this story sets a new standard for comics that few have equaled.

Adam's pencilling sets a new standard for comics.

If one is interested in other Marvel Comics titles, many are collected in The Very Best of Marvel C/m)cs. Here, one can find the X-men as well as Jack Kirby's groundbreaking Fantastic Four and, of course, Spiderman. This book is a treasure for those who wish to sample a variety of great comics without spending a fortune.

It has been said that comic heroes are never given a final adventure. Well, let us say usually never. D.C. Comics had the courage to give that most venerable of crimefighters, Batman, his last bow in The Dark Knight Returns. Words cannot express the overwhelming power of this book. It reprints the original mini-series that altered comic publishing, and made creator Frank Miller comicdom's premier superscribe. The story works on so many levels (religious, philosophical, emotional), as well as being one of the greatest action stories ever told, requiring a separate article to fully do it justice. If one reads a single comic book in their lifetime, it should be The Dark Knight Returns.

'Dracula' evokes imagery

By AARON NICODEMUS
Senior Reporter

Nic's Picks

Over the course of time, legends take on additives and perversities like a giant ball of gum rolling down a hill. The original story is lost among its new facets, leaving the true story buried somewhere underneath. The macabre tale of Dracula has transformed from a simple love story about the undead to a fearful myth involving the world domination of bloodsucking vampires. "Bram Stoker's Dracula" is Francis Ford Coppola's attempt to shed light on the original, with a few modern twists.

The film opens with Jonathan Harker (Keanu Reeves) being sent to Transylvania to visit the mysterious Count Dracula, who is interested in buying property in London. His castle is perched precariously on a narrow peak, with one winding road leading to the top. Once Harker gets to his destination, he is immediately horrified and entranced by what he sees at the outermost edges of his vision. Count Dracula (Gary Oldman) is stooped and wizened but clad in a blazing red kimono. He cackles and grins with devious glee and leaves the muddled solicitor struggling to understand.

Later, Harker is shaving when Dracula enters unseen (his shadow precedes him) and startles him, causing him to cut himself. Dracula reaches over and snatches the bloody razor, greedily licking the blade. Oldman is at his peak as the ancient villain: dark, twisted, and hungry.

After examining a picture of Harker's fiance, Dracula is convinced that Harker's fiance is the reincarnation of his 14th century love (Winona Rider). His plans focus on regaining her love, and he traps Harker with three voluptuous vampires. Reeves' performance throughout the film is flat, but it is particularly blatant in these scenes. The normal reaction would be pleasure or revulsion, but Reeves displays little of either.

The film moves to London, where Dracula is either a wild, hairy, bloodthirsty wolf or the dapper, long-haired Prince Vlad. During the day, he attempts to win the love of Mina (Ryder). At night, he ravishes Mina's friend Lucy. Coppola never chooses Dracula's image: he straddles Dracula between the evil vampire and the tormented lover. Neither seems to take root, and the viewer is left struggling to identify with the lead character.

The supporting roles steal this show. Anthony Hopkins is droll as Van Helsing, the professor who knows everything about the undead and how to stop them. Sadie Frost displays real zest as Lucy, the shameless flirt who, after being bitten, becomes a convincing vampire.

The real strength of "Dracula" lies in the non-stop barrage of gothic imagery that fills the senses. Several scenes inside a London insane asylum provide extra glimpses of the dark and spooky. While keeping to the basic plot of Stoker's novel, Coppola concentrates less on the legend and more on romance. In so doing, he effectively focuses on the weak performances of Reeves and Ryder.

"Bram Stoker's Dracula" is a visually thrilling film that keeps suspense building through its first half. Once in London, it loses steam. The gore is mild in comparison to current horror films, and is probably closer to a '30s suspense thriller. But all the imagery in the world is mere window-dressing, for the shadowy underside of Dracula is left untouched.

FAST FORWARD: In what may be the most explosive movie of the season, Denzel Washington stars in Spike Lee's "Malcolm X." For years, cast as a Hollywood outsider and labeled a racist by his critics, Lee may finally have made a film that sparks interest as well as controversy. Watch for "X" hat sales to go through the roof, and a deeper understanding of the lives of two (Lee and his subject) angry men.

REWIND: Three decades of magnificent sci-fi sequels is ended in "Alien 3," now released on videotape. Although the least commercially successful of the three films, "Alien 3" still captures the heart of the trilogy. Sigourney Weaver scampers around a mutant penal colony with a military haircut and some incredible firepower. The monster is once again everywhere, splattering pieces of itself and its victims. Yet for any fans of the series, "Alien 3" is an appropriate ending: human versus creature, with the strong woman winning out, until next time, of course.

EMF maintains old style

By COLEEN KENIREY
Entertainment Editor

The Cutting Edge

EMF is one of the group of young British bands, which included Jesus Jones and Happy Mondays, who soared up the U.S. dance charts in 1991. Although music critics ridiculed EMF as an unoriginal, cocky band spewing out meaningless lyrics, listeners flocked to the dance floor at the sound of "Unbelievable." The hit's follow-up clone, "Lies," did not achieve its level of success, but it was also fairly well-received on the charts.

EMF has returned with Stigma, which sounds similar to Schubert Dip, but includes many slower songs which are not as dance-inspiring as its predecessor. The unifying, and frequently annoying, element is again lead singer James Atkin's raspy voice. Atkin whispers and gasps for air as he employs his thick British accent in every song. His style bores the listener at times, as Atkin repeats the droning lyrics.

Stigma maintains the hip-hop house blend underlying Schubert, but EMF also ventures into the realm of slower music. "It's You That Leaves Me Dry" introduces subtle tones of violin and piano in an attempt to add emotion and drama, although the lyrics do not follow through with depth. Other mellower offerings include "Blue Highs," "She Bleeds" and "The Light That Burns Twice As Bright."

The track with the most potential as a dance successor to "Unbelievable" is "Inside." The song has an acid-techno pulsating electronic beat with a wailing guitar occasionally disrupting the monotony. "Arizona" is an interesting experiment best described as Midnight Oil meets a drumbeat machine.

"Dog" is an unusual cut, featuring inspiring lyrics such as: "I could be your god/ I could be your love/ I could be your dog/ And I could be more." This is not your typical love song and hopefully does not represent ballads of the future. "They're Here" is one of the highlights of this CD, providing heavy-handed guitar. It does not break from EMF's repetitive style, but is superior to most of the other songs.

FRESH CUTS: Thelonious Monster's third release, Beautiful Mess, features assistance from many well-known sources including: Dave Piner and Dan Murphy of Soul Asylum, Michael Penn, Tom Waits and Benmont Tench, keyboardist of Tom Petty's band, The Heartbreakers. Thelonious has not released any new work since 1989, due to a split among its members and many switches in record labels, but their new release indicates a powerful comeback.

The Los Angeles band has retained original members Bob Forrest, singer and lyricist, drummer Pete Weiss and guitarist Chris Handsome. New additions to the band are guitarist Dix Denney, formerly of The Weirdos, and bassist Don Burnett.

Forrest's voice has an appealing clarity and strength and he sometimes bear a vague resemblance to Elvis Costello, on such songs as the tender "Weakness in Me." This track, written by Joan Armatrading, is about the familiar conflict of being helplessly in love with someone who is wrong for you. The singer's vocal ability shines with a vulnerable quality.

The first song, "I Live in a Nice House," encapsulates many aspects of American society and addresses the issue of unhappiness in a life of material comfort. The lyrics address the American cultural geyser, television, with: "I've got cable TV/ Nelson comes and sings to me/ Bill Cosby is my black friend/ Television makes me happy." The singer describes his state of mind repeatedly stating, "I can't be satisfied."

The duet with Tom Waits, "Adios Lounge," is excellent. Waits' throaty, calloused voice is the soulful centerpiece to the song, which is one of the best on Beautiful Mess. "Body and Soul" continues the introspective mood looking at a psyche under stress, and searching for help. Forrest reveals "I didn't cry the day my Mom died/ I don't think I even flinched/ But I broke down this morning/ When I saw these two kids kiss."

Thelonious scores on two important points, lyrical images and vocal strength. It features some trashy guitar moments, most notably on "Song for a Politically Correct Girl From the Valley" and the final cut, "The Beginning and the End #12 N 35." The final song is unorthodox. The first 10 seconds are a fade-in consisting of feedback noise, followed by 20 seconds of silence and then 10 more seconds of thrash. It is a strange ending to an above average selection of songs.

Irons teaches life lessons in "Waterland"

By CATHERINE C. GRAHAM
Staff Reporter

JEREMY IRONS
Waterland

Based on Graham Swift's well-received 1983 novel, "Waterland" is a story of a middle-aged English history teacher who is submerged in guilt. Jeremy Irons acts as the high school teacher who gives his uninterested students a lesson from his own biography. Tom Crick (Irons) holds forth on his lectures on the French Revolution and recounts his own history of traumatic experiences as a youth in wartime England.

The narrative structure of the film is inconsistent. However, it does provide new perspectives on the old themes of sexual awakening and repression that can be a part of any family's life. Sometimes Tom and his class are wished back in time to watch Tom's life unfold, while at other times the viewer is zapped into unguided flashbacks. Crick tries to make his own history relevant and instructive to the Pittsburgh high school class.

Because Crick's teen years included incest, suicide and an illegal, brutal abortion by the girl he loved and later married, this is not your typical "merry old England" story. Due to this painful past, Crick now has an unresolved present.

Tom Crick is married to Mary (Sinead Cusack, Irons' wife in real life). She is sterile because of the abortion she had long ago, and her yearning for a child reaches to a level of obsession. Mary fulfills this fixation by kidnapping a baby from a grocery store; she takes the baby to her husband and insists, "I got him from God." While Tom tries to deal with this emotional happening, the earlier tale is disclosed.

Director Stephen Gyllenhaal is strongest in his wartime sequences; his characters stand out against the flat, marshy landscape. Gyllenhaal is best known for his adaptation of Pete Dexter's novel, "Paris Trout," for cable television.

Irons plays two roles in the film: the adult Tom, as well as narrator of the segments about his youth (acted by Grant Warnock). Lena Headey plays her part well as young Mary.

Another supporting actor is Ethan Hawke. He plays a troubled pupil, Mathew Price, who has had an unhappy upbringing and is gradually drawn into the world that Crick evokes. Tom and Mathew develop a special relationship; by the end of the movie it is actually the teacher who learns a lesson from the pupil.

Despite the film's internal problems, "Waterland" is realistic in its portrayal of people imprisoned in lifetimes by mistakes of the past.

New station has alternative innovation

By CAROLYN POPPE
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Philadelphia radio stations have been focusing on classic and album-oriented rock for so long that they are now turning listeners away. In a time when rock is rapidly evolving toward the creative, the same old tunes are not cutting it anymore.

But just when you think all your radio options have run dry, someone answers the cry for help. A new radio station hit the air waves last week, and just in time.

Enter WYBF, 103.9 FM, alternative radio broadcasting from Jenkintown. The station calls itself "Philly's Cutting Edge of Rock" and it may be just that. WYBF provides listeners with everything from brand new hits to alternative rock tunes you would hear nowhere else. It also includes those innovative tunes that happened to hit mainstream recently and old beauties that were almost forgotten about. The station offers such a variety of alternatives that no one will feel left out of today's music or want to return to those classic stations.

The new station is connected with WDRE. On Wednesdays, it turns the radio waves over to this well-known New York station that brought originality to New York rock. Now WDRE brings it here with their own disc jockeys broadcasting their musical selections from Philly.

WYBF finds the best new and old artists and plays those songs based, not on the charts or how classically popular the songs once were, but on creative musical worth. That is quite a break from most trends.

The station plays new releases from The Sundays, Alice in Chains, Morrissey, Peter Gabriel and many others. It also introduces the listener in the alternative edge of original music with songs from groups like Shakespeare's Sister, L7, Siouxsee and the Banshees and School of Fish. On Wednesday nights, the station features WDRE's "Hour of Modern Rock." Listen for some great new music.

The station takes the listener back with great, lost hits.

But WYBF also takes the listener back with great, lost hits, instead of just replaying the same tired "classics." Their "Rock of the '80s" brings the listener forgotten songs from the Clash. Joe Jackson, the Smiths and Depeche Mode, among others. With a "dare to be different" motto, the station feels free to play '80s projects from bands like the innovative synthesizer group, the Art of Noise and Til Tuesday. The disc jockeys go as far as recalling the comical group the Buggles, who gave us "Video Killed the Radio Star" in the '80s.

The result of the variety is a nice balance of innovative new projects, notable modern rock and memorable, even humorous, tunes from when "new wave" was new. The station achieves ingenuity with their idea of liberated disc jockeys — free to play whatever you might want to hear and possibly what you do not.

But the young WYBF is still building the station and the resulting sound is amateur and not yet smooth. Slip-ups and record-skipping frequent the air waves. And most of the air time lacks the voices of disc jockeys, except when it is turned over to WDRE. But the station also lacks playlists, so the choice of songs is as unrestricted as the disc jockeys are creative. Where else might you hear cartoon theme songs, like those of the Pink Panther and Spiderman, mixed in between the best in alternative and modern rock?

The new station brings Philadelphia into the '90s, introducing listeners to the liberal, innovative world of alternative rock. It is about time the city discovered that. As the station says, there is more out there than just "musicians with liver spots."

'Wife' impacts its viewers

her and the pain is passed on.

The play resolves with the surprising climax when we learn of the final events that caused Dora's incarceration. With the end of the story, Dora is ready to rejuvenate herself. Throughout the play we can hear the spirit of her ancestors dancing and singing to their children. Dora finds the courage to return to her people. The final scene, featuring Dora dancing with the recently deceased Esther, is the symbolic healing of the wounds that have hindered the female relationships of this noble family. When Dora is released from prison she is greeted by her daughter. We are assured that the pain is over and will not be transferred to another generation.

The plot is filled with emotionally moving scenes.

This tale of spirituality, healing, and herritage would never have been made possible without the talents of Regina Bell-Dawley (Dora). As an actress she is incredible. Each scene requires a different wig, personality and attitude. The ever-changing, never-realized Dora lives and breathes before us. Equally gifted is Damali Mason who plays Lizzy and Faisa. Her amazing acting skills are displayed by the fact that not only do Lizzy and Faisa have different accents but as characters, they have polarized viewpoints. The remaining troupe of actors lend their abilities to make this a wondrous production. The African drummer and dancer who perform after every scene change, reminds us how much of an influence the African spirit has over the lives of the characters.

"The Mayor's Wife" is a definite must-see. The structure of the play, its different settings and times, makes it an invigorating show to watch. Just seeing Marian X's intricate puzzle put itself together is worth the viewing. But when you combine this with phenomenal performances on the part of the actors as well as emotional moments in the play, you easily become enthralled by the sheer majesty of this work. The prevalence of the African spirit and the four generations of women portrayed, reminiscent of Roots, adds still another level. Dora's life means to us the continuity of life itself. We are the receptacles of the words of our ancestors and the messenger for the lives to come. When we realize, as Dora does, our undeniable importance to this world, it is only then that we become what we truly are destined to be.

Mutant of Love — I hope you are not planning on wearing some hideous tie Dec. 4. Good, because it does not match. Have you ever really wanted to beat the Snot out of someone? Once again, thanks for being so wonderful. But, then again, I noticed that a long time ago (unlike you). — Love ya. Your personal typist, friend who drives you insane and "sister"

KM: I know this is the perfect opportunity to put you down to size, to expose you as the obnoxious, egotistical swine that you are. But, instead of doing that I'll just ask one simple question — Are we becoming friends? — The one who deep down knows she really hates you.
P.S. Nice bandana

Sorry you had to leave just as the conversations were getting interesting. Bring us some commentaries and maybe we will let you have some pizza. Karen

Pop, get some work done, you slacker. All you ever do is sleep in, lounge around, play Dr. Mario, skip classes . . . hey this sounds way familiar. Seriously, sorry to offend. I did not mean to imply you actually had a work ethic or anything. Your roomie

SLUMNIIIIIIITES: Never again will I impersonate a fire alarm, walk backwards, drink Mystic Iced Tea, yell at Zanette (for no apparent reason), develop such a close personal relationship with a trash can or go anywhere without Mel's protection. Sorry to put you all through that. Thanks for taking care of me. I hope you did not watch me sleep. K.C.K.C.

Men's Club: Help! I'm surrounded by females! Emmit Smith — I'll stop you one of these days. JM — I need someone to step outside with. Yagr — It's your job to carry on the tradition. It's a heavy load. But you can do it. I've felt your muscles. — A former member

Lady hoopsters could surprise this season

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Assistant Sports Editor

Things will be very different in the Big East this season. The Miami Hurricanes, who stormed through the conference last season, are unlikely to repeat their 18-0 league record. With the Canes suddenly looking mortal after graduating two starters, Connecticut, Providence and Georgetown will all be vying for the top spot.

Hoping to join the fray are the Villanova Wildcats, who return the bulk of their talent from last season. After a slow start last year, the Cats solidified and went 6-5 in their final 11 games. They are the wildcard in predicting the Big East this season, and even Head Coach Harry Perretta had difficulty predicting exactly what is in store.

"I think we could finish as high as second or as low as seventh," said Perretta. "We're good enough to challenge for one of the top three spots if we mesh together. If we don't, this league is so tough that one or two losses can drop you four or five positions."

Senior Nikki Benedix anchors this year's squad. Playing at both the forward and guard positions, Benedix averaged 15.9 p.p.g. and 7.0 r.p.g. last year, leading the team in both categories. Her performance landed her on the All-Conference Second Team.

"[Benedix's] passing skills have improved dramatically in the last two seasons," said Perretta. "If she can shoot the ball from the outside, I think she's going to score even more points than she did last year."

Another Wildcat entering the season with high expectations is sophomore point guard Michele Thornton. In her freshman year, Thornton led the team in assists with 120, and was second in scoring, averaging 11.1 points a game. She too received post-season honors when she was unanimously named to the Big East All-Rookie Team.

"With Michele's increasing strength and her better understanding of the game, I think that she'll play a better all-around game," said Perretta. "I think she'll shoot the ball better and be more involved in the offense."

The Cats are without the services of four players who graduated last spring. All four of them were either full-time or part-time frontcourt players. Despite their absence, however, both center and forward look solid.

Senior Sheri Walker will hold down the forward position. She established herself towards the end of last season, averaging seven points a game in Big East competition.

"Sheri's a stabilizing force on our team," says Perretta. "She understands our system so well that it's often important to have her on the court even though she's not the biggest or the quickest or the strongest player. Plus she shoots the ball so well [with a .504 field goal percentage]. We're looking for her to get more shots and more points."

'Nova has two capable candidates for center, but will most likely start senior Karen Connell, who averaged six points and 3.4 rebounds. Sophomore Jen Maga appeared in every game last season, and will continue to spell Connell frequently.

Two newcomers will likely compete for the fifth starting spot. Freshman Denise Dillon joins the team and looks to make an immediate impact. Dillon went to high school at nearby Cardinal O'Hara, where she made the All-Catholic league twice. Also vying for this slot is freshman Jen Snell, who became a medical redshirt after injuring her leg early last season.

Two other freshmen, Susan Glenning and Stacie Keffer, join senior Trish McDonough to provide Villanova with more than enough depth at guard. Which one will see the most time as Thornton's backup is still up in the air.

In a conference that is suddenly up for grabs, the Cats should improve. Seven of the players are either freshmen or sophomores, and they will be heavily counted on to supplement the five seniors on the team.

"We have a good mix of players this year," said Perretta. "We're a lot quicker than we were last year, and we're probably deeper. Because of these things, I think we can play with the league's top teams this year."

Hoyas, Hurricanes vie for Big East crown

By TODD LESKANIC
Staff Reporter

Women's basketball in the Big East promises to be competitive with four of the five top teams from last year leading the way.

1. Georgetown Hoyas

The Hoyas will be led by senior Kris Witfill, who averaged 15.9 p.p.g. last season. Witfill will be joined in the backcourt by junior Nadira Ricks. Ricks averaged 10.4 p.p.g. and converted on 38 percent of her "threes." Highly touted freshman Tricia Penderghast will come off the bench.

One forward spot will be filled by Leni Wilson, a senior who averaged 14 p.p.g. and 9.3 r.p.g. Sophomores Candace Staier, Dayna LaForce and Jenny Jacobsen will battle for the second forward. Six-foot-three freshman Vania Cooke should step in at center and will be backed up by junior Julie Miles. If the Hoyas are to win the conference, Cooke must play up to expectations.

2. Miami Hurricanes

The Canes will be led by senior center Vicki Plowden. The six-footer averaged 14.9 p.p.g. and 8.3 r.p.g. on her way to All-Conference honors. Freshmen Christine Olson and Veronica Watson will compete for the back-up spot. Junior Ronny McGarry will fill one guard spot, while highly-touted Juco transfer Cami Young (15.9 p.p.g.) should play the other forward. Freshmen Desma Thomas and Mionsha will back up.

Senior Delareese Wilson, who averaged 7.7 p.p.g. should play shooting guard. Juco transfer Nikki Mitchell will play the point while freshman Holly Rilinger will add depth to the backcourt. Newcomers and defense are the keys for the Canes.

3. Pittsburgh Lady Panthers

Junior Jonna Huemrich (16.3 p.p.g., 7.9 r.p.g.) will lead Pitt's frontcourt. Freshman Tressa Bolfert will play opposite Huemrich, while senior Turia Ransom (6.6 p.p.g.) will add depth. Carolyn Miller, (5.3 r.p.g.) will play the post.

Erin Maloy, a junior who can sink the trey, will play the point. Jill Colabreese returns with a 9.4 scoring average to play shooting guard. Street & Smith's All-American Stephanie Petho should see significant time in the backcourt. Look for substantial improvement from last season.

4. Providence Lady Friars

Junior Jennifer Mead averaged 19.7 p.p.g. and 8.9 r.p.g. last season and will start at center this year. Rebounding freshman Lori Penrod will come off the bench. Junior Stefanie Goettsche (7.4 p.p.g.) will start at forward, while freshman Sarah Miller will see time at the other forward spot as could Penrod.

Sonya Lewis, who averaged 12.9 p.p.g. and hit 47 percent of her treys, anchors the Friar backcourt. Lucie Fontanella, (12.5 p.p.g.) will play shooting guard. Senior Maura McDonnell should see time also. The Friars must improve their defense if they are to finish any higher than fourth.

5. Connecticut Huskies

Rebecca Lobo, one of only two returning starters, will lead the Huskies from the post. Lobo averaged 14.3 p.p.g. and 7.9 r.p.g. last season for the Huskies. Kathy Ferrier, a 6-foot-3 senior with a 5.5 scoring average will give UConn depth at center. Junior Tonya Boone should step into a forward position. She will compete with freshmen Heather Phillips, a three-point threat, and Jamelle Elliott.

Sophomore Pam Webber heads up the Husky backcourt. Webber averaged 8.5 p.p.g. last year and is a legitimate three-point threat. U.S.A. Today Maryland Player of the Year Kim Better should start at shooting guard. Better will be pushed by freshman Jen Rizzotti, another perimeter shooter. Youth could be a problem for the Huskies.

7. Boston College Eagles

All-Conference guard Sarah Behn returns after averaging 25.6 p.p.g. last season. Behn also shot 42 percent from three-point land and averaged 8.4 r.p.g. The point will be played by junior Kerry Curran, a solid starter who averaged 16.8 p.p.g. Sophomores Lori Kasten and Joan Gallagher should play off the bench.

The forward position is anything but set. Junior Michele Verotsky and senior Ali Daley were unspectacular last season. Freshmen Audrey Bowersox and Angela Crowder are both solid recruits who could hold starting jobs by season's end. Freshman center Cecilee Campell is expected to develop into a solid performer. If not, 6-foot-2 senior Marissa Mezzanote will step in. The backcourt position should carry the Eagles out of the Big East cellar.

8. Seton Hall Pirates

Lack of depth will hurt the Pirates. Juniors Jodi Brooks (10.4 p.p.g. 42 percent 3-pointers) and Kim Lee (7.0 p.p.g.) will have to handle most of the duty in the backcourt. Inexperienced Tracy Brooks could be used to ease the workload.

Amanda Makarewicz, a sophomore who averaged 8.9 p.p.g. last season, will play small forward. Power forward will be played by Shamona Marable, a Juco transfer who averaged 11.6 p.p.g. last season. At 6-foot-3, freshman Tynetta Turner will add height to the frontcourt. Dawn Johnson, a 6-foot-3 sophomore who averaged 4.1 r.p.g. will handle duties at the post. Turner could also fit in here.

9. St. John's Express

Graduation should knock the Express towards the bottom of the Big East. Pam Odom leads the Express from the forward position. Last year Odom averaged 10.9 p.p.g. and 6.8 r.p.g. Freshman Lynn Lattazio should step in and play. Senior Coleta Brown, (4.1 p.p.g.) should play the post but could also see time at forward. Backing Brown will be senior Marcy Kornegay.

The guard position is a weak spot for the Express. Sophomores Grace Kelly and Marcia Price averaged under four points apiece and are inexperienced. Senior Patricia Blow adds experience but only stands 5-foot-4. Do not expect much.

10. Syracuse Orangewomen

The only thing worse than their name is their team. Although senior guard Erin Kenneally averaged 14.1 p.p.g. last year, that is the extent of the bright spots. Either Mary Duffy or Suzanne Mumby, both freshmen, will have to fill the other guard position.

Up front S.U. looks even worse. Top returning scorer Melayne Cromwell averaged only 3.7 p.p.g. Another option would be senior Rhonda Boyd, a scoring machine who averaged 0.8 p.p.g. last year. Freshman Kristen McCoy will be called on to handle most of the offensive pressure. At center, Holly Oslander averaged 12.0 p.p.g.; however, she only played in three games.

Nationally, Delta Delta Delta is the 5th largest sorority in number of chapters and the 3rd largest in total number of initiates since its founding. The Gamma Beta chapter of ΔΔΔ first arrived on the Villanova campus in 1982, and it is from then that we began our quest toward academic excellence and chapter unity. Stressing academics, ΔΔΔ has consistently achieved one of the highest overall g.p.a.'s for Greeks.

As for campus involvement, Tri-Delta's can be spotted everywhere. Not only were we the Greek Week champions for the past two years, but 3 Steering Committee members, 13 Orientation Counselors, 2 Administrative Assistants, 3 cheerleaders - 1 Captain, Commerce and Finance Senators, 2 year Greek Woman of the Year and 4 Festival Committee members for Special Olympics are all members of our chapter. You can also find Tri-Delt's on all the Athletic Fields.

Our busy social calendar, including five formal date functions a year and T.G.'s every weekend keep us on the go.

Through our philanthropy, Children's Cancer, the Gamma Beta Chapter is able to give back to the community. We raise money for this great cause by supporting The Committee to Benefit the Children. Funds are donated to St. Christopher's Hospital for Children in Philadelphia. The 150 returning members of ΔΔΔ would like to wish everyone a happy and successful year at Villanova and look forward to meeting many of you in the Spring during Rush!

'Nova tips off against French hoops team

By PATRICK MEILER
Staff Reporter

The Men's Basketball team opens its preseason tonight at 7 p.m. against the French National Team. In addition, Marathon Oil will invade duPont on Nov. 23 at 7 p.m. If you did not get season tickets or will not attend these games, they will be broadcasted live on WXVU 89.1 FM.

These two upcoming exhibition games will be very important for Head Coach Steve Lappas and his staff, and will provide much needed "game-time" experience for his team.

The exhibitions will be different this year from the past few years at Villanova in terms of the team's goals. The previous Wildcat clubs were experienced. Exhibitions were treated as tune-ups. The Cats focused on getting the bugs out of the offense and concentrating on individual skills.

This year's goals are different. They include successfully getting the players to become comfortable with an entirely new offensive system, allowing the team to understand each individual player's tendencies both offensively and defensively and exposing the team to game-time situations. The Wildcats will have to successfully blend newcomers with veterans in the upcoming year. These exhibitions should allow for this to occur in a competitive atmosphere.

The new rule implemented by the NCAA which moved the first permissible practice date from Oct. 15 to Nov. 1 puts a team like Villanova at a disadvantage. A more seasoned team of veterans with an established system like Syracuse or Seton Hall is probably not affected by this delay, which puts the Villanova staff on overtime duty.

It is to Villanova's advantage that the team does not play its first regular season game right after Marathon Oil. Villanova has about 10 days of practice to iron out the kinks and prepare for American.

. . . On the recruiting trail. Jason Lawson, a member of the Philly Fab Five, made a recruiting visit to Villanova this past weekend. the 6-foot-10 center is rated among the top 25 players in the country by Bob Gibbon's All Star Sports, a scouting service. The Villanova staff was certainly fortunate that Lawson came for Homecoming Weekend, which is quite possibly the best social weekend here at 'Nova. We certainly hope Lawson was positively influenced by his visit. Lawson will make his college decision in the spring. He has yet to achieve the 700 minimum on his SATs. Other schools on the hunt for Lawson's services include Georgia Tech, Virginia, Nevada-Las Vegas and LaSalle. Temple and UMass are no longer on his list.

In other recruiting news, Villanova is in the Final Four. Rasheed Wallace narrowed his list of college choices from 10 to four, a Daily News article reported on Tuesday. The "Final Four" includes Villanova, Temple, Georgetown and North Carolina. In the article, Wallace mentioned that he will be following the Wildcats closely this season. This is an obvious boost to the Lappas staff. Wallace is awaiting the results of his Nov. 7 SATs. Villanova Prop 48 policy is not yet known.

. . . Oh, those expectations. This year's senior class was rated among the top 10 recruiting classes only a couple of years ago. The class has not played up to its billing. The NCAA Tournament is the supreme measuring stick of success in college basketball. These guys have one win in three years. It was against an Ivy League team.

The other teams with top 10 recruiting classes three years ago were LSU, Indiana, UNLV, Georgia Tech, Arizona, UCLA, Duke, North Carolina and Michigan.

Needless to say, '92-'93 could help vindicate this class. Let us hope it does.

Here are a couple of points for the senior class of Aaron Bain, James Bryson, Calvin Byrd, and Lance Miller to think about. The nation thinks of this class as an overrated disappointment, and the team as a lower division Big East and NIT bubble team. The seniors have not gotten the job done. Aside from Miller, nobody knows who these guys are. Byrd and Bain are labeled overrated by Sport Magazine. One national publication considers James Bryson an average post player who is not Big East-caliber. At least Miller is considered a bonafide Big East performer.

What went wrong the past few seasons? Was it the system — did it limit their individual games? Was the overall talent level on Villanova teams lacking? Was the work ethic lacking? Did the schedule take it out of the club? Was it coaching? Whatever it was, it is in the past and '92-'93 gives the Cats a chance to mend all wounds.

Seniors, consider this season a personal challenge. Take their criticism personally. Prove them wrong on the court. Excel in the motion offense. A new coaching staff and a talented cast of newcomers should garner excitement and anticipation. This is your final season. The time is now. The entire Villanova community is behind you. Take advantage of the new system, prove the critics wrong and lead your team to the NCAAs.

Louie Quintana

This week the Villanovan recognizes Louie Quintana as the Athlete of the Week. Quintana, a sophomore, won the IC4A individual cross country championship at Lehigh University Nov. 14. His time of 29:57 led the Wildcats to a first place team finish in the Region II Championship. This performance landed the Cats in the No. 5 spot in the national rankings. Quintana hopes to pace the Villanova harriers in the NCAA Championships at Bloomington, Ind. on Nov. 23.

Football Preview

Maine (6-4, 4-3) at VILLANOVA (8-2, 5-2)
Tomorrow, 1:30 p.m.
TV: None RADIO: WXVU, 89.1 FM
Last Week: Villanova 31, Fordham 14
Maine 21, Massachusetts 13

OUTLOOK: Coming off back-to-back 3-8 seasons, not much was expected of the Black Bears. But they have proved the critics wrong, having guaranteed themselves a winning record in 1992. A win over Villanova would cap off an already successful year on Maine's rise back to the top in the Yankee.

Coming into Villanova Stadium, Maine will face an experienced 'Nova club looking to secure a playoff berth. For the Cats, this is the last regular season test before the playoffs and also a must win. A loss seriously jeopardizes any postseason chances.

In order to gain momentum for the postseason, the Cats will continue to establish their offense, specifically the passing game. Quarterback Tom Colombo threw for 283 yards in the Fordham game despite throwing three interceptions, and tight end Scott Donald snagged six receptions. Both will be looking to connect again tomorrow.

The strength, however, of Maine is in its secondary, where four starters return from a year ago. Offensively, the Bears are led by senior tailback Ben Sirmans and quarterback Emilio Colon.

Another solid defense performance by the Cats is expected. The offense needs another good game from Colombo and Donald, the two key members of the offense. With a playoff spot on the line, the veteran Wildcats will not let this one escape against a capable Maine team.

PREDICTION: Villanova 20, Maine 10

— Andy Fitzpatrick

Women reign again

the seniors who will be going to the championships for the fourth time, experience will definitely play a major role.

The day arrives on Nov. 23 when this team proves if it still is at the top of the mountain. Bloomington, IN presents a rolling hills-type course that Villanova has already raced on. If the ladies can continue the dominance that has already made this year an exceptional campaign, there is no reason why there should not be a 1992 National Championship trophy in the lobby of the Jake Nevin Field House. There is a feeling of confidence throughout the campus that there will be.

'Nova looks to Tourney

By JUSTIN SCHREIBER
Staff Reporter

With the Big East Tournament set for Nov. 21-22 rapidly approaching, it was crucial that the Villanova women's volleyball team finish the regular season playing a consistent, error-free brand of volleyball. Any major setbacks at this late stage of the season would be disastrous.

The first of the final three matches for the Cats was against Yale University on Nov. 7 at Drexel University. The Cats prevailed in this very exciting contest 17-15, 15-9, 17-15. Becky Kulbago led the Cats with 13 kills. Pam Clifford and Amy Burke added an additional 12 kills apiece, while Clifford also chipped in with a match-high 13 digs. Vicky Dispenza came through with a match-high 41 assists.

After winning such a hard-fought, highly-contested match, the Cats could have done one of two things. Buoyed by the confidence gained from such an impressive victory, they could have come out with a furious intensity against their next opponent Temple. Or they could just as well have had an emotional letdown and come out flat. If the score of the first game of the match is any indicator, the latter was what occurred Nov. 11 at Temple University.

The Owls took the first game 15-5, and things did not get much better after that as the Cats also lost the next two games 15-7 and 15-12. The loss dropped the Cats record to 15-13 overall and 3-1 in the Philadelphia Big Five. Kulbago once again led the Cats in kills with nine, while Dispenza picked up a team-high 26 assists and 18 digs in the losing effort.

Head Coach Ron Twomey feels that even with the setback against Temple, the Cats have a definite shot at winning the Big East Tournament.

"I think we've got a good shot at winning the whole thing, and certainly one or two matches out of the three we play," said Twomey. "None of those teams [in the Big East] intimidate our team. Our psychological approach to this tournament is going to be positive."

With only one match remaining in the regular season the Cats could ill afford to dwell on their tough loss to Temple. It was imperative that they bounced back and picked up a win in order to get some confidence going into the Big East Tournament. The Cats did just that as they easily defeated St. Peter's 15-6, 15-5, 15-3 Nov. 15 at Jake Nevin Field House.

The impressive victory for the most part was due to the overpowering offensive attack of the Cats and the inability of St. Peter's to mount a sufficient counterattack.

Clifford let the Cats with a match-high eight kills. Mara Austins contributed with a team-high six digs and three service aces. Dispenza again led the Cats in assists with 20.

Football rolls on

gained 77 yards on 16 carries and one TD. The reliable Jeff Johnson was the game's leading rusher with 83 yards on 23 carries.

Meanwhile, the Fordham offense never seemed to get on track, thanks to the swarming Cat defense. 'Nova simply stifled the Ram attack in the second half, allowing just two first downs. It was three-and-out for the Rams the entire second half.

"I don't know if it was us or them wearing down," said linebacker Curtis Eller. "But I know we lacked emotion in the first half and turned it up," he added.

The win, however, was not without controversy. Leading 24-14 with three ticks remaining, Mosley scored from one yard out. Fordham did not take too kindly to this and stormed off the field, leaving the Cats waiting on the 50-yard line to shake hands. Needless to say, Talley was not pleased with Fordham's actions.

"They still had their first team defense in there and so we had our first team offense. If you know me, you know I never run up the score. I shook hands [with Ram Head Coach Larry Glueck] but he did not want to. He was obviously bitter but I can't worry about it."

The extra touchdown signified the return of the offense and was important as a confidence booster according to Colombo, who said it was for an offense that was "battling over the hump." The final score is also more indicative of the way 'Nova dominated in the second half, something pollsters take into effect as teams jockey for higher seeds in the postseason.

NOTE: The Cats end the regular season with a home game against improved Maine tomorrow at 1:30 p.m. at Villanova Stadium. With a win, the Cats will learn of their fate in the postseason tournament Nov. 22, when the 16-team field is announced. 'Nova still has an outside chance with a tough loss but a win guarantees a spot and means a likely home game the Saturday after Thanksgiving.

Yankee Conference

By FRANK SCHNEIDER
Staff Reporter

The Yankee Conference crowned its outright champion this week and for the seventh straight week at least three Yankee Conference teams were ranked in the I-AA top 20. This is only the second time in the last seven seasons that the Yankee Conference has had a sole champion. UMass won it outright in 1990.

Boston U 30 Connecticut 25

Boston U upset Connecticut 30-25 this week. BU earned only its second win in the conference with the help of Walter Norton. The junior quarterback came off the bench to spark the Terriers' offense by connecting on 11 of 16 passes for 137 yards and a touchdown. John Schaeffer led the Terriers' defense with 12 tackles and punter Chris Schrock had a solid game. He is leading the conference in punting with a 40.9 yard average. The Huskies were led by this week's Yankee Conference Rookie of the Week, Zeke Rodgers. Rodgers connected on 26 of 41 passes for 360 yards and a TD. He also rushed for a touchdown.

Maine 21 Massachusetts 13

Maine upset second place UMass 21-13. The Black Bears' offense produced 21 points against a tough UMass defense with the help of Ben Sirmans. Sirmans rushed for 165 yards and passed the 1,000 yard mark on the season. Maine's defense was led by Yankee Conference Defensive Player of the Week Dan Girard. Girard had 11 tackles, two fumble recoveries and an interception. UMass was led by John Creamer who had 13 tackles on the defensive line for a defeated Minuteman defense.

Towson State 33 Northestern 32

Towson squeaked by Northeastern 33-32. NU was led by Ralph Barone. He went 24 for 47 for 293 yards and two touchdowns. He also rushed for 98 yards and a TD. Northeastern is now 5-4-1 on the season, but has had problems with turnovers. Their turnover ratio is a -7.

Richmond 29 Delaware 21

Richmond upset Yankee Conference champion Delaware 29-21. Richmond was led by Yankee Conference Offensive Player of the Week Greg Lilly. Lilly threw for 374 yards and a touchdown. He is the leading passer in the conference with the help of Rod Boothes. Boothes now has 1,053 receiving yards on the season and 11 TDs. The Spiders have set a school record with 319 points. Eric Johnson paced the Spiders' defense with 12 tackles and an interception. Delaware was led by Dan Cooper, who had eight catches for 158 yards and one TD in the loss.

New Hampshire 20 Rhode Island 13

UNH defeated hapless Rhode Island 20-13. The Wildcats were led by the receiving duo of Mike Gallagher and John Perry, who have now combined for 91 receptions this year. Barry Bourassa rushed for 170 yards and a touchdown and Bobby Jordan had two interceptions.

Central Florida 41 James Madison 37

JMU's defense continues to sputter as the Dukes lost 41-37 to Central Florida. The Dukes were led by Kenny Sims who rushed for 170 yards and two TDs. It was his seventh 100-yard game of the season. The Dukes' defense is now allowing 32.3 points per game and 471.9 yards per game.

William & Mary 26 Lehigh 13

William & Mary handled Lehigh 26-13. William & Mary's scoring was led by Chris Dawson. Dawson set a Tribe school record by kicking four field goals (27, 28, 49, and 39 yards). Keith Booker had 10 tackles for a stingy Tribe defense.

Twomey welcomes coaching challenge

By MICHEL DAVIES
Staff Reporter

While sitting in the chair across from his desk, one can see why women's volleyball Head Coach Ron Twomey made his way up the coaching ranks so quickly. On the file cabinet is an immense chart with all the high school seniors he is recruiting, and tapes of all these seniors are stacked on the desk. Earlier in the day he was down in the film room with his assistants. You would think that the women's job would take up all of Twomey's time, but somehow he manages to find extra hours in the day to help coach the men's club team as well. With all the work that Twomey puts into volleyball, it is no wonder that he became a head coach so quickly.

Twomey only started playing volleyball at the age of 19 on a recreational level. Then after he received his degree from the University of California at Berkley in Physical Education, he was brought into the world of volleyball by an old friend in Oakland.

"I basically started coaching because an old friend got me into it. It turned out to be a great introduction because this person turned out to be one of the major influences in volleyball. I was his assistant coach in Oakland, and it turned out to be a great experience."

After numerous coaching jobs at the high school, junior college and university level, including the University of San Francisco, Twomey decided to coach only as a hobby at Carondelet High School, also in the bay area. But after a couple of years there, Twomey knew that he wanted something more.

"I decided after my second year [at Carondelet] that I wanted to coach volleyball for a living. So I thought that after my fourth year there, that would be a peak year for me, and I would seek out a college position."

So after his fourth year at Carondelet, Twomey did in fact move on. That year he met his fiance, and now wife, who lived in North Carolina. As a result Twomey took an assistant coaching job at Appalacian State in North Carolina, and after just a year with Appalacian State, Twomey accepted his first college head coaching position here at Villanova.

"I'm so happy to be here," said Twomey. "Everyone's so nice, and I've had such great support from my great assistant coaches to the Athletic Director to the Sports Information people; everyone has just been wonderful."

After speaking with Twomey you realize how enthusiastic he is, and how much he loves his job. Twomey carries that exited attitude onto the court with him and tries to transfer it to his players.

"I'm a strong believer that people excel in what they most enjoy. So I just try to make volleyball as fun as possible for these women. I think that if they like what they are doing, they will succeed."

Along with all the excitement that Twomey tries to pass on to his players is hard work. This is obvious, especially with all the "suicide" running drills his teams are seen doing after practice.

> None of those teams [in the Big East Tournament] intimidate our team. Our psychological approach to this tournament is going to be positive.
> Head Coach Ron Twomey

"If someone has a problem with the disciplinary things that go on, they can come talk to me about it. I have an open door policy. If they want to discuss something, they are encouraged to. But this is still my team, and I have to have the last word."

But Twomey does realize that it is the players who win and lose games, and not him.

"This may sound contradictory, but as much as it is my team, it is theirs also. They are the ones who put it on the line every game, and they are the ones who either win or lose, not me. I try to keep both those things in mind when making decisions."

Although the women's team did not do as well as he might have hoped this year, look for Twomey's winning attitude and hard work ethic to pay off next season.

"The recruiting is looking very good this year. I'm willing to go out on a limb and say we will be better next season than we were this season."

Ice Cats glide to victory

By JONATHAN PASSMAN
Staff Reporter

Despite battling a slew of injuries to some of their stars, the IceCats won their first two home games last weekend. With some excellent goaltending, the Cats beating Quinnipiac 5-2 Nov. 14 and Fairfield 5-4 Nov. 15. 'Nova is now 3-2 overall, 2-2 in ECAC play.

"The goaltending was awesome this weekend," said sophomore center Ryan Stattenfield. "They just made some incredible saves that kept us in the games."

Stattenfield was talking about the dynamic duo of freshmen Dan Nadeau, who stopped 49 Quinnipiac shots, and Mike Kelly, who saved 47 against Fairfield.

In the home opener against Quinnipiac, several players recorded points in the win. Freshman forward Keith Curran scored two goals, while junior John Demers had three assists. Junior Jim Ready, freshman Greg Mello and Demers also had a goal apiece.

Against Fairfield, the Cats faced a very talented team, having to come from behind in the first two periods. Mello had his first 'Nova hat trick, giving him the team goal lead at seven, while junior Jim McGowan notched his first goal of the year.

"We had our backs to the wall in the first period, but we came out pumping in the second and third, and that's what led us to victory," said sophomore Dave Trimble.

Injuries appear to be a negative factor so far this year. Senior forward Steve Flynn, the team captain, is out with a bad knee, while junior defenseman Anthony Sorrentino and Stattenfield each are sidelined with shoulder injuries.

However, with every cloud, there is a silver lining. The 11 freshmen on the squad are receiving considerable playing time, and are adjusting very well.

"We are very pleased with the play of the freshmen, considering the injuries ... and you can't say enough about the goaltending," said Head Coach Pat Ferrill.

"Everyone is playing like a team, everyone is contributing off the bench, and that's the important thing in winning hockey games," added Trimble.

The IceCats travel to the Curry College Tournament tonight and tomorrow night, hoping for the two-game sweep. Their next home game is Dec. 4 against Army at the Haverford Skatium.

"We have a good young team, and we're the team to beat now. The fan support really helps pump us up, so please come out and see us," said Trimble.

No. 1 The Citadel 50 VMI 0

Running backs Terrance rivers and Cedric Sims both rushed for over 100 yards to lead the Citadel to the rout of VMI. In the win, the Citadel set a school record by gaining 610 yards, 512 of which were on the ground. VMI yardage only amounted to 164. The win is the Citadel's ninth, the most in school history. The Citadel now shares the No. 1 ranking with Northeast Louisiana.

No. 2 Northeast Louisiana 41 Steven F. Austin 22

The victory preserved NE Louisiana's No. 1 ranking and gave them a home-field berth for the first round of the playoffs. They hold the top spot in the Southland Conference at 8-2 overall, 6-0 in conference play.

No. 3 Northern Iowa 37 Western Illinois 6

Quarterback Jay Johnson was 16-23 for 338 yards and two TDs to lead Northern Iowa. Senior flanker Kenny Shedd caught two passes for 122 yards and a touchdown. Shedd also returned four punts for 75 yards including one of 54 yards. Running back Tank Corner added two touchdowns.

No. 4 Middle Tennessee St. 70 Morehead St. 0

Running back Walter Dunson carried 14 times for 86 yards and three touchdowns to pace MTSU. Brigham Lyons added another 81 yards on the ground and two more touchdowns. Quarterback Kelly Holcomb was 5-8 for 116 yards and one touchdown.

No. 5 Idaho 28 Montana St. 7

Big Sky Player of the Week Sheraton May carried 26 times for 143 yards and two TDs to lead Idaho. Also contributing was linebacker Jason Shelf, who had 15 tackles (10 solo) and one sack.

No. 6 Marshall 52 Tennessee Tech 14

Running back Glen Pedro rushed for 100 yards to lead Marshall to the romp. Quarterback Michael Payton was 14-21 for 206 yards and one touchdown in the first half. Backup Todd Donnan replaced Payton and threw for 66 yards and a touchdown. Receivers Troy Brown and Ricky Carter caught six balls apiece and scored one touchdown each.

No. 7 Youngstown St. 10 Akron 10

Daron Alcorn kicked a 39-yard field goal to help Akron salvage a tie with YSU. YSU remains at No. 7 despite the tie. Akron is 6-3-1.

No. 9 Samford 42 Tennessee-Martin 25

Fullback Tank Edwards rushed for 342 yards and set a school record with four touchdowns to help Samford to the victory. The 342 yards included touchdown runs of 68 and 48 yards. Samford leads independents with an 8-2 record.

No. 10 Delaware 21 No. 19 Richmond 29

Quarterback Greg Lily threw for 374 yards to help Richmond overcome a 14-3 deficit. Richmond flanker Rod Brooks caught seven passes for 190 yards and one TD. On the ground, Spider running back Uly Scott carried 24 times for 84 yards and a score.

The loss broke Delaware's 12-game Yankee Conference winning streak; however, they still clinched the conference title. Delaware will host a first round playoff game.

Women capture fourth straight ECAC

FILE PHOTO

Carole Zajac led Villanova with a 16:28.2 first place finish at the ECAC and Regional Championship.

By SEAN KELLY
Staff Reporter

The preparation area at Lehigh University's cross country course for the ECAC and Regional Championships must have been quite a spectacle last weekend with many of the nation's top organizations clustered together. Teams like Georgetown, Providence, Cornell and William & Mary had more than their own capabilities to worry about as they awaited the start of the race to see who really is the best in the East.

Waiting in their own placid section of the field was a stoic group of ladies wearing their usual conservatively patterned uniforms. There is nothing fancy about their blue and white singlets, but the word Villanova bannered across the front is enough to make any team fear defeat.

As for the Wildcats, they feared nothing. It has reached the point for 'Nova where confidence is almost better than preparation itself. The three weeks leading up to these championships was not a typical schedule of work-outs at all. In fact, Head Coach Marty Stern for the most part just left them alone.

"It was just a matter of staying in shape and getting some good rest," said Stern. "Actually, I really didn't even talk to them much other than a hello."

With winter track getting under way soon, the mentor had business to take care of with other runners. Only a few hard workouts in the middle of the layover was all that was needed to keep up the stamina and confidence.

"I think that me staying away from them was the best thing for them," said Stern.

With the NCAA Championships only one meet away, it would have been easy for 'Nova to lose sight of its task. The pre-race speech included a warning to not look ahead toward the nationals but to think of the Regional meet. In a region that includes a fifth of the nation's qualifying field, this "was not a meet to hold anything back," Stern said.

> I don't need any more wins or trophies to put on my resume. This one is all for [the team] now.
> Head Coach Marty Stern

Unfortunately for the Hoyas and Friars, the Cats were relentless in their hunt for a fourth straight Regional and ECAC crown.

As usual, Carole Zajac, the country's best, finished at a remarkable 16:28.2 which set her well ahead of any other runner. Senior Nnenna Lynch captured the second place position, finishing at an impressive time of 16:39.1. The other three times counted in the final Regional tally were senior Cheri Goddard's 6th place clip of 16:56.0, Becky Spies 13th place mark of 17:19.5, and freshman Megan Flowers' 25th place time of 17:35.4. Flowers had some health problems at the two-mile mark that slowed her for the race. There is no fear of any reoccurring health problems for her at the NCAAs.

The lady harriers have their flight set for Saturday morning when they will leave in an attempt to make history. For the first time in the sport, a women's team can win a fourth straight national title. However, the women, and more importantly the coaches, claim that they are not worried about the streak. This is an assembly of highly-talented women, and the streak takes away part of the personal identity that they have thrived for throughout the season. An NCAA Championship trophy of their own is their first concern. These Wildcats have grown into a close unit. At this point they are obligated to one another to win the title.

"I don't need any more wins or trophies to put on my resume," said Stern. "This one is all for them now."

The task of winning the National Championship has been left in the hands of the ladies themselves. With the exception of the two freshmen, the Cats know exactly what it takes to win and now to perform at the show. For

Men run away with Championship

By LARRY LANZA
Staff Reporter

The Villanova men's cross-country team is headed to the NCAA Championships for the first time since 1983 after winning the NCAA Region II Championship Nov. 14 at Lehigh University at the Intercollegiate Association of American Amateur Athletes Championships.

Led by outstanding sophomore Louie Quintana, and supported by a tremendous team effort, the Wildcats rolled back a strong field to finish second overall to Providence in the scoring for the IC4A Championship, which includes NCAA Regions I and II.

With 150 meters left to the finish of the 10 kilometrer (6.2-mile) race, Quintana pulled away from Providence's Mark Carroll and went on to become the second consecutive Wildcat to capture the IC4A individual championship. Quintana's excellent time of 29 minutes, 57 seconds, left the runner-up Carroll, the Big East Conference Champion, three seconds behind.

After seven runners finished behind Carroll, last year's individual IC4A Champion, Villanova senior Terrence Mahon came through the finish in 30-34 to place 10th and lead the rest of the Villanova attack.

Behind Mahon, two Wildcat sophomores, Dave Hartman and Ken Nason, captured 18th and 22nd, respectively. Hartman's time of 30:52 and Nason's clocking of 30:56 both represented fast races on a day that turned out cold and windy.

The elements also failed to prevent a strong performance by Wildcat junior Michael Going, who completed Villanova's scoring with a 40th place finish in 31:23. Behind Going, sophomore Kyle Watson took 88th in 32:06 and freshman Matt Lamourie was 92nd out of the 244-man field in 32:10.

"Everyone pulled together. We ran like a team. If any one of us hadn't done well, we wouldn't have been able to win our title, said Going of a team that included three sophomores and a freshman.

"Winning the race was surprising," said Quintana. "I just went in to run well for the team," he added.

"The pace was very even and felt pretty easy. Since it was windy, there was some drafting behind others that was going on. I was running with a small group of about three or four until the 4.5-mile mark. Then it came down to myself and Carroll, and by the last half mile, we were really running hard," said Quintana.

After the final IC4A scoring was tabulated, 'Nova was 62 points behind a Providence team which grabbed second, third, fourth, seventh, and 12th in the race and which is now ranked No. 2 in the nation behind two-time defending champion Arkansas. More importantly for the No. 5 Wildcats, however, 'Nova's running earned a nine-point win over No. 9 Georgetown in the race for the NCAA Region II title.

Looking ahead to the Nov. 23 NCAA Championships at Bloomington, Ind., 'Nova finds the opportunity to go head-to-head for the first time this year against No. 1 Arkansas, No. 3 Wisconsin, No. 4 Arizona, No. 6 Oregon and No. 8 Notre Dame. Among those headed for Indiana are No. 7 Colorado, No. 9 Georgetown and No. 10 East Tennessee State, teams 'Nova has already defeated.

"I know we'll do well at the NCAAs. We're going to aim for the top four or five," said Nason.

While it will be a first-time trip for his teammates, 'Nova's two-time All-American Terrence Mahon will be travelling to the NCAA Cross-Country Championships for a fourth consecutive year. This year's championship will mark his first with his Villanova team, however. Three seasons ago, Mahon ran for Oregon, helping the Ducks to a second place finish, while the last two years, Mahon has represented the Cats individually.

Cats down Fordham, 31-14

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Senior Reporter

Yes, there was a football game played over Homecoming. And for those of you still having trouble remembering, the Cats did win.

While most of the student body was busy tailgating, the Cats were grinding out another hard-fought victory, this time over Fordham, 31-14. The non-conference triumph lifts 'Nova to 8-2 and upped its national ranking to seventh going into tomorrow's final contest against Maine (6-4, 4-3). A win over the Black Bears would secure a Division I-AA playoff berth for the Cats.

As is the custom with this year's team, the Cats fell behind early and then raised it up a notch to earn the victory. Trailing 14-7 at halftime, both the offense and defense combined to put the clamps on an over-matched yet gutsy Ram team. Quarterback Tom Colombo engineered numerous scoring opportunities on his way to passing for a season-high 283 yards.

"The games are just not easier," said Head Coach Andy Talley. "Last year [when the Cats went 10-2] it was like cutting through butter. But this team has battled adversity. It's been through tough games which have made them battle-tested. This is a team that other teams do not want to play."

Especially now that the offense finally seems to be clicking. Bolstered by 32 first downs (tying a school record) and 465 yards of total offense, it is a wonder the Cats were held to just 31 points. Tight end Scott Donald, who recently had been a missing cog in the machine, snagged six passes for 68 yards and flanker Harold Hart had another impressive outing, hauling in five passes for 65 yards and two touchdowns.

A big part of the offense, Donald was the main reason for the offense's sudden success. Talley concentrated on establishing the passing game, which had plagued the Cats all season, by unleashing Colombo with 47 passes. After a rough start, it really started paying dividends as Colombo recovered to play his best half of the year after intermission.

As the passing game ironed out the kinks, the running game continued to pile up the yards. Tailback Kevin Mosley, not expected to play, took over for the injured Eric Hunt in the second half and

University President delivers State of University Address

University President the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., delivered the 1992 State of the University Address Nov. 20.

The Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., president of the University presented his annual State of the University Address Nov. 20 in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center. The address focused primarily on the implementation of the University's Strategic Plan thus far and the role which the plan has played in the progress of the University's Capital Campaign.

"The Strategic Plan is a broad blueprint for the future of the University," said Dobbin. Dobbin also said that the Strategic Plan and the Capital Campaign are virtually "interwoven. The Strategic Plan has made the Capital Campaign enormously successful beyond our expectations," added Dobbin.

The administration had anticipated that at this point in the Capital Campaign (10 months after its inception), approximately $19.5 million would be raised, said Dobbin. In fact, the Capital Campaign has already brought in $31.5 million, he said.

Dobbin cites two reasons why the campaign has been so successful. Many people have a deep affection for the University which goes back many years, said Dobbin. He also credits the fact that the University has a strategic plan which donors are very excited about. "It is important that the University knows where it's going and how it is getting there and people want to be a part of it," Dobbin said.

Dobbin reported on some of the major facets of the Strategic Plan and the progress being made in those areas. In the Strategic Plan, a major commitment was made to increase the endowment of the University, said Dobbin. The plan addresses the need for increased student financial aid and the institution of more faculty chairs and professorships, Dobbin said. Thus far, $6.9 million has been allocated to increased student financial aid. Also, $5.7 million has been committed to the development of more faculty chairs and

Scanlon receives Endowed Chair

By KATE SZUMANSKI

The University endowed the Josephine C. Connelly Chair in Christian Theology to the Rev. Michael J. Scanlon, O.S.A., in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center Dec. 2. Scanlon, professor of Religious Studies, received the chair during the inaugural ceremony.

Chairperson of the religious studies department Dr. Emily M. Binns welcomed the assembly to the ceremony and introduced the program. "At this auspicious point in Villanova's history ... we mark a time of renewed commitment to the University," she said.

University President Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., delivered the opening remarks, saying "this is indeed an historic moment in the history of Villanova as we inaugurate the first endowed faculty chair. It is my hope and my dream that our chairs we will be inaugurating ... will not only provide a forum for keeping and retaining and attracting fine faculty, fine scholars and fine teachers to Villanova, but also scholars who are able to make cross-disciplinary discourse possible," said Dobbin. Scanlon is quite capable of making this type of discourse possible, Dobbin added.

Former student acquitted of rape, assault charges

By ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWSKI
News Editor

A former Villanova student was aquitted of rape and indecent assault charges Nov. 20, according to an article in the Delaware County Daily Times.

Francis I. Gallagher was charged in a case involving a fellow student who claimed she was sexually assaulted by him after she became drunk at a party and passed out in his dorm room, reported the Times.

The alleged victim and several of her friends testified at the trial that she had become sick and vomited about 11:30 p.m. Nov. 2. The alleged victim's friends testified that they put her to bed at approximately 1:55 a.m. They left her, groggy, after she had gotten into bed.

In court the alleged victim testified that "I woke up still in bed and he [Gallagher] was having intercourse with me. I had nothing on below the waist," according to the Times article.

Gallagher testified on his own behalf. During the evening the woman had made sexual advances toward him, said Gallagher. She had become sick and had been put to bed by her friends, Gallagher testified.

After everyone had left, he "laid down beside her on top of the comforter away from her," said the defendant. "I felt her hand going down my pants. I noticed she had taken off her clothes and I rolled on top of her," Gallagher testifed. The alleged victim became upset because she was worried that she might become pregnant, said Gallagher.

The jury, comprised of 10 men and two women, aquitted Gallagher after three hours of deliberation. "I do not believe that the number of men on the jury compared to the number of women had anything to do with the verdict," said defense attorney Richard Wasserbly.

"That was the type of jury I wanted. I believe that a jury of older men would be more sympathetic to the victim and more judgemental of the perpetrator. You never know what a jury will do until they do it," said John F.X. Reilly, assistant district attorney for Delaware County.

Women's cross country team captures its fourth consecutive NCAA title

By SEAN KELLY
Staff Reporter

Since the late days of summer when the Villanova women's cross country team began its annual climb towards the National Championship, the pressure to win the title had grown immeasurably. The Nov. 23 NCAA Championship meet had been engraved into the women's minds from the very beginning as the date they could make history.

Just about everyone except for the Wildcat coaching staff had overwhelmed the 1992 'Nova squad with expectations to continue the streak. Not since 1989 has the Villanova women's cross country team experienced anything other than a win.

Head Coach Marty Stern insists that the NCAA Championship meet is the least amount of pressure he feels all season; however, this is not the case for the team.

"Before the race there was a tremendous amount of pressure on these women to attempt to do something that's never been done before in collegiate history. And that's win four in a row," said Stern.

Greatness and tradition have surely overcome pressure, though, as the women's cross country team has now captured an unheard of fourth straight NCAA title. As if there was any doubt before, the Wildcat coaching staff has unquestionably created a dynasty.

A more fitting ending to the 1992 season would have been hard to come by for what Stern called, "a dream kind of a season." There certainly is a special glow throughout the cross country offices these days after bringing home yet another title. None of the coaches or athletes have taken the spotlight or the respect from their peers without the greatest amount of appreciation.

"Father Dobbin was the first person to call me on the telephone and the first person to meet me at the airport was Ted Aceto with his wife. Mary Anne Dowling even came out with us to represent the Athletic Department. They care and I really appreciate it," said Stern.

There was a time when no one showed up to meet the National Champion 'Nova team at all. Those times are surely in the past as the appreciation for what this team has accomplished has erupted.

"It was just a great, great feeling hearing the band play V

Hacker Faces Felony Charge

SEATTLE — A University of Washington student used the campus computer system to break into systems at Boeing, a U.S. District Court and the Environmental Protection Agency, the FBI has charged.

According to the FBI complaint, Charles Matthew Anderson, 19, a university student, and Costa George Katsaniotis, 21, of Seattle, were charged Nov. 10 with conspiracy to defraud the United States.

Anderson allegedly gave Katsaniotis information on how to break into the Boeing and court systems, the complaint said.

The two men could face maximum sentences of five years in prison and a $10,000 fine if convicted on the charges. The two men reportedly said they broke into the computer systems as a challenge, rather than to obtain any vital information.

Dartmouth Offers Substance-Free Dorm

DARTMOUTH, N.H. — Dartmouth University officials designated a substance-free dormitory this year, and applications to live in the building were nearly double the number of available rooms.

"I wanted a dorm I could come home to. I definitely like it here," said Laura Sewell, a freshman resident.

The dorm, Butterfield Hall, houses 55 students. University officials said the request for a substance-free dorm was made by students last spring.

Students who live in Butterfield Hall have to sign an agreement that states they will adopt "the goals and community standards established for a substance-free dorm."

"As long as the idea is student-originated, I think the college should supply substance-free housing. I think people are pleased with the way it has been going," said Scott Molinaroli, the student area coordinator for Butterfield.

Hunger Awareness Week Held

CARLISLE, Pa. — Students and faculty at Dickinson College held a Hunger and Homelessness Awareness Week, slept outdoors in cardboard boxes and fasted to understand the social problems.

The observance was expanded from one day to four days this year due to an increase of student interest, said Marty Willard, assistant director of the school's religious affairs office. The office has organized an annual day of fasting since 1976 to show concern for the hungry in the United States and abroad.

The students held a hunger banquet, where they were randomly divided into First, Second and Third World people and given a meal traditionally eaten by those populations. They then spent a night outdoors and fasted.

William And Mary To Celebrate 300th

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — The College of William and Mary will mark its 300th anniversary with a year-long series of events in 1993.

The college was chartered Feb. 8, 1693 by King William III and Queen Mary II of England to bring education to colonists and Christianity to Native Americans. Among its early alumni are Thomas Jefferson, James Monroe and John Tyler, all presidents of the United States.

William and Mary, a public, four-year residential university, will focus its celebrations on two periods: Charter Week, Feb. 8-13, and homecoming, Oct. 20-24. "In human terms, there are very few things that reach the age of 300. That, alone, is something to celebrate," said Henry Rosovsky, a member of the William and Mary class of 1949 and now a professor at Harvard University.

College of Arts and Sciences welcomes Assistant to the Dean

By MEGHAN DONAHUE
Staff Reporter

Many students confronted with the process of registration this year have been guided through the complexity of core requirements and major fulfillments by a new presence in the assistant dean's office.

Ben Summers, formerly involved with the University NROTC program, moved into the St. Augustine Center for the Liberal Arts in September to assist students with their various academic dilemmas and decisions.

As assistant to the dean, Summers occupies a role different from his previous position in the naval science department. A colonel in the Marine Corps for four years, Sumners' career shifted from the military to the academic when he came to Villanova in 1982. While connected with the NROTC, he served as chairman of the naval science department, both counseling midshipmen and teaching management.

Summers expressed enthusiasm for his new placement, saying, "Change is always exciting. I like to do different things."

As academic advisor to the Bachelor of Comprehensive Science program, Summers counsels 120 science students working towards an intensive, specialized degree. Instituted five years ago, the program owes much of its success to Summers. In addition to this role, the assistant dean manages a number of other academic affairs: matters of academic integrity, wavers, withdrawals, credit transfers and a range of other administrative duties.

In hopes of meeting the growing needs of students, Sumners suggested changes and improvements he would like to implement. Summers encourages increased faculty participation in freshman advisement. Students need to make an effort by using faculty office hours to consult their professors when in need, said Summers. Students should also take advantage of the study skills information offered at Corr hall, he added.

Extra week of classes added to academic calendar

By JANE PAPACCIO
Assistant Editor

The University's academic calendar has been changed to include an extra week of classes at the beginning of the fall semester and end of the spring semester for the 1992-93 school year. Faculty and administrators decided to add an extra week of classes to the schedule because "it had always been necessary to have more class time," according to Dr. Richard Neville, vice president of Student Life.

A number of faculty members had been discussing the possibility of adding an extra week of classes to the academic schedule. The Faculty Affairs Committee met and voted unanimously to propose the new calendar, said the Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., vice president of Academic Affairs.

By by-passing the University Senate, the proposal was sent directly to the president of the University, who approved the request, said Gallen. The Faculty Affairs Committee can either send proposals to the president of the University directly, or they may first be sent to the University Senate.

The proposal was approved by the president and sent to the University Senate for implementation.

"I was a little disappointed that the idea of an extra week of classes each semester never went through the University Senate; only the implementation went through the University Senate," added Ken Batchelor, president of Student Government.

It was difficult to decide when to add the extra week of classes to the University's schedule, said Neville. "Many people were reluctant to start before Labor Day and continue past Christmas break. Furthermore, a majority of students was against losing Fall Break in the transition," added Neville.

It was decided that the extra week of classes would be added before Labor Day so as to guarantee that Fall and Christmas breaks would still be part of the schedule, said Neville.

In previous years, many students arrived back on campus before Labor Day anyway, said Neville. Due to the Orientation process, fall sports practices and band camp, the campus is already well-populated before Labor Day, Neville added.

"The University has maintained Fall and Spring breaks, Christmas break and reading days; we just come back earlier now," added Gallen.

Amy D'Arcy, head resident assistant of St. Monica Hall, agrees with Neville in that "the change in the number of classes doesn't really affect must students. I, for one, come back two weeks earlier than everyone else in order to prepare for the incoming students to the residence halls."

"I don't think a lot of students know the change in class time even happened," said Batchelor.

"I realized that next semester we're getting out a week later, but this semester I didn't even notice the change," said sophomore Sharon Wehrle.

The new semester schedule is an asset to the Villanova community. It will give faculty more time to cover course content, said Neville.

"I think it is academically very sound. You have more time to do what you would have done in only thirteen weeks," added Gallen.

The major plus to it is that it gives teachers and students a chance to cover material which would have been rushed through in the past, said Neville.

Rush stresses mutual selection

By KATHLEEN COONEY
Assistant News Editor

Sorority Rush will begin Jan. 14, with an orientation meeting, said Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities. The rushees will be divided into groups of 10, each with a counselor. Rush is a mutual selection process where the rushees and the sororities choose each other, said Bonas.

There will be four 45 minute parties Jan. 14 and four Jan. 15, giving everyone the opportunity to get to know each other, said Bonas. The sororities will find out what sort of young women want to rush this year, while at the same time the parties give the rushees the chance to see what makes each sorority different from the others, added Bonas.

After the first set of parties, each sorority meets to decide which of the rushees they would like to invite back, said Bonas. The rushees will then receive as many as eight invitations to the next round of parties which begin Jan. 17. Although this time they are only able to accept five invitations, if the rushees are still interested in another they could regret with interest. This means the sorority will keep them on file and possibly invite them back during a later round of parties, added Bonas.

The process then repeats itself. The rushees can attend up to five 45 minute parties Jan. 17 after which the sororities must meet again to decide which rushee to invite back to the next round, said Bonas. After each set of parties, the sororities invite back fewer rushees, and the rushees must cut down the number of parties they attend. In this way, the process is a mutual selection, added Bonas.

For the third round each party lasts an hour on Jan. 21 and 22. The rushees may only accept three invitations. Preference parties are held Jan. 24. They last one hour and the rushees can only attend two. When a sorority invites a rushee to a preference party, it means she is a serious candidate for that sorority, added Bonas.

After the preference parties each sorority meets and ranks the women who attended in the order in which they would like to invite them back. At this time the rushees must also decide their first and second choice. A computer matches the rushee with a sorority based on the rushee's preference. The invitations are sent Jan. 25.

CASHE service aids search for financial resources

By KATE SZUMANSKI
News Editor

The Financial Aid Office is providing a new scholarship search service, called the College Aid Sources for Higher Education service (CASHE), to members of the Villanova community, said Stephen Magliocco, financial aid counselor.

"This service is being offered free of charge to help students locate scholarships, fellowships, loans and work study opportunities," he said.

The University purchased the rights to use the CASHE system from National College Services, said Magliocco.

"Some college scholarship search services charge anywhere from $45 to $300 for scholarship searches," said Magliocco. "Some hired scholarship search services guarantee their services," he said. "What they are actually guaranteeing, however, is a Student Stafford Loan which is available to any student."

The Financial Aid Office does not guarantee the results of this service, he said. "Students can do whatever they choose to do with the information they receive from the CASHE service," he added.

The scholarship search process begins with the student's completion of an application. The information requested on the application includes a student's grade point average, intended or current college majors, hobbies and interests and ethnic and racial affiliations. All information from the application is programmed into a computer and the computer performs the scholarship search.

Applicants receive their search results soon after they complete and return the CASHE application, said Magliocco. The CASHE form includes a CASHE profile, directions as to how to read the guide and the CASHE awards.

"This first year will be experimental," said Magliocco. "Already 20 students have received their CASHE forms," he said, adding that this service is an excellent way for students to learn about available financial resources. "We want to let the Villanova community know that this service is available for their use," he added.

Over the past century and a half, Villanova has grown from a tiny college of seven scholars to a thriving University, with scores of buildings and more than 11,000 students. Founded in 1842 by a small group of Augustinians, Villanova faced many struggles during its early years. Declines in the national and local economies, a shortage of faculty members and an upsurge of anti-Catholicism all threatened the fledgling institution. Yet, Villanova survived to celebrate its Golden Jubilee in 1892-93, and a half dozen years later it launched an ambitious building program. These attractive new structures, rendered in Collegiate Gothic style, in addition to several new academic programs, resulted in a healthy growth during the early twentieth century.

The 1920s brought even greater expansion. More buildings arose, intercollegiate athletics became a major force on campus, and student social life glittered with lavish balls and big name bands. Then, the Great Depression struck, bringing a large decline in numbers and forcing the college to postpone ambitious building plans. Prosperity returned with World War II, but enrollments were again threatened when a large percentage of Villanova's all-male student body prepared to join the military. Only a Navy training program on campus saved the college from great hardship during the war years. Despite the emergency, Villanova managed to observe its Centennial in 1942-1943.

During the past half-century, Villanova has known more uninterrupted growth than it has at any time in its history. Hundreds of veterans flooded the campus following World War II. Post-war prosperity and the baby boom continued to fuel student enrollments. Dozens of buildings went up, the curriculum was reformed and extended and in 1953 Villanova officially became a university. The 1960s and 1970s saw student protests at Villanova: some of them concerned local conditions, while others focused on issues of national scope. In 1968, Villanova opened all its programs to women for the first time, the culmination of a long evolution toward coeducation which had begun five decades before. In the 1980s and 1990s, Villanova received widespread recognition for excellence, as its graduates distinguished themselves in many walks of life.

This pictorial history of Villanova was the result of many hours of work, during which a variety of images, both archival black and white and color photographs, were selected from thousands of possible items, many of which have never before been published. A sparkling text and lively captions were combined with these images to paint a rich and often moving portrait of Villanova's past 150 years.

Extra week of classes added to academic calendar

By JANE PAPACCIO

The University's academic calendar has been changed to include an extra week of classes at the beginning of the fall semester and end of the spring semester for the 1992-93 school year. Faculty and administrators decided to add an extra week of classes to the schedule because "it had always been necessary to have more class time," according to Dr. Richard Neville, vice president of Student Life.

A number of faculty members had been discussing the possibility of adding an extra week of classes to the academic schedule. The Faculty Affairs Committee met and voted unanimously to propose the new calendar, said the Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., vice president of Academic Affairs.

Rush stresses mutual selection

By KATHLEEN COONEY
Assistant News Editor

Sorority Rush will begin Jan. 14, with an orientation meeting, said Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities. The rushees will be divided into groups of 10, each with a counselor. Rush is a mutual selection process where the rushees and the sororities choose each other, said Bonas.

There will be four 45 minute parties Jan. 14 and four Jan. 15, giving everyone the opportunity to get to know each other, said Bonas. The sororities will find out what sort of young women want to rush this year, while at the same time the parties give the rushees the chance to see what makes each sorority different from the others, added Bonas.

After the first set of parties, each sorority meets to decide which of the rushees they would like to invite back, said Bonas. The rushees will then receive as many as eight invitations to the next round of parties which begin Jan. 17. Although this time they are only able to accept five invitations, if the rushees are still interested in another they could regret with interest. This means the sorority will keep them on file and possibly invite them back during a later round of parties, added Bonas.

The process then repeats itself. The rushees can attend up to five 45 minute parties Jan. 17 after which the sororities must meet again to decide which rushee to invite back to the next round, said Bonas. After each set of parties, the sororities invite back fewer rushees, and the rushees must cut down the number of parties they attend. In this way, the process is a mutual selection, added Bonas.

For the third round each party lasts an hour on Jan. 21 and 22. The rushees may only accept three invitations. Preference parties are held Jan. 24. They last one hour and the rushees can only attend two. When a sorority invites a rushee to a preference party, it means she is a serious candidate for that sorority, added Bonas.

After the preference parties each sorority meets and ranks the women who attended in the order in which they would like to invite them back. At this time the rushees must also decide their first and second choice. A computer matches the rushee with a sorority based on the rushee's preference. The invitations are sent Jan. 25.

CASHE service aids search for financial resources

By KATE SZUMANSKI
News Editor

The Financial Aid Office is providing a new scholarship search service, called the College Aid Sources for Higher Education service (CASHE), to members of the Villanova community, said Stephen Magliocco, financial aid counselor.

"This service is being offered free of charge to help students locate scholarships, fellowships, loans and work study opportunities," he said.

The University purchased the rights to use the CASHE system from National College Services, said Magliocco.

"Some college scholarship search services charge anywhere from $45 to $300 for scholarship searches," said Magliocco. "Some hired scholarship search services guarantee their services," he said. "What they are actually guaranteeing, however, is a Student Stafford Loan which is available to any student."

The Financial Aid Office does not guarantee the results of this service, he said. "Students can do whatever they choose to do with the information they receive from the CASHE service," he added.

The scholarship search process begins with the student's completion of an application. The information requested on the application includes a student's grade point average, intended or current college majors, hobbies and interests and ethnic and racial affiliations. All information from the application is programmed into a computer and the computer performs the scholarship search.

Applicants receive their search results soon after they complete and return the CASHE application, said Magliocco. The CASHE form includes a CASHE profile, directions as to how to read the guide and the CASHE awards.

"This first year will be experimental," said Magliocco. "Already 20 students have received their CASHE forms," he said, adding that this service is an excellent way for students to learn about available financial resources. "We want to let the Villanova community know that this service is available for their use," he added.

Catholic higher education focus of campus lecture

By TIFFANY CHRISTENSEN
Staff Reporter

Dr. Paulo Freire from the Harvard School of Education spoke on Catholic Higher Education Nov. 20 in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center. The lecture, part of the Sesquicentennial celebration, was the second of three discussions dedicated to ideas in education pertinent to a Catholic university.

Freire discussed ideas from his book, Pedagogy of the Oppressed, which describes Catholic education.

Freire described the crucial tasks of a Catholic educational institution, from what he called a "postmodern progressive" perspective. Freire spoke of the value of learning from the religious, political and socioeconomic differences of others.

"Being tolerant means to be radically democratic, yet not to stop defending the ideas we fight for," said Freire. A lack of humility, which Freire cited as a companion of intolerance, was described as a problem in many academic communities.

> We must not think that imagination and creation belong to the artists, while the scientists' job is to reveal or unveil . . . truths.
> Dr. Paulo Freire

Other essential tasks of a Catholic educational institution include curiosity, a desire to unveil truths, passion and an acknowledgement of beauty, said Freire. "We must not think that imagination and creation belong to the artists, while the scientists' job is to reveal or unveil ... truths," added Freire.

Freire also described one conflict faced by Catholic educational institutions as "the dichotomy between transcendence and worldliness and between history and meta-history. God is a presence in history, but a presence that does not prevent us from making history," said Freire.

Freire was born in Brazil in 1921 and came to America where he attended Harvard University after experiencing poverty, a military coup and imprisonment in his own country. Freire said that these experiences contributed to his theories on education.

State of University address

professorships, added Dobbin.

"Our decision to 'rightsize' is not a response to decreased student demand for Villanova," said Dobbin. "The Admissions office has seen a 27 percent increase in the amount of applications it has received as compared to the number received at this time last year," Dobbin added. "Rightsizing" is simply a response to campus and facility overpopulation, he said.

The full-time undergraduate population of the University peaked at approximately 6,500 students last year. The expected number of full-time undergraduate students for the 1992-93 academic year has dropped to 6,100. A by-product of the rightsizing is that the University is accepting a more academically elite type of student, said Dobbin.

An increase in student housing is also a major issue addressed in the Strategic Plan. "It is our goal to eventually have 70 percent of the full-time undergraduate population living on campus," said Dobbin. The planning for construction of new residence halls on west campus is on target and housing should be available by the time the current freshman class are juniors, he added.

A portion of the Strategic Plan is dedicated to improvements within the athletic program, said Dobbin. An issue which the plan will be focusing on specifically is that of gender equity within the Athletic Department. "We are seeking to establish true equality for both males and females in the Athletic Department," said Dobbin.

"Villanova is very well thought of. I'm learning that as I go out and talk to people. We go right to the top of various foundations," Dobbin said of the progress made in raising funds during the Capital Campaign. "What makes Villanova special is the staff, faculty and students that represent the University."

Endowed Chair

Dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences the Rev. Kail C. Ellis, O.S.A. introduced Scanlon to the assembly. Ellis said Scanlon's "versatility and commitment to education on all levels has manifested itself by [his] teaching first-year students in the humanities seminar program." Through Scanlon's scholarship and teaching, he has exemplified the spirit of St. Augustine "to the benefit of all who have the privilege of knowing him," Ellis said.

Dobbin conferred upon Scanlon the Josephine C. Connelly Endowed Chair in Christian Theology in the name of the University and presented him with a medal.

Emily Connelly Riley, executive vice president and trustee of the Connelly Foundation, expressed her family's pleasure in being associated with Villanova's "proud history and exciting future." Riley said the Connelly family is "delighted and honored with [the University's] selection of the Rev. Michael J. Scanlon as chairholder of the Josephine C. Connelly Chair in Christian Theology."

Scanlon delivered his inaugural lecture with the theme of postmodernism. "To address the spirit of modernity in our post-modern world, let us hope that community will replace individualism ... With this contemporary vindication of community and tradition, a truly Catholic moment can occur, and it can occur here at our University. With the great empowered optimism of our sacramental imagination, we can project increasing conversation above the various disciplines here — the humanities, the sciences and the professional schools," said Scanlon.

"With the inauguration of the first endowed chair in the University's history, Villanova stands poised to move to its next level of excellence and national acclaim," according to the program.

The Student Programming Council (SPC) is sponsoring the annual Merry Christmas Villanova week Dec. 7-11. "This week gives the entire Villanova community the opportunity to get together and celebrate Christmas in a more festive atmosphere," said Danielle Lesko, SPC Festivals Coordinator and coordinator of the week's activities.

The SPC is sponsoring and judging dorm decorating contests, said Lesko. A $50 cash prize will be awarded to the winning wing and will be deposited into the wing's account for future wing wide programs, according to an SPC memo. "This year, decorating safety and damage control are being stressed. All participants must follow certain rules and guidelines designed to promote an environmentally safe and fire secure environment," said Lesko. Judging will take place Dec. 6.

"Merry Christmas Villanova Week has been a University tradition for many years," said Lesko. The week's activities begin with an outdoor lighting ceremony in front of Kennedy Hall Dec. 7 at 5 p.m. A cookie and hot chocolate give away will follow the ceremony and last from 5:30 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. in front of Corr Hall. Horse and buggy rides will be given at this time in front of Kennedy Mall. Each ride will cost $1.

The Irish folk band, the Chieftans, will perform Christmas selections at 7 p.m. in the Jake Nevin Field House Dec. 7. "The concert is almost entirely sold-out," Lesko said.

A Christmas bazaar will be held in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center Dec. 7-8 from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. "Venders will come to the University selling crafts and other merchandise. SPC members will be providing a gift wrapping service during this time as well," said Lesko. Students can get their pictures taken with Santa from 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. in the Villanova Room Dec. 7-8, added Lesko.

Students can order Secret Santa messages and candy to be delivered to people on campus Dec. 7-9 in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m., said Lesko. Each Secret Santa package costs $.50.

The Villanova Singers, Glee Club and Gospel Ensemble will give a free concert Dec. 11 in the St. Mary's Hall Chapel. These groups will perform traditional Christmas carols, said Lesko.

The week's activities will conclude with a shopping trip to New York City scheduled for Dec. 12.

"This week is a positive time on Villanova's campus that gives us the opportunity not only to celebrate Christmas, but also to make Villanova feel like a close-knit com-unity," said Lesko.

Women's Studies Program sponsors visit by poet

By JANE PAPACCIO
Assistant Editor

Joy Harjo read her personal poetry in Connelly Center Dec. 2. The poetry reading was sponsored by the Women's Studies Program, and co-sponsored by the Student Programming Council.

"Since this is the year that we focused our attention on Native American writers and culture, we thought it would be appropriate to bring an American Indian poet to campus," said Dr. Barbara Wall, O.P., Head of the department of peace and justice.

Joy Harjo is the child of a Creek father and a Cherokee-French mother and is an enrolled member of the Creek Tribe. She graduated from the Institute of American Indian Arts in 1968, and, in 1976, from the University of New Mexico.

She is a professor of creative writing at the University of New Mexico. She previously taught at the University of Arizona. She is also on the Steering Committee of the En'owkin Centre International School of Writing for Native American writers.

Harjo has published four books of poetry including She Had Some Horses and, her most recent, In Mad Love and War.

"She is, perhaps, the foremost American Indian poet," said Wall. She was the recipient of the 1990 Josephine Miles Award for Excellence in Literature and the 1990 American Indian Distinguished Achievement Award.

Other awards include the William Carlos Williams Award from the Poetry Society of America, the Delmore Schwartz Memorial Poetry Award from New York University and an American Book Award from the Before Columbus Foundation.

Her poetry draws on the history of the American Indian and also includes contemporary themes as well. Marge Piercy, a well-known poet and novelist who wrote Woman on the Edge of Time, said, "Harjo's poems are solid and lively as real dogs, with an animal grace, a subtlety of emotional reaction and movement. The rooted-ness in the land and the sense of oneness with it, the use of Native American mythological elements, combined with gritty imagination of urban life, is extraordinary and compelling ... and shot through with a very eminent sacred power," according to Wall.

Harjo's Native American heritage is extremely important to her, added Wall. "Joy Harjo's poetry does very much deal with the American Indian reverence of nature and of all creation," said Wall.

Anchor Splash benefits the blind

By CHRISTY WALKER
Staff Reporter

The Delta Gamma National Fraternity held its fifth annual philanthropy fundraiser, Anchor Splash, at the duPont Pavilion pool Nov. 22. This year the event raised approximately $7,000.

Anchor Splash is a nationwide fundraiser for the blind held by Delta Gamma chapters around the country.

Anchor Splash includes a number of mock water-sport competitions between teams representing numerous fraternities and sororities of the University.

All proceeds of Anchor Splash at the University are donated to the Royer Greeves School for the Blind in Media, Pa., the Pennsylvania Association for Blind Athletes and the National Philanthropy Aid to the Blind.

"One-third of our total financial support comes from Anchor Splash for the whole year," said Sandy White, director of the Pennsylvania Association for Blind Athletes.

"Anchor Splash has helped to fund almost 100 percent of the inter-state competition we have in the spring, called the Northeast Games for the Blind. It is the largest competition for the Blind in the country and if Delta Gamma was not part of it, it would not exist," said White.

The proceeds were raised through local business sponsors, parent and alumni contributions, supermarket canning, raffle ticket sales and donations at the door. The prizes included two roundtrip tickets to the Bahamas, two roundtrip tickets to anywhere in the United States and a Kaplan preparatory course. The major contributors were Continental Airlines, Apple Vacations and Kaplan.

Anchor Splash events at the pool included a bathing beauty contest, a tube relay, sweatshirt relay, beachball relay and synchronized swimming. The overall winners were Sigma Phi Epsilon National Fraternity and Pi Beta Phi National Sorority. Winners of the events received trophies and plaques.

"Anchor Splash promotes intra-fraternity relations. It's for a good cause and it's a lot of fun," said the Anchor Splash chairperson.

"When I was retained by the Gallaghers we discovered upon investigation that in fact he was innocent," said Wasserbly. "It was very clear that Frank was not guilty. I have no idea why he was charged," added Wasserbly.

The alleged rape occurred on Nov. 3, 1991, yet charges were not filed until April of 1992, said Wasserbly.

"I don't think the time at which the charges were filed made any difference in the verdict, the reason being that the defendant did admit to having sex with the victim," said Reilly. "Also, the alleged victim did make a complaint only hours after the attack occurred," he added.

The Radnor Police waited until their investigation was complete to file charges, Reilly said. The police needed to interview all possible witnesses and wait for the physical evidence collected to be sent to the police lab and analyzed, said Reilly .

According to Pennsylvania State law, it is a crime to have sex with a person who is unconscious. "We were trying to prove that the victim was unconscious when the incident occurred. In trying to prove that, you're going to have a witness who doesn't remember all the facts," said Reilly.

"I think the victim's testimony was very believable and compelling. But there were things she didn't remember. We tried to bolster her testimony by presenting witnesses who had seen her and the condition she was in that night," added Reilly.

"One of the things testified to at the trial convinced me of the victim's story," said Reilly. At the trial the defendant's roommate testified that only minutes after the incident occurred Gallagher came into the room saying, "I don't think this will happen, but I hope for some reason she doesn't say I raped her."

Gallagher did not explain this statement to his roommate at the time nor did he explain it at the trial, said Reilly. When questioned about his roommate's testimony, Gallagher said that he did not remember making the statement, Reilly said.

"I believe in my heart of hearts, I am convinced that the victim's version of the facts is the true one. I believe that he did in fact rape her that morning. I will go to my grave believing the victim's version 100 percent," said Reilly.

Student dismissed for vandalizing Center

By JENNIFER TRZASKA

Villanova's new St. Augustine Center for the Liberal Arts was vandalized with graffiti by a University student. Though he would not reveal the name of the student, the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of Students, said that the student had been suspended from school for the semester and was responsible for paying for the damages caused to the building.

Investigation into the incident was conducted immediately, and "Public Safety was very helpful," said Stack. Surprisingly, the student turned himself in at the urging of a friend.

Though no one knows the reasons for his actions, "there's constructive and destructive ways of dealing with things. Graffit is destructive. He did some things impulsively that he shouldn't have done and took responsibility for it," said Stack.

Solutions from your Apple Campus Reseller:
The Apple Computer Loan.

"Why should I wait in line at the computer lab when I can own a Macintosh for $15 a month?"

Kevin Campbell
Aerospace Engineering Major

What allowed Kevin to own an Apple® Macintosh® PowerBook™ 145 computer for such a low monthly payment? The Apple Computer Loan.* Kevin knew that owning the power and portability of a Macintosh PowerBook for his full course load and his work in the Civil Air Patrol was a smart thing to do. And the Apple Computer Loan was the smart way to do it: easy application, fast turnaround and low, flexible payment terms. So Kevin went to the only place that offers the Apple Computer Loan, his Apple Campus Reseller.

Ignorance debilitates as much as AIDS virus

Many of you might have noticed the Oreo wrapped in garbage bags last Tuesday. The theme of this year's International AIDS Awareness Day was "Cover Your Art" to emphasize how the arts community, among others, is affected by the AIDS epidemic.

College students, especially, have a higher than average number of diagnosed AIDS cases. One in 500 are likely to be infected with the HIV virus. This statistic was found by sampling the blood of anonymous students on 20 campuses nationwide.

College lifestyles contribute to this high number of infected students, along with the immortality attitude that most students hold. They believe an invisible blanket shields them from the diseases that plague the rest of society.

There are no reasons affluent, educated college-goers should think they are exempt from a disease already diagnosed in over 242,000 Americans. The only protection on which students can rely is responsible and careful behavior.

The number of cases discovered in the United States may not even by accurate. Diagnosis prior to this year was narrow, because patients had to have certain infections to qualify for an AIDS test. Other symptoms now connected with the disease were not counted then.

People may not know all the facts about AIDS. For instance, AIDS affects men and women differently. Since the disease originated in the male population, the symptoms for men are more well-known than for women. The more information people know about the disease, the less likely they will be to contract it.

When the question arises if Villanova has as many AIDS cases as other colleges, the answer is simple: yes, it is very possible. And it is up to the students themselves to avoid becoming part of the statistics.

Take a holiday lesson from the Grinch

Ever since people started celebrating Christmas, it has been celebrated with gifts, and some were very thoughtful gifts. The wise men probably sat around for days thinking, "What do you get for a guy who has everything? A tie and some boxers? No, he's a little young for that. Let's give him something that he won't grow out of or spill soup on ... I've got it! Gold, frankincense and myrrh!"

It was important that they gave something, something they deemed precious and valuable, but we're sure Jesus would have been happy with a tie and boxers, if it had been from the heart.

This Christmas shopping season is supposedly off to a better start than more recent years, and we're sure that for many business owners, this is what they are and have been hoping for. Villanova kids going home to spend lots and lots of their parents' money. What could be better than that?

Well, here at the Villanovan we would like to wish you a happy Christmas and a rewarding shopping season. But when you are in the stores and you're spending lots and lots of money on gifts that will be returned on Dec. 26, try and remember the story of "The Grinch Who Stole Christmas." The Grinch stole all the presents of the "Who" people and thought he had stolen Christmas. When he realized that they were not affected in the least bit by not only the absence of presents but also the theft of thousands of dollars of merchandise, he saw the true spirit of Christmas and returned the gifts, and they all had a grand ol' time.

So whether or not you celebrate by spending disgusting amounts of money or by giving gifts you made in art class or by giving the gift of love, remember Christmas is still Christmas, gifts or no gifts.

LETTERS

Campus entertainment critiqued

To the Editor:

After reading the commentary by Thom Arno, I felt compelled to write a letter in support of his views. I agree that most Villanova students are apathetic, but don't we have a right to be, considering how little this University has to offer?

I admit, I had been warned about Villanova before coming — the attitudes, the money and, of course, the "Villanova look." I wondered why I was the first student from my nearby high school to attend this highly regarded University. Unfortunately, I did not think enough of it. Instead, I listened to those infamous words of my older brother, "College is what you make of it." Yeah, right! It sounded like good advice at the time, and I accepted his words as fact. Besides, the campus was beautiful and my Blue Key Society tour guide really sold the "Villanova Community" myth. (I really hope I run into her on the street someday.)

The only entertainment on this campus is provided by the Student Programming Council (SPC) and the Greek system. But the Greek system only segregates the University (if you disagree, just read a stall in any campus lavatory) and offers nothing to non-Greek students — except freshman women, of course. I know they do a lot for the community, but why not do something to unite and benefit the University as well?

At least the SPC, on the other hand, makes an attempt to make campus life exciting, but they should focus more on weekend activities like live music, comedians or functions with neighboring colleges. I understand that social activities cost money, but how much are we paying to attend this "prestigious" University? The University should find such activities, especially if they expect the campus to remain dry. It is the University's responsibility to provide a quality education — with which I have no problems — while also ensuring that our four years here are rewarding.

You are probably wondering why I stayed four years at a place for which I have so little regard. Well, I managed to make a few good friends, and I enjoy the academic challenge. Besides, I have learned to laugh at the absurdity of it all. I just think it is about time students started formally expressing their utter disappointment with Villanova University. It is not only the freshman guys who are unhappy; many discouraged students are simply hiding behind a facade of happiness.

They have gone too far! This was my initial reaction when I was greeted with the decorative, life-size announcement about the Chieftans coming to Villanova for Christmas in Ireland. From what I can derive, this masterpiece in art was designed and funded by the Student Programming Council (SPC) and Student Activities. It was the administration's idea of another opportunity to celebrate the eventful Sesquicentennial and another opportunity to support a lost cause.

I remember in the beginning of the semester, a few students protested about the outrageous sum of money being used for the Sesquicentennial. However, once I heard the administration's reasons for supporting such a meaningful endeavor, I was pacified. Over the months, I came to the shocking revelation that some students do not know and do not care about the Sesquicentennial, so my justification for allotting such a large amount of money to an unknown cause that does not support education became ridiculous!

I realize that the 150th is not an academic tool used by the administration to better educate the student body, rather the Sesquicentennial is just an emblem of joy and celebration for all to share. But, I think we, as a University, should question our original intentions. Are we interested in a glorified, sophisticated, over-funded trip down memory lane or are we interested in educating students both in and out of the classroom?

I vote for the latter. I realize that the Sesquicentennial is an important time in Villanova's history, but I think it can be done a lot cheaper. First, what is the purpose of sending my parents a life-size poster about an Irish band? Second, does the administration expect my parents to redecorate my family room to hang this poster? Third, why couldn't the University send a postcard illustration of the event instead of a lavish poster? I can understand the University's attempt to help students mature intellectually by giving them a taste of culture, but what intellectual maturity has taken place with this ostentatious announcement?

Statistics show Villanova's grass is just as green

By CHRISTINA OLSON

In the Nov. 20 edition of the Villanovan, Thom Arno's explanation on why "Nova blows" really got me thinking. I remember my freshman year and a recurring discussion about Villanova among a group of about six first-time-away-from-home girls. We had been hearing stories of the great times our friends were having at their respective schools, and our general consensus was pretty much the same as Mr. Arno's. Our mission: to get the highest G.P.A.s possible so we could transfer to a "real" school.

After I would finish studying, I would sit in my dorm room with the door closed, not even able to watch T.V. because my dad wouldn't let me bring one. I had a lot of time to think. It was during one of these thinking sessions that I came to a realization: Activities and friendships weren't going to come knocking on my door. Maybe I needed to change my attitude and not only give Villanova a "second chance" (when I really hadn't even given it a first) but also make an effort to get involved and meet some people.

Well, it's three-and-a-half years later and I'm still here. But before I get into what I've gotten out of my Villanova experience and what it has done for me, I would like to address a couple of the complaints Mr. Arno has about Villanova by comparing them to what will be the situation at his soon to be new home, the University of New Hampshire (UNH).

Keeping in mind that "the statistics don't lie," I did a little research about UNH. And based on what I've found in the 1992 edition of Barron's Profile of American Colleges, I think a lot of the problems Mr. Arno has with Villanova will be equivalent or worse up North.

First, consider the white, upper-class Catholic (imagine that — at a Catholic school no less) student body where "most of the students are from the New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania area." At Villanova, 90 percent of the students are white, approximately 32 percent are from Pennsylvania and 53 percent of all freshmen for the 1991-92 school year were on some sort of financial aid, with need-based aid averaging $3,500.

Compare that to UNH, where 97 percent of the students are white, 60 percent are from New Hampshire and again, for the 1991-92 school year, 55 percent of the freshmen received financial aid, with need-based aid averaging $2,880. It seems to me that there are just about as many wealthy families' pockets not getting drained, and just as many students who come from the "Don't-worry-about-it attitude" at UNH as there are here.

Mr. Arno's ultimate concern was the "age-old problem of student apathy." This "age-old" problem doesn't just exist at Villanova. Barron's has yet to develop an "apathy index," so if you don't believe me, talk to your friends at other schools. I'm willing to bet they all have stories of people who have no opinions, too.

Barron's has yet to develop an "apathy index," so if you don't believe me, talk to your friends at other schools. I'm willing to bet they all have stories of people who have no opinions, too.

Another problem was class segregation and cliques that formed. The Greeks were a target. First of all, about 40 percent of the student body at Villanova is Greek, not two out of three. While this is considerably higher than the 18 percent at UNH, an important point was not taken into consideration: Villanova Greeks don't have houses and those at UNH do. Based on my experience at UNH visiting a friend freshman year and what she has told me since then, compared to Villanova, the Greek life is much more influential in New Hampshire. (Translation: Durham, N.H., a "rural area 60 miles north of Boston," does not have many social outlets other than fraternity parties.) And what about the 120 student organizations that are offered at Villanova? UNH has about 100 and also has about 3,500 more students.

Those of you who agree with the statement that the University does not do much to downplay the M.B.A.=B.M.W. belief should check out the Center for Peace and Justice Education or Campus Ministry. The number of people who volunteer on a weekly basis, helping people in need in the community or on service trips over breaks, says a lot about the attitude of the University. I'm not too familiar with the mind-set at UNH (Barron's doesn't have a "social concern index" either), but I would be surprised if the proportion of people with this awareness there was equal to the proportion at Villanova.

Before I get accused of UNH-bashing, let me get to the point: the grass is not always greener on the other side. There are things at Villanova that I don't necessarily agree with and wish I could change. But you're going to find that to be the case wherever you go. And it's not a matter of settling for something, it's a matter of making an effort to find your niche, whatever it may be.

So if you are feeling down about Villanova or are thinking of packing up and leaving town like Mr. Arno, do yourself a favor. Make sure you have done what you can to take advantage of what Villanova has to offer. Don't blow this opportunity like I almost did.

Nightclub failure disappoints

To the Editor:

Here it was, and there it went. We had before us a long-awaited and long-desired on-campus alternative to drinking. The Pie Shoppe of Dougherty Hall was to be renovated this semester into a Night Club/Cafe. The new Pie Shoppe-Night Club was going to be a campus "hangout." Open from 7 a.m. to 2 a.m., the Pie Shoppe would be a provider of snacks, non-alcoholic drinks, community, study space and most of all — fun.

Comedians who had played in the Connelly Center's Villanova Room would have been able to perform in a more comedy club-type atmosphere. Musicians who had been forced to play in the Belle Air Terrace of Connelly Center would also have been able to perform in the Pie Shoppe-Night Club. In addition to these performers, the Pie Shoppe would have been able to take over for Cafe Innuendo, allowing Villanova students to perform, read poetry or share any other entertaining quality on "open mic" nights. When not being used for these purposes, the Pie Shoppe would have been open to everyone as a study area or a cafeteria with a daily cash operation that would serve the needs of the entire Villanova community, especially the commuting students.

All of this was set to begin with the opening of the Pie Shoppe-Night Club in January, with widespread support from the University Administration and student leaders. However, the student- and staff-approved plans never made it to the Board of Trustees. The purpose of this letter is not to publicly reprimand the person who failed to present the approved plans to the Board. Rather, it is written in an effort to make students aware of the situation, in hopes that they will voice their discontent.

Currently, the Student Pie Shoppe Coalition, consisting of members from the Student Government Association, the Association of Commuting Students and the Student Programming Council, has circulated petition sheets over campus. By signing the petition, students will be signing on to the coalition. Students will be expressing their desire for the Pie Shoppe-Night Club proposal, while at the same time demanding to know what happened to the approved plans.

Students, faculty and staff should understand that we need the Pie Shoppe-Night Club. Almost every university and college has such a place on their campus. Unfortunately, we do not. Instead of being able to utilize such a place, we are forced to use, or overuse for that matter, the Connelly Center. Trying to find a room in the Connelly Center these days is not easy. The Student Government Association, the Association of Commuting Students and the Student Programming Council have all expressed a need for the Night Club.

Other student organizations, and individual students as well, have also expressed their desire for a night club and their approval of the renovation. The Pie Shoppe-Night Club would prove beneficial to all aspects of campus life. It would be open to everyone, not just student organizations. Hence, we are asking all students and student organizations to help us get the petitions signed. We hope that students will sign on and possibly even write letters to administrators, student organization leaders or the Villanovan expressing their concern. We hope that if students make this an issue on campus, the University will realize our concern and will, therefore, act upon it.

Minorities must be a major campus influence

To the Editor:

Last year was dedicated as a "Year of Diversity;" a student group, Campaign for Community, was organized to promote racial harmony and understanding and this year an office for Multicultural Affairs was established. The administration has clearly recognized the lack of diversity on campus and has taken these steps to change the status quo, which has earned Villanova the apt term "Vanillanova" in many college profile books.

Throughout my more than three years at Villanova, I have not seen much of a change in the racial make-up of the student body. I sit in my classes and am accustomed to being usually one of only two minority students. How can this be, in light of Villanova's efforts to become more diverse?

I have heard "diversity" mentioned in almost all my classes from the peace and justice class taught by the Rev. Owen R. Jackson, O.S.A., to Dr. James W. Klinger's management class. Realistically, we have learned that lack of diversity is an obstruction to the real college experience, not only sheltering us from minorities, but also being an abominable misrepresentation of the nation's racial constituency.

Enough about diversity, though, I know you have heard it all before, but that is my point — talk is cheap. Villanova must talk the talk and walk the walk.

Who is really going to take the time to make a difference? Who is willing to sacrifice for the good of the community? Not the majority, I would argue. Do I blame them? No, because it is their problem, but yet again it is not solely "their" problem. The bulk of the responsibility should lie with the minorities on campus. We must take an active role in determining our own destiny at this school if things are really going to change.

There is clearly not enough participation by minorities in student organizations, organizations that can ultimately affect diversity on campus. The opportunities abound, we must take advantage of them. One of the most influential organizations that I can speak of is the Blue Key Society. For many prospective Villanova freshmen, it is their first and only interaction with a Villanova student.

I am sure many of you can remember the numerous college tours you went on before deciding on 'Nova. I remember being totally attentive and mesmerized by my Georgetown tour guide. Afterwards, I was convinced Georgetown was for me. I felt that my tour guide exemplified what Georgetown was all about.' Obviously, he did not represent the entire student body, but I think it is human nature to leave a school feeling this way.

What am I getting at? If we want to increase minority enrollment, we have to make a positive impression on minorities from the "get-go." Applying to college as an Asian-American, I had concerns about racial tensions on campus. However, I always felt uncomfortable asking my tour guide what he felt about this, if he was not a minority. He could feed me statistics and tell me about his "good friends" who are black or Asian, but it is just not the same as hearing it from the horse's mouth. So you see, minorities can help prospective minority students make one of the biggest decisions in their life by simply being active, being available — just being there.

Unfortunately, this is ot the case on our campus. This year only five minority students applied for the Blue Key Society, out of the 280 applicants. We have ignored the power of this organization to influence incoming students and have remained apathetic to a problem which we love to address. We must harness the power to change what Blue Key possesses and let go of the reins of inaction.

To all the minority students, I urge you to get involved with Blue Key and other organizations on campus like Residence Life, the Student Programming Council and the New Student Orientation program. Diversity can be attained at Villanova, but not with the current minority mentality and level of involvement. Change is within our grasp, do not let it slip out!

COMMENTARY

Are we still perfect after all these years?

By ELLEN GOODMAN

There is a condom on the coffee table. It's been there for weeks now, in a photograph, displayed genteelly between the manicured fingertips of Elizabeth Taylor, the way her grandmother might have held a teacup.

The image is meant to be startling, I suppose, the cover for a story about Taylor's gutsy work for AIDS. But whenever I glance down at the portrait I think more about the message in Taylor's face than the one in her hand.

This is what has captured my attention: Elizabeth Taylor at 60, airbrushed within an inch of her life. Elizabeth Taylor at 60, nipped, tucked, lifted — ? — out of her peer group. Elizabeth Taylor at 60 — not exactly "National Velvet" but somewhere between "Cleopatra" and "Virginia Woolf." Looking 35 and holding.

Is this what 60 looks like? At its best? Or at its worst?

In the past decade, we have charted the middle-aging of female models and role models. Women who are fortysomething are being allowed out in public although they almost always wear a label that reads: "still." Still attractive at 40. Still youthful at 46.

But gradually it has occurred to me that women are only being given an extension on aging. They are not being given permission to age gracefully. The culture is telling women they can be younger longer. It is not welcoming old women.

So, I wonder, is this progress for women or progress for the beauty business? Must we still be still attractive at 55? Will we still want to be still youthful at 65?

I belong to the generation that has made menopause a subject for best-seller lists and polite conversation. Sometimes, my friends sit at lunch unabashedly gossiping about the choices other women make, women who are older but not necessarily wiser, about how to age.

Did a slimmer, drug-free Liz Taylor buy a new face to go with her new life? Or to go with her new, younger husband? One friend calls it a positive act. Another calls it depressing.

Did Jane Fonda, physically fit beyond most women's dreams, buy new breasts? One defends her right to fight aging. Another cites her sad pursuit of youth as proof of low self-esteem.

When any television broadcaster or actress goes under the plastic surgeon's knife, one will defend it as pragmatic. Another will ruefully describe it as defeatist.

Did a slimmer, drug-free Liz Taylor buy a new face to go with her new life? Or to go with her new, younger husband? One friend calls it a positive act. Another calls it depressing.

The other night, a friend called to read a line spoken by Carolyn Heilbrun a scholar and detective story writer. "I used to be thin," Heilburn told a reporter, "But after 55, I said, 'Oh, the hell with it.' "

My friend laughed with delight and promised to tape this remark to her refrigerator. But I know that her refrigerator holds nothing inside that could contribute to middle-aged spread.

This gossiping we do is not idle at all. It's a conversation, full of curiosity and anxiety, about age and power and invisibility. A conversation about the future.

What is it that Germaine Greer wrote in her great, sprawling, infuriating, and illuminating, unmade bed of a book, "The Change"? "There is no accepted style for the older woman; no way of saying through dress and demeanor, 'I am my age. Respect it ...'

"She has a duty to go on 'being attractive' no matter how fed up she is with the whole business. She is not allowed to say, 'Now I shall let myself go ...' Yet if a woman never lets herself go, how will she ever know how far she might have gone?"

How far to go? Anyone of us can come up with a handful of appealing images of old ladies from painter Georgia O'Keefe to Gray Panther Maggie Kuhn, to, of course, Katharine Hepburn. All women who went far. But it's hard to chart a path through that second awkward age between middle and old.

In the world we live in, safe sex is more acceptable fare for a magazine cover than a 60-year-old face. In this world, it takes more confidence, more nerve, more power for a woman of a certain age to look that age, than to carry a condom in public.

But today, I will put aside the portrait of the movie star with the lavender eyes and put aside these thoughts as well. A new issue of the magazine has arrived at my door bearing a new image. On the cover is Candice Bergen. She is, of course, still beautiful at 46.

Student says, "Less lambasting and more turkey basting."

By PETE SHAUGER

If a person cut his left hand climbing over a rusty fence, and that person washed the cut with soap and hot water about two hours after but didn't put any peroxide on it, and never saw a doctor about it and really had no desire of seeing one, and if, after waiting about two months and 23 days from the initial bloodletting, that person seemed to be in decent health except for a slightly embarrassing case of a bad manicure, would you say that lockjaw should no longer be a threat to that person?

Which leads me to something totally irrelevant, and yet, all too relevant. Way far away and at the same time, right up close. Raving mad with foam dripping from the side of your mouth and yet, perfectly sane. Do these things I am saying seem to come out from nowhere you've ever been to or heard of? This, my friends, is the way I feel during any and all of my family gatherings. When it's one-to-one, my family talks about things that I can understand, but when they are all together, it's like they don't want me to know what is really going on, which I will discuss later.

Everything started out innocently enough with a few questions about how I'm doing at school, how my sister is doing at work and the like. And then, WHAM! Like a big 18-wheeler barreling down on a helpless rabbit, Peter Rabbit to be specific, I am instantly overpowered and out maneuvered by "Road Rhetoric." Road Rhetoric is the long and winding holiday discussion involving detailed descriptions of every road taken, roads not taken, rocky roads, back roads, road kills, road stops, road blocks and any other road detail imaginable to throw me off the track of their real meaning, which I will discuss later.

After they were satisfied with giving me a decent run-around, Dad gives Mom the signal to call everyone to the dinner table where the second level of torment began with Delicacy Discussion. Being Thanksgiving, the theme for the Discussion was Turkey Talk. "How much did the bird cost? And a fine bird it is, I must say." "Well, this year I decided to shop somewhere other than the regular supermarkets. The "Prime Time Live" episode on repackaged, out-of-date meat put a fowl taste in my mouth, so I decided to go down to Rudy the Road Kill's Memorial Truck Stop, 'Where we guarantee all the meat is freshly put out of its misery or you get it for half price.' " "And what road did you say that was on, dear?"

". . . Rudy the Road Kill's Memorial Truck Stop. 'Where we guarantee all the meat is freshly put out of its misery or you get it for half price.' "

Then, as I was scooping the last of the mashed potatoes onto my plate, the conversation switched to what I have come to know as Appetite Allegories. I was informed of great ancestors who, though they had harder times, could not eat nearly as much as me, which was partly due to the fact that the depression shrunk their stomachs, how I had always been a fork to be reckoned with at the dinner table, how, sure, I was the reigning Champ of Chow for the moment, but in a few short years my cousin would give me a run for my tummy.

After dinner was over, we adjourned into the family room where I tried to start a new conversation. I think I tried to ask what a person should do if he thought he were in danger of getting lockjaw. Unfortunately, I was swiftly redirected to Sports Speak. I was asked questions I had no idea the answer to let alone how to respond to them. Examples: "Hey, Pete, I hear your old high school has a football game today," or, "Hey, Pete, I hear Villanova has a football game in a couple days," or, "Hey, Pete, I hear it's football season, wanna watch some football?" I was completely baffled as to what they were talking about. I wish someone would have let me in on this football thing. It was all part of the plot that I will discuss later.

I would have thought that my relatives, my own flesh and blood would have spared me from this verbal lambasting and stuck to turkey-basting. But there was no mercy. I was trying to say something relevant when I heard my father giving me the count, "One, Two, Three, Four, Five . . ." I tried to speak but I couldn't. It was like I had lockjaw or something. And then came the finale. They all gathered around me and began talking. The self-explanatory "Technical Talk," news about all the little children we know called "Baby Banter," the latest in what my brother the genius is studying in medical school called "Medical Mumbo Jumbo," and the excuse for my family to talk about sex called "Love Logistics."

But they had accomplished only part of their evil plan which I will now discuss. The plan (of which they still think I am unaware) is to keep me quiet long enough to make me feel unwanted and useless, and then when I am not expecting it, they ask me in a sweet and tender voice, "Petey, dear, it would be very helpful to us if you took out the garbage." And I wrote down on a piece of paper in response to them, "I can't carry the garbage out because I cut my hand and had to write this down because I think I have lockjaw, so there."

Controversial schooling methods demand student conformity

By SUSAN CUNNANE

Should students be required to conform to state-fixed values and beliefs? Is it a proper function of our schools to "adjust" attitudes? These are some of the questions about Outcome Based Education (OBE) that need to be addressed during the controversial restructuring of the Pennsylvania public school system.

Instead of requiring students to have four years of high school English, three years of math, science, history, etc., students would have to meet 15 state-determined goals and 51 "learning outcomes" under the new program being proposed by the Pennsylvania Board of Education. It is estimated that at least 51 percent of the new requirements measure not academic skills, but areas such as self-worth, ethical judgment, adaptability to change and appreciating and understanding others. These areas are not only subjective and difficult to measure, they also involve individual values, beliefs, feelings and opinions. But who determines which values, opinions and feelings are correct?

The Pennsylvania Board of Education defines the outcomes, determines the goals and values it believes students should have and develops the testing in which there is a pre-determined, correct multiple choice answer for each question, even in the subjective areas. One of the major concerns about OBE is the right of the state not only to test students on their personal values, beliefs, attitudes and feelings, but evento attempt to grade them.

Students will be required to pass four tests throughout their primary school and high school years in order to pass through the public school system and earn a high school diploma. Students who fail to meet the state's goals or demonstrate the state's values on the tests may be placed in remediation and re-tested. This pattern will be repeated, if necessary, until the student demonstrates the appropriate competencies, even if some of the state's goals or values conflict with the student's personal, moral or religious beliefs or invade that individual's right to privacy. (Citizens for Academic Responsibility in Education newsletter, October 1992.)

Another serious concern about OBE is its failure in school districts across the country and in Canada. Pennsylvania State Rep. Ron Gamble voiced that concern when he said, "OBE has been tried on an experimental basis in a number of school districts around the country. In every case, student achievement went down as a result." ("Less Learning, More Taxes," York Daily Reporter, April 26, 1992)

It is estimated that at least 51 percent of the new requirements measure not academic skills, but areas such as self-worth, ethical judgement, adaptability to change and appreciating and understanding others.

In Chicago, Ill., this program was implemented in every school district as "Mastery Learning" and had damaging consequences. It was finally rejected after the school system went bankrupt, parents filed a lawsuit citing "educational malpractice" and Former Secretary of Education William Bennett called Chicago schools the "worst" in the nation. (Education Week, March 6, 1985 and Education Reporter, June 1990) Now the Pennsylvania Board of Education would like to implement the system in our schools.

Even though, as college students, we might not be directly affected by OBE — though college admissions requirements will be changed drastically — we will be affected indirectly as taxpayers. According to Gamble, the cost of planning and implementing OBE is estimated to be $550,033 per year per school district and $1.37 billion statewide over five years. Either the state will subsidize the program and raise personal income taxes to pay for it or local school boards will be forced to pay and raise property taxes ("Less Learning, More Taxes," York Daily Reporter, April 26, 1992)

At a time when American schools have already fallen behind those of other advanced nations, it does not make sense to de-emphasize knowledge and cognitive learning. Our schools do need to be reformed so that students will have the knowledge and skills to be active, contributing members of our technologically advanced society. However, requiring students to conform to a fixed set of values and politically correct opinions and not encouraging them to achieve their highest potential is a dangerous practice and cannot be beneficial to students. As college students, potential parents and taxpayers, we need to be concerned about this suppression of individual rights, what is happening to our education system and what will happen to children as a result.

UNDERGRADUATE PEACE AND JUSTICE RESEARCH AWARD

CONTENT: The award will be given for a research paper that provides a critical analysis of a topic relevant to peace and justice studies. We will also accept research projects, such as the production of a film if it is relevant to peace and justice studies. Possible topics may include, but may not be limited to: discrimination, race, class, gender, civil rights, animal rights, ecology, hunger, poverty. You must include evidence of bibliographic research of the current scholarly work on the topic. The papers/projects may be written specifically for this competition or based on work completed at the University during Spring, Summer or Fall of 1992. All authors must be students enrolled at the University during the time the research was completed. Students who submit papers must also attend the Peace and Justice Student Research Conference on April 7, 1993 to share their research with others.

EVALUATION AND AWARD: All papers will be reviewed by a panel of faculty members from the Peace and Justice Curriculum Committee. A cash award of $250. will be given to the selected undergraduate paper.

SUBMISSION INFORMATION: Please submit four (4) copies of the paper/project to Dr. Barbara E. Wall, O.P., Center for Peace and Justice Education by March 15, 1993.

St. Catherine of Siena, O.P. (1347-1380) was declared a Doctor of the Church by Pope Paul VI on October 4, 1970. During her brief life she labored to end the "Great Western Schism" and to reconcile the warring states of Italy. Her 400 letters to Popes and to religious and political leaders testify to her efforts to bring peace and harmony to a troubled region in Europe during the 14th century. In letter 171, she states: "Is there anything sweeter than peace? I think not. It was the gentle testament, the lesson that Jesus Christ left to his disciples. Thus he said, 'They will not recognize you as my disciples because you work miracles, nor because you can foretell the future, nor because you demonstrate great sanctity outwardly but because you have charity, peace and mutual love.' Because of anticipated openings, the Department of Public Safety will offer for purchase 75 south campus only parking stickers to sophomore resident students who demonstrate their need for having a vehicle on campus. Applications may be picked up at the St. Clare House and must be returned along with a self-addressed stamped envelope to the parking office by noon on Dec. 16. All applicants will be notified by Jan. 6. Those accepted can purchase their sticker for $37.50 at the beginning of the Spring semester.

Philosophy Forum

Interested in total intellectual stimulation while having one of the greatest times of your life? Sound impossible? Obviously you have never attended the philosophy forum. If interested, please come to St. Augustine 108F every Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. New members are always welcome.

Passages

Attention internationally-minded people. Just a reminder to get your articles and photos in to Passages, the new magazine of intercultural exchange, by Jan. 30. Submit to the International Students Office, Corr 102.

O'Neill Drama to be Screened

Eugene O'Neill's Long Day's Journey Into Night, directed by Sidney Lumet, is the next feature in the Cultural Film and Lecture Series, "From Stage to Screen." It will have four showings in the Connelly Center Cinema: Dec. 12 at 7 p.m., Dec. 13 at 3:30 and 7 p.m. and Dec. 14 at 7 p.m. Admission is $2 for V.U. undergrads and $3 for the general public. The screening on Dec. 14 will be introduced by Patrick Nolan, who will lead a discussion, "Family is Fate," following the film. For more information, call 645-4750.

Spring Break Volunteer Trip

The Habitat for Humanity Chapter of Villanova Committees for the Philadelphia Homeless and Villanova Volunteers will sponsor a service trip to Mississippi, Feb. 27 to Mar. 6, 1993. Work will involve the construction of homes for the poor and elderly. There will also be an opportunity for some nursing students to be a part of the Tutwiler Medical Clinic, Tutwiler, Miss., sometime during that week. Information and preparation meeting (required participation) will be held on Dec. 10 from 8-10 p.m. in Corr Chapel. Construction skills are not necessary, but we are looking for faculty/staff and students who are skilled in some building trade areas to help lead teams.

Giving Tree

Tired of the materialism of Christmas? This year, consider giving your family or friends an alternative to the regular kinds of gifts. Buy a Giving Tree Angel, now being offered after each of the Sunday Masses. The angels represent gifts of warm winter clothing to a poorer person in one of four inner-city Philadelphia parishes. Instead of hanging the angel on the tree in the church, send it to a loved one and tell them that it was purchased in their name. It can be your way of sharing the best of the true Christmas spirit.

'Nova group travels to capitol

A group of Villanova students got a taste of shaping foreign policy recently in Washington, D.C., at the 13th annual Model Organization of American States (MOAS). Held at the OAS headquarters a block away from the White House, the week-long program offered an intensive view of the dynamics of international politics for the 34 participating colleges and universities from across the nation.

Each team, comprised of 10 students, represented a different member nation of the OAS. Students came prepared with resolutions which were debated during committee sessions throughout the week. Five committees touched on every issue the American countries face, ranging from their monetary obligations to the OAS to more specific internal problems such as hunger and education.

"The MOAS was especially useful because it allowed all of us to participate as well as learn. It gave us an appreciation of the different points of view of all the member countries of the OAS," said senior Whitney McDonough. "It says a lot that Villanova is invited to participate, given the caliber of the other schools present."

The Villanova students, advised by Dr. Lowell Gustafson of the Political Science department, represented the country of Panama. Villanova's head delegate, Meridith Hodder, spoke to approximately 400 students on Nov. 17, outlining Panama's positions at the OAS. Afterwards, Charles Bohnenberger, Villanova's head delegate to the 1989 MOAS and now a member of the White House staff, gave the group a tour of the Oval Office and the rest of the West Wing of the White House.

The actual Panamanian delegation to the OAS met with the Villanova team and offered information enabling the students to vote in the character of Panama at the committee sessions. The

Martin Luther King's birthday sparks activities

By ELI GOLDBLATT
Special to the Villanovan

Villanova will be commemorating Martin Luther King's birthday twice this year.

The first day in his honor will be Jan. 18, the day of his birthday and a national holiday. But Jan. 18 is also the first day of classes after the Christmas break, so we have not scheduled all the discussion groups and seminars that have come to characterize MLK Day at Villanova. On the second King Day — Jan. 29 — we expect to explore in far greater detail the theme of the year: "Reaching the Dream — Villanova."

On Jan. 18, expect to find a mixture of joy and challenge in the events of the day. A large birthday cake will await students at the Connelly Center lobby, with a cake cutting ceremony just before lunch.

We want the community to join together in recognizing the great gift King brought people of the United States. But as we hand out bookmarks, buttons and cake, we will also hand out flyers about the thought-provoking Freedom School classes to come on Jan. 29, and we will urge everyone to join the March of Commitment that will end the events of Jan. 18.

We celebrate, but we also call on all Villanovans to discover ways that they can contribute to achieving a dream of greater social equality and greater opportunity for disenfranchised people. We see this as a day of hope, but also one of resolve to make our community even more inclusive, more tolerant of difference.

On Jan. 29, students, staff and faculty are invited to attend more than a dozen events dealing with topics such as the history of the Civil Rights Movement, the nature of the struggle for racial and economic justice today, the psychological and social dynamics of prejudice, and the means for peaceful resolution of conflicts.

Speakers representing the African American community in the Philadelphia area as well as Villanova faculty, staff and student-facilitators will offer their insights and encourage thoughtful discussion throughout the day.

The emphasis will be on what we can do in concrete ways to achieve the dream, not just during this short moment of the year, but at all times — in our classes, extracurricular organizations and dormitories.

We end the day of searching conversation with another march meant to reaffirm our dedication to the cause for which King gave his life, and later that evening we conclude the celebration with a MLK Blues Dance Party to which all are cordially invited.

During the 10 days between Jan. 18 and 29, we urge Villanovans

Graduate hits political scene

By LIZ WEAVER
Staff Reporter

When John Francescone graduated from Villanova in 1990, he probably assumed he would be entering the work force as another accountant. However, life had much more in store for this previous resident assistant of Sullivan Hall.

Two years later the road he was on took a strange turn. After one year of experience as an aid for Republican Freeholder Mark S. Lohbauer, Francescone decided to make his move politically. The Pennsauken, NJ. resident felt he could make a difference if he became more involved in the town government.

The local government consists of a five-member Township Committee. The committee then elects a mayor. Francescone, would be the only Republican on the committee. This year the only seat open was that held by Democrat Mayor Bob Singer.

Francescone, 24, knew it would be a tough fight against the elder Singer, 50. Yet Francescone felt that his training as an accountant made him a strong candidate, especially when dealing with financial issues. He is an accountant with Arthur Andersen and Co. in Philadelphia.

John Francescone did not immediately become involved in the committee. He worked on campaigns for Republicans Lohbauer and Joseph Getz, who both won in 1985.

While at Bishop Eustace High School, he was involved in politics. At Villanova he says he learned about "social conscience and getting involved." After graduating cum laude from Villanova University, onward to bigger battles he went.

Francescone has lived in Pennsauken his entire life, and he realized that if he did not like the way things were maybe he could change them. This change was one that would require a lot of effort, time and spirit.

Francescone was in for a battle. Singer had been on the committee for the past six years. Also Singer had raised much more money than Francescone. The Villanova graduate knew it was going to be difficult, yet he hoped he could at least make the community more aware.

Amidst his busy schedule, Francescone managed to make it back for Homecoming to show his Villanova pride.

By now you are probably wondering if John Francescone ever got to throw a victory party. The answer is no. Bob Singer won his seat once again. However, Francescone did not view this as total defeat.

He was pleased with the support he received. "I never ever even fathomed that we would be able to pull off the victory. Even though we didn't win, ... we met goals."

According to Francescone, some of the goals were to bring people back to the Republican Party. Also he said of his loss, "To tell you the truth, it was like a moral victory." By reaching out to those Republicans who has strayed and to try "to inform some people in the town as to what's really going on," he said.

Although John Francescone lost on Nov. 3rd, he made a statement. He showed that he was not afraid of facing difficult odds. He decided that he did not like what was happening in his hometown, so he fought for his beliefs and for what he felt was the best for his community. This is something at which all of us here at Villanova might want to take a close look.

The Student Nursing Association of Pennsylvania (SNAP) held a convention from Nov. 11-14 in Lancaster, Pa. Nursing students from across Pennsylvania attended the convention. Twenty nursing students from Villanova participated, accompanied by SNAP advisor Dr. Carol Weingarten.

Resolutions concerning situations and problems of the medical field were proposed to educate the nursing students.

Awards and state positions were granted to Villanova nursing students. The state position, entitled "Breakthrough to Nursing," was claimed by junior Andree Floril. The goal of this position is to promote a positive image of the nursing field. Jason Windish, sophomore, was chosen as the Insight Newsletter Editor.

Freshman Marty Czerepusvko was named Regional Coordinator. His responsibility is to ensure cooperation and communication between the SNAP chapters in the Philadelphia area. In the spring of 1993, Temple University will host a SNAP workshop, at which Czerepusvko will coordinate a workshop theme and recruit speakers and sponsors.

Villanova students were also honored with distinguished awards. Snapshots, the local chapter newsletter, was named the state's Most Outstanding Newsletter. The Editor's Award was snagged by former staff member Adam Boroughs for his article concerning the power of nursing students.

The program "What Happens to Me When I Go to the Hospital?" won Honorable Mention for a community assistance program. According to Barb Mullen, Special Projects Coordinator, the program teaches pre-school children about hospital procedures and needles.

Center works for peace, justice

By SUSAN BURNS
Staff Reporter

The Center for Peace and Justice Education is widening the scope and reaching out to more students through courses and organizations this year, according to Senior Swata Gandhi, president of the University chapter of Amnesty International.

"There is much more attention on social issues now. People are becoming more aware of the world around them. People want to change the things they are not happy with," she said.

One way the center hopes to promote awareness of its actions and to further this interest in social issues is through Amnesty's most recent project. With the completion of their planned mural under the Ithan bridge to south campus, all of the different groups involved with the Center for Peace and Justice will be displayed. The painting of the mural will begin early next semester.

SCAAR (Student Coalition Against Apartheid and Racism), Villanovans for Life and Amnesty International will be part of the artwork. SASS (Students Against Sexual Stereotyping), who is currently working to schedule speakers for the spring to discuss sexual role stereotyping and gender issues, and Bread for the World, a political lobby organization for hunger, will also be included.

VEG (Villanova Environmental Group), who is currently working on Earth Day, campus recycling, camping and hiking trips and obtaining mugs that may be used in every dining area on campus and some places on the Main Line, will be a part also.

"Interest in the environment just seems trendy right now. There is an awareness, but people don't know a whole lot about it," senior Megan O'Donnell said, offering a different view to the social awareness on campus.

While one goal of the center is to motivate students to act, another is to educate, according to Dr. Barbara Wall, O.P., director for the Center for Peace and Justice. "I think our curriculum, development, especially reflects a change and evolution in peace and justice research. This year we want to concentrate on concerns about the environment and ecology, and the role and emphasis of justice on the University's campus," she said.

One course for next semester titled, "Ecofeminism and Social Justice," will apply women's studies to environmental issues.

Alumnus discovers challenge as naval aviator

By STEVE ORR
Special to the Villanovan

Desmond Connolly can describe his job in one word.

"It's fun," said Connolly, a 1989 alumnus of Villanova University. "Being a naval aviator is one of the most rewarding and challenging jobs known to man."

Connolly, a 1985 graduate of Newington High School in Connecticut, is a naval aviator assigned to Fighter Squadron 102, based out of Oceana Naval Air Station in Virginia. The Diamondbacks of VF 102 fly the Navy's most advanced fighter aircraft, the F-14 Tomcat.

The Tomcat is a supersonic, twin-engine two-seat fighter similar to those flown in the hit movie "Top Gun." The aging fighter is still considered to be the premier all-weather, day-night fleet air defense fighter in the world.

According to Connolly, it takes a certain kind of person to operate a high-speed, high-tech fighter like the F-14. "Aggressive, confident," Connolly listed as the characteristics he feels are most important for fliers in today's Navy. "You need the drive to be the best," the 25-year-old lieutenant stated. "You also have to really enjoy what you do."

A friend set the future flier on the road to naval aviation. "While in college, I was encouraged by a buddy to check out the Naval Reserve Officer Training Corps," Connolly recalled. "I didn't really know what I wanted to do in the Navy, but in my second year, I found out more information about the surface, submarine and aviation communities.

"Eventually, I took a ride to Oceana, Va., to see what flying was all about. I made my decision, and after college went to Pensacola, Fla. to train as an aviator," said Connolly.

With the designation of Naval Flight Officer (NFO), Connolly's specialty is radar intercept officer (RIO). He rides behind the pilot and acts as co-pilot, navigator and weapons system operator for the F-14.

"The RIO runs the plane when the craft is flying long distances," Connolly said. "I direct the aircraft, and run communications. As the RIO, I'm involved in every aspect of operating the Tomcat."

The men who fly the Tomcats of VF 102 put their experience and training to the test as part of Operation Desert Storm. Two days after entering the Red Sea with the USS John F. Kennedy and USS Saratoga battle groups, the Diamondbacks began flying strikes against Baghdad and other strategic targets in Iraq. The aviators of VF 102 logged more than 1,400 combat hours during the six-week campaign, flying a variety of missions from both the Red Sea and the Persian Gulf.

While the focus of world politics continues to shift, Connolly remains convinced that the standards he and his colleagues uphold as naval officers remain as critical and timely as they ever were. Being an officer and a gentleman is a serious commitment for Connolly, who shakes his head at the recent news reports that have tarnished the naval aviation community's image. Many naval officers like Connolly who operate carrier-capable aircraft hope to see the damage repaired.

Students serve over holidays

By CHRISTINE MULLER
Staff Reporter

Villanova Volunteers of the Campus Ministry Office will be sponsoring their second Panama Winter Break Volunteer Service Trip from Jan. 2-16, 1993. In an advertising poster, engineering students and fluent Spanish speakers were asked to "Help us build, lend a hand."

The trip, coordinated by Barbara Haenn of the Campus Ministry Office and Dr. Lee Christensen of the civil engineering department, will be hosted by missionary Rev. Wally Kasuboski, an American from the Austin, Texas diocese.

The volunteers will stay at a community center in Wacuco, Panama, four hours east of Panama City, but Wally will also divide the students into three or four smaller groups in order to visit other villages for community building projects such as houses and bridges. Volunteers were advised, however, that work will be determined by the weather.

Although the ideal volunteer group was to include fifteen engineering students fluent in Spanish, applications were accepted from a variety of majors.

> Each volunteer was also asked to bring "an open heart and mind to embrace a culture very different from their own."

Volunteers were told to bring supplies for themselves, including sleeping bags, work boots, insect repellant and bottles for drinking water, as well as children's toys, aspirin and band-aids for those they will be helping.

They will be governed by only a few rules — to work hard, to respect fellow volunteers and those whom they visit, and to avoid drugs and alcohol.

The trip will cost each participant $802 for the airline ticket, room and board, ground transportation and building materials.

Each volunteer was also asked to bring "an open heart and mind to embrace a culture very different from [their] own."

"Naval aviators are very family-oriented — I have the utmost respect for them," the lieutenant remarked candidly, citing that the actions of a few have reflected adversely on the entire naval aviation community. "Navy service people and their families sacrifice so much for our country. It still amazes me how close military families remain, even in light of hardships like extended deployment."

Deployments of up to six months are a regular part of Navy life, even during times of peace.

The Navy, also, is reconsidering across the board what used to be routine. In September a white paper entitled "From The Sea" was issued. It outlines the operating philosophy that will carry the sea service forward into the 21st century. There is a new emphasis on joint operations and a continuing emphasis on the need to project power from the sea.

> Being a naval aviator is one of the most rewarding and challenging jobs known to man.

In light of these ongoing transitions, Connolly took time out to focus on the Navy's future and his possible place in the sea-going service. "I plan to stay in the service and continue flying. I'd like to go to the 'Top Gun' fighter training school," he concludes. "I want to get married, and eventually I plan to become the commanding officer of a fighter squadron."

to consider what they can do to make our community more welcoming to people of all backgrounds.

We should consider ways we can be more effective in recruiting and retaining African American, Latino, Asian and Native American students and faculty.

We should think about how our curriculum can recognize the lives and achievements of people who are often overlooked in the historical, scientific, literary and social research literature.

We should review our attempts to reach out to communities around us where people have hardly managed to weather the economic storms of recent years.

In short, we can use the time not only to settle into the work of the coming semester but to rededicate ourselves to the work of the next years — building homes for the homeless, developing effective schools for those without access to vast amounts of shared knowledge, providing health care for those left unprotected against medical emergency.

Students interested in being facilitators for this year's King commemoration should contact Dr. Terry Nance in the Communication Arts Department, St. Augustine Center, or Irene Langran in the Center for Peace and Justice. The committee also welcomes any assistance from faculty and staff for the event.

The Villanova team had met weekly throughout the fall semester to learn about their committee's agenda topics and to prepare their resolutions. Representatives from the actual OAS reviewed these drafts and accepted those that were in the respective countries' character and correct in form and substance.

For the rest of the week, these drafts were debated by student delegates. Villanova's resolutions were passed by wide margins, and the team also served as successful co-sponsors and supporters of other teams' resolutions.

"It was very exciting to spend a week in Washington, especially at this transitory time within our own government," said senior Roby Kennedy. "Being an English major I felt somewhat like an outsider to the global political scene, but I really learned a lot about diplomacy and the importance of the accomplishments this organization has contributed."

Junior Nicole Lenti and senior Anthony Leone both agreed that one of the best aspects of the program was the opportunity to meet students from other schools. Lenti also thought "it was very interesting to go 'behind the scenes' and play a part in the political process." However, said Leone, "the highlight of the week was obviously the informal caucusing sessions at Quigley's."

Panamanian ambassador to the Organization of American States signed a treaty recently.

Senior Keith Carpentier summed up the eventful week. "Our private tour of the White House, our time in the beautiful OAS building, being present and recognized at a treaty-signing ceremony and our unique style of keeping up foreign relations will not soon be forgotten."

The Villanova team was supported by the vice president for Academic Affairs, the vice president for Student Activities, the dean of Arts and Sciences, the International Studies program and the Political Science department. Gustafson wished to thank the University for its support of the MOAS team.

The next MOAS will be held in the spring of 1994. "All interested students are welcome to get involved," said Gustafson.

Nursing association bestows awards

Crida, former SNAP president. Crida has a BSN, RN degree and is a student of the Villanova graduate nursing program. The Honorary Member award is the highest award granted to a former SNAP member.

Resolutions concerning situations and problems of the medical field were proposed to educate the nursing students. Melissa Moffatt proposed a solution to the resolution topic of "Accessibility and Importance of Mammography Screening." The resolution to this topic supported accessible and inexpensive mammography screening, and also encouraged SNAP to educate members about the importance of mammography at state and local meetings and in newsletter articles.

Delegates from each SNAP chapter approved the resolutions, and also listened to the speeches of the new members of the state board and voted on them.

Erin Campbell, a freshman nursing student, was one of the six delegates from Villanova to attend the convention. "I learned about the judicial system of SNAP by being a delegate, and I really felt that I was a part of the convention," said Campbell.

The convention also hosted a recruiting session. Hospitals from New Jersey and Pennsylvania offered nursing students scholarship, internship and summer job opportunities.

Peace and justice

Another, "Justice and Power in the University," will examine issues concerning free expression, multiculturalism, gender and racial equality, and the purpose of an education.

A peace and justice minor and concentration are offered, and according to Wall, this minor would be useful in connection with all majors. Due to the interdisciplinary structure, it would benefit all majors, she said.

"Through these courses we will surely enable students to become better citizens of society, students that understand the importance of peace and justice and [social] issues, and are inspired to work for the common good," she said.

The Martin Luther King Jr. celebration in late January is another way to reach out to students, combining both activities and education.

"We want to create more awareness about Martin Luther King Jr. — who he was and why we are celebrating a national holiday," Student Coordinator sophomore Shanta Edwards said. She stressed the need for active participation from students for the operation of the events, and also attendance.

According to Irene Langran, associate director and student programming director, the only way to generate interest in the center and social issues is to continue sponsoring events on campus that excite students to become more aware.

"We just need enthusiasm now. It appears to be an uphill battle, but we are dedicated to creating an awareness within students and the community," she said.

Student talent shines in mini-musicals

By TIFFANY CHRISTENSEN
Staff Reporter

On the nights of Nov. 19, 20 and 21, the Villanova Student Musical Theatre, along with the Office of Music Activities, presented four mini-musicals. All three performances, given in a warm and crowded St. Mary's Auditorium, elicited an overwhelmingly positive reaction from the audience.

The musicals began on a doleful note, with a depiction of the tragic consequences of racial hatred in "West Side Story." Of course, this performance was not without its up-beat scenes such as the dancing of the brilliantly clad Puerto Rican girls in "America." Comic relief, as well, was provided by such numbers as "Gee, Officer Krupke."

In "My Fair Lady," the talent of many powerful vocalists became apparent through such solos as Elizabeth Murphy's "I Could Have Danced All Night." Sean Collins, as Professor Higgins, was delightfully egotistical as he questioned, "Why can't a woman be more like a man?"

"Blood Brothers" served as a pleasantly surprising change of pace due to both its unique balance of humor and suspense and to the audience's unfamiliarity with it. This relatively young musical won the 1984 Music Award in London and received similar acclaim in its Villanova debut.

The musicals ended lightheartedly with "42nd Street." In this final production, an array of impressive tap dancing was accompanied by performances of such familiar tunes as "We're in the Money" and "Lullaby of Broadway."

> The show elicited a positive reaction from the audience.

Kristi Peyakovich, director of "Blood Brothers," commented on the show's outcome, saying, "... It was excellent ... we couldn't have asked for anything better ... I think it's the best we have ever done ..."

The Student Musical Theatre's first talent show is scheduled for Dec. 5. Student performers include instrumentalists, singers and various other acts. The judges are familiar members of the Villanova community such as Dr. Food, D.J. Greg and Ken Batchelor.

Members of the Student Musical Theatre are anticipating a good turnout for the show. Hopefully, the success of such events as the Talent Show and the Mini-Musicals will lead to the group receiving more support from the University. Peyakovich comments on the group's progress since it was started three years ago. "It has really grown and blossomed ... We want to make sure it keeps going ... " Anyone who attended any of the mini-musical performances will agree that it is time for the Villanova Student Musical Theatre to receive the recognition and support that they deserve.

Maniacs' new songs enchant audience

By THOM ARNO and MARK MC CREARY
Staff Reporters

Upon entering the Bob Carpenter Center at the University of Delaware Nov. 18, one thing immediately came to mind: it is possible to have a 95 percent white population, and still have a universally diverse population. Then people wonder why there are not even halfway big names playing shows here at Villanova.

The Wallflowers mounted the stage sharply at 8 p.m., and took control of the high school gym-type atmosphere in which they were playing. The lead singer, the son of Bob Dylan, immediately let the audience know that he was there to play his music, not to become close, personal friends with the crowd. To be honest, this is quite a legitimate band, despite the thoughts that first flashed through the audience's heads when they heard who the members were. Actually, the band reminded listeners of a type of Black Crowes/Izzy Straddlin' and the JuJu Hounds rendition, not seeming to fit in with the type of crowd at a 10,000 Maniacs concert. Still, it held listeners over with the assistance of Bob and Betsy Hickville making out in front of everyone, and the five 'boys' with the Kurt Cobain haircuts bouncing gaily, keeping everyone amused.

Finally, everyone's true love, Natalie Merchant, revealed herself for the second time — she felt that it was necessary to bounce around during The Wallflowers' set. Maybe a small step on the self-gratifying side, but still it was wonderful to see such a beautiful vision on stage. They opened up the show with the second track on their new album, Our Time In Eden, an incredible song called "These Are Days." From there, the remainder of the line-up included another eight songs from the new CD. A spectacular show was exactly what 10,000 Maniacs gave their 5,000-plus crowd, and to our delight, not a typical Villanovan was in sight.

> Merchant's sincerity shines through the music.

Soon into the show, there was a small scuffle in the audience between a security guard and a viewer. Natalie, upon learning of the incident, was clearly emotionally disturbed by the occurrence, and for some reason this incident made the performance all the more signifigant. She managed to truly show that she was a first rate performer through her performance, and she meant all the sincerity that shines through her music.

Any time that one turns on the radio and hears a 10,000 Maniacs' song, it is clear that it is the voice of Natalie Merchant passionately invading the airwaves. As any past fan knows, this is music that one instantaneously falls in love with, or it is music that just does not fit one's tastes. Personally, fans concluded that: the show was an incredible display of exactly what the band is capable of, the new CD is wonderful and very much worth checking out, and this does not seem to fit the typical mode of CD that has been released this year. This is the type of CD that one can feel comfortable with at a party, or can sit down and study with.

SET LIST: "These Are Days," "If You Intend," "Like the Weather," "Campfire Song," "Cherry Tree," "You Happy Puppet," "Eat For Two," "Noah's Done," "How You've Grown," "Circle," "Eden," "Jezebel," "Trouble Me," "What's the Matter Here," "Stockton," "Candy Everybody Wants," "Hey Jack Kerouac," "Few and Far Between," "My Sister Rose," "City of Angels," "To Sir With Love," "Gold Rush," and "Don't Talk."

Houston regains status with soundtrack

By ERIC CHEUNG
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Within three weeks of its release, "I Will Always Love You" by Whitney Houston, has managed to place itself comfortably in the No. 1 position. For any who have doubted the popularity of this superlative singer, one has only to listen to the radio. Whitney is back! She is taking the music world by storm with her new soundtrack to her critically lambasted movie, "The Bodyguard."

Though the movie has received poor ratings, the soundtrack is following a different path. As demonstrated by recent soundtracks for "Singles" and "Boomerang," sometimes the music takes on a life far bigger than the movie. Houston definitely has brought this into consideration as she has released some of her best material to date.

The soundtrack is a 12-track, highly admirable, collection of various artists. However, more than anything it is a vehicle to propel Houston's popularity to even loftier heights. Not since her debut album has her music sounded so fresh and powerful. Perhaps it is because she only contributes six songs. Each song is done with such care that Houston does not encounter the problem of spreading her talents thin.

The fact that each single is featured intricately in her movie, gives Houston a sense of purpose lacking from previous efforts. Singing through the character of Rachel Marron, Houston evokes sadness, poignancy, and believability. Without a doubt, this movie was a good career move for the consummate songstress. If nothing else, it breathed new life into her music.

"I'll Always Love You" is destined to become one of the biggest songs of the year, and perhaps of the rock era. In this beautiful love song, penned by Dolly Parton, the aching in Houston's heart is pronounced and very effective. Almost effortlessly the listener and the singer are joined in the pain of having to let go of one's true love. Houston sings with confidence and assurance. It looks like Mariah Carey has been set back a few million years. Houston has proven herself to be the best female singer of our age.

Yet her performance on that song is actually dwarfed by the second track, "I Have Nothing." The sheer majesty of Houston's voice is enough to silence a boisterous room. Houston, in full vocal splendor, sings with unforgettable honesty and desperation. Contrary to the message of the first song, "Nothing" is the plea for one's true love never to leave. The words themselves are filled with a universal appeal few songs can hope to attain. Almost on the verge of screaming, Houston sings, "Don't make me close one more door/I don't wanna hurt anymore/stay in my arms if you dare/must I imagine you there?/ Don't walk away from me/I have nothing ... If I don't have you." In the movie, "Nothing" wins the Oscar for best song. It would not be the least bit surprising if reality follows the plot of the movie.

THE BODYGUARD

Other Houston songs are equally compelling. "I'm Every Woman" is a disco treat; "Queen Of The Night" follows recent R&B trends and makes use of rock elements; and in "Jesus Loves Me," Houston returns to her gospel roots.

'Aladdin' offers spectacular animation

By JOSEPH R. McCABE
Staff Reporter

If there are any poor lost souls who still doubt, even after "Beauty and the Beast," that we are living in a golden age of animation, "Aladdin" should change their minds, as well as their perceptions of reality. Not since the original golden age of the 1940s, when Walt Disney had the unmitigated gall and talent to release "Pinocchio" and "Fantasia" (the two greatest animated films of all time) in the same year, have there been so many masterpieces released so frequently.

"The Little Mermaid" reawakened our sense of what animation can do. And, to quote Harlan Ellison, "like junkies pumping the blood/dope mixture back again and again for a higher high, we were booted to a new plateau of technical wonderment" by "Beauty and the Beast." "Aladdin," however, is the biggest rush yet designed by the gifted animators of Disney.

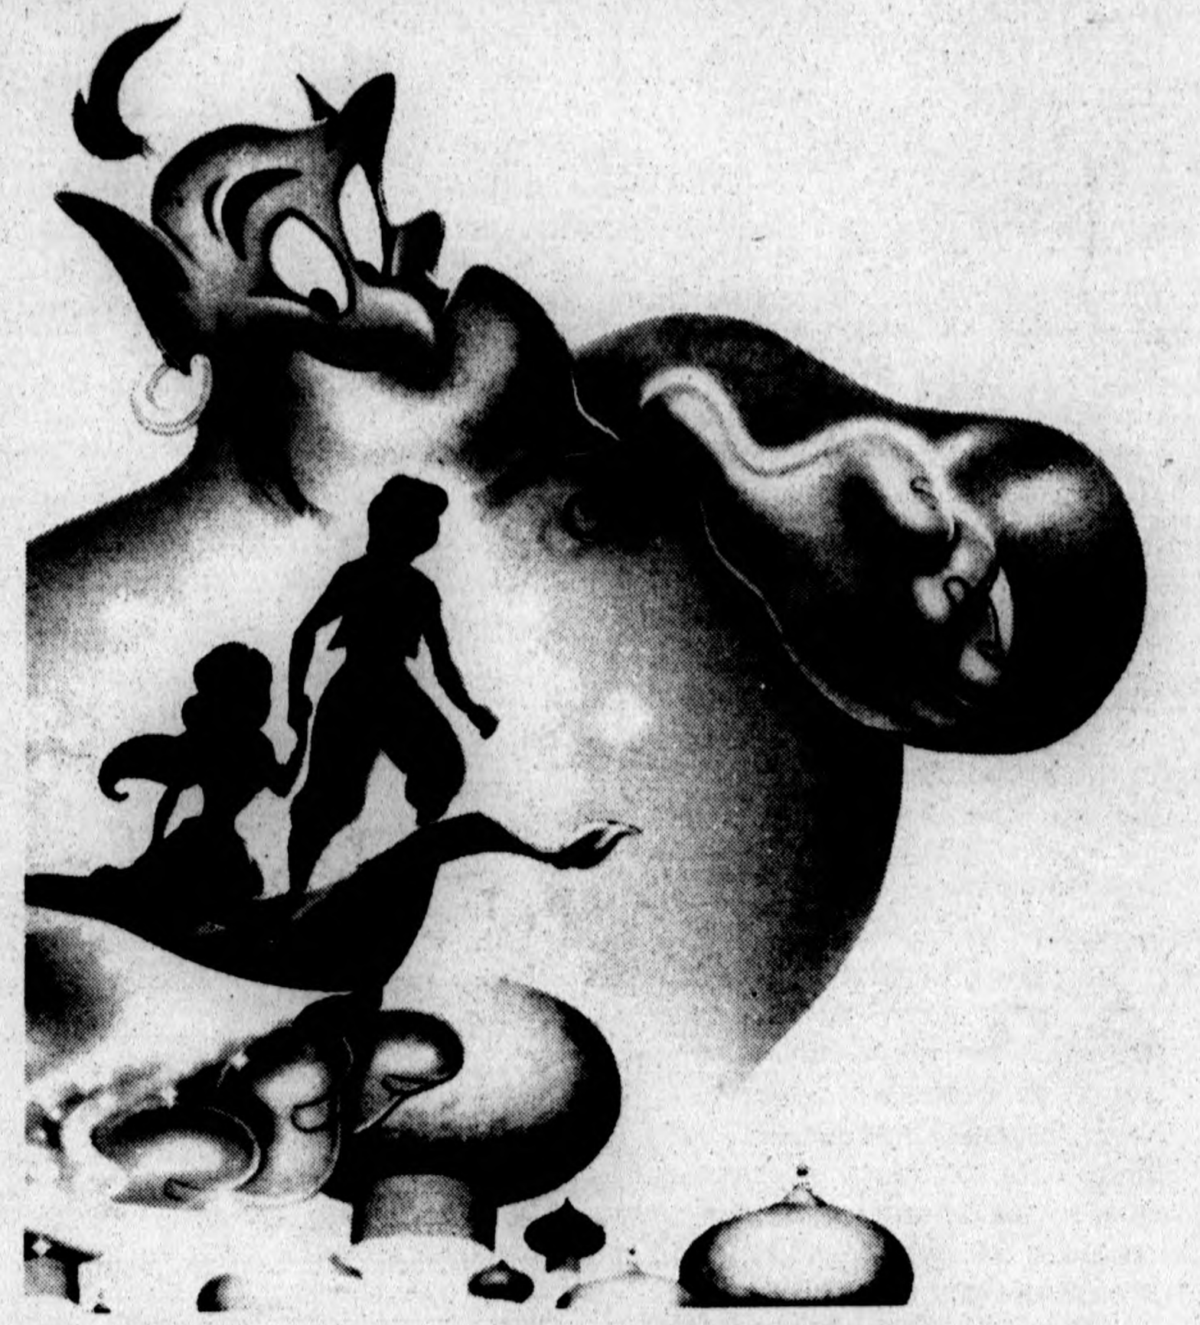
Though it does not possess quite as lean a plot, or the flawless musical score of "Mermaid" or "Beast," "Aladdin" is filled with energy enough to power at least two dozen ordinary films and well, it is the funniest movie released in a long time. The songs of Alan Menken and the late Howard Ashman are still overflowing with intelligence and wit. The presence of Robin Williams, as the voice of the genie, along with the work of many talented animators, create one of the funniest cartoon characters of all time.

For the uninitiated, "Aladdin" is the Arabian Nights tale of a street kid who stumbles upon a magic lamp and its resident genie. He uses the three wishes the genie grants him to woo the sultan's feisty daughter Jasmine. Unfortunately, he is pitted against the sultan's traitorous grand vizier Jafar, who seeks the lamp and ultimate power for himself.

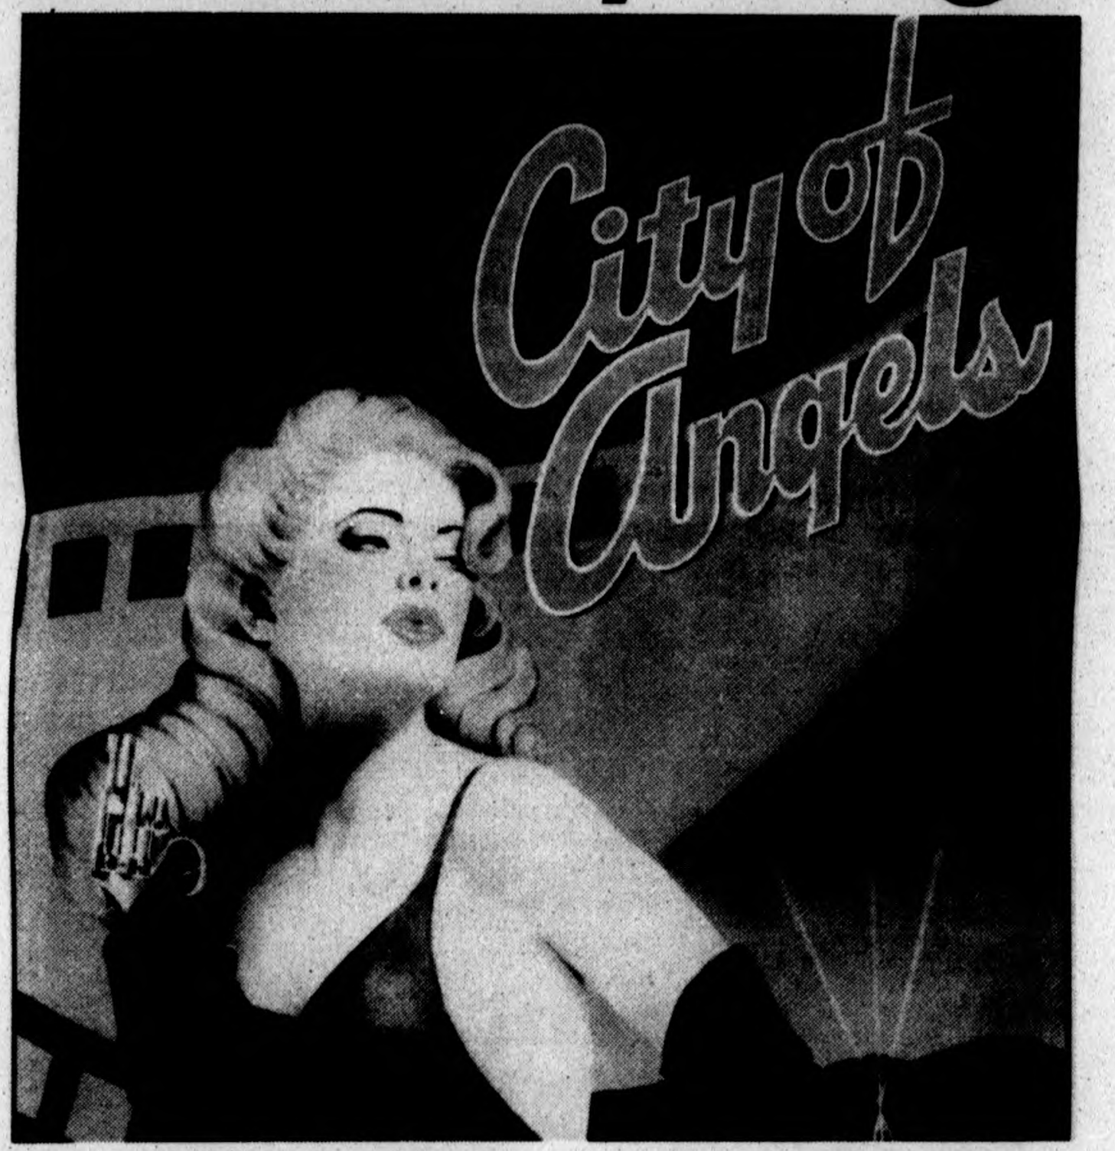
The story may seem a little uneven at times but, like movie musicals of old, it is really just a casual framework for a series of fantastic music and action sequences. The computer animation used in "Beauty and the Beast" is used in abundance here to the point where it is no longer distracting, but creates some rather breathtaking visual effects.

"Aladdin" is nearly flawless animated moviemaking, so good you wonder how the high can get any higher.

Aladdin



Broadway magic arrives in Philadelphia



By MAURA RURAK
Staff Reporter

"City of Angels," winner of six 1991 Tony awards, including Best Musical and Best Score, entertained crowds at the Forrest Theatre in downtown Philadelphia from Nov. 10 to 29. The play which Time labeled as "a completely original American musical" is set in the real "city of angels," Los Angeles in the late 1940s. Just as much of a comedy as a musical, the play relies on witty dialogue and sexual humor to dazzle the audience.

There are two main plots that run throughout the play. The first is the "real" plot about an author, Stine, who has decided to go for the big money in writing screenplays for the film world in Hollywood. The play goes step by step through Stine's frustration and disgust with the plastic money sharks swarming in Los Angeles. He bases the characters in the movie on the different personalities he meets in the city and that is where his trouble begins.

The movie plot takes the audience on the beat with an unemployed private investigator, Stone. Stone gets wrapped up in a murder case involving a wealthy elderly man, a beautiful young wife and two ungrateful children. This is the screenplay that Stine is writing. As he continues, the movie plot progresses. If Stine gets writer's block, then Stone and the other characters are stuck in mid-sentence. Often, the stage was split to show the action of the two different plots and how the movie script relied on Stine's ability to write. If the editor did not like the way the script was going, the whole movie plot would "rewind" and be played out again until the editor was happy with the revised script.

The glamorous lights of Hollywood flickered on stage as a backdrop for the realistic set. Stereotypes were played out in the characters of the sex-crazed editor, Irwin S. Irvin and the faithful secretary, Bobbi. The strongest character, however. was played by Barry Williams, the former Greg Brady. Williams proved to be a humorous, versatile actor with a smooth, clear voice in the character of Stone.

The soundtrack of the play is full of powerful numbers with simple, basic melodies. With a total of 19 musical numbers, "City of Angels" cleverly combines not only two distinct plots but a wonderful mix of dialogue and music.

Often the road show cannot compare to the Broadway production; "City of Angels" does compare. The cast gives a top-rate performance and the script can only entertain. A special treat that brings the magic of Broadway to the streets of Philadelphia, "City of Angels" will undoubtedly find success outside of New York as well.

Asia relives their 'Rock and Roll Dream'

By CAROLYN POPPE
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Asia, the '80s group that brought us "Heat of the Moment" and "Don't Cry," returned to the stage Nov. 21 for a special appearance at the Chestnut Cabaret.

The band introduced their new album, Aqua, to the audience and recreated old favorites that the crowd was itching for.

Asia has always represented a talented cross-section of some of the finest bands that rock has ever seen. The group has included Yes Steve Howe on guitar, John Wetton, of both Yes and King Crimson, on bass guitar and vocals and Yes Geoff Downes on keyboards, also known for his work with the Buggles. Asia has also involved the drumming of ELP's Carl Palmer and occasional live appearances by Greg Lake of the same group.

The resulting sound was always driving, genuine rock that emphasized Wetton's vocal work. His moving voice made Asia tunes like "Sole Survivor" and "Open Your Eyes" singable and addictive for listeners.

Unfortunately, when Asia hit the stage at 11 p.m. that Saturday, Wetton was not to be heard. There were no traces of him, nor Palmer's percussion. The band that Downes led consisted of newcomers, with the exception of guitarist Mandy Meyers, who had joined Asia in 1985 on Astra.

The sound felt like old Asia imagery recreated.

They began by playing new tunes from the last albums: 1992's Aqua, 1990's Then and Now and Astra. But the crowd thirsted for bigger classics from 1982's Asia and 1983's Alpha.

Five songs into the concert, Asia introduced the special attraction that all had eagerly awaited — Steve Howe. Howe moved easily back into the old Asia work, although having recently completed the Yes Union tour. He coolly joined in (the only one not sweating in the Cabaret) as if he had never left nine years ago. Howe's spotless talent was well-understood.

However, the newer band members lacked the feel that ex-Asians had. The new vocalist/bassist was no substitute for Wetton. And young Meyers, with his metal sound on electric guitar, clashed with the classic precision of Howe's fingerwork.

Fortunately, the real Asia showed through whenever Howe and Downes played duo parts. Their creation was a perfect love affair. Downes would begin a keyboard solo, as in "Only Time Will Tell," and when Howe kicked in, the sound felt just like old Asia imagery recreated.

But each time the new vocalist joined them, many Asia fans felt let down by his weak, inadequate sound. With rudimentary bass and sometimes-confused lyrics, he did not fit the bill as the new Wetton.

Still, Howe's solo pieces highlighted the evening. The audience consisted of a majority of Yes fans, so when Howe broke into three famous solos from his tours with Yes, the crowd was amazed. On acoustic guitar, Howe repeated those precise, Spanish-ballad-sounding pieces that he has been playing for 15 years like a well-recited prayer. He was excellent to experience in a bar setting.

The crowd seemed pleased by the band's overall performance. They managed to include important tunes like "The Heat Goes On," "Rock & Roll Dream," "Don't Cry," "Wildest Dreams" and others. Since the audience was bent on hearing the songs, adequately reenacted or not, they were well rewarded for their long wait.

Asia's opening band was surprisingly notable, as well. Hooters' ex-bassist Andy King, now on acoustic guitar, entertained the eager group earlier in the evening. His brother joined him and the two played a particularly strong acoustic duo with decent harmony. They were the male answer to the Indigo Girls in sound and style. The new album, Angels, may be worth a listen, especially the tune, "We All Fall Down."

Based on the Asia performance that followed, the new Aqua seems to have some feel of classic Asia since it allows Downes to take charge. But without the talents of Wetton, Palmer and Howe, Asia is just not the same. Perhaps those memories of the '80s should be left as just that.

Lee creates an epic film

By AARON NICODEMUS
Senior Reporter

Nic's Picks

The turbulent spirit of the 1960s is remembered in the famous news clips of the era, like the JFK motorcade in Dallas, MLK's "I Have A Dream" speech and the Kent State massacre. Often, however, one or two poignant pictures seem like weak testimonials. One exception is a photograph of a spectacled black man, his eyes dark with anger, pointing to some distant point. Malcolm X's life, as controversial as it was, still has influence and relevance in today's world. Whether labeled as a radical or a prophet, his words of warning ring true. The topics Malcolm X wrestled with in the early sixties, namely racism and black-on-black violence, remain valid even today.

"Malcolm X" is the crowning achievement for filmmaker Spike Lee, whose previous efforts have always been laced with the director's own disconcerting opinions. Part documentary, part political commentary, "Malcolm X" provides a thoughtful and insightful portrait of a man always heard, sometimes hated but never understood.

Denzel Washington stars as Malcolm Little, opening as a young hustler in Harlem and Boston. Lee stars as Malcolm's sidekick and encourager, as they dress in flashy clothes, chase women and escape from one predicament after another. Lee uses this sequence to provide a balanced story, analyzing the seamier side of the leader's life as well.

Malcolm's criminal activities land him in prison, where he meets a black Muslim and is impressed by his passion for African-American freedom. Malcolm soon spends all his time soaking knowledge about his new faith and the world around him. His conversion experience is almost visionary, and he vows to change the course of his life. Once out of prison, Malcolm changes his last name to "X," to rid himself of a name given to his ancestors by a slave master. By vehemently defending the black man's worth and rights, Malcolm's following grows as he speaks on behalf of the black Muslim leader, Elijah Muhummed.

Malcolm marries and has children, keeping busy within the black Muslims with many speaking engagements. His faith is soon shaken when he discovers that his leader, Mohammed, has fathered several illegitimate children. His subsequent break from the black Muslims and pilgrimage to Mecca change his attitudes and direction. Angered by his softer attitudes, militant followers turn against him and eventually instigate the assassination plot.

"Malcolm X" is a true cinematic achievement. Lee has transformed a misunderstood and misrepresented man into a believable flesh and blood character. The irony of Malcolm X's death, the fact that his murderers were black, is not lost. As the incidents of black-on-black crime continue to rise in our inner cities, Malcolm's message of peace through unity ,reverberates with power on the current scene.

Denzel Washington's performance is nothing short of stunning. He enacts Malcolm X as a living, breathng man, struggling with his own spiritual and intellectual powers with all the power of an Oscar performance. "Malcolm X" is a rare motion picture in that it tells his biography without bias, while the political impact remains intact. With or without knowledge of Spike Lee, the Sixties, Malcolm X or Islam, "Malcolm X" is well worth the price of admission.

FAST FORWARD: The Christmas season traditionally unveils the best films of the season. This year seems to be no exception. Due out during the month of December are two Jack Nicholson movies that may be excellent films. The first is "Hoffa," where Nicholson stars in a film directed by Danny DeVito about the powerful union boss with alleged mob ties, who disappeared mysteriously 20 years ago.

Another film is "A Few Good Men," with Nicholson as a hard army leader and a supporting cast of Tom Cruise and Demi Moore. The movie deals with military cover-up and the trial aimed at uncovering the ugly truth.

REWIND: "Patriot Games" stars Harrison Ford as Tom Clancy's energetic hero Jack Ryan, as he battles Irish terrorists on American soil. The action is unrelenting as the terrorists attempt to avenge the death of one of their own. While "Patriot Games" does provide a semblance of a plot, the suspense is never captivating or even interesting. Ford's talent in sly ironic comments or in depth of emotion is wasted as he merely races around the screen. "Patriot Games" provides tons of guns, but little else.

Groups honor Monkees

By COLEEN KENIREY
Entertainment Editor

The Cutting Edge

Long Play Records has just compiled a tribute to the late '60s band, The Monkees. Accurately described by one of their songwriters as "the group that wouldn't die," the band reached their peak popularity through reruns of their TV show.

The Monkees were created as a TV band, not with music as the primary goal. The band was assembled by open auditions, which rejected such talents as Charles Manson. The popularity of the show and their music far surpassed the creators' intentions. Although The Monkees were created as a parody, they came to influence a generation weaned on TV, as evidenced by this new CD.

Here No Evil showcases 21 modern pop groups paying tribute to the pre-fab four with new renditions of their carefree pop classics. Deacon Lunchbox performs "The Day We Fall In Love." His name is well-chosen, since he sounds like a southern preacher delivering a sermon. It is definitely a unique interpretation of the song, with violins haunting the background.

Lunchbox sums it up best by prefacing his song with, "In the mid-1960s, I was a young teenage boy. I was aware of the fact that The Monkees rock band was 90 percent hype. But I liked them anyway." This is the attitude the listener must adopt for this album. The Monkees may have been purely farce and fluff, but they were good at it.

The best cuts are those which take the songs in a fresh direction. The hit "Pleasant Valley Sunday" is given a harder edge by Magnapop and The Doll Squad's "Let's Dance On" is also more guitar-laden. "You Just May Be The One" is reborn in an abstract, modern pop style which creatively distorts Peter Holsapple's voice.

Multi-Color House also succeeds in modernizing "You Told Me," retaining the vocal interaction Micky Dolenz and Davy Jones frequently used. Mitch Easter pays homage to Jones by reflecting his singing style on a decent version of "Valleri." The biggest disappointment of this CD is The Flying Subs' "(Theme From) The Monkees." The meaningless lyrics were the best aspect of this comedic anthem and the Subs did not include them.

Many of The Monkees' songs had a potential country sound, which is unfortunately explored in several Here No Evil covers. "Take a Giant Step" by The Chant has such undertones, but also offers a tambourine sequence, similar to Monkees' originals. The Diggers also add a distinct southern element to "Circle Sky" by using unusual instruments such as a washboard and a jaw harp. Those Big Belt Buckles really capture that irritating down-home feeling with "What Am I Doing Hangin' Round?"

The most unusual turn of events occurs with Larry Joe Miller and The Rockabilly Rockets singing "Tomorrow's Gonna Be Another Day." This song could further augment the evidence that Elvis is still alive.

Live Bait removes the tinge of madness, Dolenz added with his frenetic drumbeats and vocals, to the original "Randy Scouse Git." The band Big Fish Ensemble deprives "Last Train To Clarksville" of its fast pace, leaving the song flat and reminiscent of circus music.

The campy feel of the TV show, which was reflected in the originals, is not present here. Many of the songs remain faithful to the beats of the old versions, but these songs take themselves too seriously. The best part of The Monkees was that everyone knew they were better at slapstick comedy than music, and thus they took a necessary humorous approach to their songs. Here No Evil is not very effective in capturing the spirit of the childhood TV favorite.

FRESH CUTS: Pavement has released an EP called Watery, Domestic. The four songs combine strange, disjointed lyrics with familiar guitar feedback sounds. Abstract ideas such as "Someone took in these pants/ Somebody painted over paint; painted wood/ And where he stood no one stands" are examined in the last song, "Shoot The Singer." This title expresses the listener's feelings after hearing "Texas Never Whispers." There is an intentional conflict between the way the vocalist is singing and the song the guitarist is playing.

The last three songs are appealing, although the first one is annoying. "Feed Them To the Lions" opens with the sounds normally found in a TV commercial for toys. It is charged with an energy also present on the EP's best track, "Frontwards." This song offers a more coherent sound and an intriguing duel between guitar and drums.

The volleyball team completed a disappointing season with a sixth place finish in the Big East Tournament.

Volleyball sixth in Big East

By JUSTIN SCHREIBER
Staff Reporter

The Villanova women's volleyball team went into the Big East Tournament on Nov. 21 with high hopes and lofty expectations. Playing an extremely tough field, they knew they had to play near-perfect volleyball if they were to advance deep into the tourney.

'Nova's first match was against the Pirates of Seton Hall. The Cats dropped the first two games of the match 15-10, 15-11, but stormed back in the third game with an impressive 15-6 win. In the fourth, however, the Hall proved to be too much for the Cats as the Pirates won the game 15-8 and took the match three games to one. 'Nova gave it a valiant effort, but in the end the 22-9 Pirates were simply too good. Junior Becky Kulbago led the Cats with a match-high 17 kills. Mara Austins contributed 20 digs, tops in the match.

Later in the day, the Wildcats squared off against Connecticut in the consolation bracket. After such a tough defeat, the Cats easily could have folded their tents and headed back to the Main Line. 'Nova, however, has much more character than that.

The team displayed its intestinal fortitude in a gritty and exciting match against the Huskies. After losing the first game 15-7, the Cats got it together in the second game and won 15-12.

They then proceeded to lose the third game 15-10 and were actually down 14-8 in the fourth game. Instead of rolling over and conceding defeat, the Cats fought off four match points and eventually won 16-14. Buoyed by this emotional victory, the Cats went on to win the fifth game 15-9 to give them a match victory, three games to two.

Kulbago had a phenomenal match for Villanova as she picked up an incredible 27 kills, 22 digs and eight blocking assists. She led 'Nova in all three categories. Senior Vicky Dispenza added a match-high 64 assists. Senior Pam Clifford also chipped in with 16 kills and 19 digs.

The Cats' final tournament opponent was Georgetown. This match would determine fifth place in the Big East. The Wildcats picked up right where they left off against UConn as they won the first game 15-8. Things quickly went downhill after this. The Cats lost the next three games 15-8, 15-7, 15-12 to give the Hoyas a match victory, three games to one.

Kulbago finished off her fine performance in the tourney by once again leading 'Nova in kills with 16, while Clifford led with 19 digs. This loss gave the Cats a final season record of 15-17 and put them in sixth place in the Big East.

Dispenza finished the season as the team assist leader with 1,104 and topped the Cats in aces with 52. Kulbago led all players in kills at 356, while Austrins' 350 digs were a team best.

Although the Cats are losing valuable seniors Dispenza and Clifford, the growth and maturity shown by this year's team can only help bolster their confidence for next year.

"Everybody is very optimistic for next year's team," said Twomey. "I'm certain we're going to be a better volleyball team next year than we were this year."

Congratulations go out to Dispenza and Clifford, both of whom were named to the Big East All-Conference Team for the second consecutive year. Last season they were the first-ever All-Conference selections for Villanova in Big East volleyball. This year the Cats are the only team in the conference to have more than one player make the All-Conference Team.

Men second at tourney

By MICHEL DAVIES
Staff Reporter

Although it is early in the season, one thing is sure about the men's volleyball club — it will be a major contender.

This was quite clear as 'Nova made it to the finals of the Scranton Tournament. Setter Mark Gilrain played well at the beginning as 'Nova won its first two games in pool play against Scranton "B" and Millersville.

"Mark played really well all day. He was very consistent, as usual," said senior middle hitter Brian Walheim.

But in its third game of pool play, 'Nova was unable to sustain its great play, losing to a tough Bloomsburg team in three games. Fortunately for the Wildcats, their two previous wins were enough to advance them past pool play and into the quarter finals.

With only two match victories needed to advance to the finals, the Cats knew they had to step it up a notch, and that they did. Junior middle hitter Rob Walsh played one of his best games of the season, as did outside hitter Gary Sica.

"Rob just had a great day. It was one of the best days I've ever seen him have. And Gary came out were both major contributors," really fired up at the end. They said Walheim.

After winning their quarter-final and semi-final matches against Scranton and Rider, respectively, the Cats once again had to face Bloomsburg, and once again it was the same outcome.

'Nova led off the match by beating the Bloomsburg team 15-6. But the Wildcats were unable to sustain the level of play, as concentration errors such as missed passes plagued the team throughout the match. The Cats ended up losing in three games (6-15, 15-10, 15-11), taking second overall in the tournament.

"I'm really pleased on how we played. We beat some very good teams and played some real quality volleyball. We did make some passing errors at the end, but we will work on that in practice. I think we're definitely headed in the right direction," said Sica.

Look for the Cats to make more waves this weekend as the team hosts a tournament at the Jake Nevin Field House on Dec. 5. If the team plays as well as it did at Scranton, 'Nova might be able to use the home court advantage to grab its first tournament championship of the season.

Women streak to NCAA history

for Villanova when you're walking off an airplane," said Stern. "It's the proudest that I've ever been as a coach because of that. It made me feel really proud and our athletes good that someone cared. I'm friends with a lot of the other coaches in the country and no one has ever experienced anything like we did the other day."

The winning streak, as well as the display of championships the lady harriers have accumulated, has a definite value to the coaches, but it really is the individual team crown that pleases them the most.

"Winning four in a row only makes me happy because it means we won this year," said Stern.

The season could not have ended any more perfectly for the seniors who had never lost a meet in their college careers. For senior superstars Nnenna Lynch and Cheri Goddard, nothing less than an undefeated season was permissible. These two have been on the team since the streak was born. Senior Irene Ruopoli, although not a member of all four championship teams, has never lost a meet in her 'Nova cross country career either. These three women were arguably the heart of the 1992 'Nova squad.

"Our kids leaned on the seniors this year. They really played a big part," said Stern.

Lynch and Goddard were the proverbial older sisters of the team.

"They have a great concern for the others and everyone communicates with them so easily," said Stern.

Ruopoli, on the other hand, was somewhat of an unsung hero. She is the type of person, according to Stern, "who was just happy to be on the team."

The team was more than happy to have her great talents, with Stern noting that, "Things would have been uncomfortable without her. It was so important for her to win."

Unfortunately the seasons of glory are over for the seniors. At this point, the ladies' mentor is well accustomed to seeing great athletes come and go out of his program.

"It's time for Nnenna, Cheri and Renie Ruopoli. I'm happy that they're leaving because it means that three more Villanova graduates will be out there in the world that we are very proud of," said Stern.

With all of the hype about the Villanova streak, the tremendous accomplishment of Carole Zajac's first place finish and Individual National Championship has been slightly under publicized. Her outstanding time of 17:01.9 was a dominating 11 seconds faster than second place finishing Deena Drossin from Arkansas.

"Carole is definitely on the way to becoming one of the great distance runners in the world just like her predecessors have done," said Stern.

Lynch finished third at an impressive time of 17:18.5. To no one's surprise, Goddard once again gave an outstanding performance in the biggest meet of the season, crossing the line at 17:33.4. Becky Spies and Megan Flowers handed in Villanova's final two marks with times of 18:19.1 and 18:31.5.

"It was a very, very tough meet. It was the toughest one we've ever had in the history of our school. We were very fortunate to beat Arkansas and Georgetown," said Stern.

Incidentally, the 1992 Razorbacks and the Hoyas are considered two of the best teams of all time, making the 'Nova victory even more thrilling.

The 1992 women's cross country squad is one of class, prestige and tradition. "This team, individually that is, is going to be doing more ten years from now than maybe any other team I've coached at Villanova," said Stern.

That is saying quite a lot when you flip through the history of Wildcat harriers.

It is hard to say enough about this team whose accomplishments would never have been achieved without the additional guidance of assistant coaches John Marshall and Judy West.

The Wildcats will return as the best team in the country next year. Familiar athletes like Zajac, Spies, Flowers and Rhines will be back for the drive for five.

Swimmers up record to 3-0

By ERIC WARREN
Staff Reporter

The Villanova men's swim team improved its record to 3-0 as the Cats defeated the University of Maryland for the first time in two years by the score of 156-85.

"The team swam really well," said Head Coach Chuck Horton. "They're getting faster and faster with each meet and it's a reflection of just how hard the men have been training in practice."

The team of junior Chris DesMarais, senior tri-captain Scott Fraser, freshman Michael Schwankl and freshman Tom Forrest opened the meet with a victory in the 400 medley relay with a time of 3:31.15. Senior tri-captain Ed Paradise and sophomores Brett Loper, Dan Thomas and Todd Cimicata combined to secure second place in 3:37.69.

Villanova continued its dominance in the 100 breaststroke as the men swept the event. Paradise touched the wall first in 59.36, followed by Schwankl and Fraser in 59.75 and 1:01.83, respectively.

The Wildcats also excelled in the distance freestyle events. Freshman Tim Jogan bested the 200 free field in 1:43.86. Jogan also captured the 500 free with a 4:39.11 clocking. Sophomore Rob Drumm finished close behind in 4:39.84 and came back to win the 1000 free with a time of 9:47.94. Pat Donahue, yet another sophomore on a very young, but fast Villanova squad, finished strong in 9:50.70, which secured second place. The 200 free relay consisting of Cimicata, Fraser, Thomas and sophomore Sean Kelliher clinched the victory in 1:28.75.

DesMarais won both the 100 backstroke and the 400 individual medley with times of 52.70 and 4:06.67, respectively. Junior Glen Langhans added a second place finish in the 400 IM with a time of 4:15.64.

Villanova was extremely strong in the 100 butterfly as Fraser and Forrest left the competition in their wake, finishing in 52.64 and 52.95, respectively. Freshman Garrett Means placed second in 1-meter diving with a score of 133.90 and freshman Brian Yodice added a second place in the 3-meter event.

'Nova remains unbeaten at 2-0

By MOIRA DONAHUE
Staff Reporter

The women's swimming and diving team defeated the University of Maryland, improving its record to 2-0. The women won by a 163-64 margin.

The team was led by double event winners sophomore Tara Ryan and senior Mary Dowling.

Ryan captured the 100-yard butterfly and the 200-yard freestyle in 58.81 and 1:56.63, respectively. Dowling won both the 500-yard and 1000-yard freestyle races in 5:03.42 and 10:25.11.

Dowling also was a member of the first-place 200-yard freestyle relay. Along with teammates Tammy Kouser, Amy Burton and Karen Melliar-Smith, Dowling edged out Maryland with the time of 1:40.80.

Freshman Tammy Kouser led off both winning relays and had an individual victory in the 100-yard backstroke with the time of 57.88.

Other single event winners include juniors Sarah Dykstra in the 50-yard freestyle (24.55) and Lisa Flood in the 100-yard breaststroke (1:05.92). Sophomore Meaghan McCaffrey won the 100-yard freestyle with the time of 52.85, and freshman Eileen Rothenback placed first in the 400-yard individual medley (4:30.96).

Diver Lisa Galpin came in second in both the 1 and 3 meter dives.

The women's team will travel to the Harvard Invitational this weekend.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Women's Cross Country Team

This week the Villanovan and the Wildcat Club recognize the women's cross country club as their "team" of the week.

For the fourth straight year, the Cats captured the NCAA Championship at Indianapolis Nov. 23. The entire team effort was keyed by first place finisher Carole Zajac, who won with a time of 17:01.9. Cheri Goddard, Nnenna Lynch, Becky Spies, Megan Flowers and Irene Ruopoli also were contributors to the four-peat.

'Nova hoops anxious to start season at American

Lance Miller and the Cats start the season tomorrow at 2 p.m. at American.

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Sports Editor

If the Cats' two exhibition games are any indication of what is in store for the team this season, 'Nova should simply skip the first half and play the second half twice. After getting off to slow starts against the French National Team and Marathon Oil, the Cats exploded to score an average of 48.5 points in the second frame of these contests. That figure is double what they averaged in the first half, as the Cats fell to the French 73-66 on Nov. 20 but then bounced back to blow out Marathon Oil 80-63 on Nov. 23.

One reason for this second half surge is Jonathan Haynes. The sophomore point guard has taken over stretches in both games with his ability to run the transition game and create in the halfcourt set. In one sequence against Marathon Oil, Haynes made a spectacular spin move in the backcourt and an eventual three-pointer, fed Arron Bain for a layup with a perfect bounce pass between two defenders and gave Anthony Pelle an alley-oop from just inside the halfcourt line which resulted in a rim-bending dunk and thunderous cheers from the duPont Pavilion crowd.

"If Jonathan Haynes is going to play like this or at least close to this, we'll be a good team," said Head Coach Steve Lappas.

The Cats are clearly at their best when they are able to push the ball upcourt. But in order to have an effective running game, 'Nova must be able to rebound and outlet the ball quickly. Center James Bryson averaged a solid eight boards for the two exhibition games. Pelle was also active inthe paint, blocking six shots and altering several others. The "twin towers" combination was also effective offensively versus Marathon Oil, as both players scored 12 points.

Frontcourt mate Bain stepped up his game against Marathon Oil to grab nine rebounds to go along with 11 points and five assists. Bain's overall play, particularly his ability to feed the post and knock down the "trey" will be critical to Wildcat success when the running game bogs down.

One positive for the Cats is that it does not appear they will have to rely on Lance Miller to carry the scoring load. When the Cats unleashed a 14-2 run against the French, Miller did not score a single point, though he finished with a game-high 19. Miller took only five shots against the Marathoners, scoring seven points. But do not worry about Miller's offense. The senior co-captain showed he could score when needed, particularly on the drive.

Fellow co-captain Calvin Byrd did not play in the exhibition tune-ups because of a broken finger. He has since returned to action and will play against American University tomorrow.

Lappas is anxious for Byrd to return to the lineup.

"We miss Calvin Byrd. He's a terrific defensive player. In this system, he's murder," said Lappas. "He's played probably the best so far in preseason."

In Byrd's absence, freshman Kerry Kittles has sparkled. The smooth swingman has been anything but shy, averaging 13 points and 3.5 steals. Kittles is a quick leaper with quick hands as well. He is also a capable outside shooter.

The 1992 Wildcats will certainly be exciting to watch. They boast one of the top running games in the conference and perhaps its top point guard as well. They will try to unleash both of them in the nation's capital tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Basketball Preview

Villanova @ American
Saturday, Dec. 5, 2 p.m.
Bender Arena, Washington, D.C.
TV: None, Radio: 89.1 WXVU

The Wildcats officially begin the Steve Lappas era tomorrow at 2 p.m. against the American University Eagles. American will look to avenge a 78-64 loss to the Cats early last season.

The Eagles finished at 11-18, third in the Colonial Athletic Association in 1991-92. They lose three starters from last year's club, but their two leading scorers both return. Forward Brian Gilgeous, a 6-foot-6 senior swingman earned first team CAA honors the past two seasons. He is the leading CAA player of the year candidate. Gilgeous averaged 19.8 p.p.g. and 6.3 r.p.g. in 1991-92. Senior forward/center Craig Sedmak, a 6-foot-10 bruiser, averaged 13.2 p.p.g.

American's success tomorrow will depend on its supporting cast of players. Coach Chris Knoche will look for help from a set of newcomers, including the Washington Post Player of the Year Darryl Franklin and JuCo transfer Eric Lawrence. Look for sophomores Michael Blackwell and Tim Fudd to log backcourt minutes. Forward Marko Krivokapic (3.0 p.p.g.) will be counted upon to improve his production.

American's size is limited, with Sedmak being its tallest player. Knoche will look to pressure the Cats on defense. Both teams will play man-to-man defenses and look to run.

Tomorrow's game should be up-tempo. The Cats have a size and athleticism advantage. 'Nova should control the boards tomorrow and attempt to get out on the break. Foul trouble will be a problem for both teams. Villanova's success tomorrow will depend upon the effectiveness of its man-to-man defense and the execution of its motion offense.

The exhibition games played last week helped accomplish some early goals. The coaching staff varied player combinations, changed defenses, implemented a new offensive system and exposed the newcomers to game-time situations. Early fan delight was provided by point man Jonathan Haynes and swing man Kerry Kittles. Veterans Arron Bain and Anthony Pelle had solid, confidence-building performances in the Marathon Oil exhibition. Hopefully this game will lead to solid 1992-93 performances by both players.

NOTE: Villanova plays at St. Mary';s (CA) Dec. 12 at 6 p.m. The Cats will play Penn at the Spectrum Dec. 15 at 7 p.m. Both games will be broadcast live on 89.1 WXVU.

Cats fall to St. Joe's in opener

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Assistant Sports Editor

The second-ever exclusively female Big 5 doubleheader was a huge success. The St. Joseph's Alumni Memorial Fieldhouse was jammed with 2,076 fans. And they were loud; very loud. They were egged on by the St. Joe's band and the school's perpetually-flapping hawk mascot. The excitement was being broadcast live on Sports Channel. It was a dream come true for those who organized and promoted the event.

And it was a nightmare for the young Villanova hoops team. In front of the highly partisan crowd, the Hawks clobbered the Cats 83-57 in the season opener for both teams.

"We're a very young team, and I just wasn't sure we were ready for this type of atmosphere," said Head Coach Harry Perretta. "The kids don't understand the intensity and pressure until they get in it."

'Nova's starting lineup included freshman Denise Dillon at guard. Two other freshmen, Jen Snell and Susan Glenning, also saw a substantial amount of time and freshman guard Stacie Keffer played the final six minutes of the game as well.

"We've made a decision that we're going to try to play our freshmen," said Perretta. "They're talented players and they're the future of our program ... It's going to cost us for a while, and I'm willing to accept it."

It was Villanova who struck first when center Karen Connell tossed in a quick jump shot to give 'Nova a 2-0 lead. It was not to last. The Hawks retaliated with a 10-0 run and would never surrender the lead from there on.

The Cats narrowed the St. Joe's lead with a 7-0 streak of their own midway through the first half. Senior Nikki Benedix buried a baseline shot which was followed by an outside jumper by forward Sheri Walker. Sophomore point guard Michele Thornton brought the Cats within one when she nailed a trey and made the score 14-13.

"We've always been a very good defensive team, but tonight our defense broke down," said Perretta. "We're not really quick, and we don't recover very quickly. So if someone makes an error, it's a total breakdown."

Taking advantage of 'Nova's defensive lapses was St. Joe's forward Amy Mallon. After the Cats pulled within one, Mallon took control for the Hawks, scoring 13 points in the remaining portion of the first half. By the time the halftime buzzer had sounded, she had chipped in 17 points and 'Nova was trailing 42-23.

"At the beginning of the second half I started my five most experienced players, and for about eight minutes we actually played even or a little bit better than even," said Perretta.

The experience was desperately needed by this point. Until sophomore center Jennifer Maga scored at 1:58 into the second half, the Hawks had scored 18 unanswered points.

Benedix led the way as the Cats came alive in the beginning of the second half. She scored six of her 12 points during a four-minute span, including two free throws following a steal she made from St. Joe's guard India Henderson. This made the score 51-36, but it was as close as the Cats would get for the remainder of the game.

"It just took us a long time to get into our system," said Benedix after the game. "We have to run our plays, and we weren't really thinking about our plays tonight."

The only Wildcat besides Benedix to reach double figures in for the night was Connell, who finished with 10 points. She also blocked three shots and pulled down five 'bounds, both tops for the team. Thornton and Maga each contributed eight points.

Leading the Hawks in scoring was guard Katie Curry, who scored 19 points. Mallon went scoreless in the second half, but her 17 points were still the team's second-highest total.

"We're going to work on getting stability, playing the way we want to play," said Perretta. "We have to find five that are going to play as a unit, and get the system going a little bit."

No. 1 The Citadel 44
North Carolina A&T 0

Quarterback Jack Douglas, the leading I-AA rusher, ran for 86 yards and threw for 140 to lead The Citadel to a 44-point romp of North Carolina A&T. The Citadel retains its No. 1 ranking and hosts Youngstown State tomorrow. North Carolina A&T finishes at 9-3.

No. 1 Northeast Louisiana 78 Alcorn State 17

Running back Greg Robinson rushed 19 times for a school record 250 yards and three TDs to lead Northeast Louisiana to the romp. Roosevelt Potts added another 122 yards and scored three TDs of his own. NELA piled up 36 first downs, 222 passing yards and 520 rushing yards to set a school and playoff record of 742 total yards. Northeast Louisiana is now 10-2 and will play Delaware in the quarterfinals this Saturday.

No. 3 Northern Iowa 17
Eastern Washington 14

In a game that featured defense, UNI and Eastern Washington combined for only 61 total rushing yards. Northern Iowa managed two touchdowns, both by way of Jay Johnson passes. Johnson connected on a 17-yarder to Tim Mosely and a 19-yarder to All-American Kenny Shedd to give Northern Iowa a 17-7 halftime lead. The UNI defense managed to hold E. Washington in the second half to secure the victory. Northern Iowa moves to 11-1 and will play McNeese State next Saturday.

No. 4 Middle Tennessee State 35 Appalachian State 10

Walter Crowder rushed for 144 yards and two TDs and Brigham Lyons added another 91 yards and two scores to lead MTSU. Middle Tennessee is now 10-2 and will play Marshall next week. ASU finishes at 7-5.

No. 5 Idaho 20
No. 11 McNeese State 23

Redshirt freshman Henry Fields initiated a final drive by ripping off a 45-yard scamper. Fields then concluded the drive with a one-yard plunge into the end zone with 28 seconds left to give McNeese State the upset win at Idaho. With the upset, McNeese State moves to 9-3 and will play Northern Iowa tomorrow.

No. 6 Marshall 44
No. 12 Eastern Kentucky 0

The Marshall defense held Markus Thomas, the all-time I-AA rusher, to -4 yards on nine carries to spark the Thundering Herd to the victory. Marshall ups its record to 9-3 and moves on to play Middle Tennessee State on Saturday.

No. 10 Delaware 56
No. 9 Samford 21

Delaware quarterback Bill Vergatino went 10-15 for 199 yards and three TDs to lead the Blue Hens to victory. The Blue Hen offense ended with 586 total yards, the most since 1982. The 56 points was the most ever by a Delaware team.

Sophomore running back Daryl Brown broke the 1,000 yard barrier for the year en route to 117 yards and two TDs. The Blue Hen defense held Samford to 205 total yards, well below its average of 405. Delaware is 10-2 and will play NE Louisiana tomorrow. Samford finishes at 9-3.

Before selecting the home teams, the committee reviews monetary bids handed in by the 16 teams. Each school estimates the amount of revenue it thinks it can generate from a possible home playoff game. For the second straight season, Villanova's bid was obviously too low. The possibility exists that 'Nova shot itself in the foot again by not guaranteeing a large enoough bid.

Division I-AA does not seed its playoff teams fairly nor does it recognize the top teams with home playoff games. That is the bottom line and unfortunately, 'Nova has to live with that. The 23-20 loss to YSU was devastating. The sad part, though, is 'Nova deserved better — at least one home game Its season would not be over right now.

'Nova football 9-3 and 10th in the nation

Flag football not just for guys

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Assistant Sports Editor

For those of you who thought that the gridiron was exclusively male territory, you clearly did not get the chance to see Back In Black-N.O.B. II. This was the name of 'Nova's women's flag football champions, the acronym standing for New Orleans-Bound.

With trick plays, precision and defense that would be the envy of most men's intramural teams, N.O.B. ran roughshod over its Villanova opposition this season. The team finally met its match against La Salle in the finals of the City Six Tournament.

The 21-7 loss was a disappointment to a team that had already been to New Orleans, the site of the national championship tournament, in the previous two years. However, it did not erase N.O.B.'s feat of winning its third straight Villanova title. In a year which saw a greatly increasing interest in women's flag football, N.O.B. continued to overwhelm its on-campus opponents.

"One thing I'm impressed with this year is the improvement in the entire league," said Dr. Ray Heitzmann, who has coached N.O.B. for two years. "We had 19 teams this year, 18 with coaches. A lot of the [varsity] football team's players have volunteered to coach the women's teams. It's really raised the quality of the entire league."

Despite the rapidly rising talent in the league, N.O.B. held their opposition scoreless in every one of its regular season games. Keeping opposing quarterbacks on their toes was linewoman Monika Pedano, a Villanova grad student.

"We've got a strong defense that can really rush the quarterback," said Pedano. "We're able to read team's plays really well and get right in on them."

Pedano is indicative of the combination of athletic and academic talent on the N.O.B. team. As an undergrad at Villanova, she was a member of the field hockey team and was Second Team All-Regional in 1991. She was also a Big East Academic All-American before she traded her plaid skirt and hockey stick for the jet-black N.O.B. uniform.

"I like the players to be symbols of the student-athlete," said Heitzmann. "Last year one of our players was accepted into medical school, one is pursuing a [doctorate] on a fellowship, and another was accepted into Phi Beta Kappa as a junior. Those are the kind of players that have been on the team."

> One thing I'm impressed with this year is the improvement of the entire league
> N.O.B. Coach Dr. Ray Heitzman

On offense, N.O.B. was led by quarterback Stacy Ronald. With quickness and a strong and accurate arm, Ronald led her teammates to a 46-6 victory in the Villanova championship game Nov. 17.

"Stacy is the centerpiece of the team," said Pedano. "She's got a great arm, and she pulls the team together with her spirit. I think she's a great offensive and defensive player."

Two other stars for N.O.B. on both the offensive and defensive ends were Robyn Schneiders and Janet Brown. For these two, interceptions and first-down carries were almost an everyday occurence.

"Our two 'little twins' Robyn and Janet have had a number of interceptions," said Pedano. "And they can just run their [tails] off."

N.O.B. will not in fact be New Orleans-bound this season, but they can still take a great deal of pride in being trailblazers in women's football.

Ice Cats struggle

By JONATHAN PASSMAN
Staff Reporter

The Ice Cats were thankful for a rest going into Thanksgiving break, as they had lost three straight games. 'Nova lost to Iona College, 5-1, then was swept at the Curry Tournament, losing 7-3 to host Curry and 5-2 in a rematch against Iona. The Cats fell to 3-5 overall, 2-1 in ECAC play.

> We are concerned about the drop in shots, but that is a sign that we are a young team.
> Head Coach Pat Ferrill

The Cats first traveled to New York, where they faced an Iona squad ready to shoot. Iona jumped to a quick 3-1 lead in the first period, with freshman defenseman Kevin Smith netting the lone Villanova goal. Unfortunately, the Cats could not battle back, as they were outshot 40-21. Freshman Dan Nadeau made 35 saves in goal, but it was not quite enough.

At the Curry Tournament, Villanova found itself in a shootout with the host. Both schools came out firing in the first period, with Curry taking a 4-2 lead. After a scoreless second period, the barrage began again with Curry outscoring 'Nova 3-2 in the third period. Nadeau made 32 saves in the defeat, and junior John Demers and freshmen Chris Paquette and Greg Mello each had goals.

In the second game, Villanova again faced ECAC foe Iona. Freshman Mike Kelly got the start in goal and had 37 saves, but the Gaels outshot the Ice Cats 42-22. Freshman Joe Galea and sophomore Brian Ralston scored for the Cats. Paquette was named to the All-Tournament team.

"Iona was just a bit quicker getting to the puck in the two games," said sophomore defenseman Dave Trimble.

"We are concerned about the drop in shots, but that is a sign that we are a young team. The break should rejuvenate the team," added Coach Pat Ferrill.

On an upbeat note, three injured Ice Cats returned to practice this week after being out with injuries. Sophomore Ryan Stattenfield, junior Anthony Sorrentino and senior Steve Flynn all are expected to play this weekend and put the Cats back on track.

Villanova returns from the layoff this weekend with a pair of tough non-conference matchups against America's armed forces. The Ice Cats face Army today at the Haverford Skatium at 5 p.m., and then battle Navy at the Spectrum Dec. 6 at 2 p.m.

Disappointing loss ends Cats' season

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Senior Reporter

What started as a season of great expectations came to a sudden, crashing halt last Saturday at Youngstown State.

Not only were the Cats in a state of shock because they lost the game, but they were more stunned at how the 23-20 fiasco ended.

Trailing by three with a mere 10 seconds left and out of timeouts on Youngstown's 40-yard line, it appeared that the Cats were out of luck. Not quite. The Cats had one last gasp of air left. Quarterback Tom Colombo, who completed nine straight passes in the fourth quarter, hit flanker Straughn Lumpkin for a first down on YSU's 13. That is when all hell broke loose.

According to the officials, time ran out as Lumpkin caught the ball and the game was over. However, 'Nova Head Coach Andy Talley and his Wildcats had a different impression, storming on the field arguing that two seconds remained after Lumpkin made the catch. Meanwhile, a flag had been thrown behind Colombo. An official picked it up and started waving it, signaling the end of the game. Youngstown believed the flag to be an offensive holding penalty on Villanova.

"I talked to a commissioner who said the officials should have given the defensive team [YSU] the interpretation [on the flag]," said Talley. "That way they could have refused the penalty. But they never did."

Despite arguing vehemently, the Cats (9-3) obviously could not sway the officials. The field goal kicking team was left on the field wondering what may have been had they had two seconds to kick a game-tying field goal. Instead, they were hit with the realization that they had lost.

"I told the team that 15 of the 16 teams will end the year with a loss," said Talley. "We held a team meeting on Monday and the mood was definitely subdued, disappointing. But I think they were quietly proud of what they accomplished and knew they could play on the next level."

The 10th-ranked Cats had ended their season for the second straight year at the hands of No. 7 Youngstown State (9-2-1). The 23-20 loss to the defending national champions hurt even more this year, as 12 senior starters ended their season with yet another frustrating first-round playoff loss, their third playoff defeat against no wins in four years.

To be honest, though, the Cats did not lose the game on that last play. It was largely due to the fact that they turned the ball over five times, a sure sign of defeat, especially in the playoffs. The turnovers wiped out the fact that 'Nova controlled the game, piling up 441 total yards of offense compared to YSU's 275.

"We caused our own demise," said Talley. "You can't turn the ball over five times and expect to win against a high caliber opponent. But we dominated the game and for the second straight time felt like we were the better team."

But as the Cats found out, the best team does not always win. The Penguins played error-free football and capitalized on 'Nova miscues — keys to advancing in the playoffs. Therefore, the Penguins will take on second-ranked The Citadel while the Cats will be home thinking of what may have been.

NOTES: The veteran, experienced Cats came into the game "tremendously focused" according to Talley. Even trailing by 10 in the fourth quarter, there was a quiet confidence among the Cats that they would come back like they have all year. This time, though, they fell two seconds short ... This marks the end of the careers of 1991 and 1992 Yankee Conference Defensive Player of the Year Curtis Eller and quarterback Tom Colombo, the two co-captains. Both were key members responsible for raising Villanova football from a good program to one of the best in the country.

This group of seniors accumulated 33 wins in four years, captured two Yankee Conference Championships, received three playoff berths, and recorded 'Nova's best season ever in its 95-year history with a 10-2 mark in 1992. To top it off, the Cats took second place in the Yankee this season and finished first in the Lambert/Meadowlands Poll as the top team in the east.

Men take fourth in NCAAs

By LARRY LANZA
Staff Reporter

Led by a fourth place finish by sophomore Louis Quintana, the Villanova men's cross-country team completed its best season in over 20 years by finishing fourth in the NCAA Division I Cross-Country Championships Nov. 23 in Bloomington, Ind.

After breaking a nine-year absence from the NCAA finals, the Wildcats turned back the clock in Indiana by equaling the fourth place NCAA finish earned by the 1971 Villanova squad. In the five seasons prior to that year, Villanova had captured four national championships.

Quintana's fourth place individual performance was a hallmark for Villanova as well. The last time a Wildcat had finished as high was when Donal Walsh finished second in 1970.

Change did not mark the final scoring for the team championship. For a third consecutive year, Arkansas captured the NCAA title, outscoring runner-up Wisconsin, 46-87, and finishing 62 points ahead of third place Providence. Of the remaining 18 other teams in the field, none came close to Villanova. Michigan finished 61 points behind the Cats to take fifth, while Notre Dame, Navy, Oregon, Wake Forest and North Carolina State rounded out the top 10.

Having been under constant rainfall during the prior weekend, the Indiana University course was in muddy condition for the Monday race. With the top men in the field seeking to maintain footing coming off the crowded starting line, the early pace for the 10 kilometer (6.2 mile) race was not fast.

"Everyone knew they couldn't afford a fall," said Villanova junior Mike Going, "because with so many good runners, a loss of only 10 [seconds] in time would be a loss of 20 places."

As the field moved past the first mile and into the heart of the race, the favorites emerged as Indiana's Bob Kennedy, a 1992 U.S. Olympian at 5,000 meters, and Washington State's Joe Kapkory of Kenya pulled out to the front.

"I found myself in the top 10 early, and that gave me a lot of confidence," said Quintana. "Soon I was running alongside [Providence's] Mark Carroll, and we just kept running the rest of the race together, helping each other out. After Kapkory faded, we caught him, and then only Kennedy was ahead of us, so we were fighting for second."

Meanwhile, behind Quintana, two Wildcats, senior Terrence Mahon and sophomore Dave Hartman, were within contact of each other and were both running positive races at the front part of the 179-man field. Within a half-minute of them, Wildcat sophomore Ken Nason was also running a strong race and was close to a top-50 finish. Another half-minute back, Going held onto the Cats' fifth and final scoring position.

In the last kilometer, Stanford's Gary Stolz caught up to Quintana and Carroll and eventually outran the two Big East runners to capture second. Ahead of Stolz, however, Kennedy was uncatchable, winning by 41 seconds in 30 minutes and 15 seconds. Kennedy's victory on his home course marked the first time an American had won the individual title since 1988, when Kennedy himself became the first freshman in NCAA history to win the championship.

After Kennedy, Stolz and Carroll, it was Quintana who came across the line, completing the 6.2 miles in 31 minutes and two seconds.

"Louie [Quintana] is one of the few pure milers to like cross country," said Head Coach Marty Stern. "He comes across the line with mud all over him, but he's a great competitor, and he truly likes cross country. I'm very proud of his fourth place finish."

The heart of Villanova's attack then came through when Mahon crossed in 31:41 to take 26th, and Hartman followed 7 seconds back in 33rd.

"Terrence [Mahon] is the father of the new era of Villanova cross-country," said Stern. "Terrence is the boss of this team, and he set an example this year by his actions. He is respected by his peers as well as by me.

"Dave Hartman is your typical cross country runner that every coach in America wants. He runs with a smile, and he runs because he loves it. He will become a major part of our quest for a national championship in the next couple of years."

Villanova closed out its scoring when Nason took 52nd in 32:10 and Going finished 98th in 32:57.

"Nason runs from wire to wire; he is one of the toughest you'll ever see run," said Stern. "Like Quintana, he is a half-miler and miler, but he also runs great cross-country and likes doing it. Going is one of the early recruits. When he was a freshman, we were seventh in the Big East, and now we're fourth in the country. Without Mike, we would never have made it to the victory stand."

"We really put everything on the line. In the upcoming seasons, we'll hopefully be able to do even better. For right now, though, this was just a great result," said Quintana.

Cats' playoff run should not be over

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Senior Reporter

When the Division I-AA football committee announced that Villanova would play at Youngstown State University (YSU) in the first round of the 16-team field, the Cats were disappointed about playing on the road for the second straight year, but felt rather comfortable playing a team that had only beaten them 17-16 in the first round of the playoffs last season.

But for some reason or another, fate seemed to be against the Cats from day one.

Obviously motivation would not be a problem. This senior laden squad was now playing in the playoffs for the third time in their careers. Not only were they determined to gain revenge over YSU from the previous year, but more importantly, to take that crucial first step on their road to a national championship.

But for some reason or another, fate seemed to be against the Cats from day one. It raised its ugly head again when the Cats were undeservedly sent on the road. This is a team that was ranked seventh nationally and coming off a 28-8 win over Maine, in what was probably its best played game of the year.

The Cats were rolling. Quarterback Tom Colombo had thrown for 372 yeards as the resurgent offense finally hit its stride entering the playoffs. The defense, ranked first against the run in the nation, dominated teams every week and played with the confidence of a national champion.

But something happened on the way to heaven. The Cats were sent on the road. Their ranking somehow fell from seventh to tenth.

When teams have to travel for road playoff games in Division I-AA, they rarely come home alive. Of the eight playoff games played last Saturday, the home team captured seven victories. The lone exception was Idaho, falling by three while hosting McNeese State. Granted, Villanova had plenty of opportunitites to defeat YSU. You do not usually beat a playoff team with five turnovers. But if the game had been played at 'Nova, where it should have been, the better team would have won by at least two touchdowns. And we all know that was Villanova.

The criteria that the committee uses in selecting host teams revolves around one thing — money. The top four teams are given home contests in the first round against the bottom four teams. That leaves eight teams vying for the privilege of hosting a playoff game. The committee studies the availability of quality facilities, financial success and geographic location considering inclement weather as its top three priorities. Not until fourth is the team's ranking considered.

The attendance in the 'Nova-YSU contest reached 9,465 where the capacity is 16,000 at Youngstown. Villanova Stadium's capacity is 12,000. The question is whether Villanova could have drawn at least 9,500 on Thanksgiving Weekend when the students were at home. The committee thought not. The facts suggest otherwise.

When Villanova played Delaware Oct. 17, that too was played on a weekend when the students were on break. But that game drew 12,000 and was a sellout three days in advance. Fans were being turned away at the gates. You're telling me that'Nova could not have secured at least 9,500 for a playoff game outside of Philadelphia on a weekend where there were no other local college football games? A playoff game mind you. I do not think so.

Nnenna Lynch named 'Nova's first Rhodes Scholar

By KATE SZUMANSKI

The Rhodes to Nnenna Lynch's phenomenal successses have been paved with numerous academic and athletic achievements exemplifying her dedication and commitment to herself, the University and humanity.

Lynch, a senior sociology major from New York City, is the first student in University history to receive the prestigious Rhodes scholarship. "Lynch has a 3.93 grade point average through six semesters at Villanova," according to the 'Cats Tale magazine.

Lynch has been a member of the indoor and outdoor track and field teams and the NCAA championship women's cross country team for four consecutive years. "An eight-time NCAA All-American...

According to the Oxford and Rhodes scholarships brochure, intellectual distinction is a necessary, but not a sufficient condition for election into the Rhodes program.

"Selection committees are charged to seek excellence in qualities of mind and in qualities of person which, in combination, offer the promise of effective service to the world in the decades ahead," according to the brochure.

"Literary and scholastic attainments, fondness for and success in sports... kindliness and fellowship, moral force of character and instincts to lead" are qualities the selection committees consider when judging candidates, according to the brochure.

Burke said the Rhodes selection committees look for potential leaders of society exhibiting talents in many areas, which Lynch does.

The University's head women's track and field coach Marty Stern said, 'Nnenna is not only one of the greatest female runners in the history of collegiate track, but she is also an exceptional student who cares for people as well. She is a tribute to the entire Villanova community, and we're all so proud of her."

Lynch finished third overall at the 1992 NCAA Division I Cross Country Championships. At that same meet, Villanova won their fourth consecutive NCAA team championship, the most in the history of the women's meet.

"Last summer, Lynch was a finalist at the United States Olympic Track and Field Trials in New Orleans, La., in the 3,000 meter run. In June, she was the NCAA Division I Outdoor Track champion at 3,000 meters in a meet held in Austin, Texas.

"Lynch also is a two-time member of the Big East Conference Scholar-Athlete team," according to the 'Cats Tale magazine.

Lynch was a founding member of Athletes Against Alcohol Abuse, a student organization that discusses the dangers of alcoholism with area high school students. Lynch is a member of the Democratic Socialists of America and a women's multicultural discussion group at the University of Pennsylvania. Lynch also helped donate, collect and distribute used clothing to a charity through Campus Ministry and has volunteered in a Philadelphia soup kitchen.

Lynch will study social anthropology for two years at Oxford University and has the option of applying for a third year of study. "After graduation from Oxford, I plan on reaching a doctorate degree and eventually teaching at the University level," said Lynch.

Dr. Michael Burke, director of the Honors Program, said Lynch's accomplishment "has demonstrated that we [Villanova University] have arrived as a national university."

Drug-Free Schools Policy published

By LAUREN WURST
Staff Reporter

Villanova prohibits the unlawful manufacture, distribution, dispensation, sale, possession or use of any drug by the employees or students in its workplace, on its premises or as a part of any of its activities, according to the University's Policy on Drug-Free Schools.

> There are drugs here so I'd say we have a problem.
> Janice M. Janosik, director for Drug and Alcohol Intervention

The Policy on Drug-Free Schools is aimed at educating the community about the University's policies concerning alcohol and drugs. It also states the legal sanctions imposed by the local, state and federal governments. The health risks associated with alcohol and drug use are described in the policy. Programs offered to assist the University in achieving a drug-free environment also are outlined.

According to the Department of Public Safety, there are no reported cases of students using drugs on our campus. However, the Center for Alcohol and Drug Assistance services 700-1000 individuals per year for alcohol and/or drug use, according to Janice M. Janosik, director for Drug and Alcohol Intervention.

"There are drugs here so I'd say we have a problem," said Janosik. She added that the most widely used drug on Villanova's campus is clearly alcohol. "There is a misperceived image of alcoholism. Getting drunk two to three times a week isn't viewed as a problem."

According to Tracey Hentz-Maiher, investigator for the Department of Public Safety, "Alcohol concerns them [Public Safety] the most."

Unofficially, there are 16 reported liquor law violations for 1992 reported to the Department of Public Safety.

In respect to abuse of other non-alcoholic drugs, Hentz-Maiher said, "Our specific department has nabbed no one, but it is occurring."

Martin Luther King Jr. Day observed on campus

By JEN BORDA

The University marked the observance of Martin Luther King Jr. Day Jan. 18 with a series of events titled "Reaching for the Dream ... ," sponsored by the Martin Luther King Jr. Day (MLK Day) Celebration Committee.

The events began with a birthday cake cutting ceremony in Connelly Center. Marchers gathered in front of the Center for Peace and Justice Education for a candlelight march.

The march proceeded through the campus and all assembled at the Awakening sculpture to hear the Rev. Ray Jackson, O.S.A., speak.

The vigil ceremony featured: Michele Damas, president of the Black Cultural Society; Maghan Keita, professor from the history department; the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., University president, and Acel Moore, associate editor of The Philadelphia Inquirer. The vigil ended with several musical selections by the Villanova Gospel Ensemble.

The celebration of Martin Luther King Jr. Day continues today with Freedom School, a collection of lectures, seminars and discussions on political and social justice issues.

Freedom Schools began during the Civil Rights Movement in order to teach people about civil rights and non-violence issues, said Terry Nance, the MLK Day Celebration Committee chair. Teachers at this school were not required to have degrees, only experience and information, added Nance.

University students, faculty and staff will follow the Freedom School format from 9:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. in Connelly Center to observe Martin Luther King Jr. Day.

Bryn Mawr movie theater fire classified as suspicious

By KATE SZUMANSKI
News Editor

Fire erupted in the AMC Bryn Mawr Twin Theater Jan. 25 shortly after 12:30 a.m., said Lower Merion Fire Marshal Harry Knorr. "The cause of the fire remains suspicious because no apparent accidental cause in the area of origin has been determined," he said.

The Bryn Mawr Twin Theater is divided into two individual theaters. The fire ignited in the stage and screen areas of the staging behind the screen area where some materials were stored and draperies on the far end of the screen caught fire," said Knorr.

Two cleaning personnel discovered the fire and went to Marbles Restaurant where the Bryn Mawr and Ardmore Fire Companies were alerted, Knorr said.

Fire fighters arrived on the scene at 12:53 a.m. The fire was extinguished in approximately 15 to 20 minutes and no one was injured, Knorr said.

The theater, however, sustained approximately $100,000 worth of damage to the screen and ceiling of the second theater, added Knorr. "The first theater is [structurally] okay and is only dirty," said Knorr.

The Lower Merion Fire Marshal and the Lower Merion Police Department are investigating the cause of the blaze. As of Jan. 26, no suspects or witnesses have been located or questioned, said Knorr.

WASHINGTON, D.C.

President Clinton spent his first days in office signing executive orders and commanding a series of foreign policy reviews, which are expected to change 12 years of Republican policies and initiate a new era of government.

Clinton lifted restrictions on abortion counseling at federally funded clinics, on the right to perform abortions at American military hospitals overseas and on the use of aborted fetal tissue for federally funded research. The President also lifted restrictions on providing American financial aid in United Nations family planning and population control programs.

Clinton changed the time limit that prohibits senior government officials from lobbying the Federal agency in which they work from one year to five years. He also negated the Bush Administration's Council on Competitiveness, which gave businesses a means for immunity from government regulations.

Clinton continues with plans to repeal the ban on homosexuals in the armed forces, in spite of strong resistance from the Joint Chiefs of Staff. He has ordered a review of the Bush Administration policy toward Bosnia and plans to introduce a new family leave bill.

Clinton is preparing a State of the Union Message for mid-February which will address proposals for action on economic renewal, health care reform, job training and national service in return for college tuition.

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti

The Rev. Jesse Jackson visited Haiti for two days last week to warn military leaders that they would face severe action if they resist plans to restore democracy to the country. According to Jackson, the Clinton Administration intends to restore to power Haiti's exiled President, the Rev. Jean-Bertrand Aristide.

The Clinton Administration is working closely with the United Nations to end Haiti's 16-month political crisis. Aristide, Haiti's first freely elected President, was ousted in a military coup in September 1991. Since then, economic troubles and mulitary repression have increased.

A trade embargo was imposed on the country in late 1991 to raise support for Aristide's return. Since then, thousands of Haitians have fled the country by boat. Last week, Haiti's military backed civilian government reached an agreement with the United Nations to allow human rights observers to enter Haiti in early February.

TRENTON, NJ

New Jersey's Republican gubernatorial candidates Christine Todd Whitman and W. Cary Edwards announced they had employed illegal aliens and failed to pay taxes on their wages. The announcements came shortly after Zoe Baird withdrew from the confirmation hearings for President Clinton's Attorney General.

Whitman said she and her husband hired a Portuguese couple in 1986 to care for their two children and chauffeur family members. The couple was employed until June 1990, when Whitman and her husband paid for the couple's return to Portugal. The Whitmans had tried to obtain a green card for the couple but were unsuccessful.

The couple received legal resident alien status in April 1991 and returned to work for the Whitmans until July 1991.

Edwards admitted that he had employed a Portuguese national as a housekeeper between 1989 and 1990 and had not paid her taxes. Edwards said the woman claimed she was an independent contractor and therefore that he was not responsible for her taxes. The housekeeper resigned after Edwards attempted to provide her with tax documents he had prepared. Edwards believes he acted appropriately and does not owe any back taxes.

Mendel Medal Award Dinner honors outstanding scientist

By JENNIFER TRZASKA
Staff Reporter

The University held the Mendel Medal Award Dinner Jan. 23 in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center.

The Reverend Kail C. Ellis, O.S.A., coordinator of the event said the medal is given "to honor a scientist and someone who showed that there is no contradiction between faith and science."

This year, the Villanova community honors Phillip A. Sharp, Salvador E. Lauria professor and head of the department of biology at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Sharp received a Bachelor of Arts degree in chemistry and mathematics from Union College, Kentucky and a Ph.D in chemistry from the University of Illinois at Champaign — Urbana.

He performed his post-doctoral fellowship at the California Institute of Technology, and in the 1970s concentrated his studies on the molecular biology of tumor viruses and RNA splicing.

In 1977, Sharp was credited with the discovery of RNA splicing. In addition to the Mendel Medal Award, Sharp has received other honors. Among them are the John D. MacArthur Professorship, the New York Academy of Sciences Award in Biological and Medical Sciences and the General Motors Research Foundation Alfred P. Sloan Jr. Prize for Cancer Research.

The University has honored other accomplished scientists since 1929, including Nobel Laureate Prize Winners and scientist theologians.

Choosing this year's winner involved a very careful process. Villanova faculty were asked to nominate individuals for the award. These names went to a committee where the names were narrowed down to three. University President, the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A. brought the three names to the Board of Trustees, who then selected Sharp as the recipient of the medal.

The public can attend an exhibit on the history of the Mendel Medal Award in Connelly Center, which includes a model of the gene spliced by Sharp.

The Mendel Medal Award Dinner serves as a "celebration of the College of Arts and Sciences," said Ellis.

SGA tackles student issues

Last semester members of the University Student Government and the administration met with representatives from Lower Merion, Haverford and Radnor townships in an effort to address the concerns of both University students as well as members of surrounding communities, said Student Government President Ken Batchelor.

Those city officials attending the luncheon included township managers and police chiefs, said Batchelor. The meeting was organized purely due to student initiative and planned by student cabinet members Scott McBride and Michael Zubey, added Batchelor. "Before this meeting we would go to these officials and representatives individually to try to ease tensions. This luncheon gave us the opportunity to ask 'What are the problems?' " he added.

An Off Campus Forum was also held prior to Christmas vacation to help students considering the option of moving off campus, said Batchelor. Kathleen Byrnes, assistant dean of students, gave students advice concerning how to handle obtaining a lease, township rules and how to deal with landlords, added Batchelor. The Forum was organized by cabinet member, Scott McBride. Another forum will hopefully be held some time during this semester, Batchelor added. This year the Student Life Committee is proposing that there be a zero percent increase in the amount of room and board paid yearly by university students, Batchelor said.

The Student Committee's budget estimate does suggest a 3.8 percent increase in tuition. This figure is based on the current rate of inflation, said Batchelor. If there were to be no increase in tuition the University would lose money, added Batchelor.

The faculty proposal will probably suggest a tuition increase of eight or nine percent, said Batchelor. After this proposal is presented the University Budget Committee will probably suggest an increase of six or seven percent, he said.

> This luncheon gave us the opportunity to ask 'What are the problems?' Ken Batchelor

A parking proposal was put forth last semester which would allow commuting students to park their cars overnight without registering the vehicles with Public Safety after 2 a.m. as the present policy states. The same proposal also suggested that students be permitted to park in the parking structure adjacent to the St. Augustine Center for the Liberal Arts.

No definite answers have been given pertaining to the availability of parking next to the liberal arts center, said Batchelor. "We are expecting to have the 2 a.m. rule officially repealed within the month," Batchelor said.

Grads seek service work in bleak job market

By College Press Service

Faced with a bleak job market, more college graduates are choosing to take low-paying — or no-paying — jobs in public service where they believe they can make a difference.

The trend marks the end of the self-serving 1980s, say experts, who note that President Bill Clinton's administration may spur even more interest in community-focused work.

In October, 500 Boston College seniors lined up at a career fair, not for a fast-tracking corporate position, but for public service that students say bring them fewer headaches and less money, but greater personal satisfaction.

The Peace Corps reports a dramatic increase in younger recruits, and projects such as the Mississippi Teaching Corps report a record number of applicants.

At the Public Interest Center at Harvard University Law School this year, more than 230 of the 1,000 students spent last summer working in the public sector. Last year's graduating class saw 55 graduates out of 500 — a record number — opt for public service law.

"It is a dramatic, exciting trend, and something that is here to stay," said Stacy DeBroff, director of the office of public interest advising at the Harvard University Law School.

"And it's not just in law schools. We see it in business schools and medical schools. We're seeing people doing entrepreneurial things, like setting up a home for battered woman or working on an Indian reservation," she said.

DeBroff, who entered public service law upon graduation from Harvard, said in spite of the fact that Harvard law students are "recession proof" and able to command high salaries, they are opting to do more public service work.

"For me, it was essential to work on issues that I cared for profoundly on a heartfelt level. It was not enough for me to bring home a big paycheck and to socialize in power circles," she said. "There are many who feel like this."

DeBroff said she views the new administration as a fresh beginning for many college students who have felt shut out by the materialistic values of the Reagan-Bush years.

"There is a whole generation, a new generation with a different perspective on career and life choices. You are going to see more and more young people going into the government, doing public service work," she added.

The interest among young attorneys to hang out a shingle in the public sector is confirmed by the burgeoning growth of the National Association of Public Interest Law (NAPIL).

In 1986, NAPIL was a fledgling group of lawyer-activists determined to make it possible for idealistic graduates, by providing needed dollars, to sharpen their skills in the public sector.

Now, as some young lawyers shun six-figure futures, NAPIL offers financial support to those who wish to specialize in low-paying areas such as domestic violence, Native American issues or children's rights.

Six years ago, NAPIL chapters were on only 15 campuses, now there are 112. The number of students who participated in public interest law through the group has quadrupled to 600 this year.

"There is a definite trend to more people pursuing public service careers," said Caroline Durham, national student organizer for NAPIL.

More than ever, young attorneys are attracted to representing underrepresented groups, working in rural areas, and feeling a sense of community.

"We are taking applications in right now for a fellowship grant that will fund up to 10 attorneys to do new and innovative projects in the public sector," said Durham, whose office has received dozens of applications for projects that include environmental and domestic issues.

Record numbers participate in spring Fraternity Rush

By JANE PAPACIO
Assistant News Editor

Fraternity Rush 1993 began Jan. 28 with a non-committal informational meeting in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center. The meeting was designed to give perspective rushees the opportunity to gather information about the fraternities on campus, said Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities.

Over the next week and a half, the 14 fraternity chapters of the University scheduled meetings to meet the rushees. The fraternities attempt to schedule their meetings so they do not conflict with the others, thus making it possible for the men to rush more than one fraternity, said Bonas.

Some fraternities are sponsoring special events such as basketball games and bowling tournaments to give the men an opportunity to get involved, added Bonas.

The fraternities are unable to offer a formal invitation to pledge until Feb. 8. According to Bonas, no fraternity can require a pledge to answer an invitation and every pledge has a 48-hour consideration period.

By Feb. 10, the fraternities will know who their new members are, and the pledge period will begin.

Although the pledge period varies from fraternity to fraternity, all pledging must be finished before the first week of final exams.

Hazing is prohibited by the University, "Any significant physical hazing has been eliminated; hazing that exists would be the subtle psychological type. We're always on guard to make sure it does not come up," said Bonas. If any evidence of hazing is apparent, necessary action will be taken, added Bonas.

This year's rush policies are identical to those of last year. There is no fee for the fraternity rush. Each rushee must have at least a 2.2 grade point average and must be at least a second semester freshman.

Carney selected to study abroad in Prague

University student Deirdre Carney has been selected to participate in the Cooperative East and Central European Studies Program at Charles University in Prague, Czechoslovakia for the spring 1993 semester. This Study Abroad program is administered by the Council on International Educational Exchange and sponsored by 23 colleges and universities throughout the United States.

During her semester at Charles University, Deirdre, who is majoring in English, will attend Czech and Slovak area studies and language courses at the premier Czech institution of higher learning, founded in 1348. She will have the opportunity to live with Czech and Slovak university students and will be able to participate in various cultural activities in the newly formed Czech Republic and Republic of Slovakia as well as other countries in Eastern and Central Europe.

Alpha Tau Omega social probation lifted

By JANET KEMPLE
Staff Reporter

The Alpha Tau Omega (ATO) fraternity recently ended a one-year period of social probation, and will resume all normal social activities this semester, said Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities.

ATO was placed under sanctions because "they ran a social event that was not in keeping with fraternity or University policies," said Bonas.

Chapter President Terry Thompson said, "We mishandled some aspects of our reggae party."

The decision to take disciplinary action was made by the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., and other members of the Student Activities Office under normal judicial processes.

Under the terms of the probation, brothers were not allowed to host any social activities. "We've been watching them very carefully," said Bonas.

> This has been a learning experience for us. We are not going to stray from what we have learned.
> Rob Giegerich, Alpha Tau Omega fraternity member

ATO member Rob Giegerich said he is looking forward to the resumption of a full social calendar, but the probation actually "brought the brotherhood much closer together." They were able to engage in more activities within the organization.

Member recruitment has not been a problem during this time, said Thompson. Last semester's Rush received a "good turnout," he added.

"We had an above-average Rush. The quality of the pledges was exactly what we were looking for," said Giegerich.

Bonas would not rule out that future infractions may result in harsher penalties. "We always look at the bigger picture," he said. Fraternity members, however, do not anticipate any future problems.

"This has been a learning experience for us. We are not going to stray from what we have learned," said Giegerich.

Capone named new director of the Wildcat club

By KERRY LATTANZIO
Staff Reporter

Robert J. Capone, Class of 1962, was named executive director and chief operating officer of the Villanova Educational Foundation, the Wildcat Club, effective Nov. 2, 1992. He had previously been assistant vice president for Alumni Affairs.

Capone had served the Villanova community for 20 years before resigning to accept his present position. He hopes to bring trust and recognition to his new job, based on this past service, he said.

"I want to take a pro-active stance in supporting Villanova athletics," Capone said. He stresses the athletic program's offerings to non-varsity athletes, like those who participate in intramurals. The program should benefit all of the students, said Capone.

He is very proud of the scholar-athlete tradition of the University. Everyone is here to graduate, not just play sports, Capone said. An exceptional example is Nnenna Lynch, a cross-country runner who this year became the first Villanovan to win a Rhodes scholarship.

Capone began his tenure at the University in 1970, as assistant football coach and recruiter. In 1979, he moved to the Alumni Association as its director. In July of 1992, he was named assistant vice president for alumni affairs.

While working with the Alumni Association, Capone made numerous contributions. He developed more than 50 alumni clubs, initiated the Nursing and Engineering Honor societies and started the V.A.L.U.E. (Villanova Alumni Lending Undergraduate Experience) Program. He also played a key role in organizing homecoming celebrations and reunions.

Capone's service to the University was rewarded in December when he was honored with the annual Loyalty Award for 1992. "I was humbled to be put in the company of the previous winners," he said.

In his new position, Capone expects to continue making contributions. He is planning a fund raiser with hopes of receiving a nominal endowment. "The Wildcat Club has signaled its strong interest in substantially increasing its financial support of Villanova's athletic program," said Capone.

Capone stressed the importance of alumni and students working together to preserve the University's history and tradition. "The future only has value when you consider what's been done in the past," he said.

Lying, cheating run rampant on college campuses

By College Press Service

College and high school students admitted to cheating, lying and stealing in a two-year national study on ethics, a report released in November said.

The study, undertaken by the California-based Josephson Institute of Ethics, involved interviewing 8,965 young people nationwide and focused on ethics. Not all of the young people polled were in school at the time.

"There is a hole in the moral ozone and it is probably getting bigger," said Michael J. Josephson, president of the institute.

The report, he said, is indicative that the present 15- to 30-year-old generation is more likely to engage in dishonest and irresponsible behavior than other generations.

"Whether things are worse or not, they are clearly bad enough," the report said.

Among the findings from the survey:

- Sixteen percent of college students and 33 percent of high school students admitted to shoplifting.
- Twenty-one percent of college students said they would falsify a report if necessary to keep a job.
- Sixty-one percent of high school students and 32 percent of college students admitted they cheated on an exam in the past year.
- And, in the area of risky behavior, 25 percent of high school students and 42 percent of college students had unprotected sex in the past year.

"It is very clear there is an increase in cheating. It seems to me that there has been a real slippage in government in the importance of honesty, and children, when they are being socialized, are exposed to this," said Kevin Brien, a philosophy professor at Washington College in Chestertown. Md.

The Josephson Institute is a non-profit organization that studies various aspects of ethics. It took two years to research and complete its study on young people and their attitudes toward lying, cheating and risky behavior.

"While there is significant evidence that the present 15- to 30-year-old generation is more likely to engage in dishonest and irresponsible conduct than previous generations, truly comparable benchmarks do not exist to establish this fact," the report said. "But whether things are measurably worse or not, they are clearly bad enough."

One in eight college students said they lied to insurance companies, inflated expense claims, lied on financial aid forms and borrowed money with the intent of not paying it back. At least 83 percent of high school students and 61 percent of college students lied to their parents at least once in the past 12 months.

"It is in no way suggested that this group of young people are moral mutants who are genetically disposed to self-serving and short-sighted conduct," the report says. "Instead, the survey reveals that their negative dispositions often developed in an atmosphere where cheaters regularly prosper and honesty is not always the best policy."

Brien said that the Iran-Contra affair, and other government and financial scandals in the past 12 years, have a direct connection with student attitudes about honesty and integrity.

Lindback Award nominees announced

University Press Release

Nearly 3000 sophomores, juniors and seniors voted for their favorite professor in balloting for the Lindback Award for Distinguished Teaching. The balloting took place during preregistration for the spring 1993 Lindback Award:
Oliver Ludwig (CHM), John McGowan (PSC), Daniel O'Mara (ACC), J. Porter Tuck (PSY), Michael Walsh (B.L.), and Elaine Webster (ECO).

The Lindback Review Committee, a subcommittee of the Faculty Affairs Committee, will now review a statement submitted by each of the finalists on their teaching goals, methods and objectives, along with their exams, syllabi and student evaluations for the last three years. Finally, committee members will observe each finalist in the classroom sometime during the spring 1993 semester. The committee will send its recommendations to the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., who will make the final selection.

The Lindback Award is funded through a grant from the Christian R. and Mary F. Lindback Foundation. Terms of the grant allow the University to select two award winners each year, each of whom receives a cash prize of $1000. No one can win the award more than once.

Campus crime rates below U.S. average

By College Press Service

While campus crime rates are increasing, they remain lower than overall statistics for the United States, according to a report by the International Association of Campus Law Enforcement Administrators.

Meanwhile, the FBI reported its first data available on the number of hate crimes for 1991. While there is no breakdown in the report of age or locality of attacks, some college newspapers have reported an increase in hate crimes on campuses and local communities.

The campus crime survey was conducted at 400 colleges and universities that are members of the law enforcement association. The institutions represent only 13 percent of all U.S. colleges and universities, but 40 percent of all college students. There was no breakdown of specific crimes.

The number of campus crimes increased during the past three years. According to the report, violent crimes made up 3 percent of the crimes reported on campuses in 1991, and property crimes made up the remaining 97 percent. Violent crime on campuses rose 12.4 percent from 1989 to 1990 and 5 percent from 1990 to 1991.

The association said there were 71.8 violent crimes — murder, rape, robbery or aggravated assault — per 100,000 students, compared with 758.1 violent crimes per 100,000 people in the nation as a whole.

Schools with fewer than 5,000 students had the highest violent crime rate, with 105.5 per 100,000 students. College and universities with populations more than 15,000 had the lowest rate of 45.7.

The FBI, meanwhile, reported that there were 4,558 hate crimes reported in 32 states that kept statistics on such crimes in 1991. "While these initial data are limited, they give us our first assessment of the nature of crimes motivated by bias in our society," FBI Director William Sessions said.

Intimidation was the most frequent hate crime, followed by damage or destruction to property, simple assault, aggravated assault and robbery. Murder, rape, and other crimes each accounted for 1 percent or less of the total.

Racial bias motivated a majority of the reported crimes, with religious bias second and sexual orientation bias third. Hate crimes against African-Americans accounted for the highest percentage, while anti-white and anti-Jewish crimes followed.

Although hate crimes do occur on college campuses nationwide, many go unreported by students, faculty and staff. Some are fearful that publicity will cause more problems, while others don't think that campus or city police will investigate the incidents.

Phil Martin, director of Ohio State University's Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Student Services office, told the Lantern newspaper that he was walking from a bar to his car when him and his friend were attacked by three men.

"They called us 'faggots' while hitting us, and we started to fight back and then they left," he told the newspaper.

Med Students Get Free Tuition

By College Press Service

PHILADELPHIA

A University of Pennsylvania alumnus donated $10 million that will allow 25 medical students to attend school tuition-free.

Dr. Daniel H. Johnson Jr. of Boston was concerned about the high debt that causes students to forego careers in academic medicine or primary care. He recently formed the 21st Century Endowed Scholars Fund, a foundation with the long-term goal of eventually underwriting all medical students at the University of Pennsylvania.

Six scholars entered the medical school last fall, and more will be selected until there are 25 by the year 1995. The objective is to have at least 200 medical students completely funded by the year 2000.

"Many private medical school students carry a burden of educational debt equal to that of a home mortgage by the time they graduate," said Dr. William Kelley, dean of the School of Medicine.

Students Study Sphinx Erosion

PULLMAN, Wash.

Engineering students at Washington State University studied erosion of the Great Sphinx of Giza, the 5,000-year-old Egyptian monument near Cairo.

The students never left the Pullman campus, but they came up with ideas to slow down the deterioration of the world-famous structure.

"We all learned there are no easy solutions to problems like this," said Karine Campbell, who headed the team studying the erosion.

To combat the high winds that are blasting the Sphinx with sand and eroding the structure, 10 students in the university's college of engineering and architecture proposed placing four, 16-foot high barriers, with interior chambers to collect sand.

Fekri Hassan, a professor of anthropology and chief project consultant, said the students used wind-tunnel research to study the effects of wind on the ancient structure.

Professors Make Mayan Discoveries

ORLANDO, Fla.

Two University of Central Florida archaeologists have uncovered a number of intact tombs belonging to the ancient royalty of one of the most important kingdoms of Mayan civilization.

The discoveries, a culmination of eight years of research by husband-and-wife team Arlen F. and Diane Z. Chase, were made at Caracol, a sprawling Mayan city in the jungles of Belize.

The Chases found evidence of a large middle class population in the city, which dispels the popular notion that Mayan society was divided into the wealthy elite and peasants.

"There was a large middle group who lived very much in the manner of what we thought was reserved for the nobility," Diane Chase said, noting that the classic Mayan society was far more complex than previously thought.

Information on the Caracol findings was presented recently in two National Geographic programs on cable television and PBS.

Not Making The Grade

TROY, N.Y.

Good grades won't necessarily get you a job when you graduate, according to a recent survey of corporate recruiters who visited Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute.

Tom Tarantelli, associate director of the Career Development Center, said 113 corporate recruiters were interviewed when they came to the campus in late 1992. He found that good grades were near the bottom of the list of skills and traits most important to the recruiters in making hiring decisions.

"Companies can afford to be more selective now," Tarantelli said. "They're looking for well-rounded applicants who get along with others and can participate as members of a team. The three skills they value most are interpersonal skills, problem-solving skills and communications skills.

Other valued skills included creativity, flexibility, maturity and good judgment.

Baker Takes Rice University Post

HOUSTON

Former Secretary of State James Baker has taken a post teaching public policy at Rice University.

Rice University announced Jan. 14 that it was creating the James A. Baker III Institute for Public Policy to "foster and disseminate research on issues of public policy."

Baker will lecture, chair conferences and help guide the development of the institute, said Charles Duncan, chairman of the Rice University Board of Governors.

Baker's grandfather was the university's first board chairman from 1891 to 1941.

Athletes To Attend Hazing Classes

AUSTIN, Texas

All male athletes must attend anti-hazing seminars after campus police found 11 freshman members of the swim team clad only in diapers on the fourth floor of a University of Texas dormitory.

The swimmers were taking part in an initiation supervised by an undetermined number of upperclassmen. Police said condoms and goldfish were also involved in the initiation rites.

"The investigation is complete," said Sharon Justice, dean of students. "My staff, along with the athletic director and swim coach, agreed that all male athletes will participate in seminars regarding hazing.

"We have talked to all members of the swim team individually," she added, noting that the university has been offering anti-hazing seminars for the past several years.

Honor Pledge Stolen

DECATUR, Ga.

The honor system at Agnes Scott College hit a new low when someone stole an honor pledge that students are traditionally asked to sign.

The "Class of 1994 Honor Pledge," a promise to uphold the honor code, is signed by each student in that class and is normally hung in a permanent frame on a wall in Alston Center. It had been temporarily removed by the staff and placed on a table to make it accessible for signing.

Pilger said the code was stolen during Black Cat Week, a week of activities that feature school spirit, and there is a possibility that the culprit is not from Agnes Scott College.

Honor Society seeks new membership

Press Release

The Villanova Chapter of Omicron Delta Kappa Leadership Honor Society is seeking students for membership. Omicron Delta Kappa, a national leadership honor society for men and women, was founded at Washington and Lee University in 1914. The founders formulated the idea that leadership of exceptional quality and versatility in college life should be recognized. Omicron Delta Kappa recognizes and encourages achievement in scholarship, athletics, social service, religious activities, campus government, journalism, speech and mass media, creative and performing arts.

Admissions to this society not only involves evidence of leadership, but also strong academic success (top 35% of the student's college class through the fall 1992 semester and a G.P.A. of 3.18 or better). Admission is limited to sophomore and junior students.

Students can be nominated by club/society presidents, administrators/faculty or self-nominated (applications are available in the Student Activities Office). Completed applications should be returned to the Student Activities Office, Dougherty Hall, Room 214, no later than 4 p.m., Monday, Feb. 15. Selections will be made by Feb. 18 with an initiation ceremony on March 28.

Binge drinking remains problem

By College Press Service

Binge drinking on campuses is a growing problem, with students spending more on liquor each year than on textbooks, according to surveys on student drinking habits.

A recent national survey of 56,000 students found that 42 percent of the students had consumed five or more drinks during one sitting two weeks prior to the survey.

The U.S. Office of Substance Abuse and Prevention also reported that 12 million college students consume more than 430 million gallons of alcohol a year, and spend more money on liquor than on textbooks.

Other findings in the survey found that 41 percent of college students engage in binge drinking on a regular basis, compared with 34 percent of their non-college peers, and that 7 percent of freshmen who drop out do so for alcohol-related reasons.

Twenty-five percent of students responding to a survey at the University of Arizona at Tucson regularly engage in binge drinking, the Arizona Daily Wildcat reported.

"A lot of really awful things can happen to those who drink that much," said Carolyn K. Collins, health educator for the Student Health Service.

Binge drinkers are likely to drive under the influence, engage in unwanted sexual activity, miss classes and have lower grade point averages, she said.

Other survey results from the University of Arizona study showed that 72 percent of the students said they used alcohol within the past 30 days, and 66 percent said they used alcohol at least once when they were under the age of 21, the legal age to drink.

Filmmakers document Clinton inauguration

By College Press Service

LOS ANGELES — A graduate student from the University of California at Los Angeles directed a behind-the-scenes documentary on the Clinton inauguration that will air on public television later this year.

David Straus, who worked on Clinton's national advance team before entering film school in September, interviewed key Democrats and Clinton staffers, and followed the president to the podium Jan. 20.

"We are the youngest people doing this sort of thing," Straus said. "And, except for Warner Brothers, who are making a commemorative video, we are the only people who are filming like this."

Straus and his crew of 13 college students and others spent over two weeks dragging equipment around the inaugural headquarters at Washington's Navy Yard.

"We have been interviewing people who work in the building, in the headquarters, all over," said Straus, who with the crew, made the Georgetown University Conference Center their own headquarters.

The documentary, dubbed "Open Doors" is a UCLA project and most of the equipment has been borrowed from the Department of Film and Television.

The documentary was shot "through four or five distinct sets of eyes," said Straus, who filmed "stars" such as Mary Mel French, the executive co-director of the inaugural committee, and Patrick Murphy, a Vietnam veteran who came to the festivities.

Baseball caps elevated to make political statement

By College Press Service

First, there were just plain baseball caps. You wore them backward, jauntily sideways or bill-front. However you wore them, they were the national symbol for "cool."

Then film director Spike Lee kicked off a national trend when he added an "X" to his cap in honor of the late political activist Malcolm X. Students, mostly black, followed suit.

And, in no time, supposedly inspired by the tic-tac-toe game, "O" caps showed up. Voila! The lowly baseball cap is elevated to a political statement.

"I think these ['O'] caps signify a saturation with the 'X' icon," said Herman Beavers, an African-American professor who teaches English at the University of Pennsylvania. "When a symbol reaches a point where it's more than the market can bear, it can function as a lampoon."

But some do not think lampooning is a good idea in today's sensitive racial climate.

"People wear the 'X' cap with pride," said Andrew Kimbrough, the proprietor of The Joint, a Seattle boutique that sells Malcolm X gear to University of Washington students.

"The people who wear 'X' gear are saying they stand behind all that Malcolm X was," Kimbrough said.

"It's just not a good time to be making jokes. Some people could take offense with these other caps," Kimbrough said, noting that some merchants are attempting to make money on the problem of racism.

One Waukegan, Ill., businessman is now marketing a black baseball cap with a white "E," but he insists that he is not exploiting the country's troubled racial climate.

"It is a white 'E,' or in plain English, it says 'whitey,' " said Robert Columbia, owner of Columbia Family Enterprises.

"We market other caps, too," Columbia said. "One has a green 'GO' on a white cap for Hispanics. We tried it out on some, and they thought it was funny," Columbia said.

" 'X' caps don't offend me. If you call me white, that's not offensive to me either," Columbia said, noting that his company sells what he calls a "harmony" shirt that sports a white 'E' on a black background and a black 'E' on a white background. "Blackey and whitey, you see," he explained.

Columbia plans to market the "whitey" cap to truckstops and bars.

"I have people ask me, 'Don't you feel bad making money off this [racial] situation?' I tell them that's not what I'm doing. This is strictly a marketing thing."

But not everyone wants to sell Columbia's hats.

"We would not sell them," said Kimbrough, who owns the shop with his sister, who is a graduate student at the University of Washington. "It's too critical a time to sell something like that. Not in today's society. It's just not a good message."

Katulis awarded grant

University student Brian Katulis has been named a Bowman Scholar by the Council on International Educational Exchange (CIEE) and awarded a grant to travel to Egypt where he will study at the American University in Cairo. Katulis, of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, will take courses in Middle Eastern Studies during his semester abroad, which begins in January 1993.

Award recipients are known as Bowman Scholars, in honor of John E. Bowman, a past president of the Council on International Educational Exchange. CIEE, a private, nonprofit international organization with offices, affiliations and representation around the world, has been a pioneer in educational exchange initiatives since its establishment in 1947. It develops and administers study, work and travel programs for American and international students at the secondary, undergraduate, graduate and professional levels.

Education agenda focuses on national service

By College Press Service

Education Secretary-designate Richard Riley pledged Jan. 12 to promote greater student access to America's colleges and universities and link two issues important to youth — education and national service.

"We must establish a new covenant which gives both greater access to postsecondary students for those who have earned an opportunity to go on, and also provide incentives for young adults to serve their community and their nation," Riley said at his confirmation hearing before the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee. Riley was expected to win nomination Jan. 19 without difficulty.

The former governor of South Carolina, who had been serving as an adviser to President Clinton, also outlined plans to design a new, pro-active approach to education policy after a decade of research and study. Riley termed these new ideas "a participatory, positive approach for turning from a 'nation at risk' to a 'nation on the move.' "

As governor from 1978 to 1986, Riley implemented a number of education reforms, including higher academic standards, improved teacher training and compensation and a renewed emphasis on basic skills. In a study released at the Senate hearing, the Congressional Research Service found increases in both Scholastic Aptitude Test scores and the number of high school students going on to college as a result of these policies.

Riley faced a largely sympathetic audience on Capitol Hill, as senators often used their time to offer advice rather than engage in policy disputes. For instance, Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., the panel's chairman, urged Riley to check on the status of Bush administration regulations that could undermine the use of race-specific college scholarships to promote diversity.

"I urge you to make sure that something isn't put into effect [on the scholarship] issue during your watch," Kennedy said.

Riley said he believed race-based scholarships were legal if designed to promote diversity, not discrimination. "My view is that it's valid, it's good and it's legal," he said.

On other issues, Riley said he favored expanding Pell Grants for needy students. But he acknowledged that increases will be hard to afford, given the government's budget deficit.

"I agree the level [of the grant] is too low, but again we're faced with the heavy anchor of the deficit," Riley told the panel.

The former governor sought a middle ground on the issue of direct student loans, operated without the help or participation of banks. Riley favored the pilot program on direct loans enacted last year, but he is awaiting the findings of more research. Riley said he also hoped such a program could significantly reduce federal costs.

"I'm very much interested in it for that reason," he said, adding that it also may make loans more convenient to access for students.

But Riley was quicker to endorse the idea of community service in exchange for student loan forgiveness, an idea championed by President-elect Clinton.

"No student should be disallowed from going to college because of costs," he said. In addition to community service, Riley also said former students should be able to earmark a certain portion of their earnings specifically to repay student loans.

Riley also spoke forcefully in favor of "pipeline" issues such as Head Start and early childhood education, which can help disadvantaged children gain early access to education that helps them in the years ahead.

Even given the massive federal deficit, he said, targeted investments in education are good for the nation.

Weed awarded grant

Other events happening today include the continuous showing of the award-winning PBS series "Eyes on the Prize," which documents the civil rights movement through the 1950s and 1960s.

Jackson coordinated an ecumenical prayer service in Corr Chapel.

The day will close with a concert and dance co-sponsored by the SPC featuring the Jeffrey Washington Band in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center at 7 p.m.

The Connelly Center Art Gallery also will present African Art from the Collection of Benjamin D. Bernstein Jan. 18 to Feb. 22.

"The Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Day Celebration Committee began three years ago as a subcommittee of the Academic Policy Committee given the charge to design a program which is a real educational effort on campus about Dr. King and the social issues he cared so much about," said Nance.

"The committee selected 'Reaching for the Dream ... ' as the theme because to most students at Villanova Martin Luther King is a history figure," said Nance.

Leaders inspire in fight against racism

The nation lost one of its most influential civil rights activists with the death of former Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall last Sunday. Like the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., Marshall dedicated most of his life to transforming the lives of black Americans and other minorities.

As a lawyer for the NAACP, Marshall cut through many racial barriers, including the 1954 decision that outlawed segregation in public schools.

Marshall used his influence in the Supreme Court to protect the rights of the powerless, which he believed was the purpose of the governmental institution. The decisions he made reflected his beliefs that laws should serve people, not abstract ideas.

Marshall's actions have affected the laws in the United States, but what about the attitudes? Racism still remains a menace in society, maybe not as blatant as it was up to the 1960s, but negative feelings are still felt between the races.

Separation of different peoples exists in cities, businesses and even on Villanova's campus. Extreme cases of racism lead to instances such as the Charles Stewart case, the Rodney King beating and its aftermath.

Negative attitudes toward certain kinds of people never have and never will have any basis. These attitudes came from a history of hatred and an irrational sense of superiority developed generations ago.

People cannot be held responsible for things their ancestors did, but we are responsible for ourselves. Nothing will change until we make a conscious effort to improve race relations among our peers.

Let's honor the memories of former Justice Thurgood Marshall and Martin Luther King Jr. and prove that their efforts were not done in vain.

Inaugural speech demands responsibility

Amid the fanfare and glitz of what seemed more like a Hollywood premiere than an inauguration, our country hosted a bash last week to usher in a new political hero. Americans watched the production entranced and strained to hear the words we hoped would portend great things for our generation.

We listened carefully, reminiscing over the ideals and promises of the recent election, awaiting the words from our president reassuring us that we had made the right choice, and our futures would be secure. Were we ready for his true message?

What we heard was not the glowing call to strength and prosperity some may have expected. Clinton spoke of "profound and powerful forces ... shaking and remaking our world." He addressed a country struggling to regain its position, rather than one secure in its role. "We know we have to face hard truths and take strong steps," Clinton challenged.

During the campaign, Clinton wooed younger voters like ourselves, inviting us into the political arena for what might have been, for some, the first time. Our age group responded with enthusiasm. Now that the glorified struggle of the campaign is over, we are challenged to settle down to the less glamorous task of maintaining our political interest in the face of the struggles ahead.

Some may cite promises broken and hide behind predictions of doom. But Clinton calls on all to contribute, regardless of political party or the vote we cast. "It is time to break the bad habit of expecting something for nothing," Clinton said. It is no longer the era of the omnipotent leader. Before we cry for results, let us answer the call for our own efforts.

LETTERS

Alumnus refutes student gripes

To the Editor:

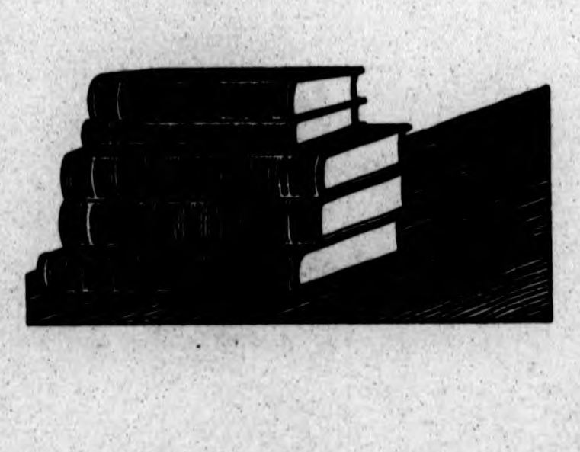
I am writing in regard to a letter by Michael Davis, Class of 1993, which appeared in the Dec. 4, 1992 issue of the Villanovan. My regard is one of compassion and concern relative to your views and attitude toward our University, its administration, fellow students, as well as your misuse of the word "absurdity."

In support of change, I am sure you did not intend to threaten the Blue Key Society tour guide who first introduced you to Villanova in 1989 by your comment, "I really hope to run into her on the street someday." What I feel you were expressing was your frustration and lack of motivation by not being more assertive during your four years at Villanova and "taking the bull by the horns" as a contributor to change. Constructive change can be self-serving, but, when properly channeled, can benefit the surrounding establishment and individuals within the establishment.

As both a former day and night student, our University made available to me and to all students a wealth of tools and facilities 24 hours a day, seven days a week, 52 weeks of the year. These tools and facilities are available in support of the University's prime goal. This is to educate and instill in each student values and knowledge which, in turn, will be used by each graduate as they enter and maintain their respective careers.

Our University is not in existence to be a baby sitter who, for a fee, will placate and entertain the child or children they have under their care.

In industry, an employee is hired to perform a specific service or task. Likewise, at Villanova, you as a student have a specific task to complete, and that is to become educated through the learning process. Once educated, you will go forth into a wonderful world where competitiveness and opportunities greet you each day. At that time, it is hoped you will be equipped and ready to face these daily challenges. By utilizing and implementing your values, education, relationships, personality, as well as your personal objectives and goals, you will contribute to making the world a better place to live.



Another element of your letter that was troublesome to me was your use of the word "absurdity" relative to yourself. I disagree with your logic because I feel as a student and member of the human race, you do not exist in an irrational, meaningless universe. Also, I feel your life indeed has meaning and worth, and after graduation, you will greatly contribute to society outside your own existence.

May 1993 will soon be here, and with it, senior week with all of its activities. However, the greatest day you have been striving towards is Mother's Day and graduation. On that day, not only remember those at home who, during the past four years, have provided you with the encouragement, love and financial support, but also remember the teachers and the institution that made it possible.

Upon graduation, I welcome you to join the alumni association and become a participating alumnus. I would also welcome an invitation from you to attend the graduation ceremonies at which time I am willing to make a video of your graduation and give it to you as a gift for your great accomplishment.

By the way, I am a 1991 graduate, 53 years of age, a father of five and a grandfather of three. Although it took me 34 years, beginning in 1957, to earn my degree, you can understand why my love for our University, its administration, teachers, students and the spirit of Villanova will outlive any criticism of the institution that may occur during the course of my remaining life.

OP-ED

Is America ready for a new and improved first lady?

By HILLARY FIELD

Open your doors and your minds for the first lady, the new and improved first lady. No longer is this the first lady of yesterday who takes on one pet project and makes herself its national spokeswoman, who wears pricy fashions well as she stands slightly behind her husband with a well-practiced smile and little more on her lips.

This is the first lady destined for the 21st century. She speaks, she is not ashamed to admit that she earns more money than her husband, she speaks for herself as well as her husband, she stands beside her husband, she is the working mother and the goal-oriented careerwoman. Her name is Hillary Rodham Clinton and she has come to the forefront of America to repersonify the new female chief citizen.

With the aid of her husband, her mate and equal, she is taking on a bold and important role in the administration rather than a token position.

This age of "New Feminism" has found its needed role model in Clinton. Presently, the new generation of feminism is being pulled thin by the likes of extreme authors like Camilla Paglia and Naomi Wolf, and Texas Governor Ann Richards and Colorado Representative Patricia Schroeder. There has not yet been one modern, intermediate female presence to emerge before Clinton, one who has succeeded at being both parent, wife, politician and professional. She is all of these things and now holds the influential female position of first lady.

Before Clinton stepped into the White House, she had already transformed the stereotype of the first lady. Throughout her husband's campaign, Clinton successfully asserted herself as separate from her husband. Her defense for not being a full-time mother was that she wanted to accomplish more. At the same time she managed to present her defense in a way that was not insulting to the homemaker. Her speeches rarely revolved solely around her husband, but rather she used her public promotion to identify the education, child care and health care crises this country is under. Clinton presented herself as a potential first lady who would be unlike her predecessors, one who thought and spoke for beliefs in addition to the attributes of her husband.

Upon taking her new position, Clinton has redefined not only her new status, but also the role model that this country's feminist movement needs. The feminist movement is currently being mudded down with "political correctness." We are beginning to see a minority of women demanding that all gender relations be viewed through a microscope. Its perception is being stretched with radical, younger feminists versus conservative feminists, each sending different messages of what a new-generation feminist should be. Its image is being tainted by conflicting female images such as Thelma and Louise and Madonna, hardly representative of what the current feminist is feeling or experiencing.

This is the feminist movement receiving Clinton. She is neither radical nor conservative; instead she is very political in her mainstream appeal. As a female professional, her immense career has not been at the sacrifice of her family and home. As a wife, she has found a match who accepts the "and/both" marital relationship rather than the more common "either/or" relationship. She is in her own right a dedicated politician fighting for children's rights in the state of Arkansas, publishing her views in several national law magazines. She is an accomplished and awarded lawyer. She is a homemaker. She is a wife and mother. Now she is your first lady.

The Clinton administration, or more specifically President Bill Clinton, is not allowing the perception of the role to limite the first lady. Clinton announced the first lady's new position in his administration on Jan. 26. She is to take a policy position on the committee to overhaul American health care policy. In addition to her innovative post in her husband's administration, she will be assuming an office in the West Wing of the White House, a step never before assumed by the first lady. These are just two indications that the role of the first lady can be dramatically altered to fit a new vision of the modern woman and they certainly will not be the last.

Hillary Clinton has made it to the White House. Her classmates at Wellesley College readily admit that they expected her to be the first female president rather than the wife of the president. With the aid of her husband, her mate and equal, she is taking on a bold and important role in the administration rather than a token position. She is redefining the first lady that no longer looks like Nancy Reagan in the newest by Oscar de la Renta, but Clinton behind a real desk in the active wing of the White House.

The secondary and equally important repercussion is that Clinton, as a woman, represents a positive model for female America. She is mainstream enough to appeal to women across the spectrum yet strong enough to keep redefining her new role. Her classmates might have expected a president, but we have found an innovator. Please, open your doors and your minds for first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton.

COMMENTARY

Men fear the harassment that women experience daily

By ELLEN GOODMAN

If you want a hint of what the military is going to face when it lifts the ban on gays in the military, follow me. Come on over here and reach into my mailbag.

First, may I suggest that you put on a glove. Or grab a set of tongs. Some of the letters I've gotten about gays are too slimy for the naked touch.

But put aside those wonderful missiles which come regularly to every journalist from that far-flung family of foul-mouthed misanthropes who share the same name — Anonymous. There's still some pretty interesting reading. "Interesting" is putting it mildly, and neutrally.

For openers, nine out of every 10 letters I received on this subject when I last wrote about it came from men. Virtually all of the letters from men were about men. Relatively few people who wrote about gay women worried that they would get too high but the legions who opposed gay men wanted to keep them from getting too close.

The specter of showers and barracks came up so often in my correspondence that I suspect the Army spends more time in the sack than in the trenches, more time under the water than under the gun.

A military man from Cape Coral, Fla., wrote, "This tells me as a straight man showering in the barracks, that I have no choice but to expose myself to any gay men present."

A man from Apache Junction, Ariz., who spent three years overseas in World War II remembers sleeping 40 men to a barracks. "Now suppose," he writes, "that neighbor was a man with the sexual inclinations of a woman, i.e., a homosexual."

Yet another man, this one from Tobyhanna, Pa., asked us to "imagine putting a homosexual in a community shower with 60 or so naked men." Someone from Melbourne, Fla., used his imagination to suggest that "it would be like putting a mouse in a cheese factory or a mosquito in a nudist colony."

The fascinating thing to this — female — reader was that nearly all the letter writers shared the same perspective: that of straight men worrying about being victims of sexual assault, harassment, lusting, or just plain ogling. This garden variety homophobia — fear of homosexuals — was fear of becoming the object of unwanted sexual attention. Being the oglee instead of, say, the ogler.

It's the closest that most men may come, even in fantasy, to imagining the everyday real-life experiences of women. The closest they may come to imaging a trip past a construction site, unease in a fraternity house, fear that a date could become date rape. In short, the closest men come to worrying about male sexual aggression.

A writer from Idaho put it in this rather charming vernacular, "Some of the gays are not little pansy guys but big hulking guys and if a small man said no, what is to stop him?"

I am sure that gay men and women do make some wrong passes at Mr. and Ms. Straight. I suspect this happens more often in a closeted atmosphere when communication is reduced to a secretive system of readings and misreadings.

There are instances of assault and harassment by homosexuals. There are also daily assaults of homosexuals. Consider the alleged gay-bashing-to-death of Seaman Allen Schindler a month after he told the Navy he was gay.

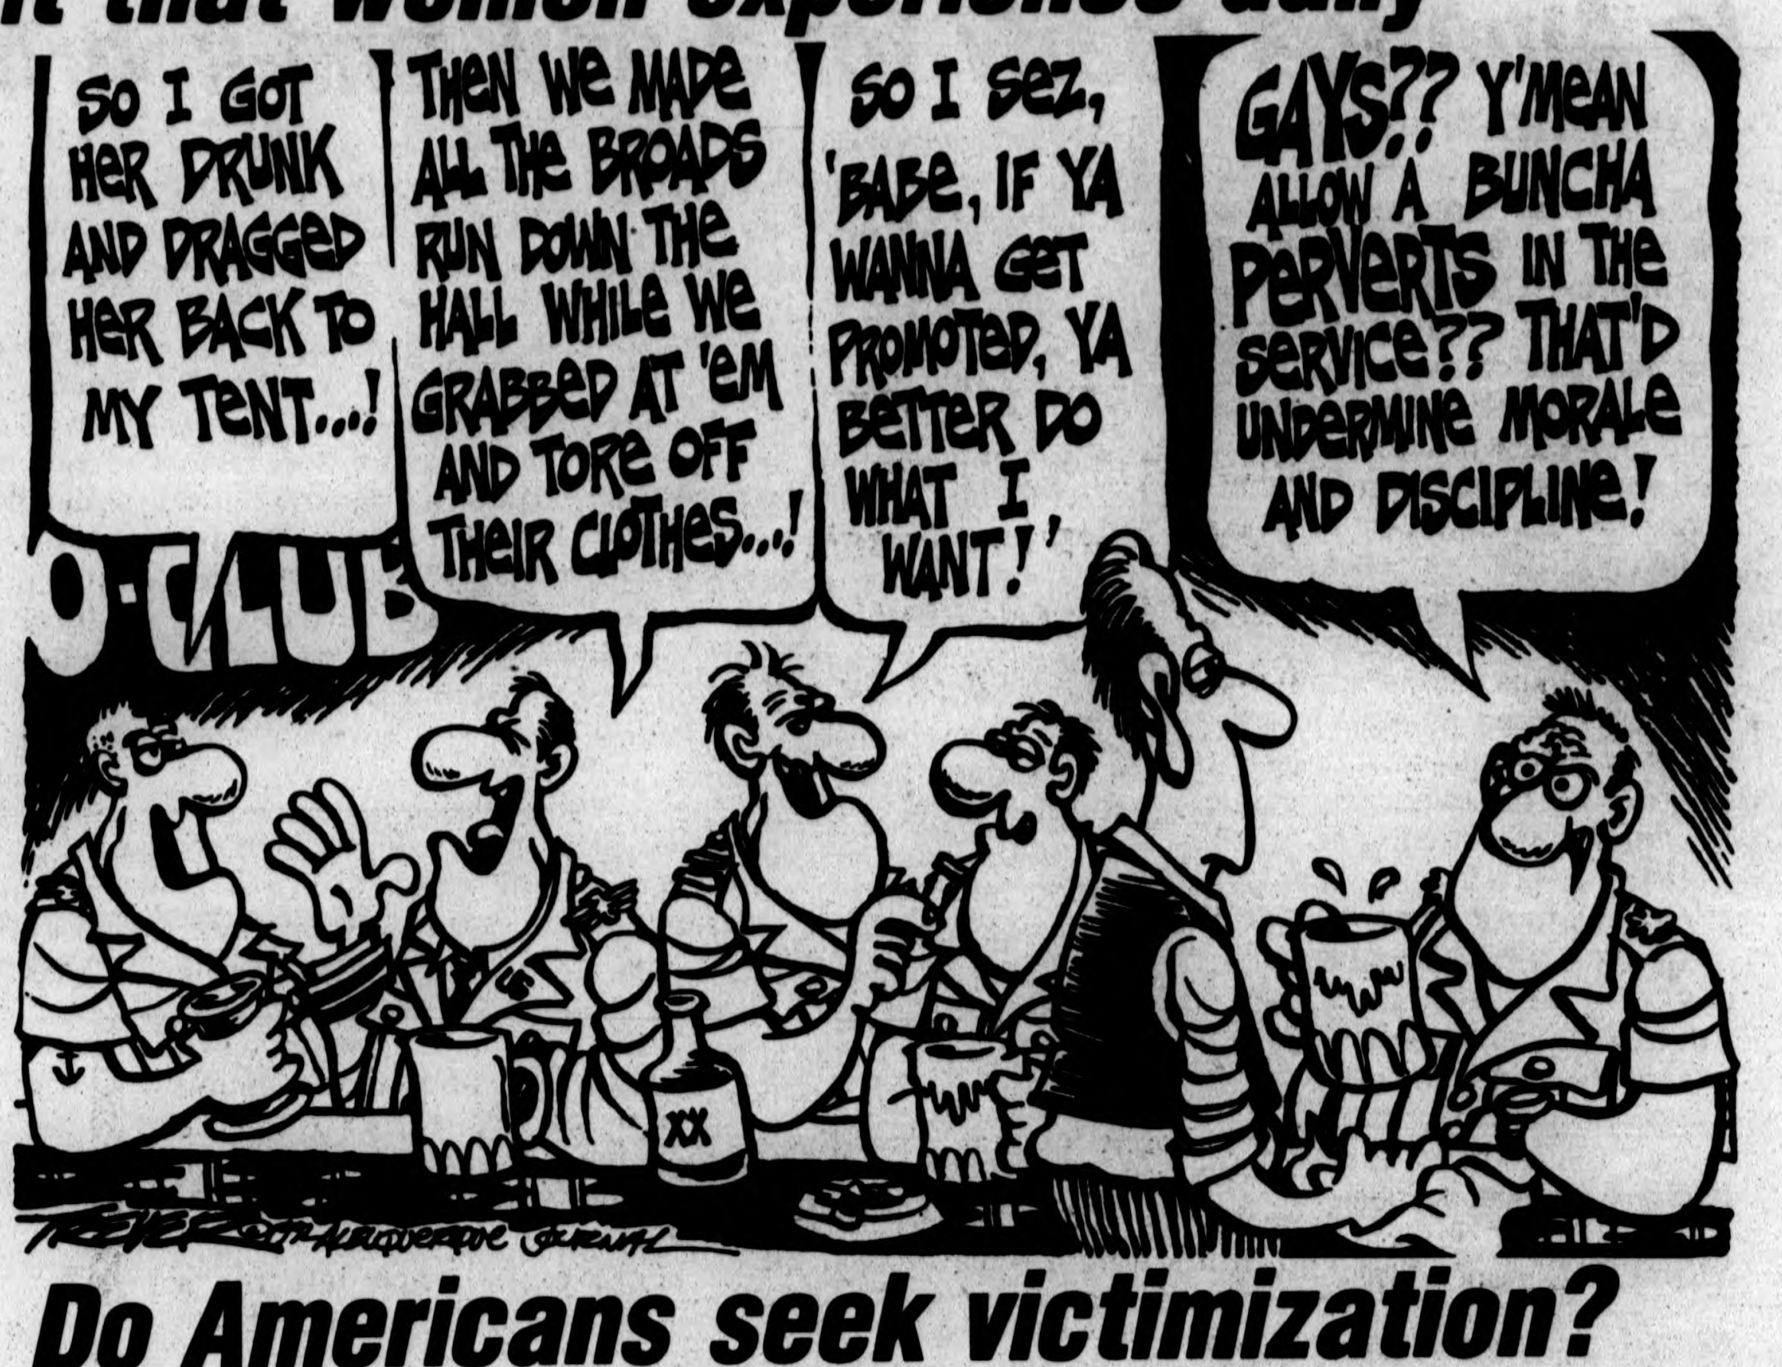
But — back to the barracks — if showers are such a charged venue, barracks such a threatening situation, how come the problem hasn't already wrecked morale and created dissension in the ranks? How come it's come up so rarely?

After all, between 5 percent and 10 percent of the military is estimated to be gay right now. The lifting of the 10-year-old ban on homosexuality would allow these men and women to acknowledge that they are homosexual without being dismissed.

It wouldn't mean that a straight man would be showering with a gay for the first time. It might mean that he would know for the first time.

Finally, the military has every right to make rules about sexual behavior. They can enforce any sort of sexual prohibition or aggression, from a shipmate's "incest taboo" to harassment to ogling in the shower. There is and should be a clear distinction between sexual behavior and sexual orientation. A difference between what we do and what we are.

And by the way, dear writers, wouldn't it be something if the military finally cracked down on sexual misbehavior because men were worrying about men?



SO I GOT HER DRUNK AND DRAGGED HER BACK TO MY TENT...!
THEN WE MADE ALL THE BROADS RUN DOWN THE HALL WHILE WE GRABBED AT 'EM AND TORE OFF THEIR CLOTHES...!

Lackluster fans do not deserve a win

To the Editor:

Recently, I have watched many college basketball games on television, and I have seen many fans from across the nation cheering their respective teams. While watching these teams, it occurred to me that they have something we don't ... excitement!

I have watched with envy the "Cameron Crazies" at Duke, the "Fab Fans" at Michigan, even the 2,200 wackos jam the bandbox at Long Beach State when they upset UNLV earlier this year, and I noticed that these fans would yell and scream for their team the whole game. When I came back from break, I figured the same spirit would be instilled in our fans. During the game against St. John's on ESPN, I waited for the buzz in the air. I'm still waiting. The fans were so dead that I was practically embarrassed. Then, in the game against Georgetown, there were nearly 12,000 fans at the Spectrum, and it sounded like 12. I was actually booed by my section for wanting to stand when we cut the lead to four with four minutes remaining. Needless to say, I was shocked.

I do not think that everybody should scream and yell like a lunatic (I happen to be one of those people, perhaps you have seen my blue hair at the game). But since we have the home court advantage, let's utilize it. Give a standing ovation, sing with the band, razz the refs if they make a bad call. Do something, or we might as well play all our games on the road. I bet if the fans here would be a little more involved in the game, it would mean more wins in the standings.

Do Americans seek victimization?

By MAT TOENNIESSEN

An overweight man enters a McDonald's restaurant and can not fit in the seats. He complains to the Minority Rights Division of the U.S. Attorney's Office that McDonald's is violating equal-protection laws because their seats do not fit him.

A female student at Vassar claims she was sexually harassed by a professor who stared at her. She claims she is a victim of male sexism.

A white student is sent to "sensitivity training" at Stanford University for complaining that he was more qualified than a black student for a graduate assistantship. The university states that he was victimizing the other student.

The University of Miami publishes a list of words no longer acceptable including; burly (too often associated with large black men, implying ignorance); glamorous (sexist); fried chicken (stereotypical of black cuisine); white (a product of the "racist power structure"); qualified minorities (because it implies some are not) and "UGH!" (offensive to Native Americans).

What does all this mean? It is a result of what the rise of "victimization" has done in this country. Instead of taking personal responsibility for our actions, Americans now feel that they can scream "It's not my fault!" So it becomes McDonald's fault that the man was too large to fit in the seat, instead of the man's inability to stop eating.

All of a sudden, or so it seems, everyone wants to be a member of an oppressed group. Blacks, Native Americans, women, Mexicans, overweight people and even bicycle riders (as victims of cars) find that they can file lawsuits at will and get government money and advancement by pleading they are "victims" of society.

Why? Because we have lost all sense of individuality and personal responsibility in daily life. Now it is not acceptable to be an individual, you must be a member of a group. If that group is an "oppressed" group, even better. Whites, however, need not apply. We can't be oppressed according to the victim theory since we have power. I have one word for this theory: rubbish.

The classic example of victimization becoming government policy is affirmative action.

When affirmative action was first implemented during the 1960s, it was designed to allow all minority groups equal opportunity to jobs, housing and advancement. Now, 30 years later, affirmative action means not only equal opportunity in life, but equal results. Hence, the University of California system demands not only a fair representation of minorities in university acceptance policies, but equal graduation of minorities. (This is difficult, since three-fourths of blacks admitted under affirmative action drop out due to not being able to keep up with the rest of the students accepted on merit.)

> I do not care if Clinton has blacks, Hispanics, women or green Martians on the cabinet. I just insist that they be the best green Martians he can find.

Even Bill Clinton is into the victim bit. He stated that his cabinet will look like America, then used quotas to fill the posts. I have two thoughts on this. The first is that, if the cabinet is supposed to look like America, why are there no Asians in it? Could it be, as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) has stated, that Asians are too successful in this country? Is it that they are able to run inner-city stores that blacks cannot and, therefore, they are not a "real" minority?

Also, what happened to merit?

I don't care if Clinton has blacks, Hispanics, women or green Martians on the cabinet. I just insist that they be the best green Martians he can find. Sadly, Clinton has not filled his posts with the best people available for fear that there would be too many white males on the staff, and this would offend minority groups. Just look at the furor the radical feminists made when Clinton did not have any more women on the cabinet than Bush did. To compensate for his choices Clinton has put white males in power slots just under the minorities and women he has picked. Women are not a minority.

Undoubtedly, some readers are now saying this commentary is racist. Well I have a few thoughts for you. Is it racist to question affirmative action, the victim movement and the Welfare State when these have destroyed the black family in this country by rewarding someone not on merit, but on race, causing the recipient to question his worth? These encourage single parent families and penalize saving and advancement.

I think the real racist thinking defends these programs as being successful. We have spent enough money on these programs to buy the Fortune 500 three times, and we still have the same problems. Obviously racism is not the cause since most of this money came from white taxpayers. Also, the accusation of racism is being used much too easily to end all discussion of the problems associated with everyone wanting to be a victim. When Washington, D.C. Mayor Marion Barry can successfully scream racism as an excuse for his being arrested for drugs, even after he was caught on video tape smoking crack, and when he can use racism as a reason he does drugs, we have gone too far in changing the very meaning of the word racism. The real racism is the endless appeasement by government and society of pressure groups that cry racism. This then ensures that those minorities these groups supposedly represent will be viewed as inferior and in need of help since they claim they are victims.

This victim movement is also fueled by the litigation explosion in this country. Everyone can now be a victim by suing someone for huge sums of money for what used to be considered minor inconveniences. We should require caps on awards and demand that the losing side in a lawsuit pays both legal fees and court costs. Litigation should become the last, not the first resort in disputes. We should also stop adding members to the list of oppressed peoples. Not everyone can be a victim, someone has to be responsible ... and not just the white males. Individual responsibility would also help stop much of the rise in lawsuits. Something is very wrong when a burglar can sue the owner of the house he robs because the thief trips on a rake. How does a thief become a victim? Where is his responsibility in all of this?

All of this not only infuriates me, but makes me see that we have lost all sanity when it comes to personal responsibility. We must start teaching morality and ethics again, including the Ten Commandments. Enough of calling ourselves victims, let's start calling ourselves responsible people.

Student says, "It's time to buy a new watch."

By PETER SHAUGER

A couple of weeks ago I lost my watch. People tried to console me by saying things like, "Oh, you'll get a new watch," or, "It's only a watch," or, "That watch wasn't right for you anyway." However the bond I had, or at least thought I had, with this watch was more than just a bond of genuine raw cowhide.

We had some good times together. Like, whenever I wanted to know the time, I'd look down at my wrist and pull up my sleeve, and my watch would be happily waving its hands at me saying, "8:13, Petey, you sweet thing, you!"

Sure, there were other watches, but they barely gave me the time of day. I knew as soon as I saw my last watch that it was a special watch with hidden charm, in the same way that you can tell that certain peanut shells have an extra nut inside before you open them. You just know. I thought to myself, "This is the one. This is the watch that I want to spend the rest of time with, that is, the rest of its time until it dies (R.I.P.)."

But this watch didn't die. I let it slip through my fingers. Maybe I should have seen the signs. Maybe I wasn't treating it well enough. Maybe someone stole it away from me. All I know is that somewhere my Timex is ticking for someone else now.

> For the next few days I existed in a bizarre Timex warp . . . People called me "Late For Dinner" instead of by my real name.

I didn't know what to do. I blamed myself. For the next few days I existed in a bizarre Timex warp. I went to classes hours before they were scheduled. People called me "Late For Dinner" instead of by my real name. Each morning I checked my wrist hoping it was all a bad dream, and each morning the reality of it hit me with more intense sadness than the previous day. I was a normal young man (humor me here) in the '90s, with one exception, I was watchless.

Ever since the fifth grade, I can't remember the last time that I had been watchless more than a couple of days. In the summers the skin was pale on my wrist where watches had blocked the sun. Whenever one watch would die, mom would set me up with another one.

But I'm an adult now (humor me again), and it's not right for my mom to set me up with watches anymore. I need to find them on my own. But how long does a person, such as myself, have to wait before it is acceptable to consider letting a new watch into your life after your old watch has passed on (R.I.P.), or worse, has been stolen?

And what kind of person would steal someone else's watch, anyway? Is nothing sacred? Probably not if you're a slimy watch stealer.

Notice I haven't suggested the concept of buying a watch. That would imply a simple exchange of money for cheap and demeaning watch services, rather than the more meaningful exchange of love and quality time. Excuse me while I shed a tear ...

(Pete exits stage left for a Kleenex and returns to continue the story, but not before he has a good cry and gives his nose a hearty toot. And now back to Pete.)

I lost the watch on Tuesday. By Friday I was ready for a new watch. Normally, I would have had my good friend Chad help me select a watch, however he only serves as my chief counsel for any purchase not involving clothing, music, food, furniture, renaissance poetry or watches. For such a delicate matter, I would need a woman's opinion.

And what is the only thing better than one woman's opinion? That's right, two women's opinions.

Karen said that if it wasn't for the fact that she hated the watch she would have loved it. Carolyn told me she thought I should get it because it seemed to make me happy, plus I think she secretly wanted to borrow it. I went with Carolyn's suggestion. She's a good kid. Karen's a good kid, too, she just didn't tell me what I wanted to hear.

Actually there was a third woman's opinion, but she liked all the watches, and the only two phrases she seemed to know were "Ooo! That one looks sharp on you," and, "That one comes with a year's warranty, honey." A year from when? Last March? And I'm not your honey!

And now here I am, two weeks later, proud to say that my newest watch is still ticking. Stay tuned next week when I tell all about my new shoelaces.

Peter Shauger is a junior English major who thinks Carolyn has excellent taste in watches.

Comment incites racism accusation

To the Editor:

Maybe I have been naive, but I thought Villanova was really beginning to understand and work toward achieving diversity.

I have always looked forward to reading the question for the "On Campus" section of the Villanovan. But when I read Mr. Joe Kealy's response in the Dec. 4 issue of the Villanovan, I became infuriated and disgusted with his off-color comment and the Villanovan's decision to publish such blatant disregard for other races and cultures.

Mr. Kealy, and I use this term extremely loosely, exhibits the mentality of an ignorant, irresponsible and immature individual. His blatant disrespect for African Americans is offensive and degrading. In his response to the question posed by Tara Kelly: "What would you do if you were suddenly responsible for paying your own Villanova tuition?" Mr. Kealy sarcastically retorts, "In a time of need, I would travel to my African homeland and become a hunter, returning with spear in hand, a symbol of strength, will and courage." I find it repulsive that an individual can make such an obnoxious statement as a student of university grounded in the Catholic tradition. I wonder if Mr. Kealy has really learned anything at Villanova; perhaps as an economics major he has mistakenly ignored his religious studies courses.

Comments like these only go against what so many students are trying to accomplish, namely a more understanding and open-minded community. As thinking adult students we cannot and should not tolerate such distasteful remarks. I realize that Mr. Kealy was "just joking," but remarks like these succeed only in perpetuating the indifference and intolerance toward those not in the majority. If we sit idly by and accept it as "just" a joke, then we are silently condoning such behavior. We have an obligation to ourselves and to the community to denounce and reject such inappropriateness, if we really believe in achieving diversity and ending racist attitudes on campus.

Is Mr. Kealy the only one at fault? Absolutely not. Tara Kelly and the editors of the Villanovan share the blame for their lack of sensitivity and professionalism. I am appalled that Mr. Kealy's statement was included in the "On Campus" section of the newspaper. They alone hold the power to decide which students' comments are presented and still chose to include Mr. Kealy's offensive statement. His was not a political statement nor one that was in support or against a certain University policy; it was merely his attempt to capture attention and perhaps a few laughs. No purpose or position was gained by including such a comment. It is quite apparent that no discretion and consideration was given in this situation.

I am not advocating that the Villanovan publish a censored newspaper, otherwise my letter might never have been read today, rather that it carefully edit all other sections besides the "Letters to the Editor" and the "Op-Ed," which I believe are sacred and should be untouched. This is where freedom of speech should be preserved and welcomed. With this in mind, I urge Mr. Kealy to address my comments and perhaps explain his purpose for making such a statement.

While contemplating writing this editorial, I was upset to see that the vast majority of students, including some of my friends, did not take notice of Mr. Kealy's comment. Has our society degraded so far that we have accepted such remarks as part of our culture? Or are most of us afraid of saying something and rocking the boat? Well, I believe that this boat must be rocked if it wants to go the right way. I am sure some would argue that I am overreacting and that I can not take a joke.

The latter part might be true, because this is not a joke to me and it should not be to you. Imagine, if I were to rattle off comments like "The man has been putting us down," or "Blue Key is racist!" They are just words, right? No one would take me seriously — Wrong! I would be instantly targeted as a self-pitying minority or a militant crying for affirmative action. Isn't it funny how a flip of the coin changes our attitudes? Don't underestimate the power of the written or spoken word. I am counting on this to get my message across.

A university newspaper is often referred to by prospective students to get a feel for the school and its students. The inclusion of Mr. Kealy's comment has surely tarnished the reputation and jeopardized the integrity of not only the Villanovan, the University itself and its students as well. In these respects, the publishing of Mr. Kealy's comment is an embarrassing act, yet the only positive effects that I can see emerging from this, is that it spurs and ignites Villanovans to understand that we have a long and arduous task ahead in promoting diversity and sensitivity on campus.

We have already publicly acknowledged a problem on campus, now we must be fully committed to solving it. Our hands are not tied, our mouths are not gagged; take a stand and assert what you know is right. Be part of the solution, not the problem.

Women face danger on 'Nova social scene

During the first few months of school each year it is not uncommon to see hoards of freshman women congregating at Bartley Circle on weekend nights. The women are there in search of an exciting Villanova party night. This search for a good time, however, can result in a night that can leave a devastating impact on a woman's life. This ritualistic practice can and has resulted in innocent women being raped.

When freshman women come to Villanova in August, they learn very quickly that the male population at Villanova has a great desire to meet them. Upper-class male students are notorious for wanting "new meat" at their parties. Therefore, many tell the pretty freshman women they see to be at Bartley Circle at a specific time for pickup.

In turn, these naive women, who feel flattered by the attention that they are getting from these upperclassmen, go to Bartley Circle dressed to impress. They flock like cattle from dorms across campus to wait to be taken to the great parties they were invited to.

Then, between 9 and 10 p.m., Villanova men drive through the circle picking and choosing which females they want to come back to the party at their house. The women are looked over and graded as if they are pieces of meat. If chosen, they pile into a car, most likely with a guy they have never seen before and are off to an unknown destination. Although most of these women do get home safely at the end of the night, some are not so fortunate.

Acquaintance rape does exist at Villanova, and those who stand at Bartley are prime candidates for this terrible act. They stand there at night just as hookers stand on corners waiting to be picked up. The desire of these Villanova freshmen may not be to have sex or to make money, but to an outsider looking in it is very hard for any distinction to be made between the intentions of different females. Also, if a rape does occur at a house off campus due to a situation like the one discussed, Villanova has no authority legally to do anything about it.

It is about time that Villanova takes a stand against this degradation of the freshman women at Villanova. It is ridiculous that a well-known Catholic and private institution would allow this weekend ritual to occur. It has already resulted in rape. Let us try to pressure Villanova to put a stop to it before it results in one more rape or worse.

Villanovans show support for Right to Life movement

By ANN McNEARNEY
Assistant Features Editor

Villanovans For Life (VFL) sponsored a free bus trip to Washington, D.C., Jan. 22 for the 20th Annual March for Life. Approximately 35 people awoke at the crack of dawn to show their dedication and support for the fight against abortion.

Their day began with a gathering at the Ellipse in downtown Washington, D.C., where speakers protested the government's and some people's continued support of abortion. The crowd of about 125,000 was not limited to those from the east coast area, with individuals from as far away as California, Arizona and Guam.

From the mall the crowd marched to the Supreme Court building for more activities supporting their cause. At the end of the day, all returned to Villanova's campus, except for eight supporters who stayed to attend a weekend conference. The conference primarily focused on the anti-abortion issue, and also dealt with President Bill Clinton's support to overturn the Roe v. Wade laws that placed restrictions on abortion.

Despite the helplessness that some would feel with this threat, pro-life advocates in Washington and even those on Villanova's campus refuse to give up. The conference, sponsored by the American Collegians For Life, allowed students, faculty and staff from colleges all over the country to come together and share ideas and plans of action.

Among the speakers during the weekend was Dr. Bernard Nathanson, who in 1973 founded the National Abortion Rights Action League (NARAL). Nathanson performed over 60,000 abortions during his career, but recently turned pro-life and was a prominent speaker this past weekend.

The free trip to D.C. and the three-day conference were educational and successful for the multitudes of people who participated.

Jen Schuler, president of VFL, said, "Villanovans for Life is undaunted by Clinton's reversal of restrictions on abortion, and we will continue to work towards a positive life ethic for our nation." VFL is a group headquartered at the Center for Peace and Justice Education.

Students break stereotypes through volunteerism

By TIFFANY TOYASHIMA
Special to the Villanovan

The stereotypical American college student attends more parties than classes, drinks to excess, is uninterested or unaware of social problems and is just killing time for four years.

Although many adults categorize college students in this way, this stereotype is not always accurate. Despite the negative criticism students constantly seem to receive, there are many students who are not a part of this mold. These students view the college experience as a time of learning and growth, a time where one's horizons are broadened and a new awareness of life and of the world is gained.

The Campus Ministry program on the Villanova campus provides vivid proof that there are students who really care and who want to make a difference. The department sponsors a wide variety of activities to help students get involved with serving others and expose them to a part of society which is often ignored.

The department hopes to educate students as well as provide them with the opportunity to serve. The knowledge gained through their experience will help people gain a different perspective of reality, and help them believe their efforts can bring about change.

Noreen Cameron, a campus minister at Villanova for the past six years, described the service program as having a two-fold objective. The first is educating the students in "broadening their experience at the most general level," so one begins to realize that problems such as poverty and homelessness exist, and that people can take an active role in helping to make a difference. The second objective is the service itself, the action which brings about changes and improvements.

The programs sponsored by Campus Ministry include a number of service trips both weekly and over breaks. The weekly trips to places such as the St. Francis Inn, and the Streets Committee which feeds the homeless in Philadelphia, send out about 100 people a week.

> "No government can really conquer such enormous problems without people first turning to themselves."
> Greg Mooney

The break trips, which Cameron explained as a "more intense experience of another culture and economic status," range from groups of seven to 50 people per trip. There are more students than available spaces for volunteers, but Cameron said this is a "wonderful problem."

Greg Mooney, a senior history major at Villanova who has been actively involved in Campus Ministry since his freshman year, said that his experience with the service program has really taught him what it means to be "committed to people and their problems," and he is much more able now to "identify with what it means to serve."

Mooney noted that the program helps people turn the focus outward and allows them to look beyond themselves and become concerned with the needs of others. "After all," said Mooney, "this is what Campus Ministry is all about."

When students decide to get involved with the service program here at Villanova, their motives for volunteering should be thought out, and they must be willing to make a firm commitment, said Cameron. The actual service performed on trips varies according to what trip a person is on, but generally a volunteer will work closely with "poor and underprivileged" individuals, explained Cameron.

The volunteers perform whatever services are needed, and interact closely both with the people they are serving and with the other volunteers on the trip. Cameron said that this helps "create empathy and compassion for the poor" and gives them a sense of community.

Although the service program itself has many positive aspects, there are still some areas that need improvement, Cameron explained. One of these is the lack of "post experience reflection." Once students return from a service outing, Cameron feels that many times they simply detach themselves from the experience and fail to keep what they learned alive through their actions.

Rush begins for Greek life

By ROSEANNE MILLER
Staff Reporter

Along with the start of the spring semester, the surge toward Greek life for many Villanovans has begun. That's right, Rush is well under way and has been dominating the thoughts of future "sisters" and "brothers" across campus.

Sororities began their approximate two-week Rush period Jan. 14 in hopes of acquiring girls to pledge and come to share the bonds of sisterhood. Within this time period were six days of parties. The purpose of each party was for rushees to meet some sisters from each sorority. In doing so, the rushees were able to learn more about each sorority. From this, girls are able to see where they feel comfortable and decide to which sorority they would like to belong.

Panhellenic Rush Chair Amy Cameron was very positive about the 1993 Rush. "Everything went very well," she said, and added that "new programs were implemented." Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities, was "extremely helpful — without him there could be no Rush," said Cameron.

The girls who rushed were equally excited. Sophomore Michelle Zapata felt that Rush was "a great experience because you were able to meet people and get better acquainted with the activities that take place within Greek life."

Zapata added that through rushing, one is able "to really get to know the sororities," which are often mistaken because of stereotyping. The girls she met were simply "a great bunch of people having fun."

Another sophomore who rushed commented that although Rush "was tiring and stressful throughout, it was a lot of fun." She especially enjoyed the preference parties because she felt that she got to "know the sisters as individuals." One sister who went through the Rush process last year said that voting procedures "were much different than what she thought they would be."

> Rush is well underway and has been dominating the thoughts of "future sisters and brothers" across campus.

In all, 525 girls initially registered for Rush. There are requirements for girls to participate, such as a minimum grade point average of 2.2. In the end, a total of 465 girls actively participated in Rush. Bids were received on Jan. 25.

As the sororities have concluded their period of Rush, the fraternity scene is rearing to go. Rush is just getting started and anticipation is high. Informational and rather creative signs have been posted throughout campus indicating times and dates of the Rush meetings. Fraternity Rush lasts approximately a week and a half.

During the three meetings which each fraternity holds in this time period, rushees have the opportunity to meet the brothers of the fraternities which they are interested in rushing. Rush concludes for fraternities on Feb. 7, at which time bids are handed out.

Award-winning author will speak for lecture series

By CHRISTINE M. SCOMA
Special to the Villanovan

Award-winning author Chaim Potok will host a lecture and entertain questions concerning the film "Revolt of Job" Feb. 1 as part of Villanova's Cultural Film Series.

Potok is the acclaimed author of several novels, most of which deal with the conflict of the individual with his family and community. The novels also reflect his Jewish upbringing, which lends a distinctive ethnic richness to them.

His first novel, The Chosen, centered on the relationships of fathers and sons in Orthodox Jewish families. Not only was the novel a huge success, winning the Edward Lewis Wallant Award and a National Book Award, but it also inspired many people.

The sequel to The Chosen, The Promise, also was a success, and received the Athenaeum Award. His subsequent novels were all well-received by critics and fans.

His most recent work, I Am The Clay, is the story of an old couple who save the life of a young boy in Korea toward the end of the war, and the effects on their life.

Potok is also a noted playwright. His three plays, "Out of the Depths," "Sins of the Father" and most recent, "The Play of Lights," all premiered in Philadelphia. This successful author has also completed several non-fiction reviews and articles. The most notable is his book Wanderings: Chaim Potok's History of the Jews.

Potok, an ordained rabbi who has a doctorate in philosophy from the University of Pennsylvania, served as a chaplain in the United States Army during the Korean War. He is married, has three children and is currently living on the Main Line.

His lecture at the Cultural Film Series will center on the theological and philosophical issues apparent in the film "Revolt of Job." This film, directed by Imre Gyongyossy, concentrates on the everyday life of a Hungarian Jewish family living with an awareness of the impending Holocaust.

Potok's lecture will begin at 7 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema, and he will host questions and comments after the viewing of the film.

Fed up with the "animal rights" movement?

"Animal rights" groups equate the life of a child with that of a rat. They are stifling medical research through disinformation, harassment, and terror. Now you can do something about the disinformation on your campus. TV host performs stand-up comedy on campus

By HILLARY FIELD
Staff Reporter

A night filled with studs, you thought? Sorry.

Mark Decarlo, host of the popular dating show "Studs," came to Villanova on Jan. 20 not under the guise of host, but of his first calling as a comedian. Though the advertisements around campus, intentionally or not, insinuated that it was to be a live version of the famed television show, Decarlo's performance was a stand-up comedy routine.

Thank goodness he landed the day job on the TV show because the evening was ... lacking. Maybe he has not waxed off his comedic skills in a long time or had eaten too much airplane food. Whatever the reason, Decarlo appeared to be new to the comedy scene.

Decarlo planned to incorporate audience participation into his act, which began with forming a family of students onstage to the tune of the Brady Bunch. His act continued with average typical humor mixed with casual audience participation geared toward a college crowd.

Catholic school jokes. Priests in Catholic school jokes. Pope jokes such as, "If I were infallible I would be on my way to Las Vegas right now." Ted Kennedy dating jokes. Dating, relationships, marriage, and the overused male versus female "I don't understand" lines. Average comedy delivered to a somewhat disappointed and confused audience.

Decarlo received the greatest responses when he picked out members of the audience and ridiculed them or made them ridicule themselves.

One highlight was the appearance of "Little Bernie," a boisterous heckler. Bernie began to heckle, but found himself ridiculed by Decarlo when asked if he would ever date Madonna. When Bernie hesitated to reply, Decarlo seized the comedic opportunity and made Bernie a spotlight of humor. Decarlo preceded to exploit Bernie's love life to the point of making him sing "You've Lost That Loving Feeling" to his significant other as the audience piped in.

The performance continued with more audience members being picked out, or on, as Decarlo realized this road reaped greater audience response. The show ended awkwardly when Decarlo closed with a "college blues" folk song that lacked any sense of a bang.

Meeting Decarlo after the show was more rewarding, comparatively speaking. Mark Decarlo was born in Chicago, Ill., and found his way to California to make it as a comic actor. Following bit movie parts and the comedy circuit, Fox Broadcasting approached him a week before taping was to begin to ask if he would like to host "Studs." A week later the show premiered.

Student volunteers travel to Panama over break

When the weather turns cold, many students dream of relaxing in a tropical climate. However, during their stay in Wacuco, Panama, a group of 15 Villanova students discovered there is much more to do than soak up the sun in countries south of the border.

The group, accompanied by Dr. Christensen of the Civil Engineering Department spent Jan. 1-15, 1992, digging and working on a church site and fixing water lines in the village.

'Nova volunteers better lives

Another problem is that the agencies with which Villanova cooperates need consistent help on a regular basis, and the program at Villanova does not really "get at the root of the problem," said Cameron. The students' efforts are helpful and beneficial, but students "come and go" and the problems still remain. Finally, Cameron emphasized the need for true, committed volunteers who will not "take their names off of the sign-up sheet" if school gets too hectic.

The Rev. Michael Duffy, in charge of the program at the St. Francis Inn Soup Kitchen, said that there are no drawbacks to having college student volunteers, and he is especially happy with the students from Villanova. He believes that the program helps people realize their "ability to change the world" and understand why people are in the position they are in.

The service experience also helps people see that "no government can really conquer such enormous problems without people first turning to themselves" and realizing their potential to change things, Mooney added. He feels that this is the "social responsibility" of every one of us.

Campus comedy

Decarlo finds that the appeal of the show comes from people watching others going through the same dating rituals they are experiencing, "much like the people tonight watched Little Bernie."

Though you might assume all of the guests on "Studs" are out-of-work actors, Decarlo claims all potential guests are screened to weed out the actors who just want to promote themselves. But the blatant appearance of the guests is due to the fact that, "most of California is 90 percent silicon, male and female, personality and appearance," according to Decarlo.

Since "Studs' " premiered two years ago, the televised dating show has produced three engagements, five live-in couples and one marriage, though Decarlo was disappointed to find that he was not invited.

Decarlo said, "I am proud to be a part of the Sesquicentennial, you didn't think I knew the word, did you?"

Cultural films raise ultimate questions

By CATHERINE C. GRAHAM
Staff Reporter

Students at Villanova University will find the Spring 1993 Cultural Film Series appropriate for the continuing Sesquicentennial celebration.

The theme of the series, "Film, Faith and Philosophy," integrates ideas from philosophy and religious studies, ideas students have all encountered in classes. Ultimate questions provoked throughout the series include: Is there meaning in human life? Why be just in an unjust world? Why do good people suffer? Does God care about what happens to us? Can death teach us anything about life?

Dr. Joan Lynch, professor of communication arts and director of the film series, unites the films to lead into one another with five sub units.

The first three films relate to the Jewish religion. Woody Allen's "Crimes and Misdemeanors" (Jan. 23-25) asked why good people suffer while murderers get away with their crimes. The guest lecturer was Richard A. Blake, former editor of America Magazine.

"Revolt of Job" (Jan. 30-Feb. 1), is about a Jewish family's awareness of the impending Holocaust. The speaker will be Chaim Potok, best known for his novels "The Chosen," "The Promise" and "I Am The Clay."

"Weapon's of the Spirit," (Feb. 6-8), is the award-winning testament of how a town of French Protestants protected their Jewish citizens during the Nazi occupation. Pierre Sauvage, the filmmaker of the movie, will be the speaker.

The next three films deal with the re-evaluation of one's life in the face of death. "Ikiru" (Feb. 13-15), directed by Akira Kurosawa, is a postwar Japanese film that explores an aging civil servant's discovery that he is dying of cancer and his attempt to leave the world a better place. Timothy Corrigan, a film studies professor at Temple University, will be the speaker.

Ingmar Bergman's "Wild Strawberries" portrays an elderly doctor's confrontation with his past. Local film expert Ruth Perlmutter will introduce the film.

The comedy classic, "Harold and Maude" (March 13-15), is about a young man's romance with a freewheeling octogenerian. Philosophy professor John Carvalho will be the guest lecturer.

"The Mission" (March 20-22) and "Romero" (March 27-29) are both about the Catholic Church's mission in Latin America. Daniel Berrigan appears in "The Mission" and is the scheduled guest speaker. Gloria Thomas from Marymount University will introduce "Romero."

"Weapons of Spirit," which explores life in Nazi-occupied France, will be shown Feb. 6-8.

"Jesus of Montreal" (April 3-5) has to do with themes of religion and art, with Peter Donahue, O.S.A., to provide a lecture. Franco Zeffirelli's "Brother Sun, Sister Moon" (April 17-19) is fitting as the conclusion of the series, because it relates to notions of religious love.

The series is run by a committee comprised of faculty, administrators, staff and students. The treasurer is Lucy Gorski, director of Student Activities. Elana Starr is the publicity director. Tony Alfano, director of the Connelly Center, supervises the cinema operation. The student members are Christine Scoma, research assistant, and Paul Barben, publicity assistant.

Awards show honors popular music artists

By ERIC CHEUNG
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Increasingly the American Music Awards (AMA) show has been more popular than its highly respected sister show, the Grammys. Based on popularity and record sales, the AMA awards are given to the favorite artists, songs and albums in their respective categories. The Grammys, on the other hand, recognize artists, songs and albums who have been deemed the best by the music industry.

In recent years the difference has been phenomenal. While the AMAs honor those musical accomplishments that the public at large have deemed their favorites, the Grammys are subject to the "expert" choices of those who belong to the music industry. The Grammys disdain popularity as a factor to be taken into consideration. Unfortunately this makes them seem like elitists who look down upon the opinions of mere commoners.

Bobby Brown hosted the 20th annual American Music Awards.

Obviously if too many people liked the artist there has to be something wrong, at least that is the idea the Grammys seem to promote. Needless to say, this kind of mentality has caused the masses of music award show-devotees, and there are many music shows around this time, to flock to the AMAs for enjoyment. Once again the AMA telecast has proven itself to be a far more exciting show than the conservative Grammys.

The 20th Annual American Music Awards show was a great mixture of tributes, awards ceremonies, performances, and it was an all-around showcase of the most popular music from the past year. Unlike many other award shows, the AMAs moved smoothly, with incredible performances and shortened speeches, none of which could have been more than 30 seconds. Co-hosts Bobby Brown, Gloria Estefan and Wynonna Judd wasted no time with annoying monologues to make the audience laugh.

The business at hand was music, whether it be recognition of the best of the year or performances of some of the biggest artists. This kind of thinking ensured that the show moved along briskly. It was a success if for nothing other than the fact that it kept to its three-hour time slot. Overall, though there were quite a few surprises, the awards were given to the artists who truly were the favorites in their categories.

There were many big winners Jan. 25. Mariah Carey came away with two awards including Favorite Pop Female Artist and Favorite Adult Contemporary Album for her MTV Unplugged EP. Like many other winners, her biggest thanks went to the fans and to God.

The success of a No. 1 single over the summer, "Jump, Jump," helped give Kriss Kross two awards: one for New Rap Artist and the other for New R&B Artist.

Likewise, another new act, Pearl Jam, had a big night. For what seemed like most of the year, Pearl Jam was overshadowed by fellow Seattle band, Nirvana. On this night, Pearl Jam glowed with success. Not only did they take honors for New Heavy Metal/Hard Rock Artist, they also nabbed the Top New Pop Artist award.

The biggest award winner was Michael Jackson. He performed

'Damage' depicts obsessive love triangle

By SARAH BREEDEN
Staff Reporter

This weekend marked the opening of yet another new release from the film industry. "Damage," directed by Louis Malle, stars Jeremy Irons and Juliette Binoche in an unusual and obsessive love story.

Irons stars as Stephen Fleming, a member of the British Parliament. Binoche wastes no time in making her appearance on the screen as Anna Barton, the girlfriend of Stephen's son, Martin. In other words, Anna is the girlfriend of both father and son. From the first moment Stephen and Anna lay eyes on each other, an unusual yet powerful feeling overwhelms the two. While most of the audience in the theater is still getting settled in their seats, Stephen and Anna are entangled in the bare arms of one another (That is not all that is bare!).

The film moves quickly, yet at the same time it drags its heels at a turtle's pace. A vital element of any film, the plot, is lost in much of this movie. Smoothness and believability are also hard to come by. The film jumps between scenes of Stephen at work and the numerous and somewhat odd love scenes between him and Anna. The love triangle which develops among Stephen, Anna and Martin is the sole concentration of the film. The only topic to fully develop throughout the film is the unraveling of Anna's tragic childhood.

Smoothness and believability are hard to come by.

Two of the worst traits a film could possess are predictable and boring. This film unfortunately covers both of these areas completely. None of the characters portrayed ever fully develop, thus causing the film to feel rather empty. The only suspenseful moment comes at the end; yet even here it is obvious what will happen. This movie is one of a serious nature yet at moments it is hard not to laugh at its plot.

This film originally claimed an NC-17 rating. However, being that such a rating often spells failure for a film, the love scenes were altered for the film to carry its present R rating. Running time for "Damage" is just under two hours. If one should decide to experience "Damage" personally, the best idea would be to catch a discounted matinee; the movie is not worth $6.00.

Nirvana infests rock radio with Incesticide

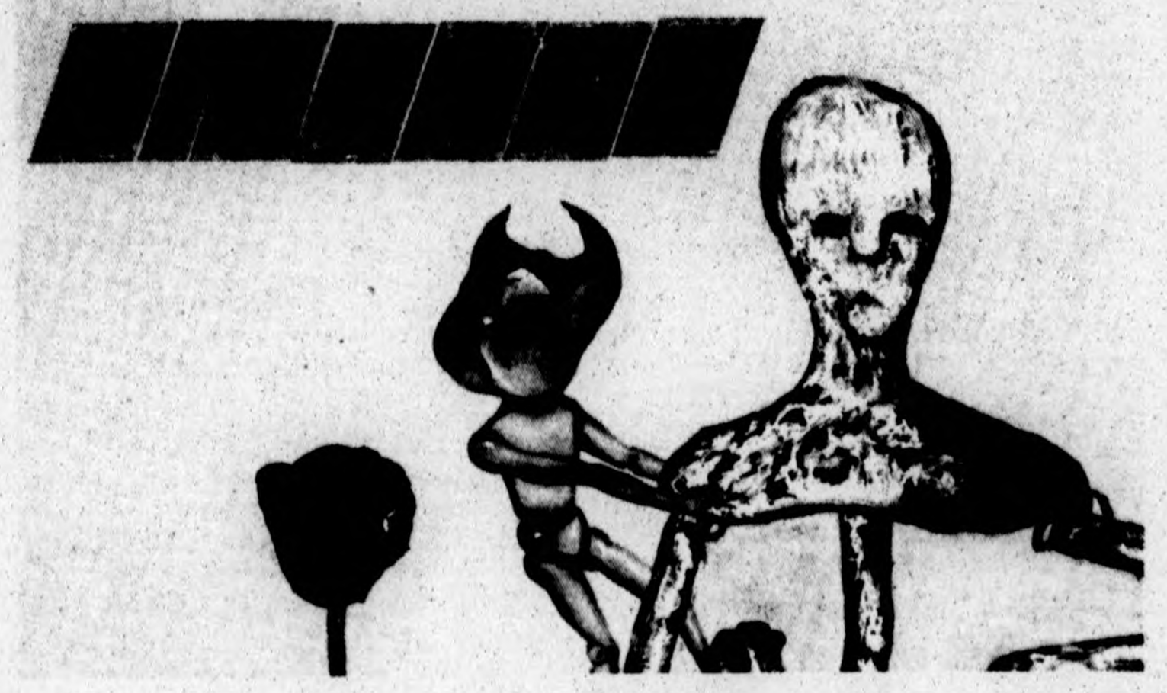
By MARK McCREARY
Staff Reporter

When you are a band that got as big as fast as Nirvana did in 1992, you are destined to make a few enemies along the way. With Nirvana, their enemies quickly became the same people that were their fans. Their death was brought about by that lovely MTV institution, which incessantly plays their videos, most currently with a "Breakthrough Video" of their "In Bloom" single. If you are one of the three people in the world who have not seen this great video, watch MTV, and it is bound to show up before you know it. What is not bound to show up for a while are singles from Nirvana's latest CD, Incesticide.

Incesticide is going to appeal to the people that still listen to Nevermind, and not to the listeners that stick with them on a single-by-single basis. It is not as candy-coated as Nevermind was, which translates into a purer, rougher and even more appealing CD than the previous one. Actually, there is not a whole lot of this CD that is new. It was reported that this CD was released to make their Japanese import-only release, Hormoaning, more available, and to put some older jams and a previously released four-track EP in one compilation. It was also done to make some more money (more power to Sub Pop Records). Here is how the compilation breaks down: "Dive" and "Sliver" from a 1990 release, BBC sessions of "Aneurysm," covers of the Vaselines' "Molly's Lips," Devo's "Turnaround," early unreleased demos "Hairspray Queen" and "Aero Zeppelin," a much faster version of "Polly" from Nevermind entitled "(New Wave) Polly," as well as "Stain," "Been a Son, "Son of a Gun," "Beeswax," "Downer," "Mexican Seafood" and "Big Long Now" from Hormoaning. It would be pretty difficult to say that Incesticide is better than Nevermind, but on a different level it is just as good. It definitely is not a CD made for the radio (thank God), and it took a couple of listenings to really appreciate it. Songs such as "Dive," "Molly's Lips," "Aero Zeppelin" and "Aneurysm" stand out as really wonderful little ditties.



There have been hardly any hints on when the next CD of new material will be released by the band, or what it is going to sound like. Chris Novoselic reported to Rolling Stone that it will sound much like Incesticide as in comparison to Nevermind, and he also said that Kurt Cobain is performing guitar riffs on a William S. Burroughs spoken CD, producing a Melvins CD, and that the band did a single with Jesus Lizard called "Oh, the Guilt." Novoselic is still shooting his mouth off with activist organizations about censorship, marijuana legalization and heroin distribution in high school (just kidding — that would not be politically correct for the fashionable Seattle boy).

'Oil' strikes many emotions

By AARON NICODEMUS
Senior Reporter

The discipline of medical science has become almost a religion to many Americans, where we sacrifice our self-esteem to the all-knowing doctor. Upon entering the receiving room and donning the classic blue gown with mere strings to cover our backsides, we succumb to docility and ignorance.

In the case of one beleaguered couple, however, the words "there's nothing we can do" from a doctor's mouth did not signal them to give up hope.

"Lorenzo's Oil" is the story of Augusto and Michaela Odone and their son Lorenzo that is so incredible that it seems impossible to believe. In 1984, they were told that Lorenzo had a rare and incurable disease, adrenoleukodystrophy (ALD). First there was disbelief, then shock, and eventually, an incredible resolve to fight.

ALD is a hereditary disease that affects young boys between the ages of five and 10. It involves a defective enzyme that does not break down saturated fats, allowing their buildup in the body. Tissue covering the nerves is destroyed and in the course of time, the brain loses its ability to communicate with the body and quickly deteriorates. The result is a near-vegetable state, and then death.

Nick Nolte is Augusto, a native Italian who works for the World Bank in Washington, D.C. Susan Sarandon plays his wife, a blazing Italian redhead whose passion is quickly consumed in her quest to cure her son. Their mutual obsession leads them through endless hours of research, two mortgages and deep into the worlds of politics, money and medicine.

Meanwhile, Lorenzo's life ebbs slowly away. The reality of the situation is that while parents meet obstacles at every turn, they never lose hope. Their love for Lorenzo outweighs all other concerns, including financial, professional and even personal ones.

The film attempts to answer both the question of how the Odones found a cure for ALD, and more importantly why. "Lorenzo's Oil" offers two characters in depth, desperate and willing to go any distance to find Lorenzo's cure.

While both portrayals are convincing, Nolte's accent is one fact of the true-to-life story that could stand altering. It never works. His tirades in Italian are ludicrous. Notwithstanding that flaw, his performance as a father tortured by his son's pain is compelling.

Sarandon once again proves she is not to be typecast as a blue-collar hussy. Her performance as Michaela is worthy of an Oscar nomination for its vibrancy, its power and its conviction. The characters come alive with realism and integrity. On the strengths of its stars, "Lorenzo's Oil" is painfully beautiful.

FAST FORWARD: Look for the biggest movie in February to be "Falling Down," starring Michael Douglas as an ordinary guy who goes beserk in the heat of the Los Angeles sun. Costars include Robert Duvall, Barbara Hershey and Tuesday Weld. One quick note — Douglas' new look involves a crew cut, taking this year's "bad hair day" title from 1992's recipient, Kevin Costner.

REWIND: Virtually ignored in its theatre run, "Diggstown" on video might be a hidden gem. Starring James Woods and Lou Gossett Jr., "Diggstown" follows two con artists, only one is a boxer (Gossett) and the other is his promoter (Woods). While most of what the film captures has been done before, that does not detract from the movie's value. The next time you stand in a video store surrounded by poor choices, keep your expectations low and reach for "Diggstown."

One box office hit that had luck and timing on its side, "Unlawful Entry," debuts on video Feb. 3. The film stars Kurt Russell and Madeleine Stowe as a suburban couple whose life is turned upside down by a lunatic cop (Ray Liotta) bent on having Stowe and killing Russell in the process. In the wake of the Rodney King verdict and other urban fear of police brutality, "Unlawful Entry" hit a nerve. Whether or not it can repeat that success on video remains to be seen.

Cell creates dense sound

By COLEEN KENIREY
Entertainment Editor

The Cutting Edge

Cell is a group of musicians who have identified themselves as "a Soho band" who "subscribe to the indie rock aesthetic, whatever that is," although they have also been quick to distinguish themselves from others. Their songs set them apart with a dense, powerful sound in which guitar is the focal point. Although the primary thickening agent in this musical stew, the guitar is not completely unleashed, so that it is not domineering. There is a quality of restrained power on Slo-Blo, of tamed electricity bubbling just below the outer membrane of Cell's music.

Due to its musical density, Slo-Blo is probably best when heard in bite-size chunks. Wading through the whole CD at once can be a bit of a workout because the listener cannot tread lightly. The band's early punk and classic rock influences can be heard in Cell's uniquely appealing style, but they do not rip off old favorites by any means.

Although somewhat murky on the surface, Slo-Blo offers many interesting cuts and could almost be viewed as divisible into two parts. The first six songs adhere to a faster rhythm, with a greater intensity underlying them. The seventh track, "Everything Turns," is positioned appropriately since that is the turning point when the pace slows down. This song hints at the style of Blind Melon and utilizes vocals to a more substantial degree, as they are virtually absent from or downplayed in the other songs.

The two best songs offered on Slo-Blo are "Fall" and "Tundra." "Fall" has received some airplay on local radio stations and it is a strong first release for the band. The lyrics deal with the feelings of someone faced with difficult times. Jerry DiRienzo's scratchy voice is given little to work with, but it complements the soft guitar haze which overlays much of these tunes, especially the dreamy "Stratosphere" and simmering "Cross the River." The primary drawback of DiRienzo's vocals is that the lyrics are often unintelligible.

"Tundra" is excellent in its images. Lines such as "Maybe something cold settled in my mind/ Sleeping by the window, I lost track of time" are enveloped by dreamy music, creating sensual mosaics. "Tundra" is moodier than the other pieces, and its speed is maintained on "Bad Day" and "Hills."

Cell's current lineup — DiRienzo and Ian James on guitar and vocals, David Motamed on bass and Keith Nealy on drums — was solidified in January 1992. In two weekends they cranked out the demo for their debut album at Fastrack Studios in West Orange, N.J. Their recording method allowed the songs to retain a raw energy which shines through on Slo-Blo.

FRESH CUTS: Bone Club is a band who completed their third European tour this fall and have acquired a growing selection of followers. Bone Club's sound explodes in the ears like a musical Molotav cocktail. "Everything's on Fire" basically summarizes the unifying factor in their songs. The old adage "there's strength in numbers" is disproven by their EP, Beautiflu, since it only contains six songs but they incorporate the power of a flaming blowtorch.

"Arrive" is thrashy and enticing and Andrew Arashiba's vocals enchant every song. Arashiba and his brother Dacey, who plays guitar, are the driving lyrical forces of the band. The songwriting is choppy, although the brothers raise some interesting points, such as the idea of tragic pride in Greek plays mentioned in "Hubris."

Bone Club's EP moves steadily forward from the start. All the cuts are driven by a sound which evokes images of the approaching thunder of a storm rolling in. David Andler's heavy drums are accented by Pat Kallemeyn's sexy bass notes. The only somewhat slower offering on Beautiflu is the appropriately titled "Slo Mo" which features cymbal bursts dispersed throughout the background.

This is not the first release for this innovative band. Bone Club's initial CD was Bless This, but it was released on their own record label, Rocket Sound, and therefore was not widely heard in the United States. Bless This and Bone Club's live U.S. performances during summer 1992 and recent tour abroad have also brought the band favorable attention from critics. Although their sound has a hard edge, it is not too acidic to be enjoyed by average rock fans looking for a shot in the arm.

WDRE sweeps Cabarets

By CAROLYN POPPE
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Rock-radio listeners enthusiastically received WDRE, the New York-based radio station, when it began transmitting from Jenkintown at 103.9 FM in November. The station offered them a deviation from classic, album-oriented rock by playing a variety of modern and alternative rock tunes.

103.9 FM
WDRE

WDRE, now widely known, calls upon its listeners to come out and spread their enthusiasm. Last week the station initiated a series of WDRE nights at local clubs including the Chestnut Cabaret, 23 East Cabaret and the Tijuana Yacht Club. The station's disc jockeys hit these hot spots with "modern dance parties," which they throw every week.

On Wednesdays, WDRE's Barbara Grant hosts the event at Ardmore's 23 East. The DJ rocks the crowd with the best music from the '80s and '90s — everything from Blondie to Ministry. Their selections include groups like the Clash, Urban Dance Squad, Jane's Addiction, the Soup Dragons, Cracker, the Spin Doctors, the Violent Femmes and even the Beastie Boys. The night includes CD giveaways and a $7 "meal deal" offering complimentary drinks and food between 8 and 11 p.m.

Also on Wednesday nights, WDRE appears at the Tijuana Yacht Club, located on 2nd and South streets in Philly. DJ Mel Toxic hosts, spinning records and offering drink specials (bring your mugs!).

On Saturday nights, WDRE broadcasts live on the air from the Chestnut Cabaret. Admission is free from 8 to 10 p.m. and Mel Toxic pumps modern mixes from 9 p.m. to 2 a.m. Here the station prefers driving dance beats and groups like New Order, Siouxsee and Banshees and Depeche Mode.

The late-night Chestnut crowd is enormous and energetic, lending an atmosphere appropriate for those who love to dance. But for serious listeners of modern rock, 23 East provides a mellow, local scene where requests can be taken.

At each club, WDRE proves that the station and its followers "dare to be different." The musical alternative it provides is refreshing. And, hopefully, the new direction of '80s favorites and '90s rock that WDRE takes will draw a crowd.

Comic delivers jokes

By TIFFANY CHRISTENSEN
Staff Reporter

Set in the basement of a Chestnut Street building in downtown Philadelphia, The Comedy Works hosts comedians from the area for shows throughout the week. The comedy, and perhaps the dark and smoky atmosphere as well, attracts multitudes, including a particularly large crowd of singles, each week.

The three performances given Jan. 23, began with the routine of the master of ceremonies, Steve Thomas. Whatever humor may have been present in Thomas' act was obscured by its offensiveness. The routine was not only marked by an apparent lack of respect for women and sexuality in general, as evidenced by crude jokes about birth control, sexual devices and oral sex, but also played upon the assumption of an inherent animosity in all relationships between women and men. Overall, the routine was reminiscent of a poor Eddie Murphy imitation.

The show began to improve, however, as the second performer, Bill McCarthy took stage. The political tone of many of his jokes served as a nice change of pace. Particularly humorous were McCarthy's incorporation of recent events in Iraq into the familiar story of Dr. Seuss' Green Eggs and Ham, and his likening of Ross Perot to a human Pez dispenser.

The evening finally culminated with the performance of the headliner, Kevin Sullivan. Sullivan was, in fact, the highlight of the show as he provided musical accompaniment to his humor both vocally and through guitar music. The comical twists he added to a mix of variations of popular songs were well received by the audience.

Although the crowd is generally a bit older, The Comedy Works is open to those under 21, and provides, with the exception of some occasional vulgarity, a decent social atmosphere along with its high-rate entertainment.

Awards

the title song from his Dangerous album and went on to win the Favorite Pop Album as well as Favorite R&B Single for "Remember The Time." Additionally, he won the first ever International Artist award (in the future to be named in his honor) for outstanding worldwide success, popularity and generosity. With Jackson's famous friend, Elizabeth Taylor doing the presentations, AMA aired a tremendous tribute detailing his influence over the last two decades. In a touching acceptance he admitted that he was embarrassed. Hopefully, his latest triumph will help bring new life into his rapidly dying album (which has sold four million copies thus far).

Another tribute was given to concert promoter Bill Graham, organizer of such well-known events as LiveAid and the concert for Amnesty International.

The performances were, for the most part, enjoyable which is a testimony to the abilities of today's artists. Philadelphia group Boyz II Men took two awards: Favorite R&B Band and Favorite Pop Single for "End of The Road" (currently it holds the record for spending the most weeks, 13, at No. 1). They also sang a powerful rendition of the song that moved the audience.

In direct contrast, Bobby Brown offered an uninspired performance of his current song, "Get Away." For Brown it was a night of ups and downs. He did well as a cohost, and he won the award for Favorite R&B Male. However, during his acceptance he almost forgot to thank his new wife, Whitney Houston.

Wynonna Judd, without benefit of her mother, proved why country music is popular with her incredible performance of "She Is His Only Need." Speaking of country, Billy Ray Cyrus, winner of Favorite Country Single for "Achy Breaky Heart" and Top New Country Artist, also had a good performance.

The winner of Top Adult Contemporary Artist as well as Favorite Pop Male, Michael Bolton sang a few songs off his current Timeless: The Classics.

Metallica, a staple of the Favorite Heavy Metal Artist award, also performed strongly with their popular "Wherever I May Roam."

'Deep Space Nine' displays great potential

By GEORGE KAPLAN
Staff Reporter

Paramount Pictures unveiled the latest chapter in its ongoing "Star Trek" saga several weeks ago. "Star Trek: Deep Space Nine" ("DS9") is set on board a broken-down space station near a galactic wormhole (for those of you non-trekkers, a wormhole is a tunnel of sorts connecting different, far-reaching parts of the universe).

Paramount ensures popularity for this expensive new series by having it take place in the same time period as "Star Trek: The Next Generation" ("TNG"). Inevitable cast crossovers between the two shows will only add up to more success for this venerable saga dealing with mankind's hopeful dreams of the future.

In charge of the station is Commander Benjamin Sisko, played by Avery Brooks. Other leads include Bajoran First Officer Kira Nerys (Nana Visitor), shape-shifting Security Officer Odo (Rene Auberjonois) and Chief of Operations Miles O'Brien (Colm Meany) formerly of "TNG."

Paramount has a great stake in its latest venture. Extravagent special effects contributed to the $12 million pilot episode. Is "DS9" merely capitalizing on the proven name of "Star Trek" or is it a legitimate attempt at broadening the boundaries of this wondrous saga? For months now "DS9" has been touted as "action-packed" and "darker and grittier" than "TNG."

How does the show hold up? Well, for starters, "Star Trek" being gritty is like a Disney cartoon being terrifying. Up to a certain age level perhaps, but after that it requires a pretty strong suspension of belief. "DS9" is not like "Aliens," but that is fine since the strength of "Star Trek" has always been its characters. In this department, if the first few episodes are any indication, "DS9" beats "TNG" unequivocally.

For any story to be interesting there have to be many dimensions to and conflicts among its characters. One cannot feel for a character if one cannot relate to him or her as a real person. It is no great surprise, therefore, that the most successful characters on "TNG" are Picard, Data and Worf. They are the most flawed and are thus the most interesting on the show. Unfortunately, "TNG" dedicates to those particular characters only a few shows to really make them shine.

Non-trekkers ("Trekkers" is the current word used to describe those members of the population obsessed with "Star Trek") will probably need a quick briefing of the situation in "DS9" using laymen's terms. The space station, Deep Space Nine, overlooks the planet of Bajor. The Bajorans, a race of deeply proud and spiritual humanoids who look almost human, recently have broken free from the tyrannical grasp of the Cardasians, a warlike race who seeks to dominate other worlds.

The show is set on board a broken-down space station.

The United Federation of Planets ("Star Trek's" answer to the United Nations) has sent its military institution, Starfleet, to take control of the station. Starfleet's job ostensibly is to mediate between these warring races. In truth they are there to help the Bajorans on the road to recovery and in the process persuade them to join the Federation. The appearance of the wormhole has raised the stakes. Through it Bajor can trade with races from all over the universe. For them it offers a viable commercial resource. Starfleet now has an even greater reason to curtail Cardasian dominance of the region.

Life aboard the station offers equally rich opportunities for adventure. Being at the mouth of the wormhole, Deep Space Nine is inhabited by many different races including the Ferrengi. A cutthroat lot, the Ferrengi's greatest love lies in the acquisition of material wealth. Allowed to remain on the station, they have made life more interesting with their bars and casinos situated in the "Promenade." Conflict is plentiful as the different races with their different interests collide during each episode.

Even among the lead characters there is conflict. Commander Sisko of Starfleet carries emotional scars and his son, Jake, is uncomfortable in his new home. First Officer Kira, a former Bajoran terrorist, is distrustful of Starfleet. Odo, the shape-shifter from unknown origins, is arrogant and alienated. O'Brien and his wife must adjust with life vastly different from the Starship Enterprise. A recent medical school graduate, Dr. Julian Bashir is an overly excited and naive sort delighting in the thrills of "living on the edge." Science Officer Dax is a Trill, a long-lived species of slug-like creatures who live by inhabiting other bodies. Finally there is the Ferrengi bartender, Quark, disliked by Odo, who flaunts the law on many occasions.

"DS9" still has some way to go before it can produce stories to rival "TNG." TV shows, however, must be judged according to their potential, generated by effectiveness of the character design. In this respect, "DS9" could become one of the finest shows on television. It does justice to the name "Star Trek." May it live long and prosper.

Cats glide to success

By MOIRA DONAHUE
Staff Reporter

The Villanova women's swimming team placed third in the Rainbow Invitational in Honolulu, Hawaii, over break. While in Hawaii, 'Nova also swam in a dual meet against the University of Hawaii on Dec. 30. In this dual meet, the squad triumphed in a 114-87 win.

The team was required to return to the Villanova campus on Dec. 26, and it departed the following day for the Univeristy of Hawaii, where the team resided for the extent of the training trip. In addition to the two day Rainbow Invitational and the dual meet, 'Nova put in two practices a day as well as lifting weights.

"We swam faster than we expected to... We've been training really hard," said sophomore Tara Ryan.

Two excellent swims by sophomore Meaghan McCaffrey highlighted the two day meet for the Wildcats. She swam to victories in both the 50 and 100 yard freestyle events. She also won the 100 yard freestyle in 51.86 and the 50 yard event with a time of 23.96.

Junior teammate Sarah Dykstra placed second in the 50 yard freestyle with a time of 24.13. The third win for the Cats was the 200 yard freestyle relay, which was won in 1:37.14.

Junior Lisa Flood finished second in the 100 yard breaststroke in 1:04.30 and second in the 200 yard breaststroke in 2:20.23. Also finishing second for the Wildcats during the meet were freshman Tammy Kouser and Ryan. Kouser placed in the 100 yard backstroke, and Ryan scored in the 200 yard butterfly in 2:06.88. Freshman Eileen Rothenback swam to a third place finish in the 200 yard backstroke in 2:06.88.

The Rainbow Invitational was won by the University of Michigan (304 points), followed by Wisconsin (136) and third place was Villanova (123). Other teams competing in the 12 team meet included Iowa, Columbia, Illinois, Illinois State, Rice, Texas A & M, Hawaii and Hawaii Pacific.

After returning home, the team traveled to Princeton University for its final meet over the winter break. The Cats won seven of the 10 events in the course of their 123-63 victory. Both senior Mary Dowling and Rothenback were double event winners.

In the lead off leg of the 800 yard medley relay, Rothenback set a school record in the 200 yard backstroke, breaking her own record with the time of 2:02.89. Rothenback also won the 100 yard butterfly and the 400 yard individual medley in times of 58.86 and 4:28.13, respectively. Dowling captured the 200 and the 500 yard freestyle events in 1:56.75 and 5:02.23. In the 100 yard backstroke, Kouser won with the time of 58.55.

Quintana leads men's track

By LARRY LANZA
Staff Reporter

Sophomores Louie Quintana and Kyle Watson combined with junior Mike Going to lead the Villanova men's track team to a 1-2-3 sweep in the mile, highlighting a strong team showing in the Cornell Relays on Jan. 23.

In winning a total of seven events, the Wildcats showed their depth in the middle distances where they won all five races between 800 and 5000 meters.

Among the Wildcat winners, the fastest performance came from Quintana, whose first-place mile time of 4:06 marked a personal best and provisionally qualified him for the NCAA Championships. Watson joined Quintana in running a personal best by finishing in 4:09 while Going finished in 4:12.

Quintana and Going later returned to lead the Cats to a victory in the 4x800 meter relay in a time of 7:44. Their respective times of 1:52 and 1:55 were the fastest splits on a team that also included freshman Kevin Christiani and sophomore Ken Nason.

Nason's victory with the relay team was his second win of the meet. Earlier he had won the 1000 meter in 2:28, two seconds ahead of sophomore teammate David Seung, (second). Three seconds behind Seung, Wildcat junior Mike Shemonsky finished fourth.

Another one-two Wildcat finish came in the 800 meter, where senior Brad Sumner and Freshman Scott Whiteman beat the rest of the field with respective times of 1:51 and 1:53. Sumner later ran the fastest leg (:49.6) on 'Nova's second-place 4x400 meter relay, which also included Kyle Watson and sophomores Andreas Von Scheele and Chuck Silvester. Earlier, Von Scheele had taken second in the 500 meter in 1:06.

Whiteman meanwhile returned to run the fastest leg (:51.5) of a fifth place relay that included David Seung, junior Lou Kahl and freshman Todd Tressler.

Two more Villanova victories came in the two longest track events, as sophomore Dave Hartman won the 3000 meter in 8:27 and freshman Matt Lamourie won the 5000 meter in 15:16.

Villanova's only other victory came in the 35 lb. weight throw, where graduate student Greg Mirecki threw 50-feet-4-inches.

Also in the field events, David Cook, Steve Blias and Jim Sivco combined to take second, fourth and sixth in the high jump. Elsewhere in the meet, Cook placed second in the long jump (22-feet-1.5 inches) and fourth in the 55 meter high hurdles (7.79).

have broken many world records in this event but in the past couple years we have fallen a bit to maybe fourth in the nation or something. We're back! These four athletes have brought us back to the top. It's the best time in the country so far."

This year is one of those years where we have as good a chance as we have ever had to try to win this thing.
Head Coach Marty Stern

The success of the Wildcats has created much confidence and enthusiasm for the rest of the season. These early ECAC and NCAA qualifying times say a great deal about the potential for greatness in this team.

Even without the efforts of long distance specialist Zajac, whose minor injuries kept her away from the competition, 'Nova appears to be headed in the right direction. With so many great runners on this team, it is difficult to see any of the members settling for anything less than the highest crown.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Joseph Galea

This week the Villanovan and the Wildcat Club recognize freshman Joseph Galea of the ice hockey team. Galea notched a goal against Skidmore College enroute to a 5-2 Ice Cat victory on Jan. 23, and scored his second goal of the week in a 2-2 rematch against Skidmore the following day. This performance earned him ECAC South player of the week honors, and raised his season rally to seven goals, eight assists and 15 points. The hockey team now stands at 4-8-3 overall and 3-1-1- in league action.

Swimmers sink Syracuse

By ERIC WARREN
Staff Reporter

The Villanova men's swim team continues to swim strongly against the competition as they entered the middle of their season. Wins over Big East foe Syracuse and Northern Illinois attest to the fact that the Wildcats are staying healthy in preparation for the Big East championships at the end of February.

"The Harvard Invitation was a good meet to measure where we stood at that time," said coach Chuck Morton. The fact that we beat Syracuse showed that the amount of work we put in on our training sessions is really paying off.

The meet took place on Dec. 3-5 and saw senior tri-captain Ed Paradise destroy the field in the 100 breastroke with a time of 57.77, which is currently the fastest time this year in the Big East. Paradise also clinched a second place in the 200 Breast with a time of 2:06.69. Fellow tri-captain Scott Fraser added a second place finish in the 100 Fly (61.17) and freshman Tim Jogan was second to the wall in the 200 Free with a personal best of 1:42.63.

The team then traveled to Honolulu, Hawaii, to train and compete in the Rainbow Invitational, as well as dual meets against the University of Hawaii and Northern Illinois.

We put in a lot of intense training, two workouts a day, only a few hours here and there in the sun ," said Paradise. "We fared well in Hawaii because the team as a whole trains really well."

In the dual meet against Hawaii, the Wildcats were defeated by the score of 134-71 as the Rainbow Warriors were quick to defend their home pond. Villanova swept the 1,000 Free as Pat Donahue, Tim Jogan and Glen Langhane crushed the field with times of 9:46.58, 9:48.99 and 10:09.32, respectively. Junior Chris DesMarais was the only other winner with a time of 1:a53.59 in the 200 Backstroke.

'Nova defeated Northern Illinois by the score of 103-84 in a meet which saw a Wildcat first to the wall in almost every event. Freshman standout Tom Forrest won the 100 Free in 499.62. Sophomore Rob Drumm destroyed the field in both the 200 and 500 Free with times of 1:47.03 and 4:42.49. Donahue again edged out Jogan in the 1000 Free and DesMarais notched wins in the 200 BAck and 200 IM. Junior Glen Langhans prevailed in the 200 Fly and yet another strong freshman, Michael Schwanki won the 200 Breast.

The Villanova men finished fifth out of 13 teams in the Rainbow Invitational. The breastrokers were 'Nova's strongest contingent as Schwanki and Paradise finished fourth and sixth with respective times of 2:09.82 and 2:10.01 in the 200. Paradise also added a fifth place in the 100 Breast with a time of 59.68 and the Medley and Freestyle Relay teams also fared well.

The Wildcats were defeated 133-88 in a dual meet at Penn State last weekend. Strong wins by Brett Loper in the 200 Back (1:56.71), Langhans in the 200 Fly (1:55.53) and Paradise in the 200 Breast (2:10.15) highlighted the meet. Diver Matt McGarry also fared well with second places in both the one and three meter boards.

Villanova battles long-time Big East powerhouse Pittsburgh this weekend at duPont pool.

It's going to be a great meet. We match up perfectly, and I think with our depth and our medley relays, we'll beat them for the first time in a long time," said Paradise.

Diving begins at 11 a.m. followed by swimming at noon.

Ice Cats improve in ECAC South

By JONATHAN PASSMAN
Staff Reporter

The Ice Cats got a little bit of everything in their return from winter break, losing a 6-4 shootout to West Chester at the Spectrum Jan. 21, but returning home to beat Skidmore 5-2 Saturday and tying the home rematch 2-2 on Jan. 24. Villanova moves to 4-8-3 overall, 3-1-1 in ECAC South Play.

"It was just so frustrating, watching our shots hit the posts, and [West Chester's] goalie made some excellent saves," explained sophomore Ryan Stattenfield. West Chester, though a club team, had a lot of luck and a hot goalie, two important ingredients to a hockey victory. Junior John Demers had two goals, and Keith Curran and Stattenfield each had two assists.

The Ice Cats looked to return to their winning ways last Saturday against conference leader Skidmore. Taking a 2-1 lead into the first intermission and a 3-2 lead into the third period, the defense clamped down and the offense netted two insurance goals. Five players tallied for the Ice Cats and freshman Dan Nadeau made 37 saves.

Villanova and Skidmore battled in a defensive struggle the next morning. Villanova struck first, taking a 1-0 lead into the first intermission, but Skidmore scored in the second period to tie the game at one. The teams traded goals in the third period to seal the tie. Freshman Michael Kelly had 37 saves, while Stattenfield and Joseph Galea had a goal each. Galea's two goals earned him ECAC South Player of the Week honors.

"The Skidmore games were more physical, and we made less mental mistakes on defense," said Stattenfield.

The Ice Cats now own the best winning percentage in the ECAC South at .750, though they are fourth in the point tally with seven. Considering that only the top team moves on to the playoffs, they appear to be a strong contender to advance. They face a talented Iona squad tomorrow, to whom they have already lost twice this year. The opening faceoff is at 4:45 p.m. at Havertown Skatium.

"If we continue to play like we did against Skidmore, we definitely have a shot at the top," said Stattenfield.

'Nova wins 2

The lead seesawed throughout the first half. An outside jumper by Connell with 7:11 to go in the half put the Cats ahead for good, but they held a slim 29-27 lead going into halftime. Hanging on to a 43-41 lead with seven minutes left in the game, the Cats were sparked to their 8-0 charge with a field goal scored by Dillon under heavy traffic. Walker finished the surge with a pair of foul shots and a baseline jumper, and Syracuse was unable to overcome the 10-point deficit.

> Michele [Thorton] and Nikki [Benedix] are our top scorers, but as far as I'm concerned, every player on our team that gets in the game is capable of having a double-figure game.
> Head Coach Harry Perretta

Benedix led the offensive effort with 13 points, followed by Thornton with 12. Walker and Connell also reached double digits, with 10 each. Dillon lead the Cats with eight 'bounds.

"Michele [10.7 p.p.g.] and Nikki [14.2 p.p.g.] are our two top scorers, but as far as I'm concerned, every player on our team that gets in the game is capable of having a double-figure game," said Perretta at the end of the game. "It doesn't matter who we play, it matters how we play, so we need to become consistent. If we do that, we have the chance to win some games.

Women's Big East Review

By TODD LESKANIC
Staff Reporter

1. Connecticut (6-2, 11-4)

The UConn women continued their winning ways by knocking off Seton Hall and Pitt this past week. The two victories propelled the Huskies into possession of first place in the Big East. Leading the way was Big East Player of the Week Rebecca Lobo. Lobo, a sophomore center, recorded double-doubles in both contests and added 12 blocks. Lobo is now second in UConn history with 89 blocks. The Huskies will play our own Cats and Georgetown this coming week.

2. Georgetown (5-2, 11-4)

The Hoyas rebounded from a loss to Pitt last week to knock off Providence and Seton Hall by scores of 105-76 and 66-62, respectively. In the Hoyas bashing of the Friars, they had 22 steals and knocked down eight three-pointers. Kris Witfill leads the Hoyas in scoring with 19 p.p.g. and a .511 field goal percentage. Center Leni Wilson is currently third in the Big East averaging 10.5 rebounds. The Hoyas will play at St. John's and against UConn this week.

3. Miami (5-2, 10-4)

The Lady Canes started the week in fine fashion by defeating the Orangewomen at the Carrier dome and then beating our Wildcats at home. Miami ended the week by losing to St. John's by six and dropping out of first place. Holly Rilinger leads the Canes in scoring with 15.9 p.p.g. and has also knocked down 39 percent of her treys to this point. Center Vicki Plowden leads the Big East in rebounding, averaging 11.3 per game.

4. Pitt (5-2, 10-5)

The Panthers posted a 1-1 record for this past week, beating Boston College 69-64 and losing to UConn 73-52. The loss dropped the Panthers into a second place tie with Miami. Jonna Huemrich is averaging 19.0 p.p.g. and is shooting at a 56 percent clip from the field. She also averages 8.9 r.p.g.

5. St. John's (3-4, 8-6)

The Express won two key Big East games to stay in contention. They beat Syracuse and then upset Miami on its home floor. The Express is currently 8-6, 3-4 in the Big East. They face key must-win games this week against Georgetown and Pitt. Pam Odom currently leads The Express in scoring averaging 17.1 p.p.g. and shooting at a 50 percent clip from the floor.

6. Providence (3-4, 8-7)

The Friars took two on the chin last week, losing to UConn and Georgetown, two conference rivals. The Friars dropped to 8-7, 3-4 in Big East play and are in danger of falling out of contention. Key games for the Friars this week are against Syracuse and Seton Hall.

7. VILLANOVA

8. Seton Hall (3-5, 9-7)

The Pirates fell to 3-5 in Big East play by losing to Connecticut and Georgetown. The Pirates lack leadership as they possess no Big East leaders in scoring, and center Dawn Johnson, who averages 6.8 rebounds, is only 11th in rebounding.

9. Boston College (2-5, 8-7)

Losses to Pitt and Providence, both on the road, have pushed the Eagles down to ninth place in the Big East. Games against Syracuse and Miami this week could determine if B.C. is going anywhere. Despite this, Sarah Behn leads the Big East in scoring, averaging 27.0 p.p.g. and shooting at a 52 percent clip.

10. Syracuse Orangewomen (1-6, 3-12)

This powerhouse of a team dropped two to St. John's and our own Cats. They are now a knee-slapping 3-12, 1-6 in the Big East and face almost certain losses to B.C. and Miami this week.

Men's Big East Review

By BOB TRAVISANO
Assistant Sports Editor

The Big East is having its problems. Teams that were supposed to win, for the most part are not winning and teams that were not supposed to win are doing so. This league makes all the basketball gurus around the country look like know-nothings at this point in the season.

The only existing sure bet is Seton Hall. The Pirates were predicted to be in first place at the start of the season and have thus far lived up to their top billing. Surprisingly, St. John's is tied for first in the Big East with their rookie coach and no-name roster. The only constant is the bottom dwellers: Villanova and Miami.

1. Seton Hall(5-1) (15-3)

For most of the season, the Hall has been playing close to the top of its game. This past week they beat Villanova and lost closely to North Carolina. The UNC game was a barometer of how well the Pirates could play against highly ranked national competition. In the loss, the play of Luther Wright was extremely good. The big man held Eric Montross to 13 points, eight of which came in the last few minutes of the game, while scoring 14 points and grabbing 11 boards himself. He seems to be maturing into a big league center.

Arturus Karnishova spaced the Hall with 15 points. Their downfall was a 23 to 9 turnover ratio in favor of N.C. The next game was Wednesday night versus Georgetown.

2. St. John's (5-1) (10-4)

No one expected them to be here, so why are they? They lost Malik Sealy and the biggest name on the team now is something like Lamonte Middleton. The reason is balanced offense and team play. This week, in the Redmen's 78-71 defeat of Syracuse, four players were in double figures. Shawnelle Scott and Derek Brown had 17 each and Middletown and David Cain chipped in 15 and 13 points respectively.

3. Pittsburgh (6-2) (13-2)

The Panthers were part of a strange mixup versus Miami this week. With 18 seconds left, the Hurricanes huddled too long during a timeout, which allowed Pitt's Jerry McCullough to score an uncontested tying layup. McCullough then stole the ball and gave it to Antoine Jones for the game-winning layup. Pitt's next game is against the Orange.

4. Georgetown (4-2) (11-3)

Last Saturday the Hoyas were beaten unmercifully by UNLV, 96-80. UNLV got 40 points from J.R. Rider, which prompted Hoyas' Coach John Thompson to say, "Rider is as good an offensive player as we've played against in my career. He was as comfortable posting up as he was shooting the three." That is some lofty praise considering that Thompson's teams have played against the likes of Jordan, Worthy and Mullin.

5. Connecticut (4-4) (9-5)

Can there be a Big East spoiler already? Miami struck swiftly and powerfully in a 80-65 defeat of UConn. Connecticut figured on plowing its way through the Big East but has hit several stumbling blocks. In the loss, sophomore sensation Donyell Marshall scored 21 points and Scott Burrell pitched in for 12 more.

6. Boston College (4-3) (10-5)

B.C. continued its quest for conference leadership with a 71-61 beating of co-frontrunner St. John's. Howard Eisley led the Eagles with 18 points, all in the second half. B.C. drained nine straight free throws to ice the victory. Last Saturday, the Eagles also beat a lackluster Villanova squad.

7. Syracuse (2-5) (10-5)

The Orange dropped their last game to St. John's, 78-71. Conrad McRae had 19 points and 10 rebounds for the loser. "I know we are capable of winning a lot of the games that we have lost. The season isn't halfway done yet," said McRae.

8. Miami (3-6) (5-10)

Miami has proven to be a bit tougher than it was touted to be. Earlier in the season they defeated an unsuspecting Georgetown team. Tuesday night they beat the Huskies and almost beat Pitt, if it were not for a bungled time-out call. In the UConn game, the 'Canes got a career high 21 points and 12 rebounds from center Constantin Popa. Freshman Steve Edwards added 18.

9. Providence (1-6) (7-7)

Providence does not have much to cheer about this season. One of its only conference victories was a 77-66 drubbing of Big East door mat Villanova. In a balanced scoring effort, the Friars got 13 from Michael Brown, 12 from Dickey Simpkins and 21 from Tony Turner. Providence, like 'Nova, is still looking for the right cast of characters to put on the floor.

Balanced attack leads Cats

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Assistant Sports Editor

Mired in a lose-a-game/win-a-game mold for eight consecutive contests, the Villanova women's hoops team came up with a welcome pair of back-to-back wins. The Cats claimed a 59-49 victory over Pennsylvania Jan. 25, one day after beating Syracuse 60-50, raising their overall record to 7-8 (3-4 Big East).

Perhaps more encouraging than the back-to-back victories was the emergence of a more balanced Villanova scoring attack.

"To win, you must have team scoring," said Head Coach Harry Perretta. "Sheri Walker has come alive in two games, Jen Snell is coming alive, and Karen Connell is starting to score. We Still want Nikki [Benedix] and Michele [Thornton] to score, but it's better when everybody scores."

The Wildcats squared off against the Quakers in the first half of a co-ed City Series doubleheader at the historic Palestra. 'Nova jumped out to a quick 10-0 lead, and would never trail at any point. By the game's end, six Wildcats had scored between eight and 10 points.

Snell, a redshirt freshman, scored eight of her 10 points in the first half, but they proved to be devastating to the overmatched UPenn team. Twice near the middle of the first half, Penn narrowed 'Nova's advantage to two points. Both times, Snell retaliated, scoring on a long-range jumper from the left corner and an uncontested layup. When a Katina Banks three-pointer brought Penn within three, Snell quieted the Quakers with another long jump shot, and the Quakers would never come that close again.

Snell, Walker and Benedix pitched in 10 points a piece for the Cats. Thornton had nine points, and Connell and Denise Dillon each had eight, rounding out 'Nova's most balanced offensive effort to date. Center Jennifer Maga led the Villanova squad with seven rebounds.

Big East bottom-dweller Syracuse brought its 1-5 league record into the duPont Pavillion on Jan. 26. Though the Orangewomen kept things close in the first half, an 8-0 run by the Wildcats late in the game put a safe distance between themselves and the visitors.

"I thought we played good team defense, said Perretta. "When you play Syracuse, you must play good team defense, because they penetrate well and they have a good inside player. You've got to try to take away passing lanes."

Villanova -vs- Miami duPont Pavilion

TV: Ch. 57 Radio: 89.1 WXVU

The Villanova men's basketball team will gladly welcome the Hurricanes to duPont Pavilion on Saturday night. As we all know, the Cats have hit the skids. After a convincing Big East opening win at Syracuse on Jan. 2, the Cats found themselves in seven consecutive crunch-time games. They lost all seven.

The Miami Hurricanes, coached by Leonard Hamilton, are currently 4-10, 2-5 (8th place) in the Big East. Their Midnight Madness practice took a turn for the worst when highly-touted freshman point guard Steve Frazier suffered a season ending injury. Sophomore Mike Gardner (5.8 a.p.g., 2.7 s.p.g.) has assumed the point duties and will battle Jonathan Haynes tomorrow night.

Hamilton brought in a top 10 recruiting class for 92-93. The star of the class, 6-foot-6 guard Steve Edwards, has lived up to his billing. Edwards, a two-time Florida Mr. Basketball, is seventh in the conference in scoring (15.6) and first in "3's" made per game.

Coach Hamilton's problem is after Edwards. The 'Canes are extremely erratic. Only senior guard/forward Trevor Burton has played steady ball all season. Look for Hammie Ward to play power forward, and 7-foot-3 Constantin Popa (Big East block per game leader) to clog the lane. His development is a key measuring stick for Miami's program. Also, sophomore Ochiel Swaby, Anthony and Pat Lawrence and William Davis will log time off the bench.

The 'Canes' 4-10 mark can be explained by its Big East worst team scoring average and poor shooting. Miami is also being out-rebounded by its opponents. Miami and 'Nova share a similar problem in that they lack a definitive go-to guy. Edwards is rapidly assuming that role for the 'Canes.

Lance Miller has not gotten it done this season for the Cats. In addition, all of Miami's conference losses have been by less than 10 points.

Tomorrow night's game is an obvious must win for 'Nova. A loss at home would extend the losing streak and embarrass the Villanova community. Pride is on the line for the Villanova basketball team. It must control the boards (the Cats are 1-7 in games it has been out-rebounded) and limit Edwards. Should the game come to crunch time, 'Nova must gain its composure and limit fundamental errors and turnovers.

On to the seniors. Villanova has four seniors and not one crunch time victory in its last seven games. Their desire and total effort put forth into the program in their careers has to be questioned. Has this class given 100 percent? One must wonder when time after time, poor shot opportunities, turnovers, fundamental errors and a seemingly delinquent level of effort is displayed on the court.

Our senior class has not done the job. They can say all they want about having something to prove, but when the games were on the line, the Cats fell short. Let us hope their love for the game, respect for the Lappas staff, and sense of Villanova pride show up on Saturday night.

Tomorrow night is a gut check for this basketball team. Will they take the bull by its horns, or will they put their heads in the sand?

Cats claim cellar with 77-66 loss

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Sports Editor

For fans of Wildcat basketball, it has been a heartbreaking and gut-wrenching four weeks. 'Nova (5-9, 1-7) has not won a game since it posted a 79-61 victory at Syracuse on Jan. 2. Sure the Cats have come close in every contest since then, but the bottom line is that Villanova currently owns a seven-game losing streak, its longest since the 1973-74 season. That year, 'Nova was also guided by a new head coach, Rollie Massamino.

The Cats suffered a 77-66 defeat at Providence in their most recent outing on Jan. 25. The Friars took full advantage of 'Nova's biggest weakness — rebounding. Providence muscled its way to a 43-26 edge on the boards, which translated into many second chance opportunities for the Friars but few for the Cats. Villanova is now 1-7 when it is outrebounded by its opponents.

"We're caught between a rock and a hard place," said Head Coach Steve Lappas after the game. "If you go with the big guys, we don't get any steals. You don't get any defensive pressure, they get easy baskets. If you go small, we don't rebound well. We're searching."

It is difficult to explain why the Cats cannot pull out a victory late in a close game, but there are several reasons why the team seems to always find itself trailing near the end of a contest. First, 'Nova has been employing what amounts to a seven man rotation of seniors Lance Miller, Arron Bain, James Bryson and Calvin Byrd as well as Jonathan Haynes, Anthony Pelle and Kerry Kittles. Recently, freshmen Eric Eberz and Roscoe Harris have also been given playing time at the expense of Byrd. While other teams can go nine or 10 deep, 'Nova does not have this luxury. As a result, opponents often have fresher legs late in the game. Also, 'Nova has had frequent foul trouble. Bain in particular has often been forced to leave early in the first half because of committing two or three fouls. Every game the Cats seem to have at least one player in early foul trouble.

During the streak, 'Nova has been unable to put together both a good offensive and defensive performance. On nights when the Cats defend well, they have a poor shooting game. When the offense clicks, the defense falters.

"We seem to find new and exciting ways to lose each time out," Lappas said. "It's like we can't get it all together in one night. We got to put it together. We get the inside game going one night, the outside game another."

The team's four seniors have to take much of the blame for this inconsistency. 'Nova has failed to execute at "crunch time" when the game is on the line. The Cats have coupled poor shooting with ill-timed turnovers and defensive lapses. The experienced upperclassmen should make sure a good shot is taken in this situation. The team has also been subject to mental lapses. In the Boston College game, the Eagles successfully pushed the ball upcourt after 'Nova scores, catching the Cats off guard for open shots. On offense, 'Nova players often stand around lackadaisically and make lazy passes. Granted they are playing with a new motion offense, but this is the end of January.

But the Cats' greatest Achilles' heel (other than rebounding) may be the foul line. One of the nation's best free throw shooting clubs last season, Villanova is only shooting about 68 percent from the line while its Big East rivals are hitting about 73 percent of their tries and getting many more attempts. The Cats also have inexcusably allowed their opponents to rebound their missed free throws late in the game. This proved costly against Seton Hall, Providence and especially B.C.

Right now the Cats need to step up their intensity. They seem to be able to play tight defense in spurts, but are unable to maintain this effort. Pelle has been a defensive force in the middle, but he cannot defend the hoop by himself.

The Cats thrived earlier in the season when Haynes was able to penetrate and break down the defense. But over the past few games the Cats have grown passive on offense and have not been getting to the line. Against Seton Hall, the Pirates did not commit their seventh team foul of the second half until there were 12 seconds left in overtime. In the B.C. game, 'Nova shot only two free throws in the first half. In the physical Big East, this will not win you many games.

The Cats have demonstrated they can play with any team in the conference. But good teams find ways to win the close games, and thus far, 'Nova has found ways to lose them. The Cats were only a break or two away from winning any of the past seven games. But they cannot dwell on the past. It is gut-check time. 'Nova must get back to the basics, play fundamentally sound basketball, and the streak will end.

"We have to make a stop, grab a rebound, anything to put us over the hump," said Miller. "We can't wait for it to happen. We've got to make it happen."

If they do not, it will become an agonizing season for both the Cats and their fans.

Notes:
The Boston College home game brought Rasheed Wallace on his official visit to Villanova. In addition, letter of intent signee Alvin Williams and 6-foot-11 center Jason Lawson were behind the 'Nova bench. This trio, in addition to the freshman class and Haynes, could lead to a very bright future for the program. To the V.U. student crowd during the B.C. game: great enthusiasm guys, but that big guy walking by at the half was not Rasheed. It was LAWSON. OOps. I guess I'll forgive you if he commits.

Women continue to excel

By SEAN KELLY
Staff Reporter

For years, the Villanova women's indoor track team has hovered around the top ranking in the nation. It is an organization with outstanding tradition and pride that will most likely be among the top contenders each year for the national crown.

Of course, the 1993 version of Wildcat excellence in indoor track falls nothing short of its predecessors. This is a team of proven winners and competitors.

Having placed third for the fifth time in the last six years, this year's 'Nova indoor track squad is more than ready to make its strongest run yet at the NCAA title.

"This year is one of those years where we have as good a chance as we have ever had to try to win this thing," according to the highly successful mentor of the Wildcats, Coach Marty Stern.

Although they have been ranked as one of the top teams in the nation for several years, they have yet to win the indoor trophy.

On paper, the word Villanova alone is enough to intimidate the competition. However, it is the individual accomplishments of many of the 'Nova runners that proves to be the most dazzling. Familiar names from the cross country course, like seniors Nnenna Lynch, Cheri Goddard, Carole Zajac and Renie Ruopoli, are all continuing to add on to their incredible achievements.

Somewhat less recognizable names, though tremendous performers on the track, are seniors Abby Hunte and Chris Gentile, junior Emer Molloy and sophomores Tosha Woodward and Becky Spies. A number of freshmen have already proven their importance to the team including Megan Flowers, Cathalina Staye, Nikki Shaw, Jenn Rhines and Stacy Robinson.

The meets thus far have been more or less attempts to just get people qualified for the ECAC's in early March and more importantly, the National Championships. Only three real qualifying meets into this young indoor season, the Wildcats already have 29 qualifying times for the ECAC's in Syracuse as well as seven NCAA Provisional Standard Qualifiers. The provisional standards qualifiers are those individuals whose times are among the top 16 in the nation.

"It is really hard to be in the top 16 in the entire country," said Stern.

The Father Diamond Memorial Invitational at George Mason University in early January was the setting for the Wildcats' first 10 qualifying individuals for the ECAC Indoor Championships in addition to Goddard's NCAA Provisional Standard time of 9:35.29 in the 3000 meter run. Flower's 9:45.64 was also fast enough for the ECAC's. The 800 meter race produced three ECAC qualifiers, including Hunte who crossed the line first in addition to Ruopoli and Shaw. Lynch, Staye, Woodward, Gentile and Denise Colella all had qualifying marks in their respective events.

The team captured four NCAA Provisional Standard times at the Florida Invitational. Lynch's time in the one mile run of 4:49.63 was an NCAA qualifier as was her effort with Gentile, Goddard and Molloy in the 3200 meter relay squad with a time of 8:52.40. Ruopoli and Woodard both raced to NCAA Provisional times with their races in the 800 meter run.

Perhaps the biggest news of the season thus far arrived at the Cornell Invitational Jan. 23. This meet witnessed the astounding race of Molloy, Woodward, Ruopoli and Hunte, whose time in the 4x800 meter relay of 8:42.86 was more than enough to capture an automatic entrance to the NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships.

"Our history in that event is just legendary," said Stern. "We

Hoops looks to find positives

By ED WASIELEWSKI

Out with the old, in with the new.

This is the prominent theme for the 1992-93 Villanova Wildcats. Out with Rollie Massimino and a slowdown, half-court offense. In with Steve Lappas and a more up-tempo offense. Out with one of the toughest schedules in the country. In with creampuffs like Columbia and Hofstra. Out with a disappointing senior class. In with Jonathan Haynes and a fine recruiting class.

It was supposed to be a positive, refreshing change for a basketball program mired in mediocrity. It was supposed to send the Cats onward to the NCAAs. at least, these were some of the expectations.

Unfortunately for Villanova fans, the results have not changed. As evidence by the current seven game losing streak, an expected quick turnaround has not happened. Instead, the Cats have hit rock bottom, owning sole possession of the Big East cellar. Unfamilar territory for a program that has long been considered "middle of the pack." No longer.

But despite the team's apparent weaknesses — shoddy rebounding, poor senior leadership late in games, lack of a reliable offensive scheme — the '92-'93 Cats have played well in sports, especially in the first half of conference games.

In addition, among the highlights of this season is the development of some of the younger players, particularly Kerry Kittles, Haynes and Anthony Pelle.

This trio has amassed considerable playing time, taking minutes away from veterans such as forward Calvin Byrd. In the case of rookies Haynes and Kittles, these guards represent the starting backcourt of the future.

Haynes, a 6-foot-3 transfer from Temple, will have two seasons of eligibility left after this season. After sitting out what amounts to nearly two years, Haynes has displayed signs of regaining the form that made him a high school all-America out of Germantown Friends. Haynes can take the ball to the hoop, but has also shown nice range from the outside.

Haynes' backcourt partner is the versatile Kittles, a 6-foot-5 athlete capable of hitting the three-pointer or driving the baseline. His steady, oftentimes spectacular play has earned noticeable attention.

Besides Haynes and Kittles, the 7-foot Pelle has made tremendous strides and has been rewarded with substantial minutes. Unlike last season, Pelle can now be counted on for steady play, especially on defense where improved timing and better footwork has made the junior a shotblocking force in the Big East.

On offense, Pelle has displayed nice moves to the hoop and a noticeably softer touch around the rim. With increased playing time, Pelle's offensive production will improve with confidence.

If this trio can continue to play steady, the Cats will remain competitive in every Big East contest.

Core Humanities seminars stress reading, writing skills

By KATHLEEN COONEY
Assistant News Editor

The new core humanities seminars implemented into the curriculum of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences are writing and reading intensive classes for current University freshmen.

The core steering committee recommends a requirement of four writing intensive courses and four writing enriched courses for liberal arts freshmen. A writing intensive course includes 40 written pages plus revisions and a writing enriched course includes 10 written pages with revisions.

The goal of the seminars is to improve and develop the writing abilities of students in their major field of study as well as in their other classes, said English professor and writing center Director Dr. Karyn Hollis.

Hollis said the faculty has shown a great interest in these courses and has increased the assigned writing in their classes.

Hollis has distributed 500 articles about teaching writing to 20 academic departments on campus.

Currently 56 seminar sections instructed by approximately 40 professors from various departments are taught on campus, said Dr. Earl D. Bader, professor of English and theater.

Although Bader believes the seminar classes are difficult, he feels they are extremely beneficial and worthwhile for students. "Learning to write needs to happen in places other than the classroom," said Bader.

> Learning to write needs to happen in places other than the classroom.
> Earl D. Bader, professor of English and theater

Students are required to attend cultural events on campus and at Border's bookstore. Students are also required to visit the writing center for additional assistance, said Bader.

The writing center plays a major role in the writing that goes on in the seminars, said Hollis. The writing center has had 1,141 appointments this fall as compared to last spring's total of 641, said Hollis.

Peer tutors are well-trained in guiding and assisting students with the writing of papers. At the writing center, students receive non-intimidating instruction about anything from organizing their writing to sharpening their grammar and spelling skills, added Hollis.

The core humanities seminars put great emphasis on revision, said Hollis. Professors ask students to revise their work because few people do their best in "one-shot fashion," Hollis added. The revision process allows students to find their own mistakes and improve the quality of their writing. Writing center tutors can also give students feedback and advice concerning their revisions, added Hollis.

Because the seminar program is still in its beginning phases, all of the problems have not yet been worked out, said Bader. Because the courses are so diverse, the steering committee is currently discussing whether or not the assigned course reading should be more uniform, added Bader.

Sexual harassment seldom reported on campus

"When people who have been sexually harassed are questioned about the experience they often describe it as humiliating and belittling."

By ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWSKI
News Editor

"Harassment is an issue of power, whether it be racial, sexual or ethnic," said Dr. Barbara Wall, director of the Center for Peace and Justice Education. Most harassment takes place when people are not conscious that their jokes, actions or language is offensive to others, said Wall.

In a sexual harassment policy adopted by the University, sexual harassment is defined as, " ... unwelcome advances, requests for sexual favors and other physical, visual or verbal behavior of a sexual nature where:

"Submission to such conduct is made either explicitly or implicitly a term or condition of an individual's employment or education.

"Submission to or rejection of such conduct by an individual is used as the basis for employment or academic decisions affecting the individual; or

"Such conduct has the purpose or effect of unreasonable interfacing with an individual's academic or professional performance or creating an intimidating, hostile or demeaning employment or educational environment."

Such harassment is seldom reported, said Wall. "When people who have been sexually harassed are questioned about the experience they often describe it as humiliating and belittling. They talk about being made to feel inferior as if they didn't have any power to change the situation," added Wall.

"No one has approached me in recent years about sexual harassment," said Dr. Edward L. Collymore of the Office of Multicultural Affairs. Collymore is listed in the official University policy as one person who may be notified in the event that someone is sexually harassed.

"If it does exist and it is happening, students may be afraid to confront the instructor because they fear the instructor will give them a bad grade," added Collymore.

There may be a good deal of harassment occurring, but people are not willing to come forward and report it, said Wall.

"A boss of mine suggested that I wear short skirts as much as possible," said one student. "I did realize that it was sexual harassment, but I don't think I would ever do anything about it," she added.

"A woman at work claimed that men in another department had sexually harassed her. It was kind of kept secret. I don't even know if a formal complaint was filed," said another student.

Some groups on campus such as the maintenance department have held workshops on sexual harassment, said Wall. "Maintenance is way ahead of other departments in addressing this issue," Wall added.

"All of us have the ability to harass others and probably have at one time or another. If we are a campus that purports to respect all people, then it is imperative that we look at our behavior to see if it is offensive to others."

Sibling Weekend activities geared for junior Wildcats

By LAUREN WURST
Staff Reporter

Approximately 300 siblings will participate in the ninth annual Sibling Weekend, "Celebrating 150 Years! Junior Wildcats, Come Join the Cheers ... Sibling Weekend 1993," beginning today.

"The goal of Sibling Weekend is to allow the younger generation to gain a positive attitude toward college," said Student Programming Council's (SPC) Festivals Coordinator Danielle Lesko.

The entire weekend is geared for young children, said Lesko. After registration at 5:30 p.m. today, siblings may attend a carnival in the Belle Air Terrace of Connelly Center. The Cinema of Connelly Center will air the movie "The Mighty Ducks" at 6:30 and 9:30 p.m.

Events scheduled for Saturday include trips to the New Jersey State Aquarium in Camden, Sportland America in Langhorne, Pa., and the Spectrum for the Villanova vs. St. Joe's men's basketball game.

The Cinema will air "Beauty and the Beast" at 1 and 3 p.m. The evening will conclude with a buffet dinner in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center and a dance sponsored by the Association of Commuting Students (ACS) in Dougherty Hall's Day Hop.

Sunday's events include a Mass, brunch in the resident cafeterias and re-showings of "Beauty and the Beast" at 1 and 3 p.m.

"Each trip and activity planned is aimed at appealing to the numerous interests of every sibling," said Lesko. Other activities include a demonstration from the Karate Club and a performance by a balloonist, Lesko added.

"The only time a sibling is exposed to the University is when the student is dropped off and there is nothing for them to do. It [Sibling Weekend] is like a Homecoming Weekend for little kids," said Student Activities Advisor John Ogle.

Preparation for Sibling Weekend began in October when Beth Geiman and Mary Quigley were chosen as the event's co-chairs. The registration, entertainment, publicity, mass and meals committees planned all of the weekend's festivities.

"Sibling Weekend is unique because it is targeted specifically at children and no profit is made from the weekend's events," said Lesko.

United States military enforces UN resolutions

By JANE PAPACCIO
Assistant News Editor

More than two years after the outbreak of Operation Desert Storm, U.S. forces are still in Saudi Arabia enforcing UN resolutions. The United States and its' Allies need to enforce the UN resolutions concerning Iraq, said Dr. David M. Barrett, of the political science department and expert on national security policy.

Some disagree with U.S. intervention in the entire Iraq situation and would rather see the government spend the taxpayers' money on domestic issues. But many are sure that U.S. involvement in the Persian Gulf is critical to the survival of our economy, said Dr. Craig Wheeland of the political science department.

"Because the Middle East in general has a major natural resource — oil — the political stability of the region is important to our well being economically," said Wheeland. Although domestic problems are pressing, the U.S. needs to continue to exercise its leadership in international commerce, added Wheeland.

"I think the U.S. should play a major role in forming the international response to Saddam Hussein," said Wheeland.

That is not to say that the U.S. should try to police the world; that should be left to the UN, said Barrett.

"The UN is not as strong as some of the founders envisioned. It will become more effective in dealing with international crisis as we move more and more beyond the Cold War," said Barrett. The UN is not respected by the Iraqi government and some governments accuse the U.S. of using the UN as a tool to expand its own power, he added.

> The UN is not respected by the Iraqi government, and some governments accuse the United States of using the UN as a tool to expand its own power.
> David Barrett, Ph.D., professor of Political Science

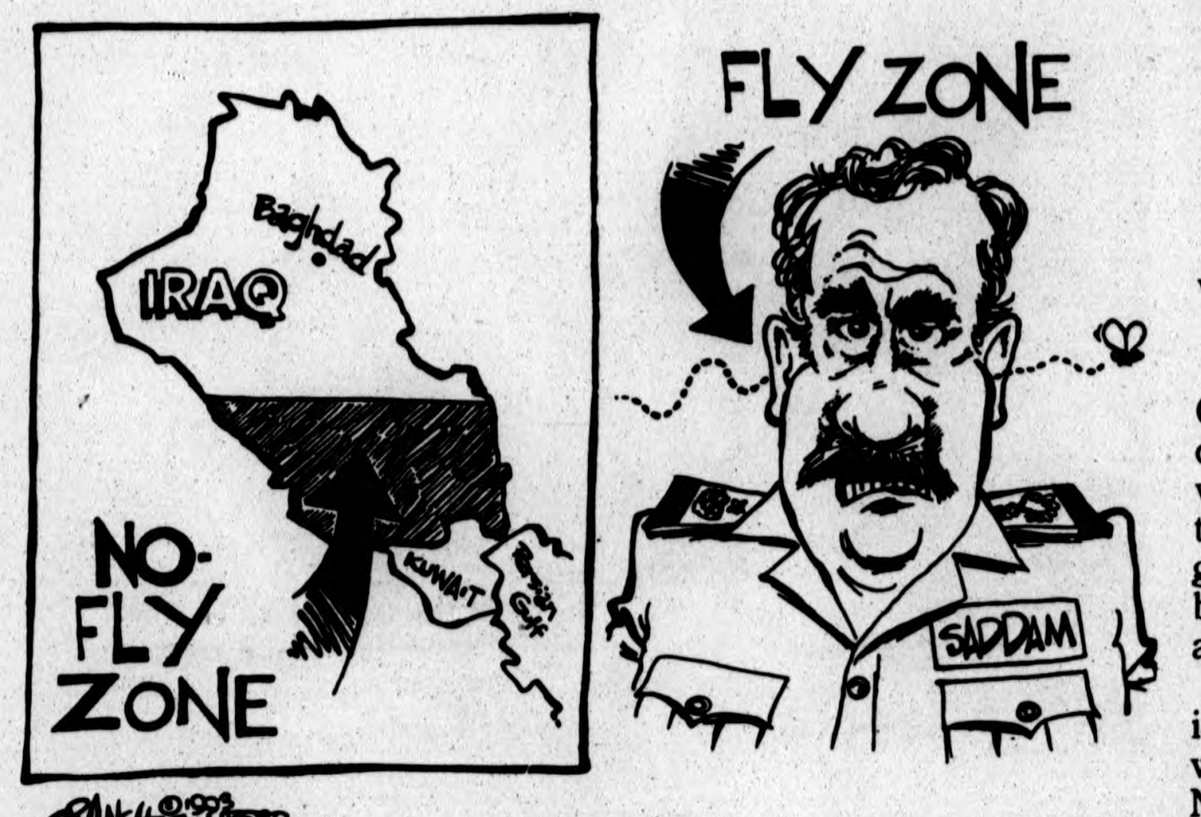
It is increasingly important that the U.S. stay active in the international scene, said Barrett. "It is very unrealistic to even think about making the U.S. an isolationist nation, as was the case in the 1930s, because the world is a dangerous place," said Barrett. The U.S. has a role to play in the world, added Wheeland.

With the inauguration of a new president, analysts wonder how Hussein will react towards the new administration, said Wheeland. "The Clinton administration ... will continue to apply pressure on Iraq and Saddam Hussein in particular. This administration wants to de-personalize the conflict, but that doesn't mean that they don't want to resolve the present problems," added Wheeland.

The one certainty is that the new administration will take an active role in forcing Iraq to follow the resolutions set down by the UN, Barrett said.

"If the U.S. resolves to remove Saddam Hussein from power and do so, that does not mean the new leadership will be any different. Regardless of who's in charge, Iraq must work with other nations," added Wheeland.

Hussein and his government are dangerous, and must be watched, added Barrett.



Human rights groups urge state boycott

By JOHN WILLIAMS
College Press Service

Although a controversial anti-gay rights measure in Colorado is in legal limbo, gay and lesbian rights groups are urging people, including vacationing college students, to stay away from the Rocky Mountain state.

Amendment Two, approved as a referendum in November's general election, has caused a ruckus with human rights groups and well-known personalities who are pushing a boycott against Colorado until the measure is repealed.

Actress/singer Barbra Streisand caused a flap before Christmas by urging fellow Hollywood movers and shakers not to go to Aspen to show disapproval of the measure.

Ski resorts across the state are saying that business is booming this year with record amounts of snow — and tourists — in the state. And officials with Colorado for Family Values, the group that supported the measure, said they are confident that the measure will be upheld by the court system.

Amendment Two which was to have gone into effect Jan. 15, would have barred any law that protects gays and lesbians from discrimination. It voided such laws in Denver, Aspen and Boulder. Residents in those cities voted against the measure, but voters in Denver's suburbs, Colorado Springs and most rural areas overwhelmingly supported it.

A district court judge in Denver blocked Colorado from enforcing the measure until he can hear arguments on whether the law violates federal or state law. Until there is a final decision, however, boycott supporters are urging people to stay away from Colorado.

"If students are going to be here, there's a lot they can do to support our community. It's important for people to make a choice that's comfortable for them," said Kat Morgan, director of the Gay and Lesbian Community Center of Colorado, which is based in Denver. "If they come, I hope they come with the consciousness that they are coming to the only state that supports this."

It is estimated that Colorado coffers have lost millions of dollars to canceled conventions, conferences and other events because of the boycott. Several city commissions nationwide, including Atlanta and Los Angeles, have voted not to allow employees to attend professional meetings of the state.

The National Association of College Stores (NACS), a trade organization that represents college and university bookstores nationwide, has scheduled the annual meeting in Denver in April.

Because of contracts and other financial commitments, the association decided to go ahead with its meeting in Colorado. However, NACS directors sent a strongly worded letter to Denver Mayor Wellington Webb. "In our opinion, this is a step backward in the cause of freedom and equality for all, and a step toward prejudice which already plagues this country," the letter states.

Executive director Garis Distelhorst and Elizabeth Goulding, director of meetings and expositions, said in the letter that until the amendment is finally overturned, NACS will not bring any

Washington, D.C.

Former United States Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall died Jan. 24 of heart failure. He was 84 years old. Marshall came to public attention as an intelligent young lawyer and later became the first African-American appointed to the Supreme Court.

Marshall lay in state last week in the Supreme Court Building with funeral services held in the National Cathedral. He was buried Jan. 29 in Arlington National Cemetery in Virginia.

Judge Jerry J. Hatter Jr. of the United States District Court for the Central District of California handed down a ruling to void the ban on the enlistment of homosexuals in the military. The implementation of this ruling includes President Clinton's proposal to order the Pentagon to refrain from asking recruits their sexual preference and to stop the discharge of homosexuals, effective immediately.

Meanwhile, the President would delay, for six months, an executive order which would permanently lift the ban.

Clinton has been met with opposition from Congress, most notably from Senator Sam Nunn, D., Ga., chair of the Armed Services Committee, as well as Republicans and members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Harrisburg, Pa.

Pennsylvania Gov. Robert Casey's administration announced opposition to providing state aid for 11 local colleges. The state Senate, however, has voted to continue $3.75 million in aid for this school year.

The bill, sponsored by Sen. Vincent J. Fumo, D., Phila., would provide state aid for private colleges and universities, with the largest sum going to the University of Pennsylvania.

Other schools that would receive aid include Hahnemann University, Thomas Jefferson University, the Medical College of Pennsylvania, the Philadelphia College of Osteopathy, Drexel University, Delaware Valley College, the University of the Arts, the Philadelphia College of Textiles/Science, the Pennsylvania College of Optometry and the Pennsylvania College of Podiatric Medicine.

Burke discusses the adverse effects of pornography

Tracey Burke discusses sex, pornography and violence Jan. 28.

By KATE SZUMANSKI
News Editor

The Democratic Socialists of America, Students Against Sexual Stereotyping and the Honors Program sponsored a slide presentation and discussion entitled "Pornography, Violence and the Sex Industry" Jan. 28 in Tolentine 215.

Guest speaker Tracey Burke, a 1989 University graduate who has worked extensively with battered women and women involved in prostitution, narrated the film and led the discussion afterward.

"Pornography is directly involved in crimes committed against women, attributes to the oppression of all women and is fundamental to understanding why women are abused," said Burke.

Violence is commonplace in our society, said Burke. According to F.B.I. crime reports, a woman is beaten every 18 seconds and is raped every three minutes. Nine out of 10 women are sexually harassed in their lifetimes, added Burke.

Violence is a common theme in pornography; the battery and abuse of women are glamorized, reinforcing the myth that women crave force as part of sexual satisfaction, Burke said. "Genital torture, penetration, bondage and

Task Force revamps Homecoming

By KATHRYN HOLUB
Staff Reporter

The Villanova Homecoming Task Force officially convened Jan. 31 to examine Homecoming Weekend as it currently exists and to recommend changes for future Homecoming Weekends.

"The Homecoming Task Force consists of 15 representatives from every area of the Univesity that participate in Homecoming Weekend," said Dr. Helen Lafferty, University vice president and chair of the task force. Representatives from administrative offices, student life, alumni and development offices, athletics, public relations and facilities management are among the participants in the task force.

Student Government President Ken Batchelor is also a task force member. In addition, the current presidents of the Interfraternity Council and Panhellenic Council will work with the newly-elected presidents when they take their seats on the task force. The Rev. Arthur Chappell, O.S.A., represents university faculty members.

Each member of the task force will submit to Lafferty recommendations for change. Lafferty will compile the recommendations and give them back to the task force.

"The group will not meet again until March or April," said Lucy Gorski, director of Student Activities and member of the task force.

The next Homecoming at Villanova could be different from those in the past, said Gorski.

Men's rape awareness groups discuss sexism, prevention

By KAREN NEUSTADT
College Press Service

With statistics showing that one in four college women will be raped, more male students are taking part in rape prevention than ever before.

Joseph Weinberg, an education consultant who gives seminars about rape awareness, said he is encouraged by the trend of men forming groups to battle rape on their campuses.

"There is a lot of denial about the problem and how vast it is," he said. "But some men have friends who have been raped, and it brings it close to home."

Men's rape awareness groups have formed at the University of New Mexico (UNM), Michigan State University, the University of Wisconsin, the University of Florida and the University of Washington, among other schools.

However, at the University of Virginia, an entirely different kind of group has emerged. Some male students who call themselves The Southern Society need only a secret phone call to confront an alleged campus rapist, according to a story in the Cavalier Daily.

Founded in spring 1992, the closely guarded society claims to have 20 carefully screened members who approach an alleged rapist, first by leaving notes and then eventually in a face-to-face confrontation.

"They let the person know that they are keeping an eye on them. The message is: 'What you did did not go unnoticed, and you won't get away with it,' said Marybeth White, a senior who wrote the news story.

White said she was told by the founder of the society, who insisted on anonymity, that the only way to contact them is by running an ad in the Cavalier Daily requesting that the "S.S. Society" call a particular phone number at a particular time.

The founder, who said his sister was raped, told White that he hoped that the society could assist women who are afraid to press charges.

Though the philosophy of the group is unclear, the founder assured White that they are non-violent and try to follow the wishes of the victim..

The group, which is working with a local rape crisis center in Alberquerque, has held a public forum on sexual harassment for faculty and students that featured open discussions on the subject.

"Sexism tells men to be a certain way. To be dominant and without feeling, and this does as much damage to men as to women," said Mark Mathey, a senior studying antropology at UNM,

Grant awarded to fund Passages

By TIFFANY CHRISTENSEN
Staff Reporter

The International Student Office was awarded a grant in Dec. for the publication of Passages, a journal which relates the experiences of international students at the University and those who have traveled or studied in foreign countries, said Debbie Kwiterovich-Hoover, co-adviser of Passages.

The grant was awarded by the National Association of Foreign Student Affairs (NAFSA), the Association of International Educators and the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs of the U.S. Information Agency. The grant will contribute to University funding of the journal through the International Students Office, the International Studies Office, the Honors Program and the English department, among others.

The idea of an international publication at the University was proposed in the fall by Amy Lilly, a senior who had studied abroad in Italy and is the current editor of Passages. The journal will provide graduate students, undergraduate students and faculty members, an opportunity to share their foreign experiences through writing, art and photography.

Kwiterovich-Hoover, along with co-advisor Steve McWilliams, said they expect the journal to be published annually, and hope the first issue will be available in March.

"The main goal of the project is to heighten the campus community's awareness of international exchange and its relevance and presence at Villanova. We hope that people will realize the valuable perspectives to be gained from traveling and sharing," said Kwiterovish-Hoover.

Anyone with an international experience to share is encouraged to submit to Passages, located in the International Student Office, Corr Hall 102.

Sesquicentennial Minutes

SESQUICENTENNIAL MINUTES
BY DAVID R. CONTOSTA, Ph.D.
and
REV. DENNIS J. GALLAGHER, O.S.A., Ph.D.

Places of divine worship have played a central role in Villanova's mission and have been important landmarks on campus from the very beginning.

The first of these was the so-called parlor oratory (or small private chapel) in the Belle-Air mansion, which the Augustinians purchased in 1842 from the estate of John Rudolph (1760-1838). Rudolph was a wealthy Catholic merchant who had acquired the Belle-Air property as a country seat in the early nineteenth century. Since there was no Catholic church in the area, Rudolph installed an altar in the southwest parlor of his home where visiting priests could say mass during infrequent but much welcomed visits to the estate.

After the Augustinians moved into the Belle-Air property during the summer of 1843, the parlor oratory became the first Villanova chapel. It was here the Rev. John P. O'Dwyer (1816-1850), the first college president, placed the community under the special patronage of Saint Thomas of Villanova. (Saint Thomas was a distinguished Augustinian writer, educator and sixteenth-century Spanish Bishop). It was thus in the old Rudolph chapel that Villanova received its name. The Augustinian priests and brothers, students and neighboring Catholics all used this chapel for worship in the following months.

The next year, 1844, the Augustinians built a new chapel, which stood slightly northwest of the present Saint Rita's Hall. Actually, the chapel was a multi-purpose structure, serving as a parish church on Sundays, a study hall and classroom during the week and a dormitory for students. For this reason, it came to be known as the "Study Hall Chapel." This structure stood until 1902, when it was demolished as part of a massive building program.

Long before the Study Hall Chapel disappeared, it was superseded by a larger facility, later dubbed the "Gymnasium Chapel." This peculiar name arose from the fact that the building was originally constructed, in 1869, as the college gymnasium, and was located immediately west of today's Alumni Hall. In 1872, just three years after the completion, the gymnasium was converted into a church to house the growing neighborhood parish. It remained a parish church and college chapel for the next fifteen years.

In 1882 authorities decided to build a splendid Gothic Revival Church, which would serve the college, parish and Augustinian community. Constructed between 1883 and 1887, its most impressive features were its soaring twin spires, which dominate the landscape more than a century later. Once the new church opened, the gymnasium Chapel was reconverted as an athletic facility. It came down in 1899 to make way for a new St. Thomas of Villanova monastery and college building (now Tolentine Hall).

Program Gives Women Boost

By College Press Service

SELINSGROVE, PA — Women learn the ins and outs of corporate life long before they graduate from Susquehanna University.

Every female freshman majoring in business is assigned a woman mentor who is a graduate of Susquehanna and successful in business. The program offers women the opportunity to learn skills and have contacts that the male students have access to, according to officials who designed the program.

"The aim is to get women involved with mentoring early enough so that it can be useful in their career planning," said Mary Cianni, assistant professor of management in the university's School of Business.

Twenty-one women are currently participating in the program, which requires that they meet with their mentors twice a year from their freshman year to their senior year.

Cianni said the program also teaches women how to use social opportunities to network.

Higher Enrollment Expected

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The U.S. Department of Education estimates that 16.1 million students will be enrolled in colleges and universities by 2003, up 14 percent from 14.2 million students in 1991.

The projections are included in the department's Projections of Education Statistics to 2003, which includes estimates on elementary, secondary and postsecondary education. It is the first report on educational statistics that reflects 1990 Census population estimates and projections.

The findings include projections that high school graduates will number 2.5 million for the next two years, which will be the smallest graduating classes since 1964-65.

By 2003, the number is expected to rise 20 percent to 3 million. Teacher salaries are expected to rise 20 percent between now and 2003, and per student spending should rise 24 percent, the report said.

Family Sues For $8 Million

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — The family of a Florida State University student who died after diving into a trapeze safety net used by the school's Flying High Circus has accused the school of negligence and is seeking $8 million in damages.

Stacey Lynne Stokes, 20, of Fort Myers, died Oct. 31 at a Tallahassee hospital. According to police reports, Stokes, who was not a member of the circus, scaled two fences posted with no trespassing signs and climbed a platform before jumping into the net, which collapsed.

Human rights activists stress Colorado State boycott

more meetings to Colorado.

It is hard to gauge whether college students are supportive of the boycott, and whether they'll go to Colorado for spring break. However, Stuart Himmelfarb, vice president of The Roper College Track, a New York-based marketing organization, said that students may honor the boycott.

His group did a campus survey in 1992 of 1,200 full-time undergraduates on 100 campuses nationwide. The survey consisted of a list of 15 issues or problems that might affect campus life, and about 66 percent of the respondents said they believed intolerance against the homosexual community was a problem on campus.

"If you want to draw a conclusion about this boycott, students may be one of the groups that would be receptive to the boycott," Himmelfarb said. "I wouldn't be surprised if they found other places to go skiing. They can pick a lot of places to go. It's not like they own a home in the area or something."

Amendment Two was sponsored by Colorado for Family Values, a self-described nonpartisan grassroots organization based in Colorado Springs. Spokesman Will Perkins said the group got 85,000 registered voters to sign a petition to get the amendment on the ballot. "Throughout the nation homosexuals do have equal rights. We're all for that," he said. "They want to be considered a protected class, and Coloradoans don't think that's fair. The laws are all in place for all U.S. citizens. We're not equating morality or immorality with this issue."

Perkins said he would encourage college students to come to Colorado to ski on their spring break. He said that in the short term, the boycott will hurt the state, but in the long term, more people will want to visit Colorado.

"It is clearly a method to inflict financial punishment on the whole state, even on the people who are our opposition," he said. "But boycotts are a double-edged sword. It's blackmail. It's a warning to other states considering the same ballot that this will happen. But, because of the boycott, several state ballots will have the same issue in 1994."

Perkins, who owns a Chrysler dealership, said his business has been boycotted. However, business is as usual because people who support his cause are buying Chryslers from his dealership.

He said there has not been an increase of hate crimes against gays and lesbians in Colorado since the measure passed.

Morgan, with the Gay and Lesbian Community Center of Colorado, said that the center is receiving many more calls from gays and lesbians reporting verbal or physical abuse. While some people are now willing to report hate crimes, there appears to be an increase of new crimes reported, she said.

"When a law like Amendment Two is passed, it sends a message to people that it's OK to bash, that we're not human," Morgan said.

> Throughout the nation homosexuals do have equal rights. We're all for that. They want to be considered a protected class and Coloradoans don't think that's fair.
> Will Perkins, spokesman for Colorado for Family Values

The center, which receives crime reports statewide, was averaging 12 calls a month until November, when the measure passed. In December, the center got 35 reports of intimidation or violence against gays and lesbians, and in November, there were 45 reports. The violence ranged from harassment to aggravated assault.

Morgan said that if college and university students do come to Colorado for spring break, "I would tell them to be careful, but I would tell them to be careful anywhere."

There has been controversy among people who support gay and lesbian rights concerning the boycott. While a boycott sends out a powerful message, especially for a popular tourist state such as Colorado, it also hurts individuals and businesses that are supportive of gays and lesbians.

The Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Community Alliance at the University of Colorado at Boulder is divided in its support of the boycott, said Elissa Whitlow, a leader of the group. Residents of Boulder, where the university is located, voted against the amendment.

"Support for the boycott varies from area to area. There's Boulder and Denver and the metro area, which are supportive in general of the gay community, plus most of the ski areas," Whitlow said. "Then, you have Colorado Springs, the eastern and western slope areas and other homes to homophobia."

Although the alliance doesn't have an official stand on the boycott, Whitlow said she reluctantly favors one. "Lots of people don't give a damn and come ski in Aspen," she said. "We're going to be hurt by this thing no matter what. You can't hate without repercussions. The only way we can get attention is through their pocketbooks, unfortunately."

Pornography effects

restraint are portrayed as sexual liberation for women," said Burke. Women are dehumanized and portrayed as things, making it easier for men to mistreat them, Burke added.

"Men benefit from the existence of pornography because it reinforces myths of male superiority. We live in a society where women are treated unequally, earning 61 cents to a man's dollar," said Burke. "The foundation of pornography is a power imbalance," Burke said. Pornography exploits disempowered people for consumer sexual enjoyment, Burke said.

> Pornography is directly involved in crimes committed against women, attributes to the oppression of all women and is fundamental in understanding why women are abused.
> Tracey Burke, class of 1989

"Our culture shapes most of our sexual beliefs," said Burke, adding that, "Pornography helps perpetuate these beliefs." Women are now speaking out, explaining how pornography affects their lives, added Burke.

"Pornography is a $8 billion a year industry, selling adult sexual entertainment that can be purchased practically anywhere. Pornography is more pervasive and accessible than ever before," said Burke. The combined selling of Playboy and Penthouse magazine far outweighs that of both Newsweek and Time magazines, added Burke.

> Men benefit from the existence of pornography because it reinforces myths of male superiority.
> Tracey Burke

"Pornography is not about images and fantasies but about inflicting pain and humiliation on real women," said Burke. Women may not be physically coerced into pornography but are told their bodies are their most marketable possession, added Burke.

Reactions of the audience to the film presentation included fear, shock and anger. Students noted that pornography is "prevalent and widespread at Villanova." One student remarked that "the sexually repressive environment of our society breeds pornography because a desire is there." Another student noted that "a woman is portrayed as much as a commodity as a beer is."

While at Villanova, Burke was a member of Students Against Sexual Stereotyping and protested Playboy magazine's recruitment of women for their Big East issue in the fall of 1988. Burke was a member of the Jesuit Volunteer Corps and attended the University of Minnesota.

Prejudice in military has worn many faces

President Bill Clinton has been in office for only 18 days, and already he is facing his first battle. So much for ending the gridlock in Washington, D.C.

Recent debate has focused on whether or not homosexuals should be allowed to serve in the military. Clinton supports overturning the ban on homosexuals in the armed forces. In a statement last week, the President disclosed a tentative agreement with Congress granting homosexuals the equivalent of a six-month "stay" while the battle is fought between the Capitol and the White House. Also, as a part of the agreement, the questioning of a person's sexual orientation on the enlistment application has been forbidden.

Years ago, a similar controversy erupted over whether or not African-Americans should be permitted to serve in the military. Those who opposed the measure argued that African-Americans would ruin the armed forces. To date, our military machine has not been at all adversely affected by this integration. Indeed, African-Americans have brought to the military different perspectives from which we all have benefitted and a diversity that is more representative of this "melting pot" we call America.

Like the prejudice that tried to prevent African-Americans from military service, so has homophobia permeated today's arguments opposing homosexuals in the military. This debate is not about the morality of homosexuality but instead about conduct. If people prescribe to military conduct and perform their jobs, they should not be dismissed on account of who they choose to love.

The ban on homosexuals in the military should be lifted. There is no basis for arguing that homosexuals disrupt the operation of the military, as evidenced in the many homosexuals who are forced to quietly serve in the armed forces today. Hopefully, Congress will begin to focus their attention on changing issues and attitudes that do interfere with military operation, such as the Tailhook scandal, instead of simply trying to deny people their basic constitutional rights.

Extend cold hands to warm homeless hearts

The cold is never really an important issue for us until it somehow interferes with our lives, as it did earlier this week. As the campus endured a bitter cold snap, complaints and curses abounded. Some suggested that classes be canceled. Others bemoaned runny noses and numb fingers and toes. And everyone had a few choice words to grumble about winter.

But take a moment to calculate how seldom during the day we are forced to endure the cold. The short treks between buildings may seem torturous, but we can be certain that the chill will wear off once we reach shelter.

Now consider the situation faced by the homeless. With nothing to protect them from sub-zero temperatures and icy winds, the weather is more than a mere annoyance; it can be fatal. While we decide how many layers to don for a five minute walk across campus, Center City police officers search Philadelphia for those who have died or will need to be hospitalized after a night of exposure to the elements.

Warmer weather might satisfy student gripes, but the problems facing the homeless remain, too severe to be dispelled by the rising temperatures.

Through a variety of programs offered by the Campus Ministry Office and the Villanova Committee for the Homeless of Philadelphia, we can take this opportunity to [illegible] on our own experience of discomfort [illegible] the misery facing the homeless. [illegible]

Diversity includes all minorities

To the Editor:

I am a sophomore minority on campus and I would like to express my disappointment with one of the workshops held on Jan. 29 in honor of Martin Luther King Jr. When I saw a workshop titled "Interracial Friendships," I immediately wanted to attend.

Being a minority, living in a predominantly white community and attending a predominantly white university, I have been involved with many interracial friendships throughout most of my life. And because of this, I felt that I could readily participate and quite possibly help educate fellow Villanovans about this issue at this workshop. But soon after entering the workshop, I became a non-existent, unimportant, unnoticed being, sitting smack in the middle, third row from the stage.

When R. Shamsid-Deen, with the aid of P. Michal-Johnson, started to speak and explained that she had done some research dealing with interracial friendships, I naturally assumed she would be addressing all the races, at least the different races at Villanova. It is my understanding that interracial does not involve just black and white relationships but stands for relationships between all ethnic groups.

Instead of addressing all the races, she focused and geared all her questioning and comments toward black and white friendships. I think the words Asian, Hispanic and Jewish were used once by Shamsid-Deen. And because the whole conversation revolved around black and white issues, I felt completely isolated and excluded from every topic that was brought up. As the workshop progressed, I felt ignored, and it angered me that this woman completely misused the word "interracial."

I am a Villanovan and I am a part of this community. I am of a different race than my friends and for me to sit in that room, as she addressed only black and white friendships, infuriated me because I am neither black nor white. She needed to address all the races in order for the title of her workshop to be truthful. Or she could have titled her workshop "Black/White Friendships," because that's the only information she had. For her to use the title she did was misleading and untruthful.

I would also like to say that blacks are not the onlv minorities on campus, and I am sick of being ignored. I believe that other minorities at Villanova deserve as much credit and acknowledgement as the blacks when it deals with this campus and its diversity. Diversity includes all of us, not just blacks and whites.

Martin Luther King Jr., was a great man and loved all people. He did not just stand for black and white harmony but he was killed because he stood for ethnic acceptance and unity. I have been isolated several times on campus because of my ethnic background and the last thing I needed was to be discarded and ignored in a workshop titled "Interracial Friendships."

This workshop, held in honor of Martin Luther King Jr. who stood for ethnic harmony, did not serve its purpose. My ethnic group, along with the many other ethnic groups present on campus, was not touched upon or even acknowledged. Villanova is not just black and white. I am here, too.

Rock the Villanova vote in upcoming student election

To the Editor:

For most of us, this past November was the first time that we were able to have a say in the direction our country was heading. Making us a part of that decision was important to some people, who continually reminded us to go out and "Rock the Vote." Well, the time is soon approaching when it will once again be important for all of us to get out there and vote. As the Student Government elections are heading our way, I would like to take this time to explain some of the details of the procedure.

Soon, you may find yourself bombarded by people asking you to sign petitions. Fear not, you are not bound to this person. Candidates for both the president and student senatorial positions must go out and recruit fellow students to nominate them for the position they are seeking. In order to be nominated, one must obtain a required amount of signatures. You are allowed to sign more than one candidate's position, regardless of whether they are running for the same position in Student Government (the more the candidates the merrier the race).

Senatorial candidates must receive signatures only by those students in their college. On the other hand, the presidential candidates can obtain signatures from all colleges. By signing the petitions you are simply allowing the candidate to run for office. Your signature does not necessarily mean that you will vote for the candidate, you may not even agree with the candidate's ideas or positions on certain issues.

In addition, in this way the students have the opportunity to meet candidates and become informed of the election process. So I encourage you not only to sign fellow students' petitions but when the time comes to "Rock the Vote" on March 22, make sure that you are a part of it.

What the world needs now is a good look at past mistakes

By SAM SHABBAN

Last week, the week of Jan. 29, the Villanovan featured a number of articles advertising Cultural Awareness on the Villanova campus. Unfortunately the true message these articles conveyed was one of shortsightedness and gross cultural UNawareness.

I was first struck by the front-page headline "Martin Luther King Jr. Day observed on campus." What the article and the misleading title failed to indicate was that classes were also observed on the same day. I am sincerely interested in finding out how it might have been possible for someone like myself, who has classes running from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. to attend the Freedom School lectures which ran concurrently between 9:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Terry Nance suggested that people bring "just an open mind," perhaps a possible solution to the aforementioned dilemma. Unluckily, I have not yet learned to separate mind from body, a skill seemingly required at Villanova where cultural activities seem to be consistently contemporaneous with scheduled classes. We need to ask ourselves whether our school is truly observing Martin Luther King Jr. Day if and when it offers activities that very few people can attend. Are we sincerely interested, or are we bumbling through formalities?

This brings me to an even more revolting observation. I found repeated mention of the Nazi Holocaust in our paper, within articles and advertisements that identified films and lectures discussing this important historical event. However, and this is a true indicator of the level of "awareness and sensitivity" within our community, I didn't find one mention of the holocaust taking place today in Bosnia, Herzegovina.

Not in any of the News Briefs, the Features, the Commentaries or any other section of the Villanovan was there an indication of the Villanova community's sincere revulsion with mass extermination of human life taking place today. There is a sense of self-centered hypocrisy in speaking against a former disaster in human history while at the same time failing to correct or even speak out against a similar situation occurring in the immediate now. But then again this blindness is not only endemic to the Villanova population.

This is not the time to be intellectualizing about "ultimate questions," not when people are being murdered by the thousands for no reason at all other than their ethnicity.

In Germany last week, people took to the streets protesting Adolph Hitler's rise to power, chanting the slogan "Never Again!" I hope someone was able to recollect their senses after hearing this and write a letter to Germany explaining that this is indeed happening again and very close, south of their borders.

Thirty thousand women have been raped by Serbian forces, and these are old figures. Mothers were forced to witness the rape of their daughters, while in other cases children screamed as soldiers raped their mothers. Their lives have been shattered forever; it will take generations for their wounds to heal, if they survive.

This systematic extermination of a people has been going on now for over a year and a half. For those unsure, I implore you to pick up Time's Aug. 17, 1992, issue and just look at the cover. When you see the emaciated skeletal figures standing behind the barbed wire, realize that this is only one frame of a million barbarisms that have invaded the consciousness of the Bosnian people. Yet, Bosnia seems to be missing from the general Villanova vocabulary.

Hundreds of thousands of Bosnians have been massacred by the Serbian troops, many shot at point blank range in front of their families. And the survivors live a life of torture, scurrying like animals searching for food, hiding from bombings and shellings, watching their homes crumble, their country destroyed and their people extinguished, on a daily basis for over a year.

"Serbian forces sweep into towns and villages across Bosnia, snatch innocent Muslim Slavs from their homes and haul them off to makeshift camps, factories, warehouses and football stadiums ... A witness reported that many bodies were burned after Serbian guards had stripped their valuables and pulled gold fillings from their teeth." And world powers, including our president Mr. Clinton who, on the eve of his inauguration, said "... ethnic cleansing cannot stand," still need time to think about discussing whether steps should be taken or not.

And our country, the United States of America, the only superpower in the world, for better or for worse, is more concerned with having Iraq comply to U.N. resolutions restricting its flight patterns, than seeing an end to the holocaust taking place today in former Yugoslavia. We need to straighten out our priorities.

I would like to ask Catherine Graham how "students at Villanova University [could] find the Spring 1993 Cultural Film Series' 'ultimate questions' like: Is there meaning in human life? Why be just in an unjust world? [and] Why do good people suffer? approprite at all when concentration camp revival is going on in former Yugoslavia?"

And I pose the same question to participating lecturers like Pierre Sauvage, who is a survivor of the Holocaust, and who can understand better than any of us the Bosnian torture.

This is not the time to be intellectualizing about "ultimate questions," not when people are being murdered by the thousands for no reason at all other than their ethnicity. This is the time to exercise our democratic rights, asking our complacent State Department to act immediately and stop the genocide. We are not so free of troubles and worries that we can sit back and philosophize in abstract about what is dreadfully real for other people in dire need of our assistance. Every extra word means less action and more delay at a cost no one can afford: the dear lives of innocent human beings.

Once again, I question and challenge the sincerity of our community's concerns. Is our specialty empty rhetoric or unfeigned action? If it is the latter, then let's do something about the massacre of the innocent in south-eastern Europe. Write to President Clinton and the U.N. foreign affairs committee urging them to act now, before it's too late.

True oppression does not shelter

By TIY SMITH

This is in response to the victimization article by Mat Toenniessen in the Jan. 29 issue of the Villanovan. In his commentary, he asserted that everyone in America wants to be a member of an "oppressed" group so that they will not have to take responsibility for their own actions. Fearing that some readers would accuse him of being racist, he was quick to justify his right to question what he felt to be injust programs such as affirmative action and the welfare system. He ended pleading for a return to basic values. All in all, I found his commentary to be a blaring example of the misunderstanding that has brought our society to the state it is in now.

When I first read the article, the first word to run through my head was not "racist," but "uninformed" or "self-pitying" or "ignorant." The racist undertones in the article were merely a latent cause of an underlying problem. It seems that you, Mr. Toenniessen, want to be a victim.

You want to feel justified in griping about increases in taxes that you are sure are going to feed some welfare woman who doesn't want to work and her children. You want to be able to tell yourself that you would have gotten into that college if it weren't for those quotas. You want to think that the power structure at present is the way it is because white males are responsible for their actions. You want to believe that equal opportunity exists. It doesn't. If it did, I would support everything you said. Sadly, many think that it does or even that there are special benefits associated with being "oppressed."

By your standards, I should be ecstatically happy because I am African-American and female — a member of two "oppressed" groups. However, no matter how hard I work and how much academic excellence I attain, I will never be looked upon in the same way as a white male would who performs identically. I will have to work twice as hard just to be noticed. Then, if I am recognized, I receive the "you're different" speech. (If you are unfamiliar with this speech ask any minority who has spent more than a day in a predominantly white environment and I'm sure they can explain it to you.)

Where are the benefits? I am not asking for your sympathy. I don't need it. I'm not asking that you stop questioning what you feel to be injustices in society. That would be detrimental to everyone. What I do ask is that you take another look at how things really are in society and realize that sometimes even the most responsible people can't get out from under. Realize that oppression does exist and that we "oppressed" don't like it and will not stand for it.

I will end by pleading for education about difference along with morality and personal responsibility. I also ask, Mr. Toenniessen, that you stop feeling sorry for yourself.

Prejudice in military has worn many faces

President Bill Clinton has been in office for only 18 days, and already he is facing his first battle. So much for ending the gridlock in Washington, D.C.

Recent debate has focused on whether or not homosexuals should be allowed to serve in the military. Clinton supports overturning the ban on homosexuals in the armed forces. In a statement last week, the President disclosed a tentative agreement with Congress granting homosexuals the equivalent of a six-month "stay" while the battle is fought between the Capitol and the White House. Also, as a part of the agreement, the questioning of a person's sexual orientation on the enlistment application has been forbidden.

Years ago, a similar controversy erupted over whether or not African-Americans should be permitted to serve in the military. Those who opposed the measure argued that African-Americans would ruin the armed forces. To date, our military machine has not been at all adversely affected by this integration. Indeed, African-Americans have brought to the military different perspectives from which we all have benefitted and a diversity that is more representative of this "melting pot" we call America.

Like the prejudice that tried to prevent African-Americans from military service, so has homophobia permeated today's arguments opposing homosexuals in the military. This debate is not about the morality of homosexuality but instead about conduct. If people prescribe to military conduct and perform their jobs, they should not be dismissed on account of who they choose to love.

The ban on homosexuals in the military should be lifted. There is no basis for arguing that homosexuals disrupt the operation of the military, as evidenced in the many homosexuals who are forced to quietly serve in the armed forces today. Hopefully, Congress will begin to focus their attention on changing issues and attitudes that do interfere with military operation, such as the Tailhook scandal, instead of simply trying to deny people their basic constitutional rights.

Extend cold hands to warm homeless hearts

The cold is never really an important issue for us until it somehow interferes with our lives, as it did earlier this week. As the campus endured a bitter cold snap, complaints and curses abounded. Some suggested that classes be canceled. Others bemoaned runny noses and numb fingers and toes. And everyone had a few choice words to grumble about winter.

But take a moment to calculate how seldom during the day we are forced to endure the cold. The short treks between buildings may seem torturous, but we can be certain that the chill will wear off once we reach shelter.

Now consider the situation faced by the homeless. With nothing to protect them from sub-zero temperatures and icy winds, the weather is more than a mere annoyance; it can be fatal. While we decide how many layers to don for a five minute walk across campus, Center City police officers search Philadelphia for those who have died or will need to be hospitalized after a night of exposure to the elements.

Warmer weather might satisfy student gripes, but the problems facing the homeless remain, too severe to be dispelled by the rising temperatures.

Through a variety of programs offered by the Campus Ministry Office and the Villanova Committee for the Homeless of Philadelphia, we can take this opportunity to draw on our own experience of discomfort and help alleviate the misery facing the homeless. Currently, these groups are sponsoring a blanket drive with a drop-off location in the basement of St. Rita's Hall. Before another night passes, do something to help out.

COMMENTARY

Student says, "Life without keys is like honey without bees."

By PETER SHAUGER

People don't want cars. People don't want houses. They don't want their own offices with file cabinets and they don't want ice skates and they don't want cities. They don't even want matching luggage.

Well, I used to think I wanted matching luggage, but then I realized that what I really wanted was the keys to the luggage instead of the luggage itself.

However, upon closer examination, I found that key theory doesn't only hold true for matching luggage. When Chad moved into his apartment in the Fall, he brought back two file-cabinet-sized file cabinets. That's pretty darn big. He told me they were for all his papers and things.

Papers and things? As if Chad were a busy guy or something. He's usually with me, and as far as I know, I'm not a busy guy. When I find myself being busy I try to un-busy myself.

At the time Chad cleverly duped me into thinking he was going to put papers and things in his two file cabinets. But looking back, I distinctly remember each cabinet had a lock. That equals two locks. Which also equals two keys. I thought Chad was acting suspiciously cooler this year, but I couldn't quite figure out why. Who wouldn't be cooler with two new keys?

> But soon you realized that a single house key wasn't bringing in quite enough prestige as your 12-year-old ego demanded. You needed more keys.

But we can't all start out having file cabinet keys. Let's take a look at the first key most of us owned growing up. A house key. You could walk around the junior high school as cool as a cucumber knowing that at any moment, you could impress all your friends by showing them that in your pocket you had your own house key, not to mention a pack of gum, a paper football and a mini-Rubic's Cube.

But soon you realized that a single house key wasn't bringing in quite enough prestige as your 12-year-old ego demanded. You needed more keys.

So you bought a key chain with a picture of the school masoct on it and you added to it not only your house key, but also your luggage keys and some key that you found on the ground that you thought was money because it was bright and shiny, and you decided to keep it because it must belong to something somewhere and maybe someday you'd find what it belonged to.

Then about four years later you realized that there was something more important than luggage keys, and no, I'm not talking about skate keys. I'm talking about car keys.

Once you got your driver's license, the first thing you said to your parents was, "Dudes, can I — like — borrow the car keys?"

And why do you think people panic so much when they lose their car keys? They're not upset they can't start the car because there's a spare set of keys in the cookie jar (mmmm coookies — boy could I go for some cookies now — but I digest). No, they're upset because without keys, life is like one big, ugly, empty key chain with a picture of your junior high mascot on it.

It's not just me, either. When my father goes to work in the morning, the first things he grabs, after his bagel with cream cheese, of course, are his car keys. And when he goes to open his office door he pulls out another collection of about 34 keys (no my father is not a janitor, though they are usually pretty cool, too), one of which probably opens that door. Why would he do that if he wasn't a believer of this key philosophy?

Now don't get me wrong, my father is a very cool guy, but sometimes I think he forgets, as many of us do, that his coolness comes from those keys and not the other way around. Actually the idea that anyone would be given keys because they are cool is ludicrous, since you can't really be cool without keys in the first place.

Even politicians understand what it means to carry keys. When a city wants to really thank somebody for being one heckuva do-gooder, what do they do? Well, they don't give them a lifetime supply of Fig Newtons, that's for sure! Heck no! They give them the keys to the city. That's a heckuva lot of keys, depending on the size of your city, of course. Or maybe they just have one master key that opens everything.

And if you still don't believe that people want keys instead of the object the keys belong to, then explain to me why they bother giving you keys to ice skates? As if that were some kind of protection against theft. That's about as logical as going into a Japanese restaurant and instead of giving your car keys to the valet, you give him the keys to your penny loafers.

Pete Shauger is a junior English major who has recently let someone have the key to his heart (aw, shucks!).

Acceptance of construction plans slights campus neighbors

To the Editor:

On numerous occasions the local press has reported on plans by Villanova University to develop the West Campus (Spring Mill and County Line roads). Recently it was reported that, at the Radnor Township Planning Commission meeting of Jan. 5, 1993, approval was given to the University's final plan. While this is true, there is a peculiar fact surrounding that meeting which has not been reported (at least not to my knowledge). The fact I refer to is that very few University neighbors were in attendance at the Jan. 5 meeting because, contrary to the township's normal procedure, there was no notification to neighbors that the west campus plan was on that night's agenda.

While the township is not legally bound to notify neighbors of a particular meeting's agenda, I find this particularly repugnant. I am one of a group of concerned neighbors that resides on County Line Road, adjacent to the proposed project. At the Dec. 5, 1992 Planning Commission meeting, I voiced strong opposition to Villanova's current plan, a plan that is half the size of the one approved two years ago, but ironically, one that will have a far greater impact to the properties along County Line Road. I should note that I had not previously opposed the project in any form or manner, but rather the recent changes to the design compel me to do so.

While the former plan was to house 1,200 students in 10 "townhouse" dormitory buildings, the current plan is to house only 600 students in four buildings. And yet those four buildings are all located tight to County Line Road setbacks, 80 feet closer to our back yards than the previous plan and in a heavily wooded area that heretofore was to remain untouched.

As a practicing architect myself, I found it hard to believe that the University could not develop the 63 acre site, on which the total of the proposed new buildings covers only 60,000 square feet (one-and-one-half-acres), without having to place three-story dormitories within 200 feet of adjoining properties.

At the December Planning Commission meeting, I presented an alternate plan, one that would return the buildings back to their former locations. It was also suggested at that meeting (by one of the commissioners) that Villanova build the four buildings closer to Spring Mill Road (and therefore closer to the heart of the University) in order to mitigate our concerns. Because of these comments, the new plan was not approved at the December meeting.

The University was asked to consider the suggestions of moving the buildings, in essence to "go back to the drawing board," in the spirit of cooperation. Given the long history of this development and given the concerns of neighbors on Wistar Road, County Line Road and in Ashwood Manor, this did not seem too much to ask.

So it was with great surprise that, on the afternoon of Jan. 5, I learned by word of mouth from a neighbor that the West Campus plan was being presented that night to the Planning Commission. Many neighbors (including myself) were unable to attend the meeting because of the short notice. And, lo and behold, Villanova returned to the Commission, having made no changes to the plan and asked that it be approved outright. It was approved and now I am indignant.

On Feb. 8 the plan goes before Caucus of the Township Board of Commissioners. Formal action will be taken on the plan on Feb. 22. If the project is approved without modification, then the University will have failed once again to cooperate with neighbors to develop a sensitive design, as the township requested of them several years ago. Given the years of hard work put toward this cause by the township, the University and the residents of Villanova, it seems untenable that the plan should be approved. I can just hope that the Board of Commissioners agrees.

'Novans come together to "Reach for the Dream"

By AMANDA MILES
Staff Reporter

In observance of the birth of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., Villanova's Connelly Center came alive Jan. 29 with thought-provoking speeches, active discussions and a variety of music.

Sponsored by the Martin Luther King Jr. Day (MLK Day) Celebration Committee, events began at 9:30 a.m. with Freedom School, an all-day series of seminars and discussions based on political and social justice issues. The festivities, entitled "Reaching for the Dream . . . ," continued until The Jeff Washington Band celebrated with its last number at 11 p.m.

According to Dr. Terry Nance, the MLK Day Celebration Committee chair, Freedom Schools began during the Civil Rights Movement with the purpose of teaching people about civil rights and non-violence issues. Villanova's Freedom School accomplished this and more.

In one of the first talks of the day, Dr. Meghan Keita reiterated one of Martin Luther King Jr.'s mainideas by encouraging students to "take responsibility" and "do away with the anti-intellectual." Thus, the teachings of Dr. King were addressed in such a way as to make them applicable today.

As one freshman Villanova student who attended Freedom School stated, "We cannot put equal rights problems in the past. We have to realize these are problems of today, not just yesterday."

Titles of the various sessions at Freedom School prove that both past and present-day issues were addressed. Topics included: "Martin and Malcolm," "Roots of Non-Violence," "Race and the Greek System," "New Faces in Politics: Women and Minorities," "The L.A. Riots: More To Come," "Interracial Friendships" and many more.

Such a diverse selection proved to be effective. "Attendance was incredible from beginning to end," according to MLK Day Committee member Irene Langran. Another committee member, Eli Goldblatt, noted that this celebration "has made leaps in the past three years."

"The people attending seemed really open and interested," one participating professor observed. In fact, the excited talk of which session to attend next could be heard throughout Connelly Center. Many sessions were so filled that there was standing room only for the intrigued audiences.

Students and faculty of Villanova were not the only ones taking advantage of all this day had to offer. Representatives from two area high schools and one class of fifth graders were in attendance. Irene Langran stated, "It's [MLK Day] a great way for the University to offer something worthwhile and different to the surrounding community."

In addition to Freedom School, many other events were held

Equal access takes priority

The Administrative Committee for Disabled Members of the University Community has been meeting at Villanova University for the past year to discuss the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) of 1990, to review how the University has been accommodating the disabled on campus and plan for any additional accommodations that might be required under the statute.

The ADA, which went into effect this past July, is a law prohibiting discrimination against individuals with disabilities in employment, public services, transportation, public accommodations and telecommunication services.

University President the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., organized the group, which discovered that for the most part the school has been aware of and receptive to individual needs.

Approximately 43 million disabled people live in the United States. The law defines a disabled individual as someone with physical or mental impairments, recovered drug addicts and people with AIDS. These individuals continually encounter various forms of discrimination, such as communication barriers, overprotective rules and policies and failures to make modifications to existing facilities and practices.

Equal opportunity for the physically or mentally disabled or challenged means that when hiring employees and admitting students, the University cannot ask about disabilities and cannot require a medical exam. It is permitted to ask about job-related functions. This act does not require the University to hire someone who is not able to perform a major function of the job but is required to make reasonable accommodations.

> This year there are approximately 35 challenged members of the Villanova community.

This year there are approximately 35 challenged members of the Villanova community. This number is about the same as it was in past years. These people include resident and non-resident students, professors and employees.

The University administration is making an effort to assimilate disabled individuals into the Villanova community. The Office for Multi-Cultural Affairs, directed by Edward Collymore, assists people who choose to make their disability known to the school by evaluating their individual situation and deciding what can be done to meet their needs.

Villanova is continually making improvements to its campus in order to suit its students' needs. This year automatic doors were installed at Dougherty and Bartley halls to enable easier access for wheelchair users. More ramps and handicap parking spots were installed around campus as well.

Therese Wenzel, assistant director for human services at the Office for Multi-Cultural Affairs, noted that some improvements cannot be made without help from those who are disabled. "The students with disabilities are educators in the real sense of educators, of drawing out from the other a favorable response to a formerly unperceived need on the University's part," said Wenzel.

Those members of campus who are disabled are happy with the improvements that Villanova is making. Margie Kernicky, a student who is disabled and a coordinator for Villanova's chapter of Handicapped Encounter Christ, said two important improvements were providing access ramps to the church and to Corr Chapel.

English professor and Vietnam veteran James Kirschke, who uses a wheelchair, maintained that smoothing out the metal humps on the floor of some of the doorways in Bartley Hall has also been a big improvement. He addes that "the University hasn't said no" to any of the requests that he has made for improvements.

Students vie for on-campus housing

By LIZ WEAVER
Staff Reporter

Well, it is the time of year again to fill out your lottery cards and hope for a good number. Although it is not the kind of lottery in which one wins money, to some a good number is more important. This is the lottery to determine in which residence hall a student will live next year, if he or she even receives on-campus housing.

All freshmen are guaranteed housing for two years. Sophomores and juniors who wish to remain on campus are also encouraged to enter the lottery. Although they are not guaranteed housing, 80 percent of the males and 60 percent of the females who entered the lottery as upperclassmen were successful in receiving a number, according to Dan Remley, director of Residence Life.

"It is a mistaken belief that current sophomores have to go off campus," said Remley. If an upperclassman enters the lottery without success, and his or her name is put on the waiting list, the chances of having a room available by spring semester are excellent.

Currently, Villanova's campus houses approximately 1,400 freshmen, 1,300 sophomores, 340 juniors and 236 seniors. These students live in the various resident halls on campus, including Connelly Hall at Rosemont College.

In the past, freshmen deciding where to move on campus had the different aspects of each to think about. For example, although Sheehan and Sullivan are in the heart of the social scene and most classes are close, there have always been pitfalls to living on main campus.

The inconvenience of having only a pay phone was often the deciding factor in staying or moving to south campus. The relatively new south campus always had rooms equipped with phones. Next year the dorms on main campus will also.

In addition to phones in every room on campus, every resident will have his or her own phone and number, whether in a single, double, triple or quad.

How does this work? This new system will do away with answering machines, as there will be voice mailboxes. Each student will have his or her own access code to check messages and will have the chance to purchase packages, which may include call forwarding and last call redial. More information will be presented in the lottery material which will be available next week.

Many sophomores currently living on south have agreed that if phones had been an option last year they definitely would have moved to main. Dan McDonough was brief but to the point when he answered, "Yes, oh my yes, I would have gone!"

Another general consensus is that although the phones are a great addition to the halls, it would not keep them on campus.

The new apartments we have been hearing so much about are to be started this March. These apartments, on the Morris Estate behind St. Mary's are (hopefully) going to be completed by fall of '94. There will be four buildings, three floors each, with a total of 624 beds. Each apartment is made for four people and has a full kitchen and bathroom.

Meet a team behind the scene

By TARA CAMPITIELLO
Assistant Features Editor

The roar within the Pavilion is often as deafening as its spontaneous silences of disappointment. As the battle rages on the court, it would appear that any sense of control is held by piercing whistles and groaning buzzers.

However, "where the action is" is not necessarily where the "power" is. If the Villanova Wildcats basketball team were to stand alone, well frankly, alone they would stand.

This is by no means an attempt to degrade the importance of the basketball team itself. The intent is to focus well deserved attention to those persons who work to support the team, place the team beneath the bright lights and allow coverage by the mass media.

The business of sports is not only a concern of stereotypical "jocks." Rather, it is "big business" to be marketed as any other commodity. The basketball team is a part of the basketball program whose facets include accounting, public relations, marketing, facilities management, physical therapy . . . the list is endless.

> The business of sports is not only a concern of stereotypical "jocks."

Villanova students are offered wonderful opportunities to gain experience in such areas through work-study programs and internships, Sports Information Director James DeLorenzo noted.

"Due to the invaluable experience gained by those students who work with us, we are easily able to highly recommend students for post-graduate work," said DeLorenzo.

"Many alumni who had once worked within the program are now presently employed by various collegiate athletic programs and professional athletic associations," added DeLorenzo. He is a living testament, himself a 1984 graduate of Villanova University who held a position similar to that of current student assistants.

There are presently between 12 and 15 students working within the department of Sports Information. The students hold the usual responsibilities of any office job, the exception being that filing includes the latest "stats" on the previous game, and answering the phone leads to direct contact with the media.

Viewpoint: Should homosexuals be in military?

By MARYANN PULLIA
Staff Reporter

The question of whether homosexuals should be allowed to serve in the armed forces has stirred controversy throughout the country in recent weeks. Villanova students have also voiced opinions about whether President Clinton should lift the ban against homosexuals in the military.

Students have mixed feelings about the issue. Suzanne Quigley, a senior political science major, said that gays should be allowed in the military because all people should have the option to serve their country. "I don't think it should be a criterion for the military," said Quigley. "Soldiers should not be discharged for their sexual preferences, but for sexual behavior."

Donna Wolpert, a freshman liberal arts major, holds similar views. She said that people should not be judged on their sexual preferences but on their ability to fulfill the job requirements of the military. "I believe gays should be allowed in the military because our society is supposed to be based on non-prejudicial attitudes. Prohibiting someone from serving their nation is eliminating their rights as a United States citizen," said Wolpert.

The question of whether homosexuals should be allowed to serve in the armed forces has stirred controversy throughout the country in recent weeks.

Another argument for allowing gays to serve, made by Amy Hanssens, a junior accounting major, was that homosexuals have worked well in other environments. They are prominent members of the business and entertainment worlds, and they have succeeded at many other careers. Hanssens does not think the military should be any different.

A number of Villanova students said that while people's sexual preference does not indicate whether they are capable of doing the job, the living quarters will cause problems.

Nicole Jurich, a freshman biology major, agrees that the living quarters will cause difficulties. "Since segregating homosexuals into separate barracks is discrimination, homosexuals would live with heterosexuals, and that would present a difficulty in controlling sexual behavior," said Jurich.

A member of Villanova's ROTC program pointed out that in many military situations, such as on naval ships, constant contact among those in service exists in the living quarters. He said although homosexual men may not make passes at heterosexual men, their presence may still be disruptive. "The majority of men in the military are straight," he

Film examines lives during Holocaust

By PAUL J. BARBEN
Special to the Villanovan

The Cultural Film and Lecture Series continues at Villanova this coming week with the appearance of special guest Pierre Sauvage.

This French-born, American documentary filmmaker will be on campus Feb. 8 at 4 p.m. to speak in the Connelly Center Cinema. His powerful documentary "Weapons of the Spirit" will then be shown at 7 p.m. in the Cinema and will be followed by an open discussion led by the director himself.

"Weapons of the Spirit" examines the goodwill displayed by the 5,000 citizens of Le Chambon-sur-Lignon, France, who gave refuge to 5,000 Jews who were to be shipped off to Nazi concentration camps.

Sauvage was among those Jews, having been born in Le Chambon-sur-Lignon, to parents who had found safety in the village a few months prior to his birth. The villagers' motives are shown to be a part of their Christian faith.

An interesting parallel existed between the Jews and the Protestant villagers who gave them shelter. These villagers were descendants of Huguenots, a group that was persecuted by the Roman Catholic Church in France.

The duration of the film reveals that there was no betrayal of any Jew, an amazing feat for a village that secretly doubled in population.

Sauvage's appearance and lecture, "The Holocaust as an American Experience," is sponsored by Phi Kappa Phi.

the Villanova community an accessible one. "Villanova University students are special people. In all my years of teaching I think I've only encountered one student who was upset by my condition. I can't imagine an environment which would be healthier about my condition," said Kirschke.

"Villanova University has come a long way. It helps people feel independent while at the same time feeling supported and that people are taking interest in them," said Wenzel.

Kernicky agreed, "Villanova has done wonderful things for me. Villanova has given me a much more positive self-image."

Officials admit that there are still many improvements that need to and will be made. Buildings such as Vasey and Mendel Hall are difficult for those who use wheelchairs because there are not enough ramps. The school store and the mailroom are also difficult to enter because they tend to be crowded. With continued improvements, officials hope that Villanova can be a model for other colleges.

Top 10

Straight from our underground office somewhere in Pennsylvania, the Top 10 reasons why Punxsutawney Phil was in a hurry to get back into his hole this year:

10. He was spotted last week wearing a "Phil's for the Bills" hat.
9. He couldn't bear to watch all the "Junior Wildcats" get into bars this weekend when his I.D. never works.
8. -15 degree wind-chill — these temperatures would make anyone run for shelter.
7. He didn't think he could make it across Lancaster during the two second "walk" sign.
6. Slick Willie was inaugurated as our 42nd president.
5. His housing lottery number was 18,482.
4. He felt like just a number with all the other squirrels on campus.
3. Someone told him our record in the Big East.
2. Public Safety ran him off campus because his groundhog permit wasn't properly displayed.

And the No. 1 reason why Phil definitely won't come out of his hole for the next six weeks is . . .

1. Even Bob's gets raided.

Professional sings of classic period

Special to the Villanovan

"Three Legends: Lenya, Dietrich, Piaf," a cabaret concert, was performed by singer Elizabeth Hodes accompanied by Harry Huff on piano at Villanova University. The performance took place Feb. 2 at 8 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cafeteria Theater. As part of the Sesquicentennial celebrations, this event was hosted by the Department of Modern Languages.

Hodes' performance celebrated the great European cabaret singers from the 1920's to the 1950's.

Hodes' performance celebrated the great European cabaret singers from the 1920s to the 1950s: Lotte Lenya, Marlene Dietrich and Edith Piaf. Lenya ("The Voice of Germany") was best known for her renditions of the Kurt Weill/Berthold Brecht collaboration such as the Threepenny Opera. Edith Piaf, "The Little Sparrow," was France's most famous and beloved cabaret singer. Probably the best known in America is Marlene Dietrich, who left Germany objecting to the Nazi regime and began a successful career in American films along with her singing career.

Hodes began her professional career as a principal dancer with the Royal Winnipeg Ballet. She then began performing in concerts and musicals on and off Broadway, on TV and in summer stock.

She created this one-woman show of famous cabaret singers, performing in theaters and cabarets throughout the United States.

Accompanying her was Huff, a highly regarded pianist who has been sought after by artists such as Judy Collins and Hakan Hagegard. He has appeared off-Broadway, in concerts nationally and as guest artist at the Aspen and Mostly Mozart festivals. Currently, he is artist-in-residence at Union Theological Seminary and organist at Calvary Church in New York City.

throughout the day. The award-winning PBS series documenting the civil rights movement, "Eyes On The Prize," was shown continuously from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. An Ecumenical Prayer Service was held in Corr Chapel.

An art exhibit, "African Art from the Collection of Benjamin D. Bernstein," will be held in Connelly Center until Feb. 22, 1993.

News releases with some of Dr. King's greatest speeches were also distributed to professors in the hopes that they would be used in classes. There was also a reaction forum in the afternoon to discuss the day's events.

Most in attendance felt that the day was "very well run." "It's a great thing. The professors seemed to actually care about the school and the students," said freshman Jenny Fenner.

> Titles of the various sessions at Freedom School prove that both past- and present-day issues were addressed.

Ironically, the most popular complaint also dealt with the professors. Many students claimed that none of their professors ever mentioned this important observance day and they were disappointed to find out about it too late to see speakers that would have interested them. The MLK Day Committee distributed innumerable news releases and only hopes for better support in the future.

The day ended on a positive note — a musical one. Not only did The Jeff Washington Band supply a lively dance party, but they also are supplying many needy people with food and clothing collected at the concert. All blankets and winter coats that were donated will be sent on an airlift to Bosnia. All other clothing and food will be given to area shelters.

Given all of these results, the day could only be measured as a success. As one MLK Day Committee member noted, "This day comes from the efforts, energy and enthusiasm of the committee chair, Dr. Terry Nance and, of course, from the students."

True peace is not merely the absence of tension:
it is the presence of justice.

What does all this mean for those who would be living off-campus in future years? Most students said the same thing. Sophomore Jane Sinclaire said, "I would definitely consider it, as long as it was like living off campus, with none of the rules we have now." Matt Foley agreed, "I would definitely live in the apartments, if there were no R.A.'s." John McLaughlin stated, "I definitely would live in the apartments, but I would want to be treated as an adult without all the rules that are enforced upon us now."

Students support athletic teams

Christy Foster, sophomore nursing major, said, "The office is always very busy, yet everyone is real friendly." Diane Watson, junior biology major, added, "My position as a student assistant is totally different from my future career plans. However, I enjoy being involved and benefit from the general knowledge I have acquired from working with the press and TV crews and accumulating statistics."

Many of the students assist in compiling and creating copies of game statistics and press releases during half-time of games. Dean Kenefick, junior secondary-education major, explained his role in this process, "I work in conjunction with Big East Team Statistics. I sit at the scorers table during the game with a three-way headset updating information with a production truck outside."

This is just a brief overview of one of the "support teams" of "The Teams." Without the dedication of such people, athletics would only serve athletes, without regard to spectators' enjoyment.

said. "To have someone looking at you would be uncomfortable."

Another ROTC member opined that blatant discrimination is unfair. He did not think that the government should ask whether or not a person is gay because it does not indicate whether that person can do the job. While he believes that all people have the right to serve their country, he does not agree with special privileges for married homosexual couples.

All of the students interviewed said that sexual preference does not determine how a soldier will perform on the job. Sexual preference shouldn't have anything to do with job qualifications," said freshman engineering major Karla Terrizo. "People should have the right to a private sexual life."

ENTERTAINMENT

Nova playwright premieres his 'Ninth Wave'

By ERIC CHEUNG
Assistant Entertainment Editor

The Villanova Theatre has enjoyed much success with its sesquicentennial showcase of Villanova playwrights. The next installment in this year-long celebration is "The Ninth Wave" by Leslie Lee. Probably the most famous among the playwrights featured this year, Lee will world-premiere his latest theatrical triumph Feb. 10.

Originally, Lee wanted to be a doctor. Upon graduation from the University of Pennsylvania, he practiced in the field of medicine. However, his growing interest in drama and his talents as a writer called him to make a change in his life. In 1966, Lee entered the Villanova graduate program in theater. Three years later he received his master's and moved to Connecticut. His career then soared to some impressive heights.

For the past 23 years, Lee has made numerous contributions in practically all of the various entertainment fields. "The First Breeze Of Summer," which was written by Lee while he was still a student at Villanova, was nominated for a Tony award. Other plays include "The Black Eagles" and "The Rabbit Foot." Lee developed "Go Tell It On The Mountain" for television as well as "Langston Hughes: The Dreammaker," a PBS documentary. For a time he was a writer on the set of the soap opera "Another World."

> This drama is about racism, prejudice and

Meanwhile his foray into the world of films consists of "The Killing Floor" (shown at the Cannes Film Festival) and "Almos' A Man." One future endeavor is a Walt Disney animated feature film patterned after a Creole folktale.

With such distinguished credentials, "The Ninth Wave" looks to be a must-see play. France, recently liberated during World War II, is the setting of this drama about racism, prejudice and violence. Lee said, "It's based on a true story, told to me by someone who had been there. It's a reflection of a much larger problem, not as isolated as it was. It appeals to something much deeper."

"The Ninth Wave" portrays a group of black soldiers as they attempt to make their contribution to America's effort during the war. However, African-Americans face racism even in a foreign land. Despite the tragedies that abound, they are not allowed to actually fight in combat. Instead African-Americans must perform lesser duties, such as watching over Nazi prisoners of war. "The Ninth Wave" takes a look at the relationship between the black guards and their German prisoners. The prejudice and hatred are rampant for both groups of people.

Actors for "The Ninth Wave" include a mixture of graduate students, undergraduate students and professionals: Amani Gethers, Brian Wilson, Irma Mason and William Rayhill. Additionally, the costumes and set design were by Villanova graduates Wesley Maloney Truitt and Tracy Taylor respectively. "The Ninth Wave" will run Feb. 10-14 and Feb. 17-21 at the Villanova Theatre.

Lemonheads' enter the alternative scene

By MAURA RURAK
Senior Reporter

The alternative cover of Simon and Garfunkel's classic "Mrs. Robinson" has thrust the Lemonheads into the ever-growing alternative spotlight. As a result of this single, the Lemonheads are now a constant on MTV and a favorite of Philadelphia's own WDRE.

However, there is much more to the band than a long line of cover tunes. The latest release, It's A Shame About Ray, actually never included "Mrs. Robinson." The demands for the song after the CD was initially released caused it to be the 13th and final addition.

The strength of the album stems from smooth-rocking tunes such as the grunge-like "Alison's Starting to Happen" and the short clip called "Bit Part." Although it is difficult to pin a specific sound to the Lemonheads, they could be compared to R.E.M. or the early work of Toad The Wet Sprocket. The tunes have basic roots in melody rock but are uniquely modern.

> The Lemonheads have not stepped over the line into heavy thrash.

The acoustic "Frank Mills" illustrates the obvious talent of lead singer, Evan Dando. The song sails through with the clear, full tones of Dando's deep voice.

The Lemonhead trio of Evan Dando, David Ryan and Juliana Hatfield gives diversity through all 13 tracks. The female backing vocals add flavor which help to separate them from the usual. It's A Shame About Ray marks the first major record label recording for the Lemonheads. This "first" effort will definitely provide a solid foundation from which their sound can grow.

The attraction to the Lemonheads comes from the balance they have been able to create within the alternative scene. The lyrics are easy to understand in comparison to Nirvana's unintelligible rhetoric and they have not stepped over the line into heavy thrash.

"Mrs. Robinson" may be misleading. The Lemonheads are a creative, fresh influence in new music and hopefully will not feel compelled to sell out to the commercialization of the once-underground alternative scene.

Jesus Jones criticizes the faults of society

By CHRISTOPHER GONNELLI
Staff Reporter

The latest compact disc from Jesus Jones, Perverse, is a 12-song, 45-minute maelstrom of anger and hope.

At the conclusion of the CD, the listener will be puzzled if this is the same Jesus Jones who just two years ago released the refined CD, Doubt.

On Perverse, Jesus Jones showcases its diversity. The band attacks the listener with a blitzkrieg of simplistic guitar arrangements coupled with distorted and incessant keyboard sequences. With the explosive and energetic Perverse, Jesus Jones redefines the dance aspect of modern rock.

Jones' lead singer, Mike Edwards, best expresses the musical tone of their latest release during the opening track, "Zeroes and Ones," preaching in his distinct, raspy and yearning voice, "This time the revolution will be computerized." Yet, whether Jesus Jones offers the listener a rock-oriented CD, such as Doubt, or the alternative dance-based Perverse, they consistently produce music with a message.

The first two songs on Perverse, titled "Zeroes and Ones" and "The Devil You Know," the first single from their third compact disc, represent an attempt by the band to dislocate the individual from the past and relocate the person into the present.

In "The Devil You Know," the band calls upon individuals to define their own generation and not allow other generations to define them. The song is a passionate plea calling upon society to cease its practice of looking to the past in order to operate in the present. Edwards pleads, "It's time for us/ for us to grasp/ something of our own/ the ghost of the past has its arms around me/ it moves everywhere/ in all I hear and see."

The pensive fourth track on the CD, titled "From Love to War," illustrates the political propaganda the so-called leaders of the free world will implement to preserve their ideals.

The eighth track, "Your Crusade," echoes the blazing guitar sequence from the song "Trust Me," the opening track of their sophomore effort, Doubt. The song also expresses the response of the individual regarding the ideals of national leaders. Edwards wails, "I don't care enough to share your dreams/ I'm not part of your crusade/ I don't believe that what you say has anything to do with me." Both "From Love To War" and "Your Crusade" expose the alienation of the individual from the goals of the leaders within his government.

The effervescent "Magazine" attacks those shallow individuals who spend their lives thumbing through pathetic publications, such as Star magazine and The National Inquirer, concerning themselves with the lives of others rather than enlightening themselves with concrete ideas which would serve to erase their ignorance. The song also comments on the dismal condition of a society where the individual seeks gossip in order to produce a victim and eventually crucify this scapegoat.

The forceful "Don't Believe It" congratulates those educated citizens who possess the common sense to disregard the blatant fallacies pervading tabloid publications.

Those listeners who expect to hear a continuation of Doubt in Jesus Jones' latest release will be gravely disappointed. Yet, Perverse does not disappoint. The combination of energetic alternative dance-based music with meditative lyrics, not only revives, but redefines a sound absent from modern rock for many years due to the coup d'etat achieved by the Seattle music scene.

Costello's new album shifts creative gears

By CAROLYN POPPE
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Pop vocalist Elvis Costello recently released his latest effort, The Juliet Letters. But listeners will no longer find those light-hearted tunes of a past Costello, who preached that rock "radio is a sound salvation." This founder of '70s and '80s pop culture has taken a turn toward the unusual.

His new project resulted from the inspiration of a string quartet and a story about an Italian professor who answered letters addressed to Shakespeare's Juliet.

Costello was enchanted by the idea and created his own story of such correspondence. He wrote a series of letters that might have been written to a Juliet, letters that might present an emotional cross section of humanity.

Even more discordant from his past work, he collaborated with the Brodsky Quartet, a group of classical string artists who teach at Cambridge and have recently played on tour. They accompany Costello's fictitious lyrics on this album. The baroque sound has been termed a sort of "parlor music" which leaves room for emphasis on the words of his Juliet letters.

Costello completely breaks free from his more conventional projects that identify him. But he claims that the innovative album is "no more [his] stab at 'classical music' than it is the Brodsky Quartet's first rock and roll album."

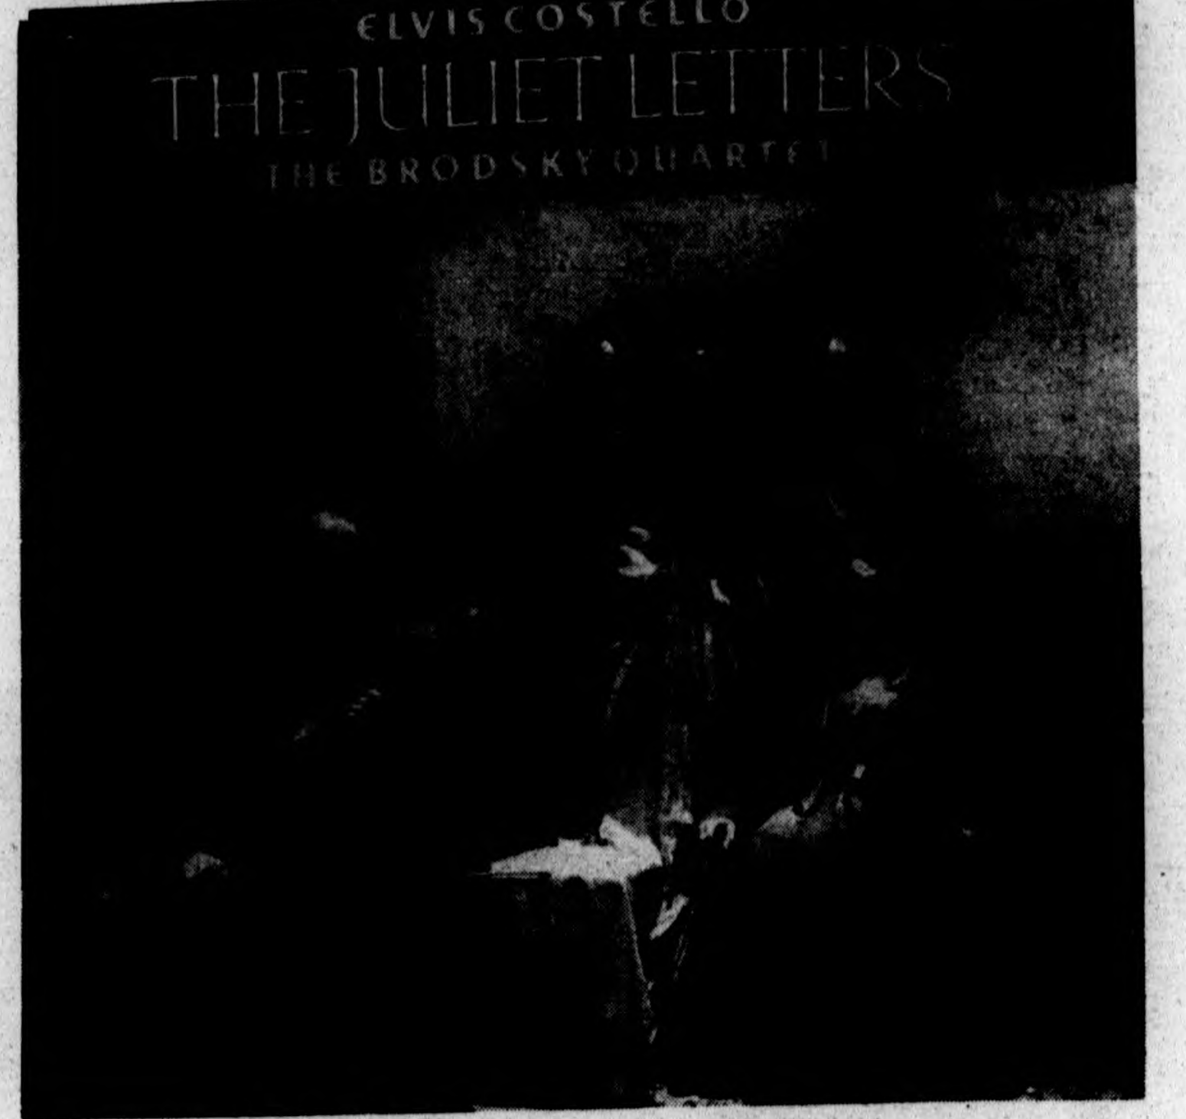
Costello has taken a turn toward the unusual.

The Juliet Letters depicts Costello's vision of London life in its imagery. Each letter seeks solace from the fictitious Juliet, expressing a variety of modern problems and hidden emotions: passion, betrayal, loneliness and pain. A woman writes of her love and jealous rage. An ambivalent soldier faces fear. A desperate man signs a suicide letter, writing "Life is dark/Cold as the sea/ Embrace me in my anguish … / I can't go on."

Costello puppets these pathetic characters in creating their feelings. He exposes his ego as he condescends, though. He both depresses and angers the listener who is made to feel sorry for the characters; they seem to be the sad results of Costello's subconscious. Many of the songs push the chilling "Deep, Dark Truthful Mirror" feeling that evaded his recent effort, Spike.

But the letters get lighter as the album moves on. The more upbeat tracks include "I Almost Had A Weakness," "Jacksons, Monk and Rowe," "Romeo's Seance" and "Damnation's Cellar." Not only do these tunes escape the deathly sadness that pervades the album, they are enjoyable. With these, Costello impressively utilizes the artistic capacity of the string group.

The group proves truly talented as they tackle dramatic tempo changes, quick pizzicato and rapid trills that follow the brigher spirit of these tracks. They even touch on blues, at times, and suggest light jazz in "Damnation's Cellar." Well executed.



On the slower tracks, though, the Brodsky violin/viola group takes a back burner, unfortunately. The group complements Costello's letters, following the melodic pattern of his voice, but they allow his script to act as the musical focus. Based on the melancholy, love-lost feel of his literary attempt, this focus seems a poor choice.

The Juliet Letters is an innovative project, however. If Costello's excursion does not throw you off, you might be impressed by the imagery.

'Tous Les Matins' goes beyond mainstream

By HANK WINTER
Staff Reporter

The legendary 17th century French violist Monsier de Sainte Colombe and his "pupil" Marin Marais are the subjects of the film "Tous Les Matins du Monde" ("All the Mornings in the World").

In a simple but lyrical way, the movie examines the reclusive Colombe, whose wife died when his two daughters were still children. Colombe was a proud man who never recovered from his wife's death. Spending most of his time in a shack behind his home, he toiled day and night to produce haunting melodies to remind him of her.

As a father, however, Colombe was lacking and would often send his daughters to the cellar and forget about them. When they were old enough, his daughters joined him in viola concerts for the French aristocracy.

The young Marais sought Colombe as a teacher and was reluctantly accepted, but turned away as differences between student and teacher became apparent. Marais, nevertheless, learned much of Colombe's technique from his oldest daughter Madeleine, who had a vain love affair with Marais. Marais returned much later in life to try to preserve some of the modest Colombe's works for posterity and to make peace with this mentor.

Though Colombe's achievements were great (including the addition of a seventh string to the viola), his work was never published and many facts about him, such as his first name, are still unknown.

As Monsieur de Sainte Colombe, Jean-Pierre Mariella brings a nobility and force of suffering that anchors the film. He demonstrates how pain and genius are often tragically linked. Guillaume Depardieu performs competently in his role as the young Marin Marais, but still has some way to go before he can match the acting ability of his father, Gerard Depardieu, who plays the older Marin Marais.

Anne Brochet and Carole Richert are also well-cast in their roles as the daughters Madeleine and Toinette, with Brochet standing out in a performance that requires her to evoke a variety of emotions from the viewer.

The movie itself, particularly in its second half where blues and greys dominate the screen, dares what few mainstream American films would attempt. It provokes sadness that does not require a supreme suspension of disbelief. The music pervades everything and the soundtrack, more than anything else, allows one to share Colombe's feelings about love and art.

Goats perform an intense show before tour

By MARK McCREARY
Staff Reporter

In a musical age that has been touted as "The Musical Revolution," the area that is growing the quickest is the realm of rap. And with promising bands such as Basehead, Cypress Hill, the infallible Beastie Boys and Arrested Development, one new arrival on the scene that is often overlooked is The Goats.

If you hear them, it will most likely be in a club, and not on the popular top-40 radio that is heard around Villanova. But no matter where your ears experience The Goats, they will be barraged by quick rap, an irresistible beat, and anti-conservative/Republican lines that would scare any College Republican out of the room in a frenzied fit. But those that do take these incessant lines with a grain of salt will see that these Philadelphia-based slammin' dudes know what they are talking about. I actually know a College Republican that likes this CD.

On their debut CD, Tricks of the Shade, they take continual shots at George Bush ("Georgie Bush Kids"), Noriega ("Noriega's Coke Stand"), and our beloved governmental institution ("Uncle Sam's Shooting Gallery"). They are quick to brag of their extracurricular activities in "Got Kinda Hi," with lines such as, "I smoke fatties, and that's my business. I pound forties, and that's my business … Worry about your own damn thing."

The entire CD is narrated by Hangerhead and his brother Chickenlittle, which makes the listening tingle with humor. But listening to the CD is one experience, while seeing the show live is another universe all together. Welcome to The Goats live, via the Theatre of the Living Arts (TLA), Jan. 31.

Going to see this fresh show left me a bit apprehensive, but the crowd gave a feeling of a hometown welcome, and I suddenly felt more at ease. There was none of the black crowd/white crowd tension, everybody was just there to have a great time, and that is exactly what was had. The Goats appealed to the crowd, were very aware that the fans were their Philly homies and put on an appropriately intense show before heading out on their traveling tour. As on Tricks of the Shade, they left the TLA full of the aroma of political satire, if not blatant disrespect for the powers that run the United States corporation … I mean government.

The Goats put on a show just as intense and excellent as Tricks of the Shade, with the crowd getting totally enthralled with each new song, especially "Typical American," "Tricks of the Shade" and "Burn the Flag." It is probably going to be a while before The Goats show their faces again for a show in Philadelphia, but when they roll into town, you should check it out. Until then, get Tricks of the Shade.

'Matinee' recalls old films

By AARON NICODEMUS
Senior Reporter

What does anyone really expect from a night at the movies? An overbuttered box of stale popcorn, mind games with your date, crowded post-movie bathrooms, and possibly $6 wasted on a mediocre flick? At best, a movie theater provides a two-hour haven from the outside world and a breather from the breakneck pace of reality.

But in the '50s and '60s, the movies were not just entertainment, they were a religion, a passion and a sanctuary all in one. "Matinee" recaptures the comically awful horror films of the era and all it meant to the people who watched.

Anyone who remembers films like "The Blob" and "War of the Worlds" certainly knows that these films, as bad as they were, meant something. Somehow, the more recent "Rocky Horror Pickture Show" and "Attack of the Killer Tomatoes" never had the same impact.

Coming at a time when The Cold War was waged daily, Communists were everywhere, and the threat of nuclear annihilation loomed in the air, horror pictures played out America's nightmares with ridiculous cardboard and papier-mache monsters meant to symbolize our atomic demise. But more often, the crumbly-looking creatures merely reminded us that our troubles only grew as large as we let them.

John Goodman stars as independent filmmaker Lawrence Woolsey, who brings his sci-fi schtick to 1962 Key West, Fla. The title of his latest offering is "Mant," ("Half man, Half ant … All terror!"). By rigging the theatre with electrically shocked seat cushions and wild special effects, he is determined to bring showmanship back to the big screen. Instead of a mere sleazy boar, Goodman's character is full of the impish playfulness of his teenage viewers. While obviously in this business for the bottom line, he gives the people what they want and enjoys it.

Overshadowed by the Cuban Missile Crisis, Key West braces for nuclear war. While its citizens hurriedly argue over the last Shredded Wheat box at the Shop 'n Save, the city's teenagers battle their own fears (and hormones). Gene (Simon Fenton) is a soft-spoken Navy kid who has led the life of an armed forces nomad. Worried about his father's role in the crisis, Gene struggles to hold his family together.

But the teenage supporting cast is anemic. The paper-thin attempts at the '60s stereotypes of pouty sex kitten, bohemian radical, pimply outcast and gullible little brother are less than uncreative, they are downright annoying. Following the subplots is easy; we have seen them all before and know every move ahead of time.

"Matinee' does strike a positive chord with its tribute to black and white B-movie horror. From the pitiful special effects to the insincere acting, "Mant" captures all the charm that drew the films' original viewers.

The constant threat of nuclear destruction was played out every day on-screen, so as to make it seem more outrageous and unbelievable than it already appeared. Such effect spilled over into real life, so that fact and fiction blended together. The Missile Crisis and JFK's assassination became extensions of "The Blob." The world is falling apart, went the thinking, but I can walk out of the theatre when the lights come on.

"Matinee" is nothing if not likeable. Goodman's broad congeniality almost compensates for gaping kholes in the plot and supporting roles. "Mant" is a true-to-the-times recreation, done with all the loving half-handedness of the era's works. In the end, "Matinee" is enjoyable and good-natured. Now if someone could just make the monster look real.

FAST FORWARD: Bill Murray returns to the screen in a familiar role of a man-child allowed to do whatever he wants. "Groundhog Day" has Murray, a TV weatherman, waking up at the same time, on the same day, over and over. Andie McDowell stars as his beautiful love interest, whom Murray chases again and again, each time allowed to make a new first impression.

Every boyfriend's worst nightmare comes to life in "The Vanishing," starring Keifer Sutherland as the guy whose girlfriend disappears and he spends a lifetime searching for her. The answers he finally uncovers may best have remained hidden. Nancy Travis plays the girlfriend; Jeff Bridges is the evil doer.

REWIND: One of the summer season's disappointments, "Mo' Money" hits video racks today. Daymon Wayans is a nickel-and-dime hustler who falls for a beautiful executive (Stacey Dash) and decides to make a legitimate buck. But when his plans go bad and his crooked boss blackmails him, this light-hearted comedy turns violently ugly. While dotted with a few "In Living Color" laughs, its misguided plot led "Mo' Money" to less dough.

TheThe creates soft music

By COLEEN KENIREY
Entertainment Editor

The Cutting Edge

The sweet sound of The The is unpredictable and refreshing. A glance at the cover of Dusk creates expectations of a hard-hitting thrash album detailing urban angst. The angst part is fairly accurate, but the object of the lyrical turmoil tends to be love rather than social ills. The mood is serene and sometimes the words are cynical and despairing, but Dusk is a solid display of emotions and feelings.

The title of The The's latest work is well-chosen and more indicative of the CD's content than its cover. These tracks are bluesy and bare, creating a blend of serious and melancholy images. The thoughts expressed are sober and realistic and focus on longing for happiness, the nature of God and the world and desire for companionship. Although many of the messages are not uplifting or lighthearted, they are honest and complementary to the music and stir the listener's sympathy.

The one redeeming factor of life presented in the lyrics is love. "True Happiness This Way Lies," "Helpline Operator" and "Love is Stronger Than Death" are a few moments in which the songwriter reaches out to love as his only salvation.

"Slow Emotion Replay" signifies the unifying mood of the CD. The song tackles philosophical questions with: "You've gotta work out your own salvation/ With no explanation to this Earth we fall/On hands and knees we crawl/And we look up to the stars/And we reach out and pray/ To a deaf, dumb and blind God who never explains." This attitude is typical of most of the other songs in its despair and confusion.

Matt Johnson's voice contains shadows of other male singers' voices. It has a smooth quality akin to David Bowie's with a husky depth similar to a a coherent version of Daniel Ash's vocals. Johnson is the key component which pushes these songs over the top with vocal fortitude and stability. His full emotional dimensions radiate on the acoustic "True Happiness This Way Lies."

"Dogs of Lust," familiar as a result of local radio airplay, is a superior sample of The The's effortless style. Their exploitation of the harmonica contributes a southern appeal to this portrait of a tortured mind. The torture is simultaneously inflicted and soothed by love. The singer explores this mysterious duality of pleasure and pain: "I got it blue/ I got it bad/I got the sweetest sadness I ever had."

"This is the Night" adds an interesting twist to Dusk's selection of songs. Almost reminiscent of Queen, carnival-style piano notes haunt the opening of this track. A lyrical reminder of Queen occurs with "I need somebody to hold me."

The best offering on Dusk is the crusade to save the human race, "Lonely Planet." It is on this cut that the sleek sound reaches its epitome and Johnson's words make his most powerful statements. Several comments underscore the theme of the individual's isolation in the world. These include: "We're running out of love/running out of hate/running out of space for the human race/ Planet Earth is slowing down" and "All the people I've never known/All the feelings I've never shown/The world's too big/And life's too short/To be alone … to be alone."

Although more appropriate for serious moments, Dusk has a softly pleasing sound. The subtle echoes of harmonica remind the listener of a Louisiana bayou in "Slow Emotion Replay" while "Bluer Than Midnight" and "Lung Shadows" lean toward jazz with traces of trumpet, piano and trombone. These various elements are developed into an interesting mixture on Dusk.

FRESH CUTS: Walter Schreifels (vocals, guitar), Sergio Vega (bass), Tom Capone (guitar) and Alan Cage (drums) create hardcore and aggressive sound as members of Quicksand. The band first became known as the opening act on the Helmet tour. Slip is the musicians' first full album, succeeding their 1991 self-titled EP.

Genesis returns with a collection of live hits

By JOHN KAZMIERCZAK
Staff Reporter

The ever-prolific team of Phil Collins, Mike Rutherford and Tony Banks, also known as Genesis, recently celebrated their immensely successful 1991-92 tour by releasing the first half of a live concern album. Titled The Way We Walk, Volume One: The Shorts, this CD, despite smooth and well-integrated performances by band members, achieves mixed results at best.

Genesis has adopted a marketing approach similar to that of AC/DC, allowing for the desires of both the casual fan and the aficionado. Catering to the occasional listener, The Way We Walk, Volume One's material is a collection of relatively short (an average of six and one half minutes per track) hit songs which date back no further than Genesis' 1983 self-titled album.

Volume Two: The Longs will aim for the more devoted Genesis follower, featuring lengthier, older and more involved material such as "Home By The Sea" and "In The Cage." The revised date for its release is Feb. 9.

The Way We Walk's primary shortcoming is simply its inability to accurately capture and recreate the enthusiasm and vitality of the concert itself. Although the 11 tracks have obviously been recorded from various live performances, they, with a few notable exceptions, still manage to achieve the dull, non-spontaneous feel of studio cuts.

This is not to say that Genesis and its two touring musicians, Daryl Stuermer and Chester Thompson, do not perform competently. Throughout The Way We Walk, they never lose the patented Genesis sound: tight, polished (perhaps at times over-polished) and velvet smooth.

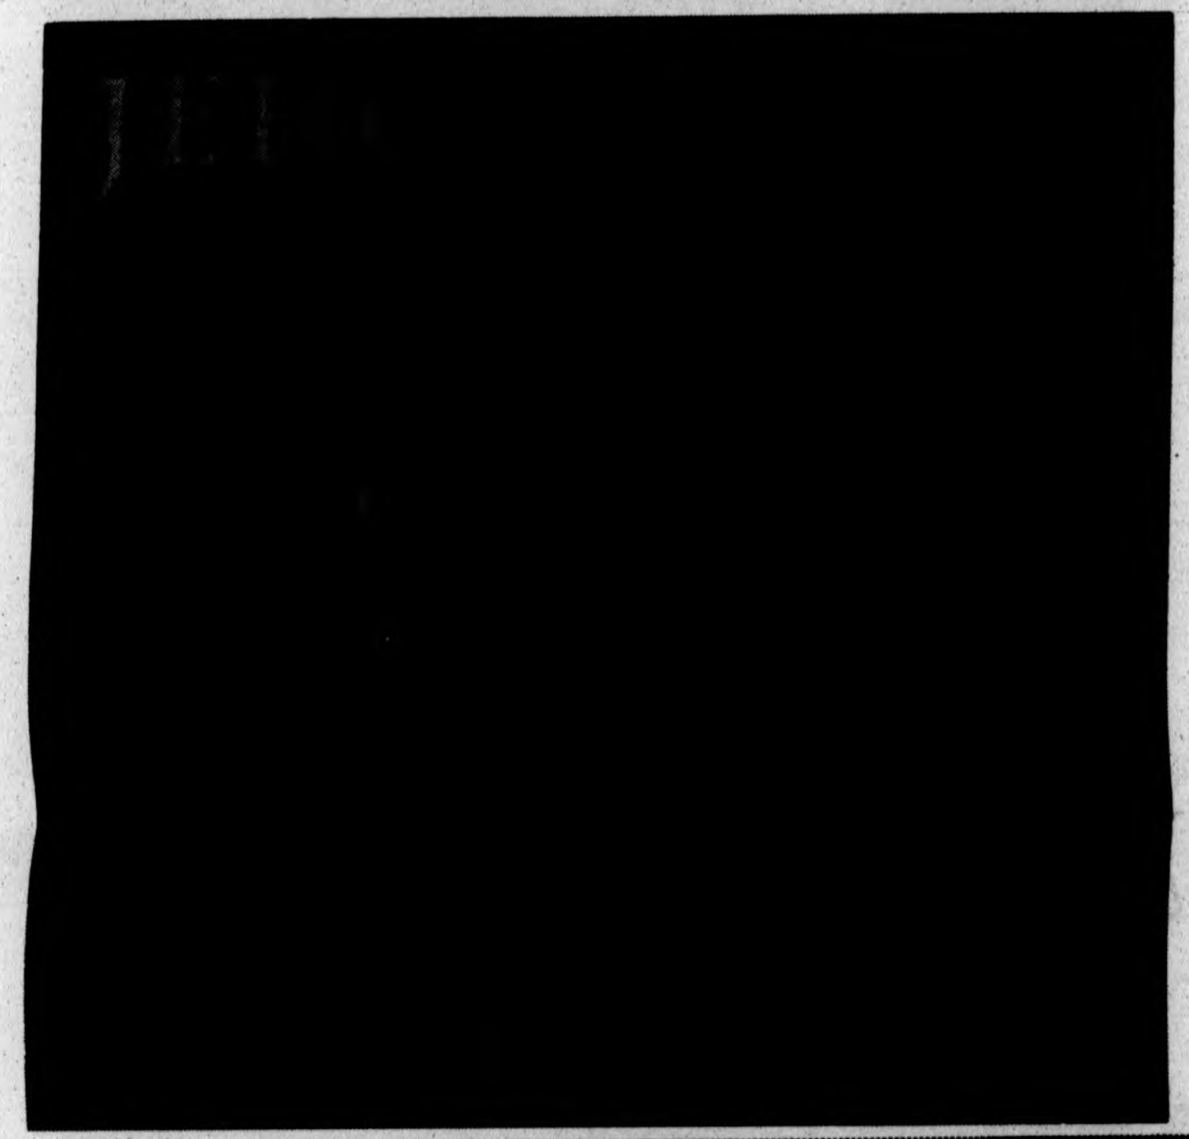
There is the occasional improvisation; Collins hams it up a number of times during "Invisible Touch" and "Jesus He Knows Me," while drummer Chester Thompson occasionally ventures off into uncharted territory, most notable in "Tonight, Tonight, Tonight." Overall, however, the canned sound pervades.

There are three songs that significantly deviate from this cut-and-dry format. Refreshingly, "In Too Deep," "Invisible Touch" and especially "Throwing It All Away," with its airy two-minute crowd sing-along, seem less inhibited and more autonomous than the rest of the album.

Perhaps one expects too much from a live recording. It is, after all, merely an aural recreation of a past event, able to reproduce only a fraction of the total experience. Still, music is not just what one hears, but how it makes one feel, and this is a surprisingly unaffecting album. For the person looking for a greatest-hits collection of hit Genesis singles from the '80s and '90s, this is the record.

Devoted fans, however, will most likely find this album a disappointment. Let's hope that Genesis will stop merely going through the motions and redeem themselves with The Way We Walk, Volume Two.

Jehovahkill breaks from the ordinary sound



By REGGIE S. BEEHNER
Staff Reporter

As your sweaty fingers flip through the endless bins of CDs, your front teeth dully pinching your front lip, and your mind stretching with hopes to find some miraculous lost treasure, you may pause for a brief moment at the latest release from Julian Cope.

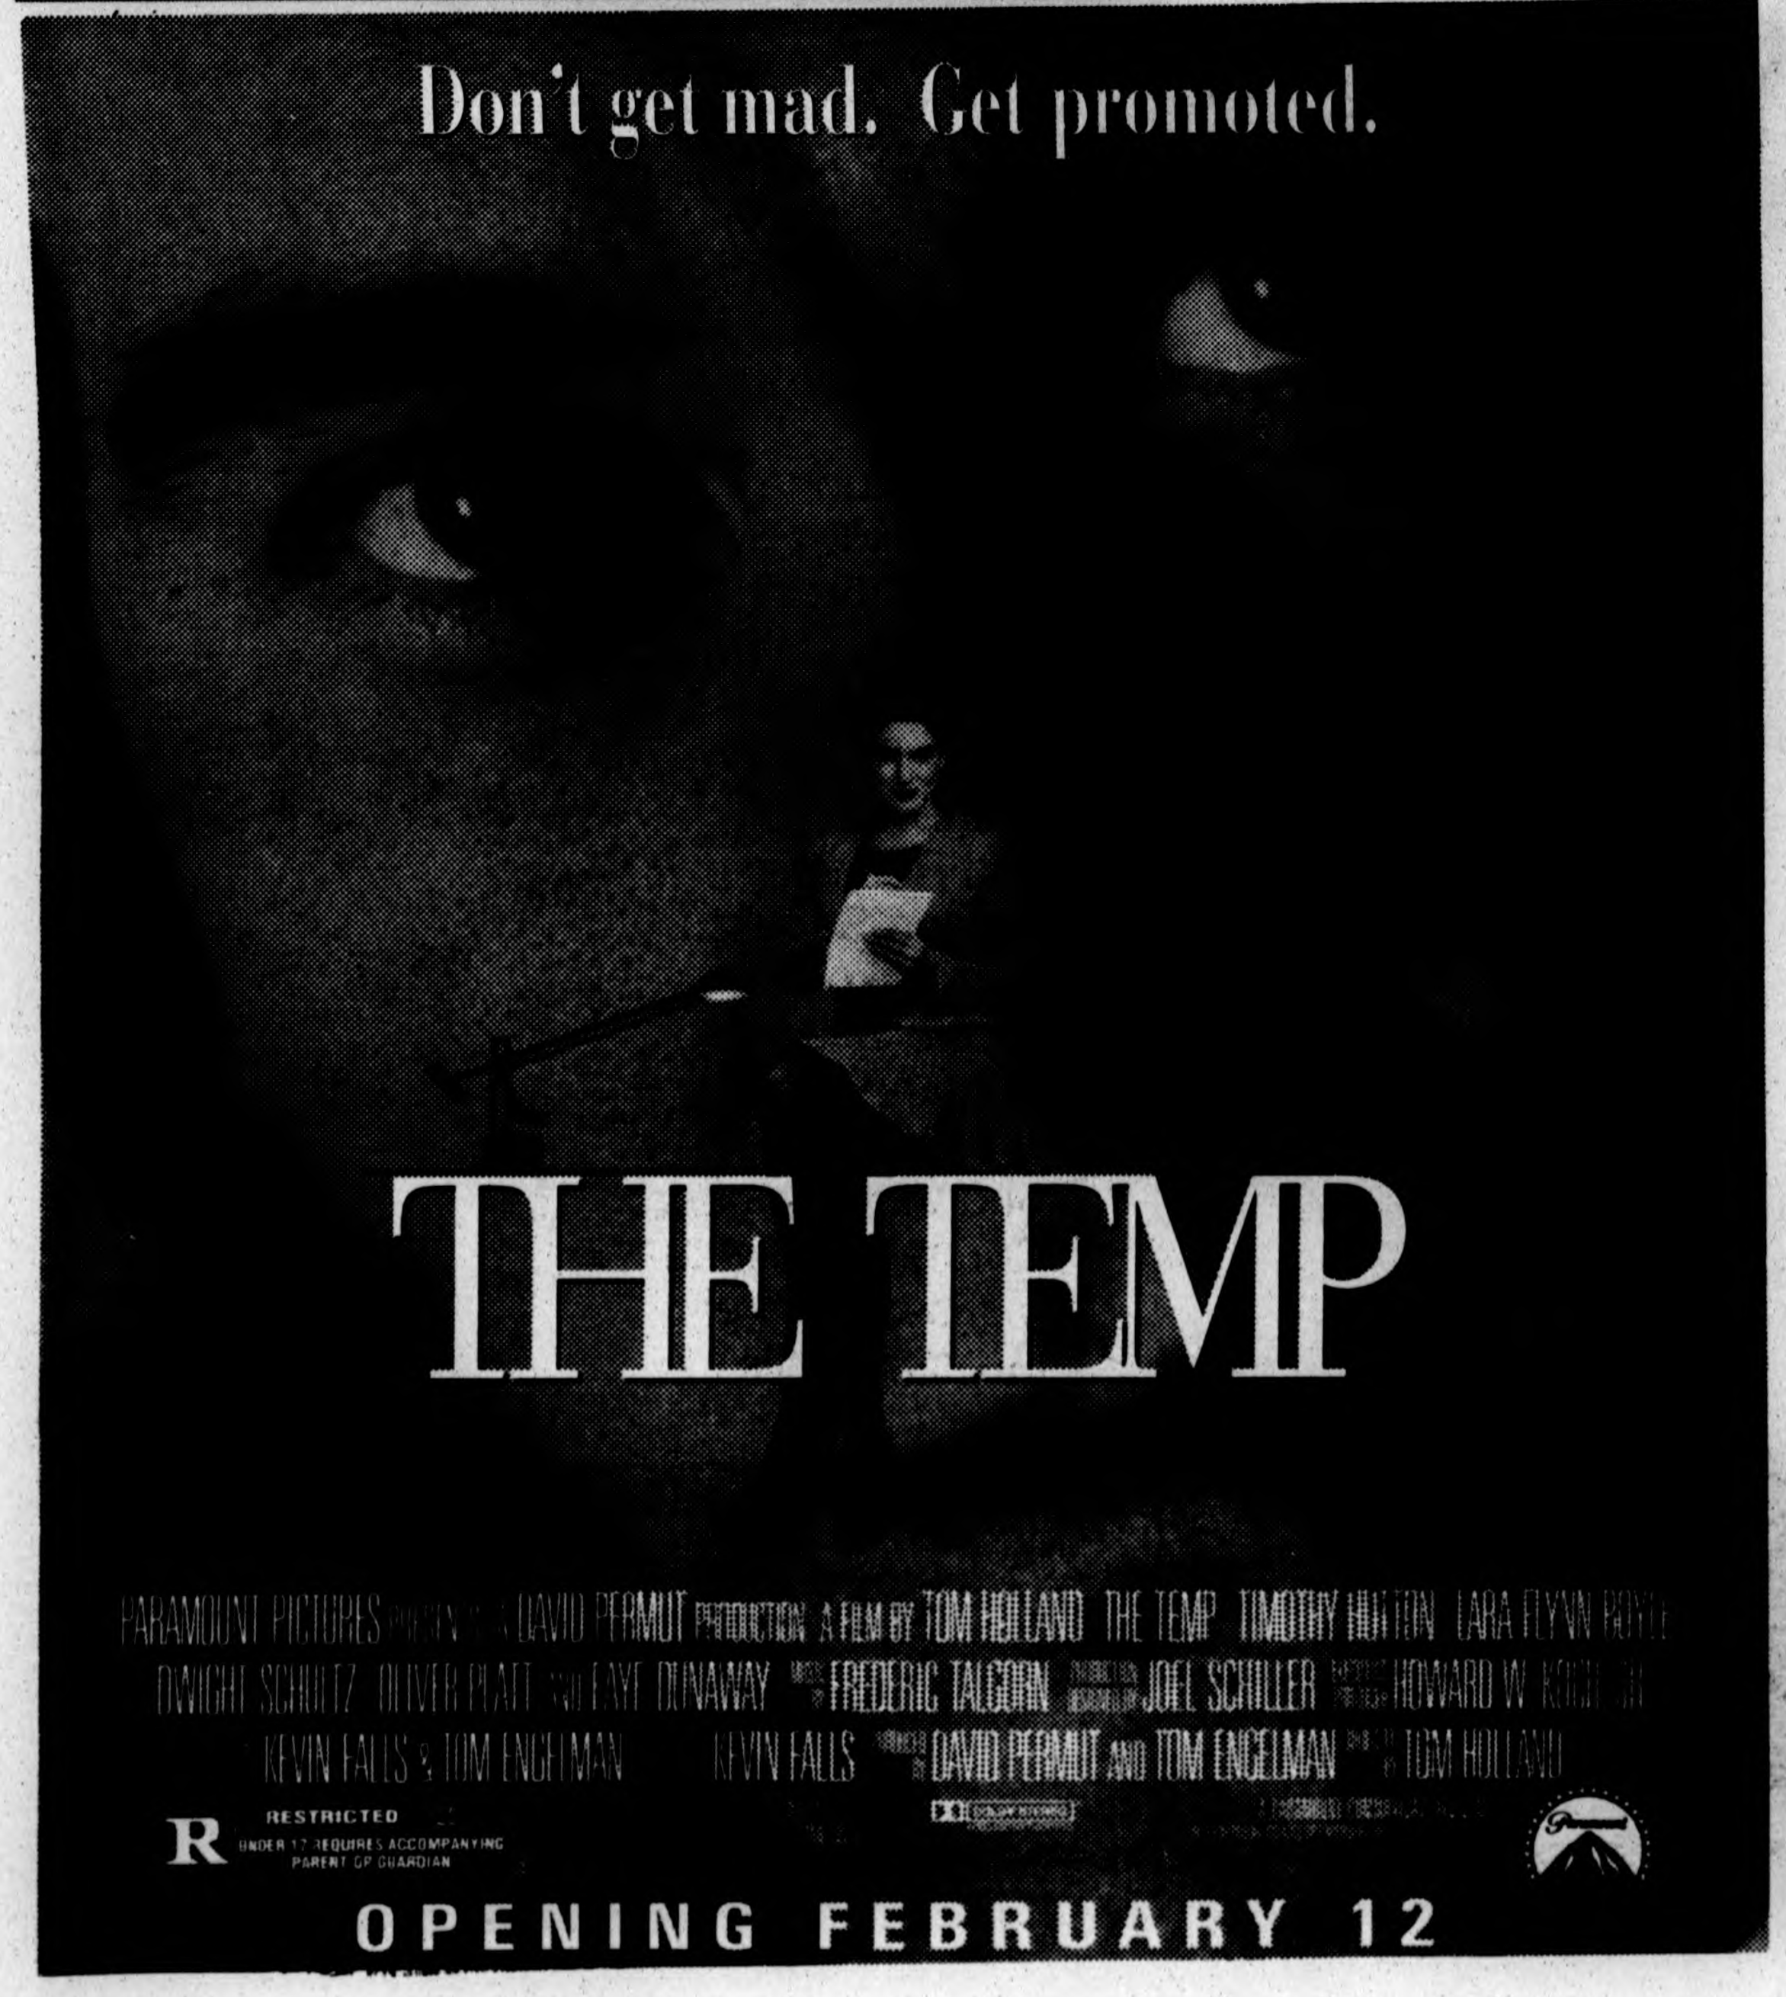
"The cover looks cool," you say to yourself. Then your hand weakens its grip on the unknown CD as you remember previous "cool covers" which all turned out to be distortion-infested ballads exploring the previously explored and delicate world of one's drunken right to party and slander women down to the level of a holiday ham. "All I want is a CD with some real music that has a little depth to it," you say as you slam the CD down and proceed to buy the new Ted Nugent compilation. Well, if this resembles your frustrations as you delve into the music store offerings, then maybe all you need is to listen to Julian Cope's new release Jehovahkill. This music, however, is certainly not for everyone.

Jehovahkill, Cope's latest CD, has a new flavor as well as an underlying theme throughout the hefty 70-minute, 18-second musical pack. His previous CD, Peggy Suicide was more of a concept album. It concentrated on Cope's views of the fantastical murder of Mother Earth at the hands of humankind. Jehovahkill is much looser and personal, as Cope does not so much tackle the issues but challenges us to look at ourselves and our ancient history.

Variety is one of Cope's strong points. Each song seems to have its own identity. "Necropolis" is Cope's European-style anthem often sounding like a Joe Satriani rhythm section. "Slow Rider" sides with the album's more pop feel, and "Upwards at 45 degrees" is the album's most powerful as well as unique song.

Over all, Jehovahkill has a split style it is occasionally dark and submissive, proclaiming celebratory lyrics on mysteries of the ancient world. At other times, Cope seems pleased to appeal to the lighter side of music, often causing the foot to tap unconsciously, all the while keeping its European flavor.

You will probably find Jehovahkill in record stores' alternative bin although the only really alternative aspect of the CD is that the songs are unique and the lyrics are somewhat out of the ordinary. If you want hardcore or grunge, you might want to look elsewhere. But if you want some songs with a slightly different motive and delivery, just maybe Jehovahkill will find its way into your shopping cart, bag or sweaty hands.



Don't get mad. Get promoted.

Ensemble cast shines in 'Used'

By SARAH BREEDEN
Staff Reporter

With the themes of many movies today, what would be the expected plot of a movie entitled "Used People"? Many people would probably expect that such a film would portray a main character who takes advantage of others to achieve his or her desires. Surprisingly, the movie "Used People" ventures far from this theme.

"Used People" is a touching film that explores the possibility of love and marriage the second time around. This heartwarming film is down to earth and true to life. At times, the entire audience laughs aloud only to choke back tears a scene later.

The film's four-star line-up includes such greats as Shirley MacLaine, Kathy Bates, Jessica Tandy, Marcia Gay Harden and Marcello Mastroianni. The film takes place in Queens, N.Y., and opens with a scene from 1948 but rapidly advances to 1968.

Shirley MacLaine portrays Pearl, a set-in-her-ways, widowed Jewish woman with two divorced daughters. MacLaine and Mastroianni provide the theme of second-chance love, while Jessica Tandy and her best friend supply much of the humor. All of these characters have the opportunity to fully develop throughout the film. Additional sub-plots unfold as the film progresses, adding excitement and depth. In addition to the rediscovered love theme, the ideas of family love, frustration, insanity and the creeping hands of time are also interwoven.

While "Used People" may attract an older crowd, moviegoers of almost any age will surely enjoy this film. A mature mood lingers over the film, perhaps requiring all viewers to step back and re-evaluate themselves. "Used People" is not an easy film to explain adequately to another person. In order to truly appreciate this film, it must be personally viewed.

Women dominate Pitt and Delaware meets

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Sports Editor

The women's swimming team has its eye on a second consecutive Big East Championship, and right now, that goal is well within reach. With dominating wins over conference rival Pittsburgh on Jan. 30 and Delaware on Feb. 3, the Cats demonstrated that they are once again the team to beat.

"I feel that we have a strong enough team that we won't have a problem at Big East," said freshman Tammy Kouser.

Kouser added that the women have shown great consistency with their times throughout the season, as they have been swimming well all year. This consistency is reflected in the fact that the Cats have won all of their dual meets this season.

In the Pitt meet, 'Nova swam to an easy win at duPont, breaking a couple of pool and school records in the process. Freshman Eileen Rothenback raced to a record time of 2:02.1 in the 200 meter backstroke, while Kouser set the new standard of :57.4 in the 100 meter back.

The Delaware contest marked the last home meet for the seniors. Seniors Amy Burton, Mary Dowling, Kathy Koerber, Susie Lucas, Jenny Miller, and Brett Northrup made sure their final home meet was a successful one, as 'Nova dismantled the Blue Hens despite the fact that all the women participated in their off events.

But the Cats do not expect to have as easy a time next weekend, when they will take on Syracuse and Miami in a tri-meet Feb. 13 at Syracuse. This will be the team's final competition before the Big East Championships take place Feb. 26-28 at Pittsburgh.

"The Syracuse-Miami meet will probably be our most competitive meet of the season outside of the Big East Championships," said Kouser.

Head Coach Chuck Horton has the team well prepared for the upcoming challenge. Throughout the season, 'Nova has been getting solid performances from everyone on the squad. But in addition to the success expected from the upperclassmen, the freshmen have also stepped in and made major contributions. Kouser, Rothenback, Tracy Bell, Lisa Galpin, and Karen Melliar-Smith have successfully adapted to the college level to score critical points for the team.

"The hard work and dedication will hopefully pay off at the Big East Championships," said an enthusiastic Smith.

have endured throughout the year.

The only negative aspect of the day came at the hands of Ivy League doormat Columbia. Unable to put balls away, 'Nova was outlasted by Columbia's tough defense in the first game and the Cats lost what should have been a sure win. However, 'Nova did display a lot of poise. Down by a game point in the second contest, the Cats came back to beat Columbia 16-14.

With the bitter taste of a tough split with Columbia still in their mouths, the Cats moved on to face perennial powerhouse Bucknell. But Bucknell saw a completely different Wildcat team from the one it had seen play Columbia. 'Nova came out fired up and ready for the Bison. Taking charge, the Cats went up early in the game, only to see Bucknell climb back into the game, tying the match at nine all. But some key kills from middle blocker Walheim and outside hitter Brendan Ivory pushed the Cats ahead for good, as they edged Bucknell 15-12 in the first game.

Unfortunately, the Cats could not sustain the same tempo in the next game, eventually splitting the match 1-1.

In its final match of the day, 'Nova took on a big, athletic team from Geneseo Community College. Although this was perhaps its best game of the day, 'Nova just could not stop Geneseo's power hitters. The Cats would lose both games decisively before being eliminated from the tournament. But the early exit did not disappoint Walheim or the team as they look forward to the upcoming season.

"We really played as well as you could have expected. We had a lot of line-up changes, and gave a lot of young players a lot of time on the court. The most important thing that happened Saturday is that we worked out a lot of our timing quirks, and implemented some offensive plays that we should be able to use consistently throughout the season. Overall, we were very pleased; I think we are headed in the right direction," said Walheim.

Cats excel in Terrier Classic

By SEAN KELLY
Staff Reporter

Villanova's women's indoor track and field team traveled north to Boston University last weekend for the Terrier Classic. As usual, the ladies excelled, adding to their extensive list of ECAC and NCAA provisional and automatic qualifying times.

Without question the top story of the meet was senior Cheri Goddard's impressive 3000 meter competition time of 9:21.14. This time was well over a second faster than the automatic standard of 9:23.00, making her the Cats' second NCAA automatic qualifier.

Goddard is 'Nova's first individual to qualify as an NCAA automatic. Her time registered at 14 seconds under a Jan. 9 showing that was good enough to capture her an NCAA provisional spot for the 3000 meter event.

Overall, the Terrier Classic produced six Wildcat NCAA provisional qualifiers. Meeting the provisional standard in the 3000 meter competition were senior Nnenna Lynch and freshman Megan Flowers. Lynch's third place time of 9:23.83 was only .83 seconds away from reaching the automatic standard. Flowers, who greeted her personal best time in the event Jan. 23, with great pleasure broke that mark last Friday by nine seconds with her fifth place finishing time of 9:28.46.

Both Abby Hunte and Tosha Woodward finished the 800 meter run with times bettering their top personal scores. Hunte's time of 2:08.27 was enough to win her the race. Woodward crossed the line in third at the 2:08.38 mark. These two times, in addition to Renie Ruopoli's fifth place finishing time of 2:09.73, all met the NCAA provisional standard time.

Also in the 800 meter event were freshman Nikki Shaw, junior Emer Molloy, and sophomore Becky Spies. They each ended the race with times good enough to qualify for the ECAC Championships on March 6-7.

The Wildcat's final NCAA provisional standard qualifying time was handed in by Spies who ran a personal best 4:46.63 in the mile. ECAC qualifying times were also turned in after the mile run by Shaw at 4:52.5, senior Chris Gentile at 4:55.5, and freshman Jen Rhines at 4:57.7.

For now, the women's indoor track and field team will continue its lengthy preparation for the national championships that do not begin until March 13. This weekend's trip to upstate New York for the Syracuse University Open will be without the talents of Lynch, Goddard or Gentile. All three seniors will be in action at the Millrose Games in Madison Square Garden for the ECAC Women's College Mile. Saturday's events at Syracuse should also witness the return of 'Nova's premier long distance specialist, Carole Zajac, who has been out tending to a minor injury. Overall the ladies will be striving to capture several more NCAA automatic standards in their upcoming meets.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Nikki Benedix

This week the Villanovan and the Wildcat Club recognize senior Nikki Benedix of the women's basketball team. Benedix was a key figure on both ends of the court in Wildcat wins over Connecticut and Seton Hall last week. The two wins extended 'Nova's winning streak to four games and improved its record to 9-8 (5-4 Big East).

Benedix, a starting guard for the Wildcats, had 13 points in the road win against UConn, tied for the team lead. Against Seton Hall, Benedix had 19 points and led the Cats with 12 rebounds. These two performances, combined with 10 points against Pennsylvania in the previous week, earned her the Big 5 Player of the Week award. Benedix is now averaging 14.4 p.p.g. and 7.7 r.p.g.

Nova, Quintana make strong showing in Boston

By TODD LESKANIC
Staff Reporter

The men's track team came away with impressive results on Jan. 29-30 at a meet in Boston that featured both professional and collegiate athletes.

The 'Nova men were led by junior Mike Going, who ran second in his 300 meter heat with a time of 8:16, a personal best. The following day, Going came back to lead the 4x800 meter team to a qualifying time of 7:23.

"I got two personal bests so I was happy with it," said Going of his performance. "It was an important meet [for the team] because it's the middle of the season. It's important to turn it up a notch at mid-season if we expect to run fast times at the end."

The other runners in the 4x800 meter were freshman Scott Whiteman, sophomore Ken Nason and senior anchor man Brad Summers. All four Cat runners registered times under 1:52.

Also turning in a superb performance was Kevin Christiani. Christiani, a freshman out of Canada, qualified for the IC4A East Coast Championships.

"I ran O.K.," said Christiani. "I was happy with it because I ran the 4:17 standard and you need to get that out of the way before you can qualify."

Three other Cats joined Christiani in the mile. Junior Lou Kahl posted a 4:20, followed by sophomore David Seung and freshman Todd Tressler.

Sophomore Louis Quintana qualified for nationals by posting a time of 7:58 in the 3000 meter en route to a second place finish in his heat. Quintana was surprised at his success.

"I'm happy that I qualified for nationals," said Quintana. "I didn't expect to make it this early because I'm not in shape yet. It was kind of a surprise."

Sophomore Chuck Silvester garnered a 1:04.88 in the 500 meter which was good enough to qualify him for the IC4A Championships. On the way to this time, he broke the 50 second barrier at the 400 meter mark. Joining Silvester was sophomore Andreas Von Scheele with a 1:06.70 time, just shy of the IC4A benchmark.

In the 5000 meter, sophomore Dave Hartman qualified for the IC4A Championships by posting a time of 14:30. Freshman Matt Lamourie registered a respectable time of 14:56 while missing the qualifying time by six seconds.

"I'm not in great shape," expressed a disappointed Lamourie. "I should be able to make 14:50. I'm going to train hard for the next three weeks and I'll be ready for the Big East meet."

Sophomore Jim Sivco also posted a respectable finish in the high jump with a height of six feet, four inches.

"The floor was a little slick," said Sivco, "but the surface and conditions were a great preparation for the upcoming Big East championships."

"Quintana ran a fantastic race and has a chance to do really well in the NCAA," said Coach Marty Stern. "In the 4x800 meter, everyone ran well, especially Summers, who had a personal best. All in all, the men's team is performing really well right now and we are looking forward to placing high in the NCAA tournament, maybe in the top four teams."

Next week the Cats will be splitting up into two squads. The first will head out to the prestigious Melrose Games held at Madison Square Garden. A second squad will travel to Syracuse University to prepare for the upcoming Big East Championships.

Ice Cats drop a third game to Iona, 5-4

By JONATHAN PASSMAN
Staff Reporter

Mama never told them there would be days like these.

The thorn in the side of the Villanova hockey team pierced it once again last weekend, as Iona defeated the Ice Cats 5-4 Jan. 30 at Havertown Skatium. The defeat marked the third time the Ice Cats have lost to the Gaels this year, and it also dropped them to 4-9-3 overall, 3-2-1 in the ECAC South.

"Iona is a good team, but we missed a lot of chances to put the game away," said sophomore Ryan Stattenfield.

Looking to break the Iona hex, Villanova came out firing in the first period, netting two goals. Iona seized its opportunities as well, and at the first intermission Iona and Villanova were tied 2-2.

Villanova struck twice again in the second, but Iona could only manage one goal off freshman goalie Michael Kelly, and Villanova was cruising with a 4-3 lead.

Neither team could manage to score through most of the third period. But with three minutes left, the Gaels took matters into their own hands. With 2:23 left in the game, Iona tied the game at four. Feeling the momentum, the Gaels penetrated Villanova's defense and struck again with only 58 seconds left on the clock to win 5-4.

"If we only could have capitalized on our chances to put the game away in the third period, this never would have happened," said Stattenfield.

The game marked the third time that Iona has outshot Villanova, this time 40-26. The offensive star was Stattenfield with two goals, and freshman Kevin Smith and Junior Jim McGowan each had a score. Junior John Demers had two assists for the Ice Cats. Kelly made 15 saves and fell to 1-3-2.

Villanova holds steady with seven points in the ECAC standings, while Iona moves into the lead with 10 points. Villanova must now make a run this weekend on the road if it wants to stay in playoff contention. 'Nova faces Fairfield Saturday night, and Quinnipiac on Sunday. The Ice Cats beat Fairfield 5-2 and Quinnipiac 5-4 at home in November and will hopefully take that magic on the road. In the tight ECAC South, everything counts.

Volleyball exits early

By MICHEL DAVIES
Staff Reporters

To an outsider, the men's volleyball team's early elimination from the West Point Tournament would appear to signal a bleak season lying ahead. But to the players and people close to the team, it was only another indication of how promising a season this looks for 'Nova volleyball.

A major reason for 'Nova's early elimination was the Cats' slow start. Facing a tough Rhode Island team, 'Nova was unable to mount an offensive attack. As a result, Rhode Island struck early. Once ahead, the Rams refused to let 'Nova back into the game, eventually ripping the Cats 15-4, 15-7.

Although it may seem that a loss like that would be devastating, such was not the case. 'Nova was able to work out a lot of the "winter break kinks" during that game, which helped it later in the day.

"It was our first real match since returning from the break. It really helped get some timing problems worked out," said co-captain Brian Walheim. "We played as well as could have been expected, especially with the amount of line-up problems we

Cats overcome by Pitt

by ERIC WARREN
Staff Reporter

The Villanova men's swimming and diving team suffered a 147-96 loss at the hands of the University of Pittsburgh last weekend. The loss at duPont pool left the men's record at 4-3 and gave them all the more conviction to prepare themselves for the Big East Championships at the end of February.

The underclassmen continued to fare well in the distance freestyle events: apparent as they swept the 500 Free. Freshman Tim Jogan and sophomores Rob Drumm and Pat Donahue touched the wall in 4:36.82, 4:38.55 and 4:40.85, respectively. Drumm was victorious in the 200 Free as he edged out a Panther by one second in 1:43.05. Jogan and Donahue also nabbed second and third in the 1000 Free with times of 9:33.08 and 9:37.90.

'Nova's only other win was provided by senior Ed Paradise as he came back in the final 25 yards to win the 200 Breast in 2:06.50. Junior Glen Langhans and senior Scott Fraser finished second and third in the 200 Fly with clockings of 1:55.27 and 1:56.68. Junior Chris DesMarais, sophomore Brett Loper and Langhans claimed the two, three and four slots in the 200 Back with times of 1:52.11, 1:55.88 and 1:56.99. DesMarais also seized a second place in the 200 IM in 1:55.70.

The Wildcats continue to search for that splendid sprinter. Yet, in the 50 Free, three 'Cats finished within 13 seconds of each other. They were led by sophomore Dan Thomas in 22.02, good enough for third place, followed by sophomore Todd Cimicata and freshman Tom Forrest. Both the 400 Medley Relay and 400 Free Relay were close races and in both instances, 'Nova had to settle for second.

It is interesting to note that Pittsburgh swept both the one meter and three meter diving events, giving them an additional 32 points to 'Nova's six. With the addition of diving powerhouse Miami to the big East, Pitt will not be able to enjoy the volume of points from the diving which it once had. This makes the Feb. 18 tri-meet at Syracuse — including 'Nova and the Hurricanes — all the more important in giving the Wildcats an indication of what to expect at the Big East Championships. As it stands now, no one team seems ready to dominate with 'Nova, Pitt, Miami and 'Cuse eagerly awaiting the showdown.

Men's, Women's Big East Week in Review

By TODD LESKANIC
Staff Reporter

1. Miami (7-2, 12-4)
Big East Rookie of the Week Holly Rilinger led the Lady' 'Canes to a 2-0 road record this past week and sole possession of first place in the Big East. In Miami's 55-50 win at Pitt, Rilinger had six assists and four rebounds. Against Boston College, she had 30 points to help the 'Canes to an 80-67 comeback victory. Miami hosts Syracuse and Providence this week.

2. Connecticut (7-3, 12-5)
The Huskies posted a 1-1 record for the week. They got knocked off by our own Wildcats 50-44 at UConn. The Huskies then rallied to beat Georgetown 81-78 in D.C. Rebecca Lobo led UConn to the victory with 21 points and 15 rebounds. The Huskies play host to St. John's and Syracuse this week.

3. Georgetown (6-3, 12-5)
The Hoyas had a 1-1 week with a loss to Connecticut and a victory at St. John's. The loss was Georgetown's first home loss of the season. Despite the defeat, Kris Witfill threw in 20 points and Leni Wilson managed her 10th double-double of the year with 20 points and 12 rebounds. This week, the Georgetown women will come to duPont and then return home to Pitt.

4. Pitt (5-4, 10-7)
The Lady Panthers suffered a rough week with losses to Miami and St. John's. The loss to the 'Canes was especially tough as the Panthers blew a 16-4 first-half lead. Despite the loss, Jonna Huemrich had 16 points and 16 rebounds in the game. Pitt goes on the road to Providence and Georgetown this week.

4. Providence (5-4, 10-7)
Providence had a 2-0 week and moved up a notch into fifth place in the Big East. On Jan. 28, the Lady Friars knocked off Seton Hall 80-77 with Lucie Fontanella chipping in 20 points and 10 rebounds. At Syracuse on Jan. 30, the Lady Friars outrebounded the Orangewomen 55-33 en route to a 68-55 victory. This week the Lady Friars are at home against Pitt and then travel to Miami.

4. VILLANOVA (5-4, 9-8)

7. St. John's (4-5, 10-7)
The Express posted a 2-1 week record that included victories over Rutgers and Pitt as well as a loss to Georgetown. Big East Player of the Week Pam Odom scored 61 points and had 25 rebounds in the three games. The Express faces important contests this week against Connecticut and Seton Hall.

8. Seton Hall (3-7, 9-9)
The Pirates dropped games to Providence as well as our own Cats and fell closer to the Big East cellar. The Pirates have lost their last five games and face two must-win games this week against St. John's and Boston College.

9. Boston College (2-7, 8-9)
The Eagles also suffered through an 0-2 week with losses to Syracuse and Miami. Despite the dismal week, Sarah Behn still leads the Big East in scoring averaging 26.3 p.p.g. Boston College plays at Seton Hall and comes to duPont this week.

9. Syracuse (2-7, 4-13)
Those of you who have stuck it out and read the whole article are really in for a treat — a Syracuse victory! So it was at B.C., who cares? The 67-59 win was the Orangewomen's first road victory of the season and probably their last. Seniors Holly Oslander and Erin Keneally both had double-doubles in the win. Reality hit three days later as the Orangewomen got dumped by P.C. 68-56.

By BOB TRAVISANO
Assistant Sports Editor

1. St. John's (7-2, 12-5)
The St. John's Redmen took advantage of losses by conference leaders to move into the top spot in the Big East. They beat an otherwise powerful Georgetown team in destructive fashion. Ironically, the onslaught was keyed by outside shooting, the one element that has been lacking in the Johnnies' game this season.

Shawnelle Scott hit all of his eight shots from the field en route to 19 on the night. Sergio Luyk started and ended the 16-0 run that put G'town away for good by drilling a pair of threes. Lamont Middleton also dumped in 11 for the winners.

2. Pittsburgh (6-3, 13-3)
Pitt played host to a tough Syracuse team this past week and the Panthers proved to be too gracious as hosts. The Panthers bowed down in defeat 95-79. In the loss, Pitt got 24 points from Chris McNeal.

2. Boston College (6-3, 12-5)
This past week proved to hold the most important win for a surging Eagles' club. It scored a big win against Georgetown, a team usually known for its Eagle killing. B.C.'s inside game was clicking, with Bill Curley scoring 18 points from his position in the paint. Two of Georgetown's losses in the conference have come against this team. "It's not the idea that we swept them this season, but the fact that we played them tough in a big game," said Curley.

4. Seton Hall (5-3, 15-5)
This time, last week, it seemed that Seton Hall could do no wrong. They beat Villanova and nearly beat a North Carolina team that was flirting with a No. 1 national ranking. What a difference a week makes. The mighty Pirates dropped both of their games this week to conference foes. The first loss was at Syracuse, 76-67, and the second was versus the Hoyas, 73-62. The Hall has its problems in the point department. Leading scorer Terry Dehere had only 36 points in the last three games, where he normally would have had nearly double that. Also, starting point guard Bryan Caver went down earlier in the season with torn ligaments and is not yet 100 percent. It seems that his backup, Danny Hurley, has had trouble adjusting to his full-time role. Only time will tell how far the Pirates will progress.

5. Georgetown (5-4, 12-5)
The bad boys are quickly turning into the sad boys. It all started two Saturdays ago with a gigantic loss to UNLV. Then it was a shelling by Syracuse. The only saving grace for the Hoyas seemed to be the defensive display they put on to beat former conference leader, Seton Hall. Eric Micoud and Kevin Millen combined for 23 points off the bench and Joey Brown had a double-double when he scored a dozen and dished out 13 assists.

The upnote got cut off very quickly as the Hoyas dropped a quick one to an inspired Boston College team. B.C. took the season series from G'town with the victory at home.

6. Syracuse (4-5, 12-5)
The Orangemen pulled off a couple of tough victories against top Big East teams this week. They dethroned number one Seton Hall and also shot down Pitt. Sophomore phenom Lawrence Moten had two big nights with 21 versus the Hall and 25 against Pitt. Adrian Autry contributed 31 in the Panther game. The win against the Pirates was the 13th straight Carrier Dome victory against this foe. Seton Hall has not won at 'Cuse dating back to 1950-51.

6. Connecticut (4-5, 9-6)
Bad times have hit Huskyville. In their last game, they were beaten by new Big East power, St. John's, 72-59. This might not be a big deal to another team, as it can be written off as a bad night. However, their premier player, Scott Burrell, went out indefinitely after this game with nagging leg and ankle injuries. This could spell the end for the Huskies. One more conference loss could be the straw that breaks their chances of getting into the BIG DANCE.

8. Miami (3-6, 5-11)
In a battle of the Big East bottom dwellers, Villanova got the best of a visiting Miami team struggling for recognition in a new conference. The win kept 'Nova from extending a seven-game losing streak, the longest since the 1973-74 season.

9. Providence (2-6, 9-7)
Providence played no Big East games this past week, but won big against an over-matched Darmouth team, 78-58.

9. VILLANOVA (2-7, 6-9)

Hoops Preview

Villanova -vs- St. Joseph's Saturday, Feb. 6 3 p.m.
Site: The Spectrum TV: Prism Radio: 89.1 WXVU

In what may be considered the biggest rivalry between Big Five teams, the Wildcats meet the Hawks at the Spectrum on Saturday afternoon. Year after year, the biggest contest on the St. Joe's schedule is the 'Nova game. Despite the rise of the A-10 and demise of the Big East, the Hawks will be on the hunt.

St. Joe's will be armed and ready tomorrow afternoon. Coach Griffin will dish out a three guard offense against the Cats. Many experts consider the tandem of Bernard Blunt and Rap Curry to be among the top five backcourts in the country. Blunt, a 6-foot-3 scoring machine, earned All-Conference honors as he lead the A-10 in scoring (19.7 p.p.g.). He currently averages 18.6 p.p.g. and 6.2 r.p.g. Look for Blunt to post up and fire from long range. Curry, the 6-foot-3 point man, is currently second in the A-10 in assists. His penetrating skills will test Jonathan Haynes. He averages 13.1 p.p.g. and 5.3 a.p.g.

The third guard is 5-foot-9 freshman Mark Bass. Bass prepped at Maine Central Institute in 1991-'92, where 10 other teammates moved on to Division I programs this season. He is a cat-quick, explosive phenom. This fan's favorite on Hawk Hill averages 10 p.p.g.

Bernard Jones, a 6-foot-5 sophomore, and 6-foot-7 junior Carlin Warley round out the starting five. Warley, the all-time career scoring leader in Philly high school hoops, was the top rebounder in the Atlantic 10 last season with nine rebounds per game. He is a ferocious, consistent performer who currently averages 12.6 p.p.g., and 10 r.p.g. His 20 rebound effort early in the season was the most for a Hawk since 1973. Jones, a 54 percent field goal shooter, averages 6.9 r.p.g. and 12.1 p.p.g. as the team's power forward. He too has been very consistent, as he notched career highs in points and rebounds against Pennsylvania. The Hawk bench is quite limited; only Demetrius Poles has logged significant playing time. He averages 3.8 p.p.g.

Tomorrow's game will offer the Villanova big men a chance to dominate. The Hawks are a small, but quick and athletic basketball team. Their tallest starter is Warley at 6-foot-7, followed by Jones at 6-foot-5. Look for the 6-foot-8 Poles to check in early for Bass if the Cats start Pelle and Bryson. Despite their slight size, the Hawks outrebounded their opponents. The Cats have struggled this season in games in which they have been outrebounded (1-7), so look at this as the key stat.

'Nova wins second straight at Pitt

By ED WASIELEWSKI
Sports Editor

Do not write off the '92-'93 Villanova Wildcats. Not yet, at least.

After dropping seven consecutive Big East contests, the Cats have responded with back-to-back wins against Miami and 15th-ranked Pittsburgh. With the two victories, the Cats improved their conference record to 3-7 and showed that, yes, they could hold onto a late second half lead.

Most recently, the Wildcats traveled to Pitt Feb. 3, upsetting the nationally-ranked Panthers, 82-76.

It was a typical Big East game for the Wildcats. For the first 35 minutes the game see-sawed back and forth with 'Nova clinging to a slight lead. And in the final five minutes, the game tightened up, considerably, as the Panthers made a surge, pulling to within 70-69 with just over three minutes left.

"I know a lot of people were probably thinking, 'Here we go again,' but I never thought, 'Here we go again,' " said Lance Miller, the hero in the Pitt game with 27 points. "This whole season we've been making the dumb mistake that would cost us the game. But we were determined to make sure it was not going to happen again."

Sure enough, it would not be a typical ending for the Wildcats. No last minute jitters. No last minute blunders. And most importantly, no last minute loss. Instead, the Cats played with poise and confidence down the stretch, securing the victory by hitting 10 out of 12 free throws.

And what a great all-around effort by Miller. After scoring just seven points in the first half, the senior co-captain scorched Pitt for 20 second half points. And for the first time in Big East competition this season, Miller made the big plays when 'Nova needed them most, scoring 11 of the team's final 20 points and coming up with several key steals.

"I think Lance, like a lot of our players, has matured through this thing [the seven game losing streak]," said Head Coach Steve Lappas. "He made good decisions, and that was the major reason why we were able to execute down the stretch."

Midway through the second half, though, the Wildcats appeared ready to pack it in as Pitt made a mini-run, cutting the 'Nova lead to one on several occasions. With Anthony Pelle on the bench strapped with four fouls, the Panthers then fed the ball inside to their big men, 6-foot-11 center Eric Mobley and power forward Chris McNeal. With a smaller Villanova lineup on the floor, the Panthers exploited this advantage for numerous second chance opportunities, collecting 40 caroms in the process.

But instead of folding, the Wildcats played like seasoned veterans, protecting the basketball and hitting their shots from the charity stripe (20-24). Seniors James Bryson and Calvin Byrd hit key free throws late in the game, and Miller weaved his way through the Pitt defense to secure 'Nova's third Big East victory.

"I think we played like this all year, except for the last four minutes [of games]," said Lappas. "I was not displeased with the way we have been playing all season, I've been displeased with the way we've been playing in the last four minutes."

Lappas also had to be pleased with his halfcourt offense. Unlike other conference games, the Cats produced high percentage shots from within the paint, hitting 58 percent of their shots and setting up Bryson for a season-high 20 points. The offense also received a spark from Byrd who came off the bench to notch 16 points and four rebounds.

"We have got a little confidence now and I think we can put a streak together," said Miller. "If we can, I think we can get ourselves at least a winning record in the Big East. That is our goal."

Now that the Wildcats have shown they can win in these close games, who knows what the rest of the season will bring. Just remember, do not write off these Cats.

Notes: Kittles' consistency reminds some of Lance Miller's freshman season. Kittles' all-out aggressive nature and desire is displayed every minute he is on the court. Pelle's development reminds one of Rasheed Wallace's pre-season comments regarding player development on the Cat squad. He wanted to see how the younger players would progress. Thus far, Pelle, Haynes and the freshmen are coming along well. Wallace's visit to North Carolina is pending. We all hold our breath. Maybe it will snow or something down there. How about a mild hurricane? To the student section at duPont: your frenzied demeanor following Christmas Break reminds this writer of the Arizona game on CBS a couple of years ago. It's awesome, baby!

Please forgive Villanova women's hoops coach Harry Perretta if he has an I-told-you-so attitude these days. After his troops' two momumental wins over Connecticut and Seton Hall this past week, it would be hard for Perretta to feel any differently.

The slow start to the Cats' season seems a distant memory at this point as 'Nova flew over the .500 mark — both overall (9-8) and in the Big East (5-4).

"What people didn't understand at the beginning of the year and what I knew is that we have a very inexperienced team," said Perretta after the Cats' fourth consecutive victory over Seton Hall. "They needed time, they needed to play games, they needed to find their way, they needed to struggle, and they needed to learn. I thought with time we could be half-decent, but at the beginning of the season, we just were not ready, and you have just got to fight your way through it."

> Our seniors are starting to pick it up a little bit.
> Head Coach Harry Perretta

The Wildcats who beat the Hall Jan. 30 looked like an entirely different team from the one that stumbled to an [illegible]-3 start. The lead shifted several times late in the game, but in crunch-time, the defense of senior Nikki Benedix and the offense of senior Karen Connell (23 points) KO'd the Pirates and dropped the Hall's record to 9-9 (3-7 Big East).

"They were forcing a physical game," said Connell, referring to the total of 35 fouls committed by both teams. "They have a physical team. They're strong both inside and outside."

> Connecticut loses very few games during the year, and they lose even less at home, so it was a gigantic win for our team.
> Head Coach Harry Parretta

Though Benedix had a double-double (19 points, 12 rebounds) for the game, it was her defensive play late in the game that made the difference for 'Nova. She seemed to have a hand on every Pirate pass down the stretch. Benedix also forced three jump balls in the game's final five minutes, the first of which pulled Seton Hall's Dawn Johnson down to the floor flat on her face.

Trailing 63-60, the Wildcats got a clutch three-point play from Connell, who scored on a layup and drew the foul. Her free throw tied the game, and Benedix brought the house down a minute later when she converted on a Sheri Walker rebound. The Lady Pirates never scored again, and Villanova won 67-63.

"Our seniors are starting to pick it up a little bit," said Perretta after the game. "Sheri Walker's playing well. Nikki's playing real well, and Karen Connell's starting to score points for us, which we really need out of the center spot."

The Wildcats proved they could keep their intensity up even after their most significant victory of the season on Jan. 27. This win came on the road against the University of Connecticut (8-8-, 4-4 Big East). The Huskies' Gampel Pavilion, which regularly draws over 4,000 fans for women's hoops games, may well be the most difficult arena for Big East teams to play. The Cats were not fazed, disappointing the 3,089 Husky fans in attendance by winning 50-44.

"Connecticut loses very few games during the year, and they lose even less at home, so it was a gigantic win for our team," said Perretta.

The Cats scored the final five points of the first half on a jumper from Connell and a Jennifer Maga layup and free throw. Leading 23-19 as the second half got underway, the game's outcome was never in doubt. 'Nova never led by any less than four through the rest of the game.

Connell and Benedix led the Cats in scoring with 13 apiece. Maga and freshman Jen Snell both tallied nine points. Leading rebounders were Connell with six and Snell with five.

The Cats round out a three game homestand when they host Boston College tomorrow at 2 p.m. Their next game is on the road against the University of Pittsburgh Feb. 10.

Rightsizing program increases quality of student applicants

"The quality of the students admitted to Villanova will be much better because we can be more selective."

By KATE SZUMANSKI
News Editor

The University's rightsizing program is a five-year plan to reduce the number of students enrolled as full-time undergraduates, said the Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president of Academic Affairs.

The undergraduate population has already been reduced from 6,500 students to 5,700 students, added Gallen.

"The University has decided to rightsize for two reasons," said Gallen. University facilities were over-stressed, he said. By rightsizing, current facilities and the new facilities being constructed on West Campus will be more than adequate to care for the number of undergraduate students on campus, he added.

"The quality of the students admitted to Villanova will be much better because we can be more selective," said Gallen. By accepting fewer students, the quality of the student body will increase, he said. According to the University Senate report submitted by the University Planning and Priorities Committee Nov. 20, "enhancing Villanova's reputation nationally and increasing the degree of cultural and social interaction on campus" is listed as one of the highest operational priorities of the University. The same number of students who were admitted into the freshman class last year, 1,470, were admitted this year, said Gallen.

"Full-time faculty and staff are being reduced through early retirements," said Gallen. "No one is being fired," he added. According to the University's Senate report, "allocating funds for post-retirement benefits" for faculty and staff is listed as one of the highest operational priorities.

All University departments and offices are involved in the rightsizing program and are reducing together, said Gallen.

"The average class section size currently is 23.12 students," said Gallen. "This number is slowly going up to 24 or 25," he said. "Section size must be increased in order to maintain faculty and staff salaries," he added. The slight increase in class section size will have no adverse effects, he added.

Because there are 50 freshman seminars with 15 students per class, other class sections have to be slightly larger to make up the difference, Gallen said.

"I believe the rightsizing program is a smart and quality move on the University's part and I am pleased with the results," said Gallen. Rightsizing is not an economic necessity at the University as it is in other colleges and universities, he said. "We're doing it because we want to," he added.

Mystery illness strikes students

By ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWSKI

Approximately 85 south campus residents were stricken with a "virus-like illness" Feb. 9, according to a statement released by Stephen T. Bell, director of Public Relations for the University.

Of the students suffering symptoms of the yet undetermined illness, 60 were taken to area hospitals including Bryn Mawr, Paoli Memorial Hospital, Lankenau Hospital and Mercy Haverford Hospital, the statement read. One student was admitted to Bryn Mawr Hospital, while the others were treated and released.

"In a situation like this, the question becomes why did 70 to 75 people get sick at once if it is a flu or virus. That's not likely to happen. If it is the flu, it would have been seen in the community and we haven't seen this problem anywhere else," said Ellen Mattes, manager of public relations for Bryn Mawr Hospital.

"When I got my first call around 12:30 a.m., it was said that the cause was bad meat in the tacos, but some of the sick students were saying that they didn't have the tacos," added Mattes. The problem with food poisoning is that it's important to look at everything that has been eaten in the past 24 to 36 hours rather than only at the most recent meal, said Mattes.

Fifteen students were treated at Bryn Mawr hospital during the night of Feb. 9, said Mattes. Fourteen were released and one student was admitted. Also, four more students arrived for treatment at approximately noon on Feb. 10, added Mattes.

"We treated 18 Villanova students. All were treated and released," said a public relations representative for Paoli Memorial Hospital.

Lankenau Hospital reported that "four students came in for treatment and were discharged," according to a hospital representative. Six students were treated at Mercy-Haverford Hospital and released on the night of Feb. 9. An additional three students sought treatment at Mercy-Haverford Hospital early in the afternoon of Feb. 10, said a representative of the hospital.

The University physician, Dr. Denis Boyle Jr., was on south campus examining sick students from 11:30 p.m. until 4:30 a.m., said Elizabeth H. Kenney, R.N., of the University infirmary. The doctor returned to campus at 7:30 a.m. to examine more students who were experiencing the same symptoms of vomiting, diarrhea and severe abdominal cramps, added Kenney.

Dr. Boyle spent the afternoon of Feb. 10 treating more sick students on south campus, said Kenney.

AIDS Awareness Week focuses on HIV and AIDS education and prevention

By JANE PAPACCIO
Assistant News Editor

The University will hold its first AIDS Awareness Week Feb. 13 to Feb. 20. "The purpose of the week is to raise the awareness level of all members of the Villanova community of the issues of AIDS and HIV in the hopes that they will make improved decisions concerning their personal actions," said Gary Bonas, associate director of Student Activities.

The activities for the week are not of the typical lecture style, said David Martin, chair of the AIDS Awareness Week Committee.

"Events we have planned will involve many hands-on things; it will be more than just lectures," said Bonas. "The feedback we've received from students and faculty is that we're not doing enough to keep AIDS on everyone's mind; we're going to try to keep the topic of HIV in front of them at all times," added Bonas.

There will be videos shown throughout the week in all of the cafeterias during lunch and dinner explaining the truth about AIDS and HIV, said Bonas. Numerous public service announcements will be aired on WXVU throughout the week and at half-time of the Seton Hall vs. Villanova game to dispel the myths about AIDS, said Martin. At many of the masses, priests will include the AIDS topic in their homilies, added Martin.

Red ribbons will be sold for $1 in Bartley Hall and Connelly Center. By wearing the ribbon, students and faculty will be able to show that they are aware of the threat AIDS poses in the University community, said Martin.

Members of the committee will be collecting money throughout the week. "The money raised from the red ribbons and the missing sense of community," said Goodman. "We have lost the glue that made our society more than just a collection of individuals."

The women's movement is proof that something else is happening in this social change, as women move from one life pattern to another, Goodman said.

Goodman explained the evolution of the "superwoman" myth. It started out as an expression of anxiety about the loss of the caretaker role as women moved into the work force. Women then began trying to have it all by doing it all, according to the common media myth, she said.

More than two-thirds of women with children under 18 years are working, and one-half of women with children under one year are in the work place, Goodman said.

In the 1980s, more women overtook men's roles than men overtook women's roles. "It is easier for women to get into men's jobs than change them," said Goodman.

Women were more successful adapting to traditionally male values, such as independence, than men were in taking on communal values, Goodman added.

> We have lost the glue that made our society more than just a collection of individuals.

However, the change was lopsided with women still earning 70 cents to the men's $1. Women tried to make up for this discrepancy by working harder at home with or without the help of their male counterparts, Goodman said.

College-aged women do not always speak up about what they think, according to Goodman. "There is a prevalent idea in society that if women speak up, they'll be rejected."

"Young women are encouraged to think about how they will balance work and family," Goodman said. But men may not think about this situation until they are confronted by it, she added.

"Having a voice is the bottom line," Goodman said.

In 1967, Goodman began writing for the Boston Globe. She has written four books, including Making Sense, Turning Points, Close to Home and At Large. She received the Pulitzer Prize in 1988.

This lecture was part of the Sesquicentennial symposium focusing on "Leadership and Human Values: Paradox or Possibility?" The symposium includes three panel presentations on public service advocacy and corporate culture.

Students gain work experience through internships

By JANE BONO
Staff Reporter

University students in the College of Arts and Sciences may gain work experience in their academic field as well as earn departmental credits through the Internship program.

The Internship program, which was formally established in 1977, provides students with an opportunity to acquire professional work experience and future job contacts, said Dr. Albert J. Dorley, Jr., director of the Internship program. While working, students are able to put into practice the knowledge they have acquired in the classroom. In addition to exposing students to the work force, the Internship program also challenges and develops students socially, intellectually and emotionally, added Dorley.

The program is open to juniors and seniors of virtually all departments in the College of Arts and Sciences. Dorley said there is no limit to the number of internships offered, provided that the student has a minimum cumulative grade point average of 3.0. Each year, approximately 150 students participate, some involved in numerous internships adding up to 15 credits in their academic department.

Internships may be part-time or full time, and costs are covered by tuition or financial aid normally received by the student. Positions are available in the summer, fall and spring semesters, mostly in the Delaware Valley, but also in Washington, D.C., Boston and other areas on the East Coast. Hundreds of agencies and companies participate in the program, said Dorley.

Dorley is also the director of the community involvement program. This pass/fail elective course requires that students work a minimum of six hours each week of the semester for charities, nonprofit groups, hospitals, or other organizations. Students who serve the community are awarded three credits.

University students may attend academic seminars in Washington, D.C. By participating in briefings, panel discussions, lectures, and site visits, students are exposed to a variety of opinions and ideas regarding national and world issues, said Dorley. The seminars are scheduled between semesters and terms, last two or three weeks and are worth three credits, he added.

Students can also receive credit by examination, said Dorley. If students display an advanced knowledge in certain subject areas, they may take a departmental test. If they pass, they may not only satisfy their course requirement, but may also receive credit for the course as well. The University believes this program motivates students to study independently in an attempt to master their subject matter, said Dorley.

Students interested in receiving credit by examination, or participating in the Internship, academic seminar or Community Involvement program are encouraged to contact Dorley in the St. Augustine Center for the Liberal Arts.

Public Safety Department releases crime stats

By JENNIFER TRZASKA
Staff Reporter

Underage drinking and theft characterized the Public Safety crime report for November and December, said Jim Conway, Public Safety Investigator.

The drinking violations on campus are up dramatically from last year, and there is a "direct correlation between the increase of drinking on campus and the increase in vandalism," added Conway.

In November there was one burglary, eight counts of vandalism, one incident of graffiti and three assaults, two of which were not prosecuted, said Conway. An arrest did occur during Homecoming as a result of one of the assaults, added Conway.

In addition, there were five thefts from buildings on campus, three auto thefts, two bicycle thefts and one theft from a coffee machine. Three of the thefts involved clearance which went to Judicial Affairs.

Alcohol proved to be a major problem for the University in November. Ten liquor violations were cited, as well as four violations for drunkenness, three of which involved Judicial Affairs. The other ended in an arrest. In addition, there was one count of drunk driving on campus and six possessions of alcohol. All six went to Judicial Affairs, said Conway. Public Safety also cited one disorderly conduct, added Conway.

In December, there was one burglary on campus, 10 counts of vandalism and two incidents of graffiti. There were also three counts of arson, one theft from a building, one count of indecent assault, one possession of alcohol and one drunkenness violation, said Conway. Another possession of alcohol involved an arrest. One theft of a license plate, one theft from a coin operated machine and two book bags were reported stolen, added Conway.

Although "date rapes are down from last year which is a major concern," drinking remains a big problem, Conway said. Because townships are cracking down on bars, kids are drinking on campus, added Conway.

Brown and Preate address values and public service

By JENNIFER MUNDY
Staff Reporter

The University conducted its second of four programs Feb. 9 in the series "Leadership and Human Values" as part of the Sesquicentennial celebration. This discussion, entitled "Leadership, Human Values and Public Service," focused on the question: "How do effective public officials attempt to balance public needs and priorities and reflect popular will?"

This program not only addressed issues of ethics in governmental leadership but also illustrated the University's commitment to human values and ethical concerns in all educational endeavors.

> Public officials do owe us their independent judgement. However, if *they get too far ahead of their fellow constituents they will become ineffective.
> James Brown, Chief-of-Staff to Pennsylvania governor

Panel members included James Brown, chief-of-staff to the governor of Pennsylvania. Brown is a 1973 Villanova graduate and has taught the honors course "Political Campaigns and Elections."

The second panelist was Pennsylvania Attorney-General Ernie Preate. As Attorney-General, Preate has made the war on drugs a top priority. He has defended the state's death penalty and its Abortion Control Act before the U.S. Supreme Court.

> It is the job of the public official to inform, to educate and to lead from the front.
> Ernie Preate, Attorney General of Pennsylvania

Brown and Preate emphasized the importance of striking a balance between the public needs and the public will. Public officials must reflect on society's needs and the public will, said Preate.

"Public officials do owe us their independent judgement. However, if they get too far ahead of their fellow constituents they will become ineffective. You must be responsive to your constituents but not too responsive," said Brown.

Some basic moral issues simply cannot be compromised, Brown said. We must recognize that some issues involve moral principles which cannot be watered down, added Brown.

"It is the job of the public official to inform, to educate and to lead from the front," said Preate.

Pikes win awards

Nine members of the Pi Kappa Alpha Fraternity traveled to Albany, New York for the Pi Kappa Alpha 1993 Mid-Atlantic Regional Conference. Art Oliver, Dan Reilly, Mike Posk, John Darmanin, Chris Bonner, Keith Dolan, John Musumara, Mike Mascarina and Anthony Palladino attended the conference. Chapters from Syracuse University, Lehigh University, Cornell University, Seton Hall University, among others, were in attendance.

At the award ceremony, the Theta Chi chapter of Pi Kappa Alpha at the University collected four regional awards. The first award was for community service. The University chapter worked 700 hours in soup kitchens. The chapter also sponsored blood drives, "Pikes for Tykes," and other events.

The second award was for alumni support. The chapter keeps in contact with alumni through semester newsletters and alumni programming of events such as Homecoming, Founder's Day and Reunion Weekend.

Consistent quality in Rush programs and high rush numbers earned the chapter the Rush Award. The fourth and final award was given in overall chapter excellence; this was determined by a chapter consultant who visited in the fall semester and rated the overall organization of the chapter excellent.

This upcoming semester, the chapter will hold its annual "Hunt for Hunger" philanthropy event which collects canned food. It will also hold Founder's Day, an annual event which gives active members a chance to speak with alumni.

The chapter's ultimate goal is to win a Smythe Award at the summer's Leadership Academy. The Smythe Award is named after Robert Adager Smythe, a founding father of the fraternity; it is the highest recognition a chapter can receive.

Blahs Lead To Blues

DAYTON, Ohio — Winter blahs actually can lead to the winter blues.

Judith Allik, associate professor of psychology at the University of Dayton, says the dark, cold days of winter can result in seasonal affective disorder (SAD). SAD creates "a general sense of malaise," according to Allik, and seems to strike women more often than men.

"January and February can be really rough for some people," Allik said. "The symptoms don't vary from general depression. You're apt to be lethargic. You're apt to sleep more than you usually might. It might affect your appetite — you might eat more carbohydrates."

If you can't take a vacation to a sunnier spot, Allike suggested that exposure to bright lighting for several hours a day can help relieve symptoms. "Whenever there is sun, get outside and expose yourself to as much of it as you can. Take a walk," she advised.

Student Objects To Slur

ORLANDO, Fla. — A University of Central Florida student dropped a class in Judaic studies because she said the instructor made a comment using the word "nigger" after she asked him a question, the campus newspaper reported.

Lynn Carswell said that she used the term "Old Testament" when asking instructor Joseph Gutmann a question, and he responded by telling her he found the reference offensive because it implied that the Jewish religion is outdated.

"How would you like to be called a nigger?" he allegedly asked Carswell, who is African American. He then asked another African American student, Valerie Rozier, the same question.

Gutmann, who is an adjunct professor, has apologized to the student, according to the University of Central Florida Future, the campus newspaper. The incident was being reviewed by the administration, the paper said.

Aspiring Attorneys Teach Law

ADA, Ohio — A group of aspiring lawyers from Ohio Northern University's College of Law are teaching high school students about aspects of law that may directly affect them.

Under the Street Law program, 65 Ohio Northern University law students are teaching 12-week mini-courses to senior and junior civics and American history classes at five high schools in the area.

The soon-to-be attorneys are instructing high schoolers on the fine points of landlord and tenant law, child custody law, what their rights are if detained by police or accused of a crime, consumer law, search and seizure law, and laws about violent crime.

"The vast majority of high school students here have no contact with a lawyer and know only what they see on TV," said Sherry Young, director of the Street Law program.

canning will go back to AIDS Education here at Villanova," added Martin.

The Student Nurses Association of Pennsylvania (SNAP) will have a demonstration on Feb. 17.

Dr. Richard Keeling, chair of the Health Services Department of the University of Virginia and former president of the American College Health Association will give a lecture, said Bonas: Keeling is the most well known AIDS lecturer on the college circuit, added Bonas.

"His topic is not, as most would think, how to prevent getting HIV. Instead, he will discuss why students do not do what they know is correct," said Bonas. This does not only apply to unprotected sex, but also to drinking and driving and doing drugs, added Bonas.

"It is mandatory for all pledges to attend this lecture," said Martin.

There will be a popcorn giveaway Feb. 19 from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m., added Martin. The bags for the popcorn will have AIDS information printed on them. There will also be a safety pledge students will be asked to sign, said Martin. The pledge will state that the signer is aware of the threat AIDS poses and will take precaution and act responsibly, added Martin.

The committee will be placing fliers on cars, hanging banners in the dining halls and handing out literature "with the intent of getting people as educated as possible," said Martin. "It's up to you to partake and learn about HIV," he added.

"AIDS is a big problem on campus. To a certain extent there's a lack of knowledge about HIV. The more important issue is how people respond to their knowledge. The question is: are you more willing to make responsible decisions concerning your sex life in light of AIDS?," said Bonas.

"One in 500 college students are HIV positive. You are not immune here at Villanova; be responsible," said Martin.

UC-Berkeley student expelled for violating nudity rules

By College Press Service

A University of California at Berkeley student who wore little more than a smile around campus was expelled from the school for violating public nudity and indecent exposure rules, a university spokesperson said.

Luis Andrew Martinez, 19, was sent a notification that he was expelled on Jan. 21, university spokesperson Marie Felde said. He has an opportunity to appeal the expulsion, but must show either new evidence or good cause to be allowed back into the school.

Martinez, dubbed the "Naked Guy," was arrested twice in October for being on campus with little, if any, clothes on, and was suspended for two weeks in November. He was a sophomore and attended the Berkeley campus full time. He usually wore only a pair of shoes and donned a daypack while he attended classes and walked around campus.

"He was given many opportunities to comply with our rules. He declined," Felde said.

In September 1992 Martinez held a "nude-in" on campus and in front of hundreds of observers, Martinez and two dozen supporters stripped off their clothes.

Martinez claimed that being nude on campus was a form of free expression. While he got some support at the rally, the campus police department received complaints from students and staff, said Lt. Bill Foley of the university's security force.

Employees and students complained that they were forced to look at him in their offices and classrooms because they could not get up and leave.

Ashe helped people live to their potential

We feel a special kind of pain when individuals lose their lives senselessly. Such is the case with Arthur Ashe, the extraordinary tennis player, who recently died from AIDS.

Ashe turned the tennis world upside down by being the first African American male to win the U.S. Open in 1968 and Wimbledon in 1975. His success inspired other African Americans to pursue the game of tennis, which began as a predominantly white sport.

Not only was Ashe innovative in the actual game, but he founded the Arthur Ashe Youth Tennis Center in Manayunk to allow young people to practice the game for free. He also became known for protesting apartheid as co-chair of Artists and Athletes Against Apartheid.

Ashe was diagnosed with the HIV-virus after receiving a contaminated blood transfusion. He did not let the disease slow him down, but rather began making public appearances to promote AIDS awareness.

Despite being such a public figure, Ashe was never flamboyant or pretentious. He did not contract the HIV-virus from sexual promiscuity, the way people usually assume someone contracts the illness.

In retrospect, Magic Johnson's case seems much less shocking. At the time of his disclosure, the public almost forgot his extra-marital affairs in light of his suffering. But Arthur Ashe did nothing wrong. His history was exemplary and there was no way he could have avoided getting HIV.

The only consolation is that Ashe will always be remembered, not only for his outstanding tennis achievements, but for his efforts to help other people exceed their limits as he surpassed his.

Questioning is the only route to awareness

AIDS Awareness Week at Villanova begins Sunday, Valentine's Day. Having a special week devoted to AIDS awareness and education would imply that the University recognizes AIDS as a disease that affects us all in one way or another.

However, even though one of the major ways AIDS spreads is through sexual contact, "safe sex" will not be a subject at any of the information sessions. Instead, the University will be encouraging the students to "Play It Safe." Those attending the meetings will have to determine for themselves what playing it safe means.

As a private, Catholic institution, the University has the right not to promote any ideas which might be contrary to their Mission Statement. But during such an important week, shouldn't all sides of the problem be at least mentioned? Can there be true "awareness" when pertinent information will not be discussed?

Though we may not be able to change the University's policy for AIDS Awareness Week, we can suggest that you take the responsibility to learn exactly how to "Play It Safe." When it comes to a disease as devastating as AIDS, we cannot afford to sit back and let others decide what information is acceptable to distribute. It becomes our own duty to discuss, to educate, to re-evaluate our attitudes and, above all, to continually question.

Racism is everyone's problem

To the Editor:

When I was getting ready to come to Villanova last year, I was excited about all of the new experiences I would have and all of the new friends I would make. I was really looking forward to the next four years of my life. Then, something happened that made me change my outlook on Villanova, at least temporarily.

In the summer, I received my roommate's name and number, just like everybody else. I was looking forward to meeting her and getting off to a good start, just like everybody else. Yet, unlike everybody else, I got a lot more than I bargained for. My roommate was a racist. Three days after our phone conversation, the Office for Residence Life called and said that my roommate requested a room change because her family was afraid that I would "burn incense and cook food" in our room. A little while after I got to Villanova, I found out that she had requested the room change specifically because I am Indian.

At first, I was devastated. Needless to say, my expectations of life at Villanova dropped considerably. I began to wonder what I did wrong to make her stereotype me in that way. Then, after I thought about it more carefully, I became angry. Very angry. I never did anything to her that would make her feel and think the way she does. We hardly knew each other. Her own ignorance and insensitivity was the cause of her bigoted attitude.

I will not mention her name because it would serve no purpose. I know who she is and she knows who she is. She is the one who has to live with herself and her conscience. I do not hate her. I thought I did, but I realize that I was wrong. I feel a great deal of pity for her. Whenever I see her, it disheartens me to think that people like her still exist. I feel sorry for anyone who goes through life with prejudice in their heart and nothing in their mind.

I don't know why I didn't write this article earlier. I kept thinking that it wasn't my problem, it was hers. I was wrong. Having recently come back from a conference for South Asian students, I realize that racism is not an individual's problem, it is society's problem. If we let people like my ex-roommate think that they can get away with their racist actions, we will just be perpetuating this societal ill. That is why groups like the Ku Klux Klan, Dotbusters and Neo-Nazis exist.

I feel sorry for anyone who goes through life with prejudice in their hearts and nothing in their minds.

Racists believe that minorities are inferior and too weak or scared to stand up for themselves. They're terribly mistaken. I am a proud Indian and I'm not going to sit down and be complacent with the way the world is today. I have never been and will never be too weak or scared to stand up for myself and my race.

This article may not do much but, to everone who took the time out to read this, just think for a minute about what you see going on around you everyday. Racism is everywhere and it can be as subtle as a derogatory comment or as blatant as the beating of an innocent person solely because of skin color. However, it should not be tolerated by anyone.

This article is not directed only toward minorities. Racism is destroying the entire human race. It is the responsibility of everyone, minority or not, to help put an end to it. Then and only then will the world, including Villanova University, be a better place for everyone.

I have been fortunate enough to make many good friends, including my current roommate, here at Villanova. They see beyond the color of my skin. However, there are those who can't, or won't. These are the people who need to open their eyes and their minds to different cultures and races. They have to realize that people are not stereotypes. Unlike what you may see on "The Simpsons" not every Indian is a naive 7-11 worker with an accent. I am not a bad or weird person because of the color of my skin. It has nothing to do with how I treat others, and it shouldn't have anything to do with how I am treated.

It's a shame my ex-roommate couldn't figure that out.

OP-ED

Student says, "Paranoid or not, ping-pong paddles are dangerous."

By PETER SHAUGER

Every morning I take the 7:52 a.m. train from Exton to Villanova. There are not many people on the train when I get on, so I can always find a pair of empty seats for myself.

Not being fully awake, I often try to catch a few minutes of shut-eye before I get to school. However, once I shut my eyes, a peculiar thing happens. Someone always sits next to me. When my eyes are open, people walk right past my seat. Sometimes I wonder if the reason I sit alone is because I smell, but a quick check of my armpits lets me know that is not the case.

On the 7:43 p.m. train home from school, I notice that passengers, rather than avoiding people who are awake, avoid people who might open their mouths and talk. I almost had someone sit down next to me once, but when I opened my mouth to insert a stick of gum, that person walked away. However, that unfortunate time when I Krazy-glued my lips together, people were fighting for the seat next to me.

Since this lack of even casual interaction exists on nearly every train ride, it caught me off guard when a young woman actually spoke to me last week. There is hope for the Main Line, I thought.

I immediately recognized her as a classmate from high school and said, "Hi Kelly," because that was her name. She didn't remember my name. I'm not sure if she knew it in high school either, but I didn't hold it against her. And so we managed to have a pleasant conversation in spite of her superficiality. Don't get me wrong, there is nothing wrong with superficiality, but then, there isn't much right about it either. (Somewhere a member of the Greek system is saying, "Hey, you can't talk about people like that, it's not nice. Some of my best friends are superficial!)"

Anyway, Kelly was coming home from Temple University to which she recently transferred. Her reasons for transferring from a college with a student body of 6,000 was because she heard that Temple had smaller classes and she also heard they had a good corporate fitness program. Smaller classes? Corporate fitness?

Anyway, among other things, she said she was shocked at the security system at Temple's law school. She said that earlier in the day she needed to use a pay phone, so she walked into the law school, used a phone and walked out. She was shocked because at no time did the security guards take even the slightest notice of her or question why she was in the building. She said there was nothing to stop her from walking in, pulling out a machine gun and blowing away everybody in sight.

And while she was saying this I was thinking to myself, "That's right, just like there is nothing to stop me from shoving a corporate fitness major from a moving train."

Of course I didn't do that, because I hadn't seen her in so long, and that was no way to treat an old friend like Kelsy — or was it Kathy. Kelly! An old friend like Kelly!

When I got home I thought about what Kelly the corporate fitness major had said about how easy it would have been for her to murder people. And then I thought about how no one on the train ever talks to each other.

And then I put the two ideas together. People who ride the train must be afraid of corporate fitness majors boarding the train carrying machine guns with intent to kill.

But then I heard about this guy in California who went into a hospital emergency room and shot three people. I had to ask myself, "Was he a corporate fitness major? Did the people he shoot ride the train with him?"

For those of you wondering, a corporate fitness major learns how to get lazy executives into shape. Into a better shape, that is. I'll bet out of all the methods Kelly studied, none would produce quicker results than having a corporate fitness major walk into an office building with a machine gun.

But I'm sure it's not just people who ride the train who are paranoid about machine-gun-toting corporate fitness majors. What about the students who live on the Villanova campus?

Coincidentially, just like on the train, most Villanova students don't say anything to me either, and I'm only an English major. And if they are afraid of me, what can they do to protect themselves. I mean, is there anything to stop a ping-pong, paddle-toting English major from entering any dorm on campus and paddling students to death?

Sure, we have security guards, but what's to stop an English major from sneaking up behind a security guard and then ... Wham!

I apologize for this gruesome picture, and I can assure you that this English major would never use a ping-pong paddle to inflict pain in any way. The idea just popped into my head, as I'm sure it did for Kelly the corporate fitness major.

Is there a solution? Should we always be watching our backs? Should we always be on the lookout for lunatics? Maybe. Or maybe the next time you see me you'd be wise to give me a friendly glance. If you don't know what I look like, you might want to be careful who you snub, because someone out there just might have a ping-pong paddle with your name on it.

Pete Shauger is a junior English major who always carries a loaded ping-pong paddle.

Responses to campus question ignore reality of discrimination

To the Editor:

It's Friday. I'm flipping through the Villanovan, nonchalantly picking out tidbits of news from the headlines. Obviously, this is just another edition of Villanova news, and this is just another Friday perusal. Or is it? I'm rustling through the pages when I come across the "On Campus" section, which polls the opinions of several students on a certain question.

As is my habit, I glance it over and begin to turn the page when the words "security," "dorms" and "women" stop me. Reading the headline over, I realize the issue plays on a familiar question which plagues me with every stroll through the Quad: Why are there different security measures taken for female and male dorms?

Walking past Sheehan and Sullivan, the first thing I notice is the windows. There's something peculiar ... something different between the two dorms — bars. Menacing bars cover the lower windows of Sheehan. And then, absolutely no barriers guard the windows of Sullivan. These bars seem insignificant, yet they articulate the larger issue raised in the "On Campus" section about posting security guards only in the dorms that house women.

Looking over the comments made by many students, I'm disturbed. They talk of inconvenience, cost and safety. Does this seem odd? A larger, more important issue has been ignored. Is this not blatant discrimination, sexism?

To be blunt, sexual stereotyping is discrimination and these security policies are discriminatory.

My argumentation may seem trivial, meaningless in the course of our college existence, but it isn't. Women are being sex-typed as "damsels in distress" — helpless and defenseless creatures in need of protection. Men, too, are being sex-typed as manly defenders who fear nothing. Are not women being treated as inferiors? Are not men being treated as superiors? These assumptions are destructive to both self-image and personal relationships. To be blunt, sexual stereotyping is discrimination and these security policies are discriminatory.

But what does all this mean for students? It means both women and men are being stereotyped; women and men are being treated unequally and unfairly. For myself, this issue is incredibly significant and telling. For most students, this issue is not an issue — it's a fact, a point of interest, even what may aptly be termed reality. However, next time you pass by Sullivan and Sheehan, or any dorm on campus, consider in what way your identity is being decided for you and by what means you are being treated unequally.

COMMENTARY

Can privilege and oppression exist on the same campus?

By ELIZABETH TACELOSKY

This is in response to the article by Tiy Smith in the Feb. 5 issue of the Villanovan, addressing the issue of oppression in today's society. Although Ms. Smith addressed some important problems, the general theme of her article, that she as an African-American female can be one with the oppressed, offended me.

As a white, (Lithuanian-American?) female I am only half as oppressed as Ms. Smith. However, I do not wish to be given any special consideration because of my gender affliction. I find it very difficult to believe that anyone at Villanova can call herself oppressed in the way that people in the inner city or third world economies are oppressed. I fully understand (because if you choose to be educated on such issues it is not difficult) that oppression exists all over the place. I would like to assert, however, that it is not the African-American female in the higher education system that is being oppressed.

I would like to confront Ms. Smith on the statement that "no matter how hard I work and how much academic excellence I attain ... I will have to work twice as hard just to be noticed." As a fellow senior biology major, I have seen many people applying for positions in medical schools. I assert that it is the white male "Joe Bio" that has to work twice as hard.

I would think that if people really wanted the system to be fair to everyone and judge all people equally why not do away with the questions on applications that ask "Gender: M __ F __" and "Do you consider yourself a minority?" If you, oppressed though you are, feel yourself qualified to get into "that college" then why do minorities need special treatment?

That was not meant to be a direct put-down. Anyone who has made it necessary through four years as a bio major is qualified. But I know that Villanova accepts some people who are less qualified and who come from underprivileged backgrounds with substandard educational systems in an attempt to represent all facets of less-than-adequate education, or does it simply put unprepared people into an environment where they do not stand a chance, while denying that chance to someone more capable.

I am not saying that the system should stay how it is. I am not saying that I should not have to pay taxes to support the people on welfare. In fact, I am saying just the opposite. It is our responsibility as the lucky ones to make a difference.

I assert that affirmative action merely perpetuates a system that notices people for their differences and not their abilities. What needs to be changed is the situation in areas that are truly oppressed. It is the high schools and elementary schools in the inner city which need to improve. We need to reform the attitude in these areas which asserts that it is more economically beneficial to deal drugs than it is to stay in school.

I am certainly not saying that there are not oppressed people in the world. I am not even saying that some people are not oppressed because of their color or gender. But in spite of femininity, I would never dream of considering myself among them, and I would ask you, Ms. Smith, to perhaps consider your situation one more time. What have you to be bitter about? Have you really been deprived of opportunity because of the color of your skin and your chromosomal makeup? Do any of us at Villanova who have been given the opportunity to benefit from a quality education really have the right to complain?

Elizabeth Tacelosky is a senior major in biology.

Immediate media reactions make thoughtful analysis obsolete

By ELLEN GOODMAN

This is what happens when you take a few days off. Several days under the sun and the sunblock and I thought I'd missed the entire Clinton presidency.

Each morning, I woke up to brewed coffee and instant analysis. One day the president was stumbling, foundering, floundering. The next, he was not ready for prime time, not up to playing in the big leagues and on the ropes. Then he was under siege, on the defensive and losing ground.

By the end of the week, it was — somber tones now — unclear whether his administration would recover. The Clinton presidency wasn't two weeks old and the media biggies had written its obituary.

Now maybe, just maybe, this Bill-overkill was a declaration of independence. During the campaign, after all, reporters were accused of being biased against Bush and in favor of Clinton. Some of the accusations stuck.

In Washington, during inaugural week, I ran into a respected colleague who confided to me and to half a dozen others nearby that "I worried that I wouldn't be able to be as tough on the guy that I voted for." The reporter was happy to announce that this fear had been unfounded. "It's been easy!"

Maybe it was predictable that many would renew their credentials as "objective" journalists over Clinton's warm body. Maybe Washington journalists — as permanent an establishment as Congress — just got involved in some early power struggle with the new man in the White House. Maybe these insiders were testing the outsider.

But I think the premature news of Clinton's political death had as much to do with media tempo as temperament. There is, simply, a rush to judgment.

Some of this comes from the technology of what is routinely called the information age. Phones, faxes, computers, satellites — have speeded up everything. Especially news.

> In journalism there has always been a tension between getting it first and getting it right. In today's amphetamine world of news junkies, speed trumps thoughtfulness too often.

The frenzy of the day's events are now transmitted instantly and simultaneously to every news organization. Newspapers that once tried to beat each other with stories, are now as likely to compete with analysis.

On television, journalists now routinely appear on talk-shows-with-an-attitude where they are encouraged to say what they think about something they may not have finished thinking about. The hosts are often in too much of a hurry for anything but multiple choice questions, yes or no answers. The audience is not expected to listen but rather to watch words being fired across tables. Opinion-hurling has become an indoor sport.

On radio, too, a story breaks at noon and by drive time — need I call it rush-hour — the call-in hosts are hustling instant opinions on everything from Zoe Baird to Bosnia. At this speed, the shelf-life of news — what is new — has been cut by half and half again.

But instant opinion is an oxymoron. You don't get real opinions in an instant. You get reactions. A reaction is something that can come from the knee. Hit it and it jerks. An opinion is something that best comes from the head. Thinking is — alas — a much slower process.

In journalism there has always been a tension between getting it first and getting it right. In today's amphetamine world of news junkies, speed trumps thoughtfulness too often. The rush is always on to judgment. It's true in the legislatures where a fax attack can destroy a bill or a career overnight. It's equally true in journalism.

From this we get the obituaries of the Clinton Administration to be followed, I am sure, by reports of its resurrection. Soon to be playing in your local media market.

But this first, increasingly rough, draft of history may miss the news. Sometimes that news is a story about people who are clearly more patient than those who live and die by the hourly cycle. Sometimes it's about a man, now president, who counts on his ability to convince people, to grab them by the lapel and keep talking until they come around.

The race of daily small changes can even miss the slow pace of major change. So to the folks who say it's over before it's begun, I offer three little words. Not so fast.

Philanthropy eclipses devastation of Rush

By LYN MAHLER

Every year young women excitedly enter the sorority Rush process with hopes and aspirations. They seek to become a member in a sacred sisterhood and build life-lasting friendships. A high percentage of these young people do accomplish their goal. They begin to spend their collegiate life participating in their new organization, establishing sincere friendships and having a good time.

Unfortunately, there is a percentage that does not accomplish this goal, whether by the Rushee's choice or by the sorority's choice. This is the devastating side of Rush. This year 437 women participated in sorority Rush. Three hundred and seventy-three women were placed in sororities. Sixty-four women did not leave the Rush process with the same goals and ideals with which they began. A friend of mine was one of those 64 women.

Having witnessed her tears and unhappiness, I began to critically analyze the Greek system as a whole. I think almost every Greek can say that the Rush process needs work. It is not fair for either the Greeks or the Rushees. However, for now, it is the only means Greeks have for finding new members.

Recognizing the Rush practice as the most monstrous negative aspect, I began examining Greek life on the whole. I realized just how many positive points there are in being Greek.

As with any organization, in sororities there is the chance to lead and make a difference. Sororities accomplish a lot each year. Therefore they need new members to aid and assist their aims by organizing and participating in events. All sisters have the opportunity to contribute if willing to dedicate the time and effort.

A positive aspect to having a large number of women in each sorority is the ability to recruit volunteers for beneficial programs.

As a sister in Pi Beta Phi, I have participated in many of the charitable events (such as Fraternity Feud and The Dating Game) that we have sponsored to raise money and awareness for our local philanthropy, The Mayor's Commission on Literacy, and our national philanthropy, Arrowmont (a school solely supported by Ph Phi actives and alumnae). The sisters of Chi Omega also dedicate their effort toward the problem of illiteracy by aiding and tutoring younger children in our area.

This year Delta Gamma sponsored its fifth annual Anchorsplash, contributing the money raised toward Sight Conservation and Aid to the Blind. The sisters of Alpha Chi Omega annually cosponsor, with the brothers of Pi Kappa Alpha, Hunt for Hunger, which enables them to provide food for the Philadelphia needy.

Delta Delta Delta focuses its charity on children with cancer. This past fall they sponsored a bone marrow typing drive on campus. Also this past fall, Kappa Alpha Theta organized the Greek God and Goddess competition raising funds for CASA (Court Appointed Special Advocacy for Abused Children). The sisters of Kappa Kappa Gamma cosponsored, with the brothers of Sigma Phi Epsilon, a volleyball tournament in order to raise funds for the Lupus foundation.

These good deeds are merely representative of the positive impact Greek life has on the community and it's individual members. There is immeasurable aid, support and friendship involved in sorority relationships. Through thick and thin, bad days and good days, smiles and tears, your sisters are there for you. I know my sisters are there for me.

I'm a senior and the two things I'll miss most after graduation are Central Avenue and Pi Phi. Though the way membership begins is negative, the way membership is spent is extremely positive. I'm proud to be a Pi Phi. I'm proud to be a Greek.

Lyn Mahler is a senior majoring in communication arts.

Solarcat drives to success

By CLAUDIA MURO
Staff Reporter

If you are ever in Tolentine Hall, wander down to Room 28 and you will discover a bunch of students who mean business. This is Team Solarcat headquarters, home of the defending American Tour de Sol champions.

Villanova's Solarcat has been in existence for four years. This year's Tour de Sol will be a testing ground for the world solar challenge to be held in Australia in November 1993.

Last semester the 20 core team members designed the Wild Solarcat III, and soon they will begin construction. Team leader and senior mechanical engineer, Lou Orotelli, explained that the team's two primary goals are to build the Solarcat and to compete in the world challenge.

Recently the team posted advertisements in an effort to recruit students of all majors to become team members. The team has always welcomed all majors, but now they especially need hands to help build the car.

"You don't have to know about cars or how they operate, all you have to be is willing to learn. We will train anyone who is interested, no matter what your past experience or background," said Orotelli.

The team, which is completely student run, also needs students with business skills to help with fundraising and public relations. Chris Babek, a senior economics major, has been a team member since 1989 and was last year's Solarcat driver.

"The team is run like a small business. We need help soliciting information, sponsorship money and grants," said Babek.

The team receives financial support from Villanova and from outside corporations. This is an important job because these resources are needed to build the car and acquire technical know-how.

A newcomer may at first feel somewhat overwhelmed or intimidated by the team's expertise and skills, but senior Adam Pasieka, electrical team leader, said that all current members were new once, and by listening and watching, they learned. "We learn by doing, by trial and error, by relying on past experience and checking records and files from previous years," said Pasieka.

Solar power, after all, is a relatively new field, and since it is an unconventional source of power, you can't always apply standard knowledge. Anyone with machine shop experience, or someone familiar with cars and boats, like Babek, is encouraged to join the team; but again, these are not prerequisites. As a member, you will definitely learn something new, use your hands as well as your mind and test your creativity.

Valentine legends explored

By MARYBETH GOELLER
Staff Reporter

Sunday brings us that fateful day which people either love or hate — St. Valentine's Day. Yes, it is a day for love and romance to fill the air, for flowers to be sent and candy to be eaten, for cards to be written and sent to boyfriends, girlfriends, family and even secret crushes.

Although not everyone will be fortunate enough to have a Valentine this year to share this special day, there is still that magical, wistful feeling throughout the air that makes many wonder how this international holiday began. Since the beginning of time, love and romance played a major part in people's lives, symbolized by Feb. 14, the holiday of love.

Many people have pondered the question of who is actually St. Valentine — a fictional or real person? Apparently he was very real. One or more saints of the early Christian church were martyred on Feb. 14.

VALENTINE'S DAY

As legend has it, a priest named Valentine secretly married young couples against the wishes of the Roman emperor who forbade young men to marry. Another version states that Valentine was imprisoned because he would not worship the Roman gods. Children whom he had befriended tossed him loving notes between the bars, which could explain why people exchange messages on Valentine's Day.

The earliest record of how the custom of exchanging valentines on Feb. 14 can be traced back to the English poet Geoffrey Chaucer in his work "The Parliament of Fowls," which states how birds chose their mates on that day.

People in England began celebrating Valentine's Day in the 1400s. Their celebrations included ways that single women could learn who their future husbands would be. Women wrote men's names on paper, rolled it in clay and dropped them all in water. Whichever rose first was the name of the woman's true love.

Another answer to an unmarried woman's problems of love would be to pin five bay leaves to her pillow on Valentine's Day Eve. One leaf was pinned to the center and one to each corner. If the charm worked, they were all able to see their future husbands.

Junior Wildcats join the cheers

By ANNIE BLOCK

If some of you wondered why there were so many little people around campus last weekend, it is because Feb. 5-7 marked Villanova's ninth annual Sibling Weekend. According to many of the visiting siblings, it was a big hit.

Sibling Weekend is primarily sponsored by the Student Programming Council (SPC) but the events are coordinated by a Sibling Weekend Committee. The co-chairs were juniors Beth Geiman and Mary Quigley. The two agreed that the weekend was a success. "We were a little worried because of the snow, but all the events turned out really well," said Geiman.

Approximately 300 visiting family members and friends ranging from ages 5-13 took part in the festivities. The weekend began with a carnival on Friday night in Connelly Center's Belle Air Terrace in which many campus organizations participated.

The SPC offered three exciting trips on Saturday. One group of siblings took a bus and a ferry to the Camden Aquarium. Another group ventured off to Sportland, America where they could roller-skate, hit in batting cages or try velcro-wall jumping.

Approximately 300 visiting family members and friends ranging from ages 5-13 took part in the festivities.

Naturally, many of the siblings went to watch the Wildcat basketball team play the St. Joseph's Hawks. Although many of the siblings were "bummed we lost," they still would be "psyched" to go to Villanova and share the Wildcat fever like their brothers and sisters.

The Association of Commuting Students sponsored a dance in Dougherty Hall for the siblings on

Mr. Izaak (Jack) Price, pictured above, will speak with Mrs. Itka Zygmuntowicz at Villanova on Feb. 23 about their experiences as Holocaust survivors.

Holocaust survivors lecture

By ANGELA M. CERINO
Special to the Villanovan

"War is Hell." That simple truth was my father's response during World War II. Many years later, after he passed away, I would learn that, besides participating in such historic events as the Allied landing at Normandy and the Battle of the Bulge, his duties as a G.I. also took him to Buchenwald concentration camp.

My father's brief replies left me searching for personal accounts of the Holocaust. My wish was granted when the Philadelphia Inquirer ran a story of two area residents from Poland.

Poland was particularly ravaged during the war, invaded first by Nazis, and then by the Red Army. Two teenagers, Itka and Izaak, were among the millions of victims. Itka was from the small town of Cichanow; Izaak the great city of Warsaw. They were singled out by the Nazis because they were Jews.

In 1941, the Nazis raided Itka's neighborhood in the middle of the night, transplanting her family and many other Jewish families to the Nowe Miasto ghetto. About a year later, the ghetto population was moved again — this time to the Auschwitz concentration camp.

Itka's entire family was killed the first day. She does not know why she was spared.

The bright young girl languished three years in the camp, surrounded by death, starvation and disease. In place of her possessions, she was issued a shapeless dress, two mismatched wooden shoes and a cup. Every freedom was denied her. She was not even allowed to speak in the presence of the Germans.

Itka mourned the loss of her family and remembered the values they had taught her and the love they had bestowed on her. To the Nazis, she was known only as 25673 — the number tatooed on her arm, but to herself she was a human being, determined to live — and possibly die — in dignity.

In the summer of 1942, people were starving in the Warsaw ghetto. Young Izaak would sneak out every day, at great personal risk, to buy food for his family. He would purchase two of everything — one to eat, and one to sell at a profit to finance the next day's groceries.

One day while he was gone, the German soldiers evacuated people from the ghetto. Upon his return, he searched and searched, but found none of his family members. Nor would he ever. They had been taken to the Treblinka death camp.

Suddenly orphaned and homeless, Izaak became even more resourceful. On the streets of Warsaw he shined shoes and sold cigarettes. He encountered other Jewish boys and girls in the same predicament.

The challenge was to earn a living while avoiding detection by the Nazis and their informants. The children became very protective of one another. Most adopted false names in order to conceal their Jewish identities. Izaak, for example, became Stasiek-from-Praga.

Izaak became a freedom fighter in two uprisings against the Nazis. The first was the heroic Warsaw Ghetto Uprising, when the Jews took up arms against their oppressors. The second was the general Warsaw Uprising, when he served, along with Christian Poles, in the Home Army. Izaak was wounded and taken prisoner by the Germans.

Both Mrs. Itka Zygmuntowicz and Mr. Izaak (Jack) Price have graciously agreed to share their stories with Villanova University students, faculty and staff on Feb. 23 at 3 p.m. in the Connelly Cinema.

Roman Catholic Church view concerning AIDS discussed

By PETE SMOCK
Staff Reporter

With the outbreak and spread of AIDS, the world has witnessed how various groups and organizations have adapted to confront the epidemic. The identity of this disease has gone from associations with the homosexual male to include everyone. This alteration of identities has forced many to give serious attention to the issues surrounding AIDS.

The Roman Catholic Church is one of these organizations whose teachings have been greatly affected by the spread of AIDS. For the Church, the earliest conflicts that arose were how to educate to stop the spread of the epidemic, as well as how to deal with the existing victims of this horrible disease.

At first, the Church's response to victims of AIDS could be seen as complacent. Almost no effort was put forth to develop new programs that would allow Catholics to offer compassionate responses to AIDS victims.

Part of the problem was that many clergy lacked even a basic knowledge of the disease, and therefore could not formulate an appropriate or effective response. Many in this country were critical of the Catholic Church's apathy.

Once the Church truly decided to respond, their approach can be seen as anything but complacent. Not only were statements released by various groups such as the Catholic Bishops of America, but individual congregations responded as well.

The AIDS Interfaith Council was founded in Houston in 1986. The council is an association of clergy and laity who have combined to provide educational and service programs in response to the epidemic.

Here at Villanova, the Rev. Jim McCartney, O.S.A., is a priest who has received individual recognition for his efforts. In the December 1987 issue of Esquire, McCartney was honored for starting the Health Crisis Network. This organization, located in Miami, offers individual care for AIDS victims. McCartney began the network with various other members of clergy.

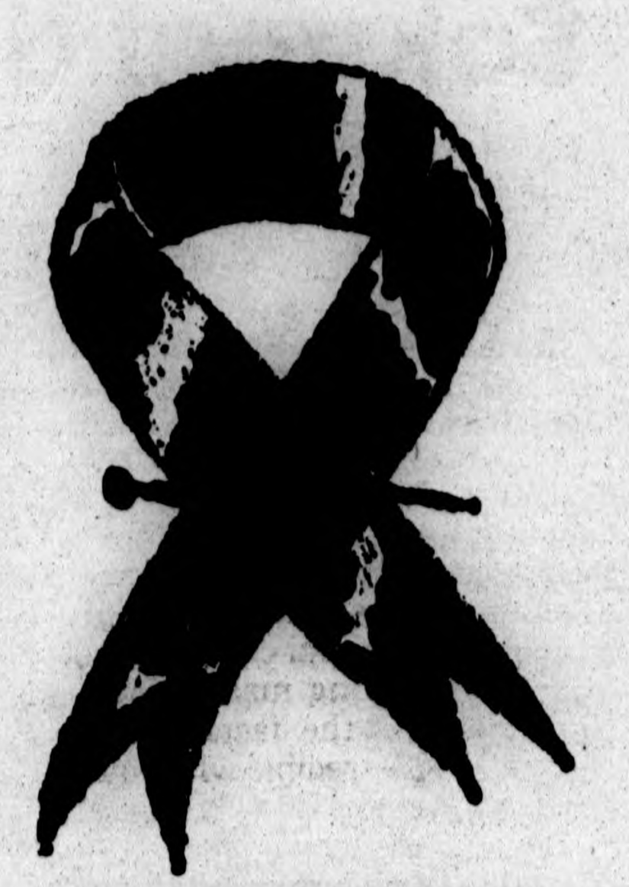
"It was developed more as a response to our own interests related to the AIDS epidemic. We felt something really needed to be done by members of the clergy," he said.

As a priest for the past 20 years, McCartney has witnessed many changes within the Roman Catholic Church. While at first he was disappointed by the Church's response, he has been encouraged by recent efforts.

"What I have been able to witness are victims who have been treated with complete compassion. It is exactly this type of response that was needed," he said.

As for the delicate matter of educating about AIDS, McCartney believes that the standard set by the Catholic Bishops of America is the correct one. At their national conference in 1987, the Catholic Bishops published the Church's official statement regarding the topic of AIDS. This article clearly states the condition of seriousness that the disease must be dealt with and has been the Church's official statement for the past six years.

While the Church will continually have to be able to adapt to the complications that AIDS will bring, its current position appears very solid. So long as new and innovative programs are allowed to develop, the Roman Catholic Church will be better able to deal with the victims of AIDS. Once these victims are dealt with, it allows for universal responses that are full of compassion.



These ribbons signifying support for AIDS awareness will be on sale all week long.

Disease touches the world of sports

by TARA CAMPITIELLO
Assistant Features Editor

Villanova basketball fans were cranking up the volume in the Pavilion during the Jan. 30 contest with Miami University when a whistle rang, perplexing most spectators. The crowd began to vocalize their frustrations ... "What's going on?" ... "There was no foul!" ... Thanks, Magic Johnson wherever you are.

Suddenly everything was apparent. Sophomore point guard Jonathan Haynes was taken to the sidelines so that a bleeding cut could be dressed with a protective covering.

Protection, education, awareness — these are terms which many people became familiar with in wake of NBA All-Star Irving (Magic) Johnson's public announcement of his positive HIV status one short year ago.

However, AIDS and sports are not two words introduced by Magic Johnson's announcement. These two fields have been related in various studies for years, although the tragedies of sports celebrities was necessary to increase public awareness.

Various organizations have studied and issued statements concerning the possibility of AIDS transmission during athletic contests. The World Health Organization (WHO) issued a consensus statement concerning AIDS and sports in Jan. 1989, stressing eight major points.

The first point declared that no evidence of transmission of AIDS during athletic activity has been presented. However, there is a possible low risk of transmission between an infected athlete and another athlete when a bleeding wound or skin lesion has contact with another who has a similar condition or exposed mucous membrane.

The second point recommends easy precautions such as cleansing and covering all and any wounds and ceasing participation in contest until the bleeding stops.

The third point recognizes the risks of personnel who may be in contact with the blood of the athletes by recommending that all such personnel wear latex gloves.

An outline for AIDS education is presented in the fourth point highlighting the means of transmission, the responsibility of the infected person to inform the proper officials should a risk situation occur, and the inability of the virus to be transmitted through sweat, saliva or urine.

The WHO's consensus statement's fifth point claims that there is no medical or public health justification for mandatory testing. The remaining three points further recommend the education of HIV positive athletes and all other athletes and related personnel through consultation with committees of this specialty.

The Olympic Congress policy on HIV and sports is similar to that of WHO, with the exception that the Congress labeled three sports at greatest risk: boxing, tae kwon do and wrestling. Basketball is considered a moderate risk.

Lawrence D. Rink, M.D., the physician for the U.S.A. track team during the 1992 Summer Olympic Games, was cited in the Journal of the American Medical Association as stating, "... even if there has been contact with blood, we can compare it with the risk to health care workers, where the possibility of transmission is reported to be very low, only .035 percent."

No documentation could be established through studies conducted during the 1990 Gay Games, Vancouver, British Columbia. The Gay Games is an international Olympic-style competition for homosexual athletes. Many of the participants offered their HIV status and no one was found to have contracted the virus afterwards due to athletic participation.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) first addressed the issue of AIDS and sports in April 1988 when it issued Policy No. 20: AIDS and Intercollegiate Athletics. This policy, which merely recognized and defined AIDS and its transmission, was updated in June 1992. The new policy recommended the routine use of a protective covering or barrier when bleeding, the replacement of a jersey or other uniform piece stained with blood and the use of a one to 10 dilution of household bleach on surfaces which have come in contact with blood.

These players demonstrate the physical contact found in most sports.

Although the NCAA has long held definite policies regarding AIDS and sports, it only recently has been actively enforcing these. Dan Unger, the Head Trainer at Villanova University, stated, "I had major difficulty with the football program. I wrote a letter to the East Coast Athletic Conference (ECAC) describing an incident where an opposing player bled all over some of our team members without any immediate action by the opposing team. However, today the NCAA demands that game officials force athletes to be removed from games and properly attended to."

Rules regarding contact between players have changed as the threat which AIDS imposes becomes more recognized, and probably will continually change in the future as the risk of AIDS caused by contact becomes more understood.

Viewpoint: How does AIDS affect you?

By LIZ WEAVER
Staff Reporter

An epidemic is spreading across the country and throughout the world. It does not care what you look like, how rich you are or if you are a woman, man or child. This widespread horror is called Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, AIDS.

Once thought to be a "gay thing," the disease has snowballed into the heterosexual community. AIDS is something many people don't know all the facts about, which seems incredible when one thinks of the toll it will take on the populations of countries.

Although programs exist to educate the public on this disease, people are still contracting it: "The education may not be successful because if people don't use what they learn it will not work," noted sophomore Jena Fogarty. It seems that many people realize that the disease is around, but don't believe it could really happen to them.

Although there are other ways to contract AIDS besides through sexual intercourse, what is focused on here is how students responded when asked, "How does the AIDS epidemic affect you and how you live your personal life?"

> Both males and females who engage in sexual activity have a lot to think about these days.

Both males and females who engage in sexual activity have a lot to think about these days. Something people need to remember is to think before acting. Teresa Curley feels that, "Communication is definitely essential between intimate partners." People just cannot rush into things without thinking of what the consequences may be. "I am now much more aware of my actions when I am with a girl," said Giancarlo Lanzano.

Although there are ways to try to prevent passing on this disease to others and of catching it, nothing is foolproof. The statistics are frightening. According to the Center for Disease Control, the government agency that tracks the epidemic, the numbers are staggering. In the United States alone, approximately one million people currently are infected with the virus that causes AIDS. This is called the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV). Once diagnosed it may take up to 11 years before symptoms of AIDS surface. However, one may test positive for HIV three to six months after exposure.

What all these numbers mean to people differs. Some students believe an easy way to avoid the disease is not to have sex. Other students feel much less threatened because they are in a relationship.

Many Villanovans are beginning to see that AIDS affects all kinds of people. Celebrities and the rich are not immue to the virus. Brian Carboni commented on the passing of another well-known person struck by the disease. "I have been a great fan of Arthur Ashe for some time, and his death brought the stinging reality of how indifferent this disease is," said Carboni.

Another statistic given by the Center for Disease Control is that one out of every 250 people is infected. Students have probably seen the posters around campus, seen commercials or heard them on the radio, but still do not believe it affects them. Do not ignore the warnings, instead know that no one is invincible.

D s

K I L L e r

There is presently no cure for AIDS.

Many people feel that only certain "high risk groups" are infected by the AIDS virus. This is untrue.

Who you are has nothing to do with whether you are in danger of being infected with the AIDS virus. What matters is what you do.

More on AIDS and the Villanova community next week.

Awareness week comes to campus

By SUSAN BURNS
Staff Reporter

"We're a big Villanova family. We look out for each other," said junior Dave Martin, chairman of AIDS Awareness Week, Feb. 14 to 20. "We want to heighten awareness about a disease that does not discriminate."

The week is the combined effort of a committee of concerned students and the 16 peer educators who trained with the Villanova AIDS Task Force for several months. The campus-wide effort will expose students, staff and faculty to the issues — care and concern for AIDS patients and those infected with HIV, transmission of the disease and the effect of the disease on the future, according to Gary Bonas, chair of the task force.

"Students need to be constantly reminded to love each other properly," said Bonas of the importance of the topic. "This festival-type week begins on Valentine's Day, and ends the week before spring break. Students tend to go on break and do things they normally wouldn't."

Throughout the week, students will be confronted with facts, statistics and dispelled myths about the epidemic. Videos in high traffic areas, information tables and even the napkins at the planned ice cream give-away on Friday, will educate students, according to Martin. Red ribbons that symbolize an awareness of the epidemic will sell for $1, with the proceeds going towards campus AIDS education.

This is a touchy subject for Villanova because of the nature of the disease, according to Martin. "We cannot endorse condoms or contraceptives, but we can say 'just be smart.' Students can take that for what it's worth," he said, and added that "'Smart' is through education."

Bonas agreed, and added that the focus of the week is to challenge students to make some good decisions and to develop a positive self-image through sound and important credentials, and by questioning the messages from the media, magazines, movies and television. "I think we can be honest, answer questions appropriately and in no way violate the church's teachings," he said.

Students on the committee hope for a positive student response to the activities, and believe participation during the week is both timely and crucial to every student.

"Right now, there is a .1 percent increase in homosexual cases of AIDS. They're scared. The only population that is skyrocketing is the heterosexual population in the 17- to 25-year-old group — college students," said sophomore peer educator Sue Phillips.

"We are in a high risk group," Martin said. He added that one in every 500 college students is HIV positive. "We have to educate."

AIDS Awareness Week

- Buy a red ribbon next week in Connelly Center and Bartley Cafe to show your AIDS Awareness.
- Listen to WXVU for public service announcements.

What Is AIDS?

AIDS is a sickness that destroys the body's disease fighting system. People with AIDS may get sick from things that would not bother them if their disease fighting system worked right.

What causes AIDS?

AIDS is caused by the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV). Symptoms of AIDS include fever, rash, feeling tired, weight loss, diarrhea, and swollen glands in the neck, armpits or groin. If you have these symptoms and they don't go away in two weeks you should see a doctor.

How Is HIV Spread?

HIV, the AIDS virus, is spread from person to person by anal sex, vaginal sex, or sharing needles when shooting drugs. A mother with the virus can pass it to her unborn child. She may also pass it to her child through breast feeding. The more sex partners you have the higher the risk of getting HIV. If you or any of your sex partners shoot drugs your risk of getting HIV is high.

Although HIV has been found in spit and tears, there are no cases where contact with them led to HIV infection. Police, firemen, and ambulance crews have not reported getting HIV from helping AIDS patients.

Can You Keep From Getting HIV?

YES:
To lower your chances of getting the virus, follow the steps below:

- ▶ DO NOT have sex with people who have HIV.
- ▶ DO NOT have sex with more than one partner or with people who have more than one sex partner.
- ▶ DO NOT shoot drugs. If you do, then do not share needles or other works.
- ▶ DO NOT have sex with people who shoot drugs.
- ▶ Using condoms (rubbers) will lower your chances of getting HIV.

Would You Like More Information?

If you'd like to know more about AIDS, talk to your doctor, local health department, or hospital. In addition, you can get helpful, confidential information from the National AIDS hotline, 1-800-342-AIDS. It's open 24 hours a day. The Spanish hotline is 1-800-344-SIDA (1-800-344-7432). The hotline number for the hearing impaired is 1-800-AIDS-TTY.

Happy Valentine's Day

Personals

C — Happy Valenheart's Day! I Love You very much. I can't wait for Anchorman! B.

B1, B2, B3 — To the three sexiest girls on campus. Happy Valentine's Day. Love, secret admirer.

Buddy A: I love you very much. Will you spend this Valentine's Day w/me? Love, N.B.

Castelli — Hope you have a great Valentine's Day! From your Theta Mom — Castelli.

JAP — Congrats on Sig Pi. I Can't Believe I'm Doing This Again! CMP.

Sharon, Ice cream doesn't taste the same without you! Happy Valentine's Day! Your Connelly Connection. Kate.

Mac Daddy, . . . To be a fly on the wall! By the way. I think I have the nicest legs on the third floor. You come in a close second! Love, SHAMOOSKI.

Allison K. — There are so many men to choose from, how can we pick just one? Your pal, L.E.

Dear Newsie Flusies, Happy V-Day from the ONLY men in your lives, the Sports Gods.

Sports Guys — Even though you are lowly sports peons I decided to give you a thrill for Valentine's Day and send you a personal. Justin — I'm looking forward to the banquet. Are you ready for our rendition of "Paradise by the Dashboard Light"? Happy Valentine's Day! Love, the brunette News Goddess.
P.S. — You are hardly the only men in my life! And you are NOT gods!

61 W. Hillcrest — O.K. so now I AM living up to my reputation, but I have been busy. Happy 21st B-day Love! (Sorry it's belated.) Shauna — do you feel like a legend now? Happy V-Day girls — at least one of us will get roses. — Steve the Flaming Liberal.
Ren and Stimpy — Are you getting sick of me yet? Ren — I'll be your Valentine if you'll be mine. — Col.

Dear Amanda, Can I borrow YOUR car for a change? It might not break down . . . Happy V-Day! M.C.

A-TOM-IC COLLINS, BOT-TOM'S UP COLLINS, THE TOM-INATOR: Let me get this straight . . . men pale in comparison to mudsliding? I could believe it. I'm telling you, you should have gone for the useless and impractical. I may be quiet and morbid, but occasionally I have a clue. — Karen Campbellbottom Blues.

Hey Dwarfs: Happy Black Sunday! Let's have fun this weekend anyway. Good luck with everything girls — cocktails, tests, interviews . . . it's never ending. Sleepy — No magnets! G, D & D — let's be bored together! Keep Smilin', Doc.

Nash, Hey, what's new? Have a great weekend. The champagne is a romantic touch. Happy Valentine's Day, lovebirds! Love, Ladies-in-waiting.

Sports — We can't live without you! Meet us at Marbles at midnight. — Love, News.

John and Tom — You don't come up often enough! Remember, 6:00 is when we eat.

Arnold Thetas — What can we say? We love and want you, you sexy things. — Love, the male population.

Mel, SE is in effect. Let's show Dwyer a good time. I'm going to get her drunk if she stays. If not, I'll do it myself. Either way, I win! Love, Your Fellow Bayonnite.

Caputo — What?! No weed this year? You're slacking. Happy Valentine's Day. — Larisa.

To my lovely roommate who has never seen the sun (according to Neb) — Happy Valentine's Day! I have but two words for you: Dios Jobius — your newest roommate (and clone). P.S. — Don't eat any orange candies.

S.Z. — There's no one I'd rather mosh with. Happy Valentine's Day — Love, L.E.

Bill: Happy Valentine's Day!

Sister J — Want some Kamikaze in that orange juice? Echhh. Can I come by for a reading sometime soon? I think that there should be a card for the Straggly One — it would most certainly portend death. Love, Lizzy.

Ralph — Happy Valentine's Day. When's my bear arriving? Love, Beth.

To the Lonely Hearts Club: Nancy: By George I think you have got it! Christine: The object of the game is to get rid of the Queen of Spades, not keep her. (Obnoxious, aren't I?) BMF: Stop being so busy and play a few hands! As Always, The Jack of Diamonds.

BMF — Happy Valentine's Day, Hon! Fear not, we shall not be lonely coeds forever! Due to unforseen circumstances I guess there will be no waffle cones for us (whether we need them or not.) — Elizabeth.

Mark — I love you. Jennifer.

Christine, AHHH . . . Isn't this amazing! It's my favorite part because, you'll see. Here's where she meets Prince Charming. But she won't discover that it's him, 'til chapter three! (It's not just a cartoon!) Love, Beauty.

POP: Thanks for being concerned and worrying about me. Sometimes I need an outside opinion. And remember, you can still come to Florida . . . if you want to shirk all of your responsibilities and incur the wrath of the crew team . . . Never that! Remember, I am happy for you, even when I'm giving you grief. Thanks, roomie! — K.C.K.C.

Psycho, Is it accommodation or convergence? Things will get better soon. (They can't get worse, right?) We'll have fun this weekend. Promise! Love, Jane.
S-rita, You look like a normal person, but actually you're the angel of death. Sally.

Kate Scofield — I just think it sounds good together! Happy Valentine's Day — Larisa.

Betsy, He doesn't know what he is missing! Love Your Port Richmond Connection and Friend.

Are you the one they call Elizabeth? Heh — heh — heh. How about this for a Valentine's Day resolution — no after hours projects for any strange newspapers. — One of the lucky three.

Marc, Mike, Mike and Bob — Ooooo, hot men on the loose! Stay away all Villanova women, these guys are mine — A secret admirer.

Karen — Happy Black Sunday! Since I do not expect to be receiving anything from LESSP on this most auspicious day I guess I'll just head off to the convent. Do you remember that rainy day in Nov. when I confessed my love for another? Those were the days. Oh to receive a Valentine from him! But, alas he belongs to another. Will my luck ever change? — The sassy redhead.

Angelo and Connie — Happy Valentine's Day! Send money (Ha, ha, ha). Love — your soon-to-be 21-year-old daughter.

Happy, "my reason for living." Don't fret over this weekend. I'm so happy you're so happy that you are a . . . Oh boy, the lease is coming! Sneezy, we're still waiting! Love, your other roommate.

Larisa — That time of the month and Valentine's Day. What a potent combination. Jennifer.

Jen — That time of the month and Valentine's Day is NOT a potent combination! — Larisa.

Mr. Friendly — I can't believe it's already been three years. Thanks for the formals and basketball games, and the cookies and beer. I'm looking forward to topping our week in Florida this summer in South Carolina. Love you — Mrs. Oxon Hill.

STRAIGHT FROM THE HEART

Dear Bull,
I love your nose! I dream of cuddling up with you on a secluded Miami beach. Love, Cindy.

Dear Maverick, You are as romantic as a toad. Dinner at the Pit? Come on. Signed, Warmth and Commitment.

To all man-less Villanovan staff members (men not included): Do not fret. If you fret, you won't like yourself. Fretting is bad. Take heart. Men aren't exactly something to wish for. A juicy steak, mud sliding, shopping at Clover on Clover Day, a nice manicure — these are the things that make life enjoyable. Not some guy named Tony that isn't in touch with your feelings and thinks happiness is an afternoon sitting on the couch making up strange undesired nicknames for you.

Chia Pets — We are awesome! Go Kappa Alpha Theta! We are the foxy ladies! Love, Jen.

DTS — Congrats on Delthood. When does Dad find out? Chrisper.

WANTED: Two eligible, desirable men. Brunettes with blue/hazel eyes preferred. Must have good sense of humor; also caring, thoughtful, intelligent. Must appreciate Beauty and the Beast, cherry red VW Bugs, oldies, A Christmas Story and ice cream. Also, must appreciate Monty Python, Tennessee Williams, the original SNL and redheads. Engineers, Bass players, Seniors, smokers and saxophone aficionados need not apply. Contact Kathryn and Elizabeth, the sassy redhead in Dougherty 201.

Fun-loving guy seeks the same in girl. Brown eyes are nice but not required. Blonde, brunette or whatever. Must be an outgoing and pleasant person. Also would be nice if she is shorter than 5'5". Seeker (P.O. Box 1562).

To Applecheeks: Happy Valentine's Day, Baby! I love you so much! Thanks for being so good to me — I will always love you, Scottie! Love and Kisses, R.

Tom — Alas, I could not let this issue go by without sending you my warmest regards on this most propitious of holidays. Dare not fret, I shan't expound on my romantic misfortunes any further. There is a great dearth of wit and whimsy in 201 without you. Happy Valentine's Day! L. (former girlfriend of H).

Dear Beantown! Happy Valentine's Day & Happy Anniversary! Tell Mickey we'll see him in two weeks! Love always, "Sweet Lis."

Kate — Hey sexy mama! Happy Valentine's Day. You are the best. I have but four words for you — Sports Guys and Cigarettes. Love you! — Your Sassy Redheaded cohort with the . . .

J.J. — I think you are a hottie and have to be my Valentine. Guess Who.

To the Homiez: Are you all ready for an alcoholic, Tex-Mex eatin', female-infested, Smokey Joe's hittin', pro-choice, Clinton-lovin', trash-talkin', Monday Night Football watchin' junior year? I knew you were, but I'm glad Soupy's not in charge of that lease. The Human Hormone.

SLUMNITES: First of all, Freshmen, if you keep ordering from Campus Corner we're going to poison your pizza . . . No, we're not bitter or anything. You try chomping on celery sticks 24/7, see how you feel. MEL and ZANETTE — Keep it up, 2 wks. to FLORIDA (get that Swiss bank account number, Big Z). MO — Please come with . . . We'll bring Yoshi, I promise! — K.C.K.C.
P.S. — Have a passable Valentine's Day — Wear black. (Ain't I nasty?)

My Chemistry Buddies — Sorry I missed you Tuesday! Have a great Valentine's Day. Love — A Theta.

Mutant of Love — If I promise not to give you any more lectures on social graces will you promise to let out your frustrations more often. That's what friends are for. I don't know why things seem so different this year. You only have about three months left. Can you blame me for wanting to spend every day with you singing "Surrey With a Fringe on Top"? Love you — The impulsive redhead who needs to learn not to express every thought she has, every moment that she has one.

Steph — Thanks for all your support during chaotic Tuesdays. What can I say, it's just one crisis after another! Happy Valentine's Day! Love, Lizzy.

To Tom Collins and Chad: Cincinnati in the Final Four.

Personals

Bob — You see this? You can run but you can't hide. — Mildred.

Focus on what is meant without presumptions . . . It seems that we were destined never to meet but all the same I wish you well — MTM.
P.S. What I could not endure had to be cured. Sorry trying to be a bit thorough though in a creatively less offensive way.

Darius: Thanks for everything! Have a great weekend — Fri. will be fun. Just keep those boots ON. Love, Doc, and the rest of the Dwarfs.

Giancarlo — I can't stop thinking about you. I'll meet you at the Courts sometime soon! — A Sheehan Resident that misses hanging out with you.

B#2, Spending Valentine's Day with you will be just great . . . just great . . . just great . . . just great . . . Love, Another Broken Rice Cake.

Wolfman: Look who's #25. Are you & your precious Idlini happy now? You may have the best wig on campus, but the Celts WILL beat the Bulls in the playoffs. Nice goalie, by the way. He may be good enough for the Norris, but he'd never make it in the Adams Division. Jah Scopes Mon.

Alumni Thetas — Can I just tell you?! March 12 is closer than we all think. Who is everyone asking? Hmmm? I already have my date — and he's wonderful. But you guys already knew that didn't you? Love ya, Sassy.

Women of 222 — Happy Valentine's Day! Will someone please wake me up! I don't think I can get up for this holiday by myself. Perhaps my prince is to be found doing one of our Day Hop breakfast jaunts. Wish you all a happy day with lots of Lucky Charms. Love you guys. — Liz.

Lattanzio — He will be yours, Oh yes, Mark will be yours! Love, EDizabeth.

Joe and Carol — You guys are great! At last we can get out of East Bumble ————! Joe, you are awesome! Congrats! Does this mean I can have a car? Just kidding! Love you and Happy Valentine's Day! Betsy.

PETE: "So, . . . what's up?" Just wondering: Got any plans for March 1? Got any room for me?? Love, Carolyn.

Ann — Happy Valentine's Day. I wanted to thank you for being you. Thanks for listening, for caring. I've never really written a Valentine note to anyone, especially in a newspaper read by thousands. But I'm open to new things. You've introduced me to a lot of things — dates for one. I don't want to have an exclusive relationship with Aunt Jemima anymore. I'd rather it be with you. So please, please. Let me be your Valentine. Love, Tom.

BS — You think it would cause any problems if you were to kiss me? I don't have to tell! Happy Valentine's Day! Love, Hugmonster.

LARISA: Who's your Valentine? Keith Richards from the 23? — Karen.

Karen — You know, very few people can say they met a washed-up rock star and mutilated a pinata all in the same night! — Larisa.

Percival — Don't you feel honored — I'm actually sending you a personal. Happy Valentine's Day! Even if cupid doesn't send me a man I can always depend on you to let me drown my sorrows in really bad wheat beer. Love you, Betsy.

PETE: Don't feel bad about the God incident. I think I was actually approaching blasphemy or heresy and this was His way of restoring my humility. It was truly a religious experience. — Anna Karenina.

Crunchy, You're the one that I want. It's "synonymous" with life. Love, Confusion-Across-The-Hall.
Posse, You gals are it. I love your idea for severe punishment. Party! What about your fantasies? Let's make some up! Where's the Woodlanders? See Ya, Fitness Freak.

To a good drink: School teachers love you / So do I / But if we had to spend another Tuesday together / I'd probably die. A second golf shot from the tee.

LIZ: Fret not, Newsie-Floozie. They're not worth it, nor do they know what they're missing. You shan't be feeling the culturally-inflicted emptiness of Valentine's Day long before it passes, leaving brighter hopes in its wake. Am I convincing you? No? Well, hope you survive. — K.C.K.C

History of popular holiday

The old tales of ancient romantic love are abundant enough to make the women of the present wish they could rewind time. One of the oldest was the writing of women's names, from which the men chose one. Whomever a man chose became his valentine, and he was to pay special attention to her. For several days, each man wore his "heart on his sleeve."

Many people have pondered the question of who is actually St. Valentine — a fictional or real person?

It was the introduction of commercial valentines in the 1800s which caught the interest of many. Intricate designs of cupids, arrows through hearts and satin or lace trim decorated the cards, thus beginning a time-honored trend.

Whether you are single, taken or wishing to be taken, look around campus for that perfect guy or girl and ask him or her to be your valentine. Not only do you know the contemporary tricks of the trade to gain a valentine, you also know how your ancestors established St. Valentine's Day and made it one of the world's most popular holidays.

Solarcat expands horizons

The team believes that communication and cooperation among different majors is essential. Mark Soulliere, a senior accounting major and team treasurer, recounted, "I've learned about different majors by interacting with them, and especially learned what my friends who are engineers do." In particular, he is looking for anyone with basic business skills, willing to do paperwork and bookkeeping, or to be responsible for the allocation of finances.

The team feels that working with people with different majors, backgrounds and interests on a common project will prepare them for the real world. The team holds a round table of exchange in which all members, including newcomers, participate. Teamwork is the key. Pasieka summed it up, "Building the Solarcat is a university rather than an engineering project."

Engineers, business and liberal arts students and nurses are all welcome to join in this community effort, as long as they put in the time, interest and commitment. The team meets weekly on Sundays at 8:30 p.m. With enough student involvement, the Wild Solarcat III may well continue to be a fierce competitor at both the national and international levels.

From the home office in 201 Dougherty Hall, the top 10 reasons why sickness hit the Villanova campus this week.

10. Outbreak of the Bubonic Plague.
9. The Spit was serving Botulism Casserole.
8. Grade "E" meat — a surprise in every bite.
7. Annual Bulemia binge strikes before Spring Break trips.
6. Food service spells relief S-A-L-M-0-N-E-L-L-A.
5. University announces tuition increase to $30,000.
4. Penthouse has a 10-page Marge Schott pullout.
3. Rollie Massimino was promoted to University president.
2. Contaminated siblings.

And the No. 1 reason why sickness struck the Villanova campus this week:

1. The cafeterias now feature new "Montezuema's Revenge" mountain spring water.

Sibling Weekend

Saturday night. Two Wildcats, a disc jockey and a magician livened up the dance. The young siblings had fun meeting one another, and several Villanovans said that they had "a blast" dancing the night away. One senior exclaimed "My little sister had to drag me off the dance floor!"

On Sunday morning Father Chappell said Mass in Corr Chapel. "The Mass was very special. Father Chappel geared it especially towards the children," noted Geiman and Quigley.

Although the campus offered a wide variety of activities for the visiting siblings, some Villanovans chose to do their own thing. Some went out to nearby restaurants, others explored the Philadelphia Zoo and a few even experienced Villanova off-campus social life by going to parties.

Jazz culture captivates Philadelphia

By CAROLYN POPPE
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Are you looking for something new to do this weekend that is entertaining, inexpensive and bypasses that sentimental "Valentine thing?" Visit Philadelphia for an impressive array of musicians at the Fifth Annual Spectacor Presidential Jazz Weekend Feb. 12-15.

Once again, the Philadelphia Electric Company prescribes the diverse world of jazz in a liberal dose. It presents a celebration of jazz culture in a three-day excursion that sweeps through all parts of the city. From concert halls and clubs to museums and markets, the art and music of a rich heritage enchant participants everywhere that open minds can be found.

The spirit of the event is all-encompassing. Those who normally do not partake in jazz will appreciate the talents present as much as will avid fans. There is certainly something for everyone.

Concerts that will headline the weekend include Pharoah Sanders on Friday at 8 p.m. at the Sheraton Society Hill Hotel, Second and Walnut streets (Tickets are $22.50 through Ticketmaster). On Saturday, Cab Calloway ("scat" king) and his orchestra perform a Jazz Dance Cabaret at 9 p.m. at the Hotel Atop the Bellevue, Broad and Walnut streets (tickets are $25). On Sunday at 7 p.m. Eartha Kitt and Trio provide a Jazz Finale at the Sheraton Society Hill at $22.50 per person.

Those seeking real jazz exhilaration should indulge in Friday night's Jazz 'till Sunrise — Jazz Marathon Tribute to Duke Ellington from 10 p.m. to 6:30 a.m. This power performance features 14 of Philadelphia's finest jazz ensembles, such as the Jasmin Williams Quartet, the Butch Reed Quartet and a Battle of the Saxes. "It's a great showcase of talent," said graduate student John Kolmer, who found last year's performance well worth standing for the whole night. But "take a really long afternoon nap," he suggests. The marathon hops at the Afro-American Historical and Cultural Museum, Seventh and Arch streets, and tickets are $15.

> The art and music of a rich heritage enchant participants.

The jazz weekend also offers free shows, workshops and displays in addition to these concerts. From 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturday, the African-American Marketplace provides the sounds of many fine high school and college jazz bands from the area, as well as endless shopping for ethnic clothing, crafts, art and food. The market extravaganza can be found at Mill Creek Jazz and Cultural Society, 4624 Lancaster Ave. Also, the Electric Company, at 23rd and Market streets, displays a free jazz photo exhibit all weekend.

On Saturday, Ted Royal performs a free concert from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. at the Sande Webster Gallery, 2018 Locust St. And the Alfie Pollitt Trio jams from 8 p.m. to midnight at the corner of the Rediscovered Art Gallery, 617 N. 4th St., for just $5.

As if these jazz events are not enough, visitors can overdose on live performances at a plethora of Philly jazz clubs. Many restaurants, clubs and bars, like the Samuel Adams Brew House, Cafe Einstein and Zanzibar Blue, provide jazz brunches on Sunday or trios and ensembles on Friday and Saturday nights, and a variety of special performances throughout the weekend.

Whatever jazz experience you prefer, "the music never stops" during this weekend in Philly. Call 636-1666 for more information.

'Cemetery Club' offers universal message

"The Cemetery Club," a new heartwarming comedy, explores love the second time around.

By CATHERINE C. GRAHAM
Staff Reporter

"The Cemetery Club" tells the story of three middle-class Jewish women in their 60s trying to face up to widowhood. Esther (Ellen Burstyn), Doris (Olympia Dukakis) and Lucille (Diane Ladd) are three lifelong friends who find out that dating is a tricky proposition and takes more effort the second time around.

The characters are realistic, and all three women are perfect for their respective roles. Throughout the film, we see Lucille faking joy, Doris making a second career out of mourning and Esther remaining awash in vulnerability.

Esther is the heart of the three women as she tentatively embarks on a relationship with Ben (Danny Aiello), a cab driver. The women originally meet him at the cemetery where they were all visiting their late spouses' graves. The cemetery is the focal point of the story — the background of it is lush and beautiful.

As Ben, a charming widower, takes an interest in Esther and develops a relationship with her, Lucille and Doris send up a chorus of envy and disapproval. Eventually, they all realize that life goes on for the young at heart in this new comedy from Touchstone pictures.

Directed by Bill Duke ("A Rage in Harlem" and "Deep Cover") and written by Ivan Menchell, who first wrote the play "The Cemetery Club" as a cathartic means of healing after the death of his father, the movie is packed with tenderness and fun. Coping with tragedy through humor is a predominant theme of the story.

Phish unites two distinct musical styles

By CHRISTOPHER GONNELLI
Staff Reporter

With their latest compact disc release, entitled Rift, the band Phish constructs a bridge to unite the rift which separates two distinct styles of music, rock 'n' roll and jazz. While percussionist Jonathan Fishman and bassist Mike Gordon collaborate to provide a tight, jazz-oriented rhythm; guitarist, songwriter and lead vocalist Trey Anastasio satiates the CD with extensive guitar solos while periodically submitting to keyboardist Page McConnell, who punctuates the CD with brilliant piano arrangements.

Yet, the title, Rift, contains a much deeper meaning than that which explains the duality of the musical content of the CD. One traditionally defines a rift as a disruption or disagreement in a relationship. Lyricist Anastasio constructs the CD around the idea that he has opened a rift between a female companion and himself. The result of this construction is a 15-song, 70-minute concept CD which revolves around an individual who is relegated to a restless sleep because his anxieties and fears regarding the relationship assault him in his sleep. Phish makes this clear by inserting two brief interludes, titled "Lengthwise." The two episodes are placed toward the beginning and the end of the CD. During these interruptions the listener hears a clock ticking, a person snoring and background lyrics echoing the words, "When you're there I sleep lengthwise/ and when you're gone/ I sleep diagonal in my bed." With the exception of the final track, the entire CD is a dream sequence.

On the opening track of the CD, also titled "Rift," Anastasio and McConnell beset the listener with an exchange of scaling guitar and piano solos. The song is an allegory. His female partner is represented as reason. The lyrics suggest that the individual trapped in this nightmare initiated the rift. Anastasio sings, "I spied wings of reason herself taking flight/ and upon yonder precipice saw her alight/ and glare back at me, one last look of dismay/ as if she were the last one she thought I'd betray."

The most powerful song on the CD is the ballad "Fast Enough For You." Phish employs guitarist Gordon Stone, who sets the tone of this song by providing a soothing steel guitar. This song is also the primary candidate to receive radio airplay. This composition is a preliminary attempt at reconciliation with his partner. Anastasio whispers, "and I'd be happy just to watch you age ... which isn't nearly fast enough for you." The individual renounces his prior demands of his partner and suggests a slow-paced renewal to their relationship. Yet, he fears she will never consent.

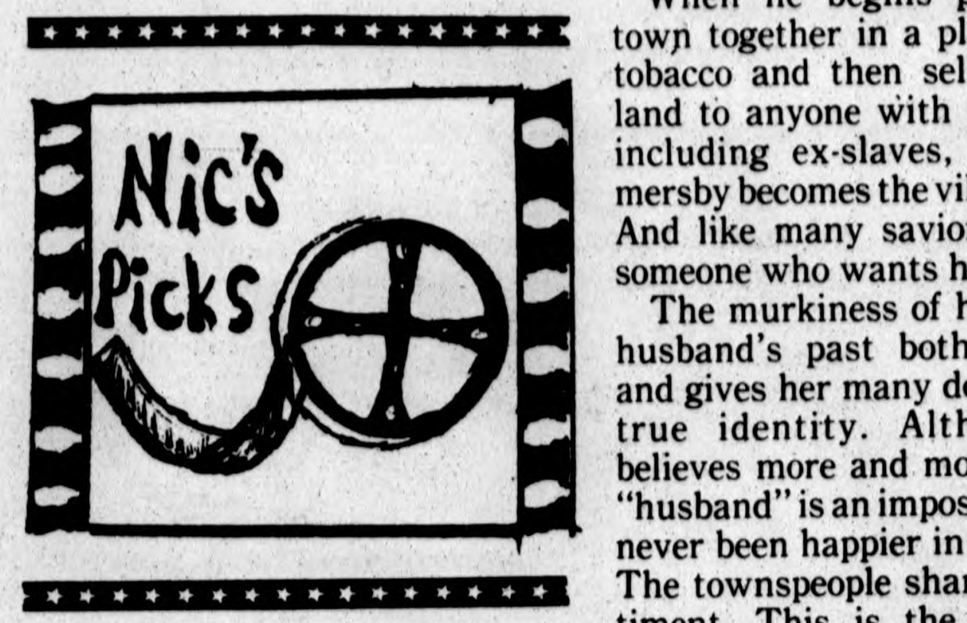
As Rift progresses, the lyrics become more twisted and eccentric. The disturbing "Weigh" finds the individual wishing to dismember his partner and weigh the separate parts. The lyrical absurdity of this CD culminates in the song "It's Ice." The individual now believes that his struggle is internal. As the lyrics regress toward the absurd, the musical tone of the CD shifts from a musing, rock accent to a jovial, jazz tone while maintaining an element of rock and roll.

The CD-journey-dream concludes with the reassuring "Silent In The Morning." Anastasio exclaims, "Silent in the morning/ found your voice/ it brings me to my knees." The individual is exhilarated because he is no longer subject to the torture of the dream, nor the torment of the rift which has distanced him from his partner. The song implies that the comforting voice of his partner, this simple exchange of dialogue, has closed the rift.

Rift will appeal to those listeners who are seeking a musically experimental CD. The band encompasses a wide range of styles, from rock 'n' roll to jazz. Musically, the first half of this CD is pensive, while the second half is more radiant. On a majority of the songs, the band embarks upon extended guitar and piano solos which may dazzle the listener. With the exception of the final song, the lyrics are hopelessly pessimistic. The one area where this CD is lacking is vocals. The band does not show much range in their harmonies, and in many instances throughout the CD, the vocals become monotonous.

Gere surprises as soldier

By AARON NICODEMUS
Senior Reporter



Some memories take time to fade, while others disappear in an instant. Usually, it is the highs and lows of life that retain their clarity in our heads, as we consciously or unconsciously replay scenes of our lives over and over in our minds. "Sommersby" deftly handles the nuances of what memory means, and how it can be twisted to suit its bearer.

Richard Gere is Jack Sommersby, a returning Civil War veteran who has not been seen nor heard from for over six years. Once a wealthy plantation owner, Jack now has a crumbling mansion, a deteriorating farm, and a beautiful wife (Jodie Foster) and son. His return is triumphant, as he is met with cheers and revelry from the townsfolk of the tiny Southern village.

Since her husband was gone so long and presumed dead, Laurel (Foster) had pledged to marry the town preacher in a year. Now torn between obligation and affection, she chooses to honor her bond. Yet Jack is now caring, compassionate, honest and relatively sober — qualities the man who left six years ago did not possess. But war can change a man, as can extended time in a Yankee prison.

When he begins pulling the town together in a plan to grow tobacco and then sell shares of land to anyone with the money, including ex-slaves, Jack Sommersby becomes the village savior. And like many saviors, there is someone who wants him dead.

The murkiness of her prodigal husband's past bothers Laurel and gives her many doubts to his true identity. Although she believes more and more that her "husband" is an imposter, she has never been happier in all her life. The townspeople share that sentiment. This is the Jack Sommersby they all wanted to return. Why risk losing their promises of stability for the truth?

An adaptation of the French film "The Return of Martin Guerre," "Sommersby" is more than an idyllic romance. Jodie Foster proves that she belongs on the list of Hollywood's finest. As expected her performance as the defiant yet supple Laurel, complete with translucent eyes that convery emotion amazingly well, will indoubtedly land her an Oscar nomination. No surprise there. The real shocker is Gere, who obviously lost his choppy dialogue habit from "Final Analysis" and contributes a steady performance.

One scene captures the best in their performances. In it, Jack has asked his wife to remove his beard. As if watching someone being shaved with a straight razor is not enough, the two begin a tantalizing conversation about trust and kindness. Wrought with hidden meanings behind the blade's every swipe, the electricity between them becomes almost unbearable.

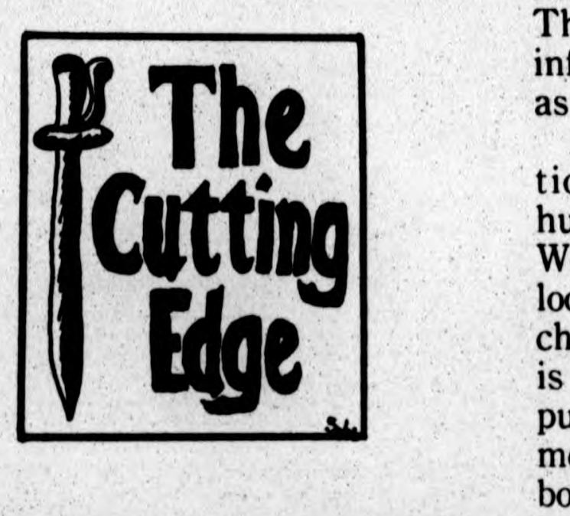
If "Sommersby" has any flaws, it is its dependance on circumstance. By the end, as the pieces fall symmetrically into place, the viewer might feel that circumstance would prevail again. The ending, although a bit overdrawn, gives an unexpectedly nasty twist to what had been a moving and generally uplifting film. The scenery and setting of Reconstruction fit admirably well in that scene but do not detract from the all-important plot. While prone to a few melodramatic pitfalls, "Sommersby" delivers romance with a kick.

FAST FORWARD: An interracial love affair is the focus of "Love Field," a film starring Michelle Pfeiffer as a Southern belle reacting to the death of President Kennedy. Pfeiffer meets an engaging black man on the bus to JFK's funeral. After the bus crashes and they are forced to survive together, they fall in love. My question is, does Pfeiffer look any better than she did as a worn-out waitress in "Frankie and Johnny"? Let's hope so.

REWIND: The video shelves brace for the onslaught of "A League of Their Own," this summer's surprise hit about a women's baseball league created during World War II. Starring Geena Davis, Rosie O'Donnell, Madonna and Tom Hanks, "A League of Their Own" is a simple, well-meaning date movie. It has all the earmarks of being a megaphone for the feminist movement (female story, female leads, female director (Penny Marshall)) but does not try too hard. One note: John Lovitz (Ex-Saturday Night Live comedian) has a funny bit part as a scout scouring the country for female talent. Baseball talent, that is. "A League of Their Own" provides for a good night in.

Skins evoke the '60s style

By COLEEN KENIREY
Entertainment Editor



The British import, the Candy Skins, were introduced to American audiences in 1991 as the opening act on Squeeze's tour. Their combination of a fresh, upbeat attitude and unrefined onstage talent made the Candy Skins, and fellow opening act Ocean Blue, a tough act for Squeeze to follow when they appeared at the Tower Theater. The stand-out track of the young band's short set was a cover of "For What It's Worth."

That cut appeared on their debut effort, "Space I'm In." It linked them stylistically to the '60s, an era which is also echoed throughout Fun?, their new release. In Fun?, the Candy Skins adopt a hippie love ethic, tying the love theme into virtually every song. The listener is actually transported to this more hip time period when, in "Wembley," Nick Cope sings "I need you to defend me/It's 1966 again."

Contrary to the flowerchild philosophy, however, these words are sometimes tempered by sadness and depression, such as in "Grass," "House at the Top of the Hill" and "Tired of Being Happy." Thus, the songs are as much influenced by the '60s mentality as they are a reaction to it.

Another example of this reactionary spirit lingers in the humorous "Let's Take Over the World." This cut takes a comedic look at the belief that youth can change the world. The sentiment is reflected in such lines as: "you put a gun to my head/just to get me out of bed/on Monday/Read a book and said to me/you fell in love with anarchy." The hippie ideals also return with, "but she makes love with boxing gloves/and all I want is peace and love."

Fun? fuses pop elements with subdued but unmistakeable references to '60s icons like the Beatles and the Monkees. Although these influences arise in "Tired of Being Happy" and the acoustic "Grass," these songs differ from the sound of their predecessors in that they have a modern edge. "Everybody Loves You," for example, contains a Beatles-like refrain, but also offers occasional blues-tinged guitar chords.

The Candy Skins are at their best on "Wembley" and "Dig It Deep" in which more potent drums and guitar provide resistence against a too-airy sound approached on the sentimentally sappy "Everything Just Falls Apart On Me." The title song also expands their style with funky guitar as well as haunting percussion reminiscent of "For What It's Worth."

"Wembley" is a strong initial release, for which the band recently filmed a video. The song, which is already receiving local radio airplay, features the interesting simile "A love as big as — Wembley." "Wembley" is the cream of this CD, as the musicians venture into more expressive territory.

Rhythm guitarist Mark Cope has commented on his band's mission, "We're not out to change your world, we're just out to change your mood." This is an essential factor to remember about the Candy Skins. The intent is to create sensual impressions to which the listener can relate, and this band is effective in this task. Although love and relationships are the premise of most of the songs, they are typically not, as Cope has explained, "horrible cliches." The Candy Skins actually take some cliches and twist them, as in "Grass," when singer Cope comments, "the bigger the garden, the greener the grass."

The mood of Fun? is appropriately light. It is not overly self-conscious music, but instead presents a series of uncomplicated images of life. There is a humorous current that runs through all of the Candy Skins songs. Sometimes slightly forced, but usually charming, the sounds of Fun? create a refreshing montage of rhythms.

The Candy Skins' imaginative, fun-loving approach contains reflections of other music, but tucks them into catchy pop originals. The clever, but not overly reflective lyrics do not weigh the listener down. Fun? allows listeners to lighten up, soak in smooth tones and escape the more serious aspects of life. It is a solid sophomore outing for this up-and-coming British group. Watch for the "Wembley" video on MTV soon.

Robertson refines style

By JOHN KAZMIERCZAK
Staff Reporter

"Storyville: A section of New Orleans once dedicated to fast living, hot music and moonburnt nights," reads the liner inscription of Robbie Robertson's latest solo album. While this introduction may not be completely representational of Storyville, Robertson's second album, a collection of memories and emotions, does signify a gigantic step forward in terms of maturity, direction and style.

Robertson, formerly of The Band, has far surpassed his self-titled debut effort. Robbie Robertson (which was released in 1987) produced such hits as "Somewhere Down The Crazy River" and "Broken Arrow" (of which a relatively poor remake was released on Rod Stewart's 1991 album Vagabond Heart). It relied primarily on a bleak, gritty tone and extremely abstract lyrics to convey its emotions. In contrast, Storyville, which features mellower, bordering-on-melancholy ballads ("Hold Back The Dawn," "Soap Box Preacher") and the occasional R&B track ("Shake This Town," "Go Back To Your Woods") possesses a greater sense of refinement.

Robertson's background cast changes for virtually every song. Impressive guest artists such as Bruce Hornsby, Aaron and Ivan Neville and Neil Young can be heard providing background vocals on various songs. Having written and co-produced all of the 10 cuts, Robertson was free to incorporate a number of unusual instruments and arrangements. His creative selections include a mandolin, a fluglehorn, three separate horn sections and a full brass band, which is featured prominently in "Shake This Town."

Despite his above-average guitar performance, vocals are unquestionably Robertson's forte. Each song's lyrics are a short, powerfully emotive vignette. Some are about love, some about loss, some merely a poetically abstract series of shutterclick images. Still, Storyville would be nothing without Robertson's uniquely talented voice. Endowed with amazing range, he is at one moment low and bluesy in "Go Back To Your Woods," the next soaring and ethereal in "Sign of The Rainbow," the album's most moving song. Robertson's vocal motif is somewhat reminiscent of Peter Gabriel, with whom he had worked closely on Robbie Robertson.

Notable failures on this album are few and far between. "Breakin' The Rules" and "Resurrection" last about 30 seconds too long, edging into the realm of tediousness, and "What About Now" achieves the transcendence from sentimental to sappy. Besides these and other miniscule flaws, Storyville remains a pleasure to experience.

Two factors provide the basis for Storyville's success; the uncannily insightful, occasionally inspirational lyrics, and Robertson's whisper-straining-to-be-a-scream voice. This album represents an extremely cohesive, emotionally mature effort from Robertson and should not be missed.

Lampoon film fails

By REGGIE BEEHNER
Staff Reporter

Following in the gigantic footsteps of "Airplane!" and "The Naked Gun" comes the newest member of the loony tune farce films, "National Lampoon's Loaded Weapon 1." Unfortunately, this buffoonish comedy lacks a little of what its successful predecessors had: laughs. The film is chock full of plenty of attempts at humor, but most of the jokes end up falling short of any contact with the funny bone.

However, "Loaded Weapon" does have its few good points. The movie comes complete with more Hollywood names than the front page of the National Enquirer: Emilio Estevez, Samuel L. Jackson, Jon Lovitz, Tim Curry, Kathy Ireland, William Shatner and Dr. Joyce Brothers.

Estevez plays the role of the hot, young cop who is frustrated with his life and the loss of his only friend, his dog. Estevez is forced to partner up with Jackson, and the duo soon find themselves on a "Lethal Weapon"-style, smart cop/wild cop investigation, tracking down the infamous General Mortars and his cocaine-laced cookie-smuggling operation.

Along the way, "Loaded Weapon" uses a few of the more memorable scenes from a number of other movies, including "Basic Instinct" and "Silence of the Lambs," but even these scenes are not quite enough to save the movie from a comedy director's worst nightmare — a silent crowd. A few humorous scenes bring back memories of "Naked Gun," and you soon find yourself longing for Frank Drebon to pop out and say one of his classic lines, like "We are not going to rest for one minute until we get this man safe and sound behind bars. Now come on Ed, let's go get a bite to eat." The jokes simply do not follow through on their delivery.

The film is 83 minutes long, which is maybe a little short and adds to the film's rushed disposition. As you sit in the theater, you wonder if the whole project was whipped together like a late Domino's pizza, paying little regard to details.

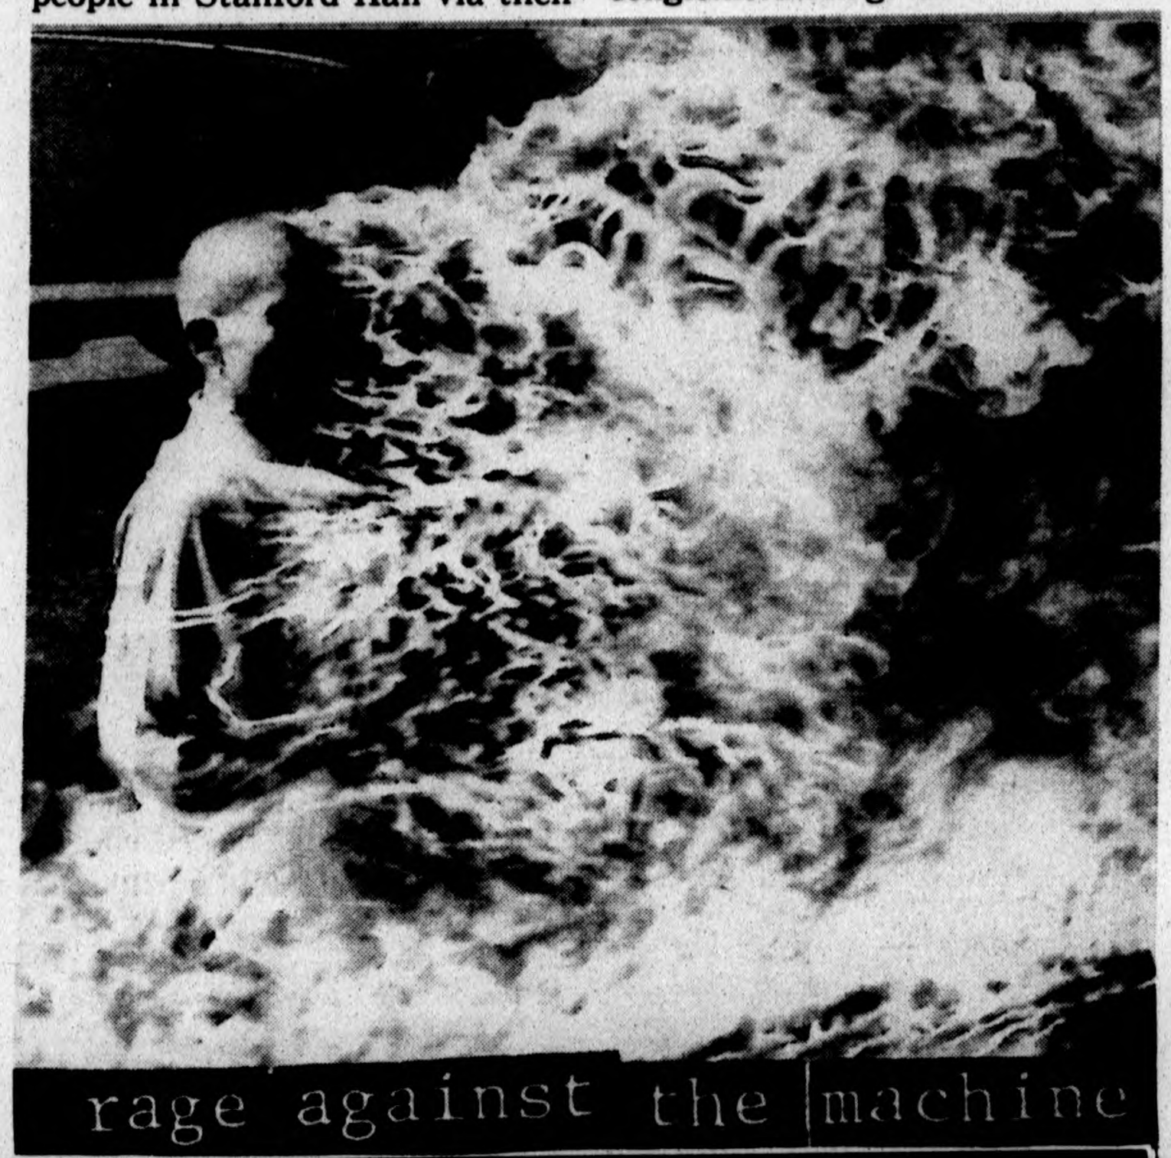
Rage debuts with power

By MARK McCREARY
Staff Reporter

"No samples, keyboards or synthesizers used in the making of this recording." This proud statement is the last printed line of the debut release of Rage Against the Machine, and probably one of the hardest statements for a band to make in this musical age. Although this 1992 Epic release has received very little attention since its debut, it is some of the best new, promising music out right now. But if you have never heard of Rage Against the Machine, except from the WXVU top ten list and a few weird people in Stanford Hall via their paraphernalia, then the reason is because it is great music.

This band of four "Guilty Parties" have assembled a 10-track, hardcore disc that will not leave the listener as worn out as Ministry or Helmet. Rather, they have given this gift of music that will force you to seriously consider moshing around the room in your underwear, screaming the lyrics along with Zack De La Rocha (lead vocals), since they are complimentarily included in the CD sleeve. But even if you imitate Crazy Joey from the "neighborhood" by jumping off the walls fully clad, you are bound to experience the vibe that this conglomeration gives off.



The opening track, "Bombtrack," makes it fully comprehensible where this disc is heading, and is not about to let you off of this rollercoaster until the almost full 55 minutes have expired. "Killing In the Name," with lyrics that are unprintable for obvious reasons, picks up where the first track left off, yet amazingly none of the tracks sound totally alike. The lyrics of "Settle for Nothing" are very gripping and demonstrate that this band is more than surface-level deep. "A jail cell is freedom from the pain in my home. Hatred passed on, passed on and passed on. A world of violent rage. But it's one that I can recognize. Having never seen the color of my father's eyes. Yes I live in hell but it's a hell that I can grip." Well, maybe it is not quite The Commodores' "Easy" (Faith No More's version is better), but then again, it has already been said that it was great music. To sum this little point up again, this is not "Shiny Happy People"-ish music, but music that is personal to the lyricist, and more often than one realizes, relative to the listener.

The next to last track (that is number nine for those who have been following the bouncing ball), "Township Rebellion," is one of the more kicking songs of the disc. Its delightful little chorus goes something like this: "Why stand on a silent platform. Fight the war. F . . . the norm."

No matter how you cut it, this is music that is powerful, scary at times, and not to be taken at total face value. There are two things that are amazing about this disc: 1) There is not a parental advisory label (Tipper would be upset if she knew this), and 2) A guy named Stephen Perkins played "Trashcan Percussion" on the disc. If the name is not familiar, check the name of the drummer on a Jane's Addiction disc. Coincidence? I wish I knew, but he is unemployed.

So if you are into pretty hard music, can handle a "fistful" of Public Enemy-style lyrics, and trust that "Rage Against the Machine" sticker on the back of the mauled Cressida parked on the south campus parking circle, then check out the disc. My understanding is that it is an unreal live show, so watch for that too. Until the live show rolls around, grab the disc, blow the speakers out and dance in your boxers until your heart is content.

'The Vanishing' grips with suspense

By GREGORY V. MENZEL
Staff Reporter

Have you ever lost something so important to you that it drove you crazy, not knowing where it was, or if you would ever find it again? The agony and uncertainty can become overwhelming, especially after a long time has passed. What would you do and how would you feel if this lost possession happened to be a loved one who was very dear to you?

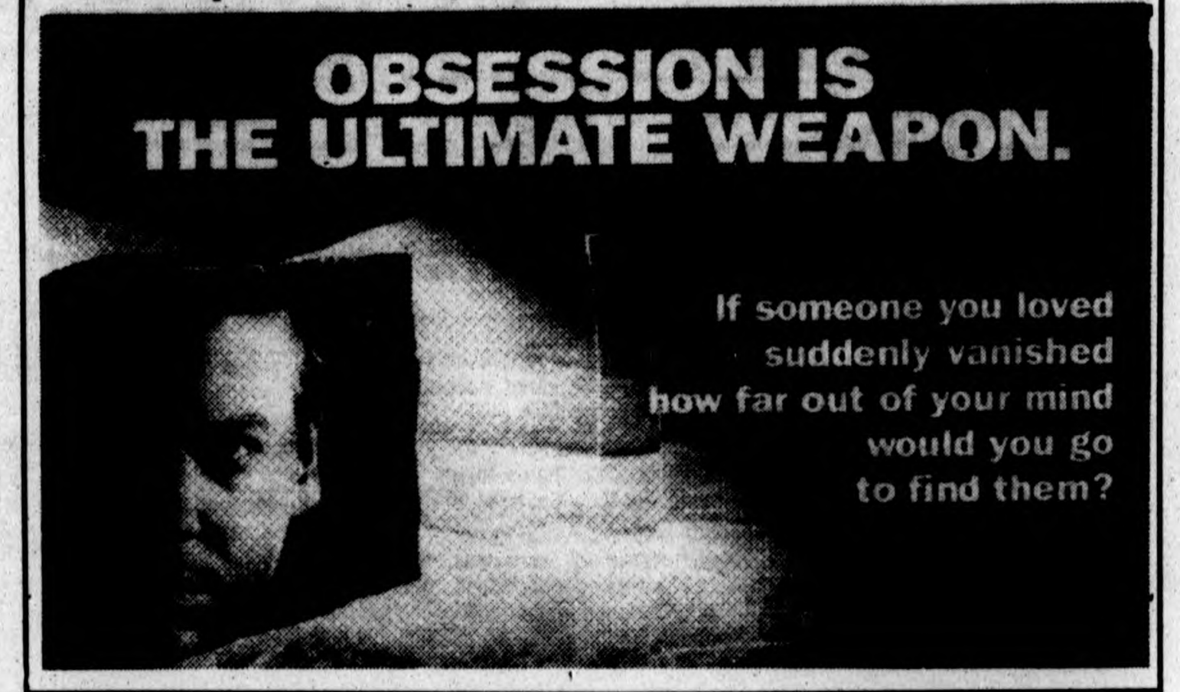
Jeff Harriman (Kiefer Sutherland) experiences this horrible situation in "The Vanishing" when he loses his girlfriend, Diane Shaver (Sandra Bullock). Diane vanishes from a gas station one day, right after she and her boyfriend vow to never part. Jeff searches for three years, hanging on to the hopes that someday he will discover exactly what has happened to her.

Finally, Jeff is encountered by the man who was responsible for the disappearance. Barney (Jeff Bridges) faces Jeff and reveals that he was indeed the kidnapper. In order to find out what has happened to Diane, Barney tells Jeff that he must go through the same process that Diane experienced when she was captured, which involves becoming unconscious for a period of time. Jeff is torn in deciding whether or not to go through with this risky proposition, and if he decides to kill Barney, then he will never know the truth about his girlfriend. This awkward situation leads to an interesting and suspenseful story that reveals the outcome of Jeff's decision as he debates about finding the answer to the question that has been nagging him for three years.

Jeff Bridges plays a sly and deranged man who is married and has a daughter of whom he is very proud. In fact, he becomes somewhat of a hero to her. He believes the greatest thing he could do to prove his heroism is to perform the most evil deed he can imagine, while at the same time, being absolutely good. By kidnapping Diane, Barney believes that he is fulfilled in his goal to become absolutely evil. There is an eerie sense of horror that surrounds Barney, who remains cool and confident throughout the entire film.

During the three years that Jeff spends looking for Diane, he becomes involved with another woman, Rita, played by Nancy Travis. At first, she just seems to be an annoying girlfriend who is always angry at Jeff for his failure to forget his past life. However, she surprisingly plays an important role at the conclusion of the film, at a point when she is really needed.

Although the plot of the movie takes some time to develop, the suspense increases as the film progresses. There is also an effective element of horror towards the end, when the story takes an unexpected twist. So, if you think that you are feeling tormented after losing something important, check out "The Vanishing" and you will realize that there are worse things to be lost, including your own life.



OBSESSION IS THE ULTIMATE WEAPON.
If someone you loved suddenly vanished how far out of your mind would you go to find them?

Rave 'Til Dawn compiles unique techno mix

By MAURA RURAK
Senior Reporter

"Techno" music has been slowly inching its way into the mainstream with hits such as Technotronic's "Move This" and "James Brown Is Dead" blaring across the Philadelphia airwaves of Q102. Once considered only fit for the club crowd, techno is quickly establishing itself as a definable music genre. Built on repeated, synthesized sounds, techno is ideal for dance freaks ready to jam.

Rave 'Til Dawn is an album made for those wanting to sample the hypnotic harmonies of the future, and it is a great introduction for those unfamiliar with techno.

A compilation of songs that fall under the generic, general term techno, the 10 tracks of Rave 'Til Dawn present 10 different views of the "rave" scene. The artists included on the album are veterans who have found great success in the clubs. Although casual listeners may not recognize the work of Ottorongo, the Movement or Lords of Acid, they will undoubtedly find the tracks very familiar.

With most modern music, Tipper Gore's infamous Parental Advisory label is found plastered across the CD box, warning the public of the explicit, yet sparse lyrics. The first sample, "* You" gives a sense of what the album has in store. Do not be misled, the track's main focus is on the beat, not the deep, provocative meaning of the lyrics.

"Jump" (Mutha Mix) takes full control of Rave 'Till Dawn, just as it compels crowds to dance in Philadelphia's techno oasis, The Bank and the Main Line's weekend version, The Yorkshire. The staple of the techno world, "Get Ready for This" is placed third on the album. An orchestral mix, this is the track that is often sampled to create new versions for the clubs.

Blue Pearl's "Can You Feel the Passion" and Code Red's "Dreamer, Dream" constantly pump with rhythms vital to success on the dance floor. This is where the feedback comes from. If clubbers can not dance to it, the tracks will not make it big. Due to the lack of airplay, techno feeds off the action in the clubs to enhance the force of the track.

Rave 'Till Dawn collects the most unique mix of tracks to hit the clubs from 1991 to the present. Since most people will not invest in a large techno collection, this compilation seems to be the next best thing. The best of the clubs is combined on one complete choice. For those wanting to toy with the neverending rave scene, Rave 'Til Dawn becomes the obvious CD to own.

Japanese animation dazzles with its magic

By JOSEPH R. McCABE
Staff Reporter

One may assume from the recent success of such films as "Beauty and the Beast" and "Aladdin," as well as TV shows like "Ren and Stimpy" and "The Simpsons," that America is the world's leader in animation. The truth, however, is that for quite some time, Japan has been at the forefront of the cartoon industry.

Does anyone remember "Speed Racer," "Battle of the Planets," or "Star Blazers"? These were all dubbed versions of Japanese cartoons that began in this country as a cheap programming source for syndicated networks. Japanese animation (or "anime") has evolved much more than American in terms of story and characterization. The shows mentioned above were all drastically altered from the original material because of violent and sexual content. In Japan, lack of media censorship enabled animated programs to mature. Thus, while American shows primarily featured watered-down furry animal stories with an obligatory "message" at the end, the Japanese spinned yarns of future generations struggling to prevent the dehumanization of the earth from war and technology.

Japanese animation has yet to create something as staggeringly beautiful as "Fantasia." But while American companies only produce one or two (if any) great films or TV shows each year, their Japanese counterparts produce a massive amount of good material for all ages. The following are just a few:

"Akira" — Directed by comic book master Katsuhiro Otomo, this is the most technically sophisticated animated film to emerge from Japan. While a disappointingly dubbed version has been released on videotape, one can still appreciate the beautiful, almost psychedelic visuals which are reminiscent of such films as "Blade Runner."

"Robot Carnival" — An excellent anthology film for those new to anime, "Robot Carnival" features shorts which appeal to a truly broad spectrum of ages and tastes. Each deals with some form of robot.

"Robotech" — Many in America have already seen this series. Actually an adaption of three original anime series, it is an epic space soap opera which ventures between enjoyably dumb and strangely compelling.

"The Castle of Cagliostro" — This is perhaps the most famous work of acclaimed film maker Hayao Miyazaki. Though it lacks the pyrotechnics of "Akira," it is directed with a storytelling prowess that pales most live-action films. Steven Spielberg remarked that the opening chase scene was the finest ever done — animated or otherwise.

The above titles are all available on home video and more are being released every month. It appears that Americans may finally catch on to one of the best kept secrets in animation history.

Rockers will release album to benefit AIDS

By TIFFANY CHRISTENSEN
Staff Reporter

Walt Disney Records will soon be releasing their Pediatric AIDS Foundation (PAF) benefit album, For Our Children: The Concert. New renditions of several familiar children's songs are provided by Paula Abdul, Michael Bolton, Melissa Etheridge, Salt-N-Pepa, Randy Newman, Sheila E., Gerardo and Patti LaBelle. The album also contains original recordings by such well-known artists as Kris Kross, Celine Dion, and even Woody Harrelson, star of television's "Cheers."

For Our Children: the Concert begins with Paula Abdul's upbeat dance version of "Zip-A-Dee-Doo-Dah," flavored by its prominent trumpet solos. Abdul has described her choice of this classic Disney tune by saying, "The melody's infectious, the lyrics are simple and catchy, and it seemed like a perfect song to dance."

Paula Abdul is among the artists featured on the benefit CD·

The album is also characterized by several rap versions of traditional children's tunes. Kris Kross, Salt-N-Pepa, and The Party provide pro-social messages interspersed throughout their rapped accounts of Humpty Dumpty, Jack and Jill and Little Miss Muffet. In their performance of "This Old Man" Salt-N-Pepa advises, ". . . stay in school and be good to your mom and dad."

Lyrics from The Party's "Nursery Rhyme Medley" reflect the benefit album's purpose: " . . . we're doing it for the children, the fight ain't over yet, we're doing it for the children, cause then we can't forget . . . "

The performances conclude with Patti LaBelle's uplifting message in "What a wonderful World/Sing a Rainbow," as she sings, " . . . it takes all kinds of people to make a wonderful world . . . "

hope for children with AIDS

The album, recorded live before a capacity audience at Universal Amphitheater in Los Angeles last September, serves as the follow-up to Walt Disney Records' first benefit album for the Pediatric AIDS Foundation, For Our Children. For our Children was released in May 1991 and has raised nearly $3 million for the Pediatric AIDS Foundation since that time. According to Mark Jaffe, vice president of Walt Disney Records, "We are proud to continue our support of PAF and hope that For Our Children: The Concert will exceed the legacy of For Our Children."

Although geared toward a young audience, For Our Children: The Concert promotes the rediscovery of the child that exists in all of us, in addition to aiding funds for pediatric AIDS research. The album will be available on Feb. 16.

'The Club'

You can actually feel the energy and emotions in the audience — the men and women are crying one moment and the next, they are laughing.

Our hearts go out to Esther when she is momentarily hurt by Ben's impulsive actions. Lucille and Doris go to Ben's apartment to bring him back to Esther. This scene shows how close the women really are to each other.

In another scene, we can not help but smile when the three women are asked to be bridesmaids in their friend Selma's (Lainie Kazan) wedding. Selma is an additional character who seeks friendship rather than love during this stage of her life.

All three women are perfect for their respective roles.

The motion picture teaches the viewer some religious traditions of the Jewish faith. One that is especially meaningful is when friends or family go to the grave and a stone is left, signifying the visit.

The film provides a universal message that one is never too old to have a relationship. This makes the movie unique, considering that most films today are geared toward young lovers. "The Cemetery Club" represents a form of entertainment with recognizable human experiences that are amusing, yet touching and funny.

Ladd stars in a new comedy.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

This week the Villanovan and the Wildcat Club recognize John Demers of the ice hockey team as the Athlete of the Week. In a recent game against Quinnipiac College, Demers contributed four goals in the Ice Cats' 6-5 victory, keeping Villanova in the hunt for a ECAC South playoff spot.

Women's swimming ranked 22

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Assistant Sports Editor

Though the Villanova women's swimming and diving team was idle this week, its 162-115 victory over Delaware Feb. 3 elevated 'Nova to No. 22 in the nation. As they prepare for their upcoming triple meet against Syracuse and Miami this weekend, the Wildcats look to expand their perfect 6-0 record.

"I'm really happy with how the girls are performing this year," said Head Coach Chuck Horton. "I think we have the opportunity to reach the top 20."

A mixture of depth and individual talent has been the key to the Cat's success this season. However, the biggest name among the 'Nova swimmers is Olympian Lisa Flood. After swimming on the Canadian Olympic team last summer and claiming the NCAA championship in the 200 yard Breast last season, Flood has a tough act to follow for 1993.

"Nobody has ever repeated the 200 breaststroke; that's one of [Flood's] goals this year," said Horton. "That's the only event that a swimmer has never repeated back-to-back ... She'll be making her hard [NCAA qualifying] standard at the Big East Championship along with several other girls."

Also hot in pursuit of NCAA standard times will be senior Mary Dowling and freshman Eileen Rothenback. Dowlilng is in top form going into this stretch of the season, notching winning times of 1:55.19 in the 200 yard Free and 5:08.16 in the 500 yard Free. She also swam the leadoff leg of the 400 Free relay, which won with a time of 3:41.59.

Meanwhile, Rothenback has distinguished herself in her freshman season. She broke the school record in the 200 yard Back in a meet against Pittsburgh earlier in the year, and Horton considers her one of the team's top three swimmers.

> [The Syracuse triple meet] will be a good opportunity for the nation to see where the girls actually stack up. It's a good indication of what's to happen in the Big East Tournament.
> Head Coach, Chuck Horton

The women's upcoming meet at Syracuse will be its final test before the Big East meet at Pittsburgh Feb. 26-28. The team has high hopes in defending its 1992 Big East crown. 'Nova also stands a good chance of improving upon last year's No. 24 NCAA finish.

"[The triple meet] will be a good opportunity for the nation to see where the girls actually stack up," said Horton. "It's a good indication of what's going to happen in the Big East Tournament."

"Eileen Rothenback is another swimmer that has great potential in the back strokes and individual medley," said Horton.

These three are not alone in their contributions to the team, however. Freshman Tammy Kouser and sophomore Meghan McCaffrey have been vital elements of the Wildcats' winning ways as well. Kouser swam the 100 yard Back for a Villanova record :56.88 in the Harvard Invitational earlier this year. More recently, her :25.05 in the 50 yard Free gave the Cats the top spot for the event in the Delaware meet.

McCaffrey is the defending Big East champion in the 50 yard Free, and continues to perform well in the event. In 'Nova's most recent Big East meet, McCaffrey came in first in the 50 and 100 yard Free.

"I think [McCaffrey] is a tremendous sprinter," said Horton. "She's definitely one of the leading candidates in the country for the sprints."

Ruopoli

was so great just to be a part of the seven girls. Besides that, Nnenna [Lynch], Cheri [Goddard] and I have been running together for four years and it was nice to finally be a part of the National Championship team with them," said Ruopoli.

There was, in fact, a time when the nerves that come with most pressured situations were quite evident. For a time, mostly during her premiere season, there was much less laughing and not much confidence either.

"Coming in as a freshman I used to get nervous for every race. But now I see it more as work that has to get done so I get out there and do it. But meanwhile I enjoy it as much as I can, especially this year, because I know it's my last," she said.

Most of her recognition in the sport of running comes from her talents on the track. Last year, Ruopoli placed first in the outdoor 800 meter competition at the ECAC Championships. This is a tremendous accomplishment that does not always get all of its well-deserved acclaim. As a two-time NCAA All-American, the senior is a key member of the 4x800 meter relay team that is a definite prospect for the NCAA crown. As an individual, both physically and mentally, she is more than ready to make a run at more than a few indoor and outdoor championships.

The demanding schedule of this highly respected 'Nova athlete has not exactly given her much time to think about the impact track and cross country has had on her life.

"I really think I'll appreciate it more by the time I'm done graduating and everything because the whole four years of running for Villanova has been a great experience and I wouldn't take any of it back," she said.

Her teammates and coaches would never take back anything she has done for the organization and sport, either. Reenie Ruopoli's name may never have the chance to be found in the record books, but with all she has done for her team, it may as well be.

Ice Cats split road games

By JONATHAN PASSMAN
Staff Reporter

Time is beginning to run out for Villanova hockey. The Ice Cats split a pair of crucial ECAC South road games last weekend, losing to Fairfield 5-3 Feb. 6, but beating Quinnipiac 6-5 behind the scoring outburst of John Demers Feb. 7. The Ice Cats are now 5-10-3 overall and 4-3-1 in conference play.

At Fairfield, the Stags took advantage of Villanova's early fatigue to take a 2-0 lead. After the first period, Villanova outplayed and outshot Fairfield, but to no avail. Unable to take advantage of five-on-three power play situations, 'Nova saw the game slip away. Freshman Dan Nadeau kept the Ice Cats in the game with 30 saves, 18 in the first period alone.

"We had a real poor first period, but Nadeau kept us in it," said Head Coach Pat Ferrill. "If we did better on the power play, we really could have swung the momentum."

"We just didn't get enough quality shots in the slot," added sophomore Dave Trimble.

> Wentworth has given several teams very tough games this year. We need this win for a shot at the playoffs, so we'll be ready to play.
> Head Coach, Pat Ferrill

Feeling the pressure of elimination, Villanova came out to play the next night against Quinnipiac. Tied at three going into the third, Villanova struck twice to take a commanding 5-3 lead. But Quinnipiac fought back, netting two goals to tie the game at five. All thoughts of Iona's comeback two weeks ago were quickly erased when Villanova scored once more to win 6-5. Freshman Mike Kelly stopped 49 shots, 15 in the furious third period. However, Demers was the star for the Ice Cats, scoring four goals in the win.

"I didn't feel like I did anything special," said Demers. "I got some good breakout passes from my defensemen, Steve Flynn and Anthony Sorrentino, that gave us two-on-one breakaways."

Villanova returns home to the Havertown Skatium to face conference foe Wentworth Institute of Technology tomorrow at 4:45 p.m., and the University of Rhode Island in a non-conference battle Sunday at 11:15 a.m. Villanova lost to Wentworth 8-7 in an overtime shootout last November and will face Rhode Island for the first time this season.

"Wentworth has given several teams very tough games this year," said Ferrill. "We need this win for a shot at the playoffs, so we'll be ready to play."

as well as the game was point guard Joey Brown, who threw in 14 points and had seven assists, six rebounds and five steals. Robert Churchwell tossed in a team-leading 17. Othella Harrington has begun to make an impact on the league. The rookie center is averaging 16.8 p.p.g. and is second in the league in rebounding with a cool 10 per game.

7. Connecticut (4-6, 9-8)

The Huskies went out of conference to catch a tough loss against the Florida State Seminoles, 86-74. Donyell Marshall scored a career high 26 points and Scott Burrell, fresh off the injury list, pitched in 15 points and 11 rebounds in 32 minutes.

8. Miami (4-6, 7-11)

The 'Canes are unfriendly hosts to all who visit their home turf. Syracuse found this out the hard way with an 81-74 loss. Constantin Popa seems to be developing into a better than average center. The big Rumanian threw down 20 points grabbed eight boards and blocked four shots. Michael Gardner added a career high 21 points and 11 assists.

9. Providence (3-7, 10-8)

The Friars have only won four out of their last 24 Big East road games, but their latest one proved to be oh, so sweet. The victory was at the Capital Center and against the Georgetown Hoyas. The 66-56 victory showcased premier rebounder Michael Smith, who grabbed 16 boards and added eight points. Dickey Simpkins also pitched in with 10 points and nine rebounds.

Quintana falls just short at Millrose Games

The Villanova men's track team put forth a solid effort in its two Millrose Games entries.

By LARRY LANZA
Staff Reporter

Villanova sophomore Louie Quintana's progress toward a four-minute mile was temporarily halted Feb. 6 in New York at the Millrose Games in Madison Square Garden.

Coming off a week of sickness and disrupted training, Quintana staged a tough fight in the IC4A College Mile, but was unable to find the legs to pull out either a win or a personal best time, as he finished fourth in 4:10. Instead, Erik Nadeau of Northeastern claimed the victory in 4:08.

In the Villanova men's only other event, the Wildcat quartet of freshmen Kevin Christiani and Scott Whiteman and sophomore Ken Nason and Chuck Silvester finished sixth in the 3,200-meter relay behind the winning New York Athletic Club. 'Nova's time of 7:45 left them 12 seconds behind the winners and six seconds behind runner-up Seton Hall.

In the college mile, Quintana relied upon his excellent strength to stay in a four-man battle for contention into the final 200 yards. As the group entered the final lap, Quintana made an effort for the lead, but there found himself without his usual finishing speed.

"Being sick during the week left me feeling flat going into the race," explained Quintana. "During the race, I held strong, but when I went to take the lead, I just had no turnover in my legs."

Unable to generate a kick, Quintana could hold off neither the winner Nadeau, nor James Madison's Matt Holthaus and Iona's Packie Mulvany, who both finished in 4:09 to take second and third, respectively.

Entering the meet, Quintana was being regarded as the favorite in his race, due to a pair of very fast performances in the weeks leading up to the Millrose Games.

Three weeks prior, Quintana had provisionally qualified for the NCAA Championships by cracking a personal best mile of 4:06 at the Cornell Invitational in upstate New York. A week later, at the Terrier Classic in Boston, Quintana broke through with another NCAA qualifying time of 7:58 in only his second-ever 3000-meter race.

> Right now I feel good, and I feel I'm ready to really pop a fast time.

Subsequently, some were looking at the Millrose race as a showdown between Quintana and the Seton Hall duo of Clinton Bell and defending champion Bryan Spoonire, who had run 4:06 and 4:07, respectively, in Boston. That duel never materialized in New York, as Bell did not finish and Spoonire finished fifth, four seconds behind Quintana.

"I slipped at the start and, even though I finally settled in, I could never move up," said Spoonire. Every time I tried to move outside and get to the front I would get bumped. It was very frustrating."

Having recovered his full health, Quintana gets another chance to take advantage of his current good form when he travels with the Wildcat team to the Iowa State Classic, where he will again run the mile.

"Sunday I had a good long run, and Monday I had a great workout," said Quintana. "Right now I feel good, and I feel I'm ready to really pop a fast time."

After returning from Iowa, Quintana and the rest of the Villanova team will prepare for their trip to Syracuse for the Big East Championships.

Meet Notes — Three former Villanovans were among those in the spotlight at the Millrose Games. Irishman Eamonn Coghlan, who competed for the Wildcats during the mid-1970s, returned to the meet where he had won seven Wanamaker Mile races and this time won the Masters' (40-years-old and over) Mile.

Coghlan's time of 4:05 broke his own master's world record of 4:08, and earned him the award as the outstanding meet performer. Coghlan, who also holds the all-time indoor mile record of 3:49, is now looking to become the first 40-year-old ever to break the four-minute mile.

Fellow Irishman Marcus O'Sullivan, who wore the Villanova singlet in the early 1980s, finished 2nd in the Wanamaker Mile in 3:55 after waging a battle with the world's top miler, Moureddine Morceli of Algeria, who won by less than half a second.

Also, Chip Jenkins, a Wildcat during the mid-1980s, finished second in the 500 in 1:03 behind fellow Olympian Andrew Valmon.

1. Miami (9-2, 14-4)

The Lady Canes cruised to a 2-0 record this past week with victories over the Orangewomen and Providence. The Canes were led by Senior Vicki Plowden who averaged 10 points over the two games. The Miami defense forced 45 turnovers in the two victories while U.M. committed just 27 of its own.

2. Connecticut (9-3, 14-5)

The Huskies posted a 2-0 record this week behind Big East Player of the Week Rebecca Lobo. Lobo scored 52 points, had 18 rebounds, and 12 blocks while pacing Connecticut to victories over St. John's and Syracuse.

3. Georgetown (8-3, 14-5)

The Hoyas kept pace with Miami and UConn by posting a 2-0 record of their own this week. On February 3, the Hoyas left duPont with a one-point win thanks to Kris Witfill who threw in 25 points. Nadira Ricks led the Hoyas to their second victory of the week with a 31-point performance against Pitt. Ricks paced a 21-4 Georgetown run late in the first half to give GU the 84-74 win.

4. Pitt (6-5, 11-8)

The Panthers posted a 1-1 record this week with a double OT victory over Providence and a loss to Georgetown. In the win, Jonna Huemrich scored 16 and Turia Ranson added 14 to pace Pitt to victory. Despite the loss to the Hoyas, Huemrich scored 22 and had three blocks.

5. VILLANOVA (6-5, 10-9)

6. Providence (5-6, 10-9)

The Friars dumped two games this past week with two losses, one to Pitt in double OT, and one to Miami. The Friars were led in both games by junior Lucie Fontanella who averaged 16.5 p.p.g. and 10.5 r.p.g. in the two contests. With the two losses, the Friars fall from fourth place to sixth.

7. Seton Hall (5-7, 11-9)

The Hall women stopped a five-game losing streak this week by posting back-to-back wins over Boston College and St. John's. Junior Jodi Brooks averaged 19 points over the two games, including a career high 26 against the Express. With the victories, the Pirates move up from eighth to seventh in the Big East.

8. St. John's (4-7, 10-9)

The Express suffered losses to UConn and Seton Hall this past week, losses that could mean "curtains" for them. In the loss to Seton Hall, the Express was led by Pam Odom, who had a 16-point performance. Against UConn, St. John's was led by Coleta Brown and Patrina Blow, each of whom knocked down 12 points.

9. Boston College (2-9, 8-11)

The Eagles went 0-2 this past week with losses to Seton Hall and 'Nova. The only good news for B.C. is the continued outstanding play of Sarah Behn. Despite the losses, Behn managed to score 25 and 17 points in each contest. She is currently ranked second in the nation in scoring.

9. Syracuse (2-9, 4-15)

For all those hoping for a repeat of last week's win, get off the drugs. The Orangewomen got crushed this week by Miami and UConn by an average 25.5 points. In the massacre at UConn, the Orangewomen were led by Erin Kenneally, who had 17 points. Against Miami, Holly Oslander led the way with 14 points and eight rebounds.

Ruopoli leads by example

By SEAN KELLY

Atop the greatest stories written about today's athletes sit the most intriguing sports personalities. Their athletic accomplishments have not necessarily been overly heralded, but their character is always one that others can try to emulate. Villanova's Reenie Ruopoli is just that type of individual. The senior runner's attitude towards her athleticism and participation in the sport she has achieved so much in is refreshing.

Four years ago, at W.T. Clarke High School in Westbury, N.Y., Ruopoli was well on her way to making an impact at the college level. At the time, though, she had no idea how much she could achieve or how big a part of her life running would eventually become. After four years of college and competition, she has surely become acquainted with the impact of her sport.

Ruopoli began her career like most innocent freshmen, without much knowledge of anything.

"I didn't expect it to be all that it is," said Ruopoli. "I was disillusioned as to how much work goes into it."

Throughout almost 10 straight seasons of competition, she has held on to one goal that she set for herself a long time ago.

"One of my main goals was not any times or anything like that, just mainly to finish each season with no regrets knowing that I just gave it 100 percent," she said.

If you asked her what she does, Ruopoli would tell you that she is an 800 meter runner; nevertheless, her value to the Villanova track and cross country organization goes well beyond this competition.

"She's on the team because of the depth she adds but also to get her in shape for the track season. It would be uncomfortable without her anyway because of her great sense of humor," Head Coach Marty Stern said.

It might be a surprise to most that the middle distance runner never even expected to be running cross country here. Having spent her sophomore and junior seasons as the alternate on the NCAA Championship team, she was a regular member of the team in her final season.

Volleyball splits twin match

By MICHEL DAVIES
Staff Reporter

In their first home match since coming back from the semester break, the men of 'Nova volleyball set out to defend their home court in a twin match schedule against inner city rival Temple, and quickly-rising Maryland.

Perhaps it was the earliness of the match. In any event, the Wildcats started off very slowly against Temple. Moving sluggishly around the court, it appeared that 'Nova was simply going through the motions, unaware of what was going on around them. But the Cats would be rudely awakened from their dormant state by the Owls. Temple eventually went on to drop 'Nova in the first two games of the match.

Realizing that a loss to a beatable area rival such as Temple would have been devastating, the Cats shook off the first two losses by ripping the Owls in the third game. Then in a real gut check, 'Nova sided out an Owl Match Point with a timely tool off the block sophomore, outside hitter Pete Borsuk. 'Nova then took charge, beating the Owls 17-16 to tie the game score at two. Finally the Cats were able to put it in cruise control, handing Temple a tough Rally-Score loss in the fifth game to make the Wildcat record 1-0 in season play.

"For a young team we really played with a lot of poise. Coming back from a 2-0 deficit is no small feat, no matter who you are playing," said Borsuk.

In the second match of the day, the Wildcats took on the Terrapins from Maryland. Boasting several players above 6-foot-2, Maryland presented a very worthy opponent for the Cats. Obviously tough defense by 'Nova would be a necessary key to putting away Maryland.

Although the Cats sprawled for every ball, impressing many with their hustle, the tall Terrapins were just too tough. Throughout the match Maryland ran fake after fake, confusing the Wildcat blockers. This left too many easy one-on-one opportunities. The result was a Maryland hitting demonstration. The power was all too much for 'Nova, as they dropped their first season game to even up at 1-1.

'Nova will have a chance to get its revenge this Saturday as the Cats travel to Maryland for one of the largest tournaments of the season. Perhaps after having a feel for Maryland's game, 'Nova will be able to take what it learned last weekend and apply it for a victory on Saturday.

"Now that we've seen how they play, we will be much more aware as to how they play. Look for us to play [the Terrapins] tough," said Borsuk.

G'town stops Lady Cats

On the verge of breaking into the Big East's top three, the women's basketball team suffered a heartbreaking 69-68 loss to Georgetown at duPont Feb. 3. Three days later, the frustrated Wildcats took their anger out on Boston College, flogging the Eagles in a 70-58 win that was even more lopsided than the final score indicated.

When Georgetown journeyed up to the Main Line, it faced a Villanova squad boasting four consecutive victories and a 5-4 Big East record. At 6-3, a loss for the Hoyas would drop them into a third place tie with 'Nova. The game would come down to the last shot.

With 9.8 seconds remaining and Georgetown holding on to a 69-68 lead, point guard Michele Thornton inbounded for 'Nova. Freshman Denise Dillon took the ball and drove to the hoop but missed the shot. The Cats got one last break when they received the ball on a traveling call. With just 3.7 seconds to go, the ball was inbounded to senior Nikki Benedix, who was leading the Cats with a season-high 26 points. Her hurried shot went in and out just before the buzzer sounded; and G'town escaped with the one-point victory.

"It's my fault," said Head Coach Harry Perretta after the game. "When I realized that they weren't doing what I was saying I should have called timeout immediately and stopped the play."

What made this crucial game all the more upsetting was the fact that Villanova looked ready to run away with it late in the second half. Though the Cats trailed by five at halftime, they began the second half with eight consecutive points. The Hoyas, playing a tough fullcourt press, kept the game close until the closing minutes of the game.

When Benedix hit two shots at the free throw line with 2:52 left in the game, the Wildcats were up by five and were commanding the pace of the game. However, that was the last time 'Nova would score. Hoya Nadira Ricks quickly countered with a layup, and her teammate Kris Witfill narrowed the 'Nova lead to one with just under a minute to go. Georgetown took the lead for good when Jenny Jacobsen hit a layup with 17.3 ticks left in the game, setting the stage for 'Nova's final possession.

"Our defense slacked off against Georgetown," said Perretta later that week. "I think if there's anything you learn from watching the Big East this year, it's that you can win or lose on any given night."

Rounding our their three-game homestand, the Cats showed no mercy against Boston College. It was the second time this season that the Wildcats soundly thrashed B.C. The Eagles' Sarah Behn, who leads the Big East in scoring (26.3 p.p.g.), has been a non-factor against Villanova. Though she scored 17 points against the Cats at duPont, 13 of them came in the second half when the game's outcome had long been out of question.

"[Behn] usually beats her first person," said Perretta. "But we always try to be in the help position to take away the drive from her."

With the game tied at eight apiece, Dillon capped off a series of missed 'Nova shots by hitting a layup, giving the Wildcats a lead they would never surrender. Dillon went on to score a team-high 16 points. In her freshman season, Dillon has clearly benefitted from a vote of confidence from Perretta, who has given her extensive playing time.

"We have confidence in our freshmen," said Perretta. "Jen Snell, Denise Dillon and Susan Glenning have been playing a lot. They still make errors, but they're ready to play significant minutes now."

Benedix added 13 points to the Villanova tally, and senior Karen Connell scored 12. Sophomore Jennifer Maga led the team in rebounds with eight.

The Cats are now in the midst of a three-game road trip. They face Seton Hall tomorrow and St. John's Feb. 16, before returning to host Big East leader Miami next week.

1. Boston College (7-3, 13-5)

B.C. hosted the Seton Hall Pirates in a neck-and-neck contest this past week which saw the Eagles soar to the top 63-62. With seconds to go, Bill Curley followed up a missed shot to seal the victory for Boston. The Eagles shot .522 from the field, the best against the Pirates thus far this season. B.C.'s next game is tomorrow versus the Redmen of St. John's. Curley led all scorers with 24 points, while grabbing nine rebounds, earning him Big East Player of the Week.

2. St. John's (7-3, 12-6)

St. John's rampage through the Big East was temporarily derailed by Pittsburgh 81-79, tying them with Boston College at the top of the league. In the loss, Derek Brown had 22 points and seven assists and Lamont Middleton added 12 points and 11 'bounds for the Johnnies. Earlier in the week, the Redmen destroyed the Hoyas by a score of 79-61. Shawnelle Scott shot eight-for-eight from the field against G'town. Point guard David Cain is second in the Big East in steals with 2.7 per game.

Terry Dehere and the Seton Hall Pirates are slipping below the likes of Boston College and St. John's.

3. Pittsburgh (7-4, 14-4)

Fitzgerald Field House has proven to be the House of Pain for visiting opponents this year at Pitt. The Panthers are 9-0 at this venue, which includes their latest victory over St. John's, 81-79. Five Pitt players scored in double figures as opposed to only two Redmen. Ahmad Shareef was the hot hand with 13 points on six-for-eight shooting. The Panthers' next game is at Illinois on Feb. 13.

4. Seton Hall (6-4, 16-6)

The Pirates are not even a mere shadow of the what they were a few weeks ago. Or is it that the rest of the Big Least has taken a step up and is now the Big Mediocre. Any way you look at it, the Pirates have fallen upon bad times. Sure, they beat Providence 90-71, but that was expected of them. Versus Boston College, the Hall overcame an 11 point deficit in the final 8:42, only to fall short when Bill Curley put in a rebound, sealing their fate at 63-62. In the loss, the Hall 'Rates got 16 points apiece from Jerry Walker and Arturas Karnishovas. With his 14 points on the night, Terry Dehere moved into sixth on the all-time scoring list having compiled 1,131 Big East points.

5. Syracuse (5-6, 13-6)

The Orangemen dropped one last Saturday to Miami on the road. The trip down to Hurricane country netted a 81-74 loss. Lawrence Moten had 14 points and five assists. He has scored in double figures in 50 out of 51 games in his career, the only non-double figure game occurring last year at the Big East tournament with nine points versus Villanova. The Orange registered a huge victory against the Georgetown Hoyas last Monday night, 76-61. Adrian Autry scored a game high 25 points for the winners.

6. Georgetown (5-5, 12-6)

The Hoyas should be happy that this week is over. They dropped three games, one of which came at the hands of the Providence Friars, 66-56. The driving force behind the Hoyas for the season

Seton Hall @ Villanova
Saturday February 13, 1993 duPont Pavilion
TV: CH. 57 Radio: 89.1 WXVU

The Seton Hall Pirates head south on I-95 to face the Cats tomorrow night at the Pavilion. Seton Hall was the unanimous preseason No. 1 team in the Big East conference. After a blistering 14-1 start, including a 4-0 conference mark, the Hall has grounded. Coach P.J. Carlesimo's club currently stands at 17-6 and 7-4 in conference play.

Tomorrow night's game will be the final match between the two teams in 1992-93, barring a conference tournament game. On Jan. 19, Villanova succumbed to the Hall in overtime. Lance Miller led 'Nova with 18. Seton Hall dominated the boards, as freshman Adrian Griffin rebounded 13 missed shots. Villanova's loss at Seton Hall only a few weeks ago all but sealed the team's fate. A win would have restored some semblage of hope on the Main Line. The Cats could have crept back to .500, but they didn't. Seton Hall executed its offense in O.T. Villanova did not.

Terry Dehere with his conference-leading 21 p.p.g. and Jerry Walker pose a formidable inside-outside threat. In its past few conference games though, this duo has not stepped its level of play up to "Final Eight" caliber. Dehere has been quick to settle for off-balance jumpers, while Walker's rebounding totals have diminished. In addition, the point guard slot is unsettled. Guards Danny Hurley and Bryan Caver have not been steady all season. Caver suffered the loss of his father recently. He has also been bothered with nagging injuries. The center slot is filled by the big guy — Luther (I'm not a load anymore) Wright. He has slimmed down to around 275-280 lbs. His development can be described as moderate. He does pull down over eight boards per game. The long range bombers Arturas Karnishovas and John Leahy have not been able to fire with the same ease as earlier in the season. Look for freshman Griffin to log significant reserve time. He has been a bright spot despite the Hall's recent slip-up.

Tomorrow night's game should resemble the two teams' last meeting. The Hall will stick with an in-your-face man-to-man defense, while the Cats will switch things up a bit. Again, the boards are key for V.U. When they get outrebounded, they lose, period, Seton Hall has much more to play for. They will look to rebound from their recent mediocre stretch (1-4 on the road in conference), make a February run, and prepare for the NCAA's. The Cats have the conference tournament to play for.

Cats drop two against St. Joe's, UConn

By ED WASIELEWSKI
Sports Editor

Things have gotten ugly for the Villanova Wildcats.

After putting together a two-game Big East winning streak, the Cats returned to their losing ways this week, dropping a heartbreaker to St. Joseph's at the Spectrum and another to conference rival Connecticut.

In what has truly been a rebuilding year, the fans have found very little to support, especially with the team's latest losses. In their most recent loss Feb. 9, Head Coach Steve Lappas and the Cats could, literally, do nothing right as the UConn Huskies ran away with a convincing 82-62 victory. The loss once again put 'Nova in sole possession of the conference basement with a 3-8 mark.

"This was the first time all year we got our doors blown off," said Lappas.

There was no doubt about that. Just look at the statistics. UConn shot 55 percent from the field whereas the Cats hit only a meager 35 percent. UConn sank more free throws and for a higher percentage than the Cats. The Huskies also registered more blocks, seven to one, and more rebounds. That final statistic should surprise few as the Cats are regularly outrebounded every game.

But unlike other contests where 'Nova at least made a last-second surge, the Cats simply look disinterested and out of synch. There were not many, if any, positives.

"There's not much to say," said senior Lance Miller. "I played bad. We played bad. This was the first time all year we got our butts handed to us. We didn't make shots, layups, free throws. We didn't make anything."

Despite the Cats' poor play, they remarkably hung tough in the first half, pulling to within five at the intermission, 38-33. The starting backcourt of rookies Jonathan Haynes and Kerry Kittles kept the Cats close by connecting from the outside for a combined 15 points, while senior James Bryson chipped in six points and four rebounds.

'Nova even hit for 41 percent from the field and managed to stay competitive on the boards. Everything fell apart in the second half.

"What happens is that you miss the easy shots, you become frustrated and then you probably don't take as good a shot next time down the floor," said Lappas. "It just multiplies, especially on the road."

Miller and Haynes led the Cats offensively with 13 apiece, with Bryson scoring 12.

Earlier in the week, the Wildcats dropped a gut-wrenching Big 5 confrontation with the St. Joe's Hawks. The only word to describe this loss is pathetic. Leading by a 29-10 margin with 10 minutes remaining in the first half, the Cats could have wrapped the game up by playing solid defense, continuing to feed Bryson in the low post and, most importantly, rebound on the defensive end.

Instead, 'Nova folded and the Hawks capitalized by chipping away at that 19 point lead, taking advantage of a lack of rebounding on 'Nova's part by pounding the offensive glass for numerous second chance opportunities.

For the game, the Cats were outrebounded again. This time, though, St. Joe's accumulated more offensive boards (24) than the Cats had total rebounds (22).

"It's been a difficult season so far," said Bryson. "It's tough to dig yourself out of a 1-7 start in league play. It's unfortunate for some of us we didn't have more time with our coach."

But for others, like Kittles, who scored 20 points against St. Joe's, they must salvage the rest of the season and use it to build on for next year. With seven regular season games left, the young faces should probably see increased playing time, giving them a taste of the future.

As for the rest of this 1992-93 season, "we'll keep plugging," said Bryson. "Everything can happen in the Big East Tournament."

Notes: As I sat at the broadcaster's table right next to the TV camera on Tuesday night at Storrs, CT., I observed a level of intensity never seen before at a Villanova game. It's upsetting. Many of us can only hope that the underclassmen don't give up on 1992-93. I know the coaching staff has not packed it in, I hope the team has not either. It is very hard to judge the coaching staff at this point in time. As Dick Weiss commented in the Daily News a week back, "Steve Lappas will be judged by his local recruiting efforts." Right now this is not his team. As he brings in more new blood, it will be. — Pat Meiler

Swimmers trounce Delaware

The Villanova men's swimming and diving team enjoyed a victory over the University of Delaware in the last home meet of the season last weekend. The men won by the score of 161-119, exhibitioning the last two events in the process.

"It was a meet to recognize the seniors, to let them swim their off-events in the last home meet," said Head Coach Chuck Horton.

The Wildcats won every event except the 50 Free, and even when the Cats exhibitioned the 200 Breast, the three 'Nova swimmers in the event beat the entire Delaware field to the wall, even though Villanova received no points for its effort. Freshman Tim Jogan had an impressive meet as he won the 100 Free (:47.99), 200 Free (1:44.27) and the 500 Free (4:53.29). Junior Glen Langhans won the 200 Fly in 1:53.33 and edged out fellow Wildcat Josh Fraser by one hundredth of a second for first in the 100 Back with a time of :54.91. Fraser came back to win the 200 IM (1:58.40) and his older brother, Scott, added a second place in the 50 Free (22.23) and a third in the 200 Fly (1:58.50).

Villanova swept the 100 Fly as freshman Tom Forrest destroyed the field in 51.88, and was followed by sophomore Todd Cimicata (53.44) and senior Jim Fagan (:54.06). Senior Ed Paradise claimed victory in the 100 Breast in :59.29 and freshman Michael Schwankl was second in 1:00.19. Sophomore Rob Drumm left the field in his wake as he cruised to a win in the 1000 Free (9:47.48). Junior Chris DesMarais tallied up another win for 'Nova in the 200 Back with a time of 1:52.22, while Langhans was second to the wall in 1:57.32, followed by Pat Donahue in 2:00.11.

Villanova divers also fared well as sophomore Matt McGarry defended the home plank with wins on both the one and three meter boards with scores of 253.05 and 253.725, respectively.

Villanova is off to Syracuse this weekend for a Big East tri-meet including the University of Miami.

Cats land strong recruiting class

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Sports Editor

Recruiting is a critical element of collegiate athletics. As the saying goes, "You can't win the race if you don't have the horses." The teams that frequently land top prospects are usually the one still active come playoff time. Perennial powerhouses depend upon solid recruiting to stay on top.

The football team helped solidify its position as one of top programs in Division I-AA with the signing of 16 recruits on Feb. 3. This group will step in as 24 seniors and 13 starters will graduate from a program that went 9-3 last season and advanced to the playoffs for the third time in four years.

"We got a good group of kids from top to bottom," said Head Coach Andy Talley. "Kids with a lot of potential. [The recruiting class] was certainly in the top echelon of the Yankee Conference."

Included in this recruiting class are a pair of junior college transfers from Arizona, Jim Trischan and Preston Walker, Academic All-American linebacker at Glendale Community College. Trischan played offensive guard for Mesa Community College. According to Talley, both players have a good chance to earn starting positions, particularly Walker.

"They almost recruited us," said Talley of Walker and Trischan. The two mark the first junior college transfers to be signed by Villanova since Talley has coached here. The addition of Walker will help fill a void at linebacker created by the graduation of Curtis Eller, Dan Summers, and Phil DiMaria.

Talley will look for some of the higher-rated recruits to step up and earn immediate playing time. He said that tight end Pat Krebs may have the best chance of the incoming freshmen to receive significant playing time. Talley describes Krebs, who was also sought after by West Virginia and Wisconsin, as being a physical player. He will have big shoes to fill with the loss of All-American tight end Scott Donald to graduation.

Though the Cats had difficulty signing defensive linemen, they did recruit good size along the offensive line. They also secured two quality running backs "with excellent speed, both bigger than we've recruited there before," according to Talley. One of those backs, Steve Shepherd from Andover, Mass., was the state champion in the 300 meter hurdles and anchored the state champion 4x100 meter relay in addition to being named a First Team All-State selection.

"In general, we satisfied our needs in all areas except for defensive line, and put some really fine talent back into our program," said Talley. "I'm also very pleased we made some great recruiting inroads out West, both because of our growing national reputation and the excellent efforts of our associate head coach, Dan Fidler."

Talley and his staff will have a better idea of what to expect this season when spring practice begins on March 22. This session will provide the coaches with a preliminary evaluation of the team, culminating in the annual spring game on April 24. Thus far, it looks as if 'Nova has gotten off to a strong start in this, the 100th anniversary year of Villanova football.

Senate meets today

By KATE SZUMANSKI

The University Senate, the advisory group to the University President the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A. and the Board of Trustees on policy and major decision-making issues, will meet today at 4 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

The senators will approve the minutes of the Nov. 22 Senate meeting, make announcements and address correspondence. The Senate Budget Committee report will also be released.

The Athletic Advisory Committee will respond to the current price structure of student basketball tickets. A report submitted by Eric Hinds, student representative of the Athletic Advisory Committee, shows "that student ticket prices have been fair and consistent with the policies of other NCAA Division I men's basketball programs."

"Last season, students were charged $125 for a 14-game package, 10 games at the Pavilion and four at the Spectrum," according to Hinds' report. This season, a student season ticket package including 13 games at duPont Pavilion and four at the Spectrum cost $115. "There are three additional games this season at $10 less than last season," according to Hinds' report.

The University charges more than any other Big East school for men's basketbal tickets, according to the Student Government's report. "Yet four of the 10 Big East schools already charge all their students a general 'athletic fee,' tacked on to their tuition and other charges, that subsidizes the low cost of basketball tickets. Villanova does not charge all students for the benefit of few, as most schools do as a matter of Subtle acts of prejudice evident on Villanova campus

"Racism here is not blatant, but hidden and soft-spoken."

By KATE SZUMANSKI

"There is racism on campus, when and how it surfaces, however, varies," said Edward L. Collymore, director of the Office of Multicultural Affairs. Racist behavior may not be as glaring here as it is on other campuses, but it certainly does exist, he said.

Because racism is one of those gray areas, it is difficult to prove, Collymore said. "Students have expressed concern on an informal basis, but no documentation [concerning racist acts] exists," he said.

"A lot of the students in the white majority are taken aback by minorities," said Rondel Lashley, second vice-president of the Black Cultural Society (BCS). Racism is the holding of certain stereotypes against a race regardless of who the person is, Lashley said. These stereotypes are demeaning and perpetuate certain racist feelings and attitudes, she said.

"I wish the University would change with the times and not live as a separate entity. They [the University] should try to recruit more minority students and sponsor increased diversity on campus," Lashley said. "It would make the University better as a whole," she added.

The BCS sponsors dialogues and forums open to the public to educate and foster increased understanding, said Lashley. "The University does not do enough to educate the campus," she said. "Racism here is not blatant, but hidden and soft-spoken. Although racism is fairly strong, people are not willing to talk about it," she added.

The University is against racism and is making an effort to educate students, faculty and staff, said Collymore.

"Covert racism at Villanova is present; however, overt incidents do occur," said Teresa Sharp, co-

Cause of illness unknown

By ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWSKI

The cause of the "mystery illness," which began spreading through south campus Feb. 9, has not yet been determined, said Stephen T. Bell, director of Public Relations for the University.

The sickness effects students for a period of 12 to 24 hours, said Dr. Denis Boyle. All students who have been ill have fully recovered, he added.

The State Health Department reported Feb. 16 that bacteria tests performed on the cultures taken from the sick students had been completed. The State Health Department has been unable to find any organism to which the illness could be attributed, said Bell. No bacteria which could be linked to the illness was found in the food or water samples either, Bell added.

"The distressing news is that no cause has been found. An investigation is continuing," Bell said.

Several incidents of illness did occur over the weekend. One of these incidents proved serious enough to warrant hospitalization, said Bell. There were no further reports of students becoming ill as of Feb. 15, he added.

The Student Government Association is sponsoring a shuttle service to surrounding locations east and west of campus, said Engineering Senator Stan Reggie and Publicity Chair Craig Lammlin. "The shuttle service will be provided on a trial basis for three weekends, March 12-13, 19-20 and 26-27,," said Reggie. "If all goes well, the service may become permanent," he added.

> Hopefully the number of students unsafely hitching rides will decrease as a result of this service.
> Stan, Reggie, Engineering Senator

The shuttle vans will service two routes, one west in the direction of Wayne and one east in the direction of Bryn Mawr, said Lammlin. The vans will begin leaving campus at 4 p.m. and will stop at various points of interest on the route, said Reggie. Shuttles will leave the University every 20 minutes, Lammlin added.

The west shuttle route will stop outside of Smokey Joe's, the Wayne Movie Theater, Minnella's and other locations. The east shuttle route will stop outside of the Acme supermarkets in both Rosemont and Haverford, Gator's, Gullifty's and other locations, said Lammlin. "The list of locations we have put together is quite thorough," he said, adding that "the vans cannot go to any stop other than what is specified." Red flags will be used as markers for students to congregate around at drop-off and pick-up points, said Reggie.

The shuttle vans will arrive at the different locations at specific times which will be publicized at a later date, said Lammlin. The times will repeat every hour until 1:30 a.m.

Villanova undergrad researches the causes of homosexuality

By JANE PAPACCIO
Assistant News Editor

Recent medical studies have begun to disprove the theory that homosexuality is a result of environmental forces, said Carolyn Vreeland, a senior honors student and communications major. "Environmental forces were once thought to be the principle causes of male homosexuality, buy psychiatrists today believe that biological forces control it," said Joseph A. McFalls Jr., professor of sociology.

The researchers sent out 2000 surveys to psychiatrists throughout the nation. According to the 508 survey respondents, who are all members of the American Psychiatric Association, the most accepted causes of male homosexuality do not lie within the bounds of the environment, said Vreeland.

In 1977, a study conducted by the professional journal "Medical Aspects of Human Sexuality" revealed that 69 percent of those surveyed believed homosexuality among men to be a mental illness, said Vreeland. The study in 1992 showed that only 28 percent of psychiatrists said homosexuality should be classified as a mental disorder, said Vreeland.

"Even 28 percent is still a substantial minority," said Vreeland. "There has not been a 100 percent concordance rate with any of these findings," added Vreeland.

Instead of relying on psychology as a way to interpret homosexuality, members of the medical field are calling on biology for more conclusive evidence, added Vreeland. According to the survey, the four most popular biological explanations for male homosexuality, in order, are: genetic inheritance, prenatal hormonal development, a structural difference in the hypothalamus and brain organization.

"The main finding of the study is that it provides definitive, mathematical dimensions for the switch in thinking that has occurred during the last two decades," added McFalls.

The survey consisted of a list of 12 cases of homosexuality, and asked that the psychiatrists indi-

Changes in climate increase environmental problems

By LAUREN WURST
Staff Reporter

The global climate change is a natural occurrence which will ultimately effect everyone who inhabits the Earth. More commonly known as the greenhouse effect or global warming, this development is the result of high amounts of greenhouse gases present in the earth's atmosphere.

These gases prevent some of the infrared radiation that was released from the earth's surface from being released into space. Thus, some of the infrared radiation is absorbed and re-emitted by the greenhouse gases. The effect of this is to warm the earth's surface , according to Climate Change, The Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change's (IPPC) scientific assessment.

This process is reflective of the glass walls of a greenhouse. The glass lets the heat in but does not let out the heat.

The greenhouse gases include the following: carbon dioxide, methane, nitrous oxide, ozone, chlorofluorocarbons and other components of the atmosphere.

"Carbon dioxide is the biggest single contributor to the greenhouse effect," acccording to the September 1991 issue of the Smithsonian magazine.

According to an article in Science on July 10, 1992, "the United States is currently the largest single emitter of greenhouse gases."

Presently on the international level, most countries have taken part in conferences, such as the 1992 Earth Summit held this past June in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. The goals of the summit were to reduce the emissions of greenhouse gases, specifically carbon dioxide.

According to the June 8, 1992, article in Insight, President Bush opposed this environmental target as "economically infeasible."

Biology professor Dr. Kelman Wieder said the world relies heavily on energy produced by fossil fuel combustion, which releases tremendous amounts of carbon dioxide into the earth's atmosphere.

Endorsing an agreement to reduce carbon dioxide emissions would have negative short term effects, such as loss of jobs, said Wieder.

Vice President Gore has turned this issue into an opportunity for America to break into the forefront of new technology. New technology in reducing the levels of carbon dioxide emission and new methods of alternative energy would help America become a leading country again, Wieder added.

Wieder said that if we do nothing the world's supply of fossil fuels will not last. Therefore, prices will rise as supply goes down. The private sector will have to respond with new technology concerning alternate energy sources as the supply dwindles.

Wieder said that this is a fixable problem. He suggests taking the effort and money that has been spent on arguing and debating over the issue and directing it toward a solution for the problem. Keeping in mind the supply of fossil fuel, it is something that will have to be done sooner or later, Wieder added.

According to Climate Change magazine, if emissions follow a "business-as-usual" pattern, the average rate of global mean temperature during the next century will increase about .3°C. Agriculture will cease to produce as we know it today and the corn belt will move into Canada, Wieder added.

Whatever the outcome, increased awareness and concern for such global issues as global climate change will aid in the solution of the problems.

Palestinians reject peace talks

Source: The Philadelphia Inquirer
Compiled by: Dana Bogacki

JERUSALEM

Palestinian leaders last week rejected the continuation of all peace talks after the U.N. Security Council accepted Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's offer to repatriate 101 of 400 deported Palestinians, calling the approval "a blow" to the Council's integrity.

The 400 deportees, exiled for suspected links with Muslim fundamentalist groups held responsible for the murder of six Israeli soldiers, have been living in a tent camp in Southern Lebanon in between Israeli and Lebanese troops.

In response to the U.N. announcement, the exiled Palestinians staged a mock funeral of the Security Council, while PLO leader Yasir Arafat labeled the U.N. announcement a "dangerous policy" that threatens their peace process.

Rabin on the other hand responded by praising the acceptance and saw it as an action that would increase peace negotiations.

MOSCOW

Seven of the 12 men accused of leading the August 1991 failed Soviet coup appeared for the first time since their arrest last week at the second congress of the revived Russian Communist Party.

The coup leaders who appeared, including the KGB Chief Vladimir Kryuchkov and former Soviet Vice President Gennady Yanayev, were released pending an April 14 trial on charges of high treason where they will face possible death sentences.

After the failed coup, Russian President Boris N. Yeltsin banned the Communist party. But it has since risen under the leadership of Valentin Kuptsov after Russia's highest court ruled that, though Yeltsin's outlaw of national Communist leadership was justifiable, he went too far in prohibiting local communist groups.

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti

Forty United Nation observers arrived last week as the first of 500 expected to be stationed as human rights monitors for at least a year in the first major attempt to solve the Haitians 16-month political crisis.

Human rights advocates declare that hundreds of Haitians have been imprisoned, tortured and killed since the democratically elected President Jean-Bertrand Aristide was ousted in 1991.

Feelings for the restoration of democracy have increased greatly following the U.N. announcement of assistance and President Clinton's inauguration. Diplomats said that there is evidence that the government is willing to talk and accept the presence of the observers.

Irish poet reads, discusses writing and Irish folklore

Special to the Villanovan

Nuala Ni Dhomhnaill, Ireland's most famous Irish-language poet, will read from her newest poetry March 11 at 4:15 p.m. in the Radnor Room of Connelly Center.

"I think many students were surprised that someone writing in a language most people here don't know could be so charismatic, but Nuala reads in English first, and then in Irish so you always know what she is writing about. She also tells you anecdotes about how she came to write the poems and gives you all the background you need," said Professor Lucy McDiarmid of the English department.

Ni Dhomhnaill is also a well known media figure in Ireland from her programs on Irish language television. "When you walk down the street with her in Dublin everyone says, 'Hi Nuala.' Her books of poetry always sell out quickly," added McDiarmid. Dhomhnaill is particularly known for making modern Irish poetry vigorous and sexy again and using ancient myths to comment on contemporary social problems, she added.

A recent review ranks her newest book, Feis, as one of the three most important Irish poetic achievements of the decade, along with Seamus Heaney's Seeing Things and Paul Muldoon's Madoc, said McDiarmid.

"At Villanova we've been lucky in having all the best known Irish poets read here. Michael Longley read here last spring, Derek Mahon taught here in 1991, and Heaney and Muldoon have also read here," McDiarmid said.

After the reading there will be an informal reception for members of the audience. Ni Dhomhnaill will autograph her books, which will be on sale in paperback in dual language editions, McDiarmid added.

Ni Dhomhnaill will engage in a dialogue about Irish folklore with Ireland's leading young folklorist, Professor Angela Bourke of University College Dublin, March 12 at 3 p.m. in Seminar Room 300 of the St. Augustine Center for Liberal Arts.

Bourke will speak on "Keening as Theatre: John Synge and the Irish Woman's Lament." Bourke and Ni Dhomhnaill will then discuss the contemporary social relevance of Irish folklore. "This is more than just fairies. Angela is one of the first people to relate Irish folkloric traditions and figures to problems like anorexia and child abuse, and to study folklore from a feminist point of view. We are very lucky to be able to have these two Irish women visiting Villanova together," McDiarmid added.

Bourke, who also writes short stories in Gaelic, was born in Dublin and graduated with First Class Honors in Celtic Studies from the National University of Ireland. Her first book, published in 1983, was The Lament of the Three Maries: the Crucifixion in Gaelic Oral Poetry. She is director of the master of philosophy program in Irish Studies at University College Dublin, and this year she is visiting professor of Celtic Languages and Literature at Harvard University.

Bourke has also been chosen to be one of the editors of the fourth volume of the Field Day Anthology of Irish Writing. "That's a very controversial position to be in because the Field Day Anthology has caused passionate arguments. It's obviously the most significant anthology of Irish writing in years, but there were no women editors of the first three volumes and the Field Day editors [Seamus Heaney, Seamus Deane, and others] were criticized everywhere. They surprised their critics by deciding to add a fourth volume, to contain only women's writing and to be edited exclusively by women," said McDiarmid.

The fourth volume will also be controversial, "but that only makes it more worth waiting for," said McDiarmid.

International Studies promote awareness

The purpose of International Studies Week is "to promote the contribution of international students ."

By MARYANN PULLIA
Staff Reporter

The purpose of International Studies Week, beginning Feb. 22, is "to promote the contribution of international students on campus and students who have studied abroad," said Ann Wilcox of the Office of International Studies.

Since 1986 the Office of International Studies has worked closely with undergraduate students from virtually every major department and school at Villanova, said Wilcox. They offer overseas academic summer, semester or year programs in Europe, Asia, Latin America, Africa and the Middle East, she added.

The week's activities have been planned by a committee comprised of students who have previously studied abroad. The committee hopes to encourage more students to participate in studying overseas.

During the week there will be a table in Connelly Center distributing information on the various international programs and requirements, she said.

T-shirts will be sold for $10, also. The money raised will help pay for the week's activities.

The University sends 30 to 40 students overseas each semester. Students from the College of Arts and Sciences, the College of Commerce and Finance and the College of Nursing comprise the 35 sophomores and juniors studying overseas in 12 different countries this semester. There are also approximately 325 students from 45 different countries studying at the University, said Wilcox.

The week's activities feature an alumni career night Feb. 22 in the Wayne/St. David's room of Connelly Center at 7 p.m. Five guest speakers who have studied overseas will discuss the benefits they gained from their overseas experiences and how those experiences influenced their career choices.

The Latin American film based on Manuel Puig's novel, "Kiss of the Spider Woman," will be screened at 7 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema Feb. 23.

The cultural clubs and the Office of International Studies invite the public to sample a taste of food and experience some culture at the International Dessert Fest Feb. 24 at 7:30 p.m. There will be a $2 admission charge.

Ordinarily, students study abroad in their sophomore or junior year. Students must maintain a 2.75 or better grade point average, be in good health and have the approval of the director of the Office of International Studies, their departmental chair and their college dean, Wilcox said.

Three students who have studied overseas have also started Passages, an international magazine designed to promote international activity on campus.

Sesquicentennial Minutes

and
REV. DENNIS J. GALLAGHER, O.S.A., Ph.D.

The library was one of the earliest facilities on campus and has been crucial to Villanova's mission from the earliest days. Like so many other services at the college (and then the University), the library has known several homes during the past century and a half.

Villanova's library actually had its origins with the founding of the Augustinian order in the United States in 1796. Housed at St. Augustine's Church in Philadelphia, this early Augustinian library was once considered the finest collection of Catholic religious books in the country, most of them having been brought over from Europe.

The Augustinians managed to salvage part of this collection following the Know-Nothing riots of 1844, during which St. Augustine's Church was attacked and burned by the anti-Catholics. The remaining books were transported to Villanova, which the Augustinians had purchased from the John Rudolph estate just two years earlier in 1842.

The collection from St. Augustine's rested for several years in the first St. Thomas of Villanova Monastery, once home to the Rudolph family and formerly known as Belle-Air. After the east wing of the present Alumni Hall was completed in 1849, the books went to the second floor of that building, where they remained until the 1860s. Then all or most of the collection went back to the monastery, occupying a library chamber on the third floor.

In 1901 Villanova completed a new monastery and college building (reconstructed after the fire of 1928 and now known as Tolentine Hall). At that point the books were divided with a portion of them going to the new monastery and the rest to a library in the college building. They remained at these two sites until the opening of Austin Hall in 1924, at which time they were reunited and moved into the east wing of Austin. This was indeed fortunate, since the 1901 monastery was destroyed by fire in the summer of 1932.

By the end of the 1920s the Austin Hall Library was far too small for Villanova's growing faculty and student body. Thus as part of an ambitious building campaign in 1930, the administration projected a new and free-standing library, which would be located on a quadrangle just south of the present Vasey Hall. The Great Depression and then World War II prevented construction of this library and several other buildings included in the plan.

Finally, in 1947, Villanova broke ground for a new library. By then the site had been shifted westward to the edge of Mendel Field, where several other structures were rising during the post-war years. Opened in early 1949, the library provided ample space for 400,000 volumes, in addition to classrooms, exhibit areas, and an attractive reading room. In 1963 this facility was rededicated and named in honor of the Rev. Daniel P. Falvey, O.S.A., (1906-1962), who had served as librarian for more than two decades.

In 1967, the present Falvey Memorial Library was attached to the 1947 facility, the older structure being renamed Falvey Hall. Today the main library houses over half a million books, including part of the collection that the Augustinians had begun to assemble nearly two centuries before at old St. Augustine's Church in Philadelphia.

Documentary Tracks Black Pilots

World War II has started, and an aviation fighter squadron leads Americans on missions over enemy territory from North America to Sicily. The only catch is that the pilots are black, and they are forced to complete each mission without the aid of artillery.

That is the story of the Tuskegee Airmen, an all-black fighter squadron, told through a video documentary and traveling exhibit that kicks off a national tour at the Smithsonian National Air and Space Museum in Washington, D.C., as part of February's Black History Month.

The documentary and exhibit were sponsored by McDonald's restaurants and Coca-Cola USA.

"We feel it is long overdue and very important to educate young people about these talented black pilots who fought for their country and, unfortunately, are not even mentioned in history books," said Stephanie Skurdy, director of education for McDonald's Corp.

The documentary features interviews with several airmen, including Gen. Benjamin O. Davis Jr., the first black lieutenant general in the U.S. Air Force; John Whitehead, the first black test pilot; and Alexander Jefferson, a flier who was taken as prisoner of war by the Germans.

Instructor Dismissed Over Complaint

A business law instructor at Northern Michigan University was asked not to teach the winter semester after a student complained that he let his class out early.

Willard Martin, who taught a class scheduled from 6:30 p.m. to 8:30 p.m., usually finished presenting his material by 8 p.m. and dismissed the students. A student filed a complaint to the Management and Marketing Department, The North Wind reported.

"There are many times when the class time is longer than the material needs to be taught," Martin told the campus newspaper.

A petition to support Martin was signed by 90 percent of his class and given to the administration, but the firing was upheld. Officials would not comment, the paper reported.

Students Run Violence Symposium

Peace activist William Sloane Coffin and Judith Lee Berg, the widow of a Denver radio talk show host who was killed by neo-Nazis, are among speakers scheduled for a symposium on violence at Dickinson College.

The four-day meeting, "Violence: Society Under Siege," that was held Feb. 14-17, was organized and run entirely by Dickinson students.

The student symposium started in 1964. Each year, it focuses on a different issue, ranging from domestic poverty to the environment to American sports. This year's meeting will address domestic, racial, urban and international violence and explore possible solutions.

Skin cancer linked to sun exposure

If skin cancer is detected early, it can be treated successfully.

By KATHLEEN COONEY
Assistant News Editor

Although skin cancer is a highly preventable form of cancer, one in six people will be diagnosed with it in their lifetime. Overexposure to the sun can significantly increase the risk of cancer.

Dr. Ronald Siegle of the Cancer Hospital and Research Institute at the Ohio State University, said that people get most of their lifetime exposure to the sun within the first two decades of their lives. If skin cancer is detected early, it can be treated successfully, but it can be deadly if ignored, he added.

There are three types of skin cancer: basal cell carcinoma, squamous cell carcinoma and malignant melanoma, Siegle said. The two types of nonmelanomas are usually caused by a combination of long-term sun exposure and one's own skin type, he said.

Usually, the fairer one's skin type, the more sensitive one is the cancer. These cancers typically develop in areas most exposed to the sun, including the face, ears, neck and arms, he added.

The most damaging ultraviolet rays occur between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m., Siegle said.

Melanoma is the most dangerous form of skin cancer which is not directly related to cumulative exposure to the sun, Siegle said. The person who gets significant weekend sun exposure but rarely spends extensive time in the sun is most at risk for this type, he added.

Dr. Denis Boyle Jr. of the University Infirmary said students should be careful while on spring break. Students should wear sunblock and try not to spend too much time in the sun because it increases their risk of skin cancer, he added.

Shuttle service

"This service will be more convenient than the Septa trains," said Reggie. "Hopefully the number of students unsafely hitching rides will decrease as a result of this service," Lammlin said. Accessibility will also improve, he said.

"A shuttle service existed eight years ago and was unsuccessful. There was no ridership and the service was primarily used to get students to school during the week. The new shuttle service focuses on weekend travel," said Lammlin.

"We are encouraged about the program," said Reggie. "By keeping dialogue open with the administration, they are genuinely receptive to our ideas," said Lammlin. "By proceeding in steps, the administration can see the service can work," he added.

Four year myth: Graduation takes longer

By College Press Service

The hard realities of rising tuition, closed classes and the increasing number of non-traditional students attending colleges or universities are changing perceptions that most students earn their undergraudate degrees in four years.

School officials recognize that because of financial and personal pressures, many students are taking longer to get their degrees, not quite making the traditional four-year degree a dinosaur, but at least putting it on the endangered species list.

In some cases, university systems are trying to graduate students in less than four years to make room for new students who are competing for fewer classes.

"Many students have to take less courses and have to work. It's not such a bad thing," said John Duff, president of Columbia College in Chicago. "Nobody would raise their eyebrows about going to graduate school to get a doctorate in eight years. Part of our culture is that there is some kind of stigma if you don't graduate in four years."

A major factor in the increased time it takes to earn a four-year degree is the fact that federal loan and grant money is being reduced, forcing students to work part time or full time to help finance their education. In some cases students take an occasional semester off to make money for tuition."

The American Council on Education estimates that 40 percent of students enrolled in two- and four-year institutions are non-traditional students, meaning they are older students and may work full or part time.

"There are significant numbers of small liberal arts institutions that take in students mostly out of high school and graduate in four years. But their nmumbers have not grown," spokesman David Merkowitz said. "The growth [in enrollment] is in state colleges and community colleges, which are oriented toward non-traditional students."

Many students go to school part time, which almost automatically puts them in the position of taking more time to get their diploma. The Chronicle of Higher Education Almanac estimates that in 1993, 15.3 million students are attending college, and 6.4 million are going part time. Those numbers are expected to increase through the turn of the century.

Other students choose to graduate in a shorter time. Under a mandate from the state legislature in 1992, a Virginia council studied, and then implemented, a program that allows students in the public university system to graduate in three years. State officials, faced with the prospect of an additional 85,000 students by the year 2000, want to graduate as many students as possible to make room for the crunch.

> Nobody would raise their eyebrows about going to graduate school to get a doctorate in eight years. Part of our culture is that there is some kind of stigma if you don't graduate in four years.
> John Duff, president of Columbia College in Chicago

In addition to finishing early, students can expect to save about $10,000 in tuition and living costs.

Only one in three undergraduate students in Virginia's public university system graduates within four years, said Mike McDowell, a spokesman with Virginia's State Council of Higher Education. In the 1991 fall term, there were 165,000 students enrolled in the state's 15 four-year institutions. Figures for the fall 1992 terms weren't available.

McDowell said the council conducted a study and found that students attending residential universities in rural areas of the state tended to graduate within four years. Those students who went to schools in urban areas tended to be commuters who may take time off from school to work and pay for tuition. According to McDowell, some students are taking up to seven years to earn undergraduate degrees.

"We want schools to eliminate obstacles for those who want to go this way," he said. "for some students, this is very much a cultural thing that they don't want to graduate in three years. But for others, they would rather save the $10,000 and get out earlier to go on to graduate school."

Duff, the president of Columbia College, said that the school's curriculum is designed for most students to graduate in five years and one semester, if they go full time. The college, which primarily offers degrees in the arts, considers itself non-traditional. It has open enrollment, tuition is $6,500 a year and most of its undergraduates are first-generation college students.

There were 430 students who did not return for the fall 1992 term, Duff said. They all had at least a "B" average and owed no money to the school. The school sent out letters to them to find out why they did not return, and Duff said most of them said they had to take the term off to earn money.

However, many schools — especially small liberal arts institutions — encourage students to graduate in the traditional four-year period.

Owen Sammelson, vice president for administration at Gustavus Adolphus College in St. Peter, Minn., said students should look at the income they would be losing by extending their schooling beyond four years.

"Given what a student is paying for college, why should an undergraduate degree be more than four years?" Sammelson said. "They should be able to do it in four years."

But he said that since Gustavus Adolphus is primarily a residential college in a small town, there are few opportunities for students to work off campus.

"That's not likely to change. We're graduating 76 to 80 percent of our students in four years," he said. "We're saying to students that if you are looking at our kind of school that extra year of school may make quite a difference in employment."

McDowell said students who opt for the three-year plan get credit for high scores on advanced placement tests taken during high school. If they pass the tests, it is determined they have achieved a proficiency in the subject matter and do not have to take it in college.

cate the strength of the casual relationship for each one on a scale of one to five, said Vreeland. After the four biological causes, the other, more psychological, reasons for male homosexuality were: dominant mother, weak father, seduction by an older person of the same sex, a parent's encouraging a child to cross-dress, a parent's wish for a child of the opposite sex, the quality of the parent's marriage, being an only child and birth order.

According to Vreeland, many psychiatrists have changed their minds about the causes of homosexuality because there is no proof that it is a mental disorder. Psychiatrists are trained differently today than they were in the 1950s, '60s and '70s, she added.

Psychiatrists who believe that environmental conditions spark homosexuality can be considered psychoanalytic, or of the school of Freudian thought, which is based on the idea that all behavior is driven by the subconscious mind, Vreeland added.

Only 90 of the 508 psychiatrists surveyed called themselves psychoanalytics. This group is largely composed of older psychiatrists because this school of thought is no longer the prevailing view in the classroom, said Vreeland.

The majority of the psychiatrists surveyed are eclectics, according to Vreeland. "They have learned a variety of schools of thought but are not influenced by any one specifically.

Although the psychoanalytics believe the main causes of homosexuality deal with the psychology of the mind, in their surveys, they ranked genetic inheritance and dominant mother equally, said Vreeland. "They acknowledged genetics as a hidden cause but said that the environmental factors such as a dominant mother or weak father bring it out," she added.

course," according to Hinds' report.

According to the Basketball Ticket Committee's report, "Comparative Evaluation of the Costs of Student Basketball Tickets" compiled in the spring 1992, "Villanova ticket prices are clearly more expensive [than other Big East schools]."

The Social Action Committee of the University Senate has resolved "that the Villanova University Senate advocates the upholding of the sanctity and dignity of human life, especially as regards the unborn, the elderly, the physically and mentally challenged, the imprisoned and the institutionalized." The Social Action Committee voted to update the terminology in the existing motion: US 9192-6-1, by changing 'handicapped' to 'physically and mentally challenged.'

Student drug use declines on U.S. college campuses

By College Press Service

College students are using fewer illicit drugs, but drinking — especially binge drinking — is holding steady, according to an annual survey of student drug use.

The University of Michigan's Institute for Social Research survey was conducted in 1991, and also includes the drug habits of high school students and young adults, which are in separate reports. The sample for the college student findings was 1,410 respondents who were full-time students attending four- or two-year institutions.

In use of drugs, 29.2 percent of the respondents reported using any illicit drug, including marijuana, in 1991, down from 33.3 percent in 1990. With marjuana factored out, 13.9 percent of the students used illegal drugs in 1991, compared with 15.2 percent in 1990.

"In 1991, we saw a continuation of the longer-term gradual decline in the proportion of all three populations involved in the use of any illicit drug," the report said. Researchers found that media reports about the danger of drugs, especially cocaine and crack cocaine, were instrumental in bringing some of the statistics down in drug-use categories.

"We believe that the particularly intense media coverage of the hazards of crack cocaine — likely had the effect of "capping" that epidemic early by deterring many would-be users and by motivating many experimenters to desist use," the report states " . . . the hazards of cocaine use received extensive media coverage in the preceding year, but almost surely in part because of the cocaine-related deaths in 1986 of sports stars [University of Maryland forward] Len Bias and [Cleveland Browns defensive back] Don Rogers."

Among the major findings include:

- Twenty-nine percent of the college students had used an illicit drug, down from 56.2 percent in 1980.

> In 1991, we saw a continuation of the longer term gradual decline in the proportion of all three populations involved in the use of any illicit drug.
> report from the University of Michigan's Institute for Social Research Survey

- Marijuana use dropped from 51.2 percent in 1980 to 26.5 percent in 1991. Daily use among college students fell from 2.1 percent in 1986 to 1.8 percent in 1991.

"In sum, the proportion of American college students who are actively smoking marijuana on a daily basis has dropped more than three-fourths since 1980," the report said.

- Between 1981 and 1991, heavy drinking (five or more drinks in a row) dropped only 0.5 percent for college students, much less of a decline than rates recorded for high school students and 19- to 20-year-olds who are not in college. For the same 10-year period, the measure for heavy drinking dropped by 11.6 percent for high school seniors and 8.8 percent for the non-college 19- to 20-year olds.

"It is interesting to conjecture about why college students have not shown much decline in heavy drinking while their non-college peers and high school seniors have," the report said. "One possibility is that campuses have provided some insulation to the effects of changes in the drinking age laws. Also, in college, underage individuals are mixed with peer who are of legal age to purchase alcohol in a way that is no longer true in high schools and less true, perhaps, for those 19-22 who are not in college."

- Daily drinking for college students has shown some decline since 1984. In 1991 4.1 percent of the respondents drank daily, down from 6.6 percent in 1984.
- Cigarette smoking has declined somewhat. The daily smoking rate fell from 18.3 percent in 1980 to 13.8 percent in 1991.

Extreme sports prove risky

By College Press Service

The risk factor is usually high and the excitement level near feverish. Poor judgment can mean injury, sometimes even death in hard-core downhill skiing, snowboarding, in-line skating, road luge, sky diving and bungee jumping. Yet, a growing number of people in the twentysomething age group are seeking recreational outlets in such extremist sports.

The extremists generally speak in a language all but unintelligible to the average person. Surfers "get tubed," sky divers make "HALO drops," extreme skiers watch for "decaying cornices," rock-climbers "place pro," and yet all of them share a love for gut-wrenching adventure.

"It is only through the direct confrontation — only by staring into the naked face of death that we discover the true nature of self," says 22-year-old Stan Lindemuth, a rock-climbing junior at Clarion University of Pennsylvania.

> Stan Lindemuth, rock climber

When "the strength of your fingertips is all that separates you from a 120-foot fall to your death, you start to get rather deliberate," Lindemuth says.

Climbing has moved into mainstream with exposure through movies like "K-2."

Extremist sports, are "a healthy and socially responsible way of getting high," said Lindemuth.

A growing number of universities throughout the United States have started adventure-based clubs and organizations. One such group is Penn State University's Outing Club, which sponsors trips for spelunking, sky diving and rock climbing at a Bellefonte, Pa., quarry.

A characteristic of the twentysomething generation is an increased concern with environmental issues. The extremist enthusiasts are no exception to this.

"The cool thing about [the quarry at] Bellefonte is that an old environmental scar has been transformed into something useful," said Andy Arndt, a 24-year-old junior and president of Penn State's Recreation and Parks Professional Society.

Members of the Penn State Outing Club have made it part of their mission to maintain the climbing site.

Spelunking, or cave exploration, is another such adventure sport that has gained enthusiasts in increasing numbers from the twentysomething crowd over the past several years.

Thomas Craver, a 26-year-old sophomore at Florida State University, is a cave enthusiast. According to him, spelunking is a "real study in panic management."

He goes on to warn that cave exploration is not a sport for the inexperienced or anything to try alone. "Losing your way and starving to death in the pitch-black depths of the earth is a very real danger unless a great deal of caution and forethought is exercised," he said.

chair of the Campaign for Community and treasurer of the BCS. "Straight out prejudice isn't that severe, but subtle racism is widespread," she said. "The University is making an attempt to educate the campus, and education plays a paramount role," she added.

"Education is only beneficial if you are willing to accept it," said Shanta Edwards, co-president of the Student Coalition Against Racism (SCAR). "Racism may not be overt here, but people hold racist beliefs and opinions which aren't voiced," she said.

According to the Code of Student Conduct, "Discrimination against any person on the basis of race ... is against the law. Villanova University finds such conduct particularly offensive.

"Villanova University is dedicated to educating students of diverse racial and ethnic origins and to fostering broad appreciation for cultural and ancestral diversity."

Rape is always wrong

Finally a victim receives some justice, but that's not the end of it.

Former Heavyweight Champion Mike Tyson was convicted of raping an 18-year-old Miss Black America beauty contestant and is currently serving a six-year prison term.

Tyson's attorney Alan Dershowitz is appealing the decision arguing that Indiana Superior Court Judge Patricia J. Gifford handled the case poorly. One of the points the defense contends is that the jury did not hear key evidence indicating that Tyson and the victim were seen embracing in a limousine and then holding hands as they entered the hotel where the incident took place. Dershowitz argued that this evidence denied jurors the chance to consider whether or not Tyson's accuser had consented to sex.

Since when is holding someone's hand or kissing them considered consent by a woman to sexual intercourse? All the unspoken rules of society dictate that women who act a certain way, dress a certain way, or who are out alone at night are just asking to be raped. Female victims of such horrible crimes such as rape are often made out to be the cause of their own victimization. Men can wear whatever they want, act however they want and go out whenever they want. There is no justice in this.

Rape is a brutal crime that strips a woman of her self-esteem and pride. Since this incident, Tyson's accuser has changed her appearance and her name. She has become one of the many faceless victims that we pass everyday.

When is rape just going to be considered wrong? If a woman says no, she means no. It doesn't matter if she's drunk or barely dressed. No means no.

Visitation policy should parallel the real world

Could it be? Is the Villanova campus finally prepared to venture into the modern world of reality and responsibilities?

The opportunity for change is here. The Student Government Association circulated a survey this week, polling student opinions about a proposal to revise the current Residence Hall visitation policies. The overwhelming positive response from the students indicates that they believe they are prepared for the change. The decision now rests in the hands of the University Senate and the administration.

For a Catholic institution like Villanova, this issue will never be easily resolved. The question touches upon many controversial areas, and the repercussions of whatever decision the University Senate hands down will personally affect the entire University community. It is a question that prompts a response in every Villanovan — faculty, staff or student. And as much, it is a question that needs to be asked.

According to the University Code of Student Conduct, which contains Villanova's current policy on issues such as visitation, "... the Code's most important purpose is to facilitate personal growth through values education so that members of the student community are made ready to assume public responsibilities beyond the campus and in society."

We appreciate the fact that our college years are meant to prepare us for the world beyond the campus grounds. So perhaps the situations we face here should come as close to that reality as possible. In the real world, our dealings with members of the opposite sex will not be limited to pre-approved hours deemed "safe" by others.

The Student Government poll addresses topics such as sexual activity, alcohol consumption and personal safety in regard to a change in the visitation policy. But it seems that responsibility is the issue in question here. How will you demonstrate your ability to handle an important aspect of the real world at Villanova?

Renew commitment to Malcolm X's ideals on day marking his death

To the Editor:

Amidst President's Day, midterms and Spring Break plans, one day will go practically unnoticed. The day is Feb. 21. Is that a Villanova basketball game? No! Far more important. It was on this date, 28 years ago, that the prominent and outspoken black leader Malcolm X was brutally assassinated in the Audubon Theater in Harlem, N.Y.

But why is this day so important? Is it because Malcolm X holds a special place in black America. He taught us to be men, to be proud, to be self-supporting. He was our symbol of our own manhood: strong, unyielding.

Yet, to this day, he is called a racist, a hatemonger and an upstart. He is and was accused of preaching anti-Semitism, black militancy and violence. Nothing, and I mean nothing, could be further from the truth. He preached black unity, promoted the development of black businesses and demanded the respect that the black race was due.

All Malcolm X sought was justice and the truth. And when he realized what he had been teaching was false, he remedied his thinking. He is quoted as saying, after his trip to Mecca and experiencing true Islam, "I have eaten of the same dish, drank of the same cup and slept on the mat with those whose eyes are blue and whose skin is white ... Now I have friends that are black, red, brown, yellow and even white."

Malcolm X will continue to be controversial and misunderstood for as long as society refuses to see him for what he was: a savior. He was saved to save us. And by us, I do not exclusively mean black people, but all people willing and able to accept change and seek the truth. If he was a racist, it is because he loved his race, but not because he hated others. Malcolm X did not preach anti-Semitism, but rather anti-system; he did not preach black militancy, he preached black urgency; he was not here to upstart, he was here to uplift.

Malcolm X did not preach anti-Semitism, but rather anti-system; he did not preach black militancy, he preached black urgency; he was not here to upstart, he was here to uplift.

I implore all who read this to remember Malcolm X this Sunday, even if just for a minute. Read his book, see the movie (SPC claims to be showing it this semester), but do not let this day go by unrecognized.

Honorable act reflects well upon Villanovans

To the Editor:

Contrary to popular belief, the Villanova Community consists of more than self-serving individuals.

This past Friday on my way to the bank, I discovered my wallet to be missing. I searched the entire campus and said endless prayers to St. Anthony and St. Jude, as I had been taught, but to no avail.

A day later I received a call saying that my wallet had been turned in and I picked it up — completely intact. Though it didn't contain much cash, a person with all my credit cards and identification could have had a pretty nice time.

Thank you very much to the honest person who turned in my wallet instead of having a nice time with it. You have strengthened my belief that if ever there were a community where the breed of honest people is at a maximum, it is here.

Tokenism prompts cabinet choices

By HILLARY FIELD

First, there was Zoe Baird. The idea of a woman attorney general was thrilling. The chief litigator for the United States was going to be a woman and it was a sign that women were accepted as capable of contributing to the function of this country. Baird withdrew her nomination because of the revelation that she had hired an illegal alien to care for her children without paying social security taxes. America was left with an expectation that the next nominee would be a woman as well.

Next came Kimba Wood, no gender surprise. Along with Wood came the revelation that she had hired an illegal alien as domestic help without reporting the employment. She never made it to the nomination process. With Wood's departure, Clinton's first month as president was taking a downturn and his next decision was critical.

The subsequent nomination of Dade County District Attorney Janet Reno for the position of Attorney General was indicative of Clinton's belief that there must be a woman in this post. Three female nominees would indicate that the president has eliminated any male candidates, that his cabinet will be constructed using the melting pot theory.

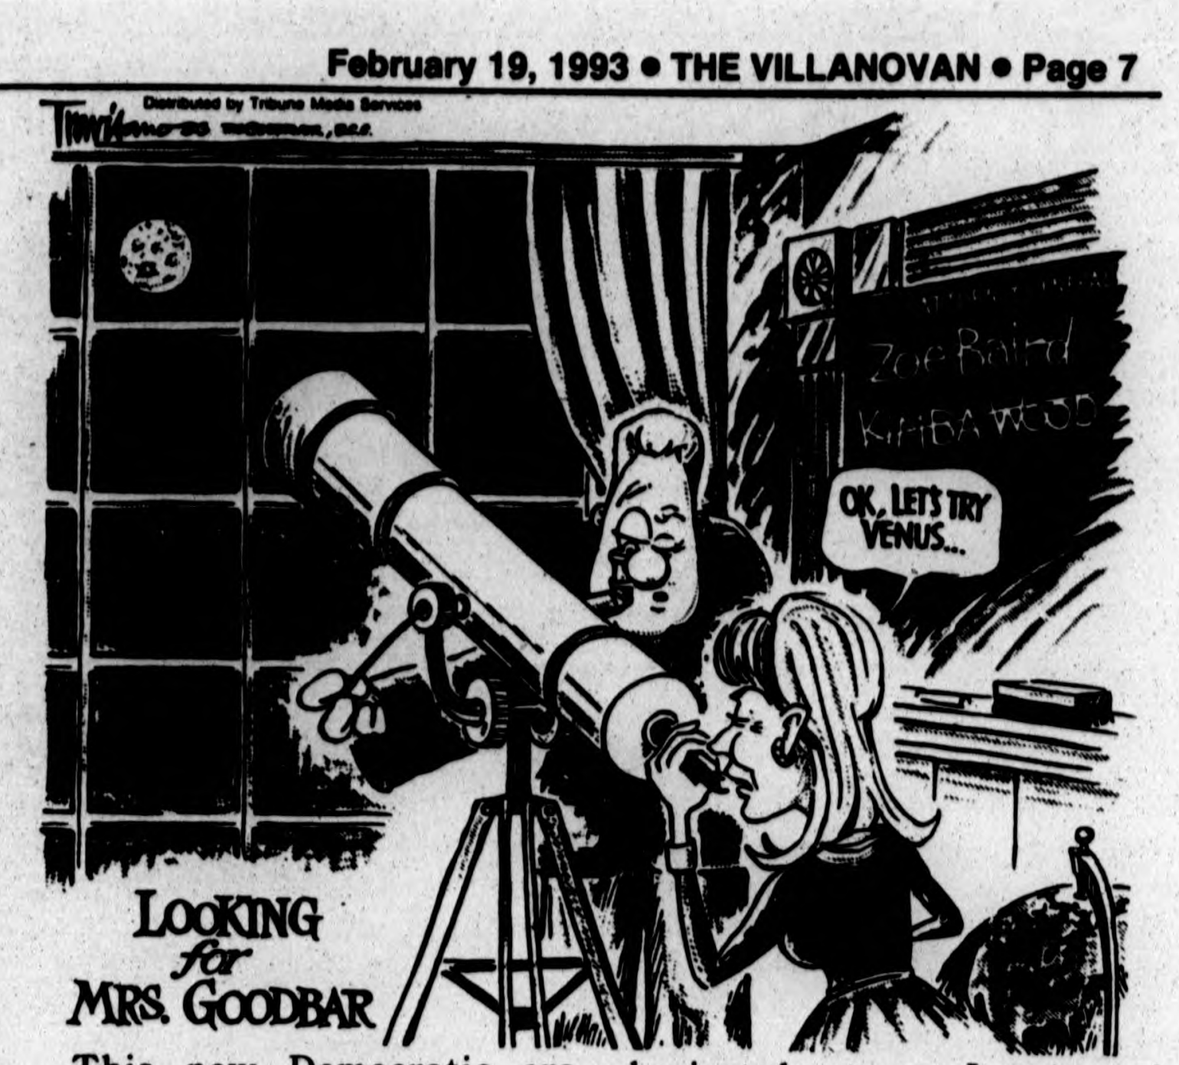
But diversity for the sake of diversity is wrong. Is this discrimination against white males or women being hired as tokenism? Are the two one in the same? I never believed that a white male in our society could ever be discriminated against; the notion is preposterous when our history and government have been dominated by white males. But hiring minorities and women for the sake of those qualities alone is discriminating against equally qualified men. The thought of hiring women for the sake of their sex is insulting to any qualified woman who has insisted that achievement, not gender, is the determining factor for everyone.

The thought of hiring women for the sake of their sex is insulting to any qualified woman who has insisted that achievement not gender, is the determining factor for everyone.

Clinton's position entitles him to choose whomever he wants to create the most productive working conditions in his cabinet. He is entitled to choose a woman and/or a minority to fill every secretary seat and position around him if it works for him. There is no evidence that a cabinet of minorities and women, chosen solely to be more "representative" of the country we live in, will be less or more productive.

Nominees are not chosen at random. The final candidates must be, at the least, qualified. The final nominees are all well-respected leaders in their field and have no doubt earned their place in Clinton's cabinet. But Clinton's choices, not only for the position of attorney general, but for his entire cabinet, lead me to wonder whether qualifications are secondary on the nominee survey chart. Must a candidate be "diverse" to function in this cabinet?

President Clinton had the best position going into the Oval Office. His influence over the reputation of the Democratic Party was great. He had the ability to make Democrats look like common-man gods compared to 12 years of the Darwinistic Republican era. If this first month is any indication of his motives, Clinton's diversity for the sake of diversity will work against him. Already, his decisions have brought two criminals into the spotlight as well as a heap of controversy concerning motive. Clinton's choices, guided under tokenism and the need for diversity are equal to, if not worse than, the recently dismissed cabinet dominated by white males and a silent discrimination. Both extremes are exclusionary, but Clinton's choice supports a belief that a certain affirmative action is necessary in order to make this cabinet representative of America.



This new Democratic era should be heralded by competent leaders who conduct sex-blind choices rather than gender and minority favoritism for the sake of diversity. I am repulsed that I live in an age where I, as a woman, am suspicious of the nomination of three women for a post in this cabinet of predominantly minorities. This age is comprised of two extremes: a male-dominated extreme and a minority-dominated extreme. It was, and still is, Clinton's responsibility to find the balance of the two, where we have nominees who are considered under a policy guided by the Constitutional declaration, "all men (and women) are created equal," and achievement in office is the only criterion.

Staff members suffer from campus class bias

To the Editor:

In light of your commendable article concerning sexual harassment in the Feb. 5 issue of the Villanovan, we feel compelled to point out another form of harassment and bias at Villanova that is so widespread that its dehumanizing effects pass by almost unnoticed. We are speaking of the class bias that is inherent in the attitudes of many of the students and faculty towards members of the staff.

There is something criminal about a society that holds hard work to be the key to success yet rewards least those who work the hardest.

Villanova could not function without clerical support, housekeeping, maintenance, security, food services and the like. The men and women who perform these tasks work just as hard, if not harder, as those who teach and learn — but are paid far less. Indeed, one frequently hears blanket stereotypes — lazy, stupid, incompetent, etc. — applied without distinction. If these were stated in reference to a racial or gender category they would most likely bring immediate condemnation. The fact that such sweeping dehumanizing condemnations appear frequently in the Villanovan only demonstrates how even the most politically sensitive too often restrict their sensitivity to their own social class.

There is something criminal about a society that holds hard work to be the key to success, yet rewards least those who work the hardest. It is easy to forget that the leisure to study enjoyed by students and the relatively high level of self-direction enjoyed by professors are predicated upon the thankless, routine, alienating labor that must be performed by many members of the staff. The actual extent of this inequality is so striking that it must be justified by appeals to "merit," "intelligence," or "perseverance." The fact of the matter is that differences in types of labor-force participation often boil down to differences in structural opportunity.

The degree to which a class bias is implicit in all aspects of life in the United States makes its presence at Villanova particularly tenacious and difficult to see. Nonetheless, it is crucial that we address such biases with the same force (although hopefully with more success) that we have used in addressing other forms of exclusive behavior.

COMMENTARY

Student says, "Don't let throwing up get you down."

By PETER SHAUGER

On the front page of last week's Villanovan, an article about rightsizing the undergraduate population sat adjacent to an article about the recent attack of a mystery illness at Villanova.

At first glance I didn't think anything of it. Then slowly, as the little hamster in my brain got in his little hamster wheel, I started thinking about the possible relationship between the two articles.

It is possible that the University, in such a hurry to reduce the enrollment, decided to spread a disease of which only they knew the source and the cure, so that people would become so sick that they would have to drop out of school? No, I guess not.

Well, is it possible that the University knew no more of the mystery illness than the student body, and that it merely publicized the phenomena in order to ensure a lower enrollment? Maybe.

If the latter was the University's plan, I'm sorry to inform them that years from now, after the panic and concern with this illness have subsided, all people will remember will be that something really weird happened at Villanova in 1993, in the same way that I know something really weird happened at Villanova in 1985, but I can't quite remember.

And if, on the very remote chance that the University spread the illness so that students would drop out, therefore reducing the undergraduates, well, let me just tell you that this would also backfire. Because it has been my experience that mystery illnesses bring communities together instead of tearing them apart.

"Mystery illness" sounds so harsh and impersonal, though. Let's see, can we give it a better name to bring the human aspect into it? Sure we can.

How about Cyrus? Cyrus the virus. Too catchy. It sounds like a superficial, impersonal virus that everyone gets and doesn't really invade the body the way a good virus should.

What about Vic? Vic the Villanova Virus. I like it. It says, "Hi, I'm Vic, your friendly neighborhood virus, and I'm darn glad to infect you!"

When the illness, I mean Vic, was visiting our campus last week, you were nobody if Vic wasn't making you sick.

Since then, there has even been talk of a new fraternity/sorority for all the people infected with Vic with the same name. Members of the new organization, Vic the Villanova Virus, or Tri V, instead of going through the formality of drinking to the point of sickness, would now hang out on the weekends together and spill their guts, so to speak. There would be no dues to pay and no fund raisers because there would be no need to buy beer every weekend when people could get sick for free with Vic.

> Vic, the Villanova Virus. I like it. It says, "Hi, I'm Vic, your friendly neighborhood virus, and I'm darn glad to infect you!"

Can you imagine if everyone on campus were a member of Tri V? That would solve the entire problem of underage drinking, since everyone knows that the attraction in drinking is not that it's wrong or that it's illegal or even that it tastes good, but that it's fun to be sick.

Can you imagine the jealousy of Americans nationwide watching the news about Vic on CNN. They're probably wondering, "How can we get Vic to come to our town and infect us so we can become as closely knit as they are down there at Villanova?"

Well, citizens, you know I'd be the first to inform you if I knew where Vic comes from or how he travels, but I don't know. And the sad thing is, though 180 Villanovans have been infected, Vic remains a mystery.

Once this weekend I thought I might have been eligible for Tri V, but to no avail. It was just some rotten apple cider. As I later learned, Vic is not a relative of food poisoning or water pollution. And I was so close!

Actually, the more this little hamster in my brain runs on his treadmill (boy, is he ever getting tired!), the more I think that the University could not have been a part of such a clever conspiracy. This does not mean that I think Vic is working alone. That would be playing into his game.

But this does pose some other serious questions. Why has Vic chosen Villanova as his temporary home? Why haven't we heard from Vic lately? Is Vic aware of his popularity and if so is he letting it go to his head? Is Vic a male or a female, and either way, how does he get around visitation hours?

Wherever Vic comes from, Villanova seems to be welcoming him with open arms and open toilet seats. And though a common thread to Vic's heritage eludes us, one theory seems to be holding true: you can't spell virus without V.U.

Peter Shauger is a junior English major who is sad to say he is not a close personal friend of Vic.

Seniors — Japan

The Catholic Church is looking for volunteer English teachers in Japan for 13 months beginning July 1993. Must be a United States citizen with college degree, practicing Catholic, age 22 to 30, men and women. The Rev. Graham McDonnell, director of Good Shepherd Movement, will be on campus interviewing in Campus Ministry.

College Republicans

Yes, we have always existed! But our meeting time has changed this semester to every Monday in the West Lounge of Dougherty at 4:30 p.m. We welcome all old members and any new faces!

Volunteers Needed

Students, faculty and neighbors are needed to work on the Handicapped Encounter Christ (HEC) retreats. These retreats offer a Christian faith experience for disabled adults who otherwise would not be able to participate in a retreat because of their need for physical assistance. Please contact Margie Kernicky in Campus Ministry at 645-4080. The retreat takes place from Friday evening March 12 through Sunday afternoon March 14, ending around 2 p.m. There is an orientation meeting for new folks Feb. 22 and a Pre-HEC Liturgy on March 9. All meetings are held at Margie Kernicky's apt.: Radnor House #117, 1030 E. Lancaster Ave., Rosemont, at 7:30 p.m.

Academic Attire for Faculty and Administrative Staff

Those faculty members and administrative staff wanting to rent academic attire for the 1993 Commencement Ceremony should complete the card mailed earlier this month and return it to the Dean of Students Office by Feb. 22. If you did not receive the information and card about renting academic attire and you wish to rent academic attire, please call the Dean of Students Office at X 4200.

Latin American Studies

The Latin American Studies Concentration Committee will present "The Buried Mirror," a five-part series on Spain and Latin America by Carlos Fuentes, one of Latin America's best-known authors and a former Mexican diplomat. The series is presented in five, hour-long segments, running continuously from noon to 5 p.m. in the Haverford Room of Connelly Center. Come to them all, several, or come to just one! (Flyer with details is available at the Office of International Studies, St. Augustine 420.)

Irish Studies Lecture

A lecture by James Donnelly of the University of Wisconsin, "The Great Famine and Its Interpreters" will be presented in St. Augustine 300 at 3:30 p.m. Dr. James Murphy, Director of the Irish Studies Concentration can supply details. Call him at x4647 or call the English Department, x4630.

International Studies

At 7 p.m., the Office of International Studies will present the first of several special evening events planned for International Studies Week. A panel of Villanova alumni will address "International Studies and Career Objectives," sharing the variety of ways their current careers were affected by their studies overseas and by intercultural experiences while they were undergraduates. The impact of incorporating Study Abroad into the resume will be examined. The event will take place in the Wayne/St. Davids Room of Connelly Center.

Feb. 23

Mid-Term Prep and Test-Taking Workshop

Concerned about your test-taking skills? Dr. Reilly will offer an Exam Prep and Test-Taking Workshop to 3:50 p.m. in the Counseling Center, Corr 106. The workshop is free and no sign-up is necessary.

"Kiss of the Spider Woman"

"Kiss of the Spider Woman," a British film starring John Hurt and Raul Julia, will be shown in the Connelly Center Cinema. This presentation is sponsored by the Office of International Studies and the Latin American Studies Concentration Committee. There will be no admission charged.

One in 500 college students is HIV infected. AIDS is a sickness that destroys the body's disease fighting system. Using condoms will lower your chance of getting HIV. One out of every 250 people is infected with HIV. Approximately one million people in the United States are infected with HIV. AIDS is caused by the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV). Cases of AIDS in the 17- to 25-year-old age group are growing rapidly.

AIDS: I never thought it would happen to me

Special to the Villanovan

"Why me? I just don't understand why this has happened. What did I ever do to deserve this?" — All other thoughts were surpassed by these questions. I sat in the doctor's office in disbelief, repeating these thoughts to myself, stunned.

These things just don't happen to me. This couldn't be possible. My mind raced, searching for an answer. When? Where? How could I possibly have gotten AIDS?

I've never had a blood transfusion before in my life. My dentist was always safe (used gloves, sterilized instruments). I've never done any drugs, well except for alcohol, but you can't get it that way! HOW?

Then suddenly, as if someone had come along and knocked the wind out of me, my mind stopped reeling and the horrible reality that I was trying so hard to deny finally became clear.

It was just an ordinary Friday night, nothing to separate it from half a dozen others I had experienced. My friends and I joked around, getting ready for another "killer" party. After a long week of classes, studying and working, I couldn't wait for a chance to just relax and have a good time. I deserved it, right? I mean, what's the harm in having a few drinks and letting loose a little? Everybody needs a break.

So finally after everyone was ready we headed down to Bartley Circle to get a ride. It didn't take very long to get to the house. There were a lot of people there, a lot of drunk people. My friends and I got some beer and made our way around the party, checking out who was there.

We walked into the other room where they were playing some drinking games, so we decided to join in. It seemed pretty cool. This senior I knew from a couple of my classes walked in the door and came over to join us.

It was a pretty fun time, drinking and joking around. Then someone turned the music up and we all started dancing. Things were getting kind of wild, so my friend from class and I decided to take a breather and get away from the crowd.

We went upstairs to where it was a little quieter and not so many people. We managed to find a room to be alone in. At first we were just talking, but I guess we both had had a lot to drink and well . . . things just happened.

That's no excuse, I know that now, for not being careful or at least prepared. I just always thought I'd be in control and be able to handle something like this.

IT'S NOT FAIR! What did I do that was so horrible, so unforgivable that I should have to suffer and die for it? I made one mistake, I was careless one time.

I'm not the type of person who does this every weekend. I know people like that, I always figured something like this could only happen to them, not me! I've seen some people go around with more than one person a night, why not them, why me?!

If only I had been prepared, or hadn't drunk so much or just never would have gone — if only. Then maybe I'd have my life back, maybe then I'd have a real future after graduation, something to look forward to. But I don't.

I'm coming to terms with the face that yes, I'm a Villanova student and I'm also HIV positive. I'm not gay, I don't do drugs and I've never had a blood transfusion.

I made a mistake, but I don't believe I should have to suffer and die for it. There are countless numbers of people who have done what I have, but don't have the AIDS virus, yet.

This is a problem we all must become aware of because it can happen to any of us. I just wish I had realized this sooner.

> When? Where? How could I possibly have gotten AIDS?

Although the student whose account you've just read doesn't actually exist, the sad truth is, the story could easily belong to any Villanova student. The rate of infection continues to accelerate. Someone is infected by the HIV virus every 15 to 20 seconds. According to conservative estimates, more than 40 MILLION PEOPLE the world over will have contracted the HIV virus by the year 2000. Please, be aware and play it safe.

Are you playing it safe?

Task Force helps 'Nova

By DANA FINN
Staff Reporter

You probably have seen them on campus. The posters of the picture of Villanova students in the basketball stands with the AIDS hotline number are everywhere. But who is this V.U. AIDS Task Force we see in bright yellow and what are they all about?

"The V.U. AIDS Task Force is a group of faculty, staff and students who have an interest in educating community members about HIV and AIDS in hopes of changing behaviors," stated Gary Bonas, chair of the AIDS Task Force.

Other members include Dr. Sherry Bowen and Dr. Paula Michal-Johnson, communication arts; Dr. Michael Berthold, English; Lynne Hincken, Center for Drug and Alcohol Assistance; Nancy Sharts-Hopko, Nursing; Tom Malloy, Facilities Management; Rita Harper, Middleton Hall-Infirmary; and a student member, senior Sean Ferrier, as well as student peer educators.

The program, under the direction of Dr. Richard Neville, Vice-President of student life, "received a great deal of student, faculty and administrative support," said Bonas.

Posters are not the only projects undertaken by the Task Force. Before any promotional work could begin on campus, research was conducted to determine what methods of education were going to be effective.

The Task Force is currently researching the sexual activity among Villanova students to better understand and educate the community about AIDS.

Peer educators are "our primary weapon," Bonas explained. They are regular students trained to educate others in the community about AIDS.

Peer educators are called upon by resident assistants to give talks at hall meetings, as well as classroom discussions and organizational meetings on campus. Informally, they answer questions from anyone who asks them about HIV or AIDS.

The V.U. Task Force has implemented an AIDS awareness segment during orientation week, which will be included again this summer. This means by the time the current freshmen become seniors, every student will have been educated by Villanova on the issue of AIDS.

The most prominent item on the group's agenda is AIDS Awareness Week, Feb. 14 to 20. The week was picked because it began on Valentine's Day and is close to spring break, times when the threat of AIDS may be ignored.

During this week, brochures on AIDS were located throughout campus. Also, red AIDS awareness ribbons were sold for $1 in several locations, including the Connelly Center and the dining halls.

Anyone interested in becoming a peer educator can pick up an application in the Office of Student Activities in Dougherty Hall and return it by Feb. 28. Those interested in becoming student members of the V.U. Task Force can talk to Bonas in the Office for Student Activities.

Red Cross closely monitors blood supply

By MONTA MONACO
Advertising Director

"Hey, did you hear? Fifty pints of blood collected at last week's blood drive tested HIV positive!"

Rumors like this one spread like wildfire across Villanova's campus nearly every time an organization sponsors a blood drive. But the Red Cross, with a few facts and figures, can easily dispel these fallacies.

When a blood drive is held on campus, the school receives a registering figure and a production figure back from the Red Cross, said Joe Falcone, who is assistant program manager of blood services and recruitment for the Chester-Delco Red Cross district office.

The registering figure is the number of people that walked into the office intending to donate blood, and the production figure is the number of pints that were actually collected. The discrepancy between the two numbers is what often causes the rumors, explained Falcone.

Students assume that the pints were rejected because of HIV, he said.

Actually, the blood could have been turned down for a number of simple reasons, from the sniffles and high temperatures, to high blood pressure caused by nerves, Falcone said.

The Red Cross, however, carefully examines its blood, conducting nine tests on the donations. Supplies are typed and tested for numerous diseases, including all kinds of hepatitis, leukemia, cyphalus and HIV.

"We are extremely strict with our blood supplies because we are regulated by the FDA since blood is considered a drug when transfused," said Falcone.

HIV screening began in 1985 after several people contracted the AIDS virus from transfusions, Falcone said. Before this time, donors were self-screened, but the Red Cross admittedly conducted no medical tests for HIV in the supplies.

Still, only an average of five out of every 100,000 pints of blood test positive for the HIV virus. Since Villanova only donates an average of 500 pints of blood, it would be nearly impossible for HIV to show up in any of the students' donations, Falcone said.

Should HIV show up in any of the donations, Villanova would not be notified, Falcone said. The donor would be notified by a letter that his or her blood was turned down. The reason for rejection would not be included in the letter, forcing the person to personally contact the Red Cross.

Blood that is HIV positive is tested twice. It is then heat-treated to destroy it, so that it cannot be used accidentally.

"Now that we have the HIV test, I don't know of any case where a person has contracted AIDS from blood transfusions in the Penn-Jersey area," Falcone said.

The Red Cross assures potential donors they cannot contract AIDS by giving blood, but hope that people will not use the Red Cross for free AIDS testing.

"We don't want people in high risk groups to come in and use the Red Cross as a testing facility. We are there for one reason — to collect blood for transfusions," Falcone said.

Who's Who Dinner recognizes seniors

By PETE SMOCK
Staff Reporter

In what was deemed an overwhelming success, the Who's Who Among College Students dinner was held Jan. 29 at Llanerch Country Club in Havertown.

The event, sponsored by Villanova, was held to honor students at the University who have distinguished themselves with academic achievement as well as extracurricular activities. Approximately 58 individuals in the senior class received recognition. Attendance included parents and guests of the honorees.

Who's Who is an organization that publishes national directories of various distinguished individuals. These directories are then sold to either libraries, bookstores or the individuals themselves.

The Who's Who Among College Students is just one of their many categories of distinction. An even larger directory is published for high school students.

The types of students that were honored at Villanova included those who had been inducted into national honor societies, leaders of student organizations and athletes. Stephen LaRose, president of the Intra-Fraternity Council last year as well as a member of Pi Sigma Eta (Political Science), Honor Society attended the event.

"I have only attended a few awards ceremonies sponsored by Villanova, but this one was by far the best. It was definitely a classy affair," said LaRose.

The event began with cocktails in the Llanerch Country Club's main dining room. An introductory prayer was then said by the Rev. Joe Mostardi, O.S.A., and was followed by a full course meal.

Art display in Connelly Center open to all students

By AMANDA MILES
Staff Reporter

The Villanova Art Gallery invites everyone to come experience the wonder of art this spring at their special Sesquicentennial art exhibits and receptions. These shows will offer students insight into such places as West Africa and Siena, Italy, in addition to shows commemorating Villanova's early years.

A showing of West African art, entitled "African Art From the Collection of Benjamin D. Bernstein," will be displayed until Feb. 22. These extraordinary art works have been praised as "the finest exhibit of West African art in the Delaware Valley," by a Philadelphia art critic.

Benjamin Bernstein and his brother, Edward Bernstein, are well-known collectors who have given extensively to the Philadelphia Museum of Art, St. Joseph's University and many other institutions.

> Art opens them up to creativity . . . in whatever area they intend to go into.

Villanova's exhibit examines the full realm of West African culture, from Nigeria's commonly worn Housaman hats to a rare face mask in West African wood art with Asian-like features.

The exhibit to follow the Bernstein collection comes to Villanova all the way from Siena and will be at the gallery from March 13 to April 26. The opening reception for this exhibit, entitled "Tutti i Colori di Siena," or "All the Colours of Siena," will be held March 20 at 5 p.m.

In honor of this cultural affair, the Consul General of Italy, Franco Giodano, will attend the reception. The art gallery invites all students and faculty to join them for the occasion.

The show will include paintings, drawings and designs by painter and graphic artist Vita diBenedetto. Works in stained glass by artisans of Vetrate Artistiche Toscane of Siena and weavings by Fioretta Bacci will also be on display.

Alfio Mori employs Sienese blacksmithing techniques to create wrought iron lamps, chandeliers, door knockers and fireplace sets in medieval and modern styles. Woodcarvings of Paolo Galoppi include hand-carved frames, gilded trim works and restorations. Potter Lucia Volentiera creates objects ranging from tables to toys. Various art works in this show will also be for sale.

This Italian art exhibition is honoring more than just magnificent art. This event also marks the 20th anniversary of summer courses taught in Siena by Villanova and Rosemont College, which is the largest United States summer education program in Italy in June.

The contents of the gallery's art shows are recognized in the art world for their importance. The gallery often receives many outside visitors such as art critics, journalists and area schools.

Unfortunately, the gallery fears that many students are missing out on the enriching opportunities they offer.

"This is part of the students' education," states Mary Anne Erwin, the assistant director of the art gallery. "Art opens them

'Nova group fights hunger

By TIFFANY CHRISTENSEN
Staff Reporter

The wide array of services performed by Villanovans includes work in soup kitchens, the streets of inner cities, break trips and fundraising events.

This reflects Villanova's intense awareness of the problem of hunger, commitment to do something about the problem and overall relatively high level of social consciousness.

It is obvious that Villanovans are neither ignorant nor apathetic about these issues. However, is the Villanova community really doing all that can or should be done to combat world hunger and poverty?

In attempting to answer this question, we must consider the dual nature of social concern. There are two approaches in dealing with social problems such as hunger. Obviously, the approach most commonly used on this campus is that of direct service to those in need.

However, there is another aspect of dealing with the problem which is perhaps not explored at Villanova as fully as it could be. This is the effort to change, through political action, the various facets of the system which result in the poverty itself.

Reinhold Niebuhr states in Moral Man and Immoral Society, "Philanthropy combines genuine pity with the display of power ... [but] the powerful are more inclined to be generous than to grant social justice."

As many students at Villanova are from upper-middle class, well-educated families, they possess the power of which Niebuhr speaks. As previously mentioned, our community is hardly lacking in pity or generosity.

We must ask if we are striving toward granting social justice to all. Is our duty to solely provide charity to those who are less fortunate than ourselves without working to change the unjust laws and policies that contribute to their misfortune?

Perhaps changing or at least examining our political policies with regard to hunger (which is the aspect of dealing with hunger with which we are least familiar) should be further explored at Villanova.

This exploration is beginning with the new organization, Bread for the World. Bread for the World, affiliated with the Center for Peace and Justice, is a grassroots Christian organization dedicated to changing policies on world hunger through the lobbying of political officials.

The organization conducted its first letter-writing campaign during Hunger Awareness Week last semester. Letters were sent to senators requesting support of the Every Fifth Child Bill, which increases federal funding for Woman and Infant Care, Headstart and Job Corps.

The group is presently planning a trip to visit the Bread for the World headquarters in Washington, D.C., and possibly to meet with Congressional representatives. They will also be playing a large role in planning next year's Hunger Awareness Week.

"We are hoping to become a major force on campus in educating students about the issues of hunger and getting responses in terms of political action from them," said member Alison Gilligan.

Bread for the World appears to be a promising and integral companion to the service organizations that Villanova provides.

Its continued provision of direct service to those in need, accompanied by striving to change the systems and policies that create the need for such service, are certain to provide a powerful and complete endeavor on behalf of the Villanova community to fight poverty and hunger.

If you are interested in working toward such political changes, please attend one of Bread for the World's meetings, held every Wednesday at 7 p.m. in the Center for Peace and Justice.

Students travel in summer

By LIZ WEAVER
Staff Reporter

Bonjour! Hola! Top o' the Morning! These are just a few of the many greetings students may hear if they choose to take advantage of the International Studies Programs at Villanova.

These programs offer the participants a chance to journey abroad and study a different culture. The summer programs are an opportunity for students to experience foreign countries without spending an entire semester abroad.

These trips are offered through the Office of International Studies at Villanova. Students may choose from a variety of countries — Chile, France, Germany, Ireland, Italy (Urbino and Siena), Spain and Israel/Occupied West Bank. Six undergraduate credits may be earned over the course of the program. The programs range from four to eight weeks.

Participants will experience a different culture than what they may be used to. Four of the choices are intensive language programs (France, Germany, Urbino and Spain), in which students may need at least one year of the language at the college-level. The other four programs have classes taught in English, although students can choose to take classes of the language while there.

These programs offer the participants a chance to journey abroad and study a different culture.

These programs range in cost from $2,800 to $3,500. It is necessary to be a full-time undergraduate with at least a 2.50 grade point average on a 4.0 scale.

What these trips offer to students is an opportunity to see the world we often hear about on the news or read about in books. Whether it is four or eight weeks the experience is one from which everyone can benefit. There is a lot here on campus for students, but there is much more for students "out there" in the world.

During their stay, students will be afforded opportunities to travel and will be housed with host families or reside in university residence halls, depending on the program they choose.

One student who ventured out of the United States this past summer was Anne-Marie Budniack. She spent six weeks in Cadiz, Spain. Budniack was enrolled in classes and spent a lot of time traveling.

"It was a unique experience and a great time," Budniack said of her trip. She also said that she became good friends with many of the other students from Villanova who participated.

If you are interested in participating in one of these unique trips, stop by the Office of International Studies in St. Augustine Center, or call 645-6412 or 645-7393.

Villanova students can experience a different culture during the summer months.

Top 10

Straight from the Home Box Office (not to be confused with HBO, and no, we don't make movies for HBO) in Dougherty 201 comes this week's Top 10 alternative ways that Villanova could plan to downsize the undergraduate enrollment:

10. Get rid of the men's basketball program.
9. Promote Gary Bonas as University spokesman.
8. Raise tuition, parents like that.
7. For every prospective student interview, place a whoopie cushion under their seat.
6. Hire new Public Safety Coordinator Jeffrey Dahmer.
5. Wipe out the Greek system on campus.
4. Give free meals at the Pit to visiting high school students and their parents.
3. Replace the Rev. Edmund Dobbin with George Bush.
2. Shut down Bob's Mystical Garden.

And the No. 1 alternative way Villanova plans to downsize its undergraduate enrollment:

1. Release a mysterious virus among the student body.

up to creativity ... in whatever area they intend to go into."

The idea that art can broaden a person's range of learning experiences has been championed by the Rev. Richard Cannuli, O.S.A. Cannuli is the director and curator of the art gallery and the Art and Art History Department Chair.

Cannuli and Villanova's 1992 Artist-in-Residence Mary Anne Bartley have shared artistic experiences with students throughout the Delaware Valley.

The gallery invites elementary school students, troubled youths and other groups to join in hands-on creativity sessions. The students not only view and learn about art, they also create their own.

The Toby Farms Elementary School from Chester Township visited the art gallery on three occasions, sending a total of 150 students. The school had a history of scoring at the bottom in state-mandated literacy and math tests.

However, in 1992 the Villanova Art Gallery's hands-on creativity seminars, Bartley's in-class art instruction and Cannuli's school visit helped change that.

Instead of being at the absolute bottom of the academic barrel, Toby Farms' standardized test results exceeded national averages. This lends to the belief that art can have an extraordinary effect on people.

The gallery gave four art sessions to approximately 40 young men ages 14 to 17 at the Philadelphia Youth Study Center School. These men were under detention and awaiting trial as adults for murder and other serious crimes.

The teachers at the school report very positive feedback. "Many of the kids we have here are completely opposed to any form of authority. But this program they responded to. Their hostility came down."

"This program gave them the opportunity to express their emotions through color and design. It provided them a safe way of dealing with their feelings," one teacher noted.

Villanova's art gallery offers all of this and more. The opportunity for cultural growth is available to all students. Located in Connelly Center, to the right of the candy counter, the Art Gallery is open every weekday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

VILLANOVA UNIVERSITY SUMMER PROGRAM 1993

IRISH STUDIES
UNIVERSITY COLLEGE GALWAY - GALWAY, IRELAND

June 14 to July 30, 1993

PROGRAM

The purpose of the seven-week Irish Studies Program is to introduce students to Ireland's history, literature, society, and archaeology through a 10-day Orientation to Dublin and Galway, and five weeks of courses at the University College Galway Summer School in Irish Studies. Students have five days of independent travel at the end of the Program before returning to the United States.

Dr. James J. Murphy, Villanova University's Director of Irish Studies, accompanies the students to Ireland for the Orientation Program in Eastern and Western Ireland. Following the Orientation, students begin their two (2) courses for six (6) Villanova undergraduate credits at UCG from the following list:

• Anglo-Irish Literature	ENG 2500	3 credits
• Archaeological Heritage	AAH 3007	3 credits
• Gaelic Culture and Lit	ENG 2450	3 credits
• Irish History	HIS 3216	3 credits
• Irish Society	SOC 1500	3 credits

LOCATION

The University College Galway Program is located on the campus of UCG in Galway. Classrooms, library, lounge, cafeteria and sport facilities are available.

HOUSING AND MEALS

Students live with Irish families adjacent to UCG with a full Irish breakfast provided with the room. Family or guest house accommodations will be arranged during fieldtrips. Luncheon and dinner or high tea can be taken in local hotels or restaurants.

PROGRAM COSTS

The comprehensive fee of $2,950 includes tuition, room and partial board, the Dublin and program tours, transfers and fees. The fee does not include the Aer Lingus roundtrip ticket, insurance, personal expenses or optional travel.

'Nova radio station encourages participation

By MARYBETH GOELLER
Staff Reporter

Forget Eagle 106, Q102, and Star 104.5. Forget all of Philadelphia's radio stations that we mindlessly switch the dial to and from, hoping to find a favorite song.

A relatively new radio station is making headlines and causing Villanova students to sit up and take notice. It is our own WXVU radio station, 89.1 on your dial, which is run by Villanova students. Thanks to several new shows, ratings have shot through the roof.

Ask students why they are so tired in their Tuesday morning classes, and chances are it is because they were up listening to "Midnight Mondays" with Moo, Craig, E.J. and their special guest host, Mic. This show is virtually all listener participation, with music that the audience wants to hear — not what the dee jays want you to hear.

"The whole purpose of this show is to let people get to know each other better and become more involved in the radio," said E.J. Champey, one of the hosts of the show. This idea has been such a success that listeners have even been asking each other to date dances.

The guy who started it all is Craig Remar. "It is incredible that our show alone has expanded the listening audience," he said.

"As long as people keep it clean, we shouldn't have a problem with the show. Everyone loves to be on the air, and it is a rare thing that a school would have a talk show in which everyone gets involved," said McLaughlin. By using a two-second delay, many of those problems should be eliminated, and the show can continue to be a success.

Many of the listeners have had problems getting good reception on 89.1, so Remar will be trying to consult the FCC to boost the sound in order to improve it. "I also hope to get a low antenna to make it even easier to hear what we have to say," said Remar.

Last week was John McLaughlin's debut on "Midnight Mondays." It was on this show that many controversies arose, from people calling in throwing insults back at each other and from others giving the hosts a hard time.

The listening audience has definitely been enjoying the spontaneous program of "Midnight Mondays." "Since nobody in my wing goes to bed before 4 a.m. this late-night show definitely gives us all something to do. I'm a dedicated listener as well as one who calls in frequently," said sophomore David Raffaele.

Mike Fitzpatrick shared many of the same feelings. "This show is a fine form of late night entertainment as well as an available forum for students' free speech," he said.

Sandy Damian, who lives in Good Counsel, communicates with her friends on main campus while requesting songs and dedications. "I end up hearing what is new with all the girls in Sheehan through WXVU," said Damian. "I'll definitely start listening for other shows at different times if they are as good as the one on at midnight!"

It is through the help of "Midnight Mondays" that many other shows have been making names for themselves. On Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, WXVU has air time from 8 a.m. until midnight, airing all different types of music, plus anything the listening audience might want to listen to.

Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays WXVU shares air-time with Cabrini College during the day, and from midnight until 3 a.m., Villanova lets loose on the frequency waves. Friday nights, all-night "DJ Frank" blasts his Hip Hop music for all those either getting ready to go out or just stay in and relax and listen to the radio.

So, in case you haven't heard of WXVU, turn your dial to 89.1 at any time during the day, and see what everyone is talking about. Better yet, become a part of the radio staff and broadcast your own views and ideas.

Awards dinner

After dinner had concluded, the awards ceremony began. The Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., served as master of ceremonies and introduced each student individually while announcing some of their accomplishments.

Lucy Gorski, Director of Student Activities, was on hand to present each student with a silver plate with their name engraved upon it. The plate signified that person's name being entered into the national directory.

I have only attended a few awards ceremonies sponsored by Villanova, but this one was by far the best.

After the awards had been given, speeches were given by Dr. Helen Lafferty, University Vice President, as well as Dr. Richard Neville, Vice President for student life. Lafferty praised the students for their contributions. She remarked that Villanova was proud to have been able to benefit from the honored individuals. Neville's speech centered around the contributions of the parents. He labeled them the "producers of the finest Villanova students."

Lisa Teevan was honored for her contributions to Blue Key Society, the orientation program and Kappa Kappa Gamma. She said she was moved by Neville's statements.

"It meant a lot to me that my parents were able to witness my award and I was glad that Dr. Neville noted their presence. It also eased the pressure of having to find a date," said Teevan.

The Who's Who Among College Students national directory is currently being published and will be available for sale by late Spring. The process of selecting next year's honorees has already begun.

'Ninth Wave' makes a splash at debut

By ERIC CHEUNG
Assistant Entertainment Editor

The latest installment in Villanova's Sesquicentennial celebration of Villanova playwrights premiered last week. Leslie Lee's "The Ninth Wave" is a stellar show about racism, violence and morality in a prisoners of war camp. Previous plays during this season, "The Mayor's Wife" and "Compassionate Leave," produced some powerful performances, but few could match Lee's depiction of the unfiltered, stinging hatefulness that war can cause. All the actors contributed exceptional performances for this must-see show. Surprisingly, quite a few of the actors are Villanova undergraduates. Apparently Villanova has world-class talent both in acting and in playwriting.

"The Ninth Wave" refers to an Alfred Lord Tennyson vision of the final wave that carries the history of a people. In this case, Lee is talking about the African-American people and the racism they had to endure throughout their history in America. What Lee focuses on is how black people have contributed to war efforts overseas. This play takes place during 1944 in France, where a group of six African-American soldiers are given the job of guard duty over Nazi prisoners.

Racism is alive and well, even during times of war. Though the blacks are giving up their lives to fight for America, they are not allowed to actually do battle on the front line. Most are left to perform lesser tasks in which they feel they are making no contribution.

Frustrated with their lives, the group creates something called "Operation Adolf." Since they cannot fight the Germans on the battlefied, they create the fights. Usually a guard will offer one of the prisoners his freedom and then shoot him in the back as he tries to escape. This is how the black soldiers prove themselves in battle.

However, to these people, the killings are justified against the hate-mongers. The Nazis subscribe to the same white man's creed of the inferiority of African-Americans.

In retaliation, these soldiers fight the oppression and bigotry

Jagger strives for variety in his solo career

By CAROLYN POPPE
Assistant Entertainment Editor

You will never believe it when you spot Mick Jagger's new album. You would not guess that he will be hitting 50 this year, nor that at such an age he would be still trying to push a "sexy" image. Yet, Jagger tries to convince us that his soul still burns on Wandering Spirit.

Not since 1987's Primitive Cool have we heard from him, but Jagger picks up where he left off with the new solo album. He provides us with tough, guitar-based rock that is sometimes pushy, sometimes suggestive. His driving musical style carries over from his past work on his own and with the Rolling Stones. But this time Jagger shoots for variation among the 14 tracks.

Most of the tunes present a confident, independent Jagger whose spirit drives on in spite of the hard hand he may have been dealt in the past. Right from the start, Jagger bursts with zeal on the persistent "Wired All Night," a fairly empty look at youth and drug abuse.

"Sweet Thing," the recently released single, proves pleasing to those who expect more than basic guitar and percussion. Low, pumping and slightly heated, Jagger entices with this track. He carefully adds some of that high, falsetto vocal work that reminds the listener of celebrated Stones tunes. With some pretty rudimentary saxophone for richness, Jagger achieves the seductive feel he wants for this one.

However, about half of the album sticks to that basic guitar idea, with Jagger's distinctive voice emphasized. Unlike many other grandfathers of rock who seem to find their voices slipping with age (e.g. Keith Richards, Greg Lake), Jagger hangs on to his. Whether his voice was ever striking to begin with is left to the listener's judgment. It is this voice that prevails in otherwise worthless tracks like "Put Me In The Trash," Mother Of A Man" and "Think," a remake of a 1957 James Brown piece.

But a few of the selections are inventive and worth a listen. His title track actually attempts a Memphis-style guitar that sounds a bit like an Eric Johnson project. This new sound works for Jagger. He conveys his enthusiastic perseverance by suggesting it, not forcing it. The lighter, quicker guitar keeps Jagger's energy in check.

The track "I've Been Lonely For So Long," flows with low bass (thanks to Flea of the Red Hot Chili Peppers). And it paces nicely with a catchy chorus that really sticks. Jagger does not push us into this track, either, making it more fun to listen to.

> Most of the tunes present a confident, independent Jagger.

The synthesized piece on "Use Me" makes it a listening kick. Flea on bass again gives us some light funk (always appreciated) and helps Jagger slip into that sexy sound. He is accompanied by Lenny Kravitz, who breaks up Jagger's voice monopoly and provides a little relief. Along with "Sweet Thing," this tune finds the creative freshness that Jagger tries to hit.

The many ways Jagger plays with his sound on the album are anything but predictable. On "Evening Gown" and "Hang on to Me Tonight," for example, the Bit seems to discover his deep-southern soul. With a contrived accent, he attempts country blues.

Jagger touches on gospel, as well, with "Out of Focus." This tune speaks of a failed moment of revelation in his life: "I heard beautiful chimes, I heard them peal ... /I saw a heavenly place, then it disappeared." Even with vocal help from the Sweet Singing Cava-Leers, the tune turns in a downspirited direction.

Toward the end of the album, Jagger's spirit wanders off on various tangents. He breaks out a harpsichord on "Angel In My Heart" and dapples in romanticism with mesmerizing imagery. This experiment, though inauthentic, might have worked for Jagger. But did he have to join light, twangy harpsichord with a noticeable first-line pun like "Play upon your heart strings to me?"

Jagger throws together violin and vocals for his last track, "Handsome Molly." Jagger strives (for some reason) for an Irish sound here, even faking the brogue. The fact that it is only two minutes and six seconds long is the listener's saving grace.

With vast experimentation, Jagger tests the musical waters on the album. He finds some new rock riffs that groove for him and some that are a lost attempt. In the end, he discovers his own style prevails again — a basic rock beat, almost danceable, classic guitar and catchy, even slinky, vocals. For Jagger fans, Wandering Spirit will probably be a fun continuation. But its worth lies in only a few of the tracks within the musical spectrum that Jagger attempts.

Paul McCartney lifts moods Off the Ground

By PETER SHAUGER
Associate Editor

Paul McCartney has been producing happy and sappy, and yes, sometimes crappy music during his career, but only when listeners accept this can they enjoy and appreciate McCartney's music.

His latest album Off the Ground, gets off the ground with the song, "Off the Ground," a song about how little love it takes for new relationships to get off the ground.

On "Looking For Changes," McCartney takes his stab at anger concerning cruelty to animals for scientific experiments. His sentiment and music are in the right place, but his lyrics are sometimes hard to take seriously: "Well I'll tell you that we'll all be/ looking for changes/ changes in the way we treat our fellow creatures/ and we will learn how to grow." Okay Paul, now let's see some real anger.

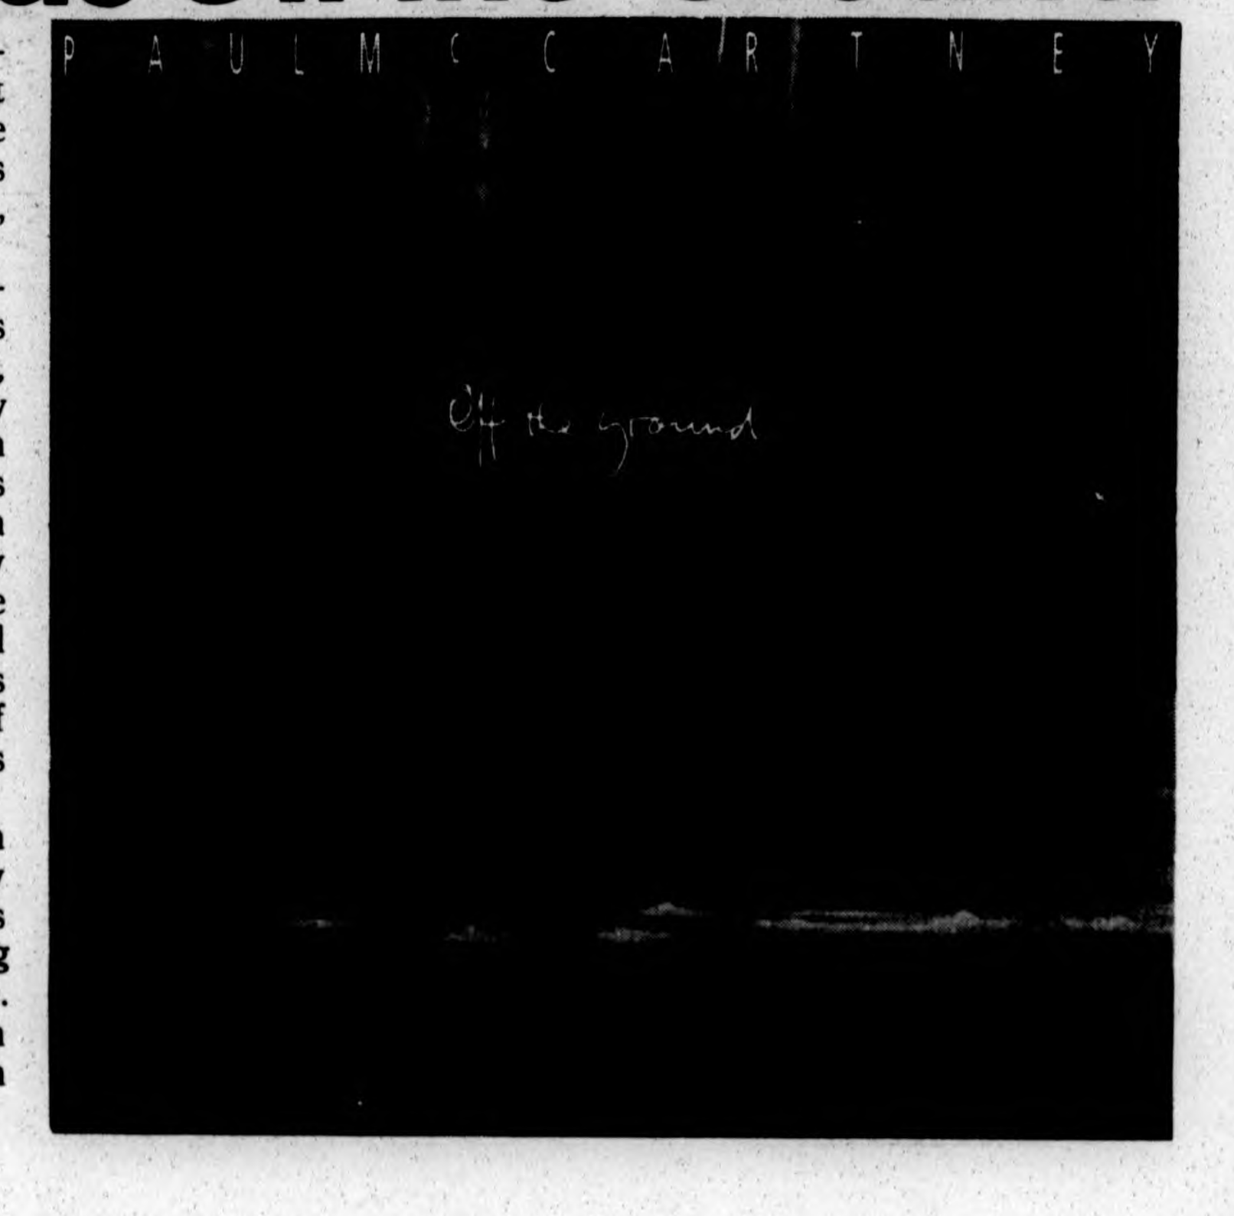
McCartney collaborates with Elvis Costello on "Mistress and Maid" and "The Lovers That Never Were," which balances the seemingly endless goofball McCartney lyrics. However, though the two musicians make beautiful music together, their collaborations seem to be lacking in the upbeat department. Though Costello has mastered the waltz, two waltzes might be more than this album needs. Less, Paul, can be so much more.

On a lighter note (staccato, I think), rumor has it that there is an invisible clause in the McCartney marriage vows which reads that on each album, Paul must include at least one track telling Linda how wonderful she is. The token "Linda is wonderful" song here is "I Owe It All To You" in which he sings about how he owes it all to her.

In "Hope Of Deliverance," the ever-optimistic McCartney sings of how "we live in hope of deliverance/from the darkness that surrounds us." The first release from the album, McCartney backs its simple message with a fun, happy beat.

McCartney uses the same musicians on Off The Ground as on his 1989 release Flowers In The Dirt, with the exception of a new drummer. Off The Ground has an all-around livelier attitude and is more consistent musically than Flowers In The Dirt, particularly because the band has had more time to work with each other, and partly because McCartney seems more focused as to what kind of music he should be producing as a rock-n-roller in his fifties.

Though due to his family-man nature, McCartney will probably never have any biting edge to his music, unless of course something owere to happen to lovely Linda. "Off The Ground" is a solid, often cheesy (in a good way) effort from a happy man.



'Day' traps Murray in time

By AARON NICODEMUS
Senior Reporter

Ever want to take back that one stupid comment, or have your day go exactly as planned, or get that elusive second chance? The "blessing" to do it all again may also be a curse; who wants to make the same mistake again?

Waking up in the same day, over and over, is the flimsy premise behind Bill Murray's latest offering, "Groundhog Day." Surprisingly, the movie works, but only because Murray is the star.

Murray plays Phil Connors, an abrasive, egotistical weather man for a TV station in Pittsburgh. For four years, he has been sent to rural western Pennsylvania to cover the annual "Punxsutawney Groundhog Day Celebration" on Feb. 2. Legend has it that the overgrown rodent can predict the arrival of spring by whether its shadow appears or not.

Traveling with Murray is his producer Rita (played by Andie MacDowell) and his cameraman (Chris Elliot of "The David Letterman Show"). Once he realizes that he is locked in a perpetual cycle of waking up at 6 a.m. on Groundhog Day in Punxsutawney, he immediately begins to take advantage of the situation.

Nothing he does is remembered the next day, so he has free license to do whatever he wants. He is arrested after a wild car chase down railroad tracks, he used information gained one day from a pretty local girl to seduce her the next and then he tries to kill himself in various ways, only to wake up the next morning to Sonny and Cher's "I Got U Babe."

Inevitably, Murray uses his new-found luck to win the heart of his beautiful producer Rita. In rehearsal after rehearsal, he looks for just the right combination to make the perfect date with her. Each time, she seems to sense the intentions, and he is rewarded with a slap in the face.

Only when Murray begins to think of how to use this gift for the good of everybody does he make headway with Rita. Yet even as he befriends all the townsfolk with his uncanny timing and heroic deeds, Murray never seems to lose his perpetual cynicism. He does not really care for these people, his eyes tell us, he only wants the girl. That alone makes most of the scenes funny.

Murray is at his best when he can confide in the viewer, saying "aren't all these people ridiculous?" with a motion or a look.

With Murray in peak form, however, "Groundhog Day" never accumulates into a full picture. Although the days are the same, the scenes appear more like miniskits than pieces of an entire work.

That is where "Groundhog Day" falls flat. The viewer may care about Murray, about MacDowell, and even about their romantic encounters, but never about the nagging questions. What caused the time-warp? Why does it only happen to him? And how does one escape it?

Maybe these questions are at worst, left unanswered and at best, left unasked. "Groundhog Day" captures vintage Murray shtick, and little else.

FAST FORWARD: Have you seen the billboards plastered up everywhere you look? Perhaps only if you ride SEPTA have you heard of "Amos and Andrew" starring Nicholas Cage and Samuel L. Jackson. Jackson plays a Pulitzer-prize winning novelist and a "thorn in the side of the white man" who is mistaken for a burglar in his own glitzy new home. Cage plays a convicted felon who is paid by the local police (Dabney Coleman) to hold Jackson hostage and somehow clean up the mess. Certain to be a less-than-subtle attack on racism and prejudice, "Amos and Andrew" opens today.

REWIND: Ever notice that almost every Stephen King novel has made it to the big screen? Then why is it that most of them stink? With rare recent exceptions ("Misery" is one), adaptations of King's work has made the phrase "read the book" more than a suggestion. But new video release "It," a novel that went to TV instead, is better than average. "It" keeps you on edge until the end, playing on our childhood fears with callous manipulation. Like most of King's work, we keep looking over our shoulders, expecting the "thing" to leap out of the sewer or from underneath the bed. Yet when we finally see the beast, it is usually a disappointment. "It" is better than some, but it is no "Carrie" or "Cujo." Read the book.

Star accentuates vocals

By COLEEN KENIREY
Entertainment Editor

The Cutting Edge

Having completed apprenticeships in two bands, Throwing Muses and the Breeders, Tanya Donelly had extensive back-up vocalist training under her belt before venturing out to formulate her own project, Belly.

In the former group, Donelly's stepsister Kristin Hersh was at the vocal forefront and in the latter, Kim Deal of the Pixies was in the spotlight. Belly combines Fred Abong on bass, Thomas Gorman on guitar and Chris Gorman on drums with Donelly at the focal point.

Her experience provides all of the tracks on Star, the band's debut vehicle, with a radiant glow. With her seasoned cords, Donelly displays an ability to stretch the high end of the vocal spectrum like a rubber band in a style that contains familiar subtleties. Although her voice alludes to everyone from Harriet Wheeler to Edie Brickell, at the same time it is uniquely Donelly's own. When she soars toward her upper vocal limits on "Witch," "Low Red Moon," "Full Moon, Empty Heart" and "Untogether," Donelly's vocals invoke the shrill, piercing intonations of Sinead O'Connor.

Star is not a replication of the Throwing Muses sound by any stretch of the imagination. Periodically, Star does slow down for the delicate and whispery "Witch" and "Full Moon, Empty Head" in which Donelly holds an amazingly long note. The band also takes a softer approach on the acoustic songs "Untogether" and "Star." Belly, however, does not descend into the darker, broodier mode which was characteristic of the Muses.

The offerings enter into a more outlandish realm with "Low Red Moon" which is disturbingly out of kilter at moments. Thomas Gorman's bizarre organ playing creates an eerie undertone that causes an irresistible urge to hum the theme to "The Munsters."

"Everyword" is an exotic diversion which creates images of a distant Arabian desert with its unusual instrumentation. The haunting melodies could charm a snake to slither out of its basket.

"Someone to Die For," which opens the CD, is a rhyme for rubber-walled nurseries featuring Donelly singing in a childlike tone above the backbeat of guitar chords which resemble a ticking clock.

The uncommon sounds interspersed throughout "Slow Dog" are similar to the odd twang noises of a science fiction film, and they add an interesting twist.

An additional mysterious effect is established in the finale, "Stay," by shimmering guitar notes which fade in and out as though played underwater. The lyrical images complete the sensory ilusion by echoing the sentiments of the guitar with "he grows as old as the sea/deep where the fishes are." This song is a sweetly romantic plea in which Donelly professes "I love him dear and I've loved him hundreds of thousands of years." The singer achieves some of her clearest and most appealing notes on this slowly drifting song.

The ultimate high points of Star are those in which the beats are freer to rock. "Angel" and "Dusted" are two such moments in which urgent guitar and unrelenting percussion vie for domination of the songs. "Slow Dog" and "Sad Dress" also display stronger rhythms accentuated by pulsating drums, courtesy of Chris Gorman. "Sad Dress" charts a spooky map of Donelly's vocal range by overlapping echoes of her highs and lows.

The outstanding tracks on Star are "Feed The Tree" and "Gepetto." "Feed The Tree" has recently become a mainstay on local radio with the imaginary lyrics: "they put silver where her teeth had been/baby silver-tooth she grins and grins/I know all of this and more/so take your hat off boy when you're talking to me/and be there when I feed the tree." This song is just a sampling of several treasures to be found on the CD.

Star is a strong initial effort for Belly. These musicians have effectively blended instrumental prowess with eloquent songwriting by Donelly. The obviously dominant component is her voice, which has finally been given deserved attention, but the music cannot be assigned the inferior role of vehicle for the singer's voice. These songs have a strength in their own right, although the more rock-oriented songs are certainly of a higher quality than those with less definition.

Belly is worthy of the positive critical attention they have received from publications such as Rolling Stone magazine and their first CD reveals a potential which they hopefully will continue to develop in new directions in the future. Tanya Donelly has come a long way from being in others' shadows. Belly will be performing Mar. 24 at the Theatre of the Living Arts and the show should not be missed.

Students perform masterful 'Line' rendition

By ERIC CHEUNG
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Tonight and tomorrow night, the Villanova Student Musical Theatre will be presenting "A Chorus Line" at the Haverford High School's Centennial Hall. It promises to be an incredible performance from an infant organization that has experienced success in recent years.

What is most entertaining about this organization is that these actors and actresses come from a variety of majors. Their academic concentrations may be on the liberal arts, business or engineering, but they all share a passion for drama. The Student Musical Theatre proves that if one has the desire to act and entertain, there is an outlet for him or her regardless of what he or she is studying. For "A Chorus Line," the individual talents of the group merge together in a compelling and satisfying performance.

Surprisingly enough, the concept of a student-run music theatre has been a recent one. Three years ago, Kristi Peyakovich and some of her friends decided to initiate this program to allow non-theatre majors a chance to perform. Of course they could audition for plays with the Villanova Theatre, but the competition was extremely high. The Student Musical Theatre was born to give more opportunities to undergraduate students who wanted to be involved in theatrical productions. This year the organization has gained more recognition with its mini-musicals and its talent show.

With the birth of a new student-run organization, the inevitable problems have emerged and have been handled. Kristi explained that the reason the musicals are performed at Haverford High School is due to the limited and uncomfortable seating in St. Mary's Auditorium. However, shuttle buses to and from Haverford have been provided to make the musicals more accessible to the Villanova students. Additionally, Kristi noted that professional musicians were hired for the pit orchestra. Because of time constraints, it can be difficult to find students at Villanova with the caliber to learn the music quickly.

Still, a better auditorium and a superb orchestra do not automatically ensure a successful performance. Here is where the dedication and the strength of the Student Musical Theatre shines. Kristi mentioned that the cast had to return to Villanova early from winter break to start rehearsing. Since then they have practiced for two to three hours every night. Having what amounted to a month and a half to learn this play, it is amazing how dazzling the cast can be. These actors and actresses really are motivated to give it their all. Of course, having some of the most musically talented people on campus does not hurt.

Choreographer Paul Aguirre's experience on Broadway provided much insight into the phenomenally famous musical, "A Chorus Line." The play is about dancers at an audition and what they have to go through to get a job on Broadway. They are not trying to get jobs as feature performers, but rather as background dancers or chorus members. For this reason, Aguirre explained, there really is no lead actor.

There are 17 principal parts who all work together as an ensemble. Aguirre said the musical shows how dancers must put their lives on the line to get the parts they want. He also added that this was a metaphor for everybody in life who takes chances when the odds are stacked against them.

Aguirre called it "an amazing show ... completely original." Fans have agreed over the years. In 1975, the show first began playing on Broadway. For over 16 years and 6,000 shows, it continued to play, making it the longest running show in Broadway history. The year of its debut, "A Chorus Line" won an astounding nine Tony Awards. Now Villanova is attempting to recreate the powerful performance. What is the result? It can be said that Student Musical Theater does justice to the legacy of "A Chorus Line."

Aguirre's description was not adequate preparation for the barrage of sounds, thoughts, sights, and emotions which the play evokes. From beginning to end, the audience is taken through the ordeal of dancers trying to get a part in a show. They all have their own reasons for coming, many because it is their livelihood. They come from all walks of life and from many different areas for one day in which their dreams and aspirations are dashed by the rejection of the director. This is more than the life of a dancer or an actor or a chorus member. It is all of our lives. We are these auditioners and they are us, for we all seek approval.

The play begins with the preliminary auditions for singers and

Planets chart new rap course

By MARK McCREARY
Staff Reporter

Any band whose three members' names are Butterfly, Doodle and Ladybug either have a lot of problems, or else are so far beyond conscientious that it is not even funny. You can assume that the latter is the case, and you can assume that these three peaceful artists that make up Digable Planets are as fresh as Dunkin' Donuts. And their first release, Reachin' (A New Refutation of Time and Space), is heading in the new direction that rap has been so thirsty for.

Those that are familiar with the work of Basehead are already prepared for what can be discovered in this new gem. For those that are not aware of the style, it is lackadaisical, spacey and dreamy "get really nice" music. It is rap, and it delivers an omnipresent bass line, and dope-fresh rap lyrics that are sure to tickle your groove bone (that is connected to your hip bone).

Actually, you have probably heard a little of Digable Planets' music, and just are not putting the tune and the name together. Their first single, "Rebirth of Slick (Cool Like Dat)," is all over the hip-hop airwaves, and for good reason. It flows along with the rest of the CD, so Reachin' is not one of those releases with just one good song. Not to say that the whole CD sounds the same, it is simply all on the same mental groove and is one that you are sure to chill with.

> The style is lackadaisical, spacey and dreamy.

Those crazy insects of Digable Planets write of peace, social awareness and know what they speak of. They are not emanating from this disc in order to preach to listeners, but to make listeners more aware. Amazingly, you find yourself exploring your mind, and wondering if you are really aware of the way things are.

One of the best tracks, "La Femme Fetal," speaks to pro-lifers, questioning what they would do in the situation of an unwanted pregnancy, without economic resources to care for the child. In no way is the song offensive to a pro-life person. It proposes that they survey every situation and not make assumptions of character before doing so. "Nickel Bag" does not speak of what urban lingo implies, but rather offers you a "nickel bag of funk."

The most refreshing aspect of this CD is the wonderful jazz that is laced throughout the songs. The samples, all of which are credited in the sleeve, keep the music flowing beautifully and do not chop it up. It is nice to see some of the credit that jazz deserves being delivered and put on such an acclaimed CD. Even the video of their first single, "Rebirth of Slick (Cool Like Dat)," gives a mellow atmosphere, with black and white film depicting a fitting blues/jazz atmosphere.

The vibe that this music gives off screams relaxed club music, so chances are that radio stations and MTV are going to be sending their tracks into heavy rotation. Keep the name Digable Planets in the back of your mind, because it is music that is likely to be around for quite a while. But if you do not want to wait around for your favorite boppin' Philly station to play it, retrieve Reachin' (A New Refutation of Time and Space) from your favorite music store.

'Nova Theatre play

by systematically exterminating the prisoners or, as they call them, the "Klaus." The group's acceptance of this activity overshadows any misgivings the individuals have. However, Bert Hopkins, portrayed stunningly by Brian A.D. Wilson, starts to harvest some second thoughts inside.

An educated man with a wife and kids, Bert is the most enlightened among the guards. He begins to find the entire operation both appalling and uncivilized. His mixed emotions culminate when a Nazi prisoner, Klaus Monien (Anthony M. Giampetro), takes Bert's gun and threatens to shoot him.

The other principal role is the chilling Perry Ranger, played with frightening realism by Amani Kuwasha Gethers. He comes from the violent streets of New York where he was sent to jail for killing another black man. Bert comes to the realization that Ranger is a crazy, blood-thirsty man who has become so filled with rage that killing has no meaning. Ranger is the guard who supports Operation Adolf enthusiastically. To Bert, Ranger represents all that he does not want to become.

The other guards are also changed by the ravages of warfare. As each reveals their individual stories, the audience learns more and more about why they act the way they do in the final scene.

Caldwell Scott (Kevin P. Mosley) comes from New Orleans where his father is a sharecropper. His hatred of his white landowner is enhanced by the Nazi presence. His sentiment soon becomes a desire to kill all white people when he returns home.

In contrast, Lenny Jordan (David Lee Hoxter) has no intention of coming home. The tolerance of the French people and the respect they have for blacks is very compelling and attractive to him. He no longer wants to face his old life back in America.

The funny man of the group, Clay Riddle (Jamaine Taylor), has some big plans for himself as a barber back in Boston. It is there, he feels, that black people are more accepted. Finally, there is Sidney Morgan (Dorden Bivings), who will return to Norfolk to help his father as an undertaken. In his town, the violence is so prevalent that undertakers are in demand.

Another part includes the compassionate and lovable Maizie (Irma Mason), a cafe owner who befriends the guards. Also, there is Major Crenshaw (William Rayhill) who, unlike many white officers, is accepting of the black people.

"The Ninth Wave" has many lessons for all people to learn. People must learn to understand each other. Violence must be abhorred at all costs for it is violence that breeds the hatred and destroys the understanding. "The Ninth Wave" will be playing Feb. 17 to Feb. 21.

Second We Walk volume redeems Genesis

By JOHN KAZMIERCZAK
Staff Reporter

With some trepidation, fans waited for Feb. 9, the revised release date for the second half of Genesis' latest live album set. Would The Way We Walk, Volume Two: The Longs feature the same lack of intensity, spontaneity and substance that characterized Volume One: The Shorts?

After experiencing the album, it is obvious that the gentlemen who performed on Volume Two bear almost no resemblance to the Collins, Rutherford, Banks, Stuermer and Thompson that gave us the canned-sounding, pop-hit fluff of Volume One.

The Way We Walk, Volume Two's differences, both in content and style, were readily apparent from its first song, a long, rambling compilation titled simply "Old Medley." This 20-minute track draws from nearly ancient Genesis material such as "The Musical Box" and "Firth of Fifth," both of which date back to the Peter Gabriel/Steve Hackett days of the early 1970s. Newer Genesis fans may find themselves completely unfamiliar with some of these songs.

> An extended-track format draws in, captures and involves the audience.

Stylistically, Phil and the boys seem much improved; they sound loose and relaxed, as if they are truly enjoying what they are playing.

Unlike its predecessor, Volume Two is an album with a distinctively dark side. This aspect becomes most evident during Thompson's driving, pounding percussion solo in "Domino Part Two," and through Collins' eccentric electronically altered vocals in "Home By The Sea." This is perhaps to be expected. Just as many of Genesis' shorter songs tend to be rather bouncy and cheerful, so do most of the longer works possess a melancholy, introspective or even grim tone.

Balancing out this seriousness are tracks such as the involving, animated "Driving The Last Spike" and the six-and-one-half minute "Drum Duet," a furious duel between percussionists Collins and Thompson. Fortunately, Volume Two never truly recaptures any of the giddiness or plasticity of the previous album.

Unquestionably, Volume Two's extended-track format allows Genesis to actualize its best in-concert talent and capture an audience, both mentally and emotionally. Collins, Rutherford and Banks are freer to improvise, to go off unhindered on musical tangents. This is simply impossible to do on their shorter, sub-six minute songs. Surprisingly, the homogeneity of track lengths never induces the feelings of tediousness present in Volume One.

Unfortunately for those who wish to recreate the concert as it was performed, there is no list of the songs in the original running order.

Volume Two proves to be an excellent antidote for Genesis' uncharacteristic mediocrity in Volume One, an album undoubtedly hurt by its odd marketing strategy. Collins, Banks, Rutherford, Steurmer and Thompson prove that they can recapture the dynamic intensity of their live performances when placed in the proper format.

TEMPLE UNIVERSITY - BUDAPEST, HUNGARY:
ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENTS IN EASTERN EUROPE
SUMMER 1993

T

THE PROGRAM
Temple University, in cooperation with Villanova University, is offering a six-credit summer study program, July 6 -August 10, 1993, in Budapest, Hungary. Our partner in Hungary is the International Management Center in Budapest. The program is intended for graduate and upper level undergraduate students in business and related fields. Attention will be focused on current economic, political and social trends in Eastern Europe (especially Hungary), as the countries of that region struggle to make the transition to an open market economy. The five-week program will include an orientation period in the US, followed by study in Hungary. Students will work with faculty from the International Management Center, as well as business and government leaders, to gain an understanding of the challenges and opportunities facing companies doing business in this part of the world. They will also be introduced to the rich cultural and historical heritage of the area, and how this background may work to shape future developments in the region.

CURRICULUM
Each student will be enrolled in two three-hour courses. For undergraduate students, the courses will be the following:

BA 201 - The Environment of International Business - This course will introduce participants to the challenges and opportunities inherent in operating across national boundaries. Special emphasis will be given to business trends and conditions in the emerging economies of Eastern Europe.

BA 394 - Special Topics in Business and Management - Students will be required to select topics for detailed study that will be conducted under the direction of the Temple faculty program coordinator.

Graduate students will enroll in the following courses:

EC 525 - Comparative Economic Systems (3 cr) - This course will analyze alternative economic models, with emphasis on western and emerging socialist economies of Eastern Europe. Current and future trends in each of these systems will be discussed.

BA 596 - Independent Study in Business and Management (3 cr) - BA 596 will be conducted under the same format as BA 394 described above.

FACULTY
The program is being taught under the academic supervision of Dr. James Portwood, Professor of Human Resource Administration at Temple University and Dr. James Klingler, Associate Professor of Management at Villanova University. In Hungary, courses will be taught by Dr. Klingler and faculty from the International Management Center. All faculty have considerable local and international experience, and excellent English skills. Guest lecturers will be drawn from the local, as well as expatriate, business community.

The application deadline is MARCH 15, 1993. To be considered for the program, students must complete the Temple University Summer Programs Application form and submit official transcripts for all university-level work completed to date. Students from institutions other than Temple and Villanova must also submit a non-refundable $20.00 application fee. A $100 non-refundable deposit which is applied towards program costs is due within two weeks of notification of acceptance to the program. For further information, contact Dr. James Klingler, Economics Department, 6443.

ENTERTAINMENT

By LYN MAHLER
Staff Reporter

Directors, producers and actors constantly strive to portray a fresh and enthralling story for their audience. Few succeed. The creators of "Untamed Heart" exist among those few.

As director, Tony Bill intertwines the acting talent of Christian Slater, Marisa Tomei and Rosie Perez with a stirring, innovative script, generating an intriguing storyline capable of entertaining the audience for the full hour and 45 minutes running time.

"Untamed Heart" focuses on the developing relationships between Marisa Tomei's ("My Cousin Vinny") character, Caroline; Christian Slater's ("Pump Up the Volume," "Heathers") character, Adam; and Rosie Perez's ("White Men Can't Jump") character, Cindy, who all work in the same diner.

Tomei portrays Caroline, an insecure, unlucky waitress hiding behind a boisterous facade. Perez's character, Cindy, plays a key role in the movie as Caroline's best friend and confidant. Slater, in a more serious role than past performances, depicts Adam as a shy, reserved and confused busboy hopelessly in love with Caroline.

Slater was quoted as saying about the surprisingly timid nature of his character: "Adam grew up in an orphanage and spent a large part of his life alone, so he doesn't easily relate to people. And the story that the nuns told him about how his parents died makes him feel special, but set apart. He feels different ... and alone."

Tomei observed Caroline's willingness to date Adam as a revelation in her character. The actress commented in a press release, "Looking at it from Caroline's point of view, the story is about letting go of her picture of who she is supposed to be with, and falling in love with the right person — who just happens to have been right under her nose."

Within the first half hour the movie picks up the pace, with a disappointingly predictable but graphic attack scene. Caroline walks home every night from the diner through a dark, unsafe part of town. One night, Adam rescues her from almost being raped, revealing his unconditional love for Caroline. This scene creates a major turning point in their relationship.

After the attack scene, the relationship between the two develops rapidly. They spend a greater amount of time together, divulging different aspects of their personalities and characters. Through the disclosures, the movie takes new twists and turns and loses its predictability.

FILE PHOTO

Marisa Tomei stars as Caroline in "Untamed Heart."

Filmed on location in Minneapolis, "Untamed Heart" depicts an authentic Minnesotan way of life. Bill decided not to build scenes specific for the movie, but rather to utilize existing scenery. The restaurant scenes were shot in the real Jim's Diner without any changes made for the movie. Tomei even hired a driver as a "dialogue coach" to perfect the Minnesotan accent.

Overall, this unique love story combines original characters with an innovative storyline, creating an original and engrossing movie. If you are in the mood for a good love story, "Untamed Heart" is definitely worth $6.

dancers. The director calls out names and each person has 30 seconds to prove his or her talent. Some make mistakes, some come off as confident, but all must bow to the arbitrary decision of the director, who decides who stays and who has to go.

After this first round, the director asks each dancer personal questions to help him get to know everyone better as he mulls over which dancer will make the final cut. This is truly the heart of the play — the stories of the dancers. They all have their own personalities, hopes and reasons for coming. Tales of child abuse, terrifying parents, plastic surgery, cruel teachers, rejection, low self-esteem and everything in between spew forth from each dancer's lips as story flows into story. No matter what each individual has to offer, they all have faced hardships in their life and endured.

The drama in real life also is a worthy one to share. These Villanovan actors and actresses have bonded with one another throughout their rehearsals. These people truly do care for each other in real life. It is special to watch such a close group perform together. This is definitely a play one should not miss.

The cast includes: Ben Alfonsi, Mary Grace Bontempo, Keedra Carroll, T.C. "The Litterbox" hits duPont

By MICHEL DAVIES
Staff Writer

It seems that every year, right about this time, college hoops begins to lose the early season boredom. No longer are the top teams such as North Carolina and Indiana playing dismal opponents. Instead, intra-conference play heats up with marquee matchups such as Michigan/Indiana and Georgia Tech/North Carolina.

This is also the case here at Villanova. No longer are we playing teams such as Vermont and Lehigh; instead, we have moved on to more exciting and difficult opponents such as Seton Hall and Georgetown. But one clear difference sticks out between a Seton Hall/Villanova game and a Georgia Tech/Florida State game — the fans.

Here at Villanova, the fans seem almost non-existent. Occasionally they stand toward the end of the game, but all too often Wildcat fans can be found sitting on their hands. This often leads to a "home-court disadvantage" for Head Coach Steve Lappas and the rest of the 'Nova team.

But recently a new "cult" of hard-core fans has begun to emerge at 'Nova basketball games. Perhaps you may have seen them. Frequently adorning themselves with multi-colored wigs, blue and white face paint and blue "V's" on their chests, these dedicated Wildcat students have become an integral part of the student section ever since Midnight Madness.

> You look at teams like Duke and Carolina who have these incredible cheering sections and you realize why they are such great teams every year.
> Alex Scofield, member of "The Litterbox"

"It first started at Midnight Madness," said Jon Passman, one of the first members of the group. "I figured that since it was Halloween that I should get dressed up ... we've been wearing the wigs and paint ever since."

Calling themselves the "Litterbox," the members of this cult have begun to rally support for a new basketball club at Villanova.

"We envision something more creative [than the current basketball club], like 'The Antlers' at Missouri or 'Orange Crush' at Illinois," said Passman.

This new club would seek to increase the amount of fan support at games and increase the amount of overall noise in the arena, making both duPont Pavilion and the Spectrum tougher places to play for opposing teams.

"You look at teams like Duke and Carolina who have these incredible cheering sections, and you realize why they are such great tems every year," said Alex Scofield, a member of the soon-to-be "Litterbox."

Another advantage that the "Litterbox" could add is an increase in successful recruiting. Perhaps high school stars such as Rasheed Wallace and Jason Lawson would see an enthusiastic student body and be willing to forget about 'Nova's losing record.

"Who knows, maybe if recruits see that this is a serious basketball school, and that we have great fans, they will want to come here," said Passman.

Whether or not "The Litterbox" is recognized by the administration and the Athletic Department, their example should be followed by other fans. Perhaps an increase in fan support will be just what the team needs to become dominant on the home court.

eighth.

Both Sumner and Nason might have enjoyed faster times had it not been for the race's heavy amount of traffic, which forced most of the top men in the field to expand significant energies to just maintain place.

Said Nason, "It was a tough race, and everyone was fighting for position. I tried to get out three times in the last lap, but there were a lot of people in the way, and I was still blocked at 150 meters from the finish. In the last 60 meters I got free, but then it was too late.

Despite the misfortune, Nason's finishing time marked a personal best in the event. However, he was still left dissatisfied.

"One-fifty-one is good, but not good enough," said Nason. I felt I could have run 1:49.

After Iowa, Sumner is undoubtedly also ready to run in the 1:40's. In the meantime, he continues to be, for the second straight year, the strongest and most consistent half-miler on a Villanova team deep in .top middle-distance runners.

For the fourth consecutive season, Sumner will also head into the Big East Championships as a central factor in the Wildcats' relay hopes.

Sophomore Chuck Silvester, the team's top quarter-miler, also enters the Big East as a key relay man for the Cats. In Iowa, Silvester had his final race preparation for Syracuse when he ran the 800-yard event, finishing fourth in 1:11.80. Lamont Smith of Blinn College took the victory in 1:08.94.

Distance men Terrence Mahon, a senior, and Dave Hartman also signaled readiness for the Big East by turning in strong efforts at Iowa State. In his first competition of the indoor season, Mahon clocked a solid 8:15 to finish eighth in the 3000 meter seven seconds behind winner Jason Bunston of Arkansas. Hartman, meanwhile came in 12th in 8:23, three seconds under his previous personal best.

Setting a personal best in the meet as well was freshman Scott Whiteman, who ran a 4:13 mile to Finish 20th in that event. Whiteman's first collegiate mile. Also in the mile, sophomore David Seung took 26th in 4:16.

second game. Junior floor general Joey Brown missed the Providence game after an ankle injury in practice. G'town seemed to be at a loss without him.

8. Miami (5-7, 8-12)

Constantin Popa continues to evolve into a solid center. In his two games this week, the big center had 40 points, 11 rebounds, and five blocks. The Hurricanes have developed a pattern of winning at home and losing on the road. This week they beat Boston College 75-71 at home and lost at Connecticut, 88-72. The 'Canes currently have four players averaging in double figures.

9. Providence (4-8, 11-9)

The Providence Friars completed their sweep of Georgetown by beating the Hoyas for the second time in a week, 68-50. Michael Smith has grabbed double figure rebounds in his last nine games. Versus the Hoyas, Franklin Western had a career high with 21 points, and Tony Turner also pitched in with 16.

1. Georgetown (10-3,16-5)

The Hoyas went 2-0 this past week, with victories against Boston College and a 90-88 triple OT win against Miami. The Hoyas were led by Big East Player of the Week Leni Wilson, a senior forward. In the two games, Wilson registered 45 points, 25 boards and six steals.

1. Miami (10-3,15-6)

The Hurricanes had a 1-2 week with losses to Georgetown and Maryland but a win over UConn. The Lady 'Canes were led by Big East Rookie of the Week Holly Rilinger, a freshman guard. In the three games, Rilinger averaged 14.8 points and four assists.

3. Connecticut (10-4,15-6)

The Huskies played to a 1-1 week, with a loss to Miami and a victory over Boston College. In the loss, Connecticut was led by senior center Kathy Ferrier, who had 16 points. Tonya Boone added 12. In the win, Jamelle Elliot registered 19 points and 13 rebounds and Rebecca Lobo added 17 points and 16 boards.

3. Pittsburgh (7-6,12-9)

Pitt ended the week at 1-1, with a loss to Villanova and a win against St. John's. In the victory, Jonna Huemrich scored 29 points to lead the Panthers. In the defeat, Huemrich scored 14, although she was just 3-17 from the field. This week, Pitt takes the floor against Seton Hall and at Boston College.

3. Providence (7-6,12-9)

The Friars posted a 2-0 week record to move into a tie with Pitt and Villanova in the Big East. They knocked off the Express by a score of 88-82 and then defeated Syracuse 74-65. In the first win, Providence was led by Lucie Fontanella, who scored 24 points going 9 for 12 from the field. In the victory over Syracuse, Stefanie Goettsche led the Friars with 17 points.

3. VILLANOVA (7-6,11-10)

7. Seton Hall (7-7,13-9)

The Pirates had a 2-0 week to reach the .500 mark in Big East play with victories over Villanova and Syracuse. In the victory over 'Nova, the Pirates were led by Dawn Johnson, who poured in a career high 28 points and had eight rebounds. Against the Orangewomen, guard Jodi Brooks led the team with 20 points.

8. St. John's (4-9,10-11)

The Express posted an 0-2 week and have now lost four consecutive games. On Feb. 10, they stumbled to Providence 88-82. In the game, Coleta Brown led the Express with 20 points and 13 rebounds. Then on Feb. 13, St. John's fell to Pitt by a score of 60-54. In this contest, Brown again led the way with 21 points and nine boards. This week the Express will play host to our own Wildcats and then will travel to Syracuse.

9. Boston College (2-11,8-13)

With losses to UConn and Georgetown, the Eagles have now dropped eight in a row and are out of contention. In the loss to the Huskies, Sarah Behn and Kerry Curran had 15 points apiece to lead B.C. In the second defeat, Behn scored 23 and added 10 assists.

9. Syracuse (2-11,4-17)

Meanwhile, the Orangewomen were at it again with another 0-2 week. Losses to Providence and Seton Hall pushed the S.U. women down to last. In the loss to P.C., Erin Kenneally led with 21 points. In the second defeat, Holly Oslander led with points and 10 boards. Next week, the Orangewomen play against Georgetown and Providence.

Lady Cats

Particularly vital to the Wildcat scoring efforts were centers Jennifer Maga, who led the Cats with 16 points, and Karen Connell, who had 12. Splitting time at the center position, Maga and Connell have become increasingly important elements of the Cats' success as the season has progressed.

"Karen is more mobile, more offensive-minded; while Jennifer is more of a rebounder and a defensive player," said Perretta. "When they're both playing well we can play them together. When we do that, we're big inside and we really give people problems."

Though Seton Hall pushed Villanova to the limit, 'Nova's game at Pitt three days earlier was not nearly as trying. The game was the first of three straight away games for the Lady Cats, and they kicked off the road trip in grand style.

"I thought we played one of our most defensive games of the year," said Perretta. "Offensively, we moved the ball real well."

Midway through the first half, 'Nova's reserve point guard Sue Glenning hit a three-pointer which broke an 11-all tie. From then on, the Wildcats proved to be a superior species to the Panthers, pummelling Pitt until the game's very end.

Going into the second half leading 29-21, a Connell jump shot gave 'Nova a double-digit lead. Trailing by 14 with four minutes to go, Pitt began a desperation tactic to exploit one of 'Nova's biggest weaknesses: foul shooting.

It was to no avail. The Panthers amassed 17 team fouls in the second half, and 'Nova kept on hitting the free throws. In one stretch, the Cats hit 14 consecutive foul shots, including 11 by freshman Denise Dillon, who led Villanova with 21 points.

The Lady Cats face their toughest home game of the year when Miami comes to duPont tomorrow at 2 p.m. For the Wildcats, it will be a chance to prove that they belong among the top teams in the Big East.

"I'm convinced that [the Wildcats] are the best team in the league," said Perretta. "If they come to play, it's going to be difficult for us to beat them because of their athletic ability."

Goddard wins mile at Millrose Games

By SEAN KELLY
Staff Reporter

Villanova's lengthy and prosperous campaign of tune-up meets prior to four weekends of championship competition came to an end last weekend. The Wildcats triumphantly ended their brief stay at the Iowa State Track and Field Classic at Iowa State University.

This meet, as well as the Syracuse University Open on Feb. 6, witnessed the addition of even more NCAA Provisional qualifiers to the already overflowing list of qualified runners.

The big story of the last two weekends really came out of 'Nova's appearance at the Chemical Bank Millrose Games back on Feb. 5.

While the rest of the Wildcat squad was headed towards upstate New York for the other scheduled competition, seniors Cheri Goddard, Nnenna Lynch and Chris Gentile each traveled to Madison Square Garden for one of the city's more recognizable events of the year.

All three Wildcats are New York natives, which added to the excitement of witnessing Villanova's strong showing at the games.

Gentile and Lynch ran extremely strong races, finishing third and fourth respectively, with times of 4:48.47 and 4:48.71.

Goddard, who already held the lone individual, automatic qualifying time for the nationals, handed in her second automatic standard qualifying time of the season. As the obvious crowd favorite, Goddard made a late surge in the last lap to outsprint Fordham's Lauren Gubicza in a personal best time of 4:41.08.

"Right now, Cheri Goddard is running just as strong as she has ever run. She's the one who is really carrying us right now," said Head Coach Marty Stern. "Goddard electrified the people there. There was a big roar and a lot of cheering when she came from behind to beat Gubicza."

"You love to see seniors do this," said Stern. "Sometimes seniors don't. But in Cheri's case, she right now is motivating the rest of the athletes just from what she is doing on the track. She's motivating me and the other coaches too."

"Excluding the mile race that Cheri was in, we'll always compete in that. I think that we've seen the last of the relays for college teams and for sure, Villanova," admitted Stern. "It's become a professional meet. Our basketball team doesn't have to play against the Knicks so why should we?"

> Right now, Cheri Goddard is running just as strong as she has ever run. She is the one who is really carrying us right now.
> Head Coach Marty Stern

Heading into the championship portion of the season, the entire team is feeling very confident. This team is as good an organization that Villanova has ever had nationally. The Trackwire NCAA Track and Field Top 20 published earlier in the week placed the Wildcats second behind a powerful Louisiana State University squad.

At this point in the season, the chances of gaining an NCAA crown probably could not look much brighter. The team will be sending about 11 out of 14 athletes on scholarships to the Hoosier Dome for the Nationals and this, as Stern contests, "is almost unheard of."

Villanova's first championship competition is this weekend at Syracuse University for the Big East title. In the last 10 years, the 'Nova indoor track team has only failed to win this meet twice. With the tremendous amount of talent, depth and confidence on the 1993 team, the Cats should have little trouble continuing their reign as the dominating force of the conference.

Lacrosse looks to '93 season

By MICHAEL DeBLASI
Staff Reporter

The 1993 edition of the Villanova men's lacrosse team is preparing to attack its 11th season under Head Coach Randy Marks.

This year's squad will be looking to improve last season's 7-7 record, when the Cats lost leading scorer Sean Haggerty and goalie Brian Kash for virtually the entire season with severe knee injuries.

Though the Cats lost 12 seniors to graduation, including the electrifying Haggerty, a solid nucleus remains featuring all-American candidate Kash, who is fully recovered and ready to star in goal this season.

Kash, a senior tri-captain, looked sharp in the fall season with stellar play in several games, including a tie with defending national champion Princeton. He has also been in top-notch form this pre-season. His performance will be vital to 'Nova's chances of returning to the national top-20 scene, a position last held in 1991.

Fellow tri-captains, defensemen Mike Buono and Brendan McGovern, will provide leadership and further solidify the defense. Buono is an intense player with a premier work ethic who makes his physical presence felt every game. McGovern's complementary play features a good knowledge of the game and strong stickhandling abilities.

Junior Bob Dunn, a transfer from Colgate, also will be counted on at the defensive-midfielder position.

The bulk of 'Nova's offense will be generated by senior attackman Sol Mahoney and junior midfielders Scott Chisholm and Rick Bontatibus, two former high school all-Americans who could be collegiate all-Americans before their careers are over.

Mahoney is a rugged veteran with a knack for scoring tough goals. Chisholm is a talented player who makes use of his speed all over the field. Bontatibus, last season's leading scorer, is new to the midfielder position, having been moved from attack to better utilize his outstanding athletic abilities at both ends of the field. These "three amigos" have been impressive and look primed to supply 'Nova's offensive firepower.

Junior Ian Hinchcliffe, a fiesty player who has improved daily, and freshman Craig Skornovaka should see significant opportunity on offense as well.

Another player who figures heavily in the Wildcats' plans for success is senior John Michener. Michener, a defensive-midfielder, is an explosive player in 'Nova's transition game. Though hampered with a thigh injury during the pre-season, he should be 100 percent for the season opener.

The Cats made great strides toward top-20 recognition with last Saturday's impressive showing, a hard-fought 9-8 loss against perennial national power Maryland. The scrimmage was fierce throughout, and 'Nova sent notice to the Terps that they possess the ability and desire to compete with the big boys.

This was an important test for the Cats as they prepare for a grueling 14-game schedule featuring eight top-20 opponents. The laxmen will need to display the same type of hard-working, determined effort that they have exemplified in practice and scrimmages, in the hopes of receiving a first-ever invitation to the NCAA post-season tournament.

The final tuneup for the Cats will be tomorrow when they host Salisbury State in a 1 p.m. scrimmage at Villanova Stadium. The regular season begins with a Feb. 28th showdown at Virginia.

Athlete of the Week

Cheri Goddard

This week the Villanovan and the Wildcat Club recognize women's indoor track runner Cheri Goddard. In the Millrose Games at Madison Square Garden Feb. 5, Goddard claimed first place in the college mile event with a time of 4:41.08. In her come-from-behind victory in the mile, Goddard beat the NCAA automatic standard qualifying time for the second time this season. Not far behind Goddard, her 'Nova teammates Chris Gentile and Nnenna Lynch finished third (4:48.47) and fourth (4:48.71), respectively.

Swimmers finish season a perfect 9-0

By ED WASIELEWSKI
Sports Editor

Win, win, win.

The 22nd-ranked Villanova women's swimming and diving team upended conference rivals Miami and Syracuse Feb. 13 in preparation for this week's Big East Championships, improving their mark to a perfect 9-0.

The tourney-bound Wildcats received key performances once again from their veterans en route to defeating the Hurricanes 67-44 and 'Cuse 89-24 in a tri-meet at Syracuse.

Senior Mary Dowling provided the leadership in the team's season finale while registering three second-place finishes in the 1000 free (10:32.50), the 500 free (4.58.71), and the 200 free (1:53.83). Sophomore Meaghan McCaffrey and freshman Eileen Rothenback also contributed to 'Nova's victory, each notching two first-place finishes.

"The key for this meet was Mary Dowling leading the way," said Head Coach Chuck Horton. "[Meaghan] McCaffrey and [Eileen] Rothenback also did a nice job for the team."

McCaffrey found success in the sprint races, winning the 50 free in 24.17 and the 100 free in 52.83. Rothenback won convincingly in the 200 I.M. in 2:08.50, beating her opposition by nearly four seconds, and in the 200 backstroke, establishing a new pool record at Syracuse in 2:04.17.

The Cats had four other first-place finishes with Lisa Flood capturing the 200 breaststroke and Tara Ryan winning the 200 fly. 'Nova also won two relay events, the 400 medley relay and the 400 free relay, establishing Villanova's second pool record of the day with a 3:35.31 finish.

With the clean sweep of Miami and Syracuse, these 1992-93 Cats wrapped up the regular season with their first-ever undefeated season and are now preparing for the Big East Championships and the upcoming NCAAs.

The Cats have six swimmers who have already qualified for the NCAAs, including Flood, McCaffrey, Dowling, Rothenback, Tammy Kouser and Sarah Dykstra.

"I am very proud of this team," said Horton. "This team has faced many challenges and met every one of them."

After an unprecedented perfect season, Horton and the Cats have high hopes going into this week's Big East Championships.

Ice Cats beat ECAC foe Wentworth, 7-5

By JONATHAN PASSMAN
Staff Reporter

The Ice Cats' playoff hopes are on life support but are still alive. Needing a win last weekend, Villanova skated into the home stretch, beating ECAC South foe Wentworth Institute of Technology (WIT) Feb. 13 but losing to Rhode Island 4-1 Feb. 14 in a non-conference struggle.

With a mere three games left this season — two of them in conference play, the playoff picture is cloudy but still visible.

For any shot at the playoffs, the Cats had to have the win against WIT. Like their battle last November, this one was a shootout. WIT had the only goal in the first period, but both teams came out firing in the second, scoring a combined seven goals to tie the game at four.

In the third period, Villanova outshot WIT 12-5 and netted three more goals to take a 7-4 lead. But WIT scored a late goal to make the final score 7-5.

Six different players scored for the Ice Cats, led by junior John Demers with two goals and sophomore Ryan Stattenfield with a goal and three assists. Freshman Dan Nadeau made 20 saves for the Ice Cats.

"We played all right in the first two periods, but we really came together in the third period," said Head Coach Pat Ferrill.

Rhode Island, the 10th-ranked club team in the nation, was not Villanova's sweetheart on Valentine's Day. Although Villanova outshot the Rams 36-25 and 26-13 after two periods, they just could not score. The Rams took a 1-0 lead into the third period, and once Villanova tied it on freshman Chris Paquette's goal, Rhode Island reeled off three unanswered goals for the victory. Freshman Mike Kelly had 21 saves in the defeat.

"I don't think they were physically better, but we were unlucky and made some mental mistakes," said Stattenfield.

"We ran into a very hot goaltender," said Ferrill. "They may be a club team, but they could easily hold their own in the ECAC. They were tough."

The Ice Cats' playoff hopes rest against Wesleyan tonight on the road, and the rematch on Feb. 27 at home. If they lose either, then they must start again next year. The Ice Cats also play at Roger Williams tomorrow afternoon to a non-conference battle.

"If we execute our game plan against Wesleyan, we will be successful," said Perrill.

1. St. John's (9-3, 14-6)

In a game against what might be considered their toughest competition in the league right now, the Redmen defeated Boston College by a score of 65-61. With this latest win, the Johnnies lay claim to having three consecutive undefeated seasons at their home court, Alumni Hall. In his two games this past week, Shawnelle Scott had 29 points and 18 boards.

2. Seton Hall (8-4, 18-6)

Terry Dehere led the Pirates to victory Feb. 13 over Villanova in a close game that came down to the wire. The senior registered 24 points and Arturas Karnishovas pitched in with another 15. Dehere was 2-6 from three point land, including one in overtime which iced the victory for the Hall, 65-59.

3. Pittsburgh (7-5, 15-5)

The Pitt Panthers rebounded from a loss to Seton Hall by winning against Illinois, 95-79. Chris McNeal poured in a career high 30 points en route to the victory. Eric Mobley and Jerry McCullough also contributed 14 points apiece as the Panthers shot .556 from the floor. McNeal is fourth in the Big East in rebounding with 8.9 r.p.g.

4. Boston College (7-5, 15-5)

Boston College dropped two conference games to St. John's and Miami this week, dropping them in the standings to third, tied with Pittsburgh. It seemed as if Bill Curley was a one man show, as he registered 31 points and 16 rebounds for the two games. Curley was aided by Gerrod Abram's 10 points per game, but both Howard Eisley and Malcolm Huckaby failed to reach double figures in either contest. Curley seems to be making his pitch for the NBA with a career year: .906 free throw percentage, 16.7 p.p.g. and close to eight rebounds per game.

5. Connecticut (7-6, 11-6)

The UConn Huskies won back-to-back Big East games for the first time this season by beating Villanova 82-62 and Miami 88-72. Scott Burrell had 15 points and 13 boards versus 'Nova and 17 points and 10 rebounds against the Hurricanes. Sophomore Donyell Marshall is second in the conference in scoring with 18.2 p.p.g. and fourth in rebounding with 8.6 per game.

6. Syracuse (6-7, 14-6)

The Orangemen have been inactive all week since they defeated the Georgetown Hoyas last Monday. Syracuse hosted UConn on this past Monday night, losing 80-76. These two teams have decided seven out of their last eight games by four points or less. Conrad McRae leads the league with 3.1 blocks per game, and Adrian Autry is second in steals with 2.30 per game.

7. Georgetown (5-7, 12-8)

The Hoyas have hit the skids. They are in the midst of their first-ever five game Big East losing streak. They lost both games this week versus Providence and Syracuse, shooting just 35 percent from the field in the

Villanova -vs- Providence
Site: duPont Pavilion
Saturday, Feb. 20, 8 p.m.
TV: None Radio: 89.1 WXVU

The Providence College Friars will face the Wildcats tomorrow night at the Pavilion. This game will match the conference cellar dwellers. The teams rank ninth and 10th respectively in conference play.

The Friars, coached by Rick Barnes, are currently 4-8 in the Big East Conference, 12-8 overall. Despite winning at Georgetown two weeks ago, Providence remains a terrible road team. They are 4-21 in their last 25 conference road games.

Providence has been an extreme disappointment in conference because of an inconsistent backcourt which has been plagued by turnovers, poor shooting and lack of cohesion. The Friars have been unstable in the backcourt ever since the graduation of NCAA steals leader and current Milwaukee Buck starting point guard Eric Murdock.

Senior Tony Turner, a three-point marksman, is a total streak shooter. He lit it up back in January against the Cats, with a game high 21 points.

Shooting guard Robert Phelps, a top five scorer in the history of New York City high school hoops, has not upped his level of play to big-time college caliber. His shooting percentage is among the worst in conference play.

Coach Rick Barnes brought in Juco transfer Abdul Abdullah to shore up the backcourt. Thus far, he has added to its instability.

The lone bright spot in the jumbled Friar backcourt is freshman Michael Brown. He logged 13 points in Providence's win against the Cats.

Providence's strength lies in its frontcourt. The junior trio of Michael Smith, Dickey Simpkins and Troy Brown may be the most physically imposing line in the conference.

The Friars as a team lead the Big East in rebounding and rebound margin. Smith pulls down almost 12 per game, while Simpkins averages nearly eight per game.

Despite his limited numbers, Troy Brown probably has the most finished inside game. He lacks focus on the court at times, though. Simpkins and Smith are hustling aggressive performers.

Providence topped Villanova 77-66 in late January. Villanova started out sluggish, failed to attack the Friar defense, and failed to grab a rebound the entire night; PC outrebounded the Cats by 17.

Villanova was not in sync. The Cats should register a win tomorrow night if the level of effort matches the level displayed against Seton Hall.

The Cats should look to remain competitive on the boards, pressure the Friar guards when Abdullah is on the bench and look to be patient when running the motion offense. Too many times the Cats go one and out.

'Nova falls to Seton Hall in O.T.

By BOB TRAVISANO
Assistant Sports Editor

The night was crisp out of doors, but inside the fans had the burning desire of an upset to keep them warm. A visiting powerhouse was the perfect conquest to turn around a floundering team's season. The opponent was nationally-ranked and provided an overdue notch in the belts of a team in disarray.

Well, it did not happen. It never will this season. At least not at Villanova. Many people offer explanations on the "state of the Wildcats," but there are few valid reasons why this team is 8-12 and only 3-9 in Big East play.

Let us focus now on how instead of why. Without a doubt the team played an inspired game. It opened up the game with a 13-5 run by employing tough defense and precision shooting. Team captain Lance Miller was on, with 19 points, and a host of others provided offense: Kerry Kittles threw in nine, as did James Bryson, and Arron Bain added eight.

With over four minutes to go in the first half, the Cats scored their last points of the period on a free throw by Miller. The Pirates began to pick away at the seven point deficit. When the buzzer rang to end the first half, the score was 22-21 in favfor of the Wildcats. The whole half proved to be a give-and-take with each team only retreating slightly with the othere's advance.

Seton Hall came out of the locker room a new team. They took over the game for the next several minutes amassing a 10-point lead. 'Nova kept it close with a different lineup.

"We came back from a 10-point deficit with a team of midgets. We never had that lineup on the floor before," said Head Coach Steve Lappas.

It consisted of Haynes, Eberez, Kittles, Bain and Miller. This seemed like an ultra-quick lineup but it proved to be ineffective against the best player in the Big East, Terry Dehere. As the game wore on, it became the Terry Dehere Show. He took over the game and made it Seton Hall's. However, the home team would not bow out, yet.

With the game winding down, the Cats were down by three and only nine seconds remained. The team had all its best three point shooters on the floor, but when no play could develop, 'Nova went to its franchise, the bread and butter, Miller.

We played great defensively. They played great defensively. It was a defensive struggle. Obviously, it had an effect on us in O.T.

Head Coach Steve Lappas

This man was the Moses of his team, the one to take them to the promised land. Miller drained a three at the buzzer that sent the game into overtime.

Overtime was a different story. Dehere scored half of his team's 12 points, including a three-pointer which sealed the coffin for the Wildcats, as they lost, 65-59.

"We played great defensively. They played great defensively. It was a defensive struggle. Obviously, it had an effect on us in O.T.," said Lappas.

"I'm not just saying this because I'm at Villanova, but they're in every game. 'Nova plays so hard and so well, it's tough to catch a break," said Seton Hall Head Coach P.J. Carlesimo, who was grateful to get by 'Nova.

Maybe this close loss will provide a shot in the arm for 'Nova, as it realizes that it can still hang with the tougher competition. Or it could be the last straw.

'Nova played an overmatched Hofstra team Feb. 11. This was probably the great confidence builder which allowed the Cats to stay with the Pirates for so long. This game provided a showcase for all the freshman talent on the team.

The final result as a 92-54 massacre. The three frosh who hold the future in their hands all scored in double figures, as Rosco Harris had 18 points, Kittles had 15, and Eric Eberz threw in 13. The high hand for the night was Bryson with 19 points.

A winning season is not out of reach for the Wildcats.

Threre are a few "gimmes" left on the schedule, and if the seniors provide the right leadership, an NCAA berth might not be out of reach.

Recruiting Update: The Philadelphia Public league semifinals are set. Both Villanova recruits, Jason Lawson and Rasheed Wallace, will be playing. The semis will be played this weekend at the Civic Center. Check the Daily News for tipoff times. Wallace earned McDonald's all-America honors, Lawson did not. Lawson added UNLV to his list of schools. UNLV does not need size or anything? According to Dick Weiss, there is a sense of urgency for the Cats to sign a Philly big man. Also, Wallace and Lawson were invited to Magic Johnson's All-Star Classic in Detroit. A question to ponder: does Lappas' and Villanova's basketball future ride on Wallace's college decision? It might.

Lady Cats split road games

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Assistant Sports Editor

Yes, there is a Villanova varsity basketball team with a winning record. The Cats split a pair of road games this week, bringing their record to 11-10 (7-6 Big East).

No, the women's basketball team could not pull off a win against Seton Hall, either. On the same day that the men's team lost to the Pirates in O.T., the women fell victim to a Seton Hall surge in the waning minutes of the game and lost 70-69. But the women claimed victory in their road game against Pitt, prevailing in an easy 70-53 win.

The Cats traveled to beautiful East Orange, N.J. Feb. 13 to face Seton Hall in a matchup between two of the Big East's hottest teams. 'Nova had gone 6-1 in its previous seven games, and the Pirates were hitting their stride as well.

"We were very fatigued at the end of the game," said Head Coach Harry Perretta. "We had four kids with the flu going into the game, and we played very well going into the last five minutes."

After surging late in the first half, the Wildcats maintained a comfortable lead for most of the second half. However, Seton Hall's Dawn Johnson capped off a 28-point performance by scoring 10 points in the game's final five minutes.

Quintana leads 'Nova runners

By LARRY LANZA
Staff Reporter

Sophomore Louie Quintana reached the four-minute mark in the mile at the Feb. 8 Iowa State Track Classic and, in so doing, affirmed that he will indeed be a contending force in the NCAA Championship.

Equally important for the Villanova men's track team, the Iowa meet saw junior Mike Going and sophomores Ken Nason and Dave Hartman come down to personal best times in their respective events.

Quintana's new personal best of 4:00.64 in Iowa now puts him on the brink of breaking the four-minute barrier, while Going's blocking of 4:06.66 indicates that he might become the next Wildcat to begin a march on that mark.

A four-minute performance seemed unlikely for either Quintana or any of the other competitors in the mile at Iowa as the leaders of the event came through the three/four mark of the race in the relatively slow time of 4:02. However, there the pace rose to a higher level. As a small lead group containing Quintana began a kick for the finish.

From that group Quintana emerged to take the lead 50 meters from the finish. Only Marcel Laros of the University of Texas — El Paso was able to match Quintana down the stretch, and just before the finish, the UTEP runner passed ahead to win by half a second. Following six seconds behind the runner-up Quintana was Going, who finished in eighth.

Afterwards, Quintana compared his race to the last time he ran as fast, when he ran a 3:59-mile equivalent in a 1500-meter outdoor race last spring at the Razorback Invitational in Arkansas.

"Overall, during the race I felt great. Even before the race I felt ready to run fast because my training was done so well," Quintana said.

When asked if a four-minute mile was on his mind heading into the race, Quintana admitted, "Every time I go out there I believe I'm subconsciously thinking four-minutes. Realistically, I knew I had a chance this time."

Continued Quintana, looking ahead to the upcoming weeks, "I think I have a few fast races in me. I know there's a sub-four mile lurking out there."

This weekend, in the Big East Conference Championships, Quintana faces four races, two of which will be in relays. Therefore, the high volume of racing in that meet will probably postpone Quintana's four-minute pursuit to the later weeks of the season.

Two other relay men Villanova will be counting on heavily this weekend in Syracuse are senior Brad Sumner and the sophomore Nason. Both confirmed solid levels of fitness this past weekend by running respective times of 1:50.89 and 1:51.00 in the 800 mi. in a race won in 1:48 by Savieri Ngidhi of Blinn College. Sumner finished fifth and Nason was

Nursing Health Fair promotes wellness

By KATHLEEN COONEY
Assistant News Editor

The College of Nursing Health Fair was held in Connelly Center March 10 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. It was a campus wide event sponsored by the college of Nursing and the Villanova chapter of the Student Nurses Association of Pennsylvania (SNAP), said Carol Toussie Weingarten, Ph.D., R.N.

Booths were set up in the major traffic areas throughout Connelly Center. Each booth focused on a different aspect of health care, said Weingarten. Blood pressure screening, mental health, cancer, AIDS awareness, diabetes and breast self-exams were among the booths, presented in the Health Fair, she said.

The Health Fair is an annual spring project for the entire senior nursing class, said Weingarten. Students found sponsors for the event, said SNAP Vice President Kelly Ann Walsh. Originally the Health Fair was a SNAP event, but it has been expanded to include the college of nursing, she added.

The senior nursing class worked the booths alongside faculty advisors and representatives from different health organizations such as the American Cancer Society, Walsh said. Nursing students from the other classes also volunteered, she said.

Kim Champy, Nikki Benedix, Jill Abrams and Michele Young coordinated the event.

The purpose of the event was to promote wellness and healthy lifestyles, said Weingarten. Nurses are experts in wellness as well as sickness and the Health Fair is their chance to demonstrate their knowledge by promoting prevention, she added.

"The Health Fair is a special opportunity for people to receive information about various aspects of health," said Weingarten.

"A lot of people don't have the opportunity to learn prevention," and the Health Fair is an easy way for people to learn about prevention before it is too late, said Walsh.

In addition to the specialized booths, there was a college of nursing booth where different nursing projects were displayed, said Walsh.

The college of nursing is involved with community service and sponsors events throughout the year, said Walsh. All events are open to Villanova students, she added.

Holocaust survivors discuss, share their experiences in Nazi concentration camps

By JENNIFER TRZASKA
Staff Reporter

The Center For Peace and Justice Education and the Honors Program sponsored a presentation entitled "Lessons From the Holocaust-Survivors' Stories" in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center, Feb. 23.

The lecture featured Izaak Price, veteran of the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising, Itka Zygmuntowicz, former prisoner of the Auschwitz concentration camp and Dr. Philip Rosen, curator of the Holocaust Awareness Museum in Melrose Park, Pa.

> We are a dying generation for eventually there will not be anybody left and the story will die.
> Izaak Price, veteran of the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising

Price spoke for the first time about his experiences during the Holocaust at the University. He was an adolescent when he and his family were placed in the Warsaw Ghetto, which was an area surrounded by an eight foot wall, barbed wire and armed guards, Price said. Though the area's capacity was that of only 8,000 people, over 40,000 Jews were placed there, he added.

Because the people were only given two pieces of stale, moldy bread a day, many, including Price, would sneak out at night to procure food for their families. "Starvation and disease quickly took its toll," said Price. He said he often crawled through sewers for scraps of food.

In July 1942, the Nazis decided to liquidate the Jews, and though it became extremely difficult to escape, Price continued to leave the Ghetto at night for food, Price said. One day when he returned, he learned that his family had been taken to the death camps. They were never seen or heard from again.

Price then lived on his own in Warsaw, and in 1943, joined the Ghetto Uprising. He was captured and became a prisoner of war. While en route to a prisoner of war camp in Germany, his train was attacked by the Partisans and Price was able to escape.

He later returned to Warsaw but soon left for America, where he arrived with no food, money or knowledge of the English language. Price eventually got a job in a grocery store, married and raised a family in the United States.

Price said discussion about the Holocaust is vital. "We are a dying generation," said Price, "for eventually there will not be anybody left and the story will die. Praised are you, Lord, for the hearts that speak and the hearts that listen," he said.

Itka Zymuntowicz, who has been featured in various television programs, lectures and documentaties about the Holocaust, discussed her experiences in Cichanow, Poland and in Auschwitz during the Nazi occupation.

The Nazis had taken everything from the Jews in the village where Zygmuntowicz lived. A man was selling various items to people outside her home, and since this was prohibited by the Nazis, her mother urged the man inside for his own protection, she said.

The Nazis learned that this had taken place, so they took Zygmuntowicz and her mother to a torture facility for questioning. Though both mother and daughter were badly beaten, they never revealed the name of the man selling the goods to the people.

Zygmuntowicz's family were soon taken to Auschwitz, and all except her were murdered their first day there. Zygmuntowicz was kept at Auschwitz for three years and witnessed massive death, disease and torture.

It is important to realize that the Jews were treated as subhuman and undeserving of even the most basic human rights, said Zygmuntowicz. "Having been a slave, I have learned to treasure the gifts of freedom, family and friendship," she said.

She implored the audience to "never see yourselves through the eyes of others," and that "no one can take away your dignity."

After displaying the numbers on her arm that she received while a prisoner at Auschwitz, Zygmuntowicz said, "I am not a number, I am a human being. Like you, I am God's child and my parents' child. Numbers cannot speak, act or remember," she said.

PennDOT begins bridge construction

By KATE SZUMANSKI
News Editor

A construction contract has been awarded to the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation (PennDOT) to replace the bridge on Spring Mill Road, said John J. Gallen, executive director for Facilities Management.

PennDOT has already begun construction and the bridge project is expected to be completed in one year, Gallen said. "I expect the bridge to be done sooner," he added.

"Villanova is working closely with PennDOT," said Gallen. The University is paying $250,000 of the total $2 million to $3 million cost of construction, he said. The $2 million to $3 million dollar contact is state funded, he added.

Two jug handles, resembling a two-leaf clover, will be built on the north side of the train tracts enabling under the bridge passage and eliminating left-hand turn traffic, Gallen said. "This is a safety issues," he said.

Access lines and utility lines for drainage in support of west campus and St. Mary's Hall are also under construction, said Gallen.

> Villanova is working closely with PennDOT.
> John J. Gallen, executive director for Facilities Management

Spring Mill Road will be slightly widened and will remain a two-lane highway, he said.

The road work will eventually go dormant and a gradual transition on both sides of the bridge will occur, Gallen said.

Cult reaches stalemate

By KATHRYN HOLUB
Staff Reporter
Source: The New York Times

WACO, Texas

One week after a deadly shootout at the Branch Davidian compound between a heavily armed religious cult and Federal agents, a standoff continues and talks with the cult have stalled.

The incident began March 6 when agents from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms responded to a report that there were large amounts of weapons and ammunition stored at the compound.

The 45-minute gun battle followed at the cult's 77-acre compound 10 miles east of Waco and left four federal agents and at least three adult members dead.

Federal agents have been unable to negotiate with adult leader David Koresh, a self-professed messiah, who sportedly is waiting for further instructions from God.

Dependency and destruction tied to cult persuasion, activity

By KATE SZUMANSKI
News Editor

"Cults want your free, full-time, life-time commitment as a recruiter and fund-raiser," said William Drummond, cult expert. Cults try to entrap and coercively persuade people, "denying the very freedom of choice and of religion which the Constitution of the United States was meant to protect," he said.

"Last year, cult activity emerged on campus," said the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of Students. The cult group, calling itself "The Church of Christ," reviewed the prayer registery in Corr Hall Chapel and approached students who had signed in, expressing concern for their well-being and that of the people they had requested prayers for, said Stack.

The cult members would then invite students to attend the group's services, expressing what seemed to be genuine concern for the students, Stack said. Last year one student needed to be deprogrammed from the cult, he added.

The University took a proactive stance to address the problem, Stack said. Letters were sent to all students, warning them of cult activity, he said.

Dependency and destruction are involved in cult activity and recruiting, said Stack. The cult member becomes emotionally and sometimes physically and economically dependent on the group, he said. The cult becomes almost omnipresent in a person's life, he said. Bizarre behavioral patterns and relationship changes become visible in a person who is involved in a cult, he added.

> Cults want your free, full-time, life-time commitment as a recruiter and fund-raiser.
> William Drummand, cult expert

"Lonely and isolated people appear to be the most susceptible to cult recruiting," said Stack. "Students who are alone or appear vulnerable and proffer them [cult members] friendship and companionship" are typically approached by campus cult recruiters, according to the letter warning students of last year's cult activities.

Cult techniques of coercive persuasion include the removal of privacy, excessive expressions of love and concern, feelings of guilt and fear and blind acceptance of cult beliefs and practices. Changes of diet and sleep habits, the rejection of old values and the replacement of relationships and childlike, blind and unquestioning dependence are also characteristic of cult persuasion, according to literature about cult techniques.

Cults also offer simple, black and white solutions to complex problems, said Stack. Coercion through force, intimidation or manipulation is common. The objective of most cults is "to validate and defend the self through control and domination over other people and events," according to cult literature.

Trade Center bombed

New York, NY

Police have charged Mohammed Salameh of Jersey City, N.J., with the Feb. 26 bombing of the World Trade Center which killed five people and injured more than 1,000 others.

Salameh, a 25-year-old Palestinian with a Jordanian passport, was arrested March 4 when he attempted to pick up a $400 deposit for a van he had rented from a Ryder Truck Rental company office in Jersey City three days before the bombing. Salameh had reported the van stolen a few hours after the explosion.

Meanwhile, the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, which owns the World Trade Center, is scrambling to make repairs so that tenants can return to work at the towers by April 1.

ROTC units halt sexual orientation questions

College Press Service

Gay and lesbian college students were pleased with President Clinton's move to eventually end the ban of homosexuals in the military, but enthusiasm was tempered because of the six-month delay in signing the presidential order.

Clinton was the center of a maelstrom in late January when he announced he would sign an executive order ending a 50-year military ban of gays and lesbians in the military.

After meeting with the Joint Chiefs of Staff and key congressional leaders, Clinton announced that the armed forces immediately would stop asking recruits and applicants to ROTC units about their sexual preference while the practical details of reversing the ban are worked out in the next six months.

On Feb. 3, the Pentagon put Clinton's orders into practice for recruiting centers and ROTC units. Prospective soldiers, sailors, airmen and women will not be asked about their sexual orientation; however, if they are found to be homosexual or admit to being gay or lesbian, they will be kicked out, a Department of Defense spokesman said.

They will lose their pay and benefits, but they will be eligible for reinstatement if the gay ban ends.

Gay and lesbian ROTC students who have been ousted for being homosexual will not be reinstated until the total ban is ended. A spokeswoman for Air Force ROTC at Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala., said no decision has been made concerning ongoing investigations of gay and lesbian ROTC students.

One ROTC student was turned down for reinstatement four days after Clinton made his announcement on Jan. 29. Neal Snow, a senior at the University of Maine, was dismissed from the school's Air Force ROTC unit last year when he told his commanding officers he was gay.

He reapplied for admission the week Clinton announced that sexual orientation questions would no longer be asked, and was turned down Feb. 1.

"I've tried to reapply. Since I was already discharged, I was told I was not allowed to participate in the program," said Snow, a psychology major. "They may not be allowed to ask, but if they discover you are gay, and it's obvious I'm gay, they won't let you in."

The military's ban on gay and lesbians is in direct conflict with most schools' equal opportunity policies forbidding discrimination because of race, disability, religion, sexual orientation and ethnic origin.

Snow said he is fighting his dismissal and is seeking advice from the University of Maine's legal counsel. What frustrates Snow, he said, is that he believes he would make an effective officer. He wants to get a master's degree and become a counselor in the Air Force.

"Once the ban is overturned, the military is going to need more counselors to deal with it," he said.

Dr. Terry Stein, who teaches psychiatry at Michigan State University in East Lansing, said the uproar over allowing gays and lesbians into the military reflects societal prejudices against homosexuals in general.

If the ban is lifted, there will still be problems, he said. Racism and sexism still exist, even though African Americans are allowed in the military, and women are taking a more prominent role and are allowed to attend the military academies.

"There is continued racial resistance and sexism against women in the military," he said. "There might be some problems, but there are already thousands of gays and lesbians in the military. The issue is that they can't identify themselves."

The gay and lesbian issue surfaced shortly after Clinton was sworn into office Jan. 20. He had made a campaign promise to end the military ban, but hit a wall of resistance when he announced intentions to end it. The Joint Chiefs of Staff, military personnel, congressional leaders and ordinary citizens were vehement in their opposition.

"My sense is that the issue has been in the background so long, those involved weren't prepared for the controversy when it came to the surface," said Robert O'Neil, a law professor at the University of Virginia.

Campus dining halls provide nutritious meal alternatives

By JANE PAPACCIO
Assistant News Editor

National Nutrition Month (NNM) is a nutrition education information campaign sponsored annually by the National Center for Nutrition and Dietetics of of the American Dietetic Association and its Foundation.

The campaign is designed to provide the public with the basic nutrition knowledge needed to make informed food choices and develop sound eating habits, said Carolyn Fagan, registered dietician.

The program was initiated in March 1973 as a week-long event, it became a month-long observance in 1989 in response to growing public interest in good nutrition. This year's theme, "Eat Right America" will focus on the U.S. Department of Agriculture's new Food Guide Pyramid, added Fagan.

"Eating right means having a wide variety of foods in moderation every day. There are no good or bad foods. There are only bad eating habits," according to the American Dietetic Association.

Throughout the month of March, Morsels and Tidbits will feature primary nutrition information, said Fagan. There will be a nutrition promotion each Thursday in the cafeterias, she added.

On March 11, at dinner, there was a Bread and Spread Promotion. It featured specialty breads, rolls, bagels and muffins with interesting spreads such as Creole Butter and Herb Butter. This specialty coordinates with the base of the Food Guide Pyramid and eating 6 to 11 servings of complex carbohydrates daily, added Fagan.

The specialty for dinner on March 18 will include cheese, crackers and fruit. It will include low-fat and regular variety cheeses such as Colby and Munster, plus crackers and fruit, said Fagan. This coordinates with the milk, yogurt and cheese sections of the Pyramid, she added.

On March 25, there will be a Yogurt Creation Bar at lunch. There will be light and fat-free Yoplait Vanilla and Plain yogurt with an assortment of mix-ins from Fat-Free Grape Nuts to Milk Chocolate Chips, said Fagan.

The Nursing College and S.N.A.P. hosted a health fair entitled "Healthy Changes" in order to distribute information concerning nutrition.

The American Cancer Society's "Great American Food Fight Against Cancer" will be held at Connelly Center from 10 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. on March 16. It is sponsored by the Infirmary and Dining Services.

"When people eat a high fat diet, it stays in the body and is more apt to cause cancer. Fruits and vegetables are low in fat and high in fiber. Fruits and vegetables help the body move the preservatives, colorings and other extras out of the body. This provides for a healthier body. Low-fat eating is right for life," said Fagan.

Simpson Hall may become an all-female dormitory in the 1993-94 academic year.

Students protest possible switch

By ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWSKI
News Editor

The possible switch of Simpson Hall to a female residence hall came as an unpleasant surprise to the current residents who wanted to remain in the building for the 1993-94 academic year, said sophomore David Greason, house council president for Simpson Hall.

"We recognize the fact that the University must accommodate students for freshman and sophomore years, but we feel that the University should re-evaluate their options before they choose Simpson Hall," said Greason.

There are several reasons why the residents of Simpson Hall do not think it would be wise to make it a female residence hall, added Greason. These reasons include the fact that the building is located on the edge of campus, security is minimal and facilities such as the showers and bathrooms have been faulty over the past two years, he said.

One main point of contention among the residents of Simpson Hall was the lack of student input concerning the possible switch, Greason said.

"This is not a policy change. The administration needed to look at the numbers [of students who will need housing] and make the best educated guess as to what will happen. We do that every year, but we haven't always had to switch," responded the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of Students.

The University did not come to the decision that Simpson Hall may need to become a female residence hall until about a week before the residents of Simpson were notified, Stack added.

Each year the University tries to estimate how many students it can accommodate with on campus housing, said Stack.

"I was of course happy to see that they cared about the place and had formed a positive sense of community. If we can avoid the switch we certainly will," said Stack.

If Simpson Hall does not remain a male dorm, the administration would be happy to try to house

COLLEGE TO UNIVERSITY

In an institution as large as Villanova is today, it is easy to forget that the University was once a small college. Villanova College began with just seven students in the fall of 1843, and was still quite diminutive when it celebrated its 50th anniversary, or Golden Jubilee, in 1892-93.

After a whole half century of existence, there were only 90 individuals enrolled that year, the majority of whom were actually students in a secondary school (or academy) on the campus.

In 1898, Villanova College attempted to increase its enrollment and academic prestige by launching a massive building program which featured a new monastery and "Main College Hall" (later Tolentine Hall). The new edifice contained a gymnasium, auditorium, library, lecture rooms and modern laboratories. The construction strategy appeared to pay off as enrollment rose slightly at the turn of the century.

But it was probably the new academic offerings (inaugurated between 1905 and 1915) in science, engineering and pre-medicine that produced the greatest gains in student numbers. By the fall of 1915, enrollment stood at nearly 400.

The 1920s was a time of great expansion at Villanova. Enrollment peaked around 1,000 at the end of the decade. A boom in the national economy, combined with the rising prosperity of American Catholics, were partly responsible for the expansion. Attractive new structures, such as Austin Hall; and new curricula, such as the School of Commerce and Finance (founded in 1921), likewise helped the college grow.

The Great Depression of the 1930s caused student enrollment to plummet, reaching a low 700 in 1935. It rebounded to about 900 later in the decade, but was again threatened when the United States entered World War II and the majority of Villanova's male student body faced induction into the armed forces. Only a Navy V-12 program, the forerunner of today's Navy ROTC, saved Villanova from a drastic reduction in students.

The end of the war in 1945, and generous tuition benefits for veterans resulted in an enrollment of 2,000 in the fall of 1946, nearly twice as many students as at any time in the past. Modest increases over the next decade allowed Villanova to prosper as never before.

New buildings (including a library, science building, and dormitories), once more combined with new academic programs, contributed to the college's growth. The most important of these innovations were the Villanova School of Law and the Villanove College of Nursing. A separate Graduate School had been created in 1931.

The postwar expansion, in both students and curricula made Villanova look more and more like a university. This status became official with a special act of the Pennsylvania State legislature, signed by the governor on August 26, 1953. A formal change in name to "Villanova University in the State of Pennsylvania" was decreed by the Delaware County Court of CommonPleas on November 18, 1953.

Villanovans may examine this decree, rendered as a colorful illuminated manuscript by the respected artist/calligrapher, Victoria Donohoe, in the ongoing Sesquicentennial Exhibit in the President's Lounge of Connelly Center. Aptly entitled "College to University," the exhibit will remain open to the public until September 1993.

Telecommunications plan approved by University

University Press Release

The University's Board of Trustees recently approved a contract with Intecom Inc., a Dallas, Texas, manufacturer of large, sophisticated telephone switching systems for the installation of the new telephone and voice mail systems.

"The process to acquire the new technologies formally began in mid '92 and was spearheaded by Villanova's Computing and Information Services Department," said Mead Santoleri, executive director of U.C.I.S. Intecom Inc. It will provide a multimedia network to enhance the University's voice and data network needs, as well as future video communications requirements, he added.

Beginning with the fall semester of 1993, the University will enter a new era of technology. When students, faculty, and staff return to campus they will be greeted by a new telephone system and a new voice mail system.

The services available from these systems will be delivered throughout the campus, with each resident student having his/her own phone.

With the new systems in place each resident student will have access to an array of calling features. This action falls in line with one of the goals of the Strategic Plan, namely: to provide state-of-the-art facilities and equipment.

"Villanova was looking for a state-of-the-art, integrated digital voice and data communications system that would take them into the 21st century," said Hal Denton, Intecom's vice president of Marketing. "The University wanted a single communications network [for voice and data] that would support the entire campus' communication needs with plans to incorporate FDDI [Fiber Distributed Data Interface] over a fiber backbone for increased throughput and high speed LAN connectivity."

One of the most exciting technologies that will be available to students, faculty, staff and administrators is Voice Mail. A voice mail system allows what is commonly referred to as "non-real time communications" meaning that parties may communicate even though they are not able to speak with each other at the exact same moment.

Each subscriber is provided a private and secure "mailbox" in which they may review messages sent to them, save or erase those messages and send messages to other subscribers.

This capability will allow students to communicate with each other to arrange study group schedules or confirm assignments, or to contact various departments on campus with questions concerning housing, parking, activities, etc. Faculty will be able to communicate to their classes about course assignments, readings, lectures, etc., or other pertinent information.

Another application under serious consideration for the new system is Campus 911 to allow the office of Public Safety to respond quickly to emergency calls anywhere on campus. When a Campus 911 call is received at the security desk a complete screen of information will be instantly delivered to the security terminal showing from where the call is originating by building, floor and room. Intecom's Open Application Interface (OAI) will allow Villanova to integrate Campus Emergency 911 and on-line student registration.

"Villanova selected Intecom's multimedia network based on its distribution capabilities, voice and data capabilities, architectural strengths, system reliability and its reputation in the university market," said Dr. Helen K. Lafferty, University vice president.

"Intecom's multimedia network is an integrated communications platform combining the strengths of a PBX with the bandwidth performance of a local area network [LAN] using a single cable distribution scheme. It is capable of supporting Villanova's high-speed LAN and video conferencing requirements now and in the future. One hundred classrooms will be equipped with twisted pair, fiber and 10Base-T cable for video and high speed data capabilities," said Lafferty.

Within each subscribers' voice mailbox is a "Guest Mailbox" so that a subscriber may also communicate with selected non-subscribers. This feature will provide, for example, non-resident commuter students the ability to have a mailbox on Villanova's Voice Mail System.

The investment that the University is making in these advanced communications technologies allow us to explore applications to benefit everyone, faculty, students and staff.

As Villanova moves into the 21st century it continues to look for ways to prepare students for the ever expanding "information society" they will enter. The implementation of the new telephone system is one of the steps in this ongoing initiative.

Speech Team gains prestige, awards

By ANTHONY PALLADINO
Press Release

The Villanova Speech Team recently left its mark at the Wilkes University Novice Tournament Feb. 5-6, the Pennsylvania State Championship held at Bloomsburg University Feb. 19-20 and the York College Tournament March 6.

"I'm really happy with the progress we've made," said John Giafaglione, coach of the team. "We've grown tremendously over the past year, and, hopefully, we'll continue to do so."

At the Wilkes Tournament, six different presentations qualified for final rounds. In dual interpretation of drama, the team of Joe Casale and Ann Marie Pisano won first place. The team of Pete Calleo and Casale took second, and Mary Rossetti and Jim Downs placed third.

The team's greatest accomplishment this year came in its quality of presentations in the Pennsylvania State Championship Tournament. Leading the team were Joe Shearer, Mike Murray, Downs and Rossetti.

Among the finalists, Pisano, in only her second tournament, won the sixth place honor in persuasive speaking. Anthony Palladino also made the final round, placing sixth in oral interpretation of poetry. Out of 14 schools at the tournment, many of whom had been competing since October, Villanova finished in sixth place.

In the York College Tournament, Villanova was one of the tournament's most successful teams. Advancing to final rounds, the team of Pisano and Palladino finished in sixth place in dual interpretation of drama. Palladino also won sixth place in oral interpretation of prose.

University president visits public relations class

By LAUREN WURST
Staff Reporter

The Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A. visited Dr. Edward J. Lordan's public relations class in St. Mary's Hall, March 8. The visit came about as a result of a previous class discussion concerning Dobbin.

Lordan voiced the students concerns to Dobbin in a letter Within two days Dobbin responded and accepted an invitation to attend class.

> I think the visit was extremely powerful in the sense that it showed the students that Father Dobbin is available to the students.
> Student Carolyn Vreeland

Dobbin spoke to the students about two questions posed to him in Lordan's letter. The students asked, "What does the president do, and why is he not more visible on campus?"

The "informal case study," as Dobbin called it, addressed internal and external problems and strengths of the University. Dobbin spoke about his commitment to the position of University president. Dobbin said his primary role as president is "leadership and direction through strategic planning."

Dobbin said he has the most "fun" eating lunch with students. He discussed Dr. Helen K. Lafferty's position as University vice-president and his interaction with the Student Government Association.

"This meeting was student inspired. I think that any problems having to do with Dobbin's visibility are related more toward perception rather than reality, and that this clearly demonstrated that he is concerned about students and wants their opinions," said Lordan.

Student Carolyn Vreeland said, "I think the visit was extremely powerful in the sense that it showed the students that Dobbin is available."

"Dobbin's talk left me feeling positive about the future growth and development of the University," said student Jill Bettges.

Dobbin relayed numerous personal stories, including one about a senior student who made an appointment with him. Upon meeting this student, Dobbin found out that the meeting was made because of a bet. The student did not think she could get in to see him. The notion of non-accessibility was dispelled.

Dobbin spoke about his priorities as president and the importance of student input.

Dobbin said he welcomes and encourages all ideas and suggestions from the student body and has never turned down an invitation to meet with students.

Omicron Delta Kappa inducts members into honor society

By DANA BOGACKI
Staff Reporter

The Villanova chapter of Omicron Delta Kappa (ODK) National Leadership Honor Society will induct 37 students and 10 faculty members as new members March 21 at 3 p.m. in St. Mary's Chapel, said Kelly Ann Walsh, selection co-chairperson.

ODK is a unique honor society because it recognizes campus leadership, accomplishment and service of both students and faculty in order to bring the two groups together, Walsh said.

This year, there were approximately 150 applications and nominations for membership. Existing members of ODK used the organization's nationwide scoring system, rating applicants in a number of categories such as academic achievement, service activities and social involvement, to select the inducted, added Walsh.

The minimum grade point average for selection is a 3.18 and there is no quota for the number of new members, said Walsh.

The system seeks to find the strongest, most well-rounded leaders, both noticeable and behind the scenes within the faculty and student body, said Walsh.

Walsh co-chaired the selection of inductees with Laura Shiller, senior education major. The 1992-93 ODK President Dean Libutti and the group's advisor Dr. Robert Stokes of the continuing education department assisted in the selection.

The organization, founded at Villanova three years ago, sponsors various programs and projects on campus throughout the year, said Walsh. Recently the group assisted local high school students with a presentation about college admissions and college life. A panel discussion for high school counselors concerning advice for college applicants was also held, Walsh added.

"Omicron Delta Kappa provides a network of leaders for its members to utilize. You know you have a quality organization and there is always someone there who can assist you," said Walsh.

Seniors Dine With President Of College

By College Press Service

ALMA, Mich. — Before a graduate picks up a diploma from Alma College, a small liberal arts college in Michigan, he or she gets a personal invitation to the president's home for dinner.

All 225 of this year's graduates will have a chance to talk with President Alan Stone at a series of dinners, known as "Pres-Dins," which are considered, among the most important social events on campus.

"Seniors really consider it a highlight," said Charlotte Schmidtke, a spokeswoman at the college. "Students are allowed to choose the evening they want to attend."

Most of the dinners are buffet-style for about 30 students at a time, but some are more intimate with a dozen or so students, the president and his wife gathered in the private dining room of the 1920s house.

Love The Articles, Hate The Photos

STANFORD, Calif. — A survey of Stanford University women students found that they liked the editorial content of such magazines as "Vogue" and "Glamour" but said the pictures of ultra-slim models undermined their self-esteem.

The survey, done by Debbie Then, a social psychologist who received her doctorate in psychology and education from Stanford, was conducted last spring. Of the 75 students who responded, several said they found the articles on sex and health to be informative.

However, nearly 50 percent said their self-esteem and confidence were undermined by the photographs, and 68 percent felt worse about their bodies.

Of 61 women who answered questions about their eating habits, 82 percent said they had been on a diet at some point in the past, and 10 percent said they were or had been bulimic or anorexic.

Wrote one respondent: "I usually feel terrible after going through a woman's magazine. On every page you are faced with pictures, articles or advertisements that point out your inadequacies. I feel truly 'lesser' after reading one.' "

Student Sues The Citadel

CHARLESTON, S.C. — A female high school student sued The Citadel in early March after she was accpeted and rejected by the state-run military school.

Shannon Riley Faulkner, a senior from Powdersville, S.C., had officials at Wren High School use correction fluid to delete all references to her gender on her transcripts. The Citadel, in Charleston, allows no women in the corps.

Faulkner was provisionally accepted pending her final transcripts, and then Citadel officials determined that Faulkner's paperwork had been altered. She was then rejected by the school.

Her attorney, Suzanne Coe of Greenville, S.C., filed suit in federal court in Charleston, claiming that the school violated the equal protection clause in the U.S. Constitution. It is the second gender-discrimination suit filed against The Citadel within a year.

Grads Get Taste of Working World

BEREA, Ohio — Most students receive intensive orientation when they enter college, but they hardly get more than a diploma and a handshake when they leave, even though the transition to the working world can be daunting.

Baldwin-Wallace College of Ohio has started a program called Senior Experience, which prepares graduating seniors with a series of seminars on budgeting, health insurance, renting and leases, office politics and leaving college relationships.

The program began as a project by a student intern who polled seniors on their concerns.

In addition to giving students practical information, the seminars help ease the transition from college to the working world. Senior year often brings a sense of urgency as students grapple with unresolved personal and professional issues, said Denise Reading, dean of students.

It is also a shock for college graduates to discover that they will likely be living in a lower socio-economic level than they are used to, at least until they get established, and their parents may not be in a position to help them out financially, Reading said.

the current residents of Simpson Hall near each other next year, Stack said.

This is a more appropriate time to plan the possible conversion of on-campus spaces from male to female rather than waiting. By planning now, the current residents of Simpson have a chance to indicate a choice of where they would like to live next year as opposed to simply placing them wherever there are available spaces, said Dan Remley, assistant director of Residence Life.

"No final decisions about whether Simpson Hall will become a female dorm will be made until probably June," said Stack.

said Bracken. This decision was made because some companies do not look to hire students in the fall. Also, some students are not ready with their resumes in the fall, Bracken added.

"We generally have a good turnout for both students and company representatives. It is a very popular event," she said.

There is a booklet available in the office of Career Planning and Placement which lists the companies that will be attending Career Day as well as a description of each, said Bracken.

"A number of our students got jobs through Career Day last year and a number of our alumni do return for it," said Bracken.

David I. Ryan, 69, a retired writer-editor with the U.S. Information Agency (USIA) and ordained Deacon in the Catholic Church, died of cancer Feb. 20 at his home in Glenn Dale, Md.

Ryan, a 1948 graduate of the University and former editor for the Villanovan was a copy editor and news rewrite man with the Rocky Mountain News, Philadelphia Bulletin and Washington Star newspapers before joining the USIA. He worked there for 25 years before retiring in 1988.

"Dave was my assistant when I was editor of the Evening Bulletin in the mid-1940s. I observed his potential, and I like to think that I was responsible for his decision to go to Villanova. You will conclude, I am sure, that Dave did his Alma Mater proud," wrote Edmond P. Reiley, class of '35 and former editor of the Villanovan.

Faith becomes reason for fanatical deeds

During our years here at Villanova we have learned to appreciate the meaning of our religion and the beauty of its philosophy. We have also learned to understand and accept — and respect — others' beliefs.

Recent national and international events have shown us what happens when individuals or groups use religion to defend violent acts and destructive behavior.

An individual belonging to a radical Muslim sect blows up the World Trade Center, killing five people and injuring thousands.

A man leads a group of followers by telling them that he is the Messiah, and in so doing is responsible for the deaths of four FBI agents, as the result of his fanaticism — and his store of munitions.

A group which describes itself as pro-life has among its "Christian" membership demonstrating outside an abortion clinic a man who commits the unheard-of act of murder. He shoots a physician three times in the back because that physician is, according to the killer, a killer. And, worst of all, the killer carries a Bible and claims that he is doing Christ's work.

Who are these zealots? What do these fanatics hope to accomplish? Is religion a synonym for terrorism? They are people who believe above all else that they are right and that everyone who does not agree with them is wrong, is the enemy. This is not religion. This is evil.

Elections provide forum for change

Student Government elections will be held March 24. Wrong, they will be held March 23, but you did not know that did you? You were just going to accept whatever you read in the Villanovan as truth and you would have let the elections slip by.

Now that you know the date, find out who is running. More importantly, find out what the candidates have to offer and grill them on how they plan to accomplish their goals. Student Government should be a vehicle for students' concerns to be heard by the administration.

For the students on campus, candidates will be roaming the dorms and slipping fliers under doors with sayings on them like, "Vote For Me," or from the more polite candidates, "Please Vote For Me."

As clever and compelling as these fliers may seem, find out more about the candidate. These people are representating us to the administration, so our choices should be educated choices.

When these candidates are in your dorms, do not pretend to be asleep as the flier gets nudged under your door. Open the door and make them work for your vote. You will be surprised by how many of them want to talk with students. The best way for the candidates to form their platforms is to hear what the students think should be on them. Our votes do count, and so do our opinions.

Senatorial debates will be held in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall March 15, and presidential debates will be in the Connelly Center Cinema March 16. We encourage everyone to attend both if possible and let Student Government answer to the students.

LETTERS

Widespread classism mars campus

To the Editor:

It was refreshing to find a section of the front page of the Feb. 18 issue of the Villanovan devoted to racism on campus. I was also especially pleased to read the letter from Monica McDermott and Michael Burke, acknowledging the class bias that affects many members of the campus community's support staff.

Reading their letter has prompted me to take this opportunity to inform the Villanova community what we at Facilities Management (maintenance, grounds and custodial services) have been doing to combat racism and sexism here on campus.

Last April, a committee of various members of Facilities Management (including management and rank and file) formed to develop a set of programs to educate all Facilities Management personnel on such topics as cultural diversity, Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), drug and alcohol abuse and sexual harassment. We presented our first program in October outlining our goals and introducing each topic that would follow in the upcoming months. In November, we presented a session on cultural diversity. December's program was devoted to ADA and drug and alcohol abuse. We finished in January with sexism in the workplace.

For the first time a department took the initiative to educate its own staff on these ever-important topics and I'm proud to have been a part of it. However, one issue kept arising from each session that disturbed me and the other members of the committee. Time and again what our staff discussed was how poorly they were treated by other members of the campus community. As Ms. McDermott and Dr. Burke so eloquently stated, classism is a problem here.

We now realize our work is far from over. While we were successful in presenting a series of programs for Facilities Management personnel, it is apparent the entire campus is in need of awareness education. We hope other departments and student groups will follow our lead and work to help knock down the barriers that divide us all.

While we were successful in presenting a series of programs for Facilities Management personel, it is apparent the entire campus is in need of awareness education.

Finally, I would like to thank publicly the members of the Facilities Management Awareness Education Committee who worked so tirelessly in making a dream become a reality: Dr. Aileen Compton, Charlie DiGiovanni, John Gallen, James Bartley, Peggie Kemmerley, Kevin O'Donnell, Steve Patton, Art Smith and Jim Zaleski.

Also, a great deal of gratitude goes to the members of the Villanova community who not only presented some of our programs but took the time to meet with us to share their ideas. We couldn't have done it without you: Dr. Helen Lafferty, university vice-president; Tom Bull, director of personnel services; Kathy Byrnes, assistant dean of students; Dr. Ed Collymore and Novelette Emery from the office of multicultural affairs; Dr. Terry Nance from the communications arts department; Kathy Overturf from the campus ministry and Dr. Barbara Wall from the center for peace and justice.

Students and faculty succeed with Passages

To the Editor:

I would like congratulate all of the students who worked so hard on the first edition of "Passages" magazine. "Passages" is a new campus publication that highlights the international experiences of the Villanova community.

The magazine is the brainchild of senior Amy Lilly, who wanted to begin a publication where both students from abroad and students who have studied abroad could share their stories. With the help of Debbie K. Hoover of the International Student Office and a host of dedicated students, the magazine is now a reality. The first edition will arrive in the next few days. Thank you to everyone involved for your creativity, vision and commitment.

OP-ED

Student says, "Love and internships have much in common."

By PETER SHAUGER

When I applied to Villanova I knew that if my grades and SAT scores weren't good enough, they might not accept me. But I also knew that test scores were not always the only grounds for getting accepted to colleges.

For instance, maybe it was my clever essay, or my extracurricular activities, or my genius sister Pam who was a sophomore here at the time, or maybe it was just the cute 3x5 picture of me by the pool that got me into Villanova. But I'm here now, so I guess I met their requirements, though right now they're probably asking themselves, "Okay, which one of you bozos let the Shauger kid in?"

For two and a half years here at Villanova I had been sending out as well as accepting resumes for relationships. Sure, things looked good on paper, but there was no spark during the interviews.

Now I'm trying to apply for an internship with a magazine through Villanova, but I found that in order to be accepted for the program, I had "to prove academic, social, emotional and psychological maturity." Academic maturity means a 3.0. I'm not sure how they determine the other three. "Well Mr. and Mrs. Shauger, we had Pete meet with our top social, emotional and psychological maturity experts, and they feel that though he does play well with the other children, he has an idealistic approach to life and on those grounds he cannot be accepted. But we're darn glad you stopped by!"

Fortunately they didn't have to waste any extra Villanova time or money discovering that I am not socially, emotionally or psychologically mature, a fact I'm always happy to share with people. They don't have to bother because I don't have a 3.0.

And it's not like I ever try to hide the fact that I fouled up academically the first two years of college. But when I do tell people about it, they try to make excuses for me. "Well, Pete, the first two years are always the hardest because you're still trying to find where you fit in." Anywhere that my books were not, that's where I fit in. I didn't have problems at home and I didn't have problems adjusting and I didn't go to parties and I didn't have a heavy course load. I was lazy. Why can't people accept that? I do.

So it doesn't bother me that I got rejected because of my poor grades, but that my other credentials weren't even looked at.

I was talking to a girl last week about how she liked this guy but didn't want a relationship with him because he was too short. Apparently he had the coolness she was looking for, but he wasn't tall enough so she rejected him. It's the same story with me. I co-hold the second highest student position on the school newspaper, but my grades weren't tall enough for the internship so they rejected me.

Actually, in some ways this rejection was a good thing. First of all, it gave me a topic to write about for my column which you are now sinking your teeth into, I'm sure. As I was discussing with Tom the other day, it's hard to write this column when I'm in a good mood all the time (i.e. Carolyn). I was practically begging for something annoying to happen to me and fortunately it did.

But on a more practical level, I was able to see things from the people who do the hiring's point of view. When they hire people, sometimes all they have to go on is the application. Hopefully if I am ever in a position to hire someone, I will look beyond the regular credentials and see if they have something unique to offer.

Back in high school, I went out with this girl Heidi for a few months. Until recently, she was the only girl I ever called my girlfriend. Back then I was constantly seeking qualified women to fill the position of my girlfriend. But no one was turning in applications. One day I discovered Heidi's application hiding under some papers. It was well typed, to the point and, though she had no experience, neither did I. So I called her into my office one day and I gave her the job on the spot.

When I look back, though, she was a nice girl and we had some good times together, but I only went out with her because she seemed like she'd be a good girlfriend and because she showed interest in me.

For two and a half years here at Villanova I had been sending out as well as accepting resumes for relationships. Sure, things looked good on paper, but there was no spark during the interviews.

At the beginning of this semester, I had pretty much stopped taking applications — until Carolyn, that is. Apparently we had wanted to work together for some time but we just never got around to doing background checks on each other.

You're probably wondering what the heck this has to do with me getting rejected for an internship. It's simple — Carolyn is the best woman for the job, and I didn't notice her before because I was only looking at superficial credentials.

So anyway, I will re-apply for the same internship in the fall after my grades improve — but for the moment I'll be a little annoyed.

See cabinet nominees as individuals, not tokens

To the Editor:

In her Feb. 19 editorial, Hillary Field took issue with President Clinton's successive nomimation of three women for U.S. Attorney General. Clinton's choices, Field contends, constitute "tokenism."

However, since no one would have batted an eye if Clinton had nominated three white men for the position, perhaps what needs to be examined here is not the president's hiring policy, but the attitude of Field and thousands of Americans like her.

Field wrote, "I am repulsed that I live in an age where I, as a woman, am suspicious of the nomination of three women for a post in this cabinet of predominantly minorities." Perhaps Field would not be so suspicious or "repulsed" if she remembered that women and minority men are not "tokens." They are, in fact, people who make up a majority of this country's population — people who Field herself admits must be qualified in order to be nominated for cabinet positions.

One of our country's goals should be that the nomination of men of color and women not be seen as outrageous or suspicious, but as normal as the nomination of the more traditional white males. We'll reach this goal not by doubting leaders with the courage to break out of the standard pattern, but by questioning our own attitudes toward "minorities" holding cabinet positions. If attitudes like Field's prevail, however, we may never reach this goal.

Demands of the priesthood surpass traditional gender roles

By OWEN R. JACKSON, O.S.A.

The "reform and renewal" of the Roman Catholic Church proclaimed by the bishops at the Second Vatican Council continues unabated. The question of women's ordination has moved center stage. It is an issue that needs much discussion since there is growing concern that this question is causing alienation and division within the faith community.

Recently, Archbishop Weakland of Milwaukee urged that further study be done in order to clarify the issue of women's ordination more fully. Many argue for a retention of the traditional position: I would like to offer an alternative vision.

From a historical point of view, it is interesting to note that the term "patriarchy" has come into popular usage only with the advent of the feminist movement. Yet historically the concept of male domination goes back thousands of years. It is not surprising that the early Church adopted the normal patriarchical cultural arrangement when it came to institutionalizing its corporate structure and continued that arrangement throughout the past 20 centuries.

In the present age, women's suffrage became a reality in this century, and only in the past decade have women begun to achieve relative parity in the workplace and in government. Has the time come for equality in the priesthood? At the close of the 20th century, we are witnessing a new consciousness concerning the right of women to share fully in all aspects of the human quest for fulfillment. No one disputes the sexual differences between women and men, but it would be foolish not to recognize the human similarities, i.e., intelligence, compassion, freedom, goodness and love. All people share a common humanity and it is this commonality that women wish recognized in all spheres of life.

The exclusionists concede that women are more than capable when it comes to doing the work of priests. Women can preach, listen to the pain of others, manage budgets, act as prophetic witnesses and, indeed, do all these things well, not because they are women, but because they are human. If then the "cry for freedom" from patriarchy, poverty, apartheid, environmental degradation, militarism and oppression in whatever form announces a vision of God's kingdom, our credibility as the people of God demands that we support these efforts. The Church should be in the forefront of liberation movements that enhance the dignity of each person and unite us as sisters and brothers.

The heart of the argument in favor of women's ordination involves nothing less than a richer understanding of humankind's spiritual union with Jesus Christ. St. Paul writes that "those who were baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither slave nor free, there is neither male nor female; for you are all one in Christ Jesus." (Gal. 3:27/28) It would appear that the maleness of Jesus is transcended when anyone of whatever race, nationality or gender is transformed into his human, not sexual, likeness. Priesthood need not be gender specific since Jesus' maleness is not the issue. The crux of priesthood both in baptism and ordination involves a spiritual transformation and union with a transcendent and resurrected Christ.

Other examples come to mind. Catholics believe that Jesus is present, whole and entire, in the Eucharistic Meal, not as male but as the Word of God, human and divine. Furthermore, when we "see" Jesus in the hungry, thirsty and naked of the world we do not "see" a male Jesus, but rather the human face of Christ in the humanity of the poor.

When women seek ordination to the priesthood, they do so, not primarily because they are women, but because they are human beings. While my own maleness is an inseparable part of my identity, my priestly ministry attends more to the human qualities I share with both women and men. Although I am not a pure spirit, I do have the ability to abstract and it is precisely in this ability that all people share a common humanness with Jesus. All humans seek truth and goodness, freedom and fidelity, love and affection. These human qualities go beyond gender differences and link all humanity to the Incarnate Word of God.

Finally, in all of these discussions it is important to remember that we are dealing with the mysterious reality of God's presence in the world. Karl Rahner spoke of this presence as an incomprehensible mystery. The priesthood represents Christ, not in his specific maleness, but in his humanness. This mystery of Christ unfolds in both women and men throughout history. At this new juncture in time, when the world is more conscious than ever about human rights, it would seem timely that the Catholic community recognized the intrinsic equality of women and support their right to serve as ordained priests.

Conservative justifies discrimination against homosexuals

By STEPHEN F. FREIND

While giving a whole new meaning to the term "rear guard," President Clinton's obsession with permitting homosexuals to serve in the military has produced one beneficial result. It has focused attention on the two paramount questions concerning homosexuality, namely whether discrimination should be permitted with respect to "sexual preference" and whether homosexuals should receive special privileges. The answers to these questions are, respectively, yes and no.

Lest I be labeled a barbarian — and I have been called considerably worse — it is necessary to briefly consult the dictionary. Discrimination means to choose, to express a preference for one thing above others. It is normal, even healthy, and each of us does it constantly. The clothes we wear, the friends we choose, the sports teams we follow, the food we consume — all these are examples of discrimination.

This nation has always stood for the proposition that the right of each individual to make personal choices — to discriminate — was an important cornerstone of our freedom. It is quite understandable, therefore, that limitations to this freedom have been made most begrudgingly and only for the most important of reasons.

It has been properly decided, for example, that discrimination in certain areas such as public access, education and transportation for reasons of race, creed, color, religion and gender is improper and unlawful. To extend such special protection to any individual because of his choice of sexual conduct, however, would be ludicrous, particularly when such conduct is a dangerous aberration of normal behavior.

> No suggestion is being made that an individual should be persecuted or prosecuted for engaging in homosexual activity with another consenting adult. Neither, however, should he be afforded special protection.

I am, of course, aware that labeling homosexuality as abnormal exposes me to the charge of being "judgemental" in a "pluralistic society," two of the more popular buzz-phrases of the Left. Actually, the issue is fairly clear cut. Since self-preservation is a normal instinct of the human race, as well as all other species of animals, any action running contrary to it would most definitely be abnormal. If each human engaged exclusively in homosexual activity, by definition the human race would come to an end in the relatively near future. In addition, such conduct is the major reason for the spread of a disease which has the potential of making the Bubonic Plague look like a Sunday walk in the park. Calling such conduct abnormal, therefore, is being both accurate and kind.

No suggestion is being made that an individual should be persecuted or prosecuted for engaging in homosexual activity with another consenting adult. Neither, however, should he be afforded special protection. For purposes of discipline and morale, should homosexuals be denied participation in the military service? Absolutely. Does a school have the right to reject the employment application of an individual because of his sexual lifestyle, believing that one with such values might have an adverse impact on the students? Definitely. Should a landlord be allowed to refuse renting his premises to individuals because of their homosexuality in the same fashion that he would reject an applicant for the use of drugs or excessive drinking? Without question.

If, as some believe, homosexuality were a disease, the answer to the above questions might be different. Leaders of the homosexual community, however, have repeatedly stated that their conduct is a result of choice, not medical malady.

What is particularly confusing and illogical is the conduct of the far Left, the Barbara Streisands of the world. These same individuals who raise millions of dollars for AIDS research in an attempt to stamp out the dreaded disease, are also adamant supporters of homosexual rights. These individuals of supposed intelligence fail to see the cause and effect paradox. They seek to encourage and deify the precise conduct which causes the disease which they seek to eradicate.

Enough is enough. The real tragedy of this entire situation is that the vast majority of Americans support the views contained in this article, yet remain silent. They have been cowed into submission by the Left, aided and abetted by the news media, fearful that should they express their true feelings, they will be considered unfashionable at best, and hateful at worst. The only appropriate response is to echo the words of Sir Edmund Burke: "All that is necessary for the forces of evil to prevail is for enough good men (and women) to do nothing."

The time for silence has ended. The time for action is now.

New sin taxes force a reevaluation of personal habits

By ELLEN GOODMAN

I don't know who first put together those two little words, "sin" and "taxes," but it was an inspired moment in the annals of public relations. With one stroke, the tax collector was set squarely in the camp of the righteous and the tax protestors were allied with the devil.

Of course, "sin taxes" always conveyed a slightly mixed ethical message. With one hand the government wagged its public finger of disapproval and promised to price people onto the straight and narrow. With the other hand, it scooped up a piece of the action.

But those were the days when drinking and smoking were considered evil. When a sin was something that put your soul in jeopardy. When we all expected to pay big time for any offenses — after death.

Now of course, we pay the most devout attention to our medical behavior. Our chief vices are the ones that put our bodies in jeopardy. We may still expect to pay big time for our offenses — but with a premature death.

So there is something symbolic in the current proposals to help pay for health care reform by taxing the habits of the unreformed. We are being offered a new generation of sin taxes for a new definition of sin.

I have no problem with this as a revenue plan. The dollar-a-pack tax on tobacco suggested last week by Sen. Bill Bradley and Rep. Michael Andrews would raise up to $10 billion a year. Adding a little something to the bar bill might help us get in the black. But I am queasy about the ties that bind evil and illness, virtue and health.

Sometimes it seems that the harshest moral judgments of our era are reserved for medical misdemeanors. People who wouldn't dream of judging others by their sexual preference or bank balance, casually calculate personal worth according to the health commandments. But when you consider the average American medical balance sheet, there's a lot of good and bad in any profile.

It's not just a matter of bald spots which, as a friend gasps, have just become the medical mark of Cain. Nor is it a question of apple-shaped bodies which may or may not be a sign of impending breast cancer in women and an omen of heart disease in men. These are in our genes, not our choices.

> But I am queasy about the ties that bind evil and illness, virtue and health.

But what of Americans who eat off the high end of the food chain and the fast end of the restaurant chain more often than they should. What of Americans who buckle up and helmet down less than they should. We may be risking trouble, but are we sinners? An act may be foolish or dangerous, but is it evil?

One misbegotten study after another suggests that the worst thing Americans can do to themselves, aside from lighting up another cigarette, is to swallow another glob of fat. We are expected to pale at the sight of a cheeseburger the way that our great-grandparents did at an exposed ankle.

We now have a bible of fat grams with a permanent place on the best-seller list. The tabernacles inside tell us a tablespoon of butter has 11.5 grams of fat and a Big Mac has 35. If we are going to reward and punish people for breaking medical taboos, then surely we should charge a penny-a-gram for brie. If we can tax energy by the Btu, we can tax fat by the gram.

On the other hand, if it is true that moderate portions of red wine can reduce the odds of a heart attack, then should we declare it a virtue? Perhaps we should offer a tax break for two glasses a day. Under the medical deduction of course.

The odd thing is that Americans remain selective in our medical morality tales. All sorts of risky behaviors escape the mantle of right and wrong.

Our health care dollars go without comment to mend the broken bones of the horseback rider, even the bungee jumper. We don't regard the skier as a sinner. Indeed, we may perversely regard his indolent brother as the greater danger.

But the notion that we should justify taxes as a fine on people who mistreat their bodies is enough to make an IRS man start counting his blessings. And our character flaws.

I am happy to tax cigarettes. I'm happy to tax the billboards and the ads. Happier to dump the subsidies for growing tobacco.

Call this tax a prepaid health plan for smokers — buy your Marlboros now, get your cancer treatment later. Call it preventive medicine — the higher the cost, the fewer kids who pick up the packs. Call it popular.

But don't call it a case of good versus evil. For heaven's sakes, don't call it a tax on sin.

Nominees for Mentzer Award

Students are invited to nominate those of their fellow students who have contributed most to expanding opportunities to the underprivileged. These students who are nominated should have volunteered time and energy regularly to such efforts as social action programs and hospital volunteer programs. The purpose of this award is to give recognition to that individual whose generosity is matched by anonymity. Nominations are for Villanova students only and it is requested that some particulars about the individuals be given so that the documentation of their efforts can be obtained. There is a cash stipend and plaques for the winner and nominations can be made to Dr. James Murphy or Dr. Patrick Nolan of the English department.

Peer Counselors, Career Planning and Placement

Applications are available to students who are interested in being Peer Counselors in the office of Career Planning and Placement for the 1993-94 school year. Information and applications may be obtained from CP&P in the basement of Corr Hall. Application deadline is March 26.

Volunteers Needed

Students, faculty and neighbors are needed to work on The Handicapped Encounter Christ (HEC) retreats. These retreats offer a Christian faith experience for disabled adults who otherwise would not be able to participate in a retreat because of their need for physical assistance. Please contact Margie Kernicky in Campus Ministry at 645-4080 or 527-4791. The retreat takes place from March 12 to 14, ending around 2 p.m. A Pre-HEC liturgy will be held March 9. All meetings are held at Margie Kernicky's Radnor House Apt. #117, 1030 E. Lancaster Ave., Rosemont, at 7:30 p.m.

April 1

Multicultural Evening

A Multicultural Evening will be held in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center from 7:30 to 11 p.m. The evening will be a celebration of the many different cultures present on campus. There will be a number of the campus culture clubs presenting music, dance and foods from around the world. If you are interested in volunteering to help with the evening, please contact the International Student Office at 645-4095, Corr 102.

Volunteers for Balloon Day

Balloon Day is coming! Anyone interested in volunteering for clowns, huggers, raffle, booths, maintenance, etc., can sign up in Campus Ministry, St. Rita Hall, 645-4080.

Sunshine Day

Sunshine Day, our annual mini-carnival for underprivileged kids, ages 3-9, takes place on campus April 24 from 10 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. If you would like to "adopt" a child for the day and enjoy the games, rides and fun with him or her, sign up now at Corr 101. It is always a great day for everyone involved. Stop in for more information.

Rosemont Campus Openings

Connolly Hall on Rosemont's Campus will be available for the 1993-94 academic year. Interested students should come to the office of Residence Life. Information will be provided to students who would like to secure housing arrangements.

Summer Program in Cadiz, Spain

Applications are now being accepted for the summer program in Cadiz, Spain. Please contact Dr. Mercedes Julia, program director, St. Augustine 343, MWF 10:30 to 11:30 a.m., 645-4186 to make an appointment or for further information.

WARNING:

This could be your last chance to garner some fame on the Villanova campus. USES Literary Arts Magazine will be accepting final submissions until Friday, March 19. So use the next week to get deep, passionate, cerebral, creative or senseless about something. Then bring your works to the USES mailbox in Dougherty 108.

Who gives the right to life?

By GRETCHEN FISHER
Features Editor

"Can you call an acorn an oak tree?" argues the pro-abortion faction. The anti-abortion faction responds, "But do you call an infant an adult?" The controversy surrounding the abortion issue rages on, and even with a second major decision by the U.S. Supreme Court last summer, the debate remains unsettled.

Abortion is defined as the induced termination of pregnancy before the embryo or fetus is capable of survival on its own. Today in the United States, approximately one out of every three pregnancies ends in abortion. In this country, 4,400 abortions are performed a day, totaling 1.6 million a year.

In 1973, the Supreme Court ruled in a landmark decision to legalize abortion for any reason and at any time until delivery. The individual states could then declare their own restrictions on abortion.

Roe v. Wade became one of the most well-known and controversial Supreme Court decisions. The Supreme Court justices based their decision on the contention that the unborn were not granted any rights in our Constitution.

Who gives the right to die?

By PEGGY AGOLINO
Features Editor

The decision of whether to refuse or terminate treatment for someone who is terminally ill or in a vegetative state is one that patients, family members and physicians struggle with every day. With complicated court decisions that have been made such as with Karen Quinlan and Nancy Cruzan, a person's right to die continues to be tested.

The issue here, which is sometimes referred to as euthanasia, is when does a person have the right to die, and if they are not capable of making that decision, who can make it for them? What is the difference between active and passive euthanasia? What rights do the patients and physicians have? Is there a difference between "unplugging" a respirator and withholding food and water?

The word "euthanasia" is defined as the act of killing a person painlessly for reasons of mercy. There are two types of euthanasia: active and passive. According to a pamphlet written by W.A. Nelson and Dr. J.L. Bernat "passive voluntary euthanasia is identical to a valid refusal of treatment that will hasten the Interest increases in Japan education experience

By PETE SMOCK
Staff Reporter

While most Villanova students have opted to spend their semester abroad in countries such as France or Spain, there are a few enterprising individuals who have chosen to go elsewhere. Japan may be half a world away, but these Villanova students have decided to make it their home for a semester.

The opportunity to study for a semester in Japan is a relatively new concept at Villanova. The program was founded in 1988 by Professor Mosaka Hamada in the Modern Languages' department and is also under her direct guidance.

While teaching introductory Japanese classes a few years ago, Hamada decided it was time for students to gain first-hand observations.

"Students can learn so much more by experience," said Hamada. "With a language as difficult as Japanese, the easiest way to appreciate its complexity is to spend some time in Japan."

While studying in Japan, students earn credits toward their electives or a Japanese minor. Hamada believes that once a Japanese major is offered at Villanova, the program will gain increased exposure.

"I definitely would like to see the Japan program get much bigger here. There is a definite interest among the students," she said.

Through Hamada's efforts as many as 20 students have been able to spend time in Japan. Two of her former students, Peter Sand and Patrick McHugh, were greatly influenced by the time they spent in Japan.

Sand, now a Villanova law student, enrolled in a six-week program the summer before his senior year. Instead of opting for the normal dormitory stay, Sand opted to completely immerse himself in Japanese culture by staying in a foreigner's home in Tokyo. His classes, which were conducted in the morning, consisted of Japanese literature and religion.

Pat McHugh spent six months in Japan. While there, McHugh was able to live with over 200 Japanese students in a dormitory setting in Toyko. Being able to live in Japan was a dream come true for McHugh.

"My father and I had always discussed it, and it was through Professor Hamada's encouragement that I was actually able to go through with my plans," he said.

McHugh studied topics such as Buddhism and Japanese politics as well as an intensive Japanese language course. It was the language course that occupied a majority of McHugh's study time.

"I had completed two years of Japanese language study before traveling to Japan. Even with this prior experience I was never even able to achieve fluency because the language is that complex," he said.

As for the city of Tokyo, both Sand and McHugh share similar thoughts. Sand was amazed at the vast area that the city occupies. "Even when you are 20 minutes outside the city, in what would normally be considered a suburb, it is still a sprawling metropolis," he said.

McHugh was impressed by all that there is to see and do in Tokyo. "If I really wanted to I could have spent my whole semester traveling the subways of Tokyo and sightseeing."

While Sand continues to study law at Villanova, McHugh is up for a position in an international shipping company. It is his experience in Japan that makes him feel he is a strong candidate for the job.

Professor urges study abroad

By JAMES J. MURPHY
Special to the Villanovan

Come mid-June of each year, students from Villanova and other institutions gather at JFK airport to begin what will be one of the enriching experiences of their lives.

An exaggeration?

I don't think so. I've been privileged to watch this scenario for many years — to watch them come together at the airport, nervously feeling each other out in small talk, casual chit-chat, each one wondering whether it was a bad decision to go away.

I have been privileged to teach them, live with them, bike with them, laugh with them, debate with them, sing with them. A transforming experience for us all.

I have not yet known a student who regrets the experience.

Why study in Ireland, or anywhere else for that matter, for seven weeks of one's summer?

An easy answer is to do it for the six credits, but that's ultimately an empty answer because it doesn't account for the kinds of learning that can't be measured in credits.

I have not yet known a student who regrets the experience.

A few words of warning. Don't go on any overseas study program just for the sake of some credits. If you just happen to need six credits, don't bother with joining any overseas program. Stay close to your nest, grab your credits in a cozy environment, stare into your beer at Kelly's or "go down the shore," and wonder why anyone would want to be anywhere else.

Overseas students need some sense of adventure, a willingness to take some chances or wandering away from the nest. It's not for everybody.

— Seven weeks away from my friends?

— You got it. That's the whole idea.

— So, why go to Ireland with a bunch of strangers?

— You got it. Because they're strangers, all the better.

Why go?

To learn about a different culture in the world where that culture lives, breathes and walks the streets with you.

To leave your class in archeology and be able to search out a site that was settled three thousand years before Christ was born in far-off Bethlehem.

To read O'Casey or Synge in your textbook and then to hear the rhythm of their writing at the table next to you as you sip on a pint or a drop of tea and listen in as two locals discuss the races.

"That horse couldn't beat my mother at six furlongs," says the one; "Would she be walking or running?" says the other. Or perhaps it's weather talk — "As uncertain as a child's bottom,"

'70s cult classic revived at 'Nova

By CHRISTINE M. SCOMA
Special to the Villanovan

When "Harold and Maude" was released in 1971, it received mixed reviews from film critics, but was extremely popular and well-received by young audiences.

This enthusiasm turned this poignant work into a cult classic.

The film will be shown Monday, March 13 at 7 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema. John Carvalho, professor of philosophy, will be hosting a lecture and entertaining questions concerning the film.

Essentially, the film deals with 20-year-old Harold and his passage from his tumultuous, morbid youth to adulthood. The guide for his journey is Maude, a 79-year-old free-spirit. This theme of passage into adult life is one which is familiar to young audiences and, therefore, largely accounts for the film's popularity.

This passage is achieved by Harold's rebellion against every set institution in society, the military, religion, social standards and authority. Each one of these aspects of social order are personified in the film by a different character.

Harold learns his most important lessons from Maude. He is paralyzed with melancholoy and an obsession with death. In spite of her age, she is able to show him life. Through Maude's transcendental passion for life, the audience as well as Harold are inspired.

Ultimately, this film is many things: a biting social satire overflowing with absurd black humor; a political statement concerning the place of government in our society; an interrogation about the futility of war which can be understood by any generation or a maudlin love story dealing with an unlikely love affair.

Most importantly, though, this film is a joyful reaffirmation about the joys of life, and even death. It is the combination of all these factors which has made this film into a lasting cinematic endeavor and a cult classic among young audiences.

Season of Lent prompts period of spiritual reflection

By LIZ WEAVER
Staff Reporter

Well it's that time of year again. Soon Peter Cottontail will be hopping down the trail delivering candy and eggs. However, there is a lot more to the season of Lent than favorite childhood myths.

This is the time of year when Christians reflect on the death of Jesus and what this symbolizes to us. By observing such days as Ash Wednesday and the Lenten Fridays, we demonstrate our faith.

During Lent, many people choose to give up something that they really enjoy. For some it is a true test of willpower, for others it is something they do without thinking much of what Lent really means.

Last week at mass it was said that Lent should be a humbling experience. When one decides to give up smoking or a favorite food, it should be done to become a better person.

Villanova Campus Ministry offers the students many opportunities to take part in the season of Lent. The calendar is full of events ranging from the Stations of the Cross to retreats. Also, there are daily liturgies in Corr Chapel that are held all year.

Keeping along the lines of Lent Villanova Campus Ministry offers the students many opportunities to take part in the season.

For those students who have decided to test their willpower and give up something for Lent, this past week could have been long and straining. Sophomore Amy Platt has decided to do without one thing she LOVES ... chocolate! When asked how it has been so far, she replied, "My will has been through the ultimate test, especially on spring break."

Even just sitting and listening to people in Connelly Center, one can hear passing students talk about what they have given up. The bits of conversation have included television, drinking and smoking. Villanova sophomore Bill Davis said he gave up all junk food.

Whatever you choose to give up for Lent, try to remember it is not something you are doing to brag about, but something to feel good about inside. You may be going without a material habit or object for a few weeks, but hopefully you will be gaining a spiritual recognition that will last for a lifetime.

Students prepare to "mouth-off" at Lip-It '93

*Special to the Villanovan

LIP-IT '93 will hit campus tonight, and the annual charity event will be complete with a new set of acts and celebrity judges, including a mystery guest from MTV.

Eight acts will compete for the $100 first prize in lip-syncs ranging from the Spin Doctors' "Two Princes" to Barry Manilow's "Copacabana."

The groups will compete against a tough set of judges (who have probably seen and heard all the fake lip-jobs Villanova students can come up with), including Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities and Hank Jensen, superintendent of Radnor Police.

The proceeds for this year's event will go to the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia, Transport Division.

The event will be held in the Jake Nevin Fieldhouse. Doors will open at 7 p.m. and the show will begin at 7:30 p.m. The price of admission is $2.

The proceeds for this year's event will go to the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia.

Unique break trip helps others

Special to the Villanovan

Twelve Villanova students and Steve Pugliese, assistant to the Dean of Students for Judicial Affairs, did not spend their spring break on a sunny beach or a secluded island, but if you asked them how their break was chances are they would say "incredible."

This group spent the week in the village of La Ocha, Panama.

The trip, sponsored by Campus Ministry, allowed the students to help the people of Panama improve their lifestyle in just eight days. Four trenches were dug and concrete was poured into them to form the foundation of a bridge that will soon be built.

Students stayed in a schoolhouse/tent without electricity or running water and they were able to eat with local villagers — a true cultural experience.

"We crossed a lot of language barriers because most people spoke Spanish, but close friendships were formed," said Pugliese. "It was a fantastic experience and when the week was over students didn't want to come back."

Top 10

From the home office in Dougherty 201, here are the top 10 ways to spend your St. Patrick's Day:

10. Rent "The Commitments."
9. Buy a case of Killian's, pick up some corned beef and cabbage, then hit the road for the 10 p.m. mass at St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York City.
8. Drink green beer. Drink cold beer. Drink any beer.
7. Wear a kilt and play the bagpipes. It's traditional.
6. Drink O'Doul's. It's non-alcoholic, but, hey, it's Irish.
5. Shower with Irish Spring. It's clean as a whistle.
4. Break out the Irish Whiskey and sing the Notre Dame fight song.
3. Read about Ireland. In Sports Illustrated, that is.
2. Go to McDonald's and buy a shamrock shake.

And the No. 1 way to spend your St. Patrick's Day this Wednesday:

1. Go to Corn's and kiss the Barley stone.

Euthanasia sparks controversy

patient's death. In these situations it is best to avoid the term euthanasia because of the misunderstanding of the word." Active euthanasia can be described as a physician or caretaker actively administering something to a person with the intent of killing the person.

If patients are capable of making decisions and they refuse treatment, the medical staff must respect their wishes. The ethical problem is most evident when a patient is unconscious or in a vegetative state and is not able to express his or her own wishes about treatment. Often a life support system keeps the person breathing but not alive in any other sense of the word. The family must then try to determine what the person would want done which often means a struggle in court.

The case of Nancy Cruzan, who was in a car accident and was kept alive in a vegetative state with a feeding tube depicts this scenario. After seven years her family knew she would not want to go on this way, but they faced a court battle because Nancy did not leave any concrete evidence of her wishes in this situation. In order to prevent this question, people are now being encouraged to make out a living will or an advanced directive stating their wishes should a situation like this arise.

The issue of removing a feeding tube and virtually allowing a patient to starve to death has caused particular controversy in certain instances. The staff at a nursing home in Albany, N.Y., responded to a nephew's request to have his aunt's feeding tube removed in this manner: "How can we be expected to provide care if the tube is pulled? How can we stand by and watch her starve to death? We are her family, we care about her. We cannot walk down the hall knowing we are killing her."

Maria Andrews is a clinical dietician at the Veterans Administration Medical Center in Wilkes-Barre, Pa. She explains that a patient who dies after a feeding tube or respirator is removed dies from their illness, not the discontinuation of treatment. "This would not even be considered passive euthanasia," said Andrews. She encounters added resistance from people regarding the issue of withholding food and water (nutrition and hydration) and explains that this is only withheld when it is given artificially intravenously (with an IV) or through a feeding tube. The medical staff does not stop feeding someone by mouth. "It is a medical treatment, just like a respirator. It is no different. It is not ordinary or basic care. It is keeping someone alive through artificial means," said Andrews.

Sister Carol Taylor is a registered nurse and an instructor for a bioethics course at Georgetown University. She explained the two main values that should be involved in decisions of this nature: autonomy and well being. The first refers to the patient's right to decide for themselves. "This right is what distinguishes us as humans," said Taylor. The second value refers to the idea that if patients are capable of deciding, they know themselves best and they make choices than enhance that ideal.

These relatively new aspects of this issue which have increased with medical technology are being debated from hospital rooms to court rooms. The right to decide versus the objective of sustaining life at all costs varies in every situation. "People come with different values and for many the quality of life is more important than the quantity," said Andrews.

Debate continues

This decision sparked the formation of the biggest grass-roots movement in our country's history, the self-named Right to Life movement, which is countered by the also powerful Pro-Choice movement.

Those opposed to abortion view it is taking human life, therefore a crime, and neither the mother's nor the government's place to decide. Those in favor of abortion define themselves as pro-choice because they believe it is a woman's right to decide what to do with her body, with no government intervention.

Many people tread a moderate path between the two different factions, opposing all abortions except when the woman's physical or psychological well-being is at stake (if her life or health is in jeopardy or if she is a victim of rape or incest — which together account for about one percent of all abortions).

One professor at Villanova who wishes to remain anonymous warned of the difficulty in "single-focusing the issue" of abortion. She noted that in our culture the issue of abortion has become so highly politicized that for most it is solely a legal issue, and not one with regard to the question of life and the respect for life at all ages.

The professor sees abortion as a much larger issue, involving other problems which also need to be dealt with, such as "making adoptions more readily available, helping parents adequately provide for their children, protecting women and children more thoroughly from rape and incest and doing something about a society that promotes wanton disregard for human sexuality [such as by pornography and promiscuity]."

Abortion has been one of the most important social, political and religious issues in history, and even after two major decisions by the Supreme Court, the controversy surrounding the abortion debate is far from over.

"Six credits" doesn't speak to experiences like that, in fact, the idea of "credit" cheapens the experience of looking out at an ocean and into oneself. The credits are such a bonus they should be taxable at Customs!

Students in this year's Galway program have a choice of two courses from a group of five. The Archeology of Ireland, The History of Modern Ireland, Irish Society, Gaelic Literature and Culture and Modern Irish Literature.

All the courses are conducted at University College Galway and are taught by Irish faculty.

These are all good reasons to consider studying with the Villanova Summer program, but experience tells me that the main one has nothing to do with credits or classrooms.

It has to do with homes. Students in our ireland program live with Irish families, in their homes and in tune with the rhythm of the family's life — and that is the core of our program's value.

Over the years we have established close relationships with the families who host our students. There are households in Galway who have little children more interested in the fortunes of Villanova's basketball team than would be children living around the corner from our own campus.

Our summer program students develop lasting and growing relationships with their host families, in some cases with the host families later visiting student families over here. There are no guarantees on how a home stay will develop, but past experience suggests that the knowledge gained from a home stay is the kind that cannot be measured in exams and credits.

Ask around campus and find some students who have studied in Ireland. They are your best source of straight talk about the program. Search them out and talk it over with them. Then, drop around to see me in Room 467 LAC or give a call at 645-4647.

In the event that you don't join us in Ireland, I hope you'll be studying abroad somewhere else either this summer or at some other time in your undergraduate years.

Trust me, those undergraduate years go away fast, and they don't come back.

Living Colour changes hue on new Stain

By CAROLYN POPPE
Assistant Entertainment Editor

After a five-year absence and reconstruction period, the distinctive rock foursome Living Colour released Stain last week. The album has been long-awaited. It follows up Vivid, which brought about the band's emergence with an innovative, highly acclaimed sound.

Vivid's distinction rested in rich tone and detailed construction, as well as forcefulness. Tracks like "Cult of Personality," "Open Letter to a Landlord" and "Glamour Boys" painted a new picture of sound in rock music. Listeners attended to Living Colour's diversity and, more specifically, its use of funk bass. Kicking bass lines and rapid riffs from bassist Muzz Skillings created a new listening experience.

Listeners, in anticipation of Stain, may fear the loss of Living Colour's funk/rock sound due to the replacement of Skillings with the new bassist Doug Wimbish. Could he replicate or live up to Skillings' talent? Though the change is noticeable, the new music may not be a disappointment for fans.

Stain falls from complex, offbeat rhythm and into more common, driving, downbeat rock. It turns to hard-rock guitar. And if Metallica has not tired out moaning electric-guitar work, there is a chance for what Living Colour constructs on the new album.

The first release, "Leave It Alone," provides the basic feel of Stain. The tune pushes heavy guitar with a moderate, simple rock beat. Its bass remains fairly modest, emerging at times only to reinforce the guitar sound.

Corey Glover's vocals remain a Living Colour strong point. This time, however, his message takes the same dive toward the deep and dark as the tempo and guitar.

From just some of the titles, like "Go Away," "Nothingness," "Wall" and "Mind Your Own Business," the listener gets a first impression of alienation and anger. The group condemns societal apathy, ignorance and prejudice. They look down on excuses like "all the world's problems ain't my fault" in "Ignorance Is Bliss." And "Go Away," the powerful, sarcastic first track, accuses similarly: "I see the starving Africans on T.V./ I feel it has nothing to do with me/ I send my $20 to LiveAid/ I paid my guilty conscience to go away." Though overly-critical, the album's good intentions shine through.

But Living Colour also proves more violent this time. Tracks like "Postman," "This Little Pig" and the experimental-turned-cacophonous "Mind Your Own Business" drag the listener through each song with often loud guitar and purposeless shouting. The listener may feel bullied by such a style.

The group hits some strong chords on a few of the tracks. The fun and daring "Bi" strives for the coming out of bisexuals, saying they "need a closet for the whole world to live in." It works to achieve their acceptance with its light treatment of their lifestyle ("Everybody loves you when you're bi"). The result is a quick tune in which the bass really starts up, adding even a taste of harmonics.

Also memorable on this album is the track "Nothingness." In the way of Vivid's "Broken Hearts," Living Colour shifts downward for this lonely, moving tune. The song does more mood creating than declaring. And even the guitar takes a bit of a break. The group effectively allows the actual music of the piece to come through. The only disappointment in "Nothingness" is that it ends too soon.

With the movement of the album's 13 tracks, Stain, for the most part, gets progressively detailed in its construction. The rapidity and conciseness of a past Living Colour prevails. Characteristic qualities remind the listener of Vivid, like Glover's clear vocals, percussion that pumps throughout and the use of various discourses for added imagery (remember "Ask not what your country can do for you . . . "?) The vivaciouis drive of the group lives on in Stain - as long as one can get past Vernon Reid's guitar to hear it.

Music Awards Shows reflect many tastes

By ERIC CHEUNG
Assistant Entertainment Editor

The number of music awards shows floating about boggles the mind. Already Billboard and the American Music Awards have had their annual celebrations featuring the best in music. However, this is only the beginning.

Soon to come will be a host of shows honoring all aspects and types of music. Already there exist songwriter music awards, independent music awards, music awards for New York artists, awards for California artists, a Latin Pop awards show, the British Music awards (where Annie Lennox dominated), a music awards show for Canadians (Tom Cochrane was the big winner last year) and what seems to be a trillion different country music awards.

Why are there so many different programs to choose from? The answer is simple enough; there are so many different tastes in music. As the years go by, more and more proponents have come forth to proudly display their type of music through the format of an awards show.

Although for many people these shows are nothing more than a nuisance which serves to interrupt their normal weekly television viewing, the awards do serve important purposes. Each show honors artists that have made great achievements in the respective arena of music being honored. Additionally, they serve to showcase specific kinds of music, holding the spotlight on the movers and shakers of their genre.

There are many different awards shows to match the different tastes. A quick perusal of some of the various shows coming up will help show the diverse nature of music. The 35th Annual Grammys, held Feb. 24, gave the most accolades to Eric Clapton and Beauty and the Beast.

Among all the awards shows, the Grammys is perhaps the most prestigious, though not necessarily the most popular. Given by the music industry as a whole, the Grammys attempts to recognize the best in just about every field.

There is no comprehensive awards show that honors all music fairly.

This year Eric Clapton dominated, sweeping the Best Song, Best Record (both were for "Tears In Heaven"), Best Album (Unplugged), Best Rock Male, Best Rock Single and Best Pop Male categories. Of course, these awards have led to a recent run on Clapton's Unplugged EP which has jumped to the No. 1 spot on the Billboard album chart (selling four million copies). His many appearances on stage to accept his awards were probably matched by his modesty when he commented that other artists and singers were worthier than him.

Disney's phenomenal Beauty and the Beast garnered five awards, including Best Pop Group for Celine Dion and Peabo Bryson's performance of the title song. Arrested Development took home awards for Best New Artist as well as Best Rap Group.

Boyz II Men also got two awards for Best R&B Song and Group. Their producers L.A. Reid and Babyface shared the Best Producer Award with Achtung Baby's Daniel Lanois and Brian Eno. Speaking of which, U2 nabbed an award for Best Rock Group.

Some pleasant surprises included k.d. Lang's Pop Female Award victory, as well as Vince Gill's Country awards for Best Male Vocal and Song. Other winners included Red Hot Chili Peppers, Chaka Kahn, Nine Inch Nails, Sir Mix-A-Lot, Enya, Jon Secada and Shabba Ranks.

Despite the fanfare that all these winners received, Michael Jackson once again threatened to steal the show. Not even electing to sing, his mere presence made the audience go wild. His little sister, Janet Jackson, presented the Grammy Legend Award to Jackson.

The pair had probably the most touching moment of the entire show when the Jacksons embraced each other, saying how proud they were of each other's success. Jackson also made a few jokes, including the now famous statement that indeed he and Janet were "two different people."

Jackson's numerous appearances should grant for him a new title, King of the Music Award Shows. All this exposure has catapulted his album from below the top 100 all the way into the

Harriet Wheeler dazzles with The Sundays

By MARK McCREARY
Staff Reporter

In Philadelphia, there are a lot of live shows. There are easily enough shows for almost anyone that resides around here. And when one hits one of those shows that really makes listeners smile, it is a special night. Whether it is because of being able to let out pent-up emotions to a way-too-fast rhythm, or being able to sit back and take in the emotions that are emanating from the crowd, it is a great experience. Well, the Sundays concert was one of those special nights, and who better to spend one of those evenings with than Harriet Wheeler and her accomplices?

The Sundays entered the Theatre of Living Arts promptly after Luna exited the stage on February 23. When they hit the stage, it became clear that they had not deserted their 1989 jewel, Reading, Writing and Arithmetic, since their first two songs were from this release, as were six more throughout their performance. This was not an insane concert, though the crowd was energetic. Theirs is mellow music which gives a definite massage to the ears. And seeing it live only contributed to this feeling. The crowd was remarkably young, female-dominated and enjoying the show overall.

Of those present, it was clear that many were new fans of this band and were pretty much only familiar with their sophomore endeavor, Blind. That became obvious when their third and fourth songs, "What Do You Think" and "Medicine," were at hand. The crowd seemed to scream, "Hey, I know that song!" The rest of the show consistently kept the crowd enthralled and left all happy tht they attended. And even though the T-shirts were cheesy, they were scattered all over the place as people were leaving. Strangely, it was after the show that the real excitement began.

Just about everyone has a person they would really like to meet, if only to satisfy his or her curiosity. In my case, I was lucky enough to have the opportunity to interview Harriet Wheeler. I had thought up many questions prior to meeting her, but I wanted them to be really interesting. First, I asked whether she was married or had a boyfriend. The reply was "No," and she put the rumor that she was married to David Gavurin (guitar) to rest. Getting a bit braver, I asked if she wanted a boyfriend. Once again, the answer was "No."

Next, stumbling over each word that dared cross my lips to this beauty, I asked how difficult it was to make Blind. "It took a while to make. Not that we had any real doubts about what we wanted to do, we just wanted to do it right," she said, finishing her beer and twisting a new one to life. "We started out managing ourselves, which was pretty pressureless. Our label, Rough Trade, collapsed, and we were picked up by EMI. Suddenly, it was time to finish this project."

Somehow, I got lost in her eyes, and found myself drowning in a 10-second silence. Finally, I told her, with a shaky voice, how much I liked the "Medicine" video and asked what would be the next one. "We did a cover of the Rolling Stones' "Wild Horses" and thought it would be nice to do," was her reply.

Deciding against asking the boyfriend question again, I tried to find out if the honesty had kicked in yet and asked her age. "I am 29. We are all 29, except Pat [Patrick Hannon, drums], who is 27," she said. Noticing that she kept looking over my shoulder, I thanked her for the interview and the patience. I began to ask if she got tired of all the touring, but suddenly realized that it would be a silly question. She probably was getting tired of silly questions, and silly 20-year-old boys, so I made my exit.

Special thanks to James Bon Tempo, Tara Sullivan and Geffen Records for arranging the interview.

David Gavurin and Harriet Wheeler gave an enjoyable performance for the Troc crowd.

The Giant Pandas diversify local stages

The Giant Panda Gypsy Blues Band breaks the Top-40 mold.

By KAREN CAMPBELL
Associate Editor

There comes a time in all discerning music-lovers' lives when we listen intently to the drivel spewing from the airwaves and find ourselves turning away in disgust. Every dance mix is identical, the Top 40 is predictable, grunge leaves us yawning and even alternative seems to have sold out to popular approval. If you have become accustomed to settling for familiarity instead of demanding creativity, take this opportunity to tap into the more eclectic sounds of up-and-coming local bands — starting with the Giant Panda Gypsy Blues Band.

The Pandas offer a much-needed retreat from the canned sounds of mainstream music with a diverse selection of sounds. They pack the stage with a variety of instruments, producing a sound that highlights every musician's talents without overwhelming the audience. In fact, The Pandas depend on their distinctive musical mix to connect with their listeners, according to vocalist and acoustic guitarist, Steve Kauffman.

"What's coolest for us is when the audience participates and responds to the music. When people hear something for the first time, they're unsure how to respond. When something is on the radio, it's legitimized. When something is original, it's tougher to respond to. But we see even people who don't dance becoming fascinated by our music — watching us and appreciating it. Whatever size venue we play, we like to communicate with the audience," said Kauffman.

The individual members of The Pandas gravitated to each other over a period of months last year, each contributing a bit of their own distinct backgrounds and talents along the way. Kauffman met up with Steve Hessler (acoustic guitar, harmonica, vocals), Ed Alleva (bass, acoustic bass, vocals), Brad Dudley (percussion, drums, bar stool) and Jeanne Schmitt (acoustic guitar, vocals) at an open-mic night. The four formed a base band whose creativity attracted C.R. Gruver (piano, organ, vocals) and percussionist Dave Kirschner.

For such a young band, The Giant Pandas have garnered plenty of attention, opening for bands both in Philly and on the Main Line. Such performances have earned them quite a following for their own solo performances in the area. Their music combines elements of the Grateful Dead with a slight jazz influence and, according to The Pandas, "plenty of acid folk and psychedelic disco that changes every time we play."

The contributions of vocalists Kauffman, Hessler, Schmitt and Gruver add a variety and distinction absent in many other bands. Each draws from a distinguished background in musical experience. Schmitt's talents are especially highlighted in many of the Panda's songs. Her involvement with the Mendelsohn Choir combined with her own creative style produces amazing results.

The resulting tunes might not conform to the traditional standards of popularity dictated by local radio stations ("We will not play 'Stairway to Heave' or 'Freebird,' " said Gruver). But the unique result is a well-deserved break from the tired efforts of overplayed cover bands.

The Pandas provide much more than just good music. The lyrics of their songs mirror many of the political and environmental concerns facing our generation. "We have a deep commitment to social change and environmental issues. Our music is very world-oriented," said Kauffman, who is also a professor of social work at Widener University.

"Our music is about social justice and many of the other issues that concern folks your age. People raised during the Reagan and Bush era really got the shaft and now they're starting to stand up for their beliefs and rights. It's not really like living the '60s all over again because I think it's more sophisticated and we're not being led down paths blindly anymore. Our music questions the world. Instead of reflecting the issues that face this generation, we're seeing it with the same eyes you do," said Kauffman.

Currently, the Giant Pandas are working with a producer on their first album and hope to maintain the contact with their audience that is so essential to their success through a summer tour. Look for them soon in local clubs like The Ambler Cabaret and 23 East Cabaret as well as in Philly hot spots. If rushing to commit predictable hits and trite lyrics to memory no longer interests you, the Giant Panda Gypsy Blues Band will.

Duran Duran emerges from hibernation

By MAURA RURAK
Senior Writer

In the '80s they were new-wave romantics; now in the '90s they are members of the alternative scene. Clearly Duran Duran has come a long way from its first smash single "Girls On Film."

The three original members, Simon Le Bon, John Taylor, and Nick Rhodes secure the foundation of the revised Duran Duran with the latest addition, Warren Cuccurulio. The long-awaited release of Duran Duran shows a band who has not only grown in musical depth and understanding, but who has transformed its roots into a new and mature sound.

This self-entitled album defines a new beginning for Duran Duran. Decade, released late in 1989, was the last time the public officially heard from the group. Even so, Decade contained only previously released material — a "greatest hits" type of album. At that time, Andy Taylor (lead guitarist) and Roger Taylor (percussion) had left to pursue other projects.

Now, almost four years later, the new Duran Duran presents 12 tracks that synthesize incredible harmonies with both acoustic and progressive backgrounds.

The first single, "Ordinary World," is a perfect example of a strong acoustic base heightened by synthesized melodies. Combined with Le Bon's own unique, smooth, sensual sound, the track carries a distinct harmony from the musicians. The final product is undeniably attractive and will not be destroyed by the constant radio-play it has received.

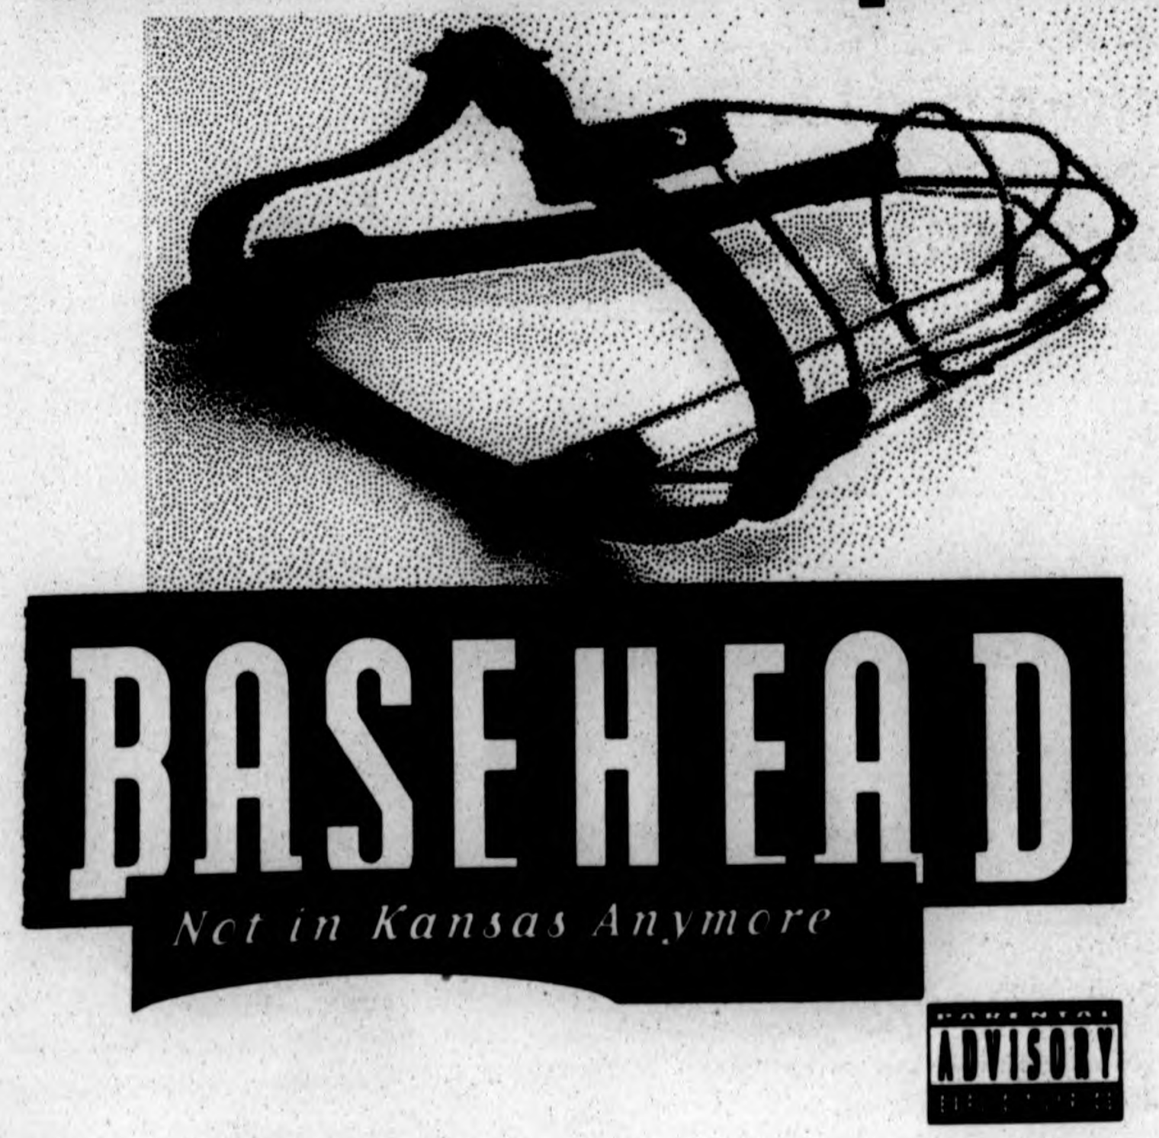
The new sexuality that seeped through earlier cuts such as "Hungry Like The Wolf," "Notorious," and "Skin Trade" is one aspect that is still very evident in Duran Duran. "Voodoo Love" projects deep tones of love in a pulsing rhythm. Meanwhile, "Come Undone" weaves poetic verse about lost love with a slow, magnetic instrumental sound. It is this classic element that will keep the faithful followers and attract new ones.

Definitely an alternative style of music, it is now difficult to categorize Duran Duran with other groups. Its product is unified and complete with a few surprises stuck inside. "Breath After Breath" balances a mix of English and Spanish lyrics while "Umf" borders on hip-hop rap.

The talented members of Duran Duran gained fame and fortune early in their careers. However, many passed them off as a fad who infatuated teenagers adored. If Duran Duran is any indication, this simply is not true. The band has remained true to its initial sound and has not jumped on any bandwagon to ensure commercial success.

After a long hibernation, the Duran Duran of the '90s is more modern and mature. The individuality will set them apart as veterans among the alternative crowd.

Basehead opens minds with unusual rap



By MARK McCREARY
Staff Reporter

"I don't know what category we fit into, and nobody else does, either," admits Michael Ivey, the soft-spoken mastermind of Basehead. "I've accomplished my mission in coming up with something a bit unusual, but I don't know what to call our music."

This opening to Imago's biography on Basehead hits the nail on the head . . . the Basehead, that is. And those who were familiar with their 1991 debut, Play With Toys, knew that what this band put out in the future would be a jewel. Well, the future has rolled up and smacked Basehead fans in the face, and the possessor of this "backhand" is the new CD, Not In Kansas Anymore. That is right fans, it is here, and it is hear. All 19 tracks are dying to pervade your stereo, your ears and your mind. And for those that were impressed with Play With Toys, it is time to be impressed again.

Basehead's leader, Michael Ivey, takes listeners on another journey in his world: a world filled with humor, sarcasm and honesty. And if it is not the mellow beat and bass line that relaxes the mind, then his voice is sure to do the trick. But what Ivey speaks about through his lyrics is not overbearing, and is more or less factual. This is a man that tells it like it is, and though he believes that a song is not going to change people's minds, awareness is the tool of choice. What makes this CD different from the first is that it has an edge to it. It speaks in a more definitive tongue, while keeping its lazy, inebriated tone. This five-man rappin' band is sure to keep attentions gripped with a vice and keep minds opened with a wedge.

Amazingly, only three songs on Not In Kansas Anymore include all

Ice Cube brings South Central to the Troc

By MICHAEL DeBLASI
Staff Reporter

Ice Cube brought his west coast gangsta-rap to the Trocadero March 1 and did not disappoint a devoted crowd. Cube's most recent album, The Predator, has sold well over one million copies and further solidifies his reputation as one of the most political and controversial rappers in America today.

The Predator not only is an album responding to critics, but also to the aftermath of the Rodney King beating and subsequent L.A. riots. Cube was one rapper who forecasted the riots well before they happened and he believes that they were just the first sign of an even bigger revolution. He has desperately tried to educate America about the problems in South Central Los Angeles and in cities all over the U.S. through his music. The frightening reality of what Ice Cube says has, however, earned him several detractors. He has never backed down from what he believes in, and he prides himself in not "selling out" for commercial reasons. In fact, Cube maintains his home and new record label in the troubled "hood" of South Central L.A., and he was instrumental in helping form a major gang truce in L.A. after the riots.

He has never backed down from what he believes in.

Ice Cube has always spoken his mind on his albums, and he is no different in concert. Performing his latest songs, as well as songs from his first solo album, AmeriKKKa's Most Wanted, and 1991's Death Certificate, Cube voiced his usual opinions on the government, police departments, the media, censorship, violence, immoral rappers and the problems with a racially integrated society as it stands today.

The racially mixed crowd, mostly in their 20s, was louder than a bomb throughout the night. And, for a few hours at least, prejudice, hatred and anger were replaced by an overwhelming realization, compassion and desire to change some of the problems facing our society.

After a performance by Da Lench Mob, who have backed Cube on his albums, Ice Cube attacked the stage with a fury, belting out tracks like "When Will They Shoot," "Now I Gotta Wet 'Cha," "Once Upon a Time In The Projects," "True To The Game," "No Vaseline" and "It Was a Good Day," a tune which is now receiving extensive airplay on both Q-102 and Power 99.

Cube was at his best while raging through "The Nigga You Love To Hate," "How To Survive South Central" and "Wicked," with enough energy to seemingly shake the entire foundation of the Trocadero.

ICE CUBE
THE PREDATOR
ADVISORY

Before leaving for the night, Ice Cube encouraged peace and thanked the sell-out crowd for listening to his message. Without a doubt, the crowd was the only sell-out in the building as Ice Cube, more than ever, remains "true to the game."

Lesser-known films emerge as nominees

By JOSEPH R. McCABE
Staff Reporter

The 1993 Academy Award nominations were announced in February with the usual hype and hoopla. With the winners to be announced on March 30, an examination of the nominees for best picture is in order.

In recent years, nominees and winners were blockbuster crowd-pleasers such as "Dances with Wolves" and "The Silence of the Lambs." This year's nominees, however, are practically unknowns in comparison. With none of the year's high-grossing films nominated, it may be worth a look to see if those which were nominated deserve the title Best Picture.

"Unforgiven" — Clint Eastwood's revisionist western comes at a time when even traditional westerns are unpopular. Unlike "Dances with Wolves," "Unforgiven" portrays the Old West as it truly was: harsh, brutal and dehumanizing. A quiet and profound film, its screenplay and acting are of a caliber unmatched in most Hollywood productions.

"Scent of a Woman" — Martin Brest's reworking of the original play is part comedy, part drama and all Al Pacino. One's opinion of the film depends largely on his/her opinion of Pacino's acting. Audiences seem to love or hate it, but the film probably has not captured enough critical or commercial success to earn the award.

"The Crying Game" — Absolutely uncategorizable, "The Crying Game" is arguably the strangest film of the year. Director Neil Jordan manages to put top-drawer comedy, romance, thrills and social commentary in one film and still keep it humble. Forget the latest movie-of-the-week or flash-trash like "Basic Instinct." This is the kind of film Alfred Hitchcock would have made if he were still alive.

"A Few Good Men" — Rob Reiner was once one of Hollywood's most promising young directors. After all, the man made "Spinal Tap," "The Sure Thing," "Stand By Me" and "The Princess Bride" back-to-back. Rather than a Best Picture, "A Few Good Men" is sad proof of the compromises one makes to stay alive in Tinseltown. The film is overrated and overinflated. Jack Nicholson's fine 10 minutes of acting are hardly worth sitting through two hours of mediocrity.

"Howard's End" — This adaptation of E.M. Forster's novel is worth seeing just for the performances of Anthony Hopkins, Emma Thompson and Vanessa Redgrave. One might be surprised that it is also the best film of the year. James Ivory directs this clash of social classes with coolness and intelligence. It is haunting and powerful and envelopes one in a mood which lingers long after leaving the theater.

So who does the Oscar go to? Probably it should go to "Howard's End," maybe "Unforgiven." The Oscars are after all only a business giving awards to itself. The winner will be which film is best for business. This eliminates "Crying Game" (too controversial) and "Scent of a Woman" (not popular enough). "A Few Good Men" is least deserving but could win because it does not offend anyone, except the filmgoer. Either "The Player," "A River Runs Through It," "Aladdin," or "The Last of the Mohicans" could and should have been nominated in its place, but that is show business.

'Amos and Andrew' mocks race stereotype

By COLEEN KENIREY
Entertainment Editor

"Amos and Andrew" presents a racial role reversal that is intended to make viewers evaluate their own prejudices. Andrew Sterling (Samuel L. Jackson) is a Pulitzer Prize-winning black author who moves to a predominantly white New England island. Amos Odell (Nicolas Cage) is the criminal who the chief of police (Dabney Coleman) uses as a scapegoat to cover up a case of mistaken identity in which the police had surrounded Sterling's home thinking he was robbing it.

Samuel L. Jackson and Nicolas Cage play comedic companions in "Amos and Andrew."

"[This comedy] looks at a serious issue and perhaps, using humor, makes it more acceptable to a wider audience," according to the director. "Hopefully, society can look at this and see themselves in there."

One of the film's initial scenes establishes the main theme. A white neighbor, who has observed Sterling installing a stereo in his new home, jumps to racist conclusions stating, "When you see a black man on this island with his arms full of stereo equipment, you know damn good and well what he's doing."

Some critics complain that the script contains many stereotypical characters, to which director and screenwriter Max Frye responded at a press conference with college journalists, "that's the point — there really is only one character that's not a stereotype and that's Andrew Sterling."

Odell fits the white trash thief mold and the police easily fit the incompetent cops category which was created by films like "Police Academy." The white neighbors are typical self-proclaimed liberal baby boomers who suffer from terminal suburban insularity. The most accurate stereotype, however, is the Rev. Fenton Brunch, a bible-toting Al Sharpton clone. Sterling, unlike the other characters, breaks from his socially prescribed role through his wealth and education.

"Amos and Andrew" proved to be a story of topical significance as the Rodney King incident and Los Angeles riots coincided with the making of the film, which examines the issue of racial misunderstanding involving police. Frye commented that the parallel between art and reality created "a strange contrast" and made the film "a sobering experience." Frye stated that his screenplay, written six months prior to the L.A. riots, proved to be "prophetic."

The first-time director emphasized that his film is "not only a comment on society but also deals with the stereotypes within the entertainment industry." He cited improvements in Hollywood that have already been made, stating, "for me, Wesley Snipes doing 'Passenger 57' is a step in the right direction because that could have been Bruce Willis or anyone else."

The Rodney King incident and L.A. riots made the story topical.

Jackson, currently starring in "Loaded Weapon," tempered Frye's comments remarking, "If I wanted to do a role and there's a white female co-star, it changes the politics of the film and they're not going to do that — unlike 'The Bodyguard,' because people in power don't feel sexually threatened by that."

Jackson, who received critical acclaim for his role as drug addict Gator in Spike Lee's "Jungle Fever," said of the pressure on black actors to choose responsible roles, "everybody wants us to be role models — no one ever asks anyone else to do that." Despite this pressure, the theatrically trained actor said, "my responsibility as an actor is to be true to every character."

The film's title was inspired by the 1930s radio show "Amos n' Andy," which eventually was translated to television and portrayed offensive stereotypes of blacks. In comparing these early stereotypes with today's industry, Frye reflected "Traditionally, Hollywood has evolved from the butler/maid domestic type black people into pimps and drug dealers."

Charged with symbolic meaning, "Amos and Andrew" contains a scene in which Sterling is chased through a field by a white man with bloodhounds. Frye said he created this vivid image to bring out the "irony that a black man moving to an island of contemporary liberals . . . can still end up being chased like it was 150 years ago."

"Amos and Andrew" puts forth a social commentary bathed in humor. The director is hopeful yet realistic in his vision of the future. He hopes that in 20 years "people can look at it and say 'that was 1993 — those things happened in 1993 — they don't happen anymore," but Frye also realizes that "prejudices and stereotypes evolve like society evolves."

'Mad Dog' stars turn sour

By AARON NICODEMUS
Senior Reporter

Role reversals are a common movie ploy, but here is a film with a real twist: the switch takes place before the camera rolls, and instead of characters changing places, its actors do. Confused? That seems to be the point of "Mad Dog and Glory," which mischievously toys with the audience's expectations and prejudices both in plot and casting, while substituting a totally ridiculous scenario that is harder to sit through than a Villanova basketball game.

Robert DeNiro is Wayne, a mild-mannered homicide detective and amateur photographer whose specialty is capturing frozen death scenes as he encounters them. Afraid to take chances or stand up for himself, Wayne seems destined for complete obscurity. That is before he saves a local loan-shark named Frank (Bill Murray), who pledges to turn Wayne's boring and riskless life on its ear.

The film's primary quirks involve its two male stars, who overuse their acting talents to imitate each other's previous onscreen attempts. Murray's character Frank (a.k.a. "The Money Store") has many people pay their debts in the form of obligations of godfatherly "friendship." The performance is nothing more than a poor man's version of DeNiro's Al Capone character in "The Untouchables." And DeNiro's Wayne (cynically nicknamed "Mad Dog") straddles the edge between madness and respectability. So while DeNiro does his interpretation of Murray's character in "What About Bob?," viewers are left wondering when this mutually annoying role reversal will end.

Lost in the shuffle of egos is Uma Thurman as Glory, Murray's gift of week-long hired female compaionship given to DeNiro as a human thank-you note for saving his life. Better actresses would have been hard-pressed to make anything of this role, but Thurman literally fades away into cliche without a fight.

To add to the confusion, "Mad Dog and Glory" is not a comedy, as the commercials might have you believe. While it may be attempting to provide insight into relationships, it cannot get past its own cleverness. So much time is spent proving things are not as they seem, that nothing makes sense. All the while, the film gleefully (and constantly) reminds us that Murray is a walking caricature of DeNiro, and vice-versa.

One redeeming quality is the interaction between Thurman and DeNiro. Granted, their on-screen chemistry generates about as much heat as a Congressional press conference, but it seems heart-felt and genuine. DeNiro carries most of the acting weight on his more than able shoulders, while Thurman merely goes through the motions. True to the current modeling style of wispy, lanky beauties, Thurman fits the trendy, bohemian mold. But she still cannot act.

"Mad Dog and Glory" has noble intentions that turn sour. Since it is not funny, not dramatic, not romantic and not violent, what is left? Plodding and slow, overbearing and silly, "Mad Dog and Glory" might have done better to stick with conventional wisdom and keep Murray as the bumbler and DeNiro as the psycho. But you never know unless you try.

FAST FORWARD: There is a definite pattern of thought that seems to possess Hollywood screenwriters. They watch a film like "Jennifer Eight," which involved a beautiful blind girl being stalked by a serial killer with a passion for sightless victims. So a writer says, "OK, let's work with this. What if the girl was deaf, instead of blind? Yes, I have an idea!" The result is "Hear No Evil," a film about (surprised, folks?) a deaf girl pursued by homicidal maniacs. Starring D.B. Sweeney ("The Cutting Edge"), Martin Sheen and Marlee Matlin, "Hear No Evil" is due out by the end of March.

You may not know this, but France has become the next biggest source for movie remakes (or rip-offs) since the "new twist on an old theme" syndrome (see above.) Since French film rehashes like "Sommersby" and "The Vanishing" met varying degrees of success, now "Point of No Return," is the American version of 1991's "La Femme Nikita." Bridget Fonda stars as a druggie hanger-on to a group of thugs who is eventually jailed and given a choice: death, or life as a government assassin. Harvey Keitel is the brutal government agent who presents her with the "kill or be killed" choice. Its release date is March 19.

REWIND: "Last of the Mohicans" comes out on video today with Daniel Day-Lewis as a macho renegade and Madeleine Stowe as his love interest. While the historical details are meticulously accurate, the romantic dialogue is full of cliches and empty lines. The really stunning character in this fiery historical drama is Magua, a leathery, hard-eyed Indian thirsty for revenge on the "white hairs." Wes Studi's incredible performance, combined with some thrillingly realistic battles, makes "Last of the Mohicans" a worthwhile rental.

Duet creates exotic folk

By COLEEN KENIREY
Entertainment Editor

The Cutting Edge

Between The Lines calls it "electro-acoustic." It sounds like a fusion of world music and folk with blues influences hiding in the crevices. Their eclectic music is an airy and poetic blend which lends itself to a coffeehouse atmosphere.

The most striking element of their style is its intimate ties to nature. There is a strong outdoor quality produced by the organic sounds present.

This attribute is especially highlighted on "Rain," a song described in the liner notes as a live improvisation. The track creates the illusion of a rainforest with gentle drops filling the background joined by the exotic calls of "Wah-nee" birds.

"Rain" features an interesting vocal usage which singer Kristin Kunhardt also employs in several other instances on this self-titled CD. Kunhardt treats her voice as another part of the instrumental ensemble.

The combination of humming and other unique noises replaces the singing of actual words on "Rain" and "The Letter" and simply enhances traditional singing throughout the rest of the songs. This vocal method allows Kunhardt to explore her range and the emotions of the music without being tied to concrete words.

Kunhardt's vocal eloquence carries the songs to a more abstract level and further ties them to other world music which frequently contains similar non-verbal intonations.

Between The Lines' strongest bonds with world music, however, result from their subtle use of instruments such as the bongos, doumbek, shekere and caxixis which percussionist Jamal Mohmed skillfully utilizes throughout most of the CD.

"Close Your Eyes" contains sweet and delicate notes with Kunhardt's voice occasionally sounding like a flute. The tune is softly simple and the lyrics encapsulate sadness: "Morning comes/ crowds your dreams out through the window/ silent tears on one hears/ the promises you make." The song establishes a parallel between the individual's feelings and nature by its references to rains and the sea.

The lyrics reach their pinnacle in terms of natural imagery with the enchanting "Boathouse." Music and words seal a vivid series of impressions: "She makes a candle with a bell jar of fireflies/ in their secret summer hiding place." The images furtherenclose other senses as Kunhardt sings, "Lying on blankets he touches her hair/ kisses wet with salt heavy air."

Guitarist Joseph Brenna, the other half of Between The Lines, remains virtually in the background until "Chagall's Dream." Acoustics are finally paid their proper respects on this cut as Brenna comes to the forefront, creating a gently floating array of sounds. The song is appropriately dreamy with its wispy guitar and haunting piano.

The words convey the artist's imaginary world: "Little man floats by on a star/ floating yellow and blue/ like clouds in a wind kissed sky/ he passes her window and lets the rose fall."

Between The Lines is a duet that writes its own music and lyrics. Kunhardt is the primary lyricist and Brenna usually creates the musical arrangements. Kunhardt is a classically trained vocalist who worked as a performance artist and an actress before forming the band. Brenna gained his previous experience playing guitar with improvisational music groups. On their first release they have enlisted the talents of other musicans as well.

The weakness of Between The Lines is that most of these songs sound very similar. This is balanced by Kunhardt's clear and entrancing voice and their use of exotic instrumentation.

Between The Lines recently played at the Oyster Bar and it would be a good idea to look for any other area performances because the band's strengths would translate well to a club with an intimate atmosphere.

Where You Been showcases Mascis' talent

By CHRISTOPHER GONNELLI
Staff Reporter

Few names come to mind when considering those individuals who have been the singular contributor in the primary aspects (writing, producing, singing and playing instruments) of manufacturing a compact disc. Robbie Robertson, Bruce Springsteen and Sting come to mind, but they are all co-producers of their respective works. It is also important to remember that because of the musical reputation of these artists, many people extend their hands in an attempt to offer them their talents.

Yet, one may add another lesser-known figure to this list, J Mascis. Who? J Mascis, the singular producer, writer, vocalist and guitarist for the band Dinosaur Jr., on their latest compact disc release, Where You Been.

No comparison should be drawn between Mascis and Dinosaur Jr. and any of the aforementioned artists. Musically, they are day and night. On Where You Been, Mascis offers a wide vocal range, extending from whiny, anguish-laced to sharp, refined vocals. He coordinates his vocal style with roaring guitar solos and soothing acoustic guitar sequences. Underlying Mascis' showmanship is a pounding percussion arrangement coupled with the driving bass lines of Mike Johnson.

The theme of this 10-track CD is in its title Where You Been. Mascis is trapped in a failing relationship. The listener understands the relationship from the point of view of one individual, that of Mascis. Throughout the CD, Mascis searches for answers as to why his relationship failed. He continually poses the questions "What have you been doing? Where have you been, while I suffer in my loss?"

The CD opens with a moaning and grinding guitar on "Out There." Mascis pleads, "just tell me this is all a dream." He then breaks the monotony with the second track and the first single off Where You Been, titled "Start Choppin." The opening guitar sequence on this track possesses a Rolling Stones quality, but it is only a precursor to the ebullient, choppy guitar riffs which follow.

"Start Choppin" exposes Mascis' range as a vocalist by moving from a raspy voice to a piercing tone in the chorus. "Start Choppin" is Mascis' first appeal to his partner to stop being unreasonable. He requests, "It's the last thing on my mind/ still you won't let things unwind/ spinning tight around your head/ can't you hear a word I said?"

The song which best encompasses Mascis' musical talents as well as the theme of the CD is "What Else Is New." Mascis combines a consistent acoustic base with a pop-oriented and jovial guitar solo, which leads into a string arrangement having the demeanor of U2's "All I Want Is You." The song is Mascis' second plea for reconciliation. He reverbates at the conclusion of the song, "You got things to do/ so what else is new ... Won't you come and see/ you're the only one."

Midway through the CD, Mascis clearly loses his sanity. The dizzying, hard core guitar sequences in "On The Way" portray a vengeful tone. Mascis' loss of his ability to reason is evident as he sings, "Just can't pull it together ... I've been a wreck for so long." In the driving, blues-oriented "Get Me," Mascis seeks support from his companion, only to realize that he is on his own. He asks, "You're not gonna get me through this are you?"

The resonant "Not The Same" exposes Mascis' reasons for his depression as he softly sings in his sharp-toned voice, analogous to that of Neil Young, "I'm not going to say I've had my way/ you sure saw that/ but what else can I do?/ You promised so much,/ lied with every touch,/ I believed you'd follow through."

The CD moves toward jealousy in the potent "Hide" to self-pity in the acoustic "Goin Home." The song "Hide" is the only piece on the CD where Mascis' energetic, hard-care guitar work is not the primary focal point. The percussion steps up slightly, while Mascis' relentless guitar permeates the background. In "Hide," guitar, bass and percussion operate as one, tight unit. Throughout the CD, Mascis functions independently of the bass and percussion. In "Hide," Dinosaur Jr., achieves unity.

The final track, "I Ain't Sayin," finds Mascis returning to his partner. Between the sparkling opening and closing guitar sequences, Mascis humorously sings, "Now I'm Learning/ it's not a good sign/ wheels are turning/ I'm rolling home to you."

The sound of Dinosaur Jr. is refreshing. The multiple musical range of the band moves from a blues-rock style, to vigorous, distorted, hard-core guitar arrangements, to orotund grooves. The musical talents of J Mascis and his supporting cast are worth discovering.

New rap

five band members, while the rest are Ivey alone with Brian Hendrix on drums. Clearly, Ivey is at the helm of this band, and does a fine job, too. Many of the tracks are under-a-minute narrations, which add to the humor of the disc, and make it flow even more purely. The first track, "Not in Kansas," pokes fun at those who are concerned with teenage sex and family values, proclaiming the fact that sex is going to happen regardless. Well, maybe not at a Catholic school, or in Kansas, but it is everywhere else. "I Need a Joint," is a tale of a crazed party animal, looking for treats at a party, and it displays an ironically grim view of that type of person. "Greener Pastures" is about black-on-black crime, and is sure to raise controversy. The first single from Not In Kansas Anymore, "Do You Wanna F ... (Or What?)," luckily has a radio-edit version, so hopefully it will hit the airwaves around here. The unedited track is much more "colorful" and is one of the outstanding tracks, which resembles the feeling of what Play With Toys had to offer.

Those who are familiar with Basehead's work, know this disc is a must. For Basehead virgins who dig mellow music, slow-rap style and a comfortable groove, this is calling their names. Most people that have heard Basehead really like the style. Though it is hard to read minds, this is definitely the new direction in which rap is headed, and it is dope fresh. Basehead will never receive the audience that they deserve, thank God, but it is okay to let the secret out around campus. Just do not tell all of the friends at home.

'Swing Kids' combat Nazism through dance

By CATHERINE C. GRAHAM
Staff Reporter

As Adolf Hitler moves his country closer to war, groups of German teenagers, influenced by the passion, politics and voice of American swing music, rebel against the stern order. Known as "Swing Kids," they grow their hair long, wear oversized coats and bowler hats and dance to the music of such legends as Henny Goodman and Count Basie. As their freedom to express themselves through music and dance is curbed, they occasionally get into fights with the brown shirts of the Hitler Youth brigades.

Best friends, Peter Muller (Robert Sean Leonard of "Dead Poet's Society") and Thomas Berger (Christian Bale) are the main Swing Kids. Muller is forced to join the Hitler youth because of a youthful prank and suspicious heritage. Berger joins up to keep his friend comapny. They both believe they can have it all — Hitler youth by day, Swing Kids by night. However, the reality of 1939 Nazi Germany affects their friendship. They are forced to decide between the freedom and individualism of the music or the power and conformity of the Nazis, in Hollywood pictures' new film "Swing Kids."

The movie is directed by Thomas Carter ("Hill Street Blues" and "Miami Vice"), written by Jonathan Marc Feldman and produced by Mark Gordon ("Opportunity Knocks") and John Bard Manulis.

In the film, Peter has lost his father, a musician, six years ago because of the Nazis. His mother, Frau Miller (Barbara Hershey — "A World Apart" and "Hannah and Her Sisters") has accepted the new order and has a friend who is a top Gestapo official (Kenneth Branagh).

The movie is about friendship and how friends make different decisions and how their relationships change. The film also asks how such a thing as Nazism could ever happen. The primary statement is that it is better to die a moral man than to live as an immoral one — these are all lessons we can learn.

After the movie was over, a member of the audience stated, "This was not 'Dirty Dancing' taking place in Germany like I thought it would be."

JOSÉ DONOSO, one of the most important Latin American writers, was born in Santiago de Chile, educated at a British academy and attended the University of Chile. In 1949 he was awarded a scholarship to study at Princeton University. Before receiving his B.A. in 1951, he had written his first two stories, in English, for a campus magazine. Donoso's significance as a writer is international, his work has resonance in both the Hispanic and Anglo-Saxon worlds, but at the same time he is eminently Chilean for his work is the product of an intense and critical view of the Chilean bourgeoisie. He is the author of Historia personal del Boom, a recollection of the experiences of the most prominent Latin American writers of that period. He also has several books of short stories and a book of poetry, Poemas de un novelista. Some of his most important novels are: Coronacíon, Este domingo, El lugar sin límites, El obsceno pájaro de la noche, Casa de campo, El jardín de al lado, and La desesperanza.

top 10. Dangerous has passed the five-million mark in the wake of this second wind. And the Jackson train continues with his performance of the Soul Train Music Awards.

The Soul Train Music Awards recognizes achievement in what is traditionally thought of as black music. Including such areas as gospel, jazz, hip-hop and R&B (areas which are among the most popular forms of music), this show is growing in popularity by leaps and bounds. Artists neglected by this year's Grammys will have their chance to shine, including En Vogue, T.L.C., Mary J. Blige, Whitney Houston, as well as Boyz II Men and Arrested Development. Airing on local stations this week, it should be a show worth checking out.

Also of interest is the People's Choice Awards which parcels out awards in television, movies and music as determined by polls. Whitney Houston's "I Will Always Love You" could prove to be a big factor this year in the music area. The Source Awards (airing on "Yo MTV Raps") handed out awards to acts like Tribe Called Quest, Pete Rock/C.L. Smooth and Cypress Hill in the hip-hop and rap arenas.

Even the Oscars is not safe from the importance of music. This year the two hottest soundtracks, Aladdin and The Bodyguard, go head-to-head, with nominations for Best Original Song.

An interesting note, one of The Bodyguard's nominations is for Whitney Houston's "I Have Nothing." In the movie, her character Rachel Marron wins Best Song in a mock-Oscars. Could life imitate art? Perhaps we will even see Kevin Costner jumping in the way of a bullet of a crazed killer, as Whitney accepts her award. Aladdin's "A Whole New World" will present strong competition for Whitney.

There is no comprehensive awards show that has been able to honor all music fairly. Even as the world looks to a more unified vision, music consistently remains a medium of individuality and culture. True unity will not come from making some universally appealing music, for it does not exist. Rather, respecting all kinds of music as being legitimate and important will pave the way to understanding.

Women's hoops bows to Miami in league semifinals

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Assistant Sports Editor

Defying the proverb about the month of March, the Villanova women's hoops team went out like lions. With a bye into the second round of the Big East tournament in Providence, the Cats upset a higher-seeded team from the University of Pittsburgh on Mar. 6 before losing to the mighty Miami Hurricanes in the tournament's semifinals the following day. 'Nova's performance landed it in fourth place in the final conference standings with an 11-9 record (15-13 overall).

There was nothing Pitt Head Coach Kirk Bruce could have done to prepare his troops for the immediate Villanova onslaught. Senior Nikki Benedix scored the game's first basket when she hit a layup one minute into the game. Less than four minutes later, Villanova held an 11-3 lead, and Pitt would never be able to come back.

"We were definitely confident going into the game," said Benedix. "We wanted to show [Pitt] that we were the better team. We knew that we were better than fifth [in the conference]."

The second half held more of the same for the hapless Panthers. Villanova turned a 37-23 halftime advantage into a 74-59 lead by the time the final buzzer sounded. Leading the way were two seniors who were determined not to end their Villanova careers quietly. Benedix led both teams with 23 points, and Karen Connell pitched in 14 points and pulled down a team-high six rebounds.

> We started off well [against Miami], but they had so much talent that it was tough to beat them. We gave it our best shot, but it's a tough matchup when every single girl on their team is such a good player.
> Senior Nikki Benedix

"I kept thinking that this was my last year playing," said Connell. "I wanted to play well and produce as much as I could."

Though the Cats were the underdogs going into the Pitt game, they faced even more of an uphill climb against Miami in the semifinals. The defending Big East champion Hurricanes had stormed through the Big East competition once again for the 1992-93 season, and had their eyes on living up to their No. 1 seeding. However, the Canes were too much for the Cats to overcome.

"We started off well, but they had so much talent that it was tough to beat them," said Benedix. "We gave it our best shot, but it's a tough matchup when every single girl on their team is such a good player."

For most of the first half, 'Nova looked as though it would be able to match pace with its heavily favored opposition. Miami's Carla Harris nailed a three-pointer to start things out, but Miami was unable to immediately pull away from the Wildcats. A Benedix layup brought 'Nova within one with 6:09 before the half. But just when the Cats were poised to take the lead, Miami went on a 14-4 run and took a 36-25 lead into the locker room.

"It's understandable when a team loses to Miami because they're very athletic and very good players," said Connell. "But I don't think we played as well as we could have. Our shots just weren't falling."

The shots were certainly not falling in the second half, in which Villanova was unable to get back into the thick of things. A 14-1 Hurrican's run midway through the period effectively buried any hope the Wildcats may have had for advancing into the Big East championship game.

Once again, Benedix led the Cats in scoring with 12 points. Freshman Susan Glenning came off the bench to score nine points. Leading Villanova in rebounds were freshman Denise Dillon and sophomore Jennifer Maga, who had seven points apiece.

"We try not to talk about wins and losses," said 'Nova Head Coach Harry Perretta. "If you play well, you'll win as many games as you should and you'll lose as many as you should. [We were] just trying to concentrate on playing well every game, and letting the wins and losses take care of themselves."

Whether or not Perretta was primarily concerned with his squad's won/lost record, he had to be pleased with the team's improvement through the season. After starting off the season with a 2-5 record, Villanova's mixture of veterans and newcomers began to gel just in time for Big East play.

> [We were] just trying to concentrate on playing well every game, and letting the wins and losses take care of themselves.
> Head Coach Harry Perretta

Leading the team in rebounding and scoring was Benedix, who averaged 14.8 p.p.g. and 7.1 r.p.g.

Her performance earned her a spot on the All-Big East second team. Second to Benedix in both categories was Connell (10.1 p.p.g., 5.9 r.p.g.). Two other key factors in Villanova's success were the steady play of sophomore Michele Thornton (8.5 p.p.g., and a team-high 101 assists), and the emergence of Dillon (8.3 p.p.g., 4.2 r.p.g.), who made the All-Big East rookie team.

Tennis

By MICHEL DAVIES
Staff Reporter

One of the things that has been a characteristic of 'Nova tennis in recent times has been its stability. Much of this can be attributed to coach Dr. Robert Langran.

Now entering his 27th season of coaching, Langran has been the backbone of tennis at 'Nova for three decades.

This season though, Langran has the dubious task of reforming his once powerful Wildcat tennis program. Gone are three of the six singles players from last season, as well as parts of all of the three doubles teams.

Instead of having the poised and senior-dominated team that he possessed last season, Langran is left to shape a young and inexperienced team overflowing with potential.

"It is going to be very important for us to play consistently every match. We really need to overcome our youth in that aspect and make sure we are ready for every opponent." said Langran.

Part of this consistency will need to come from No. 1 singles player Tom Boutrous. Although this will be Boutrous' first season at the number one slot, he realizes how important it will be for both him and the rest of the team to be ready for every match.

Another key for the Cats will be the development of the doubles teams. Devastated by graduation, 'Nova was left without any of the doubles teams from last season. As a result, Langran has been forced to completely rework the combinations, something which can take a while.

In order for Langran to pull his team out of the .500 rut, he will need good, consistent performances from all his players, every outing. If juniors Mike Flagherty and Andy Sullivan can solidify the middle of the lineup, and Boutrous can defeat the tougher opponents at No. 11, then 'Nova might push into contention. But this cannot happen unless all the players play to their ability at every match. One or two different players playing well each time will not be enough.

"Depth and consistency are definitely the keys to our season, no question," said Langran. "Without both of those, we won't be a successful team."

Cats finish 2nd

By TODD LESKANIC
Staff Reporter

The Villanova men's track team had an impressive showing at the IC4A Indoor Track and Field Championships at Harvard University on March 6-7. In the end, the team finished second to Georgetown by only six points.

The Cats were led by sophomore Louie Quintana, who ran a personal best 4:00.19 mile and registered a first place finish in the event. The time qualified Quintana for the NCAA championships.

"It was nothing like I expected. The pace was really slow and I just had a good finish. I guess I'll take it," said a modest Quintana.

Quintana also paced the distance medley team to a first place finish, with a team time of 9:47.22. Also participating in the medley were senior Mike Going, freshman Andreas Von Scheeley and sophomore Ken Nason.

Junior Dave Cook turned in a superb performance in the pentathlon and posted a second place finish with a total score of 3,999 points, just 63 shy of his personal best. Cook was the only 'Novan to participate in the field events, which makes a second place finish even more impressive.

Senior Brad Sumner turned in an outstanding performance in the 800 meter with a first place finish and a time of 1:49.84. The time made Sumner a provisional qualifier for the NCAAs.

Going also competed in the mile, in which he posted a time of 4:05.65, a personal best for the year. He also qualified for NCAA competition with his time.

Senior Terrence Mahon ran the 5000 meter in 14:11.52. Mahon led for the entire race but was passed in the last 100 meters and ended up finishing third. Still, his time was 13 seconds faster than his winning time of last year.

Freshman Dave Hartman ran a 14:30.60 5000 meter, a personal best. Also of note was freshman Kevin Christiani, who ran a 4:10 mile on Friday to qualify Quintana to run the mile the following day.

The two-mile relay team posted a first place finish with a time of 7:29.68. Leading the way was Sumner with an individual time of 1:48.4. Scott Whiteman posted a time of 1:50.9, Kyle Watson a 1:53.5, and Chuck Silvester a 1:56.4.

"I feel a person's true character comes out when he is tired and yet still performs under pressure, and every man on our team passed the 'Uncle Marty' character test," said an elated coach Marty Stern.

On March 12-13, the team will head west to Indianapolis, Indiana and compete in the NCAA Championships. Sumner will compete in the 800 meter, while Quintana is scheduled to run the 1,000 meter.

"I'm really ready to go. I've done all the work I can. I'm strong and have good endurance. I'm a little concerned because I haven't run the 3000 in a while, but I'm ready," said Quintana.

Softball to begin season against Drexel

By TODD LESKANIC
Staff Reporter

The Villanova softball team takes the field this Saturday for its opener against Drexel. The Cats are looking to improve on last year's 17-16 (4-4 league) record and have a good opportunity to do so. Top-notch freshmen and a solid corps of returning players have the Cats in great shape going into the season.

Leading the charge is Amy Pawloski, a senior outfielder from Philadelphia. Last season Pawloski led the team in hitting with a .318 average and .376 on-base percentage. Defensively, Pawloski made 23 put-outs with only a single error.

Also expected to contribute is senior catcher Sharon Palmieri. Palmieri started every game last season and registered a .317 batting average with 13 RBIs, a .375 slugging percentage, and a team-leading 14 runs scored.

Another key returning player is senior Christine Kolatac, who should fill the first base slot. Last season, she hit .287 with one HR, a team-leading 18 RBIs, and a team-high .417 slugging percentage. Defensively, Kolatac made 264 put-outs with 17 assists and only four errors for a .986 fielding percentage.

Senior Kim Kilpatrick should fill an outfield position and play first base when needed. Kilpatrick hit .221 last season in 27 games.

The third outfield spot could be claimed by junior Sheri Howarth, a .228 hitter last season in 28 games. Freshmen Michele Arico, Lisa Miller and Laura Hickey will also compete for playing time in the outfield.

Junior Dina Squilanti and sophomore Courtenay Gayeski will compete for the position.

At shortstop, Lisa Mensak, a sophomore, could get the call. Sophomore Beth Woosnam, however, will also compete for time.

Over at the hot corner, sophomore Carrie Dunn returns from a limited role last season and could claim the everyday job. Freshman Trish Magnotta, may see some action as well.

The pitching staff will be anchored by senior Amy Meisinger. Last season Meisinger went 13-2 with a miniscule 1.07 ERA. In 117.2 innings, Meisinger gave up only 83 hits and 31 walks while striking out 77. Junior Michele Martin returns from a 4-12 season in hopes of improving. Freshman Tina Sabunas will add depth to the staff.

All in all, this year's team is looked on as the best softball team here at Villanova in quite some years.

"This is one of the better teams. We have a lot of potential to go far. We have good pitching and a good mix of freshman and upperclassmen," said Gayeski.

"As a freshman, it's hard to tell what kind of a year it will be. I think we have a lot of talent, it's just a matter of playing as a team," said Tina Sabunas.

The softball team will be playing its home games at Bartley and would like to see some support at these contests. Their home opener is this Sunday against Penn.

Cats swing into action

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Sports Editor

The 1993 Villanova baseball team features a core of senior leadership combined with a plethora of young talent. Under eighth-year Head Coach George Bennett, the squad is focused on improving upon last season's 22-21 mark and 9-10 record in Big East play.

Coming off a recent Florida swing in which the Cats went 2-5, 'Nova is looking to develop consistency before conference play begins. In that stretch (which featured a game against Los Angeles Dodger farmhands), the Cats blew five-run leads on three occasions.

"We were awful at times and awesome at times," said Bennett. "We played our best with the best [competition]. I think we're much better than the way we played in Florida."

The Cats are led by captains Jack Stanczak, Derek Woods and Dan Mariniello. They will be relied on to supply consistency while the younger players develop as the season progresses.

'Nova should not have much trouble scoring runs. The Cats deploy a potent, deep lineup anchored by seniors Mike Evangelista (.347, team-leading 39 RBIs), Kevin Armstrong (.345), Ed Deal (.343) and Stanczak, who is one of the team's primary power hitters and most explosive players despite missing the 1992 campaign with a broken wrist. Juniors Mariniello (.309) and Chris Massella (.299) should also prove to be very productive at the plate.

The test for the Cats will be whether or not their pitching can hold the opposition down on a regular basis. The staff is led by senior southpaw Woods, junior righthander Bob Steele and sophomore righthanders Dan Kusters and Dave Herr. Junior Dave Hunt will be called upon to close. Several talented but inexperienced pitchers will be given opportunities to take the mound, as the rotation is still up in the air.

"We'll rely more on the hitting than pitching," said Stanczak. "We have young pitchers, so there's more pressure on the hitters to step up.

"We have to improve on our defense as a team," continued Stanczak. "We have to cut down on our errors. We make too many mental mistakes."

The middle infield will be defended by second baseman Chris Massella and by freshmen Jason Cassesa and Larry Kleinz, who will split time at short. Stanczak will guard the hot corner, while freshman Steve Young should earn significant time at first base. Junior Tom Koerick assumes the role of the team's top utility man.

Evangelista returns behind the plate, though he will see time at the DH role. Sophomores Mike Beckerich and Chris Rascher and freshman Dan Marlow will all compete for playing time as well.

The outfield will be patrolled primarily by Armstrong, Deal, Ryan McGinty and Mariniello. Freshmen Jim McCarthy and Matt Neyland will also garner playing time, making the outfield one of the Cats' major strengths.

Sophomore Brian Bowness, who split time at pitcher and first base, is optimistic about the team's chances.

"We have a lot of young pitchers with potential," said Bowness. "I expect the team to get to the Big East Tournament. That's the No. 1 goal. This is supposed to be a rebuilding year, but hopefully we'll surprise some people."

To qualify for the conference tournament, the Cats would have to finish as one of the top four teams in the league. Their stiffest competition should come from preseason favorite St. John's and always-tough Seton Hall.

"The Big East should be a balanced league. If we play at our potential, we'll be a contender," said Bennett.

Ice Cats wrap up 1992-93

By JONATHAN PASSMAN
Staff Reporter

It was the best of times, it was the worst of times.

Villanova suffered the final blow of its 1992-92 ice hockey season on Feb. 19 at the hands of Wesleyan, a loss that knocked them from Division III playoff contention. The Cats did avenge the loss in the home rematch on Feb. 27 with a 7-6 win. 'Nova finished the year tied for third place with 13 points at 6-4-1 in the ECAC South, 7-13-3 overall.

Wesleyan struck first in the loss, building a 3-1 lead after one period. The Cats netted three of their own in the second, but Wesleyan still had a 5-4 advantage. Wesleyan added two more in the third to 'Nova's one, to seal the game. Five different players scored and seven players had assists, but again 'Nova was outshot 37-21. Freshman Dan Nadeau had 30 saves in the defeat.

"It was a tough one, and we just didn't play well early," said Head Coach Pat Ferrill.

The Cats wanted to go out a winner, and they did so in a shootout rematch at home. Tied at one after the first period, 'Nova reeled off four goals in the second. Yet Wesleyan held tight with two of its own. After trading goals in the third period, junior Jim Ready scored the game winner with 4:59 to play. Freshman Greg Mello led with two goals, while Ready had two assists. Freshman Chris Paquette won ECAC South Rookie of the Week with his four assists. Freshman Mike Kelly had 34 saves for the Ice Cats in goal. Paquette finished the year on a high note, with five goals and assists in his last five games.

"It was a great game, back and forth. Thankfully we were on the right end at the end," said Ferrill.

The year has been an up-and-down one for the Ice Cats. A prolonged eight-game winless streak, including six losses, cost them an at-large birth to the playoffs, and heartbreaking losses in conference play made the difference between first and third place. Three of 'Nova's four conference losses were decided by two goals or less, as the Cats were 2-8-1 overall on the road.

"We definitely gained experience this year, and we look to improve on our road [record] next year," said Ferrill.

Fear not, Ice Cat fans. Villanova will lose only one senior to graduation - mainstay defenseman Steve Flynn. Both Kelly and Nadeau, the dynamic goaltending duo, will return for their sophomore years, as will all of the team's leading scorers. Depth figures to be the emphasis of recruiting, particularly considering the high scoring affairs the Ice Cats found themselves in this year.

"We are looking to bring in four or five defensemen, and three or four forwards. We have no specific emphasis, but to recruit depth and hopefully create some internal competition. We're not just looking for bodies, but quality players," said Ferrill.

"I think we have a real good shot at winning the league next year," said sophomore Ryan Stattenfield.

Athlete of the Week

This week the Villanovan and the Wildcat Club recognize both the men's and women's swimming and diving teams as the Athletes of the Week. At the Big East Championships, both 'Nova teams captured respective conference titles, the first for the men's team in 12 years and the second consecutive crown for the women's team. The men's team received excellent performances from senior tri-captains Ed Paradise, Scott Fraser and Jim Fagan en route to edging Pittsburgh 700.5-686.

For the women, senior Mary Dowling led the way with three first-place performances and Eileen Rothenbach, Lisa Flood and Meaghan McCaffrey also earned two first-place finishes apiece. The Cats ran away with their second Big East crown, winning 14 of 18 events.

Head Coach Chuck Horton also garnered Coach of the Year honors for both the men's and women's swimming teams.

Women's track claims 10th Big East championship

By SEAN KELLY
Staff Reporter

For the first time this year the women runners of Villanova University had a major point to prove. Throughout the duration of the cross country season, the Cats were in the driver's seat for every meet as the defending champions for three straight years. However, with the Big East Championships last weekend at the Carrier Dome in Syracuse, N.Y., the 'Nova squad no longer had anything to maintain. Having won nine conference championships in the last 11 campaigns, the Wildcats were certainly ready to prove that they deserved to be on top of the field once again.

Villanova went on to win its 10th Big East Championship in a close competition with a talented Seton Hall organization. The majority of the team consists of middle-distance and distance runners without a great number of athletes to fill the other events. This made their crowning an even greater achievement because most of the other schools came into the meet with competitors in a greater plurality of events. Fortunately, Head Coach Marty Stern and the rest of the 'Nova coaching staff was able to produce a lineup powerful enough to score points in the contests in which they competed.

Once again, Cheri Goddard performed tremendously, crossing the line first in two events. Goddard paced the track in a 1-2-3 Wildcat sweep in the mile competition. Her time of 4:42.53 was fast enough to break the Big East record. Veterans Nnenna Lynch and Becky Spies grabbed the second and third place spots, which helped to accumulate an astounding 24 points in the mile. Lynch crossed the line at a season-best time of 4:45.48 with Spies close behind at 4:47.07.

Goddard also broke the tape in the 3,000 meters in a time of 9.26.38. Junior Carole Zajac and freshman Megan Flowers contributed to the 22 point effort with their second and fourth place finishes.

Zajac, who did not compete in all but one of the championship tune-up meets, showed off her talents in a critical 5,000 meter race when she ran away with not only an NCAA automatic qualifier but also a Big East record time. The phenomenal long distance performer's time was 16:46.62.

Another freshman who performed like a veteran was California native Nikki Shaw, who captured her first individual conference victory. Shaw finished the 1000 meter competition in 2:52.60. Her time edged out second and third place finishers Reenie Ruopoli and Chris Gentile who crossed the line at 2:52.87 and 2:53.48.

Twenty of the Cat's 123 total team points came from the 800 meter race as Abby Hunte secured a first place victory in 2:11.87. Freshman Stacy Robinson and Emer Molloy added to the success of the event bringing in third and fourth place times of 2:12.45 and 2:12.53.

To no one's surprise, the Villanova relay teams dominated the conference in the 3200 meter and the distance medley competitions. The line-up of Ruopoli, Tosha Woodward, Gentile and Hunte placed first in the 3200 meter relay in 8:53.27. The distance medley team of Lynch, Robinson, Gentile, and Spies came out ahead of the group in their race in 11:38.36.

In a meet that was a definite nail biter on the sidelines, the Wildcats have once again reached the apex of a hugely prominent Big East conference. This team win should give them a bit of confidence as they travel to the Hoosier Dome in Bloomington, Indiana this weekend for the NCAA Indoor Track & Field Championships.

The last two weeks have meant training for most of the Villanova runners with only five of the 12 athletes in the NCAA Finals running last weekend at the ECAC Championships. Bringing home a national title will be a struggle since the Wildcats will only compete in five events. A few of these events are practically automatic victories for the Cats, though, so count on seeing them make a powerful run at the title.

Last chance for Cats

boards to the Cats' 28, including a 22-11 edge on the offensive glass. Pelle's absence especially hurt. At one point, 'Nova's tallest player was 6-foot-7, as the Cats went with the diminutive lineup of Arron Bain, Calvin Byrd, Miller, Roscoe Harris and Kerry Kittles.

Against Pitt, 'Nova came out determined to win the last home game in which seniors Miller, Bryson, Bain, and Byrd would participate. The game featured several obvious "make-up" calls by the inconsistent officiating crew as well as a shouting match between Miller and Pitt Head Coach Paul Evans.

The Cats raced out to a 46-38 halftime lead. After falling behind 68-61, 'Nova fought back to get within 74-73.

With less than a minute remaining, Ahmad Shareef missed the front end of a one-and-one. The Cats were then able to free up Kittles for an open trey, but the shot caromed off the back of the iron. 'Nova had two more chances to tie the game, but Bain and Miller each missed three-pointers. Kittles hit a trey at the buzzer to provide the final score.

'Nova has put together some disturbing trends this season to say the least. The Cats have lost seven straight for the second time this season. Also, they are 8-10 in games when they have led at the half.

It is true that with a couple of breaks, 'Nova could have a .500 or better conference mark. They have lost more games in the closing minutes than most teams do in a couple of seasons.

But the good teams make their own breaks, and the Cats have not done that this year. With four battle-tested seniors, 'Nova is one of the more experienced teams in the youthful Big East. The Cats should be winning a majority of the close games or at least holding their own. Recently, they have been getting good shots in the final seconds, but they just have not been falling.

It is gut-check time for the Cats. Hopefully, the seniors will be able to salvage some respect in the Big East Tournament. If not, they will be considered one of the most disappointing classes in 'Nova basketball history.

Seton Hall claims regular season championship

1. Seton Hall (14-4, 24-6)

The Pirates finished their stretch drive with a win over Boston College, 79-61 and another over St. John's, 92-73. Seton Hall solidified its position as Big East front-runner in the stretch run to the tournament. The win over the Redmen was a momentous one for the Hall. It was the 191st win for head coach P.J. Carlesimo, moving him into second in career wins at Seton Hall. Terry Dehere became the all-time leader in Big East scoring with 36 versus the Johnnies and Jerry Walker scored his 1000th career point.

2. St. John's (12-6, 17-9)

Behind Seton Hall, the Redmen are the team to beat at this point in the season. They will most likely be the runnerup in the Big East tournament and will also get a bid to the NCAA Tournament. Their last game was a loss at Seton Hall but the game before that was a convincing 90-70 win over Syracuse. On the season, center Shawnelle Scott finished by leading the league in field goal percentage with point guard David Cain leading the league in field goal percentage with point guard David Cain leading the league in assists, with 7.4 per game.

3. Syracuse (10-8, 18-8)

The Orangemen are in a tough situation right now. They are ranked third in the Big East and will be a contender in the Big East tournament, but they are not eligible for post season play after this. They most likely would have had an NCAA bid. They have won four out of their last five games including their last, a 78-74 squeaker against Pitt. After the Big East they can only look forward to next year. Conrad McRae finished the year with a league-leading 3.3 blocks per game. Team leader Lawrence Moten was second in the league in scoring with 17.9 p.p.g.

4. Connecticut (9-9, 15-11)

The middle of the pack consists of four teams with identical team records, UConn being one of them. Every day it becomes tougher for them to make it into the NCAAs. Their last few games have been all but impressive, as they lost versus Georgetown, 70-56, at Providence, 74-71, and versus Seton Hall on Feb. 27, 82-74. Their only hope is to do well in the league tourney. A consistent performer for the team has been Donyell Marshall, who is fourth in the league in scoring with 16.9 p.p.g. In his final year, Scott Burrell definitely gave a worthy effort: eighth in league scoring with 15.1 p.p.g., eighth in blocks with 1.20 p.g. and 12th in steals with 1.6 p.g.

4. Providence (9-9, 16-10)

The Friars have been making a stretch run this past week. They beat Boston College at B.C. 58-57, and stopped UConn 74-71. They finished up their season winning five of their last six games. This team in turmoil apparently found some balance toward the end of the season. The one constant for Providence this season has been the rebounding of Michael Smith, who leads the Big East with 11.7 r.p.g.

4. Pittsburgh (9-9, 17-9)

Many people thought that Pitt would be ranked higher than they are at this point. The Panthers started out quickly in league competition, but have since hit a downslide. This past week they lost to Syracuse 76-74, and barely got by Villanova 77-76. The Panthers need to pick up their play to be a part of any post season competition.

4. Boston College (9-9, 15-11)

B.C. is the last team deadlocked in the middle of the pack. The Eagles were at the top of the class at the beginning of the year and figured to make some waves. However, they have taken the same route as UConn, Pitt and Providence, losing a few close ones to relegate them to a lower level. Earlier in the week they were visited by Seton Hall and got the loss. In a close battle with Providence the visiting Friars beat their hosts, 58-57. Bill Curley is fifth in the Big East in scoring with 16.1 p.p.g. and first in free throw percentage, with .857.

8. Georgetown (8-10, 15-11)

This week was a good one for the Hoyas. They were visited by UConn and Miami and won both games, 70-56 and 80-64, respectively. Despite the back-to-back wins, G'town's NCAA tournament hopes look pretty bleak. Their only saving grace would be to win the Big East tournament, which will not happen. The team needs to focus on the high points, like Othella Harrington finishing sixth in the league in scoring with 15.6 p.p.g. and point guard Joey Brown being second in assists with 6.3 a.p.g.

9. Miami (7-11, 10-16)

For a team that just entered the league last season, the Hurricanes hold a decent record, including a few wins over top teams. They split a pair of games this past week, losing at G'town, 86-64, and beating Villanova, 77-76. The season saw the maturation of Constantin Popa as a legitimate center and the play of Steve Edwards solidify. The two scored 14.5 and 17.2 p.p.g. respectively.

Kittles shines amid disappointing Wildcat season

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Senior Reporter

When Kerry Kittles talks about hitting last-second, pressure-filled shots, he does not even bat an eye. Or get excited. Not even his last-second three pointer against Syracuse Feb. 23 fazes him. The guy has seen it all before. You would think he was a junior, maybe even a senior by the way he talks of hitting buzzer beaters. But a freshman? No way.

It all goes back to when Kittles was 12 and playing on a youth all-star team. The championship game was against a team from Puerto Rico and Kittles' team was down by one but had the ball in the closing seconds. The team got the ball in the hands of their star player, not Kittles, and he put up the potential game winner. He missed it but Kittles, hovering around the foul line, picked up the loose ball and shot. Nothing but the bottom of the net. Kittles' team won the championship by one point.

"That game reminded me of the Syracuse game," said Kittles, who hit the three pointer with 1.3 seconds left to give the Cats a one point lead. "I just happened to be in the right place at the right time. I knew the Syracuse shot was in when it left my hands. I followed through and it felt good." Unfortunately for 'Nova, cheers turned to tears as Syracuse completed a length of the court pass and scored at the buzzer to win 73-72.

That game in a nutshell typifies the kind of year it has been for the 8-18 Wildcats. Close but no cigar. The season of promise has quickly evolved into a last place finish in the Big East. However, if there is a silver lining, it is the emergence of the 6-foot-5 Kittles. The 170-pound freshman from New Orleans has gone from coming off the bench to eventually starting the last 16 games and averaging nearly 11 points a game. For Kittles, the so-called transition from high school to college has been painless.

"I got the fundamentals and basics down early," said Kittles, who credits playground coach Clement Marcelin with building up his athleticism. "I always played against older guys," added Kittles.

Growing up as the youngest of two brothers, Kittles was introduced to sports by his father, Acosta Kittles, and brother, Acosta, Jr. Although he first picked up a basketball at eight, Kittles also participated in baseball and football.

As Kittles progressed through junior high and into high school, he developed the attitude of becoming the best player in his age group. That would be his measuring stick. Even at Villanova, his main goal is to be the best freshman and next year the best sophomore and so on.

> I'm not into trash talking. As a player, I am very versatile. I can defend big guys as well as little point guards.
> Kerry Kittles

It was at St. Augustine High School in New Orleans where Kittles developed his skills and became known as a versatile player on the floor. He did not play varsity as a sophomore and was sixth man as a junior, but his team reached the state finals in both his junior and senior years.

"I played a lot junior year but we lost in the state finals by one," said Kittles, who scored 13 points that game. "My senior year we had a younger team that needed me everywhere on the court."

And he did not disappoint. Behind Kittles, St. Augustine finished 35-0 with a state championship. That season he averaged 26 points, 13 rebounds and seven assists per game while not being distracted with the question of where he would play in college. Contacted by Villanova originally the summer after sophomore year, Kittles made a verbal commitment in September of his senior year.

"I loved the atmosphere," said Kittles. "It [Villanova] was outside a big city and it was a great opportunity. The decision was down to Villanova and Tulane and after the 'Nova visit I made up my mind and cancelled the recruiting visit to Tulane. I called Tulane and they dropped me hard."

After hearing the news of Rollie Massimino's departure to Las Vegas, Kittles began having second thoughts of attending 'Nova, but after two visits by new Cat Head Coach Steve Lappas, decided to stick by his original decision.

"I considered my options at first," said Kittles. "Lappas told me of a better system and also said he would take care of me. I still knew there were some seniors leaving so I stayed with Villanova."

Bolstered by a strong preseason, Kittles proved he was no fluke Jan. 13 when the Cats hosted St. John's at duPont Pavilion in front of a live national television audience on ESPN. Coming off the bench, Kittles lit up the Redmen with 21 points, coming on a barrage of both three pointers and flying dunks. From then on, Kittles has been a starter.

The sudden success really comes as no surprise to Kittles, a mild-mannered, honor roll student at St. Augustine's who likes to fish. He attributes his accomplishments to thinking his way through things and envisioning the outcome.

"I'm not into trash-talking," said Kittles. "As a player, I am very versatile. I can defend big guys as well as little point guards. I can be a floor leader. This year I've been feeling my way and not getting too emotional."

Freshman phenom Kerry Kittles drives to the rack versus St. Joe's.

Much like his idol Todd Day of the Milwaukee Bucks, Kittles' game is multi-dimensional. He leads the team in three-point shooting yet also ranks third in rebounding. Some of the time he plays point guard. Other times he is guarding big men in the post. This versatility, displayed during high school, is still being developed at Villanova. As Kittles learns to drive more to the basket, teams will have trouble stopping him. Translated, Kittles has not reached the peak of his game yet.

But what is a bad season for the Cats has become a great season individually for Kittles. He has made the transformation from a top high school player to a talented college player in just one year. He has thrived in a new system under a new coach who he never intended to play for. Plus, through it all, Kittles has not lost that certain quality of his game — hitting the buzzer beater.

Mooney's strength inspires women's lacrosse

By ALEX SCOFIELD

When the Villanova laxwomen open their season tomorrow, there will be plenty to inspire them. After a 7-6 1992 season, they are looking to continue the trend of improvement they have undergone each season since joining Division I three years ago. The team will also be inspired by a new coach, Megan Harlan, who assumes control after a year as 'Nova's assistant coach. But most of all, the Wildcats will be inspired by the presence of their teammate Aimee Mooney.

In a pregame ceremony tomorrow, the Cats will dedicate their 1993 season to Mooney, who suffered a tragic auto accident last Dec. 19. The collision damaged 80 percent of the bone structure in Mooney's head. Several days later, a special mass held for her in Corr Chapel was attended by hundreds of Villanovans who prayed for the best and feared the worst.

The prayers of Mooney's concerned friends and teammates were answered. Defying grim predictions, Mooney returned to school on the first day of the spring semester. Her strength and perseverance profoundly touched those who knew her, especially her teammates.

"I was really surprised [with her quick recovery], but if anyone could pull it off, Aimee was definitely the one," said sophomore Heidi Connor, a teammate, friend and sorority sister of Mooney's. "She has so much spirit, and she got so much support from her family, her friends, her coach, and Father Art Chappell. I think all that support is what helped get her through the situation."

"I was impressed she came back as quickly as she did, but I didn't expect anything less from her," said sophomore Kendra Geogehegan, who is also one of Mooney's teammates and sorority sisters. "She has a very strong personality."

Mooney's return to campus is a feat in itself, but she will not be able to play this season. There is no word when, or if, she will ever be able to play lacrosse again. Harlan and the the entire team invite her friends to the dedication ceremony immediately preceding the game against Bucknell at 1 p.m. tomorrow.

Leading the charge in the dedicated season are captains Leigh Ann Leone, Ciara Perrotti and Ann Magee. Leone (44 goals, seven assists, 51 points last season) is the team's leading returning scorer, and she will be complemented on offense by Perrotti (21 goals, five assists, 26 points). Magee (nine goals, five assists, 14 points), meanwhile, anchors the defensive line for the Wildcats.

"So far [Leone, Perrotti, and Magee] have met all my expectations," said Harlan. "They've been wonderful captains. All the seniors have been great leaders."

Senior Monica Hopson (14 goals, six assists, 20 points) also returns to the Villanova attack line to contribute firepower to the team's offensive efforts. Freshman Nicole Nigrelli will also be a key figure, and Harlan is considering moving Connor (one goal, five assists, six points) up from the defensive line.

'Nova's defensive line should be one of its key assets in the upcoming season. Magee will be flanked by junior Elena Rawson (one goal, one assist, two points) and senior Carrie Walsh (one goal, one assist, two points). The experience of these three was one of the main reasons that the Wildcats cracked the .500 mark last season for the first time ever.

"The defense is a very stable force with Elena, Carrie, and Ann," said Harlan. "They're very solid defenders, and I'm expecting a lot out of them."

The goalkeeper position is not so cut-and-dry. As a junior, Stacey Rozzi (7-5, 9.06 goals allowed average, .62 save percentage) garnered most of the playing time between the pipes last year, but Geogehegan (0-1, 6.84 G.A.A., .55 save percentage) also saw a substantial amount of minutes.

"I'm not sure at this point [who will play more in goal]," said Harlan. "Stacey is a senior and a good leader, and really shines through in games, but Kendra is working hard in practice and is really coming along, so it will be a game-to-game decision."

By the time you read this, Villanova will have played B.C. in the 7-10 game. In the words of one Billy Joel, this writer is "Keeping the Faith." We won, we won, we won, I think. I can not accept a third loss in one season against B.C., who stumbled into the Big East Tournament, losers of seven out of the last nine contests. I sit at my desk on Tuesday afternoon. This is my final year at V.U. My Cats are 8-18, losers of 14 crunch time Big East contests, a gut-wrenching year to say the least. The Big East Tournament weekend offers this Villanova senior class and team the opportunity to mend all wounds. We hope it does. The Cats will not break my heart and lose to B.C. I have faith in my squad. But why?

A few points to consider:

1) The law of averages supports Villanova winning a game or two or ... in the tournament. The Cats have lost almost every crunch time game this year.

2) Pride/Urgency. This is it. One and done. Anything less than 150 percent effort on the Garden floor will be an embarrassment.

3) Villanova matches up well with the B.C. three-guard offense.

5) Billy Packer. He predicted 'Nova in the Big East final on Sunday — really. If Billy Packer said it then ...

6) Coach Lappas. This guy deserves some good luck.

Anyways, here's hoping we beat B.C. by nine. On to tonight. St. John's also swept 'Nova this season, by scores of 76-70 and 65-62. They finished 12-6, second in the conference. The Johnnies win with stifling team defense and fast break opportunities. Point guard David Cain, an All-Conference selection, is the glue of the team. Shawnelle Scott and Lamont Middleton are lowblock workhorses. Big East Coach of the Year Brian Mahoney lacks solid two and three play from his club. Villanova will beat St. John's if it limits its turnovers, period. Rebounding is a constant concern for the Cats. They must hold their own on the Board. See you on Saturday afternoon. Cats by eight.

'Nova swimmers win Big East crowns

Men's swimming upends Pitt for championship

By ERIC WARREN
Staff Reporter

The Villanova men's swimming and diving team claimed its first Big East Conference Championship in 12 years as it edged host Pittsburgh by the score of 700.5-686. The Wildcats put an end to Pitt's 10 year reign at the meet during which 'Nova settled for second place in seven of the past eight years. The win marked Villanova's second championship since joining the Big East and their first since 1981.

"This year's team worked harder than any other team I've ever coached," said Head Coach Chuck Horton, who was named Big East Men's Coach of the Year. "Everyone on the team scored and we're the only team that can say that; everyone did an outstanding job."

The depth of the Wildcats earned them the victory as they were able to rack up points by having the talent to finish in the scoring positions.

"A great deal of team leadership was provided by our senior tri-captains Ed Paradise, Scott Fraser and Jim Fagan as they guided the men to the conference championship," said Horton.

"Everyone looks at swimming as simply individual events, but it was truly a team effort: every time you were up for an event you knew you were doing it for 19 other guys," said senior tri-captain Scott Fraser.

Villanova dominated the Breaststroke events as Sophomore Todd Cimicata set a school record and earned an NCAA Consideration with a time of 56.41 in the 100 Breast. Freshman Mike Schwankl was second to the wall in 56.46 followed by Paradise in 56.73 to complete 'Nova's sweep of the event. Paradise was able to close out his Wildcat career with a critical win in the 200 Breast with a time of 2:03.13 as he came from behind in the final 50 yards to claim his first Big East individual title after three second-place finishes. Schwankl was again second in 2:03.95 and Cimicata and junior Josh Fraser earned fifth and sixth places respectively, which guaranteed 'Nova the title.

This year's team worked harder than any other team I've ever coached. Everyone on the team scored and we're the only team that can say that.

Head Coach Chuck Horton

"The odds of us winning that meet were like 50 to 1, but it was an unbelievable team effort," said Paradise. "Even the events we weren't supposed to do well in were where we were making up the difference. Everyone went above and beyond their expectations and everyone put the team first."

The 200 Medley Relay team consisting of Fraser, Paradise, junior Chris DesMarais and freshman Tom Forrest clinched a first place in 1:32.41, with DesMarais setting a school record 51.00 leadoff in the 100 Backstroke. The 400 Medley Relay team consisting of the same swimmers settled for third, but set a new school standard of 3:23.20 in the process.

DesMarais also finished fifth in the 200 Back, setting a new school record of 1:49.63. Freshman Tim Jogan destroyed the previous school record by 14 seconds as he finished second in the 1650 Freestyle with a 15:47.93 clocking.

Other notable 'Nova finishes came in the 500 Free as Jogan, and sophomore Rob Drumm and Pat Donahue notched third, fourth and fifth places with respective times of 4:32.77, 4:33.22 and 4:34.08. Forrest added a third place in the 50 Free with a time of 21.03. Junior Glen Langhans was fifth to the wall in the 200 Butterfly (1:52.40). 'Nova was able to grab second, fifth and sixth in the 100 Fly as Forrest, Fraser and sophomore Sean Kelliher placed, with times of 49.68, 50.00 and 50.87 respectively.

Jogan added another strong performance in the 200 Free as he nailed down third place with a time of 1:40.31. Sophomore Brett Loper teamed up with Kelliher to finish third and fourth in the 100 Back with times of 52.02 and 52.32.

The men's team will lose its three senior tri-captains to graduation but has enough depth in its underclassmen to defend the Big East title next year.

"This was the best way to end it," said Paradise.

Women capture title

By ED WASIELEWSKI
Sports Editor

After a spotless 9-0 regular season, the Villanova women's swimming and diving team finished the year on an appropriate note, running away with its second consecutive Big East Championship March 1 at the University of Pittsburgh.

"In the beginning of the season, our goals were to win the conference title and qualify as many people as possible for the NCAAs," said Head Coach Chuck Horton, the 1993 Women's Coach of the Year for the second straight campaign. "[The team] did another great job in the pool and we accomplished these goals."

The Wildcats simply were too good in too many events for the other Big East schools, beating second-place Miami by a 785.5 to 588.5 margin. 'Nova also found victory in 14 of the 18 events, securing three NCAA automatic qualifying times and nine NCAA considerations along the way. In addition, these Cats established nine Villanova records and 11 meet records.

"Almost every one of our swimmers set personal bests," said Horton. "They accomplished nearly every challenge that we presented and have done extremely well for themselves."

In particular, senior Mary Dowling enjoyed another spectacular season and Big East Championship meet, capturing Women's Outstanding Swimmer of the Meet en route to winning three events - all in NCAA consideration time. With these three victories, Dowling now holds nine career individual Big East titles which ties the all-time conference record. Dowling won the 200 Free in 1:50.82, a Villanova and meet record, the 500 Free in 4:51.85, and the 1650 Free in 16.42.20.

However, Dowling had a strong supporting cast, as three other Villanova swimmers captured at least two individual events. Leading the way, sophomore Meaghan McCaffrey notched wins in the 50 Free, with an NCAA automatic qualifying time of 23.22, and in the 100 Free in 50.39. Both times also established new V.U. standards. Junior Lisa Flood also performed well for the Cats, earning an NCAA Automatic with a time of 2:14.63 in the preliminaries of the 200 Breast. Flood, a two-time Women's Outstanding Swimmer of the meet, cruised to victories in the 200 Breast (2:15.83) and the 100 Breast (1:02.44).

"McCaffrey and Flood had outstanding performances once again," said Horton. "Their times qualified them both for the NCAAs."

Besides this strong triumvirate of swimmers, freshman Eileen Rothenbach also garnered two first-place victories, winning the 200 IM in a school record 2:05.12 and the 400 IM in another school record 4:25.35. Fellow freshman Tammy Kouser also found success, winning the 100 Backstroke in a V.U. record 55.91. Sophomore Tara Ryan capped off the individual Big East champions by capturing the 200 Fly in a meet record of 2:03.81.

Not only did the Cats accomplished great results individually; 'Nova also won three relay events, setting school and meet records in the process. The Cats won the 200 Free in 1:33.65, the 200 Medley in 1:44.02, and the 400 Medley in 3:46.22. Junior Michelle Pulaski and sophomore Sarah Dykstra joined McCaffrey and Kouser on the NCAA automatic qualifying 200 Free Relay.

"With the NCAAs coming up, we now want to qualify as many swimmers as all-Americans as possible," said Horton. "We would also like to improve on last year's standing."

With the way this team has performed lately, the Cats sould be a force in the NCAAs. So far, the team stands a perfect 10. That is, a perfect 10-0 with another Big East crown to boot.

"I am very proud of this team," said Horton. "I am also very optimistic about our swimming program's future."

Just when it seemed things could not get more frustrating for the men's basketball team, the Cats closed out their regular season with heartbreaking losses to Pitt and Miami by identical 77-76 scores. The pair of one-point defeats left 'Nova (8-18) with an embarrassing 3-15 conference mark and a first round Big East Tournament matchup against Boston College at Madison Square Garden. Should the Cats prevail in that contest, they will play second-seeded St. John's tonight at 7 p.m.

This has been a trying year for players and fans alike, not to mention first-year Head Coach Steve Lappas, who could probably use some of the Rolaids his predecessor endorsed.

In both the Pitt and Miami games, the venue changed but the script was the same. At Miami, Jonathan Haynes missed a 20-foot jumper with less than 10 seconds left and Lance Miller's follow from the baseline rimmed out. Miller, who scored a game-high 26 points, did all he could to keep 'Nova in the game. After hitting a pair of free throws following a scramble for a loose ball, Miller then threw in a short jumper in the lane to cut the Hurricanes' lead to 75-73. Miller then drained an open three-pointer to give the Cats a short-lived 76-75 lead.

But Constantin Popa, who maneuvered his way to 25 points and 13 rebounds, scored on a drive to seal the Cats' fate. Popa had the Cats off balance the entire game. With James Bryson in foul trouble and Anthony Pelle on the bench with a shoulder injury, the 7-foot-3 Popa was given little opposition by reserves Ron Wilson and Jamie Gregg. He repeatedly got the ball in good position to utilize his rolling hook shot and his passing ability.

'Nova outshot Miami from the field as well as from three point range and the free throw line. The Cats also committed fewer turnovers than the Canes. They lost the game for the same reason they have lost several others this season — the Cats got out-muscled and out-hustled in the battle for rebounds. U.M. hauled in 42

Candidates make promises, address campus issues

The Student Government Association (SGA) presidential debate was held March 16 at 7:30 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema. Topics of discussion included the rights of gays and lesbian groups on campus, the essential elements of a Catholic university, the state of the University's Fine Arts Department, the post and visitation policies and women's representation on campus.

Brian Collie, a sophomore political science and economics major believes that the University can make positive changes. His campaign slogan "Stop the Apathy" is geared toward increasing student involvement on campus.

"No matter how great our ideas may be, they can never be implemented without students who involve themselves," said Collie. "Only 2 percent of Villanova students are well-informed of student government affairs. I want to bring the organizations together by meeting with the chairmen of each organization. I'm running on your ideas."

Collie said he would like to institute a system of suggestion boxes on campus to get the opinions of students. "We're open to the student body," added Collie.

Jennifer Turner, panel member representing WXVU, questioned Collie on the University's representation of women's issues on campus. "I have a hard time seeing women's issues that need to be addressed on campus," said Collie.

Senatorial candidates debate issues: gender discrimination, multiculturalism

The 16 senatorial candidates debated campus issues March 16 at 5:30 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema.

The debate moderator was Paul Falcone of the office of Residence Life. Each candidate is vying for a seat on the University Senate to represent his or her respective college.

Six panelists representing the Villanovan, the Student Programming Council (SPC), the Student Nurses' Association of Pennsylvania (SNAP), the Accounting Society, the Association of Commuting Students (ACS) and the Intercollegiate Forum (ICF) asked the candidates questions after each candidate delivered a three-minute opening statement.

David Greason, sophomore history major, is seeking a position as arts senator. Greason said he advocates diversity acceleration programs and improved communication on campus through open forums with students, faculty members and administrators. As an arts senator, Greason said he would promote increased Wildcard usage and accessibility in vending and washing machines. He also favors more campus-wide events to bring commuting students to campus.

Kevin Haggerty, sophomore political science major, is seeking to reduce student apathy if elected to the position of arts senator. "I am here to develop your ideas and to represent you," said Haggerty. Haggerty said he favors increased student participation campus-wide and pledges to listen to the concerns of the student body.

Arts senatorial candidate Craig Lammilin, sophomore political science major said, "This election is not about past promises, but future issues." Lammilin said he supports improved freshman and sophomore advisement and improved computer facilities for liberal arts students. "Villanova must include all people to act as a community," said Lammilin. He favors long-term contributions, such as the campus call boxes and shuttle.

Debby Wiley, sophomore English and French major running for arts senator said she is capable of being an effective liaison between students and student government. She said she favors easing the registration process, encourages a more accessible and approachable faculty, open campus forums and supports extended library hours.

Glenn Alba, junior accounting major, is seeking the position of Commerce and Finance senator. Alba said he favors changes in the business core curriculum that stress writing and communication skills. He supports Connelly Center becoming a meal plan site and favors a doctor on-call 24 hours a day and an infirmary physician with 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. office hours. He favors improved on-campus entertainment, featuring "comedians and bands we have actually heard of."

Cause of illness remains unknown

By KATE SZUMANSKI
News Editor

The cause of the illness which hit the University Feb. 9, sending several south campus residents to nearby hospitals, remains unknown, said Stephen T. Bell, director of Public Relations.

"We are still waiting for blood test results to find the cause of the illness," Bell said. The results are due at the end of March, he added.

"Hopefully, the blood test results will be conclusive, but we cannot be sure at this time," said Bell.

Township and state health officials did not order the University to shut down when the illness struck, said Bell. The University did not remain open against the suggestions of health officials, he said.

State health officials did not want to close any facility on campus, and the University did not receive any indication that anything should be closed," Bell added.

"It was not even suggested to close Donohue Dining Hall," Bell said. "We [the University] did not want to remain open if food was the cause of the illness. That is why Donohue was closed," he added.

Visitation policy under scrutiny

By ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWSKI

A proposal addressing the need for revisions in the University's current visitation policy will be discussed at the next meeting of the University Senate to be held March 26, said Student Government Association (SGA) President Ken Batchelor.

The 40-page proposal which will be presented includes the rationale behind the proposed revisions as well as the results of a survey which was distributed to 3200 University students, said Batchelor.

"We received 1560 survey sheets back. Over 96 percent felt that the current visitation policy should be revised. Of these, 60 percent said they wanted 24-hour visitation everyday, while 32 percent said they wanted 24-hour visitation on weekends only," according to the proposal.

The proposal also provides students with a choice of three different visitation policies, depending upon where a student chooses to live, said Batchelor. "The survey results indicate that 71 percent of the students would choose to live in a dorm having 24-hour visitation everyday, and 25 percent would choose to live in a dorm having more hours than the current policy offers. Even though only 3.5 percent of students would choose to live in a dorm having the current visitation policy, we feel it is necessary to keep this an option," according to the proposal.

"This proposal has the potential to fulfill every student's needs by providing a choice of policy they want to live under," said Scott McBride, executive cabinet member for off-campus affairs.

Bombing raises question of future terrorist activity

By MICHAEL VECHESKY
Staff Reporter

In what may be considered the most destructive act of terrorism ever committed on U.S. soil, the Feb. 26 explosion that rocked the World Trade Center not only killed six and injured more than a 1,000 people, but sent a message of fear to all U.S. citizens.

Two Palestinians, Mohammed Salameh and Nidal A. Ayyad have been arrested in connection with the bombing. Salameh was charged with renting the Ryder van used for the bombing and Ayyad was charged with aiding and abetting the malicious damage and destruction of the Trade Center.

Both men worshipped at the same mosque in Jersey City, N.J. where Sheik Omar Abdel-Rahman, a militant Islamic fundamentalist, preaches. Abdel-Rahman, who U.S. officials want to deport to Cairo, has been acquitted of terrorist related crimes three times while in Egypt.

Although the New York City Police Department took over 50 calls claiming responsibility for the blast, it seems most likely that accused terrorist Abdel-Rahman is behind it. However, the Jersey City mosque attracts hundreds of worshippers each week and federal officials still have no evidence connecting Salameh or Ayyad to Abdel-Rahman. Even if the attack turns out not to be the work of a state-sponsored terrorist agency, it has proven that America is a vulnerable target for large scale violent action.

The question the World Trade Center bombing has American citizens asking if this new domestic vulnerability will attract more terrorism to U.S. soil. John McGowan, professor of political science said, "The World Trade Center bombing may very well lead to more terrorism in America."

However, it's not as if this is the first major terrorist act ever on U.S. soil. In a significant event in the 1950s, Puerto Rican terrorists committed acts of violence in Washington, D.C. There was no dramatic increase of terrorist activity after that.

"Also, when most Americans talk about terrorism they assume U.S. citizens as always being the main target. This happens because the media does not cover terrorism that goes on everyday throughout the world, but only when it involves the U.S."

Terrorists' two main weapons are the media and fear, said McGowan. Although the chances of being involved in a terrorist act are very slim, if a terrorist group can get the media to make the public fear that pososibility, the terrorist group may be able to reach its goals.

> The World Trade Center bombing may very well lead to more terrorism in America.
> John McGowan, professor of Political Science

Car bombing is so common throughout the world that in some places like Lebanon, Northern Ireland and Colombia it hardly makes the news, said McGowan. A car bomb is an easy and productive tool for terrorists, he said. The expertise required to make an effective bomb is minimal and there is no true way of telling when a car may be a weapon, he said. The bomb that was used in the World Trade Center was placed in a yellow Ryder rental van. Car bombs must now be watched for in the United States as a favorite and effective terrorist tactic, he added.

The United States government must now take steps to prepare itself against future terrorist attacks. According to the March 8 edition of Newsweek magazine, the United States should tighten security at likely targets and at the borders. At a minimum, this means keeping a closer watch at United States ports of entry and more surveillance of alien political activists inside the United States. At a maximum, this could mean incursions on civil liberties, like frequent checks and searches which, in our open society, few Americans would accept.

The Clinton administration is already putting together a package of improved counterterrorism measures including increased funding for surveillance equipment and better technology for cross-checking visa applications to screen travellers for terrorist connections, according to Newsweek.

Hopefully, enhanced counterterrorism strategies and continued quick arrests of those responsible for terrorist acts will send a message back to terrorist groups that the United States will not back down to their tactics.

Blizzard recovery proves slow, costly

Slow road to storm recovery

The recovery from the swift, lethal Blizzard of 1993 proceeded at a glacial pace March 16, with key roadways still closed, regional rail service disrupted and bus lines shut down.

Pennsylvania was one of the states hit hardest by a storm that ranked among the most powerful on record. The storm of the century had left 168 dead, 36 of them in Pennsylvania and 15 of those in the Philadelphia area by March 15. Most local fatalities came when people overexerted themselves as they tried to dig out from the 12-inches of heavy snow and ice.

Gov. Bob Casey said he planned to ask President Clinton for emergency money to defray the mammoth costs of cleanup.

U.N. calls for investigation of atrocities

The U.N. report detailing massive human rights abuses by the U.S.-backed military in El Salvador during 12 years of civil war has spotlighted a dark chapter in Washington's battle against revolution in Central America.

An independent three-member U.N. Truth Commission, set up under 1991 peace accords, found that the military committed most of the tens of thousands of civilian killings, massacres and tortures during the long war.

Others were slain by far-right death squads with at least tacit backing by military and some civilian authorities. The death squads "remain a potential menace," said the commissioners, who called for a special investigation "to reveal and then put an end to such activity."

One commission member, U.S. human rights lawyer Thomas Buergenthal, said he would recommend to Congress that it investigate possible U.S. involvement in atrocities during the war.

Hillary Clinton hears Iowa health concerns

Hillary Rodham Clinton spent March 15 listening to stories of soaring insurance costs and thinly spread medical services.

The price of health insurance, one man told her: "A cow every month."

In a living room chat with five farm families and at a more former public hearing later in the day, Clinton saw the human side of the country's health-care problems and the specific difficulties in rural areas.

Over and over, Clinton heard about the problems of self-employed farm families in paying high medical premiums, particularly when a family member has a serious health condition that makes it hard to switch insurance companies.

Hope in the air for beleaguered Bosnians

Every night thousands of people in the embattled Muslim enclave Srebrenica creep into the nearby hills to listen for the sound of American C-130 transport planes that drop relief supplies.

They gather in groups of up to 500 around bonfires to wait for a plane, listening to it fly overhead and then trying to determine where food and medical supplies might have dropped.

"The immediate situation is disastrous," said Anders Levinsen, head of the U.N.'s refugee office in Tuzla. "There are thousands of people sleeping in the streets. The conditions of displaced persons is appalling."

SGA presidential candidates discuss their goals, strengths

By NEWS STAFF

The News Staff of the Villanovan asked the four presidential candidates the same three questions. Their responses are printed as written. The Villanovan reserved the right to edit the responses for space purposes.

How integral a role do you feel the SGA plays in the policy making and policy implementing processes of the University and the daily operations of the University as a whole?

Brian Collie: "The SGA plays a most integral role in all aspects of the University. Its underlying purpose is to listen to the ideas and concerns of the students, present them to the administration, and if practical, implement them into policy. The SGA is the voice of the students and therefore is in need of a leader with the persistance and determination necessary to not only portray the student concerns, but more importantly translate them into results. I believe I am that leader."

Patrick Kennedy: "As the University enacts its Strategic Plan there has been a call for more student input. As president of SGA, I will serve ex-officio on the University Senate. I am therefore a voting member on issues relating to policy. Policy is therefore one of the responsibilities of president. Furthermore, with more SGA officers/ members serving on more committees such as the Student Life Committee and a Facilities Committee, we are allowed much more input with regard to daily operations of the University."

Rosanna Picillo: "The Student Government Association has great potential if the leaders earnestly dedicate their interests to pursuing their goals. This year, as a senator for the College of Arts and Sciences, under the strength of Ken Batchelor and Kathy Breen, we have researched extensively the issues of parking, visitation, a shuttle system, student/public safety relations, student/community relations and other important issues. Yet, in the University Senate, student senators have one third of the vote. The other two thirds are made up of Faculty and Administrators. Therefore, we need a strong, experienced leader in government itself to execute Student Government's plans by convincing the faculty and administration of our reasonings, especially concerning student-oriented issues. This leader is myself."

Kelly Ann Walsh: "I believe that SGA has made great strides in the last four years with their effectiveness in policy implementation and daily operations within the University. But our effectiveness depends on the elected student leaders and how informed and knowledgeable they are of the process so that we can continue to have a valuable impact on the decisions made which will effect us, the students."

What do you feel is the greatest strength you can bring to the office of SGA president and how does this quality set you apart from the rest of the presidential candidates?

Senatorial debate

Andrew Botwin, sophomore accounting major, supports the improved telecommunications system and, if elected C&F senator, promises to follow through with the proposed telephone plans. He said he favors improved student-teacher relations, improved computer facilities and changes in the visitation policy. He also favors an expanded mail room and an end to student apathy.

C&F senatorial candidate and sophomore management major Alan Kennedy believes in "making the best of every situation and if you don't like something, change it." He seeks to make Villanova a progressive campus by fostering positive changes.

Sophomore management major Brian Lehman said, "The apathy problem is pitiful and we all feel the administration is unbreachable." If elected C&F senator, Lehman promises to support "participation, cooperation, unification and diversification" programs.

Sophomore accounting major Jay Raczkowski said he would be receptive to the views of the entire student body. He stresses student participation and challenges all students to join him as a senator if he is elected. He said he sees the role of C&F senator as a representative and seeks to accurately represent the views of the entire student body.

Jessica Trocchi, sophomore accounting major, said if elected to C&F senator, she would foster a closer relationship between the student body and student government in both academic and social areas. She also said she favors a revised visitation policy, expanded computer facilities and decreased class size.

David Asker, junior chemical engineering major, seeks to foster improved communication among all of the colleges and multiculturalism if elected engineering senator. He also seeks to improve computer facilities on campus.

Junior civil engineering major Kevin Haney believes "all students should have a voice in the direction and policy of government." He said he seeks to establish the position of a full-time computer coordinator and wants to increase group study space. He favors a change in the visitation policy and changes in the poster policies.

Junior chemical engineering major Bryan Smith supports a book exchange program to lessen the burden of overpriced books. He said, if elected engineering senator, he will sincerely listen to the concerns, problems and ideas of the student body.

Junior biology major Shauna Duff seeks to positively affect the Villanova community if elected science senator. Duff favors the renovation of Mendel Hall and increased and updated laboratory equipment in the classrooms. "The Science department is a crucial part of the University; yet, it is lacking. I seek to improve it."

Junior biology major in the Honors program Terence Navin favors increased access to computer facilities and increased campus diversity. He said he favors a revised visitation policy, the continuance of the shuttle service and parking privileges behind Mendel Hall for those students using Mendel's facilities in the evening.

Junior nursing major Carolyn Sherman favors granting parking passes to nursing students who park their cars around St. Mary's Hall and the Law School. She also favors increased participation from nursing students and the acqusition of new periodicals and journals.

Larisa Epatko, panelist and Editor-in-Chief of the Villanovan, asked Raczkowski about the message his controversial campaign poster portraying an overweight woman in a bathing suit conveys to the student body. Raczkowski said, "My campaign is about more than posters. Students are not going to vote for an artist, but a senator."

Coeducation at Villanova

It is well-known that Villanova began in the 1840s as an all-male institution and continued as such for more than a century. This was not unusual, since most private colleges in the East were single-sex institutions until the 1960s. What many may not know is that Villanova adopted coeducation gradually, in a process that extended over half a century.

Actually, Villanova took its first female student in October 1901, when the Rev. Lawrence A. Delurey, O.S.A., then college president, agreed to instruct a young woman in Latin. (She was a teacher in the Haverford schools.) This seems to have been an isolated case, since there was no further evidence of female students on campus until the summer of 1918. That year Villanova opened a summer program designed for nuns who sought teacher training. From the beginning it also admitted lay women and lay men.

The next phase in the history of coeducation began in the 1920s when Villanova initiated a "Night School," again primarily for the benefit of nuns, but which eventually enrolled both women and men. In the early 1930s the College of Commerce and Finance considered admitting women as day students (or commuters), but nothing came of the proposal, perhaps because of strong Papal opposition at the time to mixed education.

A new era in coeducation at Villanova opened in 1953 when the institution (now a university) established both a Law School and College of Nursing. The Law School accepted both sexes, while all the early nursing students appear to have been women. During the beginning years these fledgling nurses lived at Austin Hall, in the very center of campus.

The existence of a nursing program at Villanova stimulated an often heated debate during the 1950s on the merits of coeducation. Villanova's Student Council would not allow the nursing students to send representatives to their organizations and the all-male Villanova cheerleaders refused to admit women into their ranks. But the women did not give up and eventually gained admission to both groups.

In 1959 another wall was breached when Villanova's College of Engineering accepted the first female student. Over the next nine years other divisions admitted women on an individual media. Meanwhile, the counter-culture of the 1960s, which emphasized sexual equality, caused many on campus to see coeducation as an integral part of the student movement. For a variety of reasons Villanova University officially opened all the programs to women in the fall of 1968.

Holocaust experiences seen through eyes of a child

By JENNIFER TRZASKA
Staff Reporter

The University Student Programming Council sponsored a lecture by Dr. Mira Binford entitled "The Hidden Child" which detailed her experiences as a child survivor of the Holocaust March 11.

Binford is a communication arts professor at Quinnepiac College and is currently working on a one-hour documentary film involving her personal testimony on the Holocaust.

Binford grew up in Bendzin, a small city in southwest Poland near the German border. When news came of Germany's plans to liquidate the Jews, she fled with her family to escape persecution. The Nazis invaded Bendzin Sept. 4, just one day after her escape.

Binford spoke of the Germans burning the synagogue in the city, as well as setting the houses which the Jews occupied on fire while the residents were still inside. Jews were also forced to wear designated arm bands as well as perform forced labor, added Binford.

Binford and her family were eventually captured and sent into a ghetto created by the Germans to detain Jews. The ghetto was eventually closed off and sealed, and the penalty for helping a Jew hide or escape from the Nazis was death, said Binford.

Children were one of the biggest targets for the Nazis, and because of this Binford hid in a bunker which was dug out of the earth under her family's shack. Of the one million Jewish children living in Poland during the Holocaust, only 5,000 escaped death by hiding from the Nazis, added Binford.

During one of the raids in the ghetto, Binford and her family tried to escape by crawling on their hands and knees through a thunderstorm. They were caught by the police, and since Binford's mother was a Christian, the family was sent to a labor camp instead of Auschwitz.

Binford was again hidden in a secret bunker in order to avoid detection, and her mother managed to bribe a guard to remove her daughter's name from the list of prisoners.

> The unthinkable became for us the ordinary.
> Dr. Mira Binford, Holocaust survivor

One day Binford's mother told her that two aunts were waiting for her outside the camp and that she must go with them, and that she would come for her in two weeks. She was smuggled out in a coat and was tossed over the fence to the woman who was waiting for her. Miraculously, no one witnessed the escape, she said.

Binford later learned that the woman who rescued her was a stranger who had been walking past the camp and received a desperate letter from Binford's mother thrown at her feet which implored her to take the child so that she would be safe.

Binford was given a new name, her hair was bleached and she wore a cross so that her true identity would not be revealed.

Her rescuer eventually died, and Binford was forced into hiding for over a year because it became too dangerous for her to go outside.

One day as she was looking out the window she saw a "strangely familiar" face calling her name as the sounds of bombs exploding raged nearby. It was her mother, and Binford found herself "touching her over and over again to see if she was real," she said.

Her mother had escaped from an Auschwitz death march, and her father was freed from a camp which was liberated by the American army, said Binford. In 1949, Binford, her mother and her father left Poland for a new life in America.

The testimony of those youngsters who lived through the Holocaust is very important, Binford said. "Child survivors are among the last eyewitnesses of events some people even try to claim never happened," she added.

Binford's survival is an example of how vital the role of those who helped the Jews was, and how "the actions of those rescuers are a basis for hope," she said. They helped her "have a great respect for the mixed nature of human goodness," said Binford.

Presidential debate

When Turner further questioned Collie on the status of women on campus as a minority, Collie replied that they are a minority "by a couple of percentage points." Collie said that "there is a definite lack of education dealing with women's issues."

Sophomore Patrick Kennedy, in his opening statement made the suggestion that the Villanova students are not apathetic. "It is non-apathetic conformity. The students care, they just don't act on it. We have to end this 'we vs. they' mentality. We cannot continue like this or we won't get anything done. We have to unite, put aside our differences and work together. Seek more, do not demand more," he said in his opening statement.

"There are many areas for growth because there are many barriers that prevent Villanova from being the great University it can be," Kennedy added.

Rondel Lashley, representing the Black Cultural Society, questioned Kennedy on the issue of minorities and diversity on campus. "We don't want to become more diverse," said Kennedy in his opening statement.

"Diversity does not come in numbers. We must respect the other people here right now. From the differences and similarities in people we learn and grow," Lashley added.

Junior Rosanna Picillo, a political science major, wishes to "make student government an even stronger force devoted to the students." "Student government needs strong leadership to vocalize students' needs. We are up for the challenge, please put us to the test," Picillo added in her opening statement.

"We've looked on the past and the evolution of the Villanova community. I want to turn the page and face Villanova for the future," Picillo said.

Judy Robinson, Panhellenic president, asked Picillo how she would deal with the recognition of gay and lesbian and pro-life and pro-choice organizations on campus. "As student body president, it would be my responsibility to represent them," Picillo said.

In a follow-up question, Robinson asked how she would go about this at Villanova since it is a Catholic university. "Although the Catholic doctrine is still conservative, it is becoming more open to society. Society today has to acknowledge this problem because it's very important," she added.

"We need consistency in student government," said Kelly Ann Walsh. "We're only here for a limited time so we need consistency to get things done," she added. "To increase communication, we would meet with one organization a week to hear their opinions and concerns. Student government meetings would be held at different areas on campus to get the direct impact of students and make it easily accessible," she added. "The University Senate is an essential vehicle for getting things done," Walsh said.

Panhellenic President Robinson asked Walsh how she would intend to educate the student body about the important issues of AIDS, sexual harassment and rape. "It is a matter of education and prevention. We should focus on counseling and facilitate it by informing students of where to go," said Walsh.

"It's our responsibility to go out and express our concern. We have to reach out to others and recognize that they need our help."

Nawrocki fourth in challenge

Dr. David Nawrocki, of the Commerce and Finance department, placed fourth out of 200 educators in the "AT&T Collegiate Investment Challenge."

The four-month contest is a national investment competition featuring high school and college students and educators from across the country. Close to a total of 10,000 people participated in the competition. Nawrocki placed 190 in the competition.

In the beginning of November, 1992, each entrant started with an initial portfolio of $500,000 to invest in stocks, said Nawrocki. Participants are not allowed to invest more than $200,000 in any more than one stock, he said. Most students invest all of their "monopoly" money in one stock while professors prefer a more diverse approach, he added.

Some professors and students enter the contest alone while others enter as a group on one account. There is an entry fee of $50 and some enter in groups to defray the cost. Participants are given a toll free number and local numbers to trace the daily progress of their stock investments.

The participants buy real stock and are quoted the prices used by the New York Stock Exchange, the American Stock Exchange and the National Association of Stock Dealers Automated Quote System. Purchased stocks are often risky and highly speculative, said Nawrocki.

Nawrocki has participated in the competition for three out of the last five years. "I want to show students that what I teach in class is not only relevant in the real world, but it works," said Nawrocki.

Nawrocki teaches Portfolio Theory in his Portfolio Management class. His success in the contest has proven that Portfolio Theory can result in good profits.

Portfolio Theory was developed in 1952 by Harry Markowitz who then won the 1990 Nobel Peace Prize for Economics. This mathematics-based theory has only recently been prominent in the business world due to the development of microcomputers. The Portfolio Theory is currently used by some investors on Wall Street.

Throughout the competition Nawrocki used procedures taught in class. Before investing in stocks, he researched the stocks of companies, carefully chosing his investments. He relied on historical data, estimated level of risk and on high rates of return.

Nawrocki started by looking at 3,500 stocks and narrowed it down to 150 stocks. Eventually, he made his decision and invested in computer companies, finance companies and in pharmaceutical companies.

The "AT&T Collegiate Investment Challenge" uses real stock prices and vicissitudes. In February, when President Bill Clinton publicly announced that pharmaceutical companies were making excessive profits on vaccines and medication, stock prices of pharmaceutical companies plunged. Nawrocki suffered the loss and lost foothold of his one and one-half-week lead. The stocks lost 15 to 25 percent of their value. Soon after, the contest was over and Nawrocki settled for fourth place.

When Nawrocki entered the competition, his goal was to reach the top 10 in the professor category and the top 250 in the overall competition. He has achieved his goal all three years he has participated in the contest.

"I also like to confirm my own technological and financial research," he added.

Berrigan teaches graduate course

By KERRY LATTANZIO
Staff Reporter

The Rev. Daniel Berrigan, renowned Jesuit priest, writer and pacifist, is teaching a graduate course for the University's religious studies department this semester. The course, entitled, "Minor Prophets, Major Themes," focuses on conscience and courage in dealing with victimized peoples and social problems.

> I burned some paper because I was trying to say that the burning of children was unhuman and unbearable.
> Reverend Daniel Berrigan

"I am very pleased that Berrigan responded favorably to our invitation to join the Villanova faculty in the Sesquicentennial year, as a distinguished visiting professor of theology," said Dr. Emily Binns, chair of the religious studies department.

Berrigan gained fame as an activist opposing the Vietnam War. In one noteworthy case, he, his brother Philip and seven other Roman Catholic clergy burned hundreds of draft records in Cantonsville, Md. in 1968. When on trial for this action, Berrigan said, "I burned some paper because I was trying to say that the burning of children was inhuman and unbearable." He served a sentence of eighteen months in a federal prison.

Berrigan also has written many poems, stories and plays. He has received several honors for his writing, including the Lamont Poetry Award, the Thomas More Award and has earned numerous other nominations.

Berrigan worked as an actor and a consultant to the director and producers of the movie "The Mission." The film will be shown this weekend as part of the Villanova cultural Film and Lecture Series. Following the movie, Berrigan will deliver a speech entitled, "The Mission: A Tribute to the Victims of an Ongoing Carnage."

Catholicism is at the heart of Berrigan, Binns said. "In order to truly understand Fr. Berrigan, you must get to know him as a priest," said Binns.

Presidential candidates voice their views, opinions

Brian Collie: "My greatest strength is that I am in touch with students both on and off campus and on an academic and social basis. The wide and diverse communication channels which have been opened by these acquaintances have enabled me to seek and implement solutions to problems and issues facing the students."

Patrick Kennedy: "I would like to stress my knowledge of campus concerns as my strength. However, my involvement in a wide array of campus organizations has given me the opportunity to form friendly work relationships with many administrators, such as Dr. Lafferty, Dr. Nevill, and Fr. Stack, as well as the entire Student Activities staff."

Rosanna Picillo: "I am the best candidate for Student Government President because of many character assets, the greatest of which is Villanova Student Government Association experience as an elected senator for the College of Arts and Sciences. I have patience and perseverance to rationally confront the problems that afflict students on and off campus. I understand the segregation between campus life and off-campus life because both myself and Glen Alba are juniors and now reside in local areas. I can not emphasize enough the importance of having senior leadership in the presidency.

Kelly Ann Walsh: "The greatest strength that Craig Lammilin and I have is our experience not only within SGA but also through other student organizations. This year I served as Nursing Senator and Craig was Publicity Director on Cabinet. Therefore, by having the experience in both the essential components that comprise SGA, Craig and I can provide the consistency as well as the knowledge needed to serve you, the students."

What do you feel is the greatest problem/issue confronting the University and what specific plan(s) do you have to solve the problem or tackle the issue?

Brian Collie: "All of the problems facing Villanova, both social and academic, fall back on student apathy. This apathy, which has become predominant over the past few years, will be the greatest challenge facing the next SGA administration. My running mate, Kevin Haggerty, and I firmly believe that basic improvements concerning residents and commuters, touching on the issues that the students themselves are upset with, will bring the pride back to the University. We plan to implement these improvements by relying upon student input, direct communication, and the strength of the SGA. If we, the students, would just "Stop The Apathy" there are no limits to what can be done to improve this University."

Patrick Kennedy: "The University needs to strengthen its Fine Arts program while not taking anything away from the other colleges. All our facilities need immediate upgrading — including academic, residential and athletic facilities. With regards to the students the biggest problem is not apathy, but rather action. Students do care but fail to act on their concerns. We need action on behalf of the students to become more involved (a broadened involvement) with more student organizations, especially the humanities ones. We are offered so much opportunity. Let's take on more responsibility, for we cannot claim to believe in something and not act on it. There also needs to be a greater awareness of campus concerns/issues and activities. There are, however, many barriers that prevent students from making Villanova a better place. Let's break down those barriers with awareness and involvement."

Rosanna Picillo: "If I was asked this question last year I would have placed housing as the highest priority issue. Yet now with the plans for West Campus, we need to focus our attention on the present campus and realize that our campus is lacking a key ingredient to college life — excitement. Glenn and I are convinced that we can mitigate student apathy by giving them more reasons to participate in Villanovan life. We aim to have more activities forums and recruitment nights so that students can see the groups' accomplishments and importance and realize that the Greek System is a great way to get involved but not the only way. By increasing the geographic and cultural diversity in the student body, students will become increasingly aware of all walks of life. We need to examine how we can decrease apathy and Glenn and I have the spirit and energy to inspire student participation and expression, by proving to them that we take their views directly to the administration."

Kelly Ann Walsh: "I believe that the biggest problem facing the University is inability to communicate with one another at an optimum level. I cannot stress the importance that we as individuals must learn to become informed about what is going on within this University. Craig and I want to help in this by having one SGA meeting in different dorm regions (west, south, main: Sheehan, Fedigan) during the year. Also, once a week, we would like to meet with one student organization to discuss their issues and concerns. Thirdly, we would like to set up a dinner with Fr. Dobbin and student/faculty representatives to open the lines of communication. Finally, I would like to say that communication is important to Craig and me but we are only two people, it is your responsibility as intelligent and educated consumers to use the resources to come but also the ones that are already established, such as the Villanovan."

SGA proposes visitation policy changes

"The SGA is doing this because the visitation policy is talked about every year but nothing seems to happen. We wanted to find out, in reality, what's going on," said Batchelor.

Chris Peters of HOSI (University Planning) put the survey results together, said Batchelor. "This is the best proposal we could have come up with concerning the facts that we have. We feel we have the facts from the students' perspective," he added.

"If there's something this thorough and professional done about the visitation policy, there's no way they [the administration] can turn their backs on the issue. This is going to create a discussion with the administration and the whole University community about visitation policy," said Batchelor.

Peters, along with Dave Greason, executive cabinet member of on-campus concerns have put together another survey for the parents of the University concerning the visitation policy, said Batchelor. A random sampling of freshmen and sophomore parents are being surveyed about the possible revisions of the visitation policy and the results of the survey should be ready for the Senate meeting, added Batchelor.

"I'm very optimistic that the administration will be willing to work with us," he added.

"I believe that something has to change whether parents or the administration agree or disagree since so many students are unhappy with the current policy," added Batchelor.

The next Senate meeting will take place on March 26 in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall at 4 p.m. The meeting is open to the entire Villanova community and anyone interested is encouraged to attend.

Holiday does not excuse drunken behavior

Up until today we were a little doubtful about the suggested "sin tax" on alcohol proposed by President Clinton. But after seeing the attendance in classes yesterday and listening to stories of hangovers, vomiting and drinking contests, we now believe that a tax might help dissuade a few more people from marathon drinkfests.

The excuse for the most recent drinkathon was St. Patrick's Day. We think that is funny, because, in Ireland, where the day is also celebrated, Irish Catholics attend mass. They have a parade, but nothing that approximates the clamorous, raucous quality of American parades — and not with the same nastiness about who can march and who cannot.

St. Patrick's Day at Villanova is more appropriately, bartenders' day, "Bottle and Can" Day. Barkeeps, liquor stores and bar owners reap the benefits of students' excessive drinking. And, worse, students think they had a great time being "wasted," vomiting — and wearing the ultimate badge of honor, the hangover. And all in honor of St. Patrick. Come now, whom are we kidding? We are honoring no saint; we are honoring John Barleycorn. Or is he Irish, too?

A liberal education: the key to confusion

You go to a good college, get a good education and get a good job. This has always been the master plan, but something is missing.

Villanova enjoys a reputation for providing students with academic excellence. Upon graduation from the University, students are expected to have received a challenging liberal education worthy to carry them into the working world and to make them productive members of society.

But look closer. How many students really feel as if they are prepared to get a job after graduation? How many students spend their final semester in college taking core classes instead of concentrating on finding a job or taking classes that will prepare them for their chosen area? How many students are unable to take their required science classes and the corresponding laboratory concurrently because of overcrowded classes?

College is a preparation for the real world. A liberal education is considered by many to be the best preparation. Liberal education has made our institution strong, but, now, liberal education has taken a different turn at Villanova, making liberal arts a juggling act.

Students struggle to fit in core requirements and their major area of study. Science labs cross over into other course time. One section of a required course is offered and more people need it. The great thinkers did not envision academia as a synonym for a three-ring circus when they formulated their ideas about a liberal education.

During this time of pre-registration, we urge the administration to make it easier for students to fulfill their required courses early in their academic careers. These courses can help students decide what really interests them. Eventually, though, it is important for students to focus their attention and study on courses of their own choosing and not on classes mandated by the University.

We understand and respect the importance of a liberal education. After all, that is why we are all here. We only hope that these courses can be incorporated into our schedules sooner and more reasonably so that we can devote the majority of our study to our chosen fields.

Fear does not justify intolerance

To the Editor:

I find it ludicrous that public figures such as Stephen Freind continue to propagate the type of misinformation that characterized his letter in the March 12 issue of the Villanovan. While I have neither the time nor space to question the logic with which he justifies his curious ethics of discrimination, I refuse to let pass the sweeping fallacies which he musters in support of his argument.

What I find "confusing and illogical" in Mr. Freind's article is not "the Barbra Streisands of the world," but his uninformed talk of a "cause-and-effect paradox." A paradox indeed. I have often seen Mr. Freind's name associated with causes purporting to advance the sanctity of human life. But by promoting the type of misinformation he does in his article, Mr. Freind becomes part of the life-threatening cloud of ignorance which hangs over our society.

Throughout his article, Mr. Freind constructs an argument which leads the reader to conclude that it is the homosexual community which is responsible for the AIDS virus. While it is true that the virus' initial epicenter was in the homosexual community, we are all responsible for understanding which behaviors spread the disease. Mr. Freind speaks of homosexuality as "the precise conduct which causes the disease," when in fact the many victim of AIDS — young, old, homosexual, heterosexual, male, female, black, white, Hispanic, Asian, etc., — will tell you that there is no single "precise" cause.

Consider the following information from the Center for Disease Control's HIV/AIDS surveillance of AIDS cases in the United States reported through December 1992:

"As of October 1989, 4,982 people with AIDS had become infected with the virus from man-woman sex. By December 1991, that number had risen to 11,936. An additional 3,512 cases were reported in 1991 and 4,114 more in 1992 — bringing the cumulative total to 16,254 as of December 1992.

"In the age group 13-19, heterosexual contact accounted for 16 percent of the AIDS cases reported in 1991; a percentage which rose to 26 percent in 1992. This increase is reflected in the age group 20-24, moving from 15 percent in 1991 to 18 percent in 1992.

"As of December 1992, 36 percent of the women infected with the HIV virus had obtained it through heterosexual contact."

Clearly, AIDS is not a disease limited to the homosexual community.

Mr. Freind closes his article with the supposition, "The real tragedy of this entire situation is that the vast majority of Americans support the views contained in this article ... " In this case, I fear he is correct. I fear that because of people like Stephen Freind, most Americans — dare I say most Villanovans? — think they are immune from the AIDS virus because they are not homosexual. The facts indicate that this simply is not true.

Mr. Freind's ignorance does a grave disservice not only to the homosexual community, but to the American people as a whole. If Mr. Freind would promote the truth so well as he promotes his ignorance, perhaps misinformation would no longer obstruct the struggle against a disease which threatens us all.

Policy on women in the Church should remain

To the Editor:

The Rev. Owen R. Jackson's commentary in the March 12 edition of the Villanovan promoting women's ordination represents neither his Church's position, nor that of everyone at Villanova.

It is simplistic to state that, "the early church adopted the normal patriarchical cultural arrangement" upon its founding simply because it existed already. Jesus Christ was not some mindless victim of cultural bias in His time but had a divine purpose for everything He did. Fr. Jackson believes that he can better define priesthood than Jesus when he states, "priesthood need not be gender specific since Jesus' maleness is not at issue.'"

Jesus broke many "gender specific" customs of His time and associated with men and women not accepted as equals by society. He ignored the tradition of priestesses existing in other religions in His era and chose only men.

Jesus Christ's unbounded sensitivity and justice cannot be improved upon, even by Fr. Jackson. If any Catholic, especially a priest, begins imagining that he or she is more wise and free of cultural bias than the Son of God, I would say that person needs to do some deep soul-searching.

OP-ED

Conservativism does not justify any form of discrimination

By SAM SHABAN

The March 12 issue of the Villanovan featured an article written by Stephen F. Freind, president of the Keystone Conservative Alliance, entitled "Conservative justifies discrimination against homosexuals." Unfortunately, for those who stand on the political right, the article's publication was a severe foot in the mouth that did more harm to their position than good.

Nevertheless, I admire Mr. Freind's courage and determination to fly in the face of progressive public opinion. It is important that all people feel comfortable when voicing their views no matter how extreme, radical or, in this case, retrograde they may be. We cannot discriminate against anyone when it comes to free speech, even when their words are proof that silence is golden.

In his article, Mr. Freind questions the intelligence and rationale of the liberal-minded who support equal treatment for homosexuals and at the same time raise money for AIDS research. He feels that homosexuality causes the dreadful disease. I ask the people involved in AIDS awareness to send Mr. Freind one of their brochures to help him better understand how the disease is transmitted. It is painful to see this kind of misinformation in print, when so many have dedicated their precious time to combat such ignorance. Let us look at further examples of the type of intelligence Mr. Freind fosters.

He begins his article with the claim that the right to discriminate, "to choose, to express a preference for one thing above others ... is normal, [and] even healthy." He then gives "examples of discrimination" apparent in "the clothes we wear, the friends we choose, the sports teams we follow, the food we consume," etc. There is yet another meaning of discrimination that Mr. Freind neglects, and it is the one that applies most to his topic. Discrimination is making "a difference in treatment or favor on a basis other than individual merit." This can hardly be considered "normal" or "healthy." Even so, let us ignore this crucial point for the sake of argument.

Having now seen the definition of discrimination Mr. Freind favors, it would seem absurd that he would deny a person the right to choose his or her sexual orientation. Yet, he does. He qualifies this exception claiming that homosexuality "is a dangerous aberration of normal behavior" and therefore, should not be protected under the same clause that makes discrimination "for reasons of race, creed, color, religion and gender" illegal.

According to Mr. Freind, "self-preservation is a normal instinct of the human race ... any action running contrary to it would most definitely be abnormal." This archaic view of normality was very popular during the Middle Ages when sex for any reason other than reproduction was considered sinful. Today we recognize a clear difference between procreation and sexuality. Moreover, we are less inclined to produce formulas that offer absolute truths. Again, for the sake of argument though, let us accept Mr. Freind's quoted definition of abnormality.

Earlier, Freind cited examples of "normal" and "healthy" choices we make as human beings in the area of sports, nutrition, etc. Bearing his definition in mind, would football be considered a "normal" activity? One would agree that men crushing each other on a field does not preserve the species. Are people who choose to eat cheeseburgers, bacon, potato chips and other harmful foods "aberrations of normal behavior?" Should these abnormal people lose their rights to equal treatment under the law?

Further on, Mr. Freind offers situations when discrimination against homosexuals can be tolerated. These remarks are made despite his insistence earlier in the article that no such person "should be persecuted or prosecuted for engaging in homosexual activity with a consenting adult." What Mr. Freind fails to realize is that discrimination is indeed a form of persecution.

At one point in American history, black men were not permitted to fly fighter planes because scientists believed them incapable of handling the complexities of navigation, due to the small size of their brain. Having them fly would have destroyed morale. Today, this same type of discrimination is applied to a different group of people.

In accord with Mr. Freind's arguments, I wonder if a public school would have the right to reject the employment of a religious person because of that person's beliefs, thinking that "one with such values might have an adverse impact on the students." If we all thought with Mr. Freind's logic, I'm afraid that the public school system would be out of teachers.

If Mr. Freind's oafish opinions represent those of the Keystone Conservative Alliance, then I cannot see how this association is in any position "to educate and lobby on behalf of conservative causes." It seems that learning might be a more suitable purpose.

As I previously indicated, it is important that people be granted the right to voice their opinions freely. However, it is equally as important, if these opinions are to be taken seriously, that people support their arguments with good reasoning. As we have seen, Mr. Freind fails to do so. His outdated theories and unsubstantiated claims fall brutishly on sensible ears. I offer a final bit of advice to Mr. Freind and his friends: One should never throw stones at the unintelligent liberals when one lives in a conservative house of glass.

Sam Shaban is a sophomore philosophy major who is neither liberal nor conservative. He prefers to be free of the confines of conventional labelling.

Posters demonstrate sexist attitudes

To the Editor:

There is an issue of sexism pertaining to the ethics of campaigning among one of the Commerce and Finance senatorial candidates. This issue may not be well known or well publicized due to the discrimination of the location at which some of the sexist posters have been placed. I am speaking of the "Rah Cow Ski" posters.

Presently, there are two completely different versions of this poster circulating throughout campus. One version is of a cheerleader, an actual cow and a skier. These posters are currently posted throughout campus, the majority of them in female dorms. The other version is of a cheerleader, a heavy woman in a bikini and a skier. These posters are posted in male or predominantly male dorms such as Sullivan, St. Mary's and Stanford, as well as the classroom buildings. But none are posted in Sheehan or Alumni.

Now, I don't understand the purpose of making two different versions of one poster. And I also don't understand why Raczkowski would place the "cow" ones everywhere but be selective about placing the "female" ones in certain locations — such as in male or predominantly male dorms. If he wants equal opportunity and equal campaigning, why now give the voters an equal chance to see both sides of Raczkowski — that means, equally show the Villanova community both posters. Whether he realizes this or not, posters of each candidate represent the character and ideals of the candidate. If the posters did not run parallel to the views of the candidate, such posters should not have been endorsed to begin with.

Raczkowski, as a candidate for a position that represents both men and women, needs to clear up his position on women's issues. How can he represent equality by demeaning a percentage of his constituency (those who are women)?

In addition to his other inconsistencies, I would like to address a letter he wrote regarding this matter. He does not focus on what he is apologizing for. For the females who have not seen the sexist version, there is no offense taken. Therefore, his letter is meaningless. But the females who read this now will realize that there is a two-sided campaign and will understand the nature of his apology.

The purpose of my letter is to clear up the ambiguity in Raczkowski's letter to the editor. I am not speaking out to bash or to sabotage any candidate's campaign. I am speaking out to help the students at Villanova to be more aware and well-informed about all their options in dealing with this campaign. I am also speaking out as a woman who found some of the ethics involved to be offensive and sexist.

Senate candidate apologizes for posters

To the Editor:

In response to a small group of women who consider my campaign posters offensive, I would like to issue this brief statement in order to clarify my views.

In no way was the "RAH COW SKI" poster designed in order to offend, insult or anger any group of the Villanova population, men or women. The poster's sole intent was to attract attention to my campaign — which includes both my character and my political ideas. I am an outspoken believer in sexual equality and the advancement of women's rights. For those who were offended, I issue you this apology.

However, the campaign is much more than posters and paraphernalia. My vision is to represent ALL of Villanova, not just a select group of Villanova. I invite each and every Villanova student to meet me and each of the other candidates. Decide for yourself. Misinformation is fatal. Judging one by his/her campaign posters is not enough. To know is to understand. Thank you.

COMMENTARY

Student says, "That's English major, not English muffin."

By PETER SHAUGER

Sometimes I get really tired. It is usually a combination of commuting and too many required courses. Actually my required courses are pretty much the reason why I'm a commuter in the first place. Similar to the problems I had with my internship, I also had to have a 3.0 if I wanted to live on or around campus. Since I don't have anything close, I live at home and commute.

So when I just can't keep my eyes open anymore, I take a nap in the Connelly Center. However when I wake up, I feel more like an English muffin than an English major, with all those nooks and crannies on my face where my cheeks laid flat against the patterned couch. Now, no one I know really enjoys looking like an English muffin, but this is a problem that all nappers must deal with.

Recently I woke from one of these naps and took a long, hard look at myself in the mirror, and after I wiped the drool from the corner of my mouth, I thought, "What can be done to change this seemingly inescapable problem."

Then I remembered that Student Government elections would be soon and my opinions could be discussed in the annual heated debates by people who have the power to change things that matter on campus. The same brilliant minds who proposed the new eating establishment, The Corner Grille (the final 'e' in Grille is pronounced, Grille therefore rhymes with 'silly'), where people can eat less food than served in the dining halls or Connelly Center and still manage to pay too much money, would be taking charge of my proposal.

What was my proposal? Actually, it was simple. All they gotta do is invent some sort of non-wrinkling couch upholstery in our fine chemistry department and then put it on all the couches.

And my plan would have worked, too, if it wasn't for the fact that I happened to be napping while the debates were going on, so I wasn't able to ask any of the candidates if they would consider my solution to "English Muffin Face Syndrome."

I wound up getting there just in time to catch them on their way out and asked the candidates if they would consider my proposal. Some of them laughed at me, some ignored me, and the ones who didn't laugh at me or ignore me told me they would pay as much attention to it as they would with the other issues. Oh well, another great invention of mine down the tubes.

So I went home that day, a broken man, and decided that a couple hours of rugged snow shoveling in the driveway might restore my normally pillar-like sense of manhood (that's pillar, not pillow).

As I was shoveling, I saw a snow plow drive by my street which seemed to push about the first layer of snow off the surface but didn't get to any of the ice below. I couldn't believe that my wimpy little arms were doing a better job clearing snow and ice than a large snow plow. Then I got really tired again and went inside to take another nap.

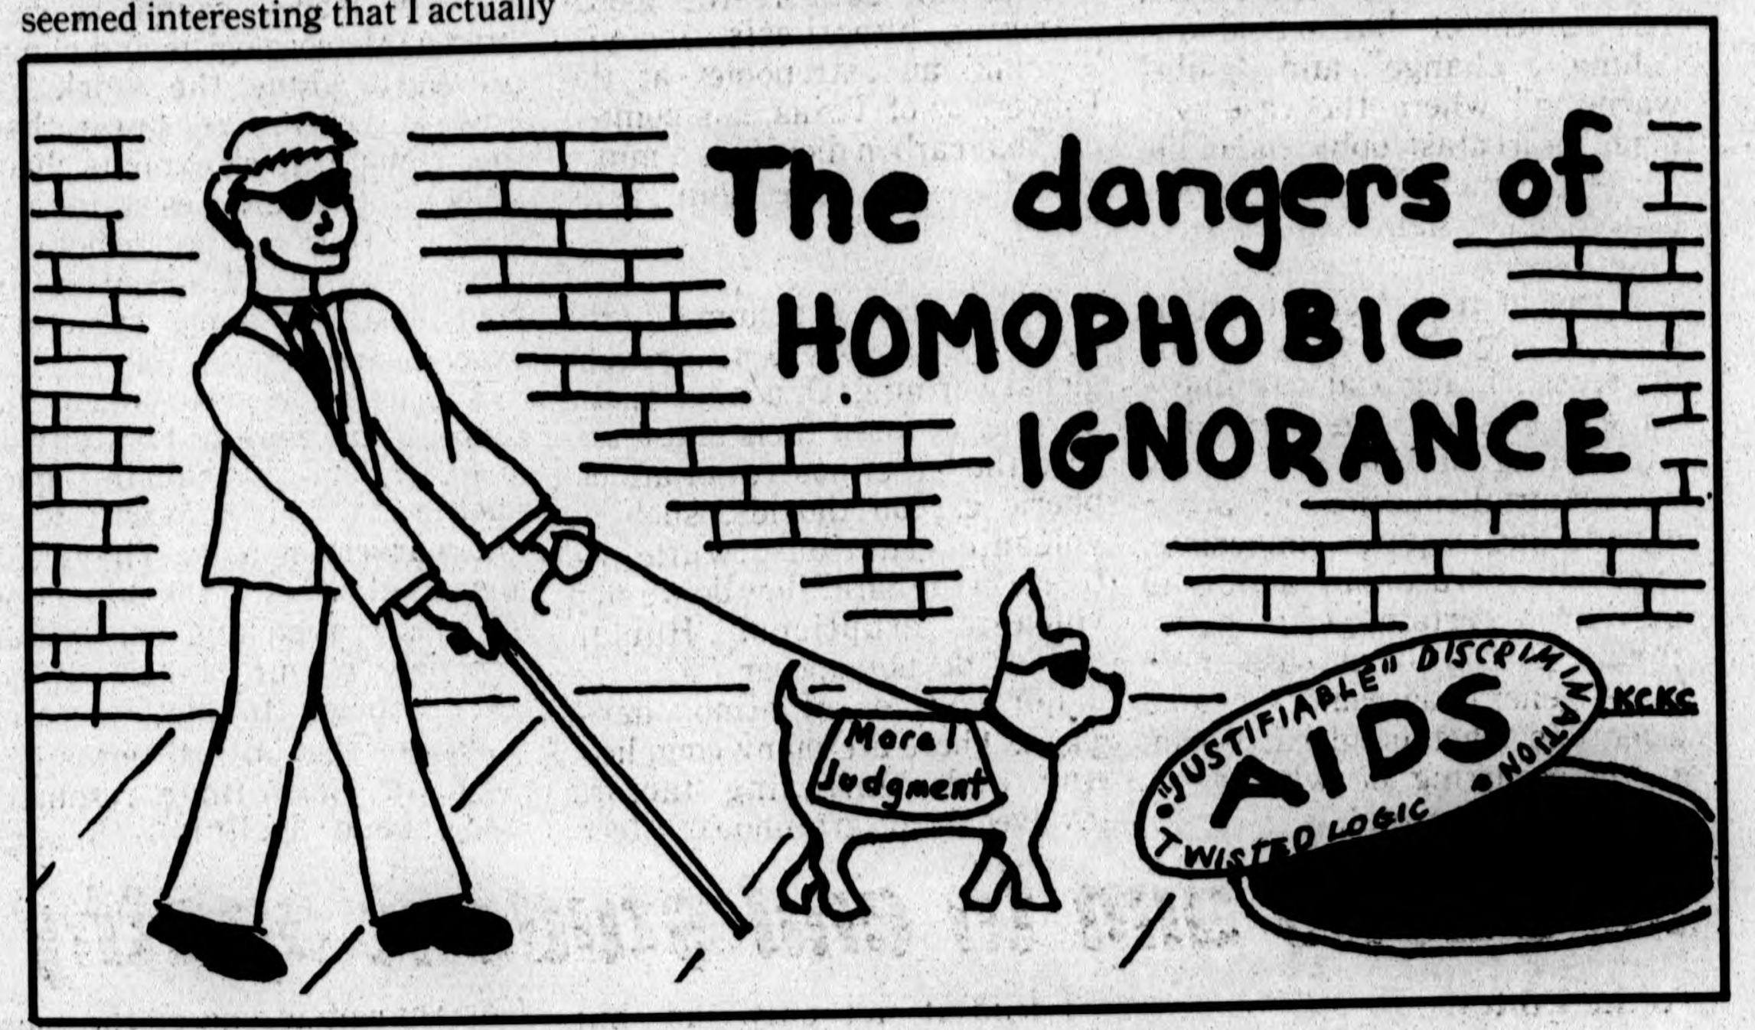
When I woke up (again with English muffin face), I decided to work on my schedule for next year. I still had some English requirements to fulfill so I looked into my options. It didn't look good. Not only were my options minimal, but I knew that even the choices I did have would be overcrowded since they were required.

And then I started thinking about how much more effective teachers were when there are fewer students in a classroom. I was on a big metaphor kick recently, so I tried to make a connection between shoveling and overcrowded required classes. The snow plow wasn't working very well because there was too much snow even for a big plow. If they would have broken up the work into smaller sections with smaller, more precise plows, the roads would have been cleared better.

I remember very little from most of my required courses; it's in the courses I chose because they seemed interesting that I actually learned something.

Unfortunately, since overcrowded classes are a fairly important issue, the University will probably overlook it.

As for me I'll be working night and day with the chemistry department, because I always seem to be really tired from required courses and I'm always taking naps in Connelly Center and I keep having to tell people I'm an English major, not an English muffin.



Freind's discrimination ignorant

By BRIAN L. GEMPP

This is a letter in response to Stephen F. Freind's article in the March 12 issue of the Villanovan. Mr. Freind's conservative ravings resemble many of the "progressive" thoughts which came out of the Bible belt in the early part of this century. The conservative Bible beaters proved such great advances as the Scopes Monkey Trial defeat of a teacher who attempted to forge ahead by teaching evolution as an alternative to the creation story. As a result of conservative fear, he was jailed for teaching evolution.

Mr. Freind was correct in assuming that this country was built upon "the proposition that ... each individual [has the right] to make personal choices" freely, but he was gravely mistaken in assuming that this privilege carries with it the right "to discriminate." Mr. Freind's way of thinking promotes racism and sexism, as well as elitism. But more importantly, it fractures a society by not tapping into the bastion of talents offered by people with diverse backgrounds, including homosexuals.

Mr. Freind argues, "To extend such protection to any individual because of his choice of sexual conduct ... would be ludicrous." It frightens me to think that Mr. Freind might decide for all of us what groups need protection and what others do not. A single person's concept of who deserves legal protection and equal rights is the foundation of fascist regimes like the Third Reich.

It is also interesting to note how Mr. Freind views sex. He cites that "self-preservation is a normal instinct of the human race." This cold view of human relations echoes pre-Vatican II opinions that sex is only acceptable when a couple is attempting to procreate. The Church was slow in admitting that sex is also a medium to express love. If a married couple were asked which force is the primary motivation for their love-making, it undeniably would be as a means of expression of their love for each other.

Homosexuals are no different in that they, too, use their sexuality as a means of expressing their love for a caring other. According to Mr. Freind, sex for any reason other than "self preservation" is "abnormal." I'll leave it up to Mr. Freind to inform all married couples who no longer want children that he feels their sex is immoral and "abnormal."

Mr. Freind also says that a homosexual should not be "persecuted or prosecuted." But in the same breath, he cites that homosexuals should be denied military service because of their sexual preference alone. If this were the case, the military would be at a great loss. I personally knew a gay man who worked for 20 years as an engineer for the Air Force without whom many great technological advances would not have been effected. Yet Mr. Freind is under the assumption that the military is void of any homosexuals. Open your eyes, this military force you hold in such high regard is not without homosexuals. Without gays in the military, it would never have reached its current state of superiority.

Furthermore, Mr. Freind wants to relegate who can and cannot be teachers. He is somehow under the assumption that a teacher's sexual lifestyle "might have an adverse impact on students."

Does he feel the same way about people's ideas who are currently taught in academia? If he wants to decide who can and cannot teach to students he might encounter some shocking discoveries. From Socrates, to Oscar Wilde, to Allen Ginsberg, many paramount thinkers in both the arts and sciences would be eliminated because of their actions behind closed bedroom doors.

Mr. Freind, do you propose we eliminate Socrates from every philosophy curriculum in the world? Maybe you could replace Oscar Wilde as the author of Dorian Gray? No, I forgot, you deem their work inappropriate for students to read. If there are any other works you feel are not appropriate, let us know.

Do you feel it is your conservative duty to involve yourself in all aspects of people's lives? No, that is what you hate most about liberals! Government should keep their hands off, Mr. Freind. That is the basis of conservative belief. What you propose sounds dangerously like fascism; only people that meet your criteria are allowed to coexist.

Mr. Freind also promotes denying gays the right to live wherever they chose.

He finds it appropriate to reject an application to live in an apartment complex solely because of one's sexual preference. Does he propose sending all homosexuals to concentration camps so that they won't infect the community's minds?

Freind sees AIDS as "a disease which has the potential of making the Bubonic Plague look like a walk in the park." How does he propose we deal with AIDS? Mr. Freind thinks we should do nothing. He somehow feels the disease is justifiable because it is a logical "cause and effect paradox." Because gays act in an "immoral" way, they are going to be eradicated in an appropriately "immoral" fashion. What I want Mr. Freind to do is go to any major hospital and explain that "cause and effect paradox" to a baby born with AIDS or a child who contracted it through a blood transfusion. Furthermore, if he attempted to get to know any homosexuals he might even see that they are good people and that their lives are productive and filled with love and worth.

Finally, Mr. Freind has the gall to assume that homosexuals choose their sexual identity. Though this is a hotly debated topic, the homosexuals that I have known live lives of exile and alienation. Would anyone in their right mind choose a life style of constant ridicule and isolation at the hands of such pioneering thinkers as Mr. Freind? A homosexual friend once commented to me that if he ever could change his feelings he "would jump at the chance." Instead he is left to a life of alienation because of great thinkers like Mr. Freind who feel it is their conservative duty to impose their morality on all of us.

As a result of people who think like Mr. Freind, my homosexual friend has dropped out of school. He now fills his time living from job to job and playing the cello, his real passion, in the New York City Junior Philharmonic. Relax, Mr. Freind, if you go to hear the orchestra you can close your ears to the cellos. The orchestra will sound fractured and a bit discordant, similar to the society you hail as morally upstanding and void of any abnormalities that you feel so threatened by. By discriminating against homosexuals, you not only take away a group's valid human rights, you also hurt the entire society.

Demand honesty from candidates, not cliches

Stop the apathy. Vote for change. Let your voice be heard.

How many more cliches are we going to hear before the Student Government elections are held on March 23? We all know visitation rules are unnecessary and the Liberal Arts department could use some new computers. But how these issues will be addressed concerns us as voters.

Instead of clear-cut answers, the senatorial and presidential debates were packed with rhetoric urging students to vote for sensational ideas and theories to change the University.

Didn't we learn anything through the election of Bill Clinton last November? Yes, people are asking for change, but they want an honest and obtainable change. People want to identify with their leaders and be able to trust them. There weren't too many things people said during the Student Government debates in which Villanova students really could believe.

The candidates discussed several issues, including the current visitation policy, downsizing and its effects, campus diversity and gender equality. The candidates were questioned, and we listened to their responses, but we rarely ever heard a clear answer. The questions were sometimes evaded altogether, showing a lack of knowledge on the candidates' part.

In the presidential race, Kelly Ann Walsh has good experience, currently serving as the nursing senator. We believe that her knowledge of the issues is much more extensive than what she showed at the debates. Also, Rosanna Picillo, currently a liberal arts senator, has good experience and a working knowledge of student government. However, she never really showed a clear understanding of the issues, often resorting to political rhetoric.

Candidates Brian Collie and Patrick Kennedy are both sophomores. Collie's inexperience showed at the debate, and he did now show that he understood issues important to students, such as downsizing of the issues and gender equality. However, Kennedy showed a clear understanding of the issues and often cited evidence to support his statements.

We all have good ideas about what issues the students want addressed. But now our student-representative candidates should discuss how they will try to confront them. All the good intentions in the world will not result in anything unless there is a concrete direction of action.

Students want honest leaders who can give direct answers to tough questions. Any ways to maintain their goals wouldn't hurt either.

Global warming does not necessitate drastic action

To the Editor:

This letter is in response to the article by Lauren Wurst in the Feb. 19 issue of the Villanovan. The subject of that article was "climatic change" and "global warming" where the case was made for a catastrophic end of life on this planet. The article was biased and contained no substantiated evidence.

A casual reader of the article could easily be left with the impression that global warming is an established scientific and engineering fact that it is caused by industrial emissions of carbon dioxide and requires immediate, expensive, draconian action to prevent a certain global catastrophe. This is not the case; there is no general agreement among scientists whether global warming is occurring or whether it would be detrimental.

Patrick J. Michaels, a professor of environmental science and a state climatologist, maintained that the environmental apocalyptics cannot support the global warming hypothesis. Joceyln Tomkin, an astronomer at the University of Texas, has pointed out that carbon dioxide is a minor greenhouse gas, the main gas is water vapor.

Will we have to dehumidify the earth's atmosphere to prevent global warming? Or do we stop the burning of fossil fuels and disregard the larger sources of atmospheric carbon dioxide, such as volcanic eruptions, while we freeze in the dark? How do we stop volcanic eruptions? Human actions do not appear to be the major sources of atmospheric gases. There are many complicating and conflicting factors involved in the greenhouse effect.

The global climate models on which the predictions of warming are based are non-linear, dynamic systems subject to chaotic behavior. The models cannot be calibrated. Meteorologists and climatologists, since the work by Edward Lorenz, recognize that the "climate" itself exhibits chaotic behavior and defies statistical characterization. The predictions are unreliable and an extremely poor basis for huge monetary expenditures.

The article seems to lament the concept that increased scarcity of fossil fuels will result in higher fuel prices. This is exactly what the market has to do. The role of increased prices in the promotion of conservation and exploration for new resources has always been crucial. In fact, research indicates that in real terms, the costs of many finite resources have been declining through recorded history even while the use of resources has been increasing.

It is extremely expensive to solve an ill-defined or undefined problem. The chance of solving such a problem is highly unlikely. Environmental research and the definition of environmental problems is absolutely necessary before drastic action to solve perceived problems is taken.

The debate, research and problem analysis and solving must continue. The claim that drastic action must be taken now is ludicrous. Opinions based on insufficient data, such as the article in question, belong on the editorial page.

Elections aim to end student apathy

To the Editor:

Well, fellow students, the time is drawing near. On Tuesday, March 23, the Student Government elections will take place. The decisions that are made that day will not only affect the University next year, but for many years to come. And so, it is important that every person at Villanova vote. You may be old seniors on your way out, or you may still be young freshmen wondering exactly how Student Government works. It makes no difference. Simply put, it is crucial that we, as a community, vote and decide how we will be represented as a University in the future.

I find it not only sad, but disappointing that we, as a community, are so apathetic in voting. Perhaps it is most upsetting for me coming fresh out of a high school atmosphere where Student Government elections were a very big deal, to find that, as adults, so many of us find voting irrelevant in our lives.

It comes a a bit of a surprise to me that so many of us who seem to have a genuine love for Villanova let this important event pass us by. It will make a difference if we vote, because by voting, we are choosing what is important to us and whom we want to represent us in converying our views and concerns. The Student Government is one of the most powerful tools at Villanova in voicing our views and ideas to the people who need to hear them.

This week's edition of the Villanovan contains statements from every candidate running. It also has a recap of some of the views the candidates hold. Read them, learn about the candidates, and, most importantly, VOTE on March 23.

I hope we have a wonderful turnout at this year's elections. Going to the debates, I was not only impressed by the enthusiasm that the candidates had, but by the fact that they so want to be a part of Student Government and represent you. However, before they can do that, we need to hear your voice. So, come March 23, decide which candidates would best represent you. And then, vote. See you there.

Help Wildcat Shuttle continue its success

To the Editor:

We would like to take this opportunity to thank all the students who used the Wildcat Shuttle last weekend. As drivers, it was obvious to us that it was an overwhelming success. On its first night of operation there were no significant problems. In our opinion, you, the students, showed that you are responsible enough not to abuse this much-needed service.

We would like to stress that this project is only on a trial basis. This trial is being sponsored by the Student Government Association and we hope that it can be continued as well as it has started.

At the conclusion of the trial period, the SGA will write a recommendation to the administration encouraging them to develop plans to make the Wildcat Shuttle a permanent fixture at Villanova. However, only through a problem-free and successful trial period will this recommendation carry the weight necessary to grab the attention of the University Administration.

Please help SGA to make it happen. Write to us in the Student Government office so that we may forward your opinions to the administration as well. The shuttle will run the last two weekends in March. Get out and ride the shuttle, but be smart — don't abuse it. Thank you for your support and cooperation in showing that this service is needed and can be successful.

Former SGA president backs Walsh/Lammilin

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity as last year's student body president over the upcoming Student Government elections. Throughout my presidency, I stressed various issues as being important to the student body. This year's election provides the Villanova student body with an excellent opportunity to build on the past two years of successes in Student Government.

For this reason I wish to endorse the presidential bid of Kelly Ann Walsh and her running mate Craig Lammilin for vice president and arts senator. I have made this decision because I have known both candidates and believe firmly that they will carry out a program of important and attainable goals.

Before Kelly Ann ran for and won the Nursing Senate seat, for many years there had not been a strong voice for the school of Nursing — today she has provided that voice. By serving this year in the University Senate she will bring the leadership necessary next year when there will be no incumbent student senators to provide that leadership. I was able to watch Craig Lammilin during his freshman year as he served as assistant to the elections chairperson, and there I watched him demonstrate honesty and a desire to attain the goals that were important to the students. Furthermore, Craig's experience from this year working on the Executive Presidential Cabinet will complement Kelly's knowledge of how the Senate works.

After speaking with them, I believe that they represent a great promise for consistency and unity in Student Government. I urge all members of the Villanova community to cast their vote for Kelly Ann Walsh for president and Craig Lammilin for vice president and arts senator. As a team I know they will accomplish great things.

Dining services thanked

To the Editor:

The Blizzard of '93 closed airports, major highways, shopping malls and even Catholic churches. But the cafeteria of St. Mary's Hall remained open, serving over 300 students in exemplary fashion. With a Dining Service staff limited to Keith (Dr. Food) and student worker Owen, Saturday's and Sunday's meals were prepared and served in fine form.

We would like to thank the Dining Service staff, especially Dr. Food and Owen, for their resourcefulness, hard-work and dedication to the students of St. Mary's Hall. All too often their work goes unnoticed or is taken for granted. Not this time.

STUDENT GOVERNMENT ELECTIONS

Presidential Candidates

Brian Collie

My name is Brian Collie and I am currently a second year student majoring in political science and economics. I write this in an endeavor to gain your support in my candidacy to be your next student body president.

I have been very involved at Villanova, having held leadership positions in organizations such as NROTC, College Republicans, Society of St. Augustine, Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity and various intramurals. It is through this interaction with fellow students that I have realized that there are many changes needed to improve this fine university. Among the issues my running mate, Kevin Haggerty, and I hope to focus upon are: modernization of residence halls, extended visitation hours, lowering of parking permit prices, improved athletic facilities, more MRC and copy machines, extended library hours and increased entertainment options such as developing a band scene.

Kevin and I have chosen the phrase "Stop the Apathy" to be the theme of our campaign. What we mean by this is that no matter how great our ideas might be they can never be implemented into policy without the support of you, the students. During the campaign 250 students were surveyed about how they feel about Student Government. The results are quite alarming; only 17 percent said Student Government is effective, and only 2 percent feel well-informed of Student Government activities. Obviously a change is needed, a change that will bring forth results and reach out to the students. Kevin and I are that change.

The future of Villanova depends on your vote. "Stop the Apathy," elect Brian Collie and Kevin Haggarty.

We, Patrick Kennedy, candidate for student body president, and Kristin Burns, candidate for vice president, seek these offices because we want to strengthen the Villanova community through reforms and programs which will increase student involvement and reduce student apathy by creating awareness of campus issues in the hopes of accomplishing change.

The student government association has made a difference over the past year, and with our election it will continue to make a difference next year. Our combined experiences through variouis student organizations, our enthusiasm for change and our accessibility give us the ability to represent the entire student body. We want to take this opportunity to let you know who we are, what we bring to these offices and what we hope to accomplish as president and vice president.

Here is what the Kennedy/Burns ticket offers you in:

Student Life:

* Night Club — Continue, not begin, the fight to renovate the Pie Shoppe into a night club hosting weekly entertainment.

* Shuttle Bus — Continue to service, expand to Saturday and Sunday afternoons.

* Intramurals — Increase involvement, restore greatness.

* Campus Activities — Increase involvement, especially within humanitarian organizations.

* Diversity — Offer more opportunities for awareness that will help strengthen a desire for difference.

Academic Concerns:

* Variety and availability of classes — Including Biology labs and Fine Arts classes.

* Computer Upgrading — Add computerized registration.

Other Concerns:

* Midnight Madness

* Improved/expanded recycling

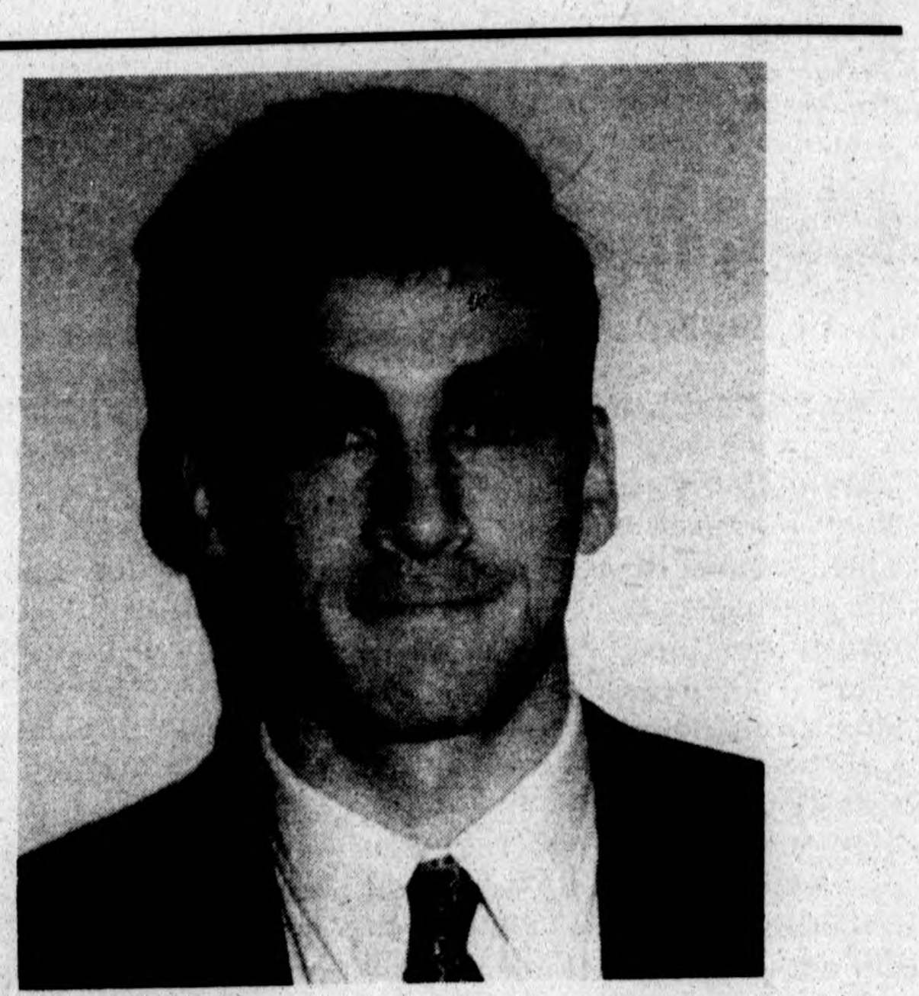
* Support for "other" athletic teams

* Strengthen fine arts

With your involvement, change is possible.

Vote experience.

Vote Kennedy/Burns and take a step in the right direction!



Patrick Kennedy

Rosanna Picillo

Hello, my name is Rosanna Picillo and I would like to share with you why "Ro and Glenn" is the best ticket on next Tuesday's ballot for the positions of president and vice president of the student body. We are second semester juniors with leadership positions across the board.

Glenn is also running for the position of commerce and finance senator so that he can support the student body on our University Senate. Last year, I was elected by the students of the College of Arts and Sciences to be a senator for the University Senate. I became a member of the student life committee and worked eagerly on three major proposals to the administration.

The first proposal concerned the new Wildcat Shuttle System that became a reality this past weekend. I aim to make it a permanent, daily shuttle alleviating hitching, drunk driving and the overall segregation between students that live on and off campus.

The second proposal will hopefully attain 24-hour parking in the Main Lot, seven days a week and evening parking in the St. Augustine Center parking garage for permit owners. This will increase both the safety and convenience of our campus.

The last proposal concerns visitation in the residence halls.

As your student senator, I took the initiative to stress to the administration and faculty that not only will this revision enhance campus life, it will also promote more safety at the entrance of the dormitories.

If I am elected student body president, I will enthusiastically implement the experience I have attained as an elected senator to push for campus renovations. My agenda will fight for contemporary computer labs, larger and improved fitness facilities, campus entertainment with known comedians and bands, a University doctor between 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and meal plan access to the Connelly Center.

Glenn and I know we will make an excellent team, representing the views of the entire student body. We are up for the challenge — put us to the test! Vote for Ro and Glenn to make 'Nova for the '90s!

Hello, my name is Kelly Ann Walsh and I would like to be your next student body president. My past leadership experience includes: nursing senator; vice president of SNAP, local chapter, state and national positions; and executive Board of Omicron Delta Kappa, a national leadership honor society. Now that I have shared some of my qualifications, I would like to tell you what Craig Lammilin, my vice president, and I want to accomplish for Villanova students.

We believe that there are three essential components needed in order to provide a better Villanova for you.

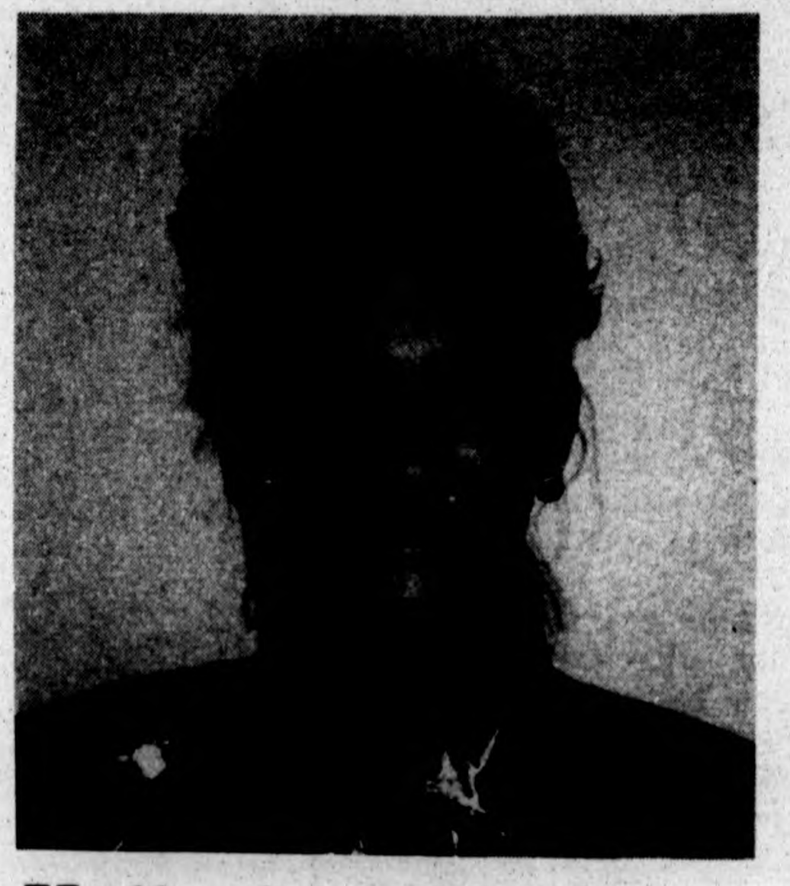
First, we will facilitate effective communication between the students, student government and faculty/administration. We will accomplish this through dinners with Fr. Dobbin, students and faculty representatives and submitting articles to the Villanovan.

Secondly, we will address the improvement of safety by having student representatives on a safety committee, continual student involvement in Public Safety training, input on placement of call boxes and having security lights and dorm master keys work properly.

Finally, since I have served as a senator and Craig has served on the cabinet, we have the experience to provide consistency within SGA as well as the knowledge of the developments within Villanova which will affect student life. Some of these developments include continual support of visitation, shuttle and night club proposals, town relations, basketball tickets, universal recycling proposal and more SGA co-sponsored social events.

We have many ideas of how we can make Villanova a better place for you, but they are not carved in stone. Our ideas are useless if they do not reflect the concerns and opinions of you. We believe that, as your elected representatives, we should come to you and not the students come to us.

Vote Kelly Ann Walsh and Craig T. Lammilin and the Voice of Villanova Students will be heard.



Kelly Ann Walsh

STUDENT GOVERNMENT ELECTIONS

Senatoral Candidates

Arts and Sciences

David Greason

As an arts senator, I would be entrusted with the responsibility to promote and ensure that development to the best of my ability. There are five primary objectives I would seek to accomplish, if elected, as a member of the University Senate and guardian of the students' trust.

First, as the University "rightsizes," it is essential that admissions seizes the opportunity to continue to diversify the student body both culturally and geographically. Second, I would like to introduce student government forums which would facilitate communication between students, faculty and administration. Third, the meal card prices at Bartley Cafe and the Corner Grille must be equal to those at Dougherty, Donahue and St. Mary's. Fourth, the Wildcard service should be expanded to allow service from vending and washing machines. Fifth, there is no excuse for not having washing machines in every residence hall.

These are the most prominent issues I will fight for in the coming year. I feel they can all be accomplished. Allow me the opportunity to work for you — vote Dave Greason for liberal arts senator.

Kevin Haggerty

Fellow students, faculty and members of the Villanova community, my name is Kevin Haggerty and I am running for an arts senate position.

To hold a position in athletics, academics and especially Student Government, one must possess leadership. Without this quality, the person in charge cannot delegate responsibility. On campus I am involved in various organizations, including the Committee for On-Campus Issues. During the '92 election, I assisted in the transportation of student voters. Last month I attended a conference in Indiana where I learned about the importance of cultural diversity. I also belong to groups such as Villanovans for Life, the Greek system, Intramural sports and the work study program.

Long resumes may seem impressive on paper, but true leadership goes beyond involvement in groups. To lead, one needs qualities which cannot be written down in ink. Qualities such as communication, persistence and, most importantly, respect for the school and students I will be representing. I am not running to make promises that will never develop but I am here to develop your ideas. We need to work together on issues which affect our school and forget the past. If elected I will serve the students, not control them.

My name is Craig Lammilin. I am a sophomore political science major running for the position of liberal arts senator.

For the past two years I have served on Student Government in various positions from assistant chairperson for elections (1992) to publicity chairperson (1993). For the past two years I have also been responsible for Army ROTC freshman recruitment. This year I am logistics coordinator for Senior Week.

After going dorm to dorm I have found the following to be major concerns. Greater long term consistency in Student Government can be developed if, at the end of their freshman year, freshman are allowed to run for a position on the University Senate. I will vigorously support the current proposals for a full-time student shuttle and changes in the visitation policy. I propose a computer facility for the Arts school be built and placed in the basement of the liberal arts center. A greater emphasis must be placed on advisement. I propose that a bi-semester advisment program be developed for arts students. Greater communication must be developed between the arts senators and the dean. I propose a monthly group meeting with the dean to discuss issues and the progress that we will make on them.

Thank you. Please vote for Craig Lammilin for arts senator.

Craig Lammilin

Hi! My name is Debby Wiley. I am a sophomore majoring in English and French. I would like to be one of your arts senators. I know that, if elected, I will take the position very seriously. I will work hard to voice the concerns and help to find solutions to the

I am not running for arts senator in order to have a better resume than the next guy. I am running for arts senator because I feel that I can make a difference in the relations between the student body and the administration. I am not afraid to voice my own opinions, and I definitely will have no reservations in voicing yours.

I would like to work for extended library hours, especially during exams. I would like to work with fellow senators and the administration in trying to find a way to make the registration policy easier for students. Most importantly, I would like to work on making the administration more approachable and accessible to students. I realize that these goals cannot be met overnight. It will take much time and effort to fulfill them. I am ready and willing to give not only my time and effort to the senate, but also my heart. Remember to cast your vote March 23.

Vote Debby Wiley arts senator — a voice that will be heard.

Debby Wiley

Commerce and Finance

Glenn Alba

Hello, my name is Glenn Alba and I am running for the position of Commerce and Finance senator. I am a junior accounting major and my active involvement in the Villanova community has given me a broad range of experience in leadership, motivation and communication. As treasurer of my fraternity for the past two terms, I have worked extensively with my peers and the administration. In one year under my leadership, we were able to extinguish a deficit peaking $4,000. I was an Orientation Counselor last year and I am currently on the Steering Committee gaining experience in working with others. In addition, I currently serve as vice president of the Accounting Society.

If elected, I would like to further promote the excellence of the business school by expanding and updating the Bartley computer site, keeping the Bartley Library open later and changing the core curriculum by requiring more writing and communication courses. Additionally, I would like to update the campus as a whole by using Connelly Center as a meal plan site, changing infirmary resources, updating the fitness facilities and promoting better campus entertainment.

I have the experience, the leadership and the motivation to be your representative. Let's push "Nova for the Nineties" by casting your vote for Glenn Alba on March 23.

Andy Botwin

My name is Andy Botwin and I am a sophomore accounting major here at Villanova. Some of my involvements around campus include being the social for my fraternity along with being a member of the Blue Key Society. I also take an active part in organizations such as Project Sunshine and Special Olympics.

I hope to accomplish a variety of things, including improved student/teacher relations, eliminating student apathy, improving community relations, increasing the size of the ever-so-small and overcrowded mail room and, of course, continue with the drive for phones and on-line computer systems in all dormitories along with the push for a change in the visitation policy.

People who are going to represent the student population at Villanova must have certain qualities, including such things as providing leadership, friendship, understanding, being ready and able to fight for what the students need and want and having a clear, rational way of dealing with the students, faculty, administration and the community.

There is a delicate balance as to when and where we, the students, must take a stand against the faculty and administration and when we must work together with these very same people. This is true whether you are talking about the change in visitation policy or working on community relations with the school.

STUDENT GOVERNMENT ELECTIONS

Alan G. Kennedy

Two hundred and fifty words or less is hardly enough space to go into depth on who I am or how I plan to represent you. First off, let me say that I am not here to revolutionize Villanova with sweeping changes. Rather, I am here to give the best of myself in a job that you have offered me.

Many people I have spoken to, myself included, feel that the Bartley Computer Lab is inadequate, overcrowded and obsolete. This has developed as my most important issue, as it relates directly to business students. I would like to see some new hardware, improved software and high quality printers purchased. During crucial times such as midterm and final weeks, I would like to see some of the other labs open to accommodate the overflow of students.

To increase student awareness of the SGA, I propose a biannual report by the president and the Senate to be published in the Villanovan. This will be separate from the "State of Villanova" address, and the report will include the progress made by the SGA and state the goals for the next semester.

The SGA's purpose is to address student concerns and the only way to accomplish this is through direct communication. I would like to see a monthly "Villanova Town Meeting" where anyone and everyone can voice their concerns in an open forum to the SGA.

please feel free to stop me on campus or call me at 520-1631. Thanks for your time, and please get out and vote Kennedy for commerce and finance senator on March 23.

Brian Lehman

The vital intention of the student government is to represent the entire community at Villanova University.

Henceforth, we must strive to not only forward current significant issues, but to implement programs designed to shape the future. Such objectives still requiring execution are proposals such as a permanent Main Line shuttle system, the proposition to loosen the stringent visitation policy with 24-hour security and permitting freshmen to become active members of the Student Government as University senators.

In an age of a restructuring society, Villanova University must also adapt to the future needs of students. The environment is a principle concern, and proposals must be enacted to make our existing recycling program even more comprehensive. In addition, computer facilities must be advanced in Bartley Hall, in an attempt to compare with those in Tolentine and Mendel Hall, respectively.

Yet, most importantly, Villanova University must endeavor to handle the double-edged sword of unity and diversity. Both can be achieved, but solely through cooperation and participation. The student government must operate indivisibly with groups such as the SPC, ACS, the Greek system and other minority factions to improve Villanova unity. On the other hand, diversity can be advanced through increased representation for all minority races and religious denominations.

I ask for your vote as commerce and finance senator on March 23.

Hi! My name is Jessica Trocchi and I am a sophomore accounting major. I am seeking the position of senator representing the College of Commerce and Finance. In this position I will work hard for the interests of the Villanova student body, particularly fellow business majors.

There are several issues which I hope to call attention to if I am elected commerce and finance senator. The administration must address the rising number of students in the decreased number of classes, especially in commerce and finance classes. In addition, I wish to work in upgrading and expanding the computer facilities in Bartley Hall, as well as implementing the proposal of linking student computers by modem to the University's mainframe. Student government should meet at specified times throughout the year with the leaders of other organizations like fraternities, sororities, SPC, RSA and ACS, so as to work together to provide the best possible social atmosphere for Villanovans. I would propose accommodations to dorm life that residents want and truly need (more laundry machines, juice dispensers, etc.), and I am an advocate of rethinking the visitation policy.

Jessica Trocchi

Hello, my name is Jay Raczkowski, your candidate for Commerce and Finance senator.

Many candidates will attempt to impress you this next week with their prior 40 years of political experience or their near-saintly character. But I am asking each and every one of you to meet these "politicians" and "saints." Decide for yourself whether or not they have the qualities that make up a Villanova senator. Are they committed to the position of senator or are they on the ballot for president, too?

What distinguished me as your senator and not just a candidate is that I have the energy and dedication to give 110 percent to the position and most of all, to you, my fellow students. I will be receptive to your views, hopes and suggestions — and more importantly, I will act upon these views, hopes and suggestions.

As your senator, I will be senator only in the literal sense. You will all be senators if I am elected. Each of you will be able to voice your opinion, I will only be a means of communicating your views. Come be a senator with me, Jay Raczkowski.

Jay Raczkowski

Currently, I am a sophomore Commerce and Finance student residing in Sullivan Hall, like a large number of other sophomore business students. I eat lunch and dinner and study in Bartley Cafe. I use the computer labs to type papers and do homework problems. I also deal with the trials and tribulations of using these facilities and being a Commerce and Finance student.

I am forced to wait for computer terminals in the Bartley labs. Then when I gain the chance to use it, it seems that something is always wrong with the printer. I am forced, then, to wait for a technician from the understaffed technician pool to resolve the problem.

Similarly, as I leave the lab or a class after having worked up a hearty appetite, I am again forced to contend with the treacherous Bartley Cafe lines. These are just some of the day-to-day nuisances an average business student must overcome.

Now, I do not want to sound like a whiner. I am actually very happy and content at Villanova. However, I would like to modify the common everyday annoyances Commerce and Finance students encounter. This is the reason I am running for student senate. I would like to be senator. I think I would do a good job. And, boy am I cool!

Nursing

Carolyn Sherman

Hi! My name is Carolyn Sherman and I am a junior nursing major. I am running for nursing senator because I am interested in taking initiative and making nursing students more aware of policies affecting them at Villanova.

I know my ability to work hard and my genuine interest in getting nurses more involved will enable me to succeed in this position. I have become familiar with the workings of student government at Villanova through my involvement with the On-Campus Concerns Committee, and I am currently the student liaison between the Alumni Association and student government.

Some nursing concerns I would like to work on include securing a limited number of parking passes for upperclass nurses around St. Mary's Hall and the Law School; upperclassmen are only on campus for classes two days a week and parking will be more convenient.

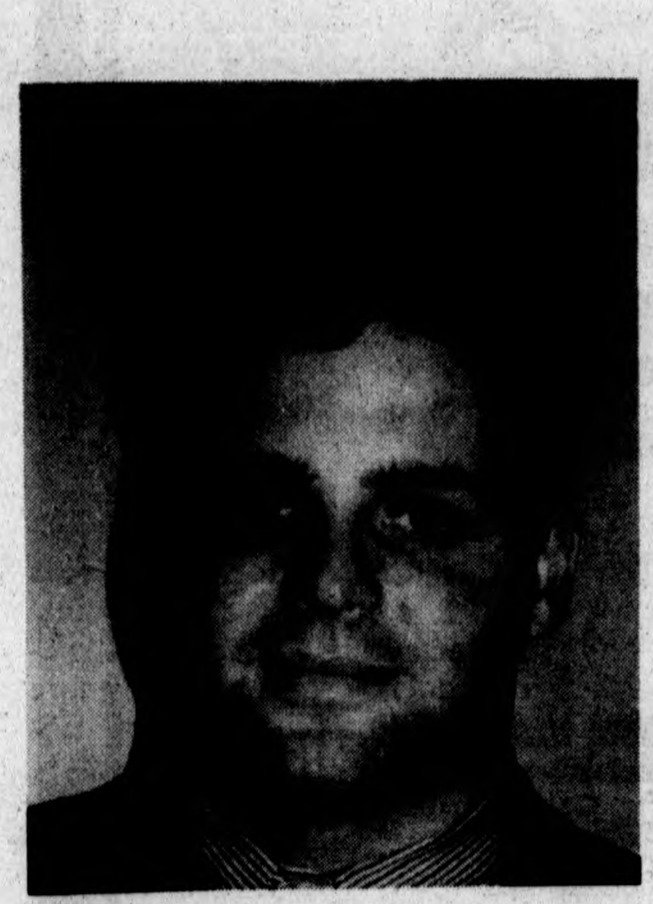
An area that I am interested in improving is the library resources available to graduate and undergraduate nursing students. I would like to phase out unneeded periodicals while increasing subscriptions to more useful magazines. These improvements will attract more graduate students and enhance undergraduate nursing education.

There is also need for a Xerox machine similar to the ones in Bartley Hall that would be accessible to all students in St. Mary's.

STUDENT GOVERNMENT ELECTIONS

Senatorial Candidates

Engineering



David Asker

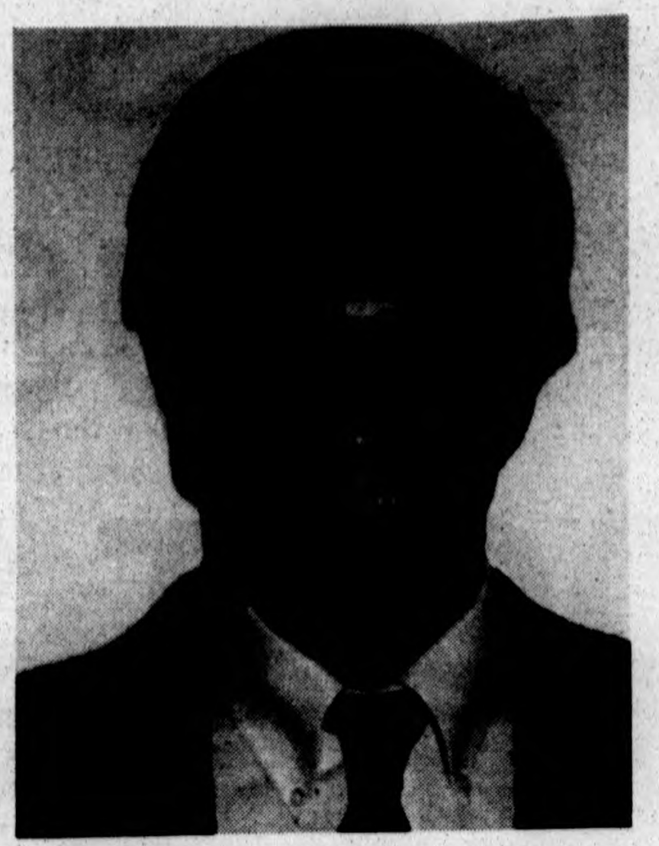
To those of you who do knot know me, my name is David Asker, and I am a third year civil engineering major.

When I came to Villanova I instantly like it and wanted to get involved as much as possible. Since I have been here I have joined the Blue Key Society, ASCE and the Villanova Rugby Team. All of these societies have introduced me to many great people, and now it is the time for me to give back even more to Villanova.

If elected Engineering Senator there are several things I want to accomplish for both the College of Engineering and for the entire University. A few of the things I wish to accomplish are:

1. Improve the computer situation
2. Better relations with industry
3. Better relations in the College of Engineering and the University.

These, along with other ideas, are all for making an experience at Villanova more enjoyable. However, more importantly is input from you the voter; I want to hear what the people I am representing want done, and if elected, my door will always be open. So remember on March 23 to vote, and vote David Asker for Engineering Senator.



Kevin Haney

I am a junior civil engineering major and I am running for the position of senator because I believe that students should have a voice in the direction and policy of our University. These are some issues that concern me.

A full time computer coordinator position should be created. This person would be responsible for the Tolentine Computer Lab and would serve as a liaison between the College of Engineering and UCIS. Group study space should be increased by keeping John Barry Hall and the Chemical Engineering Annex open at least until midnight.

I support the Student Government proposal on visitation, but I am willing to compromise in order to make progress toward abolishing visitation hours. If the shuttle service is successful, then I believe the University must fully fund the program.

I believe the new poster policy does not fully reflect our constitutionally guaranteed right to freedom of speech. Classes should be cancelled on the day of the Freedom School so that students can attend more of the programs. I think right-sizing is a good strategy for Villanova. However, we must keep a watchful eye on class size and tuition. Even if Villanova's student body is not diverse with respect to region, it should still be diverse with respect to culture and ethnic groups.

If you consider these issues important please vote for Kevin Haney.

Bryan Smith

I would like to start this mini-biography by telling you a little about my career here at Villanova. I was a member of the men's soccer team during my freshman year, I have participated in community service projects through Campus Ministry and have assisted in Special Olympics Weekend. I am a student member of American Institution of Chemical Engineers and a member of Alpha Phi Delta Fraternity which I now serve as treasurer.

If I am elected to the University Senate, I would like to organize a student run organization, overseen by the Student Government, where books can be exchanged between students at the beginning of each semester at little or no profit. This would eliminate the bookstore as a middleman where it often makes a large profit by purchasing the books back from the students and sell the same used book at an inflated price.

The second part of my agenda would be to overcome student apathy by bringing the Student Government to the students by the use of surveys distributed to resident students concerning the visitation policy. From these surveys, the student government will learn what your concerns are and any new ideas that may benefit the University as a whole, and then act upon them accordingly.

In closing, I would like to say that I am sincere in what I would like to do for Villanova, and plan to work hard as student senator.

Sciences

Shauna M. Duff

I am running for the office of science senator for the opportunity to positively affect the University Senate with a voice which would represent that of the Villanova student body. Specifically, as a biology major and a chemistry minor, I would be the student representative for the College of Science, for which I care deeply.

Due to the curriculum, I feel the students of the College of Science often feel set apart from the rest of the student body, and an increased participation in the University's activities, in addition to achievements in the classroom, will lead toward added success following graduation.

After the much-needed additions to the College of Liberal Arts were implemented, I feel the facilities for the College of Science need to be expanded and enhanced. The lab spaces are often crowded and offer an inadequate supply of equipment for the students working in the labs.

Speaking in a broader sense, Villanova University as a whole is currently facing several changes which will have profound effects throughout the Villanova community. Of most importance are the programs and plans to deal with the issues of rightsizing, social balance, off-campus relations, dormitory expansions and visitation policies. Changes in these areas are crucial for Villanova's future progression of our University.

Terrence Navin

My name is Terrence Navin, and I am a candidate for the office of science senator. I am a junior biology major in the Honors Program. While at Villanova, I have served on the College Board on Academic Integrity and was co-founder and first treasurer of Villanova University Minority Engineers and Scientists student organization. I am currently vice-president of Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity and coordinated the first AIDS forum at Villanova hosted by an HIV-positive speaker. I am also a member of AEA Pre-Medical Honor Society.

The following agenda represents some of the current concerns of the science community and is comprised of initiatives that I will promote as Science Senator.

- "I advocate increased diversity and social awareness on campus, with the goal of establishing a more unified student population.
- "Villanova University has no official AIDS policy; and I find this unacceptable in light of the social reality of the AIDS epidemic
- "Undergraduate student access to the computers and laser printers in Mendel Hall, as well as evening access to Mendel's parking lot, must be increased.
- "I support the installation of a campus-wide computer network with terminals in each residence hall and with modem access from off-campus.

I believe these policies and countless other unforeseen initiatives will help the College of Science to adapt and grow as a learning institution.

Honors Program designed to challenge students

By ANN MC NEARNEY
Staff Reporter

Dedication, prestige, integrity and distinction: all words to describe Villanova's Honors Program and the individuals involved in it. This four-year-program is designed for those students who are interested in going one step further in their education at the University.

Offering seminars, lectures and visiting faculty, the program believes "that the first goal of education is to liberate the person from the very real evils of ignorance, provincialism, meaninglessness and inhumanity by refining the ability to think clearly and logically."

The Honors Program offers courses in the social sciences, humanities and the natural sciences. Common misconceptions of the program are the students' qualifications for being invited into the program and the characteristics of the courses taken by the students.

Students are evaluated on the basis of their SAT scores, high school record and their advance curiosity in the program. Once accepted, the students may take classes directed to an Honors Program degree, or courses in Honors directed toward a different or additional major of their choice.

The Honors degree is equivalent to a major, and consists of twelve Honors courses, including a senior thesis. The only stipulations are that the student must maintain a grade point average of 3.25, and enroll in at least one Honors class every other semester.

The Honors Program curriculum consists of four types of courses — the required classes, the Honors interdisciplinary humanities sequence, the electives and the independent study and research area. The required section consists of courses in English, history, religious studies, philosophy and mathematics. The interdisciplinary sequence is a three-semester-multi-credit grouping of courses. Students carefully examine cultural and social trends and themes of Western civilization.

The elective offerings are classes held in previous semesters and experimental courses offered for the first time. Finally, the independent study and research projects the students pursue allow them to work independently on topics and also allow them to work with the professor of their choice.

After completing these types of courses the students have the opportunity to attain a bachelor of arts, Honors Program degree, bachelor of science, Honors Program degree or a certificate from the Honors Program sequence in Liberal Studies. The last of these is designed to give recognition to the achievement of "students whose course of study prevents them from pursuing an Honors Program degree."

The Honors Program students are advised by the Honors Director

Alcoholism plagues campuses

Special to the Villanovan

It began as a typical college escapade. According to newspaper reports, Larry Wooten, a University of Florida junior, sat with his friends at an off campus bar in Gainesville last November, betting who could drink more.

Wooten beat the record, downing 23 shots of liquor in an hour. He walked from the bar, but later passed out and began turning blue. He died on the way to the hospital.

Wooten's death made headlines, but college counselors say alcohol poisoning is not news. It is happening with increasing frequency on campuses around the country.

In September 1991, Wayne Parsons, a sophomore at Virginia Tech, gulped beer at a party, then drank 32 ounces of tequila. About an hour later, he collapsed. He died of alcohol poisoning the next morning in the hospital.

Early on Nov. 1, Alan Brodwater, a University of Idaho junior, died after a bout of drinking that took him to three off-campus Halloween parties.

"Binge" drinking, which the National Institute of Drug Abuse defines as consuming five or more drinks at one sitting, is as much an image of college life as ivy-covered halls or football, and college officials in many places say the trend is growing.

Medical experts at the University of Idaho say cases of alcohol poisoning have doubled in the last decade, now averaging eight a week. The student health center at Oklahoma State University treats an average of 10 cases of severe alcohol poisoning a semester, up from six 10 years ago.

A Harvard study indicates that 30 percent of college males and 13 percent of college women are heavy drinkers. University of Florida's annual alcohol survey last year indicated that 80 percent of students reported they are drinkers.

The problem is, college officials say, there is more pressure than ever to drink on college campuses, and laws are unenforced and unenforceable. Ironically, while "binge" drinking has held steady or increased on campus, incidents have declined among those of the same age group who are not college students. At college, academic and social pressures take their toll.

"A lot of college students are even more insecure than their counterparts," says Mary Bellofatto, director of Clinical Services for The Willough at Naples, a psychiatric hospital in southwest Florida specializing in treatment of eating disorders and chemical dependency. "They're away from home. Their security base has been removed."

Peer pressure to fit the college image is strong. Students at the party Parsons attended told police the young man was coaxed. Wooten's parents told a New York Times reporter their son was challenged by friends to beat a buddy's drinking record.

The alcohol problem on campus goes beyond binge drinking as alcohol abuse affects other aspects of student life, including academic performance. Frequently alcoholism goes undiagnosed, according to Dr. David Lewis, president of

THINK BEFORE YOU DRINK

REMEMBER

- It is unlawful for a driver to consume alcohol or controlled substances while driving a motor vehicle.
- Police or other qualified person may give one or more tests of blood, breath, or urine.
- If a fatality occurs in an accident and you are convicted of driving while under the influence, a mandatory minimum imprisonment of 3 years will result.
- If you are under 21, you do not have to be in or near a car, have a driver's license or even be old enough to drive for this law to apply. Merely being caught with fake ID, drinking, being intoxicated, transporting alcohol or having alcohol in your possession, will result in your driving privilege being suspended.

Fake ID users get caught. They are charged as criminals and get criminal records. They pay fines. They lose their driving privilege. They get points on their driving record.

The Legal Blood Alcohol Level

The fact that the law makes it illegal to drive with a blood alcohol content level of .10 percent does not mean that is safe to drive at a lower alcohol content level. The .10 percent means that one-tenth of a percent of the blood in your body is alcohol. While one-tenth of a percent may not sound like a lot, it is more than enough to affect every bodily function and ruin your ability to drive safely.

The amount of alcohol it takes to reach the .10 percent level depends on your body weight and how quickly you drink. Generally, a 160-pound person will be legally drunk after drinking five drinks within an hour (five 12-ounce beers; or five 4-ounce glasses of wine; or five 1½-ounce shots of liquor). As a general rule, if you have only one drink per hour, you are not likely to become too drunk to drive.

While eating is a good idea because it slows down the absorption of alcohol into your system, it does not reduce or eliminate the effects of alcohol. It takes about one hour of waiting to eliminate the effects of each ounce of alcohol consumed.

Visiting professor lectures on mission

By CHRISTINE M. SCOMA

Noted activist, author and educator Daniel Berrigan, a Jesuit priest, will be the speaker at the Cultural Film Series presentation of the film, The Mission. Berrigan was the main advisor to the director Roland Joffe concerning the life and works of the Jesuits, and he also had a small part in the film.

Father Berrigan will also conduct a lecture on "The Peacemaking Christian in the Warmaking State."

Berrigan is the current Distinguished Visiting Professor in Villanova's Religious Studies Department. While at Villanova he is teaching a course entitled "Minor Prophets, Major Themes." He has been a visiting professor at Yale and Columbia universities, Union Theological Seminary, University of Detroit and the University of California.

Writing in many forms — drama, poetry, ethics, diaries and television scripts — Berrigan has published several books throughout his lifetime. His work details his exciting life, and provides deep insights into his private revelations. His poetry includes the volumes entitled "The World for Wedding Ring," "Love" and "Love at the End." His most well-known prose includes "The Raft Is Not The Shore, We Die Before We Live" and "To Dwell In Peace."

During his travels in the United States and abroad Berrigan has spoken at several universities about various issues. Besides his lecture for the Cultural Film Series, he will also conduct a lecture at Villanova on "The Peacemaking Christian in the Warmaking State," on Wed., March 24 at 7:30 p.m.

Berrigan is well known for his outspoken activism. Most notable is his involvement with a group who burned draft files in Maryland in order to protest the Vietnam War. From the aftermath of this experience he wrote the play "The Trial of the Catonsville Nine." This play has been staged all over the world, and has been inspirational for others engaged in the search for peace and justice.

Another instance which proved Berrigan's intense dedication to promoting peace was when, as a member of a group called "The Plowshares Eight," Berrigan and several others demonstrated opposition to the buildup of nuclear arms. The group was able to get into a division of the General Electric Space Technology Center in King of Prussia and destroy documents and nose cones, which are used in nuclear arms production.

Later their actions were recorded in a documentary film called "In the King of Prussia." Berrigan has been involved in several other peaceful protests in the hopes of promoting peace.

"The Mission" deals with a mission founded by Jesuit priests in hope of converting the peoples who live there, and what happens when the church orders these priests to vacate their posts because of political reasons. The film will be shown March 20, 21 and 22. Berrigan will host a lecture and discussion of the film at the showing on Monday, March 22 at 2 p.m.

Philadelphia Orchestra helps celebrate Sesquicentennial

By MARYANN PULLIA
Staff Reporter

In honor of Villanova University's Sesquicentennial Anniversary, the Philadelphia Orchestra will be holding a gala concert on Wed., March 31.

The concert begins at 8 p.m. at the Academy of Music on Broad and Locust streets in Philadelphia. Tickets are on sale in the Student Activities Office in Dougherty Hall.

The celebrated performance will feature Russian conductor Yuri Temirkanov in an all-Russian program, with Alexander Slobodyanik as guest piano soloist. The program is divided into three sections, commencing with Tchaikovsky's "Fantasy Overture" and "Romeo and Juliet." The next section includes Schnittke's "Concerto for Piano and Strings." The final performance will be Shostakovitch's "Symphony No. 1."

The Student Activities Office expects about 1,000 students to attend The Academy of Music, which holds 2,800. The tickets will not stretch the average student's budget, starting at only $5 for "Heavenly Seating" in amphitheater seats.

For the more extravagant music lover, seats are available in other areas. "Galaxy Seating" is available in the family circle and the Orchestra pit for only $15. Parquet and loge seats in the "Nebula" section are available for $38. "Celestial Seating," located in the balcony, is available for $32.

"Constellation Seating" in the front rows includes tickets to the Apres Concert dessert reception in the Academy ballroom, which will feature special guests. These tickets are sold for $100.

For the completely unrestrained, "Supernova Seating" is offered for $175. "Supernova Seating" includes a special pre-concert dinner at the Academy ballroom, the Apres Concert dessert reception, reserved parking and a special listing in the concert program book.

Villanova's steering committee is attending the concert as a group. "I am looking forward to seeing the orchestra," said junior Glenn Alba, a member of the committee. "Villanova took a lot of time to organize the event, and I hope a lot of students attend," added Alba.

Colleges face binge drinking

the Association of Medical Education and Research in Substance Abuse. Between 20 to 40 percent of general hospital admissions involve people with serious drinking or drug problems, but diagnosis of alcoholism is made in less than 5 percent of the cases.

Deborah Wright, a graduate in the University of Missouri's counseling program, says her own alcoholism went undiagnosed for years, through failure as a college freshman and years of jumping from job to job.

"People have an image of an alcoholic as a homeless derelict on the streets," Bellofatto said. "Actually, fewer than 1 percent fit that image."

Most are people who appear to be living normal lives. In reality, they often have major life problems due to alcohol; failed marriages, DUI arrests, job problems, failing school. Most are in denial of the severity of their problems.

"As long as they can think of someone who's worse than they are, that allows them to think of themselves as not having a problem," Bellofatto said.

Most get help only after the problem has become so severe, they and their families can no longer ignore it. For students, help with alcohol problems may come only after involvement with the court system.

"However, some colleges and universities are now at the early stages of developing alcohol and drug programs," says Stephen Nelson, director of student activities at Dartmouth College.

Others, such as Rutgers University, have even established housing for students recovering from alcohol and drug dependency, so they can attend counseling without leaving campus.

For many students, health plans may pay for the private treatment they need. But administrators and counselors say the problem will persist as long as the image exists.

"I didn't really understand what is expected," wrote a former University of Florida student repeating freshman English at a local community college. "I was always ready to go out with friends. I partied too much, and drank too much. I bought the image. I was lucky though and got help before I ruined my life. Now I know better."

Top 10

This week's TOP 10, straight from the annals of the best in 201 Dougherty, is the ten worst things to say to a Radnor police officer upon getting pulled over:

10. Do you work with Ponch and John?
9. The reason I have a duplicate is because my little brother has my original license.
8. I'm on my way home, sir. I just dropped off your daughter.
7. Is that a real badge? My little brother has the same one.
6. I've got a severe case of the munchies. Do you have an extra doughnut in your car?
5. Can we make this quick? They close the door to the residence halls at 2 a.m.
4. No, sir, I'm not aware of how fast I was going ... I've been tuning the radio.
3. Go ahead, gimme a ticket. Mommy and Daddy will pay for it anyway.
2. I suppose you're going to tell me there is a law against having three unrelated people in the same car.

And the No. 1 worst thing to say to a Radnor police officer upon getting pulled over is (and this is for all those who have gotten a ticket on Ithan lately) ...

1. C'mon, give me a break. I'm a respectable Villanova student.

Michael E. Burke, Ph.D., who shapes thhe program, streamlines the academics and keeps written evaluations from all classes that serve as recommendations for post-graduate work.

Honors graduates especially appreciate the individual attention and counseling from the Honors faculty, and perhaps it is this that helps these intelligent students rank at the top of their class, be accepted into Phi Beta Kappa, the Honor Society, and be recognized for academic excellence by the College of Arts and Sciences.

Other activities the students are involved in is the publication of "Polis," a literary magazine of students' work, and trips to New York, Washington and Philadelphia theaters, concerts and museums.

Nancy Hensler, a 1989 Honors/ English graduate and the present full-time coordinator of the Honors program has only glowing things to say about the program. She especially appreciated the small, vigorous classroom seminars, and the individual attention this classroom setting provides. She commented how much she "valued the emphasis on mutual respect in the classroom between teachers and students, and the wonderful sense of community that goes beyond the classroom."

This four-year program is designed for those students who are interested in going one step further in their education.

Sting tells comic and personal 'Tales'

By CHRISTOPHER GONNELLI
Staff Reporter

The ghost of the past no longer haunts Sting. He has escaped from the cage which had embodied his soul. It was this cage that produced his highly personal style of music.

Since 1991, Sting has undergone a musical transformation. In 1991, he produced the emotional and intimate The Soul Cages.

Since that stage, Sting appears to have thoroughly enjoyed life. With the release of his fourth solo compact disc, Ten Summoner's Tales, Sting combines a sampling of optimistic and personal songs with songs which are purely comical. The songs do not expose the most intimate details of the private life of Sting.

With Ten Summoner's Tales, Sting connects the listener to himself by exploring the need to laugh and the need for companionship.

On his past two releases, Sting introduced an artist who was able to provide a fresh sound to his work. For instance, the saxophone of Branford Marsalis on Nothing Like The Sun, and the Northumbrian pipes (a sound analogous to that of bagpipes) performed by Kathryn Tickell on The Soul Cages.

On Ten Summoner's Tales, Sting works with the chromatic harmonica, which is performed by Larry Adler and Brendan Power. This sound becomes evident on the first single released from the CD, which happens to be the first song on the disc, "If I Ever Lose My Faith In You."

The staccato harmonica, which underlies the bass lines of Sting, climaxes in the chorus: "If I ever lose my faith in you/ there'd be nothing left for me to do."

In a recent MTV interview, Sting commented that the "you" in the title of the song may be taken to mean a friend, lover or God.

One musical aspect of Sting which has remained constant throughout his career is his vocal style. Ten Summoner's Tales is replete with his sensual whisper coupled with his share of high-pitched notes. His sensual vocal style is prevalent in the songs "Fields of Gold" and "It's Probably Me," the theme song to the movie "Lethal Weapon 3."

The smooth "Fields of Gold" coordinates rim percussion and a soft bass and keyboard mixture, with brief interludes of the pipes and gentle acoustic guitar solos. In this song Sting puts the past behind him: "I never made promises lightly/ and there have been some that I have broken/ but I swear in the days still left/ we'll walk in the fields of gold."

Sting alters the music on "It's Probably Me." He replaces his own disjointed bass line and the guitar work of Eric Clapton from the original version with a rolling combination of keyboards, bass and acoustic guitar. The background music is commanded by a voluptuous, muted trumpet.

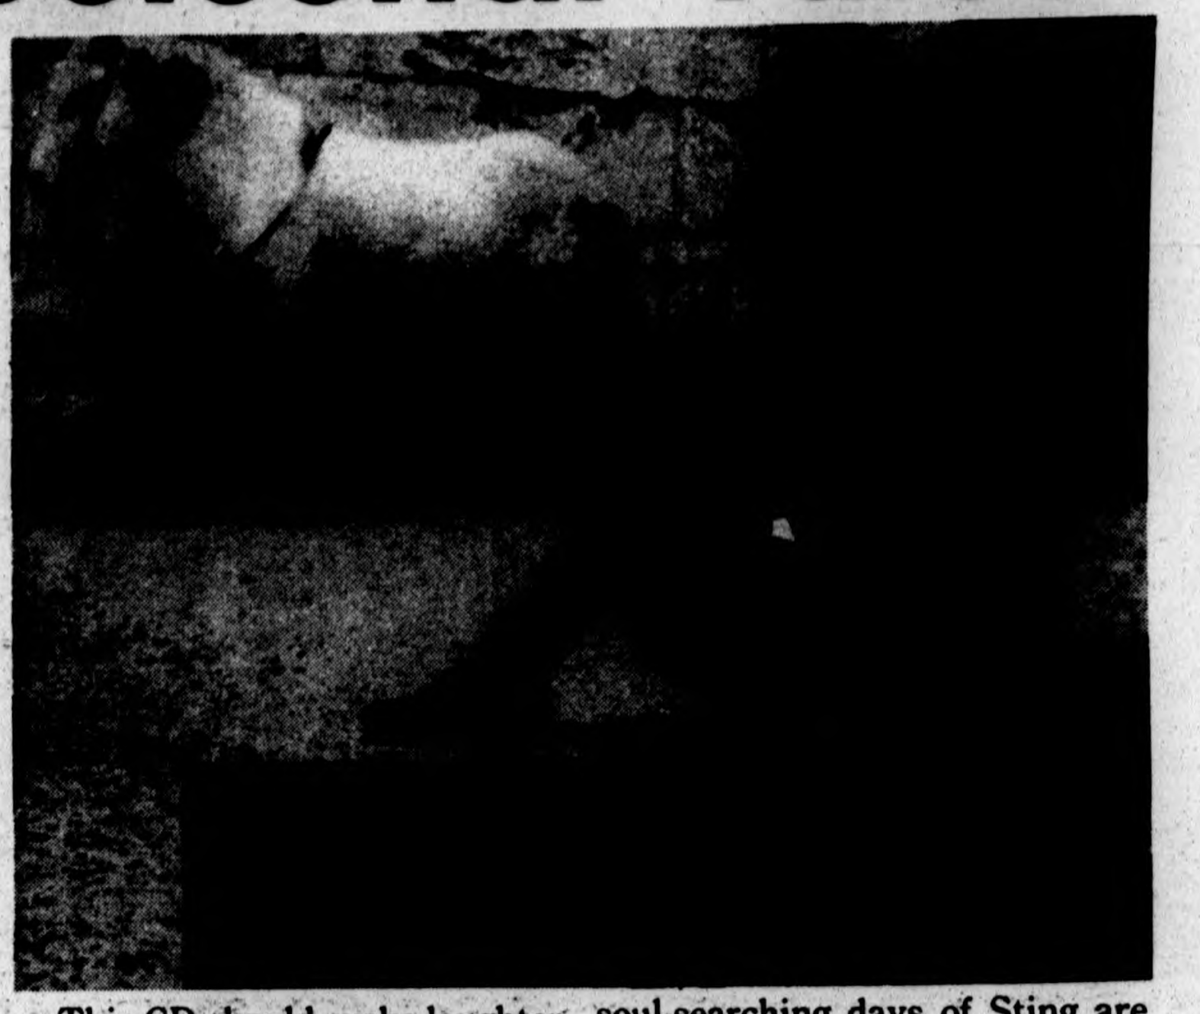
The more sensual sound pursued by Sting on this version shifts the focus of the characters involved from Mel Gibson and Danny Glover to a man and a woman.

The comic aspect of this CD is evidenced by the songs "Seven Days" and "Saint Augustine In Hell." The song "Seven Days" offers a mischievous, disconnected string arrangement backed by a gentle percussion which leads into a chorus supported by a conglomeratae of bass and electric guitar, symbols and drums.

Sting takes a humorous look at the need for companionship, to which many people may relate. Lyrically, the song revolves around the situation in which a man seeks an attractive woman who happens to be dating a feeble-minded goon. Sting sings, "Does it bother me at all/ my rival is a Neanderthal, it makes me think/ perhaps I need a drink/ IQ is no problem here/ we won't be playing scrabble for her hand I fear."

The humorous "Saint Augustine In Hell" provides a multitude of musical elements dominated by a flailing percussion coupled with a wailing keyboard sequence. The song explores the fate of St. Augustine had he continued to pursue his promiscuous ways and not converted to Christianity. Sting artfully sings, "She walked into the room on the arm of my best friend/ I knew whatever happened our friendship would end."

Ten Summoner's Tales is exactly what the title suggests; it is a CD filled with stories. These tales range from the comical "Love Is Stronger Than Justice (The Munificent Seven)" and "Seven Days," to the emotional "Shape of My Heart," to the tenebrous and haunting "Something The Boy Said."



This CD should evoke laughter and thought from the listener. It should not draw negative criticism directed toward the artist. The soul-searching days of Sting are over, but they have been productive, as evidenced by this simple, gratifying release.

New jazz radio station replaces Eagle 106

By CAROLYN POPPE
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Last Friday afternoon at 1:06, Eagle 106 died. Its successor "Smooth Jazz, JZ-106" has freed Philadelphia of the top-40 station and introduced the mature, progressive sound of '90s jazz.

This drastic change has impressed many listeners. The new musical format, easy, well-constructed and diverse, has been taking major cities by storm. The broadcasters at 106 felt the time had come for Philadelphia to catch up with this fast-rising form of music. So they reformed the staff and playlist, making WEGX-FM the new WJJZ.

The station's listeners are discovering artists like Julia Fordham, David Benoit, Keike Matsui, The Rippingtone and Yanni. The station also plays Grover Washington Jr., Sade, Vince Guaraldi, Enya, David Sanborn, Branford Marsalis and an array of lesser-known jazz entrepreneurs. WJJZ seems to prefer solo artists and instrumentals, but strong vocal work and larger jazz-group sounds also are heard.

And the artists each provide their own distinct, personal music. New-age, fission, fusion, contempo, Latin, traditional — the combination of jazz offers something for everyone where the only common denominator is smoothness.

106 now speaks louder with the softer sound of "smooth jazz."

Temple's WRTI (90.1 FM), which focuses on classic jazz, remains Philadelphia's only other jazz station. But WJJZ contrasts with its more creative compositions. The tunes attract a new kind of listener — one who wants to grow with this innovative '90s genre. Instead of forcing itself on those who tune in, WJJZ's smooth jazz tells a flowing musical story.

Its about time that 106 eased up on pulsing dance music and pop-rock music that can really no longer be called "popular." WJJZ better represents modern America and provides a refreshing change.

106 now speaks louder with the softer sound of "smooth jazz."

Branford Marsalis is frequently heard on Philadelphia's new smooth jazz radio station.

Kravitz lets emotions loose on Go My Way

By MARK McCREARY
Staff Reporter

Anybody who says the new Lenny Kravitz disc Are You Gonna Go My Way is not as terrific as Let Love Rule and Mama Said is wrong. Plain and simple. For Kravitz fans, it is probably impossible to imagine that he could possibly put out something equal to his past two landmarks. But, again Kravitz amazes.

Probably by now, most people have heard the new single "Are You Gonna Go My Way," and maybe even caught the video. The video is incredible, despite the overly scary, fly-like drummer, and it is appropriate for this song. It carries with it a Hendrix-type sound and stands alone as the only "hard" track on Are You Gonna. Since that is the only track of that persuasion, it immediately becomes apparent what sets this disc apart from the first two. This is a relatively slow, melodic, even soul-searching disc, that can only be described as wonderful.

The second track, "Believe," sounds like the most likely candidate for the next single to be released. It has a lot more potential to rape the music charts than "Are You Gonna Go My Way." It is a much more mellow outtake than the first single and has a sound equivalent to "Stand By My Woman" from Mama Said.

Continuing along this musical journey, the fourth track is a nice little three-minute, ten-second treat. The song, "Heaven Help," offers a strong dose of killer lyrics, and Kravitz's wonderful voice to carry the listener through them: "Heaven help the heart that lets me inside./ Heaven help the one who comes in my life./ Heaven help the fool that walks through my door./ 'Cause I decided right now I'm ready for love." This ever-present love/peace feeling is in all of Kravitz's work and is probably what makes his style so remarkably unique.

Those who do not know too much about this brilliant artist are due for a little briefing. At 28, Kravitz has been through three LPs and more hemp than most people could imagine. He possesses chest-length dreads, hideous clothes and rarely dons a smile.

Kravitz is no Morrissey, but he does not seem like the most overzealous person to walk the earth. His lyrics of love, loss and life overflow with honesty and tainted, personal irony. Simply put, it is very beautiful, wonderful music, with which one can relax.

It is music that is definitely worth a listen. Although it took a couple of listenings to really appreciate Are You Gonna Go My Way, it would be difficult to draw lines among the three.

One track called "Sister" focuses on a woman who was hurt by a man and left America because of it: "If they knock on your door, you already gave./ You don't need no more of what's ailing you./ Just lean on your soul with all that it takes." The way the lyrics flow leaves an overwhelming feeling that this song is a personal narrative. The way it is sung gives the feeling that it is exploding with intense emotions.

The last track hits on the "reggae tip," and is actually an interesting twist for Kravitz. Hopefully, it is just an experiment, because it is a somewhat weak track in comparison to the rest of the album.

Kravitz fans and non-Kravitz fans alike should buy the new Lenny Kravitz, Are You Gonna Go My Way.

'And the Oscar goes to...'

By AARON NICODEMUS
Senior Reporter

Last year's Oscars celebration had its share of memorable moments, but none more than its predictable outcome: a veritable sweep by "Silence of the Lambs," which garnered Best Picture, Best Director, Best Actor and Best Actress, among others.

This year, no film was able to accomplish the same feat. As with any other election, often it is the most popular, or the most connected, or the most influential nominees that walk away with the prize. And occasionally, the best candidate pulls one out.

Leaders for this year's prize include Clint Eastwood's "unforgiven" and the stylish "Howard's End," each with nine nominations. The biggest surprise came from the six-category nominee. "The Crying Game," virtually unknown until word of mouth merited its inclusion in the festivities. The Oscar Awards do not begin until Mar. 29, but let us take a look at who should (and who will) win that coveted statue:

BEST PICTURE: Once again, not a single comedy is considered Oscar material by the Academy. Are comedies too easy to make, or something? Or do these voters take themselves too seriously? Anyway, they made the right choice when they excluded "Basic Instinct" and "Last of the Mohicans" and included "Scent of a Woman."

Should Win: "The Crying Game" was the surprise hit of the year. Low budget films are in vogue, and this film is the best of the group. Shocking, daring, risque and fresh, "The Crying Game" is everything the modern film should emulate. Try to see this film without prior knowledge, and go with an open mind. If "Malcolm X" had been nominated, the choice may have been even tougher. Spike Lee cries racism, but all five nominations were solid choices.

Will Win: Oscar Award history buffs (there may be a few out there) may recognize the unofficial "legend" award, in which one aging screen talent wins based on longevity alone. Eastwood's "Unforgiven" fits that description, much like Jack Palance of last year's awards. Even as a noble resurrection of the near-death Western, "Unforgiven" is a dubious Best Picture selection.

BEST ACTOR: The biggest joke of these nominations is that Robert Downey, Jr. got a nomination for "Chaplin." Nick Nolte certainly put together a better show in "Lorenzo's Oil." But at least Michael Douglas (deservedly) will stay home.

Should Win: Denzel Washington's powerful performance in "Malcolm X" stands apart from the fab five. Totally convincing as the controversial leader, Washington conveys his character's youthful criminality and militant attitude with his genuine concern for the black people. Despite the odds (see below), Washington may still win.

Will Win: If Eastwood's "Unforgiven" does not win Best Picture, he will win this award. Al Pacino, on the same "legend" logic, may also. But only Denzel deserves it.

BEST ACTRESS: In one of the weakest fields in years, the academy struggled to find five nominees. Yet they were still able to ignore Sharon Stone's ice princess performance in "Basic Instinct." Good thing, too, because outside the bed, she has very little talent.

Should Win: Complete toss-up in this category. It probably should go to Emma Thompson in "Howards End," and probably will.

Will Win: If it does not go to the one who deserves it, Susan Sarandon in "Lorenzo's Oil" has an outside shot.

BEST DIRECTOR: Jonathan Demme painfully stumbled through his acceptance speech last year, with a count of about 101 "ums" in five minutes. Speech teachers cringed around the globe. Hopefully this year's winner will be able to express thoughts more fluidly.

Should Win: A tie between Neil Jordan for "The Crying Game" and James Ivory for "Howard's End." Neither will win, because all the wrong reasons are stacked against them. Both films are considered "artsy," and both directors have little or no previous directorial accomplishments. The Academy is prone to reward perseverance over stunning new arrivals. While it seems ludicrous, consider it just another knock against the struggling artist.

Will Win: You would think that a holy miracle had just created world peace the way critics raved over Robert Altman's "The Player." Because he was able to expose how it all works behind the scenes in Hollywood and not offend anyone, Altman will walk away from a deserving field.

BEST DIRECTOR: Neil Jordan, "The Crying Game"; James Ivory, "Howard's End"; Robert Altman, "The Player"; Martin Brest, "Scent of a Woman"; Clint Eastwood, "Unforgiven."*

BEST ACTOR: Robert Downey Jr., "Chaplin"; Clint Eastwood, "Unforgiven"; Al Pacino, "Scent of a Woman"; Stephen Rea, "The Crying Game"; Denzel Washington, "Malcolm X."*

BEST ACTRESS: Catherine Deneuve, "Indochine"; Mary McDonnell, "Passion Fish"; Michelle Pfeiffer, "Love Field"; Susan Sarandon, "Lorenzo's Oil"; Emma Thompson, "Howard's End."*

BEST PICTURE: "The Crying Game," "A Few Good Men," "Howard's End," "Scent of a Woman," "Unforgiven."*

Cope discusses the Skins

By COLEEN KENIREY
Entertainment Editor

*Nick Cope, lead singer of the British band The Candyskins, spoke to Coleen Kenirey in an exclusive interview with the Villanovan.

The Villanovan: In comparing your first album, Space I'm In, with your new release, Fun?, how do you feel your style has evolved? What changes have you seen in the band's style?
Nick Cope: Obviously, I hope our songwriting has improved. The whole thing was written over a short period, which I think helps a bit, makes it a bit more cohesive. Since we toured with the first album in America, we ended up playing all of those songs a lot heavier. It's best to write all of your material before you record. We wanted to make the hard songs harder and the quiet ones a bit more interesting. We wanted the hard rhythm and I think that will happen again as we write the new songs now, which are quite dynamic. It's a natural progression for us to get back to where we started in the first place, in punk bands, and I think we've gotten back to that.

So that's the future direction you see the Candyskins going in — a harder one? Not [exactly] like a punk band, but there are a couple of songs on Fun? like "Wembley" that give a deeper, harder edge to it, which is how the songs come out really.

Fun? was written in four months and recorded in four weeks. How do you think that affected the final product? Do you think it made it more spontaneous? It's been a long time since we recorded it, it was about nine months ago. You do the best job you can possibly do at the time. Sort of after you've finished it you write something else and you say, "God, I wish we'd written this 11 months ago, we could have put it on the album." But once you've done it you have to be objective about it because you get slightly distanced from it and you find it quite hard to listen to it as well. You sort of have to get drunk and then you say "well this is good." There's so much pressure on you because if you listen to it you think "are people going to like this on the radio?" which is not the best way to do it. You know where the chord changes are and what words are coming next so I think it loses its surprise.

If you go back to Space I'm In, what qualities do you think gave the album its popularity on the alternative and college charts? I don't know really. I'm not really sure what singles were released to radio stations, "Submarine Song," I think. "For What It's Worth" did quite well. I think the difference between America and this country is that people seem to be more open to things. I mean here we still get labeled with all these other bands that we've never even sounded like.

People in the press over here still think we re connected with that movement, The Manchester thing which we had nothing to do with. People still think we come from Manchester, I mean in America, and people in England think we're Americans, but we're quite happy living in Oxford. Hopefully it [the success of Space I'm In] had a lot to do with the songs that jump out and they [radio stations] wanted to play it because it was a good record. It didn't change music or anything, it just fit in really well with what was going on. The songs are O.K., basically.

Who were your primary influences when you were first starting out and whose music do you admire now? We listened to a lot of the Clash then and now, a lot of punk bands and obviously the Beatles. Nirvana, Teenage Fanclub, Neil Young, Bob Dylan [are all influences].

Would you consider music from the '60s to have been very influential in your music? Actually, I think it was more so in the beginning because there was a big move to be very '60s and we sort of, not monopolized, but used it a lot and based on that we tried to get a little bit away from that on Fun? If you're a guitar band, the greatest songs that have ever been written are from the '60s basically — the Beatles, Velvet Underground. All of the influential bands do come from the '60s so a band playing guitar is bound to be influenced by that time period.

Surfers ride on rock scene with new album

By REGGIE BEEHNER
Staff Reporter

If you squint your eyes hard enough, you may recall the Butthole Surfers touring on the Lollapalooza card two summers ago. If you really throw your head back in sweaty, retrospective thought, you may even recall a vague memory of some disheveled youth clad in a Butthole Surfers' t-shirt that you tended to stay away from.

But besides that, the name Butthole Surfers just sounds like a punchline to some locker room joke. The Butthole Surfers have been around since the early 1980s and have been touring more steadily than the Grateful Dead. Their fame was somewhat confined to inner circles on the punk scene, partially because their earlier recordings were strictly on independent labels which were quite difficult to find in everyday music stores. All of this is changing, though. With their recent signing with Capitol Records and new album and video on the way, the Butthole Surfers could soon be the newest teenage craze.

The new album, Independent Worm Saloon is a different product than the band's previous works. The hefty 17 song load has a more focused rock and roll feel to it. Even their producer, John Paul Jones, of Led Zeppelin fame, breaks out the old acoustic guitar and plays on one track.

The album's variety is its defining strong point. Containing songs of almost every musical diversion. "Dog Inside Your Body" seems taken from a Ministry, the industrial kingpin, set list. "Goofy's Concern" is a sort of anarchist rallying anthem whose content will also award the album with a P.M.R.C. parental warning sticker that attracts so much attention. "Strawberry" is the album's most appealing song with its exotic flavor and catchy melody.

The Butthole Surfers have never been concerned with what the public thinks, writes or says about the band. This is what gives their new album its freshness. There may even be some bizarre chance that one of the songs may end up getting its fair share of radio play. Instantly people are going to say the band sold out or gave in to corporate money, but one listen to the entire album will convince even the most closed-minded skeptic that this is the same insubordinate Butthole Surfers as in previous works.

If the alternative or underground scene wants it, Independent Worm Saloon is easily one of the best new albums available. The listeners will be abruptly taken from their meandering line of humming along with television commercials and unleashed back into the rebellious days of their youth. "It is sure good to be back," you say as you light up a menthol, slam the volume knob to its limits and scream a insurgent hoot out the window of your parents' station wagon.

The dog yaps a few lines in the background. "Speaking of Mark Farner," the voice on the other end of the receiver responds alluding to his dog and band mascot, "he is heralded by the Chicago Sun Times as one of the 10 most famous dogs in America."

And so begins the telephone interview with Paul Leary, co-founder with Gibby Haynes of the always deviant band, the Butthole Surfers.

The band, formed in the early '80s when the two friends decided the post-college business world looked like career abyss filled with endless hours of parting your hair just right.

They moved to California and jumped into the punk scene. Before long, actually 10 years later, the Butthole Surfers found themselves on the biggest tour of the summer, Lollapalooza.

The rise to musical stardom is no easy road though, as Mr. Leary can attest. Humorless cops, lawless and overly drunken fans, and stingy record companies looking only for a sure thing tend to make a musician's life anything but the big joyride the public thinks it is. It was at this time, following the release of the Butthole Surfers' new album Independent Worm Saloon that Mr. Leary amiably succumbed to the lengthy questioning of college journalists that follows:

Andy Graham, University of Illinois: How would you describe the typical Butthole Surfers' fan?
Paul Leary: Oh, I would say [he or she is] probably in need of psychiatric care, borderline suicidal.

UI: What is your relationship with computers; how did you get so hooked on them? Oh, we are definitely hooked on them. I think we have probably been using computers now for about at least six years. You can get stoned, and the computer will remember everything (laughs).

UI: Why did you go to California when you just agot started in the early '80s? Oh, we were just idiot fools and probably still are. You know, punk rock was a fun and happening thing, and we were just really stupid. And we thought, "Hey, hey, why work a job?" you know, [when we can] sell off our record collection, buy a van, and pack it up and go to California. We did not even have a tour plan, or any plans, although we did not stay on what we were going to do. [We] just went out there and started pulling in on the doors of punk rock gigs, started unloading our equipment till people would stop us and ask what we were doing. We would start crying, and they would let us play. In no time, we were playing with the Dead Kennedys at the Whiskey [-A-Go-Go] and getting records put out. It was like that.

Reggie Beehner, Villanova University: With your signing with John Paul Jones (producer) and with all the positive feedback I have been getting, I was wondering if it was too early for a preview of your Grammy speech? (Laughs) Yeah, I would say it is a little early for that.

VU: What is a basic Friday night for you guys; you know, go out, get drunk and get in a fight? [Laughs] We are pretty peaceful guys, actually. We do not do much fighting. We are getting a little old for that. I really cannot tell a Friday night from any other night.

VU: With a name like the Butthole Surfers are you afraid that you might scare away any possible revenue from any homophobic potential listeners? I do not care. I do not care who likes it, listens to it or buys it. You know, I just don't.

VU: Since you have worked with labels like Alternative Tentacles and Touch and Go, did you have any mixed feelings signing with Capitol Records, that they would infringe on your creativity? No, because for one thing contractually they cannot be inhibitive. And two, the president of Capitol Records, Harold Milgram, signed us because he liked us. He is a real musically oriented record company president. That was the main reason why we signed with Capitol — because the folks at Capitol actually acted like they liked us.

VU: After your first stint with the Lollapalooza tour, do you now feel it (the tour) is too commercialized or too televisionized? Oh gosh, the first one, it was so cool because I do not think anybody thought it would do as well as it did. As a result of that, we got an even cut of the merchandise, and a good fee to play and stuff. For us it was a tremendous experience. We made a lot of money and had a lot of fun. I think now for the opening bands, they do not get quite as good a deal because people figure out where the money is and they start to squeeze. So I think we hit it at the right time.

Ian Cooper, Cowsen State University: What do you feel about the Clinton Administration? Oh, it's just one jackass to the next. [laughs]. I am looking forward to finally making some money on the major record label just in time to pay higher taxes. It is what I get for 12 years of starving.

Ken Sheldon, University of Alabama: Was the Butthole Surfers the first choice for a band name? No, we started as the Dick Clark Five, then the Big Gas Five, even though there were only four of us in the band. Then we were the Ashtray Baby Heads. Then we were the Vodka Family Winstons. Then we were Nine-Foot Worm Makes Own Food. The guy who was introducing us just got tired of our different names every time. He remembered we had a song called "Butthole Surfers," so he just introduced us as the Butthole Surfers. We shrugged and played and got a $150 bucks at the end of the night. So we decided we would get rich, and we stuck with the name.

'Fire In Sky' drowns in a sea of mediocrity

By ERIC CHEUNG
Assistant Entertainment Editor

"Fire In The Sky" is essentially about the Travis Walton case, and it details his claim of being abducted by aliens. The way the film is being advertised indicates that the director, Robert Lieberman, would like people to believe that Travis is telling the truth.

Unfortunately, Lieberman wrongly assumes that this story would make for a enjoyable movie. What he wants to do is present certain facts, impressions and beliefs about the case in a theatrical format. To this end, he seems to take as few liberties as possible, forsaking the values of entertainment.

This is one of the rare cases in which the director should have sensationalized the movie more or added more drama or done something to make it more appealing. As it stands, it is a borderline mediocre movie that inspires ambivalence rather than compassion. D.B. Sweeny portrays Travis Walton, the story's main character.

The movie can be broken down into three parts. First, Walton and five other lumberjacks are driving through a forest, on their way home, when they see a mysterious moving fire. It turns out that the fire is a flying spaceship and D.B. Sweeny, more curious than courageous, investigates it only to be abducted by the cruel aliens.

During the next phase of the movie, the five remaining men tell the police their story and are persecuted for it. Robert Patrick (looking completely different from his Terminator II character) stars as Walton's best friend, Mike Rogers. He, along with the rest of the group, must undergo lie detector tests, sidelong glances from the town's residents, privacy invasion by the media and finally suspicions of murder. This is perhaps the best phase of the movie because it is a commentary on a society which is quick to turn friends into outcasts after crises. It is also a negative statement on the media, which seems to show no compassion for fellow human beings where the sake of a "good story" is involved.

During the final third of the movie, Lieberman must have been watching one-too-many science fiction movies, because he depicts Walton's actual contact with the aliens just for the audience's benefit (lucky us). If the scene were shot well it would have perhaps elevated the movie to a palatable status. Instead, Lieberman decides that he will tell the whole truth and nothing but the truth, by recreating water images that the real Travis Walton remembers from his experience.

The audience gets treated to actual face-to-face depictions of the aliens who are nothing more than deranged Muppets from Hell. The effect is about as terrifying as seeing Mr. MaGoo try his hand as a serial slasher. Yes, these diabolical critters perform horrible tests on poor Walton, but did the aliens have to be so cute? Many of the scenes are incredibly intense, but they are mixed with corny alien shots that serve almost as comic relief.

Obviously the simple answer that Lieberman overlooked was that he should not have shown the aliens and only portrayed Walton's expressions as he underwent the experiments. Everything else should have been left up to the imagination; this is "Fire In the Sky," not "Aliens."

However, Lieberman wanted to adhere to the truth about the facts of the case. Walton has an idea of what he saw. To be truthful, Lieberman needed to film these visions. By doing do, he crossed over the line into a science fiction movie.

There is little in it that makes this movie recommendable. The acting is about as good as it could be with the material with which the actors had to work. The film is worth watching only for those who have an interest in the possibilities of UFOs and extraterrestrial encounters. Relating to these issues, the movie is compelling.

Anyone who has even a remote appreciation for the entertainment value of movies will probably find this one boring in some places, cheesy in others and all-around annoying for the money spent.

Lieberman and anyone else who wants to try the based-on-a-true-story route should see "Alive" to learn just how such a movie is supposed to be done. As it stands, the picture is more of a speculating film than an interesting one.

'Army' repeats gore of its 'Evil Dead' predecessors

By JOSEPH R. McCABE
Staff Reporter

ARMY of DARKNESS

Director Sam Raimi's "Evil Dead" films have long been cult favorites among horror film fans. Filled with frights, but refusing to take itself too seriously, "Army of Darkness" is the latest in the series.

The film begins immediately where "Return of the Living Dead" ends — with its hero, Ash, sucked through a time portal to the middle ages. With his handy chainsaw and 12-gage-double-barrel-sawed-off shotgun, Ash earns the respect of his captors and is sent to find the "Book of Death."

The book, which is made of human skin and written in blood, is his only hope to return home, as well as to free the world of the evil inhuman "Deadites." Along the way he encounters obstacles galore and earns the love of a beautiful maiden. A climactic battle ensues between the forces of good and evil.

If the above description sounds like formula moviemaking, one must understand that plot is not exactly the film's main concern.

> "The Book of Death," made of human skin and written in blood, is his only hope.

It concentrates instead on a series of spectacular action sequences, special effects, and one-liners.

Bruce Campbell, who plays Ash, gives every scene a hilarious punchline. Along with his devil-may-care swagger, he possesses wonderfully deadpan comic timing. The special effects, though generally good, are somewhat uneven, particularly during the final battle scene.

Deadite skeleton warriors are sometimes done with digital graphics, but are sometimes, rather obviously, played by people in costumes. The castle sets also tend to look plastic. These mistakes are excusable, however, by the large volume of effects.

In "Evil Dead" movies, quantity is better than quality. Its moderate budget contributes to the film's charm, along with its sheer outrageousness.

Sam Raimi directs with a wild abandon that was lacking in his previous film "Darkman." This recklessness distinguishes "Army of Darkness" from most other films, which are self-conscious enough to be TV shows.

"Army of Darkness" is like an old horror comic: gooey, gory, and sometimes tasteless, but always lots of fun. Watching it gives one the same feeling of civil disobedience they got from sneaking Stephen King paperbacks into grade school classes.

Halen recreates live experience on album

By JOHN KAZMIERCZAK
Staff Reporter

Producing a live album, which has, as a result of a number of 1992 mega-tours, become very common, is probably the most difficult challenge a band and production team can face. They must capture the intensity and excitement of the concert performance while keeping the material in a manageable and marketable format. Some projects of this type fail, some succeed and some, such as Van Halen Live: Right Here, Right Now, are exemplary.

> They are able to infuse each performance with an overwhelming enthusiasm.

Van Halen, composed of Sammy Hagar (lead vocals), Eddie Van Halen (lead guitar, vocals), Michael Anthony (bass guitar) and Alex Van Halen (drums), has never been known for exceptionally introspective or, with certain exceptions, thought-provoking songs. What Van Halen does produce, as Right Here, Right Now attests, are performances of some of the best rock 'n' roll around. It is a raw, exciting album tempered with an unusual degree of optimistic energy.

Most of Right Here, Right Now's 24 songs are drawn from the band's post-5150 (i.e., post-David Lee Roth) phase. Notable exceptions to this rule include "Panama," "Your Really Got Me" and a better-than-ever cover of "Jump." Hagar also includes some of his own material, such as "One Way To Rock," and an uncharacteristically mellow, acoustic version of "Give To Live."

Miraculously, Van Halen avoids the most common pitfall of this type of album format, namely the failure to accurately recreate the concert experience. This success is attributable to a number of factors. Hagar takes time to address the crowd, both between and during the songs, something which is edited out of many albums.

The group's inherent enthusiasm and irreverence help draw the listener into many tracks. Most unusual of all, technicians Andy Johns and Rail Rogut mix in a considerable level of crowd noise. Consequently, the listener can not only hear the music but, to a point, sense the people surrounding him/her, which conveys a greater sense of realism.

Another unconventional aspect of the album is that each band-member takes time out to perform a solo. Sammy chooses his signature "Give To Live." Eddie transforms a formerly relaxed "316" into a five-minute lesson on just what an electric guitar can really do. Alex and Michael shine, albeit less brightly, on "Ultra Bass" and "Pleasure Dome/Drum Solo," respectively.

The album's shortcomings reside almost exclusively in its first half. Three of the first four tracks ("Poundcake," "Judgment Day" and "Spanked") share the homogeneous, bass-heavy sound that can be found throughout For Unlawful Carnal Knowledge. While this is not in itself a detriment, these ungraceful songs, linked directly together, soon become oppressive. Right Here, Right Now quickly lightens up with "Dreams" and the breezy "Love Walks In."

The reasons that Van Halen, a 15-year-old band, is still thriving are evident in Right Here, Right Now. They are able to infuse each performance with an overwhelming enthusiasm. The band creates music that not only transfers this excitement to the audience but also conveys an optimistic, upbeat feeling absent in so much of today's music.

Cope

In many bands the lead singer is sort of a figurehead or spokesperson for the band. How do you feel about that as a role for you? I always shy away from interviews. Now I'm probably doing this interview instead of going down to Brighton to see Ride. They're doing a show with the Charlatans [U.K.] tonight. I'm quite shy. I'm still waiting for us to have enough success for me to be able to be normal.

Then you'd really prefer not to be involved with the publicity, it just goes along with it inevitably? No, I don't mind it. I think we try to work hard in every aspect of what we're doing, but I find it harder.

Are you at work on a new project right now? Or do you have any plans for a tour? We're supposedly coming over mid to the end of April. We want to basically stay in America as long as we can. That's what we're telling the record company [David Geffen Company]. We'd like to promote the record to death and to do as much as we possibly can. America just seems to be the market. Hopefully, we're going to do Europe in a couple of weeks.

Do you feel you still have a way to go in terms of success? Do you feel it's possible to become really successful and not sell out? If you're really successful I don't think it bothers you really that you're selling out. I mean look at U2. They sold out and then they come back with their album and the press is saying "oh they're great — we were wrong about this band." But then their critics still say they're crap. I think we've got a hell of a long way to go before we're successful the way we'd like to be. It would be nice, but then there are those people who are the flavor of the month and they've got a life span of about an album and a half rather than those who've got a good number of people coming to their gigs because they really like their songs. Squeeze is a good example of that. They can get many people coming to their gigs and they can still do what they're doing and still write songs. Whether [or not] they're enjoying it, I don't know.

Holy Spirit, You Who solve all problems, who light all roads so that I can attain my goal, You Who give me the divine gift to forgive and forget all evil against me and that in all instances of my life You are with me. I want in this short prayer to thank You for all things and to confirm once again that I never want to be separated from You, even in spite of all material illusion. I wish to be with You in eternal Glory. (The person must say this prayer for 3 consecutive days. After 3 days, the favor will be granted even if it may appear difficult. This prayer must be published immediately after the favor is granted without mentioning the favor, only your initials should appear at the bottom.) M.S.M.

May the Sacred Heart of Jesus be adored, glorified, loved and preserved throughout the world now and forever. Sacred Heart of Jesus, pray for us. Saint Jude, worker of miracles, pray for us. (Say this prayer 9 times a day for 9 days. By the 8th day your prayer will be answered. It has never been known to fail. Publication must be promised. Thank you, Saint Jude.) M.S.M.

Thank you St. Jude for the favors received. May the Sacred Heart of Jesus be adored, glorified, loved and preserved throughout the world now and forever. Sacred Heart of Jesus, pray for us. Sports Top 10

From the sports section's hopelessly cluttered home office (the one that Student Activities warned you about) in Dougherty 201 come the top 10 reasons why the University of Nevada-Las Vegas Runnin' Rebels failed to make the NCAA Tournament:

10) Their coach — Who is that guy, anyway?

9) New Mexico State and Long Beach State began offering their players competitive salaries.

8) J.R. Rider stayed up all night before the Big West Tournament game to cram for his exam in "Prevention and Understanding of P.M.S." class.

7) Opponents learned Rebels' strategy from videotaped footage of illegal September practices.

6) Massimino "talkin' 'bout the good ol' days" with Lloyd Mumford during TV timeouts of UC-Irvine games.

5) They played Hofstra! Can you believe that — Hofstra! What self-respecting team would schedule a game against Hofstra?

4) Massimino getting upset when Jerry Tarkanian reappeared at practices sporting newly-grown ponytail.

3) Failed campaign to "Win it For the Spurs' Coach!"

2) Added pressure on Massimino to graduate a class of Tarkanian recruits.

And the number one reason why the Runnin' Rebels failed to qualify for the 1993 NCAA Tourney (Could we have a drum roll from the UNLV pep band, please?) . . .

Boutrous leads tennis team

By MICHEL DAVIES
Staff Reporter

One of the most important things that a leader of any team can do is lead by example, especially in tennis where it is so important that everyone on the team gives everything they have every match in order to claim victory. Fortunately for Dr. Robert Langran, coach of the 'Nova men's tennis team, such a player exists at the most important position — No. 1 singles.

Junior Tom Boutrous brings this important quality to the Cats as he embarks upon his first season at the No. 1 singles spot. Enrolled in a youth tennis program at the age of 12, it did not take long for Boutrous to become a winner.

"My mom put me in a club program when I was 12," says Boutrous. "Fortunately I picked it up pretty quickly. After about two years, when I was 14, I had a national ranking," said Boutrous.

With that national ranking came a huge growth spurt. By the time he was 15, Boutrous measured six feet tall. Clearly the development of a serve-and-volley game was eminent.

"After I grew, it was real obvious that I was going to have to become a serve and vollier," said Boutrous. "The court is just too hard to cover at that level for a tall person. I had to become an attacking-type player."

And although Boutrous' game changed, his ability to win never went away. As a freshman at Brother Rice High School in Michigan, Boutrous took over the No. 1 singles spot, and led his team to a state championship. He would do so again the next year, as Brother Rice won two consecutive state championships under Boutrous.

One would think that with such success early on in his career, Boutrous must have had a steady and influential coach who guided and developed his game. But such is not the case.

"I actually had more than four coaches, which is not uncommon for a player," said Boutrous. "And every one of those coaches had different ideas that were good. The trick is to learn to separate the good from the bad, and somehow piece the good ideas together."

Although Boutrous makes his success seem easy, it really involved a lot of sacrifice.

"When I was younger, tennis involved a lot of weekends traveling around the United States," said Boutrous. "It was a big sacrifice. But I think it was for the better because it gave me a lot of discipline at an early age."

Now, however, Boutrous would like to be able to use some of that discipline to correct a bad temper. Solid in every other area, Boutrous' only weakness is in his mental game.

"My temper is really bad," he says. "It's the worst part of my game. And although it's a lot better than when I was younger, it still needs a lot of work. I will just have to keep working on it."

In order for Boutrous to reach that next level of elitism, he clearly will need to concentrate on calming that temper.

"When you're angry you don't play well, and clearly I get angry too much," says Boutrous. "Opposing players I'm sure try and aggravate me, because they know it's a weakness of mine."

Nevertheless, Tom Boutrous remains a player of incredible ability who seems to have found his niche at the No. 1 spot of 'Nova tennis. If he can continue his winning ways of last year when he was 16-4, success for Wildcat tennis will be all but certain.

tape at 8:26.77, beating 'Nova, which finished second at 8:35.56. The lineup of Ruopoli, Tosha Woodward, Nikki Shaw and Abby Hunte outran the original team's NCAA Automatic Qualifying time by a little over seven seconds.

The indoor season is over now and the Wildcats do not plan on wasting any time in preparation for the greatly publicized Penn Relays beginning April 22. In fact Ruopoli and Zajac commented on how much this meet means to the coaching staff and the team.

Both students laughed at the thought of the notice they received reminding them of the number of days before this talent-laden event. Somehow, the coaches seemed more serious.

The best and worst of times in Villanova hoops

By PAT MEILER
and RYAN FANNON
Staff Reporters

The 1992-93 Villanova men's basketball team ended in a disappointing fashion March 11 at Madison Square Garden. The Boston College loss completed the Wildcat seniors' career at Villanova. Let us not forget many of the fond memories of the last four years. Villanova basketball portrayed the good, the bad and the ugly. We will now reflect on a few notable games, plays and individual efforts.

The five best games:

1. Villanova 50, Princeton 48. March 15, 1991, NCAA Tournament. In seniors' lone NCAA victory, Cats' knock off Pete Carrill and company. Villanova shoots 17 for 29 (60 percent) from field.

2. Seton Hall 74, Villanova 72. March 9, 1991, Big East Tourney. Oliver Taylor nails buzzer beater in Big East's best played game of 1990-91.

3. Villanova 93, Syracuse 74. Jan. 6, 1990, Carrier Dome. The first of four consecutive Dome wins as Cats knock off then No. 1-ranked Orangemen led by Derrick Coleman and Billy Owens.

4. Villanova 79, Connecticut 70. Jan. 11, 1992, duPont Pavilion. Cats knock off undefeated and fifth-ranked Huskies.

5. Villanova 79, Syracuse 61. Jan. 2, 1993, Carrier Dome. Villanova seniors complete four-year Dome sweep as new Head Coach Steve Lappas earns first career Big East win.

The three worst games:

1. Houston 79, Villanova 49. Nov. 23, 1991, Houston, Texas. Cats horrific shooting (26 percent) result in Massimino's first career loss to open a season.

2. St. Mary's (CA) 66, Villanova 65, OT. Dec. 12, 1992, Morago, Calif. Villanova knocked off by West Coast Conference power which necessitates state in parenthesis to identify location.

3. Furman 77, Villanova 73, OT. Dec. 23, 1989, Greenville, S.C. Cats shocked in Rodney Taylor's homecoming.

The five greatest comebacks:

1. Villanova 96, Providence 88, OT. Jan. 30, 1990, duPont Pavilion. 'Nova rallies from 19 down with 7:34 left for OT thriller.

2. Villanova 70, Syracuse 68. March 8, 1991, Big East Tournament. V.U., down 16 with nine minutes left, stages dramatic comeback.

3. Villanova 73, Seton Hall 68, OT. Jan. 13, 1992, Meadowlands. An unthinkable 11-point deficit in final 2:35 is dissolved.

4. Villanova 74, B.C. 73, March 7, 1991, Big East Tournament. B.C. blows 10-point lead from free-throw line in final two minutes as Miller ices game with his pair of foul shots.

5. Villanova 70, St. John's 60, March 9, 1990, Big East Tourney. Cats overcome 10-point second half deficit as they secure NCAA bid and eventual matchup with Shaq and the LSU Tigers.

The seniors' top performances:

Lance Miller: V.U. versus Princeton, 1991 NCAA Tournament. His 19 points on 8-9 shooting coupled with five rebounds led Cats in their lone NCAA victory.

James Bryson: V.U. at St. John's, Feb. 5, 1991, Madison Square Garden. J.B.'s 21-point, nine-rebound effort led V.U. over No. 8 Redmen.

Arron Bain: V.U. versus Providence, Jan. 30, 1990, duPont Pavilion. Bain's 26-point effort led Cats in shocking come-from-behind victory against Eric Murdock and company.

Calvin Byrd: V.U. at American, Dec. 5, 1991, Washington, D.C. His 21-point, seven-steal display led Cats in season opener.

The three best shots:

1. Lance Miller's runner in the lane drops in final seconds as the Cats upend Princeton in a first round NCAA Tournament game, March 15, 1991, Carrier Dome, Syracuse, N.Y.

2. James Bryson's 10-footer as time expires sends the game into OT as Villanova stuns the Seton Hall Pirates, Jan. 13, 1992, Meadowlands Arena.

3. Chris Walker nails a late three-pointer to give the Cats the lead for good. Villanova upsets third-ranked Syracuse at the Spectrum Feb. 12, 1990.

The worst shot:

Go-to guy Tom Greis heaves first and only Big East three of career with three seconds left and V.U. down three. Airball! Cats lose to the Hall Jan. 27, 1990.

The biggest heartbreaker:

Villanova's six tip-in attempts rim off in final seconds as the Cats' NCAA hopes die at the hands of Lawrence Moten and the Syracuse Orangemen, Big East Tournament Quarterfinals, March 12, 1992.

The five best dunks:

1. Mark Macon's tomahawk jam off the break stuns duPont crowd in Temple's 70-57 victory over V.U., Nov. 29, 1990.

2. Anthony Pelle's follow-up rim-rattler electrifies duPont crowd in CBS nationally televised broadcast of Arizona/Villanova on Jan. 19, 1991.

3. Arizona's Chris Mills throws down an explosive dunk that leaves the Pavilion faithful in stunned disbelief, Jan. 19, 1991.

4. Calvin Byrd finally busts loose with an awe-inspiring reverse jam against St. Joe's at the Spectrum in Cats' win Dec. 8, 1990.

5. Jonathan Haynes' alley-oop to future freshman sensation Kerry Kittles previews the "backcourt of the future" for Villanova Basketball, Midnite Madness, Nov. 1, 1992.

Thanks for the memories.

The unabashed Rollie Massimino failed to make the tournament for the second straight year.

A-10 gains more bids than Big East

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Assistant Sports Editor

Surely, you thought, this wasn't going to happen. Maybe you feared it's happening as far back as last year during March Madness. But still, it couldn't really happen, could it?

It happened.

Last Sunday, Villanovans and other members of Big East schools watched helplessly as the NCAA Tournament Selection Committee dealt out only three bids to Big East teams for the 1992 men's tournament. Equally surprising was that the Atlantic 10, a conference that had been playing in the Big East's shadow for years, received four bids.

At the end of the 1992-93 regular season, the Atlantic 10 was rated higher than the Big East in the RPI poll, which weighs heavily in selection for the NCAA Tournament. One reason for this shift in power was the A-10's 3-1 record against the Big East this season.

Another reason for the Atlantic 10's rise is the schedule strength of the bubble teams. A-10 members Rhode Island and Temple played the likes of Arizona, Wake Forest, Cincinnati and Kansas State on the road.

Meanwhile, Big East teams Georgetown and Providence scheduled virtually no tough away games, save the Hoyas' matchup against a sub-par UNLV team at Las Vegas.

Perhaps the biggest surprise was the bid given to George Washington University of the Atlantic 10 at the expense of Big East member Providence College. GWU ended its season with a whimper, going 3-4 in its last seven conference games and bowing out to Rhode Island 86-75 in the first round of the Atlantic 10 tournament. P.C. meanwhile, recovered from a dismal start and went 7-3 in its final ten conference games, finishing at 17-10 and making the semifinals of the Big East tournament.

The Big East is temporarily down but not out, in its standing among Division I conferences. Most of the league's teams are very young and, with the possible exception of Seton Hall, St. John's and Connecticut, should be vastly improved in the upcoming season. The Big East also continues to offer substantial television coverage and large arenas in the East's biggest metropolitan areas. All of these factors are important to major recruits and should still give the Big East a recruiting advantage over the Atlantic 10.

44. Virginia and New Mexico State taking their place in the Sweet 16.

45. Michael Francesa. A couch potato with the dream job.

46. J.R. Rider. His team didn't make it, but the committee rewarded him with an individual number 16 seed because J.R. successfully petitioned for admission. According to Rider, he was at an unfair advantage when he attempted the game winning shot against Long Beach State because it was "that time of the month." A fact he learned in class last week.

47. Big Luther Wright. The Seton Hall center also successfully petitioned for an individual bid. His argument was that free hotel meals were too puny and that he would play Indiana all by himself in return for a buffet at each meal.

48. Memphis State's Anfernee Hardaway. A one-man team.

Athlete of the Week

Leigh Ann Leone

This week the Villanovan and the Wildcat Club recognize Leigh Ann Leone of the women's lacrosse team. The senior tri-captain netted five goals and two assists to lead the laxwomen past Bucknell, 8-6, in their season opener. Leone led the team in goals and points last season and should be the Cats' top offensive threat again this year.

Men's lax starts with three losses to Top 25 teams

By MICHAEL DeBLASI
Staff Reporter

The start of the 1993 season has not been kind to the laxmen. After being overpowered in their first two games, the Wildcats dropped their third in succession, 22-11, at the hands of the University of Pennsylvania. This dismal early season showing can be attributed more to a lack of execution than to a shortage in talent.

The Cats stacked up well against the 20th-ranked Quakers. But some crucial mental errors, including several key penalties, had the Cats playing with their backs to the wall throughout much of the contest. Though 'Nova thwarted six of eight extra-man opportunities for Penn, the man-down situations clearly disrupted the Cats' offensive flow.

The lone bright spot for the laxmen has been the play of junior midfielder Scott Chisholm. Chisholm leads the Cats in scoring and registered five goals against Penn.

What has been distressing about 'Nova's play thus far has been its poor execuition of the fundamentals.

The season opener at No. 4 University of Virginia, and the home opener with No. 10 Towson State, were disappointing to say the least. The Cats were clearly outmatched physically and were thoroughly manhandled on the field.

'Nova came out lethargic and uninspired in both contests which resulted in a pair of lopsided defeats, 21-6 at UVA and 20-6 vs. Towson. Each team managed more than 50 shots on goal — a remarkable number — and goalie Brian Kash resembled a target in a shooting gallery with little or no chance to escape the onslaught.

What has been distressing about 'Nova's play thus far has been its poor execution of the fundamentals. They have had problems winning faceoffs and defending fastbreaks, and they have squandered several scoring chances with careless passes and poor stickhandling in the attack zone.

At times, the laxmen have appeared tentative, confused and lacking in discipline. Also, many of the team's veteran players have turned in lackluster performances at both ends of the field. Younger players have been asked to mature quickly and have been subjected to a "baptism under fire."

Despite this 0-3 start, the Cats need not push the panic button just yet. In fairness, opening the season with three top-20 foes is no easy task for anyone, and 'Nova has been a slow starter in seasons past. However, this team must improve its aggressiveness and all-around style of play immediately if it hopes to produce the type of banner season that it felt was possible during preseason workouts.

The Wildcats will host Fairfield University tomorrow at 1 p.m. at Villanova Stadium.

Laxwomen gain Bucknell victory

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Assistant Sports Editor

When most of the Atlantic coast got the day off on March 15, the Villanova laxwomen received no such break. They could be seen running windsprints in duPont Pavilion while the rest of the campus relaxed.

This strenuous physical conditioning has been an essential element of Head Coach Megan Harlan's gameplan for a winning 1993 season, and its payoff was immediately evident in their 8-6 season-opening win against Bucknell on March 12.

"I set a goal for ['Nova] before the game," said Harlan. "I told them that I wanted them to have more ground balls than Bucknell and outhustle them, and it was definitely achieved. [Villanova] beat them to every ball possible."

The game, which was rescheduled from March 13 in anticipation of the blizzard, began with a dedication to sophomore Aimee Mooney. The ceremony honored the courage of Mooney, a member of the team who suffered severe injuries in a December car accident. Though Mooney recovered quickly enough to attend second semester classes, she is sidelined indefinitely from playing lacrosse.

"[The dedication] was very well-attended, and the players did a really nice job organizing it. I'm really proud of them all," said Harlan. "Aimee was a pillar of strength standing out there ... It was a nice thing that the team did and it came out really well."

With the dedication fresh in mind, the Cats came charging out of the gates behind the offensive prowess of senior tri-captain Leigh Ann Leone. Last year's leading scorer with 44 goals and seven assists (51 points), Leone kicked off the '93 season with five goals and two assists against Bucknell.

Also scoring goals for Villanova were senior tri-captain Ciara Perrotti, junior Kelly Morley and sophomore Heidi Connor. Junior Michele Skoviak led the Wildcats with three assists, and freshmen Nicole Nigrelli and Erin Dullea each notched assists in their debuts in a Villanova uniform.

It was the defense, however, that kept the Bison at bay. After losing 9-8 to Bucknell last season, the defensive line was determined not to allow the Cats to suffer another close loss.

"Our defensive players are really the unsung heroes," said Harlan. "The low defense is probably the heart of the team. Elena [Rawson], Carrie [Walsh] and Ann Magee did an outstanding job."

The defensive efforts were further bolstered by the strong goalkeeping of senior Stacey Rozzi, who stopped 12 of 18 shots (.67 save percentage) to give her a 1-0 record for the season.

The Wildcats hope to continue their winning ways when they travel down the Main Line to face Haverford today at 4 p.m. The next opponent for 'Nova will be the Vermont Catamounts, who come to Villanova Stadium on March 22 at 3 p.m. UVM flooded the ball last season when it beat the Cats 11-6, disregarding positional play and overwhelming 'Nova at times. This year, Harlan hopes she has found the winning solution to beat Vermont.

Big East sends Hall, SJU and Pitt

St. John's (13-7, 18-10) is a perfect example of a team that has gelled perfectly and kept together to put a solid team on the blocks. Point guard David Cain appeared to be a career backup. But after the departure of Jason Buchanan, he picked up his game to become a first team all-league selection.

The first draw for the Johnnies is Texas Tech. This should be an easy way to start the ball rolling for the Redmen. The opponent for the second round will most likely be Arkansas. This will prove to be a great game because both teams match up evenly in terms of size. This writer predicts that the Redmen will advance to the Regionals and be annihilated by UNC.

The final Big East team to make it to the tourney is Pitt. The fact that the Panthers are in the tournament is a joke. They are 17-10 on the season and are a nine seed in the Southeast.

Pitt's first draw is versus Utah, which will probably go down as a defeat. However, if the stars are in the right alignment and the moon is at its fullest and Pitt advances, they will be met by Kentucky, which means that they would have been better off staying at home watching the tournament on television.

A few other teams seemed to have been snubbed by Pitt's selection, especially Providence. The Friars were also 17-10 on the season. Providence played some tough national competition, earning victories over Notre Dame and Arizona. The Friars also finished up the season with six straight conference victories. Maybe Pitt should be there but so should Providence. They are a lot better than many of the at-large teams out there that got bids.

Men wrap-up season

By JAMES MESZAROS

Led by a fourth place individual finish by sophomore Louie Quintana and the relay leadership of senior Brad Sumner, the Villanova men's track team scored five points to finish 36th in the March 12-13 NCAA Division I Indoor Track Championships at the Indianapolis Hoosier Dome.

In only his third career collegiate race at that distance, Quintana picked up four of the five Wildcat points in the 3000-meter race on the strength of his usual determined effort.

Villanova picked up its other point in the 3200-meter relay, as Sumner anchored the Cats to sixth place in his fourth consecutive NCAA Championship appearance in the event.

Also for a fourth consecutive year, the Arkansas Razorbacks captured the team championship, scoring 66 points, 30 ahead of second-place Clemson and 41 ahead of third-place Tennessee.

For Quintana, fourth place in the 3000 came as a minor disappointment, as he found himself victimized by a tactically slow-paced race in which was unable to find a strong finishing kick.

Just past the halfway point of the race, Quintana came through the mile mark with the lead pack in a time of 4:27. Given the slow pace for a race of that distance, the competition was consequently left to be decided by the finishing kicks of the top men in the field.

"I knew the pace would be slow, so I knew it would be a kick to the finish," said Quintana. "I made my move with 400 meters to go, but it wasn't a really commanding move."

As Quintana made his effort to go out front for the win, just like he had done throughout the season while competing in the mile, three runners were quickly on his shoulder. With 200 meters to go, all three jumped past Quintana, with David Morris of Montana ultimately leading them to the line in the winning time of 8:04. Three places back, Quintana finished fourth in 8:05.

"I felt a bit tired when I tried to make my move," said Quintana, and I think it might have had something to do with the fast semifinal. I think the other guys felt it as well, but they just had more than me at the end."

By the end of the championships, Brad Sumner was a man who had to have felt some of the same fatigue from multiple heats of racing.

Few athletes put in more racing than Sumner at the Hoosier Dome, as the Wildcat veteran ran a semifinal and final in both the 800-meter and the 3200-meter relay.

On the anchor leg of the 3200-meter relay final, Sumner put in his fastest 800 of the meet, running 1:50.0 to take the Cats to sixth in7:26. Seven seconds ahead, Eastern Michigan took the victory in 7:19.

On a relay team that featured a member from each of four classes, junior Mike Going ran the leadoff leg in 1:54, sophomore Ken Nason ran the second leg in 1:51, and freshman Scott Whiteman set up Sumner with a 1:50 third leg.

"Coming in sixth was a disappointment, since we should have been in there," said Sumner, who was a member of Villanova's 1990 NCAA relay team, the last Wildcat group to win the event. "I guess we just had a bad day."

In the finals of the 800-meters, Sumner, like Quintana, found himself unable to go with the finishing kick of a lead pack that went out slowly and then picked up at the end. At the finish, Sumner came in seventh, three seconds behind winner Marko Koers of Illinois.

"I was disappointed with seventh," said Sumner. "We went out slowly and I wasn't really prepared for that. The race picked up with 400 meters to go, but I just didn't have the speed to go with the leaders and they just took off."

By virtue of finishing in the top six of their events, Quintana and each of the relay members earned All-American honors.

Cats end season with overtime loss

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Sports Editor

In the city that never sleeps, the Wildcats had a restless night that they would like to forget. Just like their entire nightmarish season.

It was the kind of game the Cats knew all too well — the kind that come down to the final minutes. Despite a furious 'Nova comeback, Boston College walked off the Madison Square Garden floor as the appreciative victor. 'Nova, as it has done all season, limped off as the frustrated hard-luck loser.

But give the Cats credit. They could have packed it in with 11-and-a-half minutes left. But instead they hung around and eventually clawed their way back into the contest.

Down 47-36, Roscoe Harris made a hard four from behind on Howard Eisley. A double technical fault was then called on Harris and Kevin Hrobowski. B.C. made only one of its four ensuing free throws, while Lance Miller converted both for the Cats to set the stage for a ferocious comeback.

Back-to-back treys by Miller and Jonathan Haynes (15 points) closed the gap to three points with more than four minutes left. A Kerry Kittles three-pointer and a James Bryson follow made it a 59-58 B.C. lead with 1:38 remaining.

After Malcolm Huckaby made both ends of a one-and-one, Miller threw in a hanging, double-clutched shot in the lane that found its way through the hoop. A free throw gave the Eagles a 62-60 edge with 31.6 seconds left.

It looked as if the Cats were doomed to another last-minute loss. But Arron Bain, who had been the Cats' lone offensive spark at the start of the game, was not done for the night. Bain was held while he was working for position in the low post. The senior calmly sank both free throws to force a tie and sent the game into O.T.

"You've got to give the four seniors [Bain, Bryson, Calvin Byrd and Miller] credit," said B.C. Head Coach Jim O'Brien. "They could have thrown in the towel but they didn't."

The Eagles, however, were not as cooperative in the extra session. Unlike the second half, when B.C. made only seven of 15 foul shots, the Eagles were perfect in O.T., converting all 12 of their free throws en route to a 74-70 win.

What made the loss especially tough was the fact that B.C. scored all its points at the line in overtime and that only once were they fouled in the act of shooting.

> If you would've asked me before the game what's a fitting end to the season, we'd lose in overtime. We lost in overtime.
> Head Coach Steve Lappas

Still, the Cats had their opportunities. Down 68-66 with 1:05 to go, Huckaby's inbounds pass was stolen in the backcourt by Miller, who proceeded to take an ill-advised spinning layup over B.C. center Bill Curley. There was some contact on the play, but the officials made what appeared to be a correct no-call.

"That play might have been the worst play of my career," said Miller after the game.

"If you would've asked me before the game what's a fitting end to the season, we'd lose in overtime," said Head Coach Steve Lappas. "We lost in overtime."

With the loss, the Cats' overtime record dropped to 0-4 on the season. Close games, particularly those that go into O.T., usually come down to experience. But despite having four seniors accustomed to Big East wars, the squad was inexperienced in terms of the new system employed by Lappas.

"It's unfortunate that when guys are seniors, they have a change in coaching," said Lappas. "And it makes everyone a freshman, and nobody takes full advantage of the experience they have."

With an 8-19 overall mark, the men's basketball team won fewer games this year than the football team, which won nine. Its 10th place Big East finish was 'Nova's worst ever.

For the game, 'Nova held its own on the boards, as both teams grabbed 34 rebounds. Turnovers were also even at 19 apiece. Surprisingly, the Cats outshot B.C. from three-point range, hitting 73 percent to only 27 for the normally accurate Eagles.

The problem was on the defensive end, where B.C. scorched the Cats consistently on its way to 53 percent marksmanship. Mental lapses and crisp B.C. passing paved the way, as the Eagles were able to penetrate and dish off to open men along the baseline. If not for poor shooting behing the arc, B.C. could have enjoyed a double-digit lead in the first half.

In his final game in a Villanova uniform, Miller scored a game-high 19 points before fouling out. Bain turned in an inspired effort, scoring 13 points, grabbing seven boards and blocking two shots along the way. Bryson managed 10 points on 3-12 shooting, while Byrd added five to round out the senior scoring. Kittles, meanwhile, led the Cats with a game-high 11 rebounds but was held to seven points.

"We played our heads off all year, but our record doesn't indicate it," said Lappas.

Women finish fourth in NCAAs

By SEAN KELLY
Staff Reporter

Winning the indoor track and field national championship was a feat the women's team had never quite reached. Coming into the 1993 season, though, the Villanova coaching staff certainly thought they had the capability of attaining the title.

"This year is one of those years where we have as good a chance as we've ever had to try to win this thing," said Head Coach Marty Stern early in the season.

Even during the latter portion of the winter campaign, there was somewhat of a confident atmosphere, as the Wildcats recaptured the Big East title and qualified an impressive total of 12 members for the NCAA Championships.

However well-prepared and confident the 'Nova squad was for the National Championships last weekend at the Hoosier Dome in Indianapolis, its final indoor performance was not powerful enough to overcome the years of falling short of the crown. This, however, in no way states that the Cats' performance was not highly acclaimed.

In fact, Villanova's fourth place finish marked the team's seventh straight season of placing among the entire country's top five organizations. One can surely trust that the Wildcat pride and dominance in the sport is still healthy. This type of accomplishment is a tremendous accolade.

Runners like senior Reenie Ruopoli and junior Carole Zajac understand the circumstances. Both ladies knew that the team's performance was decent, especially considering they finished fourth with mostly middle distance and long distance athletes. However, neither was content with the fact that they did not bring home the trophy. With all of the titles most of the team within the organization has carried back to Villanova, it is not surprising that they were a little unhappy about not finishing first.

Not surprisingly, Cheri Goddard, who carried the Wildcats throughout the season, was the highest individual performer on the team with a second place finish in the mile.

Wisconsin's Clare Eichner edged out Goddard, who is still arguably the nation's best college miler, in the final lap. The deservedly heralded senior was still able to cross the line in a personal best time of 4:40.01. Goddard also competed in the 3,000 meter event but was only able to place eighth, having run an arduous mile an hour earlier.

Zajac also ran a personal best time of 15:53.78 in the 5,000 meter competition, but it was not enough to win her the individual title. Iowa runner Tracy Dahl-Morris broke the tape at the completion of the 25-lap event at a tremendous time of 15:49.52.

Nnenna Lynch, who ran in her final college indoor meet after a remarkable career in the sport, did not have one of her better weekends on the track. Unfortunately, the highly-accomplished Lynch was plagued by lower back pains as well as the after effects of a pulled wisdom tooth removed earlier that week.

The 3,200 meter relay was a showdown of sorts to see which team was the definite number one. Mid-season polls ranked Louisiana State at the top spot with the Wildcats showing up at the No. 2 position.

In the end, Wisconsin broke the Big East sends three to NCAAs

By BOB TRAVISANO

The madness has officially begun. Sixty-four teams have been extended bids to play in the only post season tournament that really matters: the NCAAs.

Hundreds of teams struggle throughout the season to make it to the "Big Dance" and only a handful have reached the promised land. This year, to many people's surprise, only three Big East teams were extended bids. Seton Hall, St. John's and Pitt are the only three delegates from this once great conference.

Seton Hall (14-4, 24-6) is a shoo-in. The Pirates were expected to go far from the beginning of the season. They have even gone beyond everyone's expectations, going undefeated in conference play at home.

After losing only one player from last year, the Hall could only improve on last year's record. Having not lost since early February, the Pirates have torn a path through many teams, right toward their post season goal.

The Vegas line on Seton Hall's first round opponent, Tennessee, is 1000-1 to win the tournament. Pretty nice draw. The Hall will have no problem with any team it faces until the quarterfinals, where its likely opponent will be a powerful Kentucky team. The prediction is that the Pirates will reach at least the quarters, but the verdict will still be out if they play Kentucky.

The next team to gain entrance into the land that the Tarheels built is St. John's. The Redmen were expected to go nowhere at the start of this season. Former Head Coach Lou Carnaseca retired after last season, leaving the team to an assistant, Brian Mahoney.

64 reasons to watch NCAAs

By CHAD PETROZZA
Managing Editor

Welcome back to the second edition of the 64 reasons to watch the National Collegiate Athletic Association's annual college basketball tournament.

For the second year in a row, I have two main objectives: 1) To try to convince any tentative viewers why they should spend the next three weekends glued to the tube. 2) To provide the hoop fanatic with valid excuses to neglect certain persons or duties (i.e. girlfriends/boyfriends, schoolwork, snow shoveling).

Please be advised that some of these reasons contain comments of a frank and sarcastic nature, and should not be viewed as opinions held by the sports section or the Villanovan in general.

Without further adieu here are what I, along with my crack research team, deemed to be the 64 most crucial reasons to watch this year's tourney:

1. Watching the Wildcats play! . . . Kentucky, Arizona and Kansas State. *(Encore selection).
2. No UNLV. Hey Rollie, give me five minutes with all that talent.
3. Manhattan. Poor Steve Lappas.
4. Billy Packer, Master Prognosticator: "Villanova will be in the Big East Finals."
5. Michigan's Fab Five. Enjoy it now. They may be fab next year, but there won't be five of them.
6. Dean Smith. He's forgotten more about basketball than we'll ever know.
7. This year's all-name team: Canonchet Neves, New Mexico; Ashraf Amaya, Southern Illinois; Tee Jay Jackson, Chattanooga, Tennessee; Spencer Dunkley, Delaware; Askia Jones, California; Orlando Antigua, Pitt.
8. 64 teams in; 230 teams out.
9. The religious influence. Players David Dain, St. John's, and Mohammed Acha, Coastal Carolina. Schools St. John's, Temple and Holy Cross.
10. Pittsburgh's Jerry "I look like Gary Coleman" McCullough.
11. It gives losers like me a life for three weekends.
12. Seeing Bob Knight lose again.
13. Mr. Rogers' and Mr. Robinson's Neighborhoods.
14. Move over Vitale, Bill Raftery's "sending home with a kiss."
15. 'Nova's Paul Vrind. Sorry, I mean LSU's Geert Hammink.
16. Many players are schooled in NBA fundamentals ... traveling, palming.

Senate meets today

By KATE SZUMANSKI
News Editor

The University Senate will meet today at 4 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall. Items on the agenda include the approval of the minutes from the Feb. 19 Senate meeting. Senators will address announcements and correspondence, and a motion from the student Senators and assembly concerning the current visitation policy will be presented.

The Senate Budget Committee will submit its annual report for the fiscal year ending May 31, 1994. After monitoring the preparation of the administration budget, the Senate Budget Committee found "that the allocation of funds is in accord with general University policies and resources. The Operating Budget indicates revenues of $156,167,000 and expenditures of $157,661,000, leaving a deficit of $1,494,000," according to the report.

The Senate Budget Committee also analyzed the budget "to see if University priorities ... were considered," according to the report. Tuition rates, faculty and staff salaries, increased financial aid, continued funding of deferred physical maintenance of physical facilities, enhanced geographic diversity and minority recruitment, continued funding of post-retirement benefits and increased endowment funding were listed as the University's highest operational priorities. The report found that all of these priorities have been met in the University budget.

The University's high operational priorities include: updated laboratory equipment, increased library funding, enhanced campus-wide security, replacement of obsolete personal computing, an expanded Wildcard system to include vending and laundry machines and increased campus accessibility for disabled persons. All of these priorities have been met, according to the report.

Kennedy, Picillo face run-off

By KATE SZUMANSKI
News Editor

The Student Government Association's (SGA) president for the 1993-1994 academic year will be chosen in a run-off election March 30 between Patrick Kennedy and Rosanna Picillo. Kennedy received 48.09 percent of the total vote and Picillo received 28.8 percent. A majority of the total vote is necessary for a winner to be declared. Polls in front of Connelly Center will open at 10 a.m. and close at 3. p.m.,

"I am surprised by the results," said Kennedy. "We are going to have to work much harder campaigning," he said. Door-to-door campaigning was hampered last week due to snow, he added.

"I had a pretty good feeling it would be a run-off," said Picillo. "Glenn [Alba] and I are going to prove with full force we are the candidates for the job," she said. "We will win on Tuesday," she added.

David Greason, Kevin Haggerty and Debbie Wiley will be arts senators for the 1993-1994 academic year. Glenn Alba, Andy Botwin and Alan Kennedy clinched the three commerce and finance senatorial positions. Terrence Navin will represent the sciences as a University senator, Carolyn Sherman, who ran uncontested, will represent the College of Nursing and Bryan Smith will represent the College of Engineering.

L.A. rebellion calls attention to political, economic strife

As part of Diversity Awareness Day March 22, Dr. Maghan Keita of the history and the peace and justice departments, delivered a lecture entitled "Rodney King, Racism and Reconciliation: Urban America and the American Conscience." Keita discussed due process and political violence in a broad fashion, and led a discussion following the lecture.

The problem of racism goes beyond Rodney King to a question of history, said Keita. "The story of Rodney King is an accumulation of historical precedent," he said. Most people do not think of history in these terms, but "Blacks view their lives in a historical and constitutional framework," he added.

The baby boomers of his generation have given rise to the "fast forward" generation of college students today, said Keita. We are the most ethnically integrated generation in American history, he said. We go to the same schools, have ethnic friends and even date interracially, added Keita. But 64 percent of hate crimes in 1990-1991 were committed by people under the age of 21, and 62 percent of the victims were under 21, he said. Although there is more integration, "One of the most pervasive issues in American society is the issue of race," said Keita.

Keita said the riots were "not for Rodney King, persay." He was "symbolic of symptoms which have plagued American life." Rodney King was one example of an execution administered without due process of the law, he said.

Elizabeth Cady Stanton awards honor research excellence

By JENNIFER TRZASKA
Staff Reporter

The Women's Studies Program hosted the fourth annual Elizabeth Cady Stanton Research Award presentation March 24 in Connelly Center. Awards were presented to an undergraduate and a graduate student of the University for outstanding research and analysis on issues which relate to women's studies.

Barbara Wall, O.P., director of the Women's Studies Program, stressed that the competition "encourages students to do research in the area of women's studies [and to] celebrate student research and gender analysis." Sixteen students contributed papers this year, and all works will be bound and placed in a volume which will be available in the women's studies archives in the library.

The keynote speaker was Angharad Valdivia, assistant professor of communication arts at Pennsylvania State University. Valdivia has a strong background in international communications and is a member of many special interest groups.

Valdivia's address was entitled "Women and Mass Communications" and dealt with the representation of women in the media and their role in the communications field. She spoke of "symbolic annihilation," which deals with the misrepresentation of women and minorities in the media. Women and minorities are often "trivialized and ridiculed" in the media, she said.

Valdivia encouraged society to "change the attitudes and behavior of people in the communications business [by] moving from an individual level of analysis to an institutional level of analysis."

She also addressed the unrealistic and unattainable ideal of beauty which people witness in advertisements. This ideal is often racist, classist and gender biased, she said.

Following Valdivia's speech and presentations from this year's nominees, the winners were announced by the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., University president.

Keita discusses King, racism and reconciliation

Rodney King was "symbolic of symptoms which have plagued American life."

This type of punishment happens to minorities on a daily basis, but most visibly in the police department, he added.

A jury of peers was another critical factor during the first trial, said Keita. There is a crucial problem for people of color when due process and peer age are not in the judicial process, he said.

> Rodney King is not an isolated incident. Denial of Black rights means there will be an insistance that these rights be upheld.
> Dr. Maghan Keita

"No justice no peace" was the simple slogan describing what brought on the rage in Los Angeles and all over the country, Keita said. "Rodney King is not an isolated incident. Denial of Black rights means there will be an insistence that these rights be upheld," he said. This is not a Black thing, but an American thing, he added.

Keita then discussed political violence, mentioning the notion of absolute truth with no relativity. "We get numerous truths through the truth of the video. Even a truth in front of you can be interpreted," he said.

"Political violence is an historical phenomena; it rests in part on the denial of due process," Keita said. The Boston Tea Party is an example of political violence in history, he said.

By the use of the word "riot," Keita said the media was suggesting these [the riots] were senseless acts, carried out without thought because riot is an apolitical term. These are the "conventional notions of how we view people who are disenfranchised in American society," said Keita. The idea of senseless acts is too convenient because it allows us to believe that these people [the rioters] and their actions have no validity, he said. These acts were not riots but rebellions, he said. Rebellion gives the political connotation that the actions address a cause, he added.

> It's not about justifying the violence; it's about recognizing the reality.
> Dr. Maghan Keita

Political violence is used to bring attention to severe political and economic issues and to cause changes, said Keita. White society is incapable of hearing some things, he said. If they wish to hear the word riots, they will hear riots, he added.

Keita asks, "Why violence? What do they want?" The answer is jobs, which the majority of whites cannot understand, he said. "We spend more to put young people in prison for a year, especially people of color, than you spend to go to Villanova for a year," he added.

"It's not about justifying the violence; it's about recognizing the reality," said Keita.

Executive order difficult to enforce

Some steps have been taken to undermine the order.

By ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWSKI

Washington, D.C.

Two months after President Clinton ordered the Pentagon to prepare an executive order lifting the ban on homosexuals in the military, little work has been done, senior Congressional and Defense Department officials said.

Some steps have been taken to undermine the order. The Navy is showing lawmakers a commander's sworn statement describing the disruptive effects of a gay sailor at a California naval base. There is also an Army panel studying the effect of lifting the ban and is warning that doing so could hurt recruiting so badly that the military might have to return to the draft.

Defense Secretary Les Aspin has not yet appointed members to the Pentagon study whose group will direct the Administration's effort to draft a new policy. And with no guidance from the panel, some of the services seem to be pursuing strategies to keep the ban.

In January, the Administration and Congress struck a compromise to allow the military to continue its ban for six months while the Defense Department drafted the executive order to lift it. Some military officials are trying to derail the new policy by drawing attention to the problems with it.

SARAJEVO

Serbian gunners continued a ferocious artillery attack on Sarajevo March 22. The attacks on Sarajevo March 21 proved only slightly less intense with artillery, mortar and tank shells exploding every few minutes from dawn until a few hours after sunset. This marked the fifth consecutive day of heavy bombardment by Serbian guns on the mountainsides overlooking the city.

Casualties were reduced because many residents stayed at home, taking shelter in basements and homemade bunkers. Emergency rooms as well as hospital personnel were still overwhelmed with casualties which consisted mostly of civilians suffering from shell and sniper wounds.

The attacks reached a high point March 21 when U.N. military observers around the city counted 2,398 shells, the largest number on a single day since the U.N. military command there began monitoring the shelling at the height of the Serbian attacks last summer.

CAPE CANAVERAL, FLA.

The space shuttle Columbia was forced to abort its nine-day science mission March 22 just three seconds before it was to blast into orbit with seven astronauts aboard.

Officials of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) said the problem was that only two of Columbia's three main engines had ignited and begun the process of developing full thrust, so that a computer shut them all down. It appeared that a sticky valve on the third engine had failed to close, causing the engine to shut down, an official at NASA said.

The failure is expected to delay the mission at least three weeks as the shuttle's main engines are repaired and refurbished. The mission had already been delayed a month by other problems.

Scholars discuss economic, social change in Latin America

By MEGHAN DONAHUE
Staff Reporter

As a part of the Sesquicentennial Conference Series, the University hosted 30 of North America's most prominent Latin American scholars March 18-19 in the Connelly Center Cinema. The conference was entitled "Church, State and Society in Latin America: Sociopolitical and Economic Restructuring Since 1960." The conference allowed distinguished anthropologists, historians and sociologists to present papers on various topics related to this issue.

As Latin America emerges from two decades of political oppression and social inequality resulting from the military dictatorships of the Cold War era, much recent scholarship has been devoted to the problem of establishing a more democratic system there, said sociology professor Satya Pattnayak. Through keynote addresses and research paper sessions, the conference highlighted current studies conducted to explore internal and external social currents shaping Latin America.

Such an academic event will undoubtedly "put Villanova on the map," he said.

In his inauguration statement, the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., stressed the connection between the University as an Augustinian institution and Latin America. The Augustinians have exerted a profound influence on Latin America since the 16th century, he said. At that time, the Catholic church was concerned with the rights of Latin America's indigenous people, and this mission has been carried on until the present, he added.

> By investigating such crucial vehicles of reform, the aim of the conference was to "develop a better understanding of currents of social change in Latin America and to open windows to our neighbors to the South."
> Satya Patttnayak

Pattnayak organized the conference after submitting a proposal three years ago in the fall of 1990. When the Sesquicentennial committee approved his proposal last Spring, over 200 related papers written specifically for the conference were submitted. Eighteen of these abstracts were selected as pertinent topics to be included in a larger scholarly work which will result from the two-day discussion, said Pattnayak. The introduction to this work will link the papers theoretically and abstractly, he said.

The role of the Catholic church in social change and the complexity of the relationship between economic growth and the social structure of Latin America were the two central themes of the conference, said Pattnayak. By investigating such crucial vehicles of reform, the aim of the conference was to "develop a better understanding of currents of social change in Latin America [and to] open windows to our neighbors to the South," he said. On another level, the conference provided a forum for the exchange of ideas among scholars who otherwise might not come into personal contact with one another, he added.

Cardinal O'Connor receives VFL award

By LAUREN WURST

The third annual Respect For Life Awards Dinner took place in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center March 23. The event, sponsored by the Philadelphia For Life (VFL), honored His Eminence John Cardinal O'Connor, the 8th archbishop of New York City for his efforts to advance respect for human life in today's society.

O'Connor received an M.A. in advanced ethics and an honorary degree in religious education from Villanova University. The Rev. Edmund Dobbin, O.S.A., expressed his enthusiasm in welcoming, "one of our own" back to the University and praised O'Connor for his leadership within the church and strong advocacy in the pro-life cause. He was delighted and proud of the students for their leadership in the execution of this high-level event."

> Cardinal O'Connor shows the type of courage we [the VFL] find inspirational — to stand up for life, especially the life of the unborn child.
> Jennifer Schuler

VFL not only works to protect the lives of the unborn but also works to enhance the lives of the women who have chosen to carry an unexpected pregnancy to term, said Jennifer Schuler, president of VFL. Thus, they chose the Nurturing Network at Villanova to be the beneficiary of the dinner, said Schuler. The Nurturing Network is a crisis pregnancy service that answers the needs of college women, she added.

Two hundred-fifty alumni, faculty members, students and students' parents attended the event, double the number that attended last year, said Schuler. "We [the VFL] realize there are people in the Villanova family that are outstanding individuals and we [VFL] wanted to show how proud we are of their accomplishments," said Kristen Haaf, co-chair of the program.

"Cardinal O'Connor shows the type of courage we [the VFL] find inspirational — to stand up for life, especially the life of the unborn child through his words and actions, said Schuler. "Cardinal O'Connor is an outspoken individual with a strong stand on pro-life," said co-chair Bridget Foley.

Dobbin delivered the invocation address and Schuler presented the award to O'Connor.

In his acceptance speech, O'Connor reflected on when his commitment to human life began. He spoke about his journey in 1975 to the first concentration camp outside Munich, Germany. Upon moving his hand through intermingled ashes on the floor of one of the ovens in the camp, he realized "the sacredness of the human person."

O'Connor addressed topics of quality of life, the ethic of death, compassion, euthanasia, assisted suicide, the organization of the Sisters of Life, choice and the pro-life cause. The heart of the pro-life movement is "personal commitment," O'Connor said.

O'Connor addressed allegations of being labeled a single issue bishop. "I'm proud of being a single issue bishop because the issue is human life," he said.

The program ended with a closing blessing given by the Rev. Denis Wilde, O.S.A.

Sesquicentennial Minutes

By DAVID R. CONTOSTA, Ph.D. and REV. DENNIS J. GALLAGHER, O.S.A., Ph.D.

Villanova's First Historian Reverend Thomas Cooke Middleton, O.S.A.

Without the labors of the Rev. Thomas Cooke Middleton, O.S.A. (1842-1923), Villanovans would know little about their institution's early life. Middleton spent the better part of seven decades at Villanova and recorded nearly everything that he saw or heard. He was Villanova's first historian.

Middleton was born into a prominent Philadelphia Quaker family and grew up in Chestnut Hill on a property that is now part of Chestnut Hill College. He and the rest of his family converted to the Roman Catholic faith in 1854, when Thomas was 12 years old. That same year he became a student at Villanova, which in those days ran an academy as well as a college on the grounds. In 1858, Thomas went to Rome to begin his studies for the priesthood. He was ordained in 1864, and returned to Villanova the following year, where he became a member of the faculty.

Besides teaching a variety of subjects (including history and the classical languages), Middletown became the college librarian and archivist for the Augustinian province, positions which he held from 1865 to his death in 1923. In 1878, he became associate provincial and secretary of the province, serving in these capacities until resigning in 1914. In addition, he was college president from 1876 to 1878, and for many years he was the secretary of the Augustinian community at Villanova. He also served as prior of that community for several years. If this were not enough, he was prefect of studies, or head master, of the ecclesiastical department (i.e. the seminary) at Villanova from 1881 to 1899. (Holding so many offices at one time was not unusual in a day when there were few Augustinians in the United States, in addition to a shortage of priests. Even so, Middleton's record seems extraordinary.)

From the vantage of his many posts, Middleton gained an intimate knowledge of both Villanova College and the Augustinian order. He took frequent walks around campus, chatting wtih faculty, students, workers and almost anyone he met. He also conducted interviews of older priests and brothers, and of long-time campus neighbors, carefully gleaning their remarks for information about Villanova's past.

Middleton recorded his facts and observations in two large, leather-bound notebooks, which have come to be known as the Middleton Journals. His entries begin in 1866, and continue until near the end of his life in 1923. His jottings range from the most dramatic events at Villanova (blizzards, fires, jubilees, and deadly epidemics) to the most mundane details of everyday life (dates when the cows were brought into the barn for the winter, the food served in student dining rooms, or the afternoon when he himself was hit on the nose while playing baseball).

For present-day historians, the journals are a treasury of information about a vanished era. Middleton himself used the journals as a major source for his fiftieth anniversary history of the institution, officially entitled Historical Sketch of the Augustinian Monastery, College and Mission of Saint Thomas of Villanova, Delaware County, Pa., during the first Half century of Their Existence, 1842-1892. It was published in 1893, at the end of the Golden Jubilee year.

Like his journals, the Sketch offers a wealth of details about the college and Augustinian community; and like the journals, it contains little in the way of speculation or analysis. Most of all, Middleton was a superb chronicler — in the best monastic tradition. His works are destined to remain the essential starting point for anyone who studies Villanova's past.

Careers for a Brighter Future stresses responsible jobs

By TIFFANY CHRISTENSEN
Staff Reporter

The third annual socially responsible career day entitled "Careers For A Brighter Future: Socially Responsible Career Opportunities" will be held at the University March 30-March 31.

The event is sponsored by the Career Planning and Placement Center, the center for Peace and Justice Education and the Public Interest Law Society. The Career Fair will be held in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center from 12 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. March 31.

Keynote speaker David Webber, director of Education and Policy of the AIDS Law Project of Pennsylvania, will discuss both the incorporation of social responsibility into professional life and issues associated with AIDS and HIV discrimination March 30 at 7:30 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema, said Brenda Stover of the Career Planning and Placement Center.

The Career Fair will provide students with the opportunity of speaking with representatives from organizations that demonstrate social responsibility, Stover said. Students are encouraged to inquire about available positions, internships and volunteer opportunities, she said. Approximately 35 organizations are expected to send representatives, including the American Cancer Society, Catholic Social Services, the U.S. Public Health Service, Clean Water Action and the Pennsylvania Special Olympics, she added.

The event is intended to focus not only on careers in non-profit organizations or fields that are directly service oriented, but also to provide information on careers or companies which demonstrate social responsibility in their every-day dealings involving environmental or business settings with exposure to fields which they had perhaps never before considered, Stover said.

Hopefully students will attend the Career Fair with an open mind, she said.

The entire Villanova community is welcome to attend the Career Day. Anyone with questions may contact Brenda Stover in the Career Planning and Placement Office in the basement of Corr Hall.

SGA shuttle service proves successful

By ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWSKI
News Editor

The weekend of March 12-13 marked the first of four trial runs of the new shuttle service, which is run entirely by the University's Student Government Association (SGA), said SGA President Ken Batchelor.

The funding for the shuttle, which provides "a service that is long overdue," has been divided between the SGA and the University, said Batchelor.

Although the shuttle service did not run last Saturday night due to inclement weather, there was still an overwhelming student turnout on Friday night, said Scott McBride, executive cabinet member for off-campus concerns. "We could have almost turned people away," added McBride.

On March 12 the shuttle service provided transportation for approximately 520 students from 4:30 p.m. to 1:30 a.m. with a total of four vans, driven by various members of the SGA as well as other students from various organizations, such as the Blue Key Society, said Batchelor.

"We had a lot of students who were willing to drive. In fact, we had more students than there were spaces available for drivers," said McBride.

Of those utilizing the shuttle service, the majority of students were freshmen and sophomores, said Batchelor. All of the classes were very well represented, he said. During the first three hours of operation, students used the service predominantly to go to local grocery stores, movie theatres and restaurants, he added.

"I surveyed all the students in the van that I drove and when I asked them what they would have done if the shuttle had not been in operation, they all answered that they would have hitched, walked or waited in Bartley circle for a ride," added Batchelor.

People did use it to get to and from the bars, said Batchelor. However, those people were planning to go out regardless of whether or not the shuttle was running and probably would have hitched or walked there, McBride added.

"We're not just a shuttle for the bars. We're a shuttle for anyone to take care of anyone's needs in town," said Batchelor.

The proposal for the shuttle service was initiated by McBride, Kathy Breen, student government vice-president and Stan Reggie, engineering senator, said Batchelor.

The shuttle service is in phase one of the proposal right now, which is the trial stage, Batchelor said. "If the students treat this service well, we'll [SGA] be able to sell it to the administration as a permanent service," he added.

Phase two of the proposal would include possible plans for a whole transportation system for the University somewhere within the next three to five years, said Batchelor. Such a system would be run by the students and might include a daily shuttle service, he added.

"We're encouraging students to use the van and use it wisely. When they see it's a safe way to travel and useful to them, we'd like to have them go to the Villanovan and administration and tell them how happy they are with the service," said McBride.

The short-term capital budget priorities include: the planned renovation of areas vacated by relocations to the St. Augustine Center for the liberal Arts, the return of University functions from Radnor House to main campus, increased available classrooms and diversity in classroom size, the design and construction of a pedestrian crossing at the Lancaster-Ithan intersection, an upgraded telecommunications network, funding for improved Falvey Library services by renovating space vacated in Old Falvey for library use, the design of West Campus residential facilities and appropriate space for a Faculty Club. According to the report, all of these priorities have been met.

All of the short-term priorities including the continued implementation of environmental safety measures, renovations of Mendel and Bartley Halls, modifications of the University Shop and an emergency power supply for vital campus facilities have been met, according to the report.

Long-term high capital priorities including the development of additional parking facilities, a feasibility study for a health-care and Performing Arts facilities, campus-wide replacement of HVAC systems with gas or steam fired absorption units and the renovation for food service operations have been met, according to the report.

Student Government President Ken Batchelor presented a motion to the University Senate for the abolishment of the current visitation policy Feb. 19. The motion will be presented again today. The motion includes "dorms which have a 24-hour visitation policy, dorms which have a 24-hour visitation policy on the weekends, and the current visitation policy." Public Safety officers will be on duty in all residence hall lobbies between 12 a.m. and 8 a.m.

"An escort policy will be incorporated at 12 a.m. This policy would require any visitor to call up the intended host/hostess and have him/her come to the lobby to escort the visitor to his/her room. A sign-in policy will be effective from 8 p.m. to 8 a.m. which requires all visitors to sign in before entering."

Colleges raise standards for applicants

College Press Service

College admissions are expected to be more competitive than ever through the year 2000 as budget cutbacks, grade inflation in high school and an increasing student population force universities to raise academic standards for incoming students.

Many high school and community college students are now faced with having to make hard — and perhaps more realistic — decisions about where they want to go to school and what they want to major in because many university systems are being more selective.

"The market is setting admissions standards. In the old days, we had so much room that we could adjust for the people. Now we're telling students they could be admitted to the state university system somewhere. We don't say they will get their first choice of college or program," said Pat Riordan, spokesman for the Florida Board of Regents.

Several state university systems, including Arizona, Oklahoma and Wisconsin, are either studying or have increased admissions standards. Additionally, many states are creating a flagship university, where one designated university has higher standards than the others, making it that much more difficult for students to enter.

One such example, Riordan said, is the University of Florida in Gainesville. The average entering freshman has a 1,200 SAT score and a 3.78 grade point average, while the average state admissions standard is a 900 on the SAT and a 2.5 grade point average. And the standards could rise, he said.

Florida has nine public universities with approximately 190,000 students, and state officials expect the student population to rise to 240,000 by the year 2000. At one time, students in Florida's 28 community colleges were guaranteed admission to the university of their choice; now they may not get into the school they want and are forced to attend a second or third choice.

Individual universities are also raising standards. One example is Middle Tennessee State University in Murfreesboro, which has proposed increased minimum requirements that could go into effect in January 1994. The current standards have existed at least 20 years, said Clifford Gillespie, dean of admission and records.

"The low standards cause me some concern, and also our faculty," he said. "It's a perception probably that just about anyone can get in here. Our faculty thought it was time and the administration thought it was time to make a change."

The current minimum requirements include a 2.0 grade point average and a 19 on the ACT. The school is proposing to increase the minimum standards in three categories: an honors admission with a 3.5 grade point average or a 26 ACT; regular admissions with a 2.8 grade point average or a 20 on the ACT; or a review by committee for students who have a 2.0-2.79 grade point average and a 17 through 19 on the ACT.

Gillespie said that grade inflation both in high schools and college has made the current 2.0 grade point average "hit a low floor. We have not kept up with what is perceived as grade inflation. During the permissive grades of the '70s, you could get a C without doing anything. We are seeing a lot of high school students who can't do college work."

There are currently 16,677 undergraduate and graduate students enrolled at MTSU, and that figure is growing by about 1,000 students a year.

"We have more and more people aspiring to go to college. The population of the college bound is expanding," Gillespie said. "There are more poorly prepared students, so schools are dipping down into the lower levels. Many schools are going lower, near the bottom. for students who aren't better prepared for the college experience."

> I think it's censorship in the sense that I am a peer of the students and we have different needs than the faculty has. Most of my students like doing this. It's discovering who we are.
> Rupert Carl Stechman, former graduate teaching associate

Frank Burnett, director of the National Association of College Admission Counselors in Alexandria, Va., said that colleges and universities are trying to respond to the national demand for educational reform and increased standards.

"There are some people in the education community who believe colleges and universities have been challenged adequately by the reform movement," Burnett said. "Highly selective institutions never changed a bit. The moderately and least selective schools probably have to re-examine admission criteria. The dynamics are extremely volatile. Some of the formulas and paths that were in place five and seven years ago are antiquated."

John Hamming, a spokesman with the association, said budget cutbacks have forced public universities and colleges to be choosy about the students they accept. "In general, states have decided to decrease the amount of spending. In the last two years, there has been an absolute dollar decline," he said. "Universities are being squeezed by a bad economy."

With less money and more demand for space, schools are looking at ways to maintain programs, and one way is to toughen admission standards. An expected mini "baby boom" should hit colleges in 1995, officials said, and that will put even more strain on many schools.

There are approximately 15.3 million students who are currently attending college this academic year, according to The Chronicle of Higher Education, and that number is expected to increase consistently through 2000.

Incoming students now have to have a minimum ACT score of 21 or a GPA and class ranking that puts the student in the top one-half of the graduating high school class.

Students Explore Physical Barriers

RALEIGH, N.C. — A program at North Carolina State University teaches architecture students to become more sensitive to the needs of handicapped persons by switching places with people who are blind, deaf or confined to wheelchairs.

The "The Sight, Sound and Motion Workshop," which was attended in February by 62 students from the Department of Design, allowed aspiring designers on the Raleigh, N.C., campus to experience life with vision, hearing or movement impairments.

Students wear blindfolds and earplugs for hours or ride in wheelchairs to simulate the handicapped experience. Later in the day, students meet with volunteers from handicapped services and organizations to discuss the events.

"Many come out of the workshop passionate advocates of universal design," said John Tector, the architectural professor who founded the program.

Tector said students also discuss design ideas and styles that would make buildings more accessible to the handicapped.

"It is a profound experience," Tector said. "A lot of the students are not able to express it immediately. They just didn't realize the impact a designer's life has on the lives of these people."

Piano Man Donates 88 Keys

STONY BROOK, N.Y. — Pop singer and songwriter Billy Joel donated a concert piano to State University of New York at Stony Brook after a burst water main flooded the school's center for the arts with 1 million gallons of mud and water, school officials said.

Joel, who lives on Long Island's Amagansett, gave the university his custom 9-foot concert grand piano built to his specifications by Baldwin Piano & Organ Co. Its serial number is 300,000, meaning it is the 300,000th built by Baldwin.

"I feel that it is very important to support piano study as well as classical concert performance. It is especially meaningful for me to support this effort here on Long Island," Joel said.

The water main break, which occurred on Feb. 17, caused about $3 million in damage to the Staller Center for the Arts. A hand-built organ valued at $500,000 was destroyed, as well as three concert grand pianos. The piano Joel gave the school will be kept in another recital hall until the center is repaired.

Swastika Found in Harvard Dormitory

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — Students recently found a swastika and graffiti on a wall in a dormitory where several Jewish students live, the Harvard Crimson reported.

Abigail S. Kolodny, a sophomore who discovered the vandalism, told the paper she was "deeply offended" by the act. Kolodny, who is Jewish, said others in her dorm were similarly horrified.

The incident was under investigation by the Harvard police. Because Lowell House was open to outsiders for a recent opera and other events, officials said there was a possibility that non-students were responsible for the incident.

According to the newspaper, several swastikas appeared in the elevator of another residential building in November, prompting students to respond with a written petition condemning the act.

Everyone Smiles at St. Bonaventure

ST. BONAVENTURE, N.Y. — It was the week after midterms, and the entire student body went wacky at St. Bonaventure University, according to the founders of Humor Week, a five-day laughathon designed to give students a chance to blow off some steam.

Dubbed "Humor is Heavenly," the week of March 7-13 kicked off by a showing of the "Rocky Horror Picture Show" and was filled with events such as "Crazy Tie and Socks Day." Students sported smile buttons that said, "I'll send you one if you want me to."

The "Crazy Hat Contest" attracted entries such as a huge nipple on one head and a brim covered with wood shavings on another that read: "I've Been Through the Mill."

"It was so excellent," said founder Carol Higley, administrative assistant for student activities.

Schools Engage in Blood Feud

PHILADELPHIA — Rivalry between Temple University and Penn State was notched up a bit in February when the Temple Owls beat the Nittany Lions of Penn State in a month-long blood donor competition.

This is the second year the two universities have squared off in the Lifesaver Cup. The trophy will be moved from Penn State in University Park, Pa., to Temple in Philadelphia. The Nittany Lions won the first round in 1992.

"I thought it would be fun for students to set up a competition for blood collection," said Andrea Dunn, college recruitment specialist with the Red Cross for the Penn-Jersey region. "Blood collection is a serious thing, but it's good to have fun at the same time."

Penn State's goal was to get 1,000 pints of blood, and 685 students, or 68 percent of the goal, donated. Temple's goal was 720 pints, and 630 students, or 87 percent of the goal, donated.

People also have the mistaken idea that one can get the AIDS virus from donating blood, Dunn said. "That's totally impossible," she said.

Blood banks in the Philadelphia area had 67 units of O positive blood on hand in February, when the normal goal is to have 1,600 units.

Student groups at Temple, including the Latino Student Association, the College of Arts and Sciences, dormitories and the School of Education, rolled up their sleeves to donate blood in the spirit of volunteerism and friendly rivalry with Penn State.

Similar groups did the same thing at Penn State, she said.

Stanton awards

Histories," won the award in the undergraduate category. Castaldo, a women's studies minor, told of how her fondness for asking her grandmother questions about her life led to an interest in oral history.

Castaldo questioned seven individuals. Four women and three men, about their lives during the war in order to see "a comparison and contrast of women's and men's perspectives.

Women during the war cared for family and volunteered on the home front, said Castaldo. This is often overlooked, she said. Through oral history Castaldo could witness the "sight, sound, smell and importance of the war years to those who lived through them."

The graduate recipient of the award, Diane Rosenberg, wrote a research paper entitled "The Triple Whammy: To Be a Poor, Working Woman in Brazil." She was introduced to this topic while studying the industrial revolutions in Britain, Germany and the United States in Dr. Fred Carrier's history class, and decided to apply her knowledge to contemporary times. Her research "screamed for a feminist's critique," said Rosenberg. She noted the mistakes of economists "for ignoring women's contribution to the economy because they don't fall into the supply and demand paradigm."

In Brazil, women work at home or in sweat shops to ensure that their families do not starve, Rosenberg said. They deal with oppression by both their husbands and employers, and "fall through the cracks" because their contribution is often ignored, she said. "Economists have to realize the non-monetary contribution that women are making to society," she added.

Art assignment sparks controversy

College Press Service

About two dozen California State University-Northridge students barricaded themselves inside the university president's office to protest the firing of a student teacher who asked them to draw nude pictures of themselves.

The Feb. 17 protest, which ended peacefully with no arrests, highlighted the case of Rupert Carl Stechman, 25, a former graduate teaching associate who claims his views are being censored by the university.

"They're trying to expel me now," said Stechman, who is studying for a master's degree in art. "It's pretty stressful."

Stechman's troubles began when he began teaching the beginning drawing class in late January. Stechman said he had problems getting his students to unleash their creative abilities, so he told them to do nude self-portraits.

"I thought the easiest way to get them to loosen up was to go look at themselves in the mirror and draw themselves," Stechman said.

Stechman's faculty supervisor, Marvin Harden, ordered him to cancel the assignment since he felt it was inappropriate for a beginning art class. Instead, Stechman gave students the option of doing the assignment or drawing a still life. About 90 percent of the students turned in the nude self-portraits, Stechman said.

On Feb. 15, Stechman was fired. When he told his students two days later, the class angrily marched out and locked themselves inside CSUN President Blenda Wilson's conference room. Stechman conducted class for the students and even tried ordering pizza. The protest ended peacefully at noon.

Stechman said he was told to cancel the assignment after a parent of one of his students complained.

"I think it's censorship in the sense that I am a peer of the students and we have different needs than the faculty has. Most of my students like doing this. It's discovering who we are," Stechman said.

Harden could not be reached for comment. University officials confirmed the firing, but were unable to discuss the details because they said it was a personnel issue.

A CSUN spokesperson denied that censorship was involved. "Northridge isn't puritanical," said Kaine Thompson, a CSUN spokesperson. "It has nothing to do with censorship. He was not censored for doing nude assignments. He was under the supervision of the [art] department to do basic fundamentals of objects."

Stechman admitted he was wrong to assign the nude self-portraits after Harden asked him to cancel the assignment. But he did not think that justified his firing. Nor does he think he should be expelled for participating in a campus protest.

He is still waiting to hear from the university if he will be expelled.

"I'm only one class away from my degree. If I get expelled, I would never get into another university," he said.

VILLANOVA UNIVERSITY SUMMER PROGRAM 1993
URBINO and FLORENCE, ITALY
JULY 1-AUGUST 14, 1993

PROGRAM

The purpose of the Villanova Italian summer program is to increase Italian language proficiency and to introduce students to Italy. The six-week program is designed for students wishing to study intensive Intermediate and Advanced Italian at the Universita degli Studi di Urbino in Urbino, Italy, and at the Scuola Leonardo da Vinci in Florence. Basic Italian will be offered depending on enrollment.

All students choose two (2) courses for six Villanova undergraduate credits:

• Intermediate Intensive Italian	ITA 1121/ITA 1122	6 credits
• Advanced Intensive Italian	ITA 1130/ITA 1131	6 credits
• Italian Civilization	ITA 2142	3 credits
• The Renaissance	ITA 3512	3 credits
• Special Topics	ITA 3412	3, 3 credits

HOUSING

The students reside in University halls of residence while in Urbino, and in pensione while in Florence. Those who wish to be housed with Italian families in Urbino must apply early.

MEALS

The students take their meals in the University cafeteria in Urbino and in the pensione or local restaurants in Florence.

PROGRAM EXCURSIONS

Students visit Rome, Ravenna, Assisi, Perugia, Gubbio, San Marino and other places of interest on the weekends.

PROGRAM COSTS

The comprehensive cost for the six-week program is $3,250 which includes a roundtrip ticket, room, board, tuition, transfers, tours, and fees. The cost does not include health insurance, optional travel or personal expenses.

VILLANOVA UNIVERSITY SUMMER PROGRAM 1993
LATIN AMERICAN STUDIES
UNIVERSIDAD DE CONCEPCIÓN – CONCEPCIÓN, CHILE
JULY 4-AUGUST 22, 1993

PROGRAM

The purpose of the six-week area studies Villanova/Concepción Program is to introduce students to Chilean and South American cultures, languages, and societies through an interdisciplinary program of culture, language and history at the Universidad de Concepción in Concepción, Chile.

The program includes a five-day orientation in Buenos Aires (Argentina), Montevideo (Uruguay) and Santiago (Chile), six weeks of classes at the Universidad de Concepción, and weekend study tours in the Concepción region with the university faculty. Beginning Spanish will be offered depending on student enrollment. Students are asked to choose two (2) courses for six (6) Villanova University undergraduate credits:

• Intensive Intermediate Spanish	SPA 1121/SPA 1122	6 credits
• Contemporary Latin America	HIS 4430	3 credits
• Survey of Latin American Literature	SPA 2212	3 credits
• Peoples/Cultures of South America	SOC 1500	3 credits
• Independent Study	TBA	3 credits

All students are required to attend the non-credit evening lecture series in English on "Culture and Society of Modern Chile" offered specifically for the Villanova Program.

HOUSING

Students will be housed in hotels during the Orientation and then placed with Chilean families in Concepción.

MEALS

All meals will be taken in the hotel, with the families or in local restaurants.

PROGRAM COSTS

The comprehensive cost is $3,450 which includes the roundtrip ticket, tuition, room, full meals in Concepción, transfers, tours and fees. The cost does not include meals during the Orientation, insurance, optional travel or personal expenses.

Second-chance vote should be used wisely

Our choice: Kennedy

The election for Student Government president has been pushed to the wire. A run-off election will be held between Rosanna Picillo and Patrick Kennedy because none of the candidates received more than 50 percent of the vote.

During last Tuesday's election, Kennedy secured 48.09 percent of the vote, and Picillo received 28.8 percent.

Both of these candidates have experience in leadership positions both in and out of Student Government. However, at the Student Government debates, Patrick Kennedy showed a clearer understanding of the issues.

Kennedy is interested in issues that affect students. He said he wants to continue the fight to bring a "night club" to the University, expand shuttle bus service, increase involvement in intramurals, educate students about the benefits of diversity and upgrade current computer technology at the University by computerizing registration.

We feel that the goals Kennedy has defined throughout his campaign are attainable.

There are other issues that seem to come up every year. Campaign promises, including issues such as changing the visitation policy and improving parking are indefinite, and students should not wholly base their vote on these issues.

Make an educated decision in the run-off election. Don't let apathy be the loudest voice heard on March 30. Let our student voices be heard and vote responsibly, for "attainable" change.

Bad reputation could jeopardize Greeks

St. Joe's Greek system may become something for the history books after seven fights broke out among some fraternities a couple weekends ago. Villanova has not yet reached that height of hostility among its fraternities and sororities, but negative feelings do exist.

If you ask people around campus, they will either admit to disliking some sororities or fraternities or they will know of people who do. Their decision about the particular Greek organization is often based on meeting several people in the group.

The danger of this kind of judgement is that it generalizes about everyone in a fraternity or sorority. This generalizing seems to occur more about the Greek system than any other student organization.

Some non-Greek students also have a tendency to feel resentment toward Greeks. This feeling may stem from the fact that they were not accepted into the fraternity or sorority of their choice or from the actions of some Greek members.

The notion that the Greek system is exclusive is popular among students because there is a process for acceptance into it. Other student groups, such as national honoraries, have a screening process, yet people do not feel the same animosity toward them. Villanova's sorority rush was improved years ago to give every rushee the possibility of a bid.

So far, Villanova's Greek system has not received the threat of removal from campus. On the contrary, it seems to be getting stronger as more students join fraternities and sororities. To keep this trend going, all Greeks have to share the common effort of presenting the Greek system in a positive light.

Closing Cafe early deprives students

To the Editor:

We are writing regarding the decision Dean Clay of the College of Commerce and Finance made to close Bartley Cafe at 12 a.m. instead of at 3 a.m. This decision was made without the consultation of the Student Government, whose action had extended Cafe hours last year. We find it very disturbing that in the same year that Villanova University decided to rightsize and increase the academic quality of its students, there is now no place for these students to study together or for off-campus students to study on campus. Even more disturbing is the blatant disrespect for the students for whom this University exists, by not recognizing their complaints or trying to work out a solution.

We realize that there may be a solution found for this problem next year. Yet the time to make a good academic decision is now. We have found it vital to our studying to come to Bartley after 12 a.m. because there is not another place for us to study together on campus. Also, for students participating in extracurricular activities that fill the evenings, it is inconceivable to think that they can finish all their work before 12 a.m.

We understand that the facilities management staff has had a problem cleaning Bartley in the time provided, so we recognize the need to close the classrooms, but we feel that the Cafe should be left open. At the same time, the University has an obligation to its students to provide them a place to study. So we ask that some arrangement be made so that the building can be cleaned without sacrificing the education of the students.

We realize that there has been an initiative to change the visitation policy, which would decrease the need for such an atmosphere. The policy is still in effect, thus we still need Bartley Cafe. As students, we cannot afford to wait until next year to have this problem addressed.

Writer thought she was reporting all the facts

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to a letter which appeared in the March 19 issue of the Villanovan by Ronald A. Chadderton, Ph.D. et al, concerning an article I wrote that appeared in the Feb. 19 issue.

I appreciate your criticism and thank you for correcting my research flaws. However, as a non-science undergraduate at Villanova University, after reexamining my research, my conclusions are still the same.

Upon contacting the department of science at Villanova I was advised to interview Dr. Wieder of the department of biology, who recommended I consult Climate Change, "The Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Changes (IPPC) Scientific Assessment." Any opinion I wrote was the result of the sources I utilized in the research process.

No, I do not hold a doctorate in this particular field and, yes, further information concerning this topic would be beneficial.

In response to the allegations of the "biased, insufficient data" and a tainted article, I extend to you an invitation to correct my mistake and dispel any opinions I inadvertently thrust onto the Villanovan readership.

In addressing my supposed claim for "drastic action," the words I used were "increased awareness and concern." These words, to me, do not include anything drastic. I used them under the perception that this includes education on the individual's part to examine the topic and obtain an understanding of the issue. In my 21 years of life, education has never been associated with the word "drastic."

I look forward to learning more about global warming, of which you are the "experts" and I the mere student.

OP-ED

Student says, "You can judge candidates by their posters."

By PETER SHAUGER

You'd be amazed at how far out of my way I will go to avoid mini-politicians passing out fliers. You see, mini-politicians are a very sneaky breed, because they have the same power to annoy and irritate as regular politicians do, but they are harder to ignore because there is still a trace of sincerity in their voices.

I've found that if you throw something into their line of sight to distract them, when they turn their head you can usually dart past them without getting trapped into a conversation.

They didn't fall for it this time, though, so I had to take a detour through the mail room. I've always enjoyed the mail room, even after I moved off campus. Since they don't change the combinations of the boxes, it's fun to snoop through my old box just to see how popular my new box holder is or isn't.

As it turned out, that person was not very popular, so my curiosity was satisfied, and I was able to walk to make my way to class.

When I finally made it there, I was exhausted from the extra two minutes out of my way I had to walk. Fortunately, when a situation like this happens, my brain automatically shuts down and will not start up again until it has had sufficient time to daydream. So, rather than paying attention to my teacher, I stretched out and gazed at the wall. On the wall I saw posters with slogans from the politicians I just went out of my way to avoid.

This was getting out of hand. I needed to be alone. I needed to think. I needed to go to the bathroom.

As soon as class was over, I combined the three in my favorite thinking hole in Bartley.

Unfortunately, I found that I can't even attend to the calling of mother nature without some politician interfering. In the urinal next to me I saw a poster of a senatorial candidate sitting on a toilet, smiling and holding a beer. I figured he was smiling because he knew he wouldn't have to deal with the hassle of a run-off because he was going to lose. I wouldn't guess at his motivations for the rest of the picutre. For some strange reason though, this wasn't the same poster he put in classrooms.

Another senatorial candidate had two versions of his poster — one which was mildly funny, and the other that was blatantly sexist. I was getting the feeling that several of the candidates didn't want to win at all, so they went out of their way to be tasteless.

Maybe if these boys had taken tips from their competitors who did a slightly better job of not looking stupid, they would have stood a better chance of winning.

But hey, I know advertising is a tricky business. It doesn't matter what you are trying to sell, if your packaging isn't groovy enough, no one will buy it.

How do I know this? Well, since I watch more TV than the average 10-year old, I consider myself an expert on commercials and advertising and stuff like that.

One of the problems is that candidates want a clever poster, but if it doesn't work the way they want, they spend all their time saying, look beyond the poster, look at me!" I don't have time to look at you, I'm interested in your poster.

Because who cares what your beliefs are if you can't even get elected to push them on other people. Sure, voters could go to debates and stuff like that to learn candidates' platforms, but you can learn much more about the candidates by looking at their posters. From the two candidates that I mentioned, I learned that they had no self-respect, and if they can't respect themselves, how can they respect us, the voters?

Another trap these mini-politicians often fall into with campaign posters is rhyming. Unless the rhyme is wildly funny, it tends to sound like you are in the third grade running for president of the League of Students Who Get to Go Outside and Bang Chalk Dust from Erasers.

Mini-politicians also make the mistake of acting too seriously on their posters. This assumes that the students care about issues. The last thing I care about in college is issues. Right now I have a cold, and all I care about are tissues.

That is the beauty of advertising, though. You don't have to have any issues. This way there is a more equally and fair way of determining who to vote for. Whoever can sell themselves the best gets my vote.

The question is, how do you sell yourself? Well most of these mini-politicians have been doing it for such a long time, it should be obvious, but I'll spell it out for those who don't know.

You have to think like a consumer. What attracts you to a product? Is it the pretty packaging, is it a clever picture on the package or is it the catchy slogan that attracts you? An unnamed presidential candidate gave me all three of those things, so naturally I had to vote for that candidate.

If politics were about important things, then posters would not be the way to attract votes. However, politicians in the real world as well as the mini-politicians here at Villanova as well as writers who watch way too much television could tell you that the advertising is the fairest way to get votes. This way the politicians don't have to lose votes merely by opening their mouths, and the voters don't have to lose their lunch after being forced to hold a conversation with them.

Best and Worst of 'Nova Election '93

By MICHAEL KNAB

Most of you did not attend the 1993 Senatorial and Presidential Debates last Tuesday, apparently because you are part of the apathetic masses everyone is talking about. In any case, there were a lot of moments you really should not have missed.

To be fair, debate performances should not be the only gauge of a candidate's ability to hold office. Nevertheless, all of the events listed did actually happen.

And so, the winners are:

Best Dressed: David Greason (Arts). Nice Scarf. Enough said.

Tear-jerker Award: Brian Lehman (C&F), for his obviously canned speech about how he wasn't going to use the four pages of text he had prepared, which he ever-so-dramatically folded and tossed aside at the beginning of his opening statement.

Tar-and-Feather Award: Jay Raczkowski (C&F), who was pummelled repeatedly with questions about his offensive and degrading portrayal of women on his campaign poster.

Double Standard Award: The Men in the Audience, for not objecting to uncontested Nursing Senate candidate Carolyn Sherman's remark referring to the small number of men in Nursing classes as "fresh meat" right after Raczkowski had been put through the ringer by many of the women in the audience.

Left-Us-Hanging Award: Craig Lammilin (Arts), who started his speech with a story about running for office in high school and something about a promise, then ended up not saying what the promise was.

Stuck-in-the-Dark-Ages Award: Kevin Haggerty (Arts), for referring to African-American students as "colored." he was politely corrected by David Greason, who asked that Haggerty use the term "black."

Punching Bag Award: Ken Batchelor and Kathy Breen (outgoing SGA president and vice president), who watched the Senate debate from near the front of the cinema as the candidates trashed the inadequacies of Student Government. Runners-up: The Administration, who would have won this one if any of them had been there, and the "apathetic" student body.

Most Revealing Question Award: Batchelor, asking the Senate candidates which of them had attended a University Senate Meeting. About half of them had.

The HELLO! McFLY! Award: Lehman, talking about the importance of diversity and emphasizing its absence among the candidates, said, "I mean, look at us, we're all white." Two of the Senate candidates were black.

Most Overused Buzzword: "Apathy." Runner-up: "Diversity."

Best Suggestion That Would Never, Ever, EVER Happen: Andy Botwin (C&F) for his "21 Jump Street" approach to administration: baby-faced administrators would pose as students to get a feel for real-life campus experiences.

Protagoras Award: Greason, for saying that student apathy has been "a two-year program," which, ironically, is the length of time that he has been at Villanova.

The Hope-Your-Friday-Afternoons-Are-Free Award: Brian Collie (Pres), talking about how it would be no big deal to put a Student Government insert in the Villanovan (circulation 8,000) every week.

Losing-Allies-Fast Award: Patrick Kennedy (Pres), for referring to the University president simply as "Dobbin" and advocating student protests outside his office in order to pressure the administration into considering student concerns.

Deer-Caught-in-the-Headlights Award: Kelly Ann Walsh (Pres), who stared blankly for a few tense moments while trying to answer her first panel question on the nature of a Catholic university.

Most Original Practical Suggestion: Walsh, vowing to fix the outdoor lights which turn off instead of on when someone approaches them.

Feminist Convert Award: Elizabeth Barszczewski of the Villanovan, grilling Brian Collie on his remark about women being "a few percentage points" away from men, in terms of population at Villanova.

Sloganeering Award: Rosanna Picillo (Pres), who tried to wow everybody over with catchy phrases like "Ro and Glen," "'Nova for the '90s" and "The winning combination." Picillo is the first back-to-back winner of this award. She won in a landslide last year with "Ro, Ro, Ro's your vote" in her race for arts senator.

I'm sure the academy will get complaints about how worthy candidates were overlooked in the judging for this year's Debate Awards (we'll call them "the Debbies"). Any complaints should be directed to your new Student Government representatives, since they promised to solve all of y our problems anyway.

And to the new Student Government administration — good luck, kids. Welcome to the big leagues. Do us proud.

COMMENTARY

Justifying discrimination only causes ignorance, intolerance

By ANDREW SHUCKROW

Deeply disturbing to me was the recent contribution to the Villanovan by Stephen F. Freind which was called a "justification" of discrimination against homosexuals. This article was thick with illogical fallacies, unwarranted fear-mongering and arguments which could best be described as unfounded, ignorant and extremely short sighted concerning the problems Mr. Freind seeks to explore. This sort of smoke-screening and narrow-mindedness should not be allowed to go unchecked, and if Mr. Freind's arguments are more closely examined, they may be proven entirely unfounded.

Mr. Freind begins with a brief and very narrow exploration of the nature of discrimination. While it is true that this nation has traditionally stood for the right of the individual to choose, it is not true that this right includes the right to penalize other members of society on the basis of their choices, which are essentially a private matter anyway.

Mr. Freind speaks of discriminating against his fellow humans along the same lines as choosing a flavor of ice cream or a style of garment. Certainly there is nothing wrong with discrimination in this, but the fact is that this is a political question involving the lives of real people who have needs and wants similar to anyone else's. To equate these two forms of discrimination as Mr. Freind does is nonsense.

Freind calls all manner of homosexuality a "dangerous aberration of normal behavior" which "causes the disease which (we) seek to eradicate." Yes, there may be a correlational relationship between the spread of the disease and homosexual activity, but this is by virtue of the fact that all sexual activity can have the possible effect of the spread of the HIV virus. AIDS and its spread are not contingent upon homosexual activity, or upon any sexual activity.

Sexual preference is not a character flaw, it does not endanger anyone else directly and does not detract from anyone's ability to function as a contributing member of society.

It has been said before, but not nearly often enough. AIDS is not a "gay disease" or a "drug-user's disease" or even a "person of differing morality disease." Most of the newly-reported HIV patients are heterosexual and IV drug-free. These sorts of typecasting do not hold up. AIDS is huge, it is powerful and it is dangerous, and it is certainly greather than Mr. Freind's peremptory understanding of how it fits into his self-interested, political rhetoric and scare tactics. I would advise greater caution in the treatment of such a subject such as AIDS of which none of us can claim a true understanding.

Mr. Freind seems to feel that no one should be afforded "special protection" on the basis of their sexual preference. But the issue in question here is not truly about anyone wanting special protection or privileges. It is a simple matter of a group of citizens who want only the same chances and rights needed to live and prosper that their fellow Americans so often seem to take for granted.

If any individual citizen of this country wishes to pursue a career or attend a school, that individual should be free to do so confidently and without fear of an invasion of privacy as comes with such a question as "who do you choose to sleep with?" It is an invasion of privacy to require such information as sexual preference and otherwise irrelevant to the specific relationship held between applicant and admission officer, employer and employee, tenent and landowner or enlisted man and officer.

Sexual preference is not a character flaw, it does not endanger anyone else directly and does not direct from anyone's ability to function as a contributing member of society. No one is asking for special privileges, simply equal rights.

Mr. Freind goes on to legitimize excluding gays from the military, claiming that they are detrimental to "discipline and morale." This viewpoint fails to recognize how many homosexuals are already serving and/or have served successfully in the military for years, and this includes certain high-ranking officers. If it were not required of military personnel to disclose such information, no one would have to know and it would pose no threat to morale or discipline, not that there is any conclusive evidence to say that it ever has. The military would suffer greatly at the exclusion of the entire homosexual population, which includes many dedicated servicemen and women. It only stands to figure that anywhere there is a high concentration of same-sex individuals, there will also be a certain amount of homosexual activity.

Mr. Freind is quick to cite the "normal instinct" of self preservation which is common to "all other species of animals" beside humans. He should be made aware also that there are several species of primates which engage quite naturally and regularly in homosexual activity. Calling homosexual activity an "aberration" of "normal" or "natural" behavior is not only a biased judgement, but a poor and unfounded one in virtue of the grounds it is made upon.

Homosexuality is nothing new and, historically, has been accepted or even promoted in many societies. It is simply a fact of life that all sorts of people are found in all places. Mr. Freind uses, or rather misuses, a Sir Edmund Burke quote about this matter of sexual preference as a matter of good and evil. This betrays his overall lack of understanding. The time has come for us to realize that our time on this ancient world is brief and that we do not understand nearly as much as we would like to think. Tolerance is vital, and moralizing about right and wrong is only illusory and complicates the issues. There is truly room for all if we allow it.

Andrew Shuckrow is a sophomore majoring in philosophy.

"Ro and Glenn" campaign for votes

To the Editor:

This past Tuesday's election for student body president has gone a step further in the right direction — Rosanne Picillo and Glenn Alba's direction. The voting percentages in no way reflect the competition between ourselves and Patrick Kennedy and Kristin Burns.

When Glenn heard the percentages he immediately assumed our ticket had the lead. We will prove to you, the student body, why we will overcome these percentages as did Mark O'Rourke, the president of SGA from 1991-92 when he was in a run-off between himself and Anson Asbury. Make us your new leaders — put us to the test! Villanova University needs the strongest leadership possible to actually give the students results. Glenn and I will produce.

Last yer I was elected by you, the students, to be a senator for the College of Arts and Sciences. Only I have elected leadership. Glenn has great financial knowledge through his education in the College of Commerce and Finance that proved himself worthy of election to the recent position of senator of Commerce and Finance with the most votes of the three elected. This will give him a vote on the senate that a vice president according to our constitution does not have without senatorship.

Glenn and I are the most well-rounded ticket. I have the political experience through direct involvement in the University Senate and Glenn has the business sense to finance projects I initiate as president of the student body. One of many projects that we have on the agenda for next year is a plan to kick off the end of the spring semester with a 'Nova Spring Fest in the same fashion as homecoming. This will help unite the student body and decrease damage of homecoming weekend because students will not feel that homecoming is the only weekend to socialize on campus. Glenn will offer the business knowledge needed to budget this event.

Another project we know that we can convince the University to budget is a permanent, daily shuttle system, of which I, as a senator helped bring to the University's need of attention.

As seniors, we will not settle for anything less than tangible progress to the Student Life at Villanova both off and on campus. Only I can truly represent the entire student body at Villanova because I myself have lived on campus for two years and am now a commuter, as is Glenn. We definitely have the ability to make 'Nova for the for the '90s but only if you vote this Tuesday. Vote for the team that can truly make a difference next year — vote Ro and Glenn.

Expanding women's rights equals expanding human rights

By ELLEN GOODMAN

These are times when Americans have to slip a new set of lenses into an old pair of frames.

The political prescription that we wore for so long produced a kind of Cold-War myopia. For almost fifty years, we pictured the world in terms of East and West, the Soviet Union and America. It was virtually all we could see.

Now we are looking out again. The people and the problems that were once just outside our peripheral vision have come into clear view.

The starkest example of this change has come with the reports by victims and witnesses from Bosnia. Rape was once regarded as an inevitable byproduct of war, if not an actual perk for warriors. But this year it is a war crime, slated to be a centerpiece of any tribunal called for by the United Nations.

In France, the genital mutilation of two immigrant girls from Gambia — a ritual clitoridectomy — would have once been dismissed as a religious or family affair. This winter, the mother who ordered the mutilation was sentenced to jail.

In Korea, women kidnapped and held captive as "comfort women" for Japanese soldiers had been silenced by shame since World War II. This year, they spoke out about sexual slavery.

In Canada, a Saudi woman sought political asylum on the grounds that she was in grave danger back home because of her views on the status of women. Now, after refusing and then allowing her permission to stay, the Canadian government is considering granting refugee status for the victims of gender discrimination.

From Kuwait, too, the world learned of more protests by Philippine maids held captive at their jobs. From India came the story of a 13-year-old girl saved by a flight attendant after she had been sold into marriage by her parents to an elderly Middle Eastern buyer. And from the United Nations came the news that the Conference on Human Rights meeting in Vienna this June will include — for the first time — a substantial agenda of women's rights issues, from voting to violence.

It is not a coincidence that these stories have flashed into our line of moral vision now. It's the work of women in the international human rights community who have stripped off their organizations' old blinders. It's the work of women activists in a hundred countries where abuse once took place in the shadows.

The remarkable thing is that for so long a time, diplomats and foreign ministers dismissed the mistreatment of women as a private, not a public matter. As Dorothy Thomas, the head of women's rights for Human Rights Watch describes it, "Violence against women has been misconceived as a private thing, an incidental thing, an unfortunate thing and a cultural thing. Any thing but a human rights thing."

Indeed the range of laws and customs that enforce second-class status by sex were often defended as part of a country's tradition or religion. We tiptoed around these issues, talking discreetly in hushed diplomatic tones about cultural relativism.

Now, as Thomas says, "the women activists in these countries are saying themselve, 'there's a big difference between recognizing we come from different cultures and falsely using culture to justify a violation of human rights.' " It's the abusers, she says, who use the cultural defense.

The world long ago stopped excusing slavery. Anyone who tried to defend apartheid on the grounds of cultural relativism today would be laughed off the international stage. We are beginning to change attitudes toward women's status as well.

The world's eyes are now open to violence as far abroad as Bosnia. Women's rights are being seen, literally seen, as human rights.

In our country we are sorting out priorities and policies for the post-Cold War world.

We have to restructure a foreign policy that focuses on the environment, on population, on the world economy. We can only do that if women's rights and roles in everything from education to reproduction are part of the picture.

This new vision of the world demands a very wide-angle lens.

Reino dedicates retirement to the Catholic Church

By AMANDA M. MILES
Staff Reporter

Dr. Joseph Reino, retired English professor, put away his chalk and lecture notebooks six years ago and now seeks to exchange them for the Roman collar. This admired teacher will be ordained as a Roman Catholic priest May 15 at the Cathedral of Saints Peter and Paul in Philadelphia by Cardinal Bevilacqua.

On Sept. 1, 1987, this full professor retired from his undergraduate and graduate teaching position and within two years entered St. Charles Seminary in Bala Cynwyd, Pa. Last December, Reino was ordained as a deacon while many of his former Villanova colleagues attended the ceremony with pride.

"I have always been impressed by the diversity of his [Reino's] tastes," stated Dr. Joseph J. DaCrema of Villanova's English department. Though "he had always been religious," Reino's academic pursuits reflected varied interests.

As an undergraduate student at Temple University, this Pennsylvania native specialized in modern British and American literature. After earning his doctorate on a teaching fellowship at the University of Pennsylvania, Reino came to teach at Villanova, where he favored the medieval aspects of British literature, especially the Arthurian legend.

> After spending 27 years teaching at the University, Reino hopes to say his first mass at Villanova's newly renovated church after his ordination in May.

However, he certainly did not limit himself to the teaching of modern and medieval literature. In 1970, Reino published his first volume of poetry, "Half-Remembered Outcries Once Upon a Noontime." His second book of poetry, in 1983, was entitled "Who Would Dare Dream It Again?"

Between the publishing of these volumes, Reino wrote a book for Twayne Publisher's United States Authors Series, "Karl Shapiro." The material for this book grew out of a popular television lecture series on modern literature that Reino hosted on Philadelphia's "WFIL-TV University of the Air."

Following this critique of the important Jewish poet, Reino produced another book for the series. Always broadening the extent of his literary knowledge, Reino seemed to deviate from the expected norm by writing a book about one of America's spookiest writers, Stephen King.

Entitled "Stephen King: The First Decade, Carrie to Pet Sematary," this novel was published in 1988, about eight years after Reino introduced a course called "Tales of Terror and the Supernatural," into Villanova's curriculum Today this course is called "Literature of Science Fiction." Villanova students still have Reino to thank for offering such a unique type of literature course.

Beyond his literary contributions to Villanova, Reino is also very respected in other ways. Since he had always been very interested in music, he served as faculty chairman of the Music Club. His relaxed style of quality teaching brought him much popularity among students and praise from faculty.

After spending 27 years teaching at the University, Reino hopes to say his first mass at Villanova's newly renovated church after his ordination in May.

Book celebrates 150 years

By ROSEANNE MILLER
Staff Reporter

When the Sesquicentennial Steering Committee commissioned the production of a comprehensive pictorial history of Villanova, the result was sensational. The creation "Ever Ancient, Ever New" is comprised of fascinating text, and archival pictures underscored with informative captions.

The book is co-authored by David R. Contosta, Ph.D, who is the chairman of history at Chestnut Hill College, and the Rev. Dennis J. Gallagher, O.S.A., Ph.D, who is the University archivist at Villanova.

Gallagher and Contosta were both actively involved in Sesquicentennial projects before collaborating in this work. The co-authors, who designed the book and its layout, agree that their backgrounds as historian and archivist proved an excellent combination in composing this historical piece of literature.

Their various individual skills benefitted their collaboration. The overall process of actualizing this book took approximately two involved years. The authors spent much time going back and forth between text and illustrations to create the perfect balance. This goal of "perfect balance" was certainly attained, as the prior knowledge of each of these men's expertise flowed into the book.

The book is laid out in four distinct parts. Parts one and two each cover 50 year periods of Villanova history, while the two final parts each record 25-year-periods. Each chapter begins with a full page color photograph significant to the chapter.

The themes within this work are of interest to all. This is not a book to engross only students and faculty, but also parents, history buffs and the general public. There is something to get out of this book for just about anyone. The incredible photography, consisting of 240 archival pictures, along with the vivid captions which are displayed throughout, make this work a delight to the eye.

The evolution of all aspects of Villanova life prevail throughout. Some such aspects are student life, curriculum development and physical development. The comprehensiveness of the evolution is brought to light through the combination of old and new photos. The combination of old and new exemplifies change and yet characterizes the relatedness between past and present. Contosta says that he and Gallagher "purposely juxtaposed old with new to show effective changes" as well as the "co-existing of old with new."

In relating the development of the University, Contosta and Gallagher examine the struggles

Multicultural night highlights diversity

By BETH ANN LUCAS
and
JERRY SANDT
Special to the Villanovan

As many of you already know but may not have actually considered, the "International Studies Office" will hold its first annual Multicultural Night April 1 at 7 p.m. in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center.

What does that mean to Villanova students? It means a chance to broaden your horizons and open your eyes to the international diversity present here at Villanova.

Besides the many students that have studied overseas, there are over 300 students who are natives of other cultures attending Villanova. Our organization is giving you a chance to meet these students, share ideas and enjoy the international scene.

It will be a fun-filled night with a diverse display of food, dance, exhibitions and music. If you plan to get the most out of our expanding world, this is a night you cannot miss.

To give you an idea of what to expect, each language club will be representing themselves. For instance, you will have a chance to experience an authentic tea ceremony provided by the Japanese Society, as well as an opportunity to try some of the finest European cuisines. Bath-Schebba Dyer, a Haitian student, will be representing her country with some fine arts, crafts and food. These are just a few of the many activities that await you on April Fool's Day. (P.S. This is not a joke!)

Personally, as former study abroad students, we can see how the Villanova community has expanded internationally. Here at Villanova, there are so many things in the way of the different cultural societies and the international students themselves, yet we have been slow to recognize their importance.

Through Multicultural Night, we offer you a chance to step out of the norm and do something different. You can see and meet the world without leaving the comforts of the Villanova Room. Around the world in four hours at no charge will leave you with a lasting impression of our world and also what the diverse Villanova community has to offer.

'Novans help Philly homeless

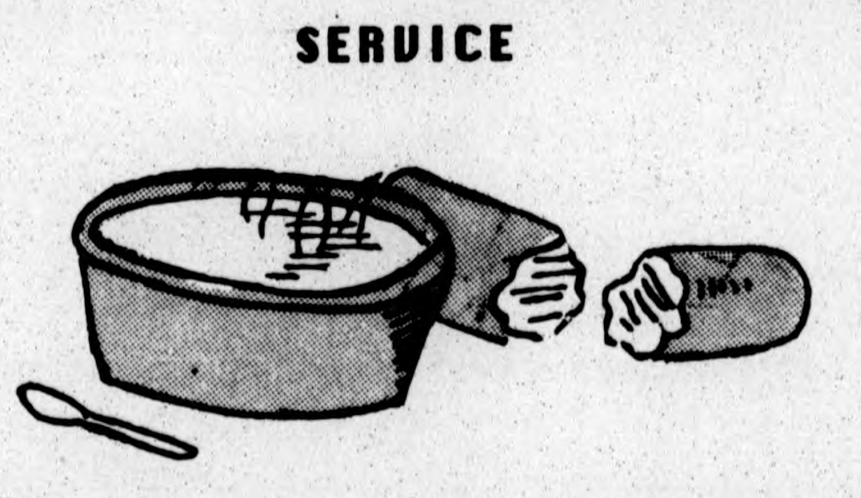
By MARYANN PULLIA
Staff Reporter

Anxiety, fear and excitement were all running through me as I sat in the Campus Ministry van enroute to Philadelphia. We were dropped off on the corner of 18th and Walnut streets with a bag of sandwiches, a bag of desserts, a canister of hot tea and a book to take demographic information from the residents in the area ...

This trip, my first as a volunteer for the Streets Committee of Villanova's Campus Ministry, turned out to be a rewarding exprience which made a lasting impression on my life.

I first became nervous when we made a left turn off of Vine Street to an area of Philadelphia that did not look safe. This is where the Streets Committee, also known as "802" for its location at 802 N. Broad Street, checks in.

We entered the shelter and met students from LaSalle University, volunteers from the community and the leader of Philadelphia Committee for the Homeless' Outreach Program. I was given the record book to take down ethnic background, sex and location of each individual. This information helps the city keep track of how many homeless people live on the streets and their progress.



The first man we encountered was someone I would normally avoid making eye-contact. He recognized that we were with "802" and approached us. I was surprised when he said he had been looking for us. Apparently the homeless are aware which nights Project Outreach is in the city.

The group leader began to make conversation, asking where everyone else was located. I was also surprised by the way the man rattled off several names of people who were looking for us. I never really thought that the homeless knew each other. I was proven wrong by the end of the night.

As the night progressed I mustered the courage to speak to some of the homeless people we encountered, and I was astonished by the friendliness and openness. I realized that they have formed a "community" among themselves and watch out for each other.

My nervousness passed as I became comfortable speaking with them. I was filled with a

Bulimia statistics prove the disease is increasing

Special to the Villanovan

SOME COMMON BEHAVIORS ASSOCIATED WITH BULIMIA:

[ ] Binge eating in large amounts, several days a week.

[ ] Binge eating on highly processed carbohydrate foods, often foods containing refined sugar, flour or wheat and caffeine.

[ ] Experience difficulty withdrawing from these substances due to what seems like uncontrollable physical cravings for more.

[ ] Unable to control the amount of food eaten.

[ ] Spend a lot of time thinking about food, demonstrated by frequent recurring thoughts about buying, preparing and eating food.

[ ] Fear of becoming fat.

[ ] Preoccupied with trying to lose weight by exercising, going on a strict diet, taking laxatives, taking diet pills, or vomiting.

[ ] Feel frustrated and discouraged because once you lose weight you find yourself back in the binge/purge cycle.

[ ] Look in the mirror and are constantly criticizing your body.

[ ] Become involved in relationships with emotionally or physically abusive mates.

For Debbie, the years at Arkansas State were not the fun-filled, exciting times they were supposed to be. Instead, her college years were filled with fear, pain and suffering because of her bulimia.

Debbie began her war against food at the age of 15 and suffered through bouts of bulimia, anorexia, as well as a separation and divorce, and 10 years of personal agony before seeking treatment.

Her unfortunate story is being repeated all too often on college campuses across the country. The exact number of students affected by bulimia, the bingeing and purging of food, is hard to assess since the clinical study of the disorder is a relatively new research field and long-term scientific data is not available.

Well before it was ever given a clinical name, bulimia existed on college campuses. For more than 30 years the illness has plagued students. The incidence of the eating disorder has increased dramatically over the past 10 years. Experts believe one out of four college woman are bulimics and 1 to 2 percent of all teenage girls are anorexic. While eating disorders mainly affect women, it is estimated that 5 percent of college men suffer from bulimia.

Like many other young girls in our thin-conscious society, Debbie's fear of becoming fat started as a teen. She was a high school cheerleader, model, gymnast and was very weight and body focused.

"Looking good was very important," said Debbie, who was also into weight-lifting and aerobics.

Although never more than 10 pounds overweight, Debbie's obsession with weight was fostered by her mother, a compulsive overeater who did have a weight problem. At 15, Debbie began restricting her food intake. She said she never ate three square meals a day during high school. Her snacks were diet pills, not Doritos.

She started bingeing late in high school. Her "favorite" food was cereal, either Frosted Flakes or Honey Combs, and milk.

"It was quick to go down and easy to bring back up," she said.

Debbie's craving for sugared cereal points out an important aspect of bulimia. Research is revealing that the disorder is not only a psychiatric problem but also a metabolic one. There is evidence to suggest that refined sugar, flour and wheat products are addictive to bulimics and trigger the binge cycle by intensive cravings.

"Once an eating disorder is firmly established, it is much like alcoholics in that it is addictive and very difficult to break the pattern," said Dr. Virginia Condelio, director of psychiatry at The Willough at Naples, a hospital in Southwest Florida specializing in the treatment of eating disorders and chemical dependency.

In college, Debbie was able to continue bingeing/purging in relative isolation. She was in a new setting where she did not know anyone. She shared a bathroom with two other girls, but they were gone a lot and unaware of their suitemate's eating disorder. Just to make sure she had total privacy, she would lock the bedroom door to binge and lock the bathroom door to purge. She always ran the shower to cover the sound of her purging.

Once an eating disorder is firmly established, it is much like alcoholism in that it is addictive and very difficult to break the pattern.

"I always binged in private, and if I binged on other people's food, I would replace it so they wouldn't find out," said Debbie. "I tried to avoid any social activity where there was food, but if I had to eat out, I would leave the table as soon as possible to go purge. If anyone knew what I was doing, they never said anything to me."

"After a binge/purge episode I always felt so guilty," Debbie continued. "Sometimes the guilt and shame were so great, I would binge and purge again because I had to numb the pain."

In addition to vomiting, Debbie would exercise a minimum of two to three hours a day. She would schedule her classes around her exercise times, and would skip class to exercise. She even enjoyed working as a waitress because she had to do a lot of walking around the large, busy restaurant in which she worked.

A knee injury and subsequent surgery forced Debbie to stop exercising her sophomore year. It was then she turned to laxatives, sometimes taking a full box in one day. It was often difficult for her to concentrate in class since she was physically uncomfortable and distracted. Occasionally she would even get light headed and dizzy due to the electrolyte imbalance caused from purging.

While in graduate school, Debbie began to starve herself, a behavior which is typical of an anorexic. That was not unusual because bulimics and anorexics will often display similar behavior. In fact, 50 percent of anorexics will do some type of purging.

It was not until she was 25 and was working in a treatment hospital that Debbie realized she needed help. She said she started missing deadlines, was late to work and had lapses in concentration. A visit from her best friend in college was the clincher.

"She hugged me and said I was skin and bones," said Debbie, who described herself as being extremely underweight. "She was well aware of what I had been doing in school."

Debbie entered treatment at The Willough in 1989. She received comprehensive treatment for her disease. Now 28 and married, Debbie, who is an eating disorder theapist, is eating three meals a day and a snack, has a healthy support system, is following a balanced exercise routine and, perhaps most important, has learned that "food is not the enemy."

For more information about eating disorders or a free Mini-Guide to Food Addiction, call The Willough at Naples at 1-800-722-0100.

On Villanova's campus, you can find assistance at the Counseling Center in Corr Hall 106. Hours are Mon.-Fri., 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Phone 645-4050.

Film explores life of martyr

By CHRISTINE M. SCOMA
Special to the Villanovan

The Archbishop of El Salvador, Oscar Romero, was celebrating Mass in 1980 when he was brutally assassinated by a right-wing political extremist.

The events of Romero's life, from his conversion from a shy, orthodox priest to an outspoken advocate of peaceful liberation for the people of El Salvador, are chronicled in the film "Romero," directed by John Duigan. American people may have thought this chapter of El Salvador's history was closed. However, the recent findings of a United Nation's Truth Commission reopened this case.

The commission concluded that not only was the United States indirectly involved with El Salvador by giving millions of dollars of economic aid, but also through supplying the corrupt and violent Salvadorian government with arms and training for their army.

Furthermore, there is evidence that the Reagan Administration ignored information which indicated that the Salvadorian government was using its force to kill religious leaders like Romero and innocent civilians in peasant villages.

Prior to these findings, the United States insisted that the guerrilla rebels were responsible for most of these actions. In some instances, members of our government suggested that those civilians who were murdered asked for it, by being in the wrong place at the wrong time and by antagonizing the established army.

Even the U.S. Ambassador to El Salvador, Robert E. White, asserted that it was right-wing political forces who were responsible for Romero's murder. However, his opinion was dismissed by Reagan in favor of another which Reagan claimed had more evidence to support it.

Actor Raul Julia portrays Oscar Romero, the archbishop of El Salvador, who was assassinated in 1980.

In regard to the three American nuns and laypeople who were murdered in their car, the six Jesuit priests and their housekeepers who were killed and the large-scale massacre of the entire El Mozote village, the commission concluded that the U.S. government either ignored blatant facts concerning these events or was fully aware of what was occurring.

The film "Romero" is especially important for people to view in light of these recent findings. Not only does it chronicle the life of a great man who was murdered for his beliefs, but it also allows Americans to witness a critical aspect of our own history. As an American, one cannot afford to forget or ignore what occurred in El Salvador.

The film will be shown in the Connelly Center Cinema as part of the Cultural Film Series on March 27 at 7 p.m., March 28 at 3:30 p.m. and 7 p.m. and March 29 at 7 p.m. At the showing on March 29, Gloria Thomas will host a lecture before the film and answer questions after the showing. Thomas is an assistant professor in the department of philosophy and religious studies at Marymount College and a noted liberation theologist.

'Nova theatre brings us 'Brighton Beach'

By ADRIAN READY
Special to the Villanovan

Villanova Student Theatre is bound to have its best season yet, with this weekend's opening of Neil Simon's "Brighton Beach Memoirs," playing at the Agnes Irwin School's West Wike Theatre.

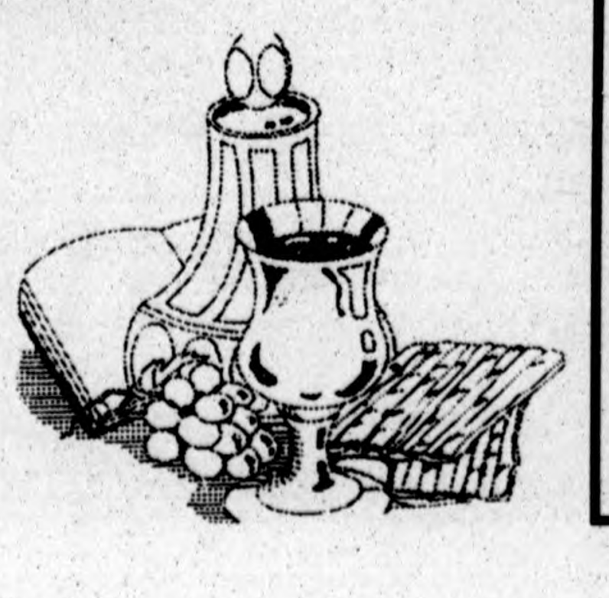
Together, the cast creates Villanova Student Theatre's finest production yet.

The comedy focuses on the life of 15-year-old Eugene Morris Jerome of Brighton Beach, New York. Through Eugene's unusual perspective, we see the problems inherent in an extended family. Ranging from dealing with the unemployment problems of the Great Depression to dealing with the innocent perplexities of a young boy entering puberty, the play has a universal appeal which still reaches us today.

Directed by Villanova theatre graduate student John Magowan, the ensemble cast is led by Jay Langin as Eugene. Justin Weller plays his older and "experienced" brother Stanley. Sue Roth and Ray Saraceni play Eugene and Stanley's parents, Kate and Jack Jerome. Kate's sister Blanche is played by Julie Czarnecki. Blanche's two daughters, Nora and Lori, are played by Heleme Leclercq and Doria Daversa. Together, the cast creates Villanova Student Theatre's finest production yet.

Villanova Student Theatre is proud to be working with Trevor's Campaign for the Philadelphia homeless on this production. Begun in 1983 by 11 year old Trevor of Berewyn, who brought food and clothing to the homeless of Philadelphia, Trevor's Campaign has grown into a large non-profit organization which provides daily food runs into city homeless shelters and rehabilitation centers, as well as clothing and furniture distribution centers for the working poor. Part of the proceeds from Brighton Beach Memoirs will be donated to this worthy cause.

Tickets will be available in advance at Connelly Center on Friday, or at the door. Tickets are $5 for students and $10 for general audiences.



VILLANOVA UNIVERSITY SUMMER PROGRAM 1993
CADIZ, SPAIN
JUNE 25-AUGUST 9, 1993

PROGRAM

The six-week program is intended for undergraduates who wish to increase their language proficiency and to be introduced to Spain; all students must have completed at least two semesters of college-level Spanish, or its equivalent prior to Program.

Beginning with a one-week stay in Madrid where the students spend time in language classes and visit Madrid, Toledo, Segovia, Escorial and Avila, the Program then continues on to Córdoba, and Cádiz. Once in Cádiz, the students are enrolled in the four-week Universidad de Cádiz's Cursos de Verano choosing two (2) courses for six Villanova University undergraduate credits. Following the Cursos, Villanova students stay one additional week in Cádiz for further instruction and then travel to Granada for a two-day stay prior to departure from Málaga for the Newark International Airport.

• Intensive Intermediate Spanish	SPA 1121/SPA 1122	6 credits
• Intensive Advanced Spanish	SPA 1131/SPA 1132	6 credits
• Hispanic Culture and Civilization	SPA 2142	3 credits
• Survey of Peninsular Literature	SPA 2211	3 credits
• Special Topics	SPA 3412	3 credits

Students are encouraged to attend the daily activities of the Cursos, such as Flamenco dancing and singing, evening lectures, and social activities, or visit the museums, theatres, shows and festivals of the City of Cádiz.

HOUSING

In Cádiz, students are housed in the Universidad de Cádiz Colegio Mayor which faces onto the Parque Genovés near the Atlantic Ocean. The University facilities include classrooms, library, lounges, tennis and swimming facilities, restaurant and cafeteria. Students who wish to stay with Spanish families must apply early.

MEALS

Students will receive full board at the Colegio Mayor or with their assigned family.

PROGRAM EXCURSIONS

Three optional weekend trips are planned by the Cádiz faculty to the towns of the Andalusian region; that is, 1. to Arcos de la Frontera and towns hidden in the Mountains of Ronda, 2. to the Roman ruins of Bolonia by the sea and the City of Vejer de la Frontera, and 3. to Jerez de la Frontera made famous by its wines and horses.

OUTREACH

Philadelphia, the city of "brotherly love," contains 4,500 of the estimated 500,000 homeless in the United States.

The satisfying feeling that I was experiencing quickly diminished as we approached an intoxicated elderly man on a street corner. He began rambling on to another student about how no one cares for him anymore. He expressed gratitude for our efforts to help, but he kept saying how no one cared for him. He begged the volunteer to pray for him again and again.

The night had gone so well. The people we encountered were so happy to receive our help, and they expressed a startling optimism about their futures. This made the problem of homelessness seem not so bad.

Philadelphia, the city of "brotherly love," contains 4,500 of the estimated 500,000 homeless in the United States. Villanova's Campus Ministry works to alleviate this problem through Villanova's Committee for the Homeless. The committee offers help in five different areas of outreach.

Every Thursday night a group of five to eight students goes to St. Barnabas Homeless Shelter for families where one or both parents have a drug or alcohol dependency. Students help the children by tutoring them and being role models. Students also tutor children at the Catholic Worker House by devoting time and love every Monday, Tuesday and Thursday afternoons.

Villanova also offers hands-on help through Habitat for Humanity. Every Saturday students work to accomplish Habitat's goal: to provide adequate housing at no interest for low income families. Students renovate dilapidated houses to create adequate housing for the poor.

Villanova students also get to communicate directly with the homeless and poor at the St. Francis soup kitchen. Once a week students prepare and help distribute food at the soup kitchen. Every Wednesday kand Sunday nights Villanova students go on the streets of Philadelphia on Project Outreach.

I have gone on the Streets Committee several other times since my first night. Every time I volunteer on the Streets Committee I still feel the same anxiety, fear and excitement because I never know what to expect — except a rewarding feeling at the end of the night.

which Villanova has overcome over the past century and a half. Information on tragedies such as fire, epidemics, war and economic problems are presented in their effects on Villanova.

Besides the overcoming of hurdles, the book presents cultural diversity as well as famous individuals and their interaction with the University. Pictures and information of men such as Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and former U.S. presidents Kennedy and Bush are contained in this pictorial history of Villanova.

The Donning Company, which is the publisher of "Ever Ancient, Ever New" views this book as a model of pictorial histories. The photographs, captions and text capture Villanova's natural and architectural beauty.

Gallagher rightly states that "Catholic identity clearly shines through" as does "the prevailing Augustinian role" in Villanova's history. The text is definitely keyed into the photos, and the accurate history in the captions equals a precise thoroughness.

Villanova University's 150-year history is celebrated through the reader's surveying of this book. The pictorial history, "Ever Ancient, Ever New," is currently available at the Villanova University bookstore.

NATURE ZONE

apathy is not ACCEPtABle

It's time to change

"If today is a typical day on planet earth, humans will add 15 million tons of carbon to the atmosphere, destroy 115 square miles of tropical rainforest, create 72 square miles of desert, eliminate between 40 and 100 species, erode 71 million tons of topsoil, and 27 hundred tons of CFCs to the stratosphere and increase their population by 263,000. Yesterday, today and tomorrow. By year's end the total numbers will be staggering: an acre of tropical rainforest the size of Kansas lost; seven to 10 billion tons of carbon added to the atmosphere; and a total population increase of 90 million," according to Ecolopical Literacy written by David W. Orr. It's time to change, Apathy is NOT acceptable.

We, the members of Nature-Zone, are an intercollegiate organization from Villanova University and Rosemont College that is new this semester. Our intentions are to implement existing environmental philosophies and to assist the growth and practice of preventive measures concerning global disaster. We need your help. General apthy has thwarted many environmental movements. Do not let Villanova fall under that category.

Many things can be accomplished on this campus. For instance, we are starting a petition in conjunction with Villanova's Environmental Group (VEG). Our goal is the removal of polystyrene products used in Connelly Center and Bartley Cafe. Non-bleached, recyclable, paper products would replace the polystyrene cups and plates currently being used. Petitions are being circulated NOW. Your signatures will make a difference. We are located in the Center for Peace and Justice. Messages, questions and comments are welcome.

Here are some other statistics you might want to think over: Boycott Purdue Chickens ... Reason for boycott: Purdue's chickens live a life of misery, treated not as the sentient creatures they are, but as objects. At birth, Purdue's chicks have their beaks burned off with a hot knife. Then they are trucked to "farms" where they are crowded, for reasons of economy, into windowless sheds. There, each bird, which grows to a size of about four pounds, is provided with one square foot — or less — of living space for its entire life. Such stressful overcrowding results in cannibalism, disease and a high mortality rate. (High losses in corporate factory farming are accepted as incidential cost of doing business.) To fight disease, Purdue's chickens receive massive doses of antibiotics and other drugs (which are eventually ingested by people.) Purdue chickens are killed on a mechanized assembly line, pinned upside down prior to having their throats slit.

Did you know ... that each year Americans use 18 billion disposable diapers? On average, a baby will use 10,000 diapers before toilet training. Plastic diapers make up 4 percent of our solid waste — enough to fill a garbage barge every six hours. One diaper takes an estimated 500 years to decompose in a land fill.

Did you know ... that it takes 100 gallons of water to make one pat of butter?

Did you know ... as much as 25 percent of all toxic waste originates in individual households?

Did you know ... in a rural forest, approximately one acre of fast growing, healthy forest can absorb 1.4 tons of carbonmoxide each year?

Did you know ... the waste generated each year in the United States would fill in a convoy of 10-ton garbage trucks 145,000 miles long — over half-way from here to the moon?

Did you know ... that soap sometimes contains the tallow (hard white fat) not only of exhausted dairy cows and overfattened chickens, but also of the 7.5 million cats and dogs that are exterminated each year in animal shelters across the United Sates each year?

(These facts were taken out of The Green lifestyle handbook, edited by Jeremy Rifkin.)

We speak in the first person

You look like a silent, peaceful animal like myself. However, people are my main enemy ... Just because you don't see us building factories and buildings does not mean we are dumb or unimportant; we don't need or want them. We can't come up to your world and ruin it; we can't dump toxic waste in your world — in fact, we don't want to — you do it yourself ... I am the last of my kind. Did you know that? Who will remember me? ... I can't believe you actually appreciate me, so many of your people take us for granted ... They see us as something to be hunted for sport or as a valuable hide. Please help them realize that we are alive and have the right to exist with you. My people need a place to rest ... Your people are pushing us out of our homes -- please not out of existence ... I call you to realize our value and others to do so too ... Think about that the next time you ride by, oblivious to all thoughts, but your own ... Where is my family? Will I ever see them again? There are only a few of us left ... the woods have been shrinking year by year. You don't understand the importance of woods. They take our homes, now they take us. I'm trapped! ... Save me and my children. Stop pretending you don't know what's happening to me. Face the pain. Cry. Speak what you know ... Even one person can make a difference ... I'm begging you to make other humans aware of the terrible destruction being done to my home ... Every day I find myself running from you as you destroy the greens, browns, yellows. Please, let the world know we need our home, where will we go? What will we do? You must stop thinking you own everything. This is our home. These trees and plants are my family. Stop, you wretched beings, stop! ... Slow down, and look out for me. Please!

My name is Timeless. Countless eons span my existence. I have watched the rivers flood and ebb. The boulders crushed to dust on the Earth, tremble and quake in her birth pains. I've seen your brother and sisters kill and maim and hurt. Can't you see I am your brother? Your sister? Am I just shade and wood and fuel and obstruction? Rather life giver, friend, mother and father. I cannot give you advice, but I pose these questions: What is it that you seek? What is it that you are? When you see your face reflected in mine will you understand? ... Every time you see me maybe you should say good-bye because the next time you come this way, I might be gone. You just use and only think of the now. Listen to all others with the respect they deserve. Take their advice to heart. My cousin is about to be murdered today. Please go and stop them ... We are just as real as humans and deserve the chance to live ... You need to give me more time, because I am your lungs, the water and the flesh of your soul. I am your children's children. Why are you just sitting back not joining us? ... As if I am nothing. As if I am beneath you. As if I am at your disposal. As if you created me. As if you can live without me. That is how you treat me and you are wrong. If you destroy me, you will destroy yourself. And so here is how you must change in your actions toward all others besides yourself, you must change. You must treat all with respect and courtesy you so self-righteously demand for yourself. You must see, hear, taste, touch, smile and live the interconnectedness of all entities. You must promise to do everything you can to never hurt or dispose of anything ever again. All things you do and say must be immediate and long term. You must finally love me and all other entities that make up mother earth so deeply that to harm us, would be to die yourself. I leave you now to love.

'Moll Flanders" tales light up the stage

By ERIC CHEUNG
Assistant Entertainment Editor

The final major production in the Sesquicentennial Celebration of 'Nova Playwrights is currently playing at Villanova Theatre. After a year-long offering of powerful stories about Irish-American families, African-American females, and African-American war prison guards, "Moll Flanders" is a delightfully new change of pace.

Based on an 18th Century novel by Daniel Defoe, this rollicking play tells the tale of one Moll Flanders, including the fortunes and misfortunes of her life. The musical was created by Villanova graduates Peter Mattaliano, (lyricist, librettist, director) and Stephen Jankowski, (music composer). The two have collaborated on such works as "American Dreams," "The Birds" and "The Jack the Ripper Revue."

Of the main character, Moll Flanders, Mattaliano says, "Moll is a strong woman who handles the adversities of life very admirably." Jankowski adds, "Moll is really a 20th-century woman functioning in the 17th-century England." The play, spanning 42 years (from 1673-1715), is divided into two parts: the amorous adventures and the notorious adventures. They correspond to the two parts of Moll Flanders: the Young Moll and the Elder Moll.

Throughout the story Moll Flanders relies on opportunities, wit, resourcefulness and just plain old luck to get her into and out of her memorable predicaments. While doing so she makes a strong statement about the strength and ability of the female in a male-dominated world. As Mattaliano puts it, "For me, the show works on two levels. On one level you have the jokes and tunes; on another level, you have a strong feminist subtext. Hopefully, all types of theatre-goers will be happy with it." And indeed they will.

"Moll Flanders" is simply stunning, it could shine along with the best of the musicals Broadway has to offer. In many ways it is a perfect ending to a year full of wonderfully endearing dramas. First of all, it is by far the biggest, most extravagant production of the year. Featuring 21 actors (including professionals, graduates and undergraduates) and 75 different custumes (designed by Janus Stefanowicz and Wesley Maloney-Truitt), it is a relatively mammoth undertaking for the intimate, quiet theatre in Vasey Hall. But the many characters needed help to keep this irresistible play moving along.

Additionally, "Moll Flanders" offers return performances by featured actors from all three of the previous plays this season. Seeing familiar faces creates a sense of continuity, like seeing everybody again at a family reunion.

Finally, dancing and singing turn this simultaneously simple and complex yarn into an eye-catching production which makes the $15 ticket price a steal.

Along with the costumes and actors, the props are quite ambitious. Through the use of two turntables, rope ladders, cables and building sets, the audience accompanies Moll Flanders as she moves from England, to a ship, to America, to England and back to America again. The play is so captivating that viewers forget they are in a theatre, but feel they are actually there, living the tale.

"Moll Flanders" is unique in the way it is presented. The Elder and Young Moll both serve as narrators for the story as they present Moll Flander's amazing life to the audience. The amorous adventures begin the play with the Elder Moll narrating. Born in Newgate Prison, to Sissy, who is being sentenced to death for petty larceny, Moll is adopted by a band of gypsies and later is taken in by a kind banker and his family. Sissy's pregnancy saves her from execution and she is able to go free from prison. Moll's thoughts about her mother's whereabouts are of importance during the first Act.

Living with her new family, Moll quickly learns of the power of love. Both sons fall in love with her, but it is the younger one, Robin, whom she ends up marrying. Unfortunately, it is the older brother, Jemmy, whom Moll truly loves. On the night of her first anniversary, Robin dies and Moll is treated coldly by her "family." With the knowledge that Jemmy, her true love, has become a monk, Moll must start her live anew. However, she takes with her

Depeche Mode remains faithful to the fans

By MAURA RURAK
Senior Writer

Songs of Faith and Devotion has finally been released. After weeks of "I feel You" blaring from the radio, Depeche Mode's latest work can now satisfy the masses. Fans actually lined up outside Tower Records on South Street Monday waiting until midnight for the Tuesday sales to begin.

Almost three years have past since Violator and the faithful followers were anxiously awaiting the next installment of Depeche Mode's unique, modern sound. Songs of Faith and Devotion is sure to fill their needs.

Depeche Mode is back with the same sound they offered in 1990. They have found their niche and thrive in it. Few risks are taken on this 11th album with the exception of "Judas," filled with soothing Uilleann pipes. The general theme is, once again, painful love. From "Rush" to "One Caress" to "Higher Love," the group croons about unfulfilled desire, unmatched affection and that one obsessive, unobtainable love.

Nonetheless, the four members of Depeche Mode separate themselves from other synthesized groups such as Yaz and Erasure by using live instruments on some tracks. This is not to suggest that their sound has changed — it has not. It has, however, become a little more substantial with the use of traditional instruments.

As always, the lyrics are truly poetic. "I would lose my way again/Be led hopelessly astray again/Just so I could pray again/ For the mercy in you" ("Mercy In You). The rhyming lyrics help to create the hypnotic atmosphere that is Depeche Mode.

The title, Songs of Faith and Devotion, clearly applies to all 10 tracks. The majority of songs are smooth, clear, soft melodies — far different from the pulsing first cut "I Feel You." "Condemnation" is a softly sung, synthesized ballad that is similar to "Somebody" from the 1985 release Catching Up With Depeche Mode. In general, this CD takes a softer edge in comparison to other heavy, pounding, Depeche Mode cuts.

Brian Eno, who recently worked with U2, aided Depeche Mode in the production of this album. Songs of Faith and Devotion is certainly a clean-cut and organized effort. The tracks are obviously complete and polished, even if they do lack true originality. Followers of the group will not be disappointed. Depeche Mode is still making the same music that established them as progressive artists in the early '80s. However, now it is the '90s, and Depeche Mode has yet to venture into new musical realms. Maybe they are waiting for the next album to try that.

On Jan. 29, Time Warner released Ice-T from his record contract, ending the business relationship between the rapper and the media giant. This action culminated a bitter censorship battle between the two which began last June. The much publicized furor erupted when Ice-T released the song "Cop Killer" on the Time Warner label with his thrash-metal band Body Count.

After numerous boycotts and protests by police groups leading to the song being removed from stores, and with arguments over lyrics and artwork for Ice-T's latest album, Time Warner decided that it had tasted enough controversy and parted ways with the rapper.

Now, less than two months later, Ice-T has started his own label, Rhyme Syndicate, and released his fifth album, Home Invasion. Ice-T is as militant as ever, using the 19 tracks at times to defend himself from the last out at critics. He does this with "It's On," where he vents his frustrations in a tirade against his opponents in a song that was added to the album after the Warner split. Mostly, however, he continues to challenge the "system" with his music. He raps of familiar topics including gang violence, corrupt police, racial tensions and white corporate America.

Ice-T is determined to deliver his message unedited and uncompromising. If you thought he would change his ways and jeopardize his integrity, you obviously do not understand what this former gang-basher is all about. Ice-T furiously belts out song after song in an attempt to create a "brotherly love between all races," and he is not afraid to attack anyone or anything in his way.

In a recent L.A. Times interview, Ice-T explained Home Invasion. "It's about breaking down racial barriers. A home invasion is when robbers break into your home while you're still there and hold your family hostage. (White parents) get scared when their kids start liking black rappers like me and Ice Cube and Public Enemy. The parents tell the kids all these lies about black people and we tell them the truth. So what I'm saying on Home Invasion is, 'Hey, moms, it's too late! Your kid's had his head in that Walkman for a long time now. You have no idea how deep we're into your house. We're sitting right there at your dinner table and you don't even know it."

On tracks like "Gotta Lotta Love," which focuses on the celebrated L.A. gang truce following the riots, and "Race War," which searches and pleads for togetherness among all minorities, Ice-T preaches for racial harmony. On "Watch The Ice Break," he puts wanna-be rap stars in their place with an arrogance only possible by someone of Ice-T's stature. "Message To The Soldier," attempts to probe the meaning and cultural importance of rap music, as well as to identify the problems facing rappers who deliver their message of reality in a gangsta-style. It is a smooth, truthful track and a strong close to the album.

Perhaps the most impressive track is "That's How I'm Livin'," a powerful rap in which Ice-T paints a harsh reality of his own life story. This introspective reveals the source of much of the passion in Ice-T's music.

Ice-T has deservedly earned the respect of his peers and Home Invasion is what America has come to expect of him. It is no-holds-barred honesty, hard-core beats with innovative sampling, punishing, intelligent lyrics and a raging depiction of reality driven by an ideal desire to improve society.

Big Head Todd hits untapped music nerve

By MARK McCREARY
Staff Reporter

Have you ever really contemplated just how stupid some names of bands are? Just think about it: Def Leppard, Enuff 'Z' Nuff, Indigo Girls, Jesus Jones, Ned's Atomic Dustbin, Soup Dragons and Ugly Kidd Joe are just a few. The granddaddy of them all is Toad the Wet Sprocket. What do any of these names mean, and how can musicians face their parents with band names like these?

Just when everyone thought it could get no worse, Big Head Todd and the Monsters blazes onto the music scene with their little plastic and aluminum foil treat, Sister Sweetly. The name of the group does not necessarily define the music, and that definitely is the case here. It can be said that the music is much better than the band's heinous title.

Though this is a band that does not make any immediate connection in everybody's minds, this is not B.H.T.'s first endeavor. But what they have here is a brand-spankin' new disc, with 11 tracks that are sure to cause an immediate response, making earlobes tingle with enthusiasm. This music is actually a departure from the all-too-saturated music market that is labeled alternative, but does not seem to fit well in any standard category. B.H.T. is a very young band that makes it apparent that they have incredible potential and ability. Describing the music is a difficult job. It has a blues, twangy and southern sound to it, but it is in no way a turn-off. The Black Crowes can be described similarly, but in no way do they sound alike. Where the Crowes go rock, the Big Head goes almost folk.

The disc is laced with religious references throughout, making them appear the more Midwestern, home grown band that they are. In the same manner that Toad the Wet Sprocket hit a new nerve of music that was previously untapped, Big Head Todd has rerouted a form of music that has been swept into the corner. They sound like they are about 45-year-olds toting gun racks in the back of their pick-ups, but oddly they are more the "sensitive, ponytail" kind of guys. It appears that they have retained most of the control over their music after switching from Giant Records to Reprise Records, keeping in mind that their sound has not changed much from their early stuff.

Out of the available tracks, there are three tracks that stand out as potential singles, and one that is your typical we-can-play-a-slow-song-too single. Some of the titles that you may possibly hear on the radio are "Turn the Light Out," "Soul For Every Cowboy," and "Bittersweet." Out of all the tracks, "Circle" is indeed one that shines above them all. Still, with lines such as, "It seems to you, you and me are forgetting something when love is so easily forgotten. And if I pick you up will you drag me down? If I run to you will you turn around? Rise and fall turn the wheel 'cause all life is really just a circle," you know that you are going to get a dose of so-called "real life" medicine with this song.

The idea behind the disc is that it is a departure from the norm exploring an avenue of music that has not been trodden in quite a while. For those looking for some new music that is reminiscent of the blues type of music they grew up on, this will hit the spot. And though it will quench that thirst, at the same time it will be fresh and not sound like music that they have heard too much of before. Those who dare should check out Sister Sweetly by Big Head Todd and the Monsters. Others can just remain content with their new oh-so-appeasing Snow CDs.

Bridget Fonda reaches 'Point of No Return'

By LYN MAHLER
Staff Reporter

The movie ad boasts, "The government gave her a choice. Death. Or life as an assassin. Now, there's no turning back." Maggie, played by Bridget Fonda, has now reached the "Point of No Return." This new Warner Bros. movie provides an enthralling mixture of action and humor.

A complete derelict and drug addict, Maggie murders a police officer. For this illegal act of violence, she receives the death penalty by lethal injection. However instead of injecting her with poison (as the public and her relatives assume), the government injects her with a potion that simply knocks her out. While the world (falsely presuming that Maggie is dead) holds the ritual funeral and grieving services, Maggie is actually "asleep" in a covert government agency specializing in high-tech assassinations.

Upon Maggie's awakening, Bob, an agency leader played by Gabriel Byrne, bluntly explains the situation. Maggie has been chosen to participate in an assassin training program. There are jobs to be done for which the government specifically needs young females.

At first, Maggie's defiant and unruly manner causes serious problems in the program, in turn jeopardizing her life. When she realizes that if she does not shape up she will soon be the assassinated instead of the assassin, Maggie fully cooperates with the program and with Bob. Maggie flies through the training program at top speed, excelling at all levels, leaving the training center within six months as a proven successful assassin.

J.P., the third main character played by Dermot Mulroney, enters the scene when Maggie, whose name is now Claudia and whose code name is Nina, based on her fascination with Nina Simone, is stationed in California. The two soon become romantically involved. Unfortunately, there is no room in the life of an assassin for a lover. A specific scene during the New Orleans Mardi Gras celebration clearly expresses the contradiction in Maggie's life.

Bridget Fonda fantastically portrays the realistic drudgery of the day-to-day life of an assassin. For once, these heinous crimes are not romanticized and glamorized. Maggie is a brash, independent, yet feeling character. Seeing her actually shed tears during one of her jobs displays all the negative and horrible aspects of her occupation. Too many movies idolize characters who kill. Though Bridget Fonda is the designated heroine of the movie, she can also be pitied and loathed.

The amazing detail of "Point of No Return," produced by Art Linson and directed by John Badham, truly captures and emphasizes the unknown and unseen aspects of a secretive criminal life. For example, when Maggie botches one job, her boss sends in a "cleaner" to take care of the mess. Included in his task is destroying the victim's bodies with sulfuric acid. Linson and Badham do not leave much to the imagination in this scene. The realism shocked and appalled most viewers.

Openly, Maggie and J.P. express their love relationship. However, to add a twist, sparks also fly between Maggie and Bob. This unspoken but noticeable relationship is key to the plot of the movie. Unfortunately, to explain why it is central to the movie would be to tell too much. So go see "Point of No Return" and enjoy.

May shines dimly on his Back To The Light

By CAROLYN POPPE
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Brian May, the legendary guitarist and founding member of Queen, recently released his first solo album, Back To The Light. May's past guitar work has influenced many rock and metal guitarists, including Guns and Roses' Slash. He now makes an important move to keep his head (and career) above water.

Since the death of singer Freddie Mercury in 1991, Queen slipped into silence. The 20 year band had made an impression on the history of rock, mostly due to Mercury's unusual, broad-ranged vocals and May's ground-breaking guitar. That rich guitar work can be rediscovered throughout Back To The Light.

May exhibits not only his classic guitar abilities, but also tries his hand at writing on the album, performing the lead vocals and even dabbling in keyboard work. In fact, he does almost all of the work on the album himself. The result is as experimental as it seems. The sound feels surfacy, in spite of a little synthesizer mixing and even orchestral back up, at times, to achieve warmth.

Yet as a guitarist, he still impresses. Left to May alone, the style leans toward metal. May explains that Back To The Light isn't a guitar virtuoso album," but an "album of songs which are designed to feature a lot of guitar." And in spite of a getting-back-on-track theme, the album journeys to the familiar, whiny guitar of an early '80s Queen that America got hooked on. In vocal harmonies and moaning guitar, the music mirrors that of Queen. "But it's a trademark that I put into Queen," he explains, "and I can't pretend it's not me, so normally I went with it."

The single, "Driven By You," shows this tendency of May's. The somewhat catchy tune he originally wrote as a jingle for the Ford Motor Company in Britain. (Hence, the pun.) Unfortunately, the song does not go much further than its chorus. The same big, overpowering vocal/guitar sound also evades the track "Rollin' Over." The man who wrote Queen tunes like "Tie Your Mother Down" bowls the listener over here.

May achieves more when attempting guitar styles that deviate from that of Queen. The melodic instrumental "Last Horizon" pulls away from overdone vocals and heavy guitar, settling into an easier-to-digest May. The same holds true in "Too Much Love Will Kill You," a dark, but moving track originally written for Queen's 1989 album, The Miracle. He also provides a mediocre country tone in "Let Your Heart Rule Your Head," which lets the listener see a lighter side of May.

A simple, crisp acoustic riff breathes through the track "Just One Life." The song pays tribute to a favorite talent and friend of May's, and it turns into a touching look at mortality. The vocal harmonies, this time, really complement May's guitar. Along with the thematic title track, which declares May's change towards independence, "Just One Life" seems to hold the musical worth of the album.

It is ironic that when the composer of "We Will Rock You" sings the same words on this solo album about a decade later, they are within a lullaby. Such was the surprising prelude to Back To The Light. The album collects May's feelings of change and revelation like memoirs of his past five years. His strong feelings pervade in this very personal project. But they, unfortunately, result in some corny lyrics. And with mostly regurgitated May guitar stylings and less-than-perfected musicianship, his experiment leaves him outside the light under which Queen reigned.

Former Queen guitarist Brian May strives for solo success

Hanks takes Philadelphia

By AARON NICODEMUS
Senior Reporter

Philadelphia, with its tired streets and crumbling brownstones, may have forever tarnished its reputation as a classy, upscale and historical city with crime and grime. Yet as Oscar winning director Jonathan Demme ("Silence of the Lambs") was considering sites for his latest offering about a gay lawyer, Philly won out over obvious choices like New York or San Francisco. Demme and his crew finished filming the upcoming film, tentatively titled "Philadelphia," on Feb. 4. Much of the film was shot on location in several areas throughout Center City, including City Hall, Mount Sinai Hospital, University of Pennsylvania's law library and the Schuylkill River.

The Main Line was ignored in filming, however. While the sprawling mansions and rolling scenery would have been perfect sites for a wealthy lawyer's home, it was probably overlooked for its staid conservatism that would have repelled prospective gay tenants. After all, ask yourself how many Villanovans would be comfortable sitting next to a gay student in class, especially one who may be infected with AIDS. "Philadelphia" is the first major studio effort to break down these prejudices through understanding of the disease and its effects on the sufferer and society as a whole.

The film attacks controversy head on. Tom Hanks plays Andrew Beckett, an HIV-infected gay attorney who is fired from his firm when they learn of his infection. After an exhaustive search, he hires Joe Miller, a somewhat sleazy personal injury lawyer (Denzel Washington), who appears in cheesy TV ads and happens to be homophobic. Full of self-importance but sadly lacking in integrity or knowledge, Washington's character is the ignorant American.

Hanks, on the other hand, is a tormented soul who shares his fears with his live-in lover (Antonio Banderas, previously in "The Mambo Kings"). "Philadelphia" appears to be a daring attempt to portray AIDS in a mainstream film. Other supporting cast members include Jason Robards as the head of the law firm which fires Hanks, and Joanne Woodward as Hanks' troubled mother. Julius "Dr. J" Erving makes a cameo appearance at a Sixers basketball game, but as a businessman, not a player.

Do not expect "Philadelphia" to be playing at your local theater any time soon, because it is not due to be released until the fall of next year. No matter, because while there is a possibility that its title may change, the local footage will probably remain solidly intact. Tri-Star Pictures, the producer and financial backer, will have the final word on that.

When the film is released, what can we expect as the reaction to the city which provided its environment? While it may be disconcerting to have Philly linked with homosexuality and AIDS, the positive publicity will far outweigh these short-sighted reservations. After hitting the bottom a few years ago, Philadelphia is slowly crawling its way back to respectability. Most students may consider a trip downtown dangerous or even life threatening, depending on where you go. But there are still plenty of worthwhile reasons to visit the city, like South Street and a good, greasy cheesesteak. Just keep your eyes open, and avoid crime by dressing like the poor student you are.

FAST FORWARD: For all you John Grisham fans out there, the long-awaited movie version of his best selling novel, "The Firm," is due to be released July 2. Starring Tom Cruise as the idealistic young attorney who accepts the incredibly lucrative offer from a small Memphis law firm, "The Firm" borrows from the "Big Brother is watching you" idea of George Orwell's "1984," but now it is Big Business with the watchful eye. Gene Hackman portrays the smooth-talking lawyer who initially entices Cruise. But for those who read the book and found the ending weak, expect changes in the film version.

REWIND: Billy Crystal tried every way he knew how, short of collapsing on his knees and begging, to get a nomination for his performance in "Mr. Saturday Night," now out on video. He does a young comic, a cynical comic, an old comic and a drunk comic, all with skill and humor. In his attempt to show that comedy is no laughing matter, Crystal shines with some truly funny moments. Yet the only nomination for his film went to his co-star, David Paymer, for Best Supporting Actor. It seems Crystal will get to the Oscars the same way he has for the past two years: by hosting it.

Clannad glances at past

By COLEEN KENIREY
Entertainment Editor

Atlantic Records has rereleased Fuaim ("sound" in Gaelic), the 1982 turning point album which established the popularity of the Irish band Clannad. The band is recording a new album to be available later this year, but Fuaim offers a glance back at the roots of their striking sound. They are a group with a past almost as interesting as their musical style.

The name Clannad is derived from the group's original title "an clann as Dobhar," which translates as "family from Dohr." Most of the band's songs, like the name, are in their native language, Gaelic. This factor might turn some Americans away from Clannad, but the music is clearly able to transcend the listeners' insistence on a familiar language structure. It instead focuses on the emotional value instilled in different sounds and can thus be appreciated although the security blanket of language is absent.

A second telling element present in Clannad's name is that of family. The project began 20 years ago as a family unit and has remained so throughout its history, with a few member changes. In the early stages the band consisted of Maire Brennan and her brothers Paul and Ciaran, in addition to their uncles Noel and Padraig Duggan. The relatives decided to form the band after the children joined their father Leo, also a musician, on stage in his pub and he realized their potential, Gaelic renditions of hits by artists such as Donovan, Joni Mitchell and the Beatles revealed the young artists' talents.

Ciaran Brennan adequately summarized Clannad's style in the CD's liner notes stating, "We are a fusion of various styles of music, growing out of a traditional Gaelic root." Definite aspects of Irish folk music are weaved through the sweet guitar strumming, but the songs are also given a contemporary component. The CD's second song, "Mehall Si Lena Glorthai Me," offers the modern touch of subtle electric guitar.

"Bruach Na Carriage Baine" is a soothing instrumental melody akin to new age music. The twisting flute patterns draw the listener in and establish a reflective mood of introspection. This tone, characteristic of most of Clannad's work, intimately involves the listener, as any traditional Irish storyteller would.

All of the tracks have a slight pop-music slant which has enabled Clannad to step to the forefront of Irish music and to enter music charts internationally. The instrumental "Ni La Na Gaoithe La Na Scoilb?" stands out especially as a piece influenced by contemporary musicians. The song contains haunting, jazzy brass touches.

In addition to marking Clannad's initiation to success, Fuaim is one of the two albums which harnessed the talent of Ciaran and Maire's sister Enya. She had joined the band on keyboards and vocals in 1980 and was also featured on Caann U11. This is the same Enya who eventually expanded her solo career to international dimensions and gained acclaim for her vocal mastery. Thus, Fuaim is required listening for the singer's fans, since the album contains vintage Enya vocals. The Clannad influence is prominent in her solo work which expanded on the new age tendencies lurking in some of the band's songs.

Enya is not the only famous collaborator from Clannad's past. On the band's 1986 release, Macalla, Maire Brennan performed a duet with U2's Bono called "In a Lifetime." The song did well on music charts and gave the band some needed publicity.

Another song which enhanced Clannad's notoriety, "Harry's Game," was written as the theme for an Irish television movie. U2 continued their promotion of Clannad by closing their live shows to the sound of "Harry's Game" in 1985. The song also provided the band with an Ivor Novello award (a British Grammy) and recently was used in the 1992 film "Patriot Games."

Clannad offers a sense of history, complemented by a firm musical foothold in the present. These songs do not venture away from the softer edge and the vocals are of the highest caliber. The use of Gaelic adds to the complex and mysterious quality of the melodies and keeps the lyrics firmly planted in Irish tradition. Fuaim delves into the background of a band who deftly tied their country's musical heritage to the modern world and this history lesson is an enchanting one.

valuable knowledge that "marriage can be seen in terms of gain or loss."

This knowledge moves Moll through a whole string of husbands, including an extravagant nobleman, a dreamy sea-captain and a naive banker. Her failure to gain any type of wealth forces her into a boarding house operated by the loveable Mrs. B. This sensible woman manages things with the sense of a shrewd businesswoman. Her little projects, though rather seedy, are run in a way any legitimate business entity would be run, complete with contracts and logs. She is one of the many independent women who dominate this show.

After a successful career as a "lady" and a chance encounter with a masked highwayman which results in the birth of a daughter, Moll ends up marrying plantation-owner, Hubert, who brings her over to America. During the voyage aboard "The Exeter," Moll meets up with the infamous, man-hating pirate, Jennifer Blackburn, and her crew of comical misfits. Jenny is yet another of the strong women who brighten up this play. Her friendship with Moll becomes important in the next Act.

'Moll Flanders' will be showing from March 24 through April 4

At last Moll reaches America, the New World, where she hopes her dream will come true, to have the life she was destined to have. Unfortunately, the truth about her mother comes out, forcing her to return to England penniless and with an empty heart, her daughter and her true-love apparently never to be seen again.

The notorious adventure ties all the loose ends together as Moll descends into the lowest depth she has ever fallen. The Elder Moll takes over the starring role, with the Young Moll narrating. Soon after her arrival in London, Moll finds herself with mother-figure Mrs. B again. This time, Mrs. B is running a thieving group because of financial difficulties. Under Mrs. B's tutelage, Moll is transformed into Moll Flanders, the most notorious theif in all of London. During these criminal times, Moll finds herself wealthy indeed, but in far more desperate plights than she ever suffered in her youth.

All the people from the past come to meet Moll once again at the most surprising times in the final act. The audience is treated to a heart-warming ending that lifts spirits. Perfection is perhaps the only word that could describe how neatly everything falls into place by the last scene.

Super actresses, Angie Dahmer Radosh and Eileen Ward, are in fine form as the Elder and Young Moll respectively. Other memorable performances are provided by David Warner (Cecil), Peter M. Donohue (Jemmy), Carolyn Noone (Mrs. B), Roxanne Rix (Jennifer Blackburn) and Eva Kay Sheets (Sister). Of course, all the wonderful actors and actresses did an admirable job in bringing this musical to life.

This piece is an extraordinary production. It is poignant in some places, raunchy in others and downright dangerous in a few spots. However, it is hilarious all-around and musically-pleasing to the ears. Though the story-line is from the colonial times, the music seems more modern (almost new-age) due to the use of a sampler. "Moll Flanders" is accessible to all audience members, a show worth watching. For a night of non-stop excitement, laughter and complete pleasure, "Moll Flanders" is, hands down, the best work the theatre has done all year. ("Moll Flanders" will be showing Wednesdays through Sundays from March 24 through April 4).

The Samples blend reggae and new age

By REGGIE BEEHNER
Staff Reporter

If modern technology could muster enough wit to capture the feeling of gliding effortlessly along the back roads of Vermont with the wind waltzing through one's hair, the car's engine purring, and sunlight warming one's exposed teeth and "South of the Border" clad torso, it would be a complete waste of time. The Samples have already done it on their new release No Room.

The new album drives the soul toward its furthest extensions. With a wonderful blend of new age/ Celtic/ reggae music, and witty lyrics that put a definite meaning behind the ear candy, the Samples' message is one of the most enjoyable of the decade. The lengthy 14-song CD is filled with no heavy, distorted guitars to keep the party a rockin', but instead relies on beautiful acoustic guitar picking, airy winds and a mellow feel that is slightly reminiscent of a few Sting classics.

This by no means classifies the Samples as a mainstream band. The Boulder, Colo., natives recently left Arista Records, with whom the band's 1990 album was released, and decided against producing "hits" as the label wanted. The Samples then moved to W.A.R. Records, an independent label, who also originated the environment-friendly CD case (made of 100% recycled materials), and released No Room. Since then the band, through aggressive grass-roots marketing from W.A.R. Records and their fans' word of mouth, have grown in popularity considerably.

No Room* cracks through the morning shades and awakens the listener.

The song variety is one of the strong points to the band's new release. "When It's Raining," the band's dreamy opening song, and "Another Disaster" are both musical showcases that resemble a few hits from an unknown Police record. The happy, sunshine-in-your-eyes reggae song "Did You Ever Look So Nice" is one of the band's lighter tracks. "Giants" is the album's dreariest song with its opening line "As I woke this morning/ the sun gone without warning," getting the morbid message across with no delay.

The Samples have unleashed a great album with an observing look at society. No Room cracks through the morning shades and awakens the listener like nothing else can. Perhaps when the music world begins to wake, will the Samples get their just deserts?

Flowers 'Rain' talent down upon new album

By CHRISTOPHER GONNELLI
Staff Reporter

In the three years since their 1990 release, Home, the Irish rock band Hothouse Flowers has spent a majority of their time on the road as an opening act. They have also offered their musical talents by collaborating with other artists. The experiences enjoyed by the band members over the past three years influenced their creative approach to their latest release, Songs From The Rain. The band continued to pursue the live sound of their music, recording a majority of the songs live in the studio.

Guitarist Flancha O' Braonain stated in a press release that they performed the songs live to ensure "that every element of the band was being listened to with equal importance." The band also collaborated with lyricist Will Jennings and the Eurythmics' Dave Stewart contributed on the tracks "This Is It (your soul)" and "An Emotional Time."

On the second track of the CD, the inquisitive "The Tongue," frontman Liam O' Maonlai yearningly cries, "As it gets more complicated/ Simplicity must arise/ So we can follow in this feeling/ And we can keep this song alive." The word "simplicity" defines the musical sound of Songs From The Rain. After the release of their 1988 debut, People, fellow Irish rocker, U2's Bono, labeled the Flowers "a masterpiece of a band."

Rather than rush their work, the band maintained their own schedule and produced the music they wanted to make and not what the critics wanted to hear.

The temptation may have also existed to arm the songs with extensive solos performed by each member in order to prove that each is worthy of such lauded criticism. Rather, with Songs From The Rain, the band produced a CD which is truly beautiful in its simplicity. Behind the emotional and moving vocal style of O' Maonlai is a group of musicians without big egos. One member does not overshadow another. Hothouse Flowers is a united band; they are not individuals within a band.

The songs from the Flowers' spirited third release speak from experience. They are songs of hope, optimism and encouragement. The songs came precisely from what the title suggests; they are Songs From The Rain. They are songs which evolved from pain and suffering. They come from life experiences. Yet, these same songs offer a relief from our troubles. This healing power of music is expressed in the sultry, "An Emotional Time." O' Maonlai sings, "Songs from the rain/ Falling on our faces/ and lifting the pain/ To see us home." Music as a panacea is also present in "Be Good (wholly loving eyes)," in which O' Maonlai sings, "There are answers to the music/ and there are answers in the words/ and if we stopped talking in circles/ We might get closer to the earth."

The songs from the Flowers' spirited third release speak from experience.

The songs argue for a connection among people on the closing track of the CD, "Stand Beside Me," as well as on "Good for You." On "Good For You," O' Maonlai supplies a brilliant and sentimental piano arrangement, as he sings, "I've woken to the sound of sweet dawn music/ Where a hundred thousand songs are sung/ While the earth and ocean changes/ Four thousand million into one." There are songs, such as the Wordsworthian "Thing Of Beauty," which ask the listener to "face up to reality" and recognize that there exists some good in the world. One may simply uncover this good to "the gentle falling of the show."

A few years back, the Hothouse Flowers was what Rolling Stone Magazine called, the "best unsigned band in the world." Bassist Peter O' Toole remembered that when the actual "business" aspect of the music business became too trying on the patience of the band, "It seemed that everything we were doing was in order to go along with a plan that had nothing to do with the magic of making music. We had to get through that." With Songs From The Rain, it is evident that the band conquered that stage. The magical power of this simplistic and emotional release lies in its ability to warmly embrace the listener and to guide them through the troubles of life experiences.

The Irish band Hothouse Flowers brings a live feeling to Songs from the Rain.

VILLANOVA UNIVERSITY SUMMER PROGRAM 1993
FREIBURG, GERMANY
JULY 8-AUGUST 25, 1993

PROGRAM

The purpose of the six-week Villanova/Freiburg Program is to increase proficiency in German, and to immerse students in German life and society.

The Program includes orientation sessions, six weeks of instruction, study tours around Freiburg and a weekend in Berlin. At the end of the program, students have five days of independent travel before returning to the United States.

The academic program is divided into two sessions: Session I for two weeks with Dr. Franz A. Birgel, and a faculty member from Freiburg University; Session II for four weeks at the Internationale Sommerkurse with the faculty from the University of Freiburg. Students may choose six (6) Villanova undergraduate credits from the following list of courses:

• Intensive Intermediate German	GER 1121/GER 1122	6 credits
• Intensive Advanced German	GER 1131/GER 1132	6 credits
• Practical German I and II	GER 1135/GER 1136	6 credits

HOUSING

For the first two weeks, students live in single rooms in a dormitory of the Institute for European Studies (IES) and take classes at the IES building on the Erbprinzenstrasse. Once the Internationale Sommerkurse program begins, students will stay in the University's student dormitory complex and take classes on the main campus.

MEALS

Students may have their meals in the University dining hall, in local restaurants, or they may prepare their own meals in the dormitories.

PROGRAM COSTS

The comprehensive cost of $3,250 includes roundtrip Lufthansa Airline ticket to Frankfurt, transfer to Freiburg, transportation and housing on the Berlin trip, tuition, room and fees. Meals, optional travel, personal expenses, individual travel (during and after the program) and return rail ticket to Frankfurt Airport for the return flight are not included.

Students must contact Dr. Franz Birgel, St. Augustine Center, Room 303, Villanova University, Villanova, PA 19085-1699, (215) 645-4680 for an application and an interview. All non-Villanovan students must also contact Dr. Thomas M. Ricks, Director, Office of International Studies, St. Augustine Center, Room 420, (215) 645-7393.

Maria, Jen, Karine and Gallagher — I have never laughed so hard in my whole life — thanks! Ancona — next time try not to say the P word when the neighbor is within ear shot. Thanks much for the mini-Thanksgiving — my stomach appreciated it. J.G. and I will burn something for you soon, I promise. — Col.

KC — Only 51 days left! Will I ever be able to call FATE my own. I've got that FATE LUST for that FATE MAN for FATE SEX. God, I'm in love! I'd settle for a little LESSP at least. I take that back. O.K. I admit it — a little part of me still yearns for the good 'ol days. I lost — and to a snotrag of all things!

CHICKEN WOMEN — Don't fret girls! We'll just wait for our "Mr. Rights" together — eating Kosher dill midgets, hot wings and artery-clogging blue cheese dressing. Don't forget the really instructional videos!

GREEG MOONEY (A.K.A. FREAK) — A certain frog informed me that you have doubts about my tolerance levels. We'll just have to see about that. Sounds like a challenge to me. — Karen C.

Dear Delts, Eat my stuff! We love our hats! Forever yours, Zetas. P.S. Who won Bud Bowl?

Randy (aka Pin-Up Boy) — Every time we open the refrigerator you give us a thrill. — Love the Hillcrest Girls.

Personals

"Thanks for compliment and reminder . . ." Your birthday won't be missed and trust me you would have your say this time. It would also provide me with a chance to explain myself and all those "weird acts" to satisfaction. With love and renewed hope — MTM.

Rosey ("B_3") — Win or lose, you'll always be number one with the "B's." Love, B_1 and B_2.

Tyrone, Chief, Gomer and Hannibal — Bloop, Bloop, Bloop . . . glad you all can swim!! Mighty, Blondie, and Bashful — get well soon 'cause we miss you!! To each and all — only 42 days 'til Vails. Impress me — "The Big Cheese."

New Novice Women's Crew — As Anne would say, "Follow Sharon . . ." Let's show them what we can do, we've learned from the best (remember those stairs and erg tests!)

Thank You St. Jude — B.F.

Kappa Alpha Theta — Give 'em the finger! Win Greek Week!

Novice Women of VU Crew — You've survived football in the mud, "Bagel Builders" burnout, my massive mood swings, stairs, stairs, and . . . more stairs! Are you sure you want to keep abusing yourself like this?! Just wanted to wish you luck tomorrow. Remember: You've got to climb the mountain if you want to see the other side. Pull hard — "Coach."

Ed and Joe — If you come by again without a house-warming gift, you'll get the hammer! (Squeak, squeak, squeak) — Larisa.

VU Novice Women's Crew — First race, First place!! Kick Butt!!

Arnold Thetas — Aaaarrrhhh! — Barney.

Personals

MONTA: YOU DORK! What were you thinking? How could you deprive us of your presence on Tuesdays? Enough with the guilt . . . We miss you. Hope you're recovered soon. Karen.

61 W. Hillcrest: Thanks for a great 21st B-day — you're the best! Jenn — Liquid Heroin? Where did you get that from? Kitten — YOU HUGGED ME!! Does this mean we have reached a new plateau in our friendship? All I have to say is — three pairs of twins spell bad luck. If you see me hugging people in bars next time, slap me silly. P.S. Brian (Stud Man) — STOP READING THIS — Go find your own personal. — Col.

To My Port Richmond Connection — Let's not fight anymore. I'm sorry I was so volatile but you didn't have to pinch me! All we have is each other at this crazy thing we call The Villanovan. You're the best! — The chain-smoking Floosie.

Fun Bun — It's not bunkum when the bunch of us say we miss your bundle of charm. The bunk has been quiet without you. — Arnold Thetas.

Tom — I'm over him! I'm completely over him! And, for your information, I don't want a man — right now. Not Ever. Well, maybe if you found me Mr. Perfect, but he probably wouldn't be looking for a girlfriend, right now. You know what I want? H — right now. Love, your patient who will miss our Tuesday sessions next year.

Coleen — Here's your darn personal. Beware. I shall be lurking around every corner on April 1. Better watch out or I'll tell the Stalker where you live. Hey, how about we throw heavy blunt objects at Pete next week.

COL — Are we pranksters or what? Now if we can just dodge the enemies we've managed to make . . . Seriously, I'm glad we talked. — Karen.
CHAD — Don't hate us because you're beautiful. We had to do it, man. — Coleen and Karen VILLANOVAN STAFF: Remember — It was all in good fun. If you retaliate, please be kind. — C & K.

Men's tennis beats Queens, loses to Haverford

BY TANYA SHUMAN

In a pair of matches this week, the tennis team went 1-1.

By MICHEL DAVIES
Staff Reporter

Despite the huge storm that hit the East Coast last week, 'Nova tennis was still able to play two matches.

The Cats ventured up the Main Line to Haverford College where they would play a much-improved opponent. The improvement that Haverford had undergone was evident from the outset of the match. 'Nova's No. 1 singles player, junior Tom Boutrous, would be the first to fall victim to the 'Fords, dropping his match 6-0, 6-1. Clearly, Boutrous' loss set the tone for the day, as 'Nova would eventually lose the remaining singles matches without much of a contest.

Having already lost the match by being down 6-0 after singles play, Coach Robert Langran's team still had to come out and finish the doubles portion of the match.

Although Brian Elliot and Mark Mackler gave it all they had at No. 2, it would still not be enough to pull out a victory. Mackler and Elliot were unable to avoid the 'Ford dominance, eventually losing in pro-set play 8-4. It just seemed all too easy for Haverford, as they went on to win all the doubles matches and sweep the match 9-0.

A totally different 'Nova team appeared at Queens College on March 20. Although they could have let themselves get down after such a blowout loss the day before, the Cats showed some of the poise that it will take to contend later in the season.

One of the prime examples of this quality was junior Michael Flaherty. Although he won the first set against his Queens College opponent, Flaherty experienced difficulties in the second. Unable to find the game that was present in the first set, Flaherty would go on to lose the second set handily, 6-2.

Winning the first set and then losing the second leaves a tennis player in a complex state of mind. The player may begin to wonder if the opponent was simply warming up in the first set, and whether the player will find the shots that led him to victory earlier. All this must have been going through the mind of Flaherty as he entered the third set. But all the pressure did not faze him because he won the third and decisive set in first-class fashion, 6-1.

Flaherty would not prove to be the only hero on Saturday. Sophomore Brian Cavalier, who was not even on the singles ladder in preseason, also pulled through for the Cats. Playing at both No. 5 singles and No. 3 doubles, Cavalier showed that it is not only upperclassmen who can lead this team. With the match score tied at four Cavalier knew that it was up to him and his partner to put this one away for 'Nova. And indeed they did, as Cavalier won his singles match 6-1, 6-1, and his doubles match, 6-0, 6-0, carrying 'Nova to its first victory.

This week clearly demonstrated what 'Nova tennis needs — consistency. However, consistency is clearly lacking as shown by the humiliating 9-0 loss, followed by a close 5-4 win. If 'Nova cannot avoid the highs and lows and play steady tennis, they will encounter difficulty when competing in the Big East tournament.

Athlete of the Week

Rick Bontatibus

This week, the Villanovan and the Wildcat Club recognize junior Rick Bontatibus of the men's lacrosse team. The versatile play of Bontatibus spurred the Wildcats on to their first win of the season against Fairfield University. Bontatibus scored two goals and notched six assists for eight points in 'Nova's 19-4 rout over the Stags. The Cats, now 1-3 overall, are led in scoring by Bontatibus, who has five goals, 10 assists, and 15 points.

Goddard one of 'Nova's best

By SEAN KELLY
Staff Reporter

Syracuse University seemed to be the most sensible choice of schools for a high school senior whose potential in cross country and track was irrepressible. That was the best place for Cheri Goddard according to her coaches anyway. Why not be an Orangewoman? The university was close to her Saratoga Springs, NY home and her coaches could have kept a close eye on her progress.

Fortunately, even the respected opinion of Goddard's coaches was not enough to discourage the innocent high school athlete from attending Villanova.

"When I came on my recruiting visit, I knew that this was definitely the place to go," she said.

Goddard's 1989 transition into the college ranks was something she was not sure about during her final year at Saratoga Springs High.

> When I came on my recruiting visit, I knew this was definitely the place to go.
> Cheri Goddard

"In high school, I really didn't think I was good enough to go to Villanova. Just knowing that such good people like Vicki Huber, Sonia [O'Sullivan], and everyone else were here, I knew that I would get better. I would have to improve just training with them. I'm thankful of the smooth transition," said the modest senior.

During her freshman and sophomore years as a Wildcat, Goddard was a member of two NCAA Champion Cross Country teams, a five-time All-American, and a key member of the 1990 world record setting 4x1500 meter relay team, just to name a few. Since then, the now well-known senior's excellence in running has done nothing but improve.

With one more outdoor season remaining in her college career, Goddard has two extremely unique items next to her name. She is one of the few people in the entire country who holds claim to four Cross Country National Championships in addition to her extraordinary 10 All-American titles. The All-American recognitions do not even include the one she will undoubtedly receive at the end of the outdoor track season. As for the cross country victories, Goddard and teammate Nnenna Lynch are the only two people in the history of NCAA women's cross country who can say they have been a member of four straight championship teams.

At this point, as all four championships become more of a reality for her, the Wildcats' 1992 victory remains as one of the senior's most memorable and exhilarating moments in her promising career.

"When we found out, I literally started crying. It was really emotional. That was a big moment," admits Goddard.

There is something special about this young woman. She has presence to her that was probably most recognizable at the celebrated Millrose Games in New York City each year. Goddard, who was unarguably the crowd favorite, became the first Villanova runner in ages to win the mile event.

Her role on the team both as an athlete and as a leader has been critical to the Wildcats since she arrived here as a freshman. In some ways, Goddard carried everyone through a trying winter season in '93. Head Coach Marty Stern admitted that she was the motivating force for the athletes as well as the coaching staff.

With all of her success, the future for Goddard lies in her own hands. She has a strong belief that she owes a few things to herself before she steps away from the higher competitions of her sport. Certainly the 1996 Olympics is an event that she greatly wishes to compete in. Having finished 12th in the semifinals of the United States trials last year, the Atlanta track is definitelly within running distance. No matter what she does after her final collegiate event, though, Cheri Goddard's name will forever be part of the history of Villanova greatness.

VILLANOVA UNIVERSITY SUMMER PROGRAM 1993
ARABIC AND PALESTINIAN STUDIES
BIRZEIT UNIVERSITY INTERNATIONAL SUMMER SCHOOL
JULY 1-AUGUST 22, 1993

The seven-week summer program in Jerusalem and Ramallah will focus on Arabic and Palestinian Studies in Jerusalem and at the Seventh Birzeit University International Summer School.

The program begins with a ten-day Orientation to Jerusalem, Israel and the Occupied West Bank that includes tours to Bethlehem, the Jordan Valley, the Galilee and Tel Aviv. Following the Orientation, the students register for the six-week Birzeit University International Summer School.

PROGRAM

Students choose one of the language courses and one of the courses in Palestinian studies for either 6, 8 or 9 Villanova University undergraduate credits:

• Intensive Basic Standard Arabic	Arb 1112	6 credits
• Intensive Intermediate Standard Arabic	Arb 1121	5 credits
• Colloquial Arabic	Arb 1141	3 credits
• Contemporary Palestinian Society	Soc 1500	3 credits
• The Palestine Question	Psc 6875	3 credits
• Geography of Palestine	Geo 3800	3 credits

LOCATION

During the Orientation, the students stay in Jerusalem for five days, and then tour the Occupied West Bank and Israel for five days. Following the Orientation, the students are housed for six weeks at Birzeit University's residence halls (women stay near the New Campus while the men are housed in the village of Birzeit nearby); the University and halls are approximately twelve miles north of Jerusalem.

HOUSING AND MEALS

Students receive room and breakfast at the hotels during the 10-day Orientation and tour, and room and full board (three meals daily) at Birzeit during the six-week Summer Program.

Big East roundup

their first team handily and their next opponent would prove to be a mere obstacle in the road to the final four. Underestimation can be a team's worst enemy and it proved to be Seton Hall's Waterloo. The Pirates also had problems at point guard where Danny Hurley and Brian Caver split time, neither finding the right rhythm. The end result was a 72-68 W. Kentucky victory.

The St. John's Redmen played their hearts out in their loss. For a team that many people considered to be playing over their heads, the Redmen hung tough. Arkansas, like Utah, held a place among the high teens in the national rankings all year. The teams fought an even match throughout the whole game, but in the end, the Razorbacks pulled away and beat the Redmen, 80-74.

The end result of all this commentary is that the Big East is not really as bad as everyone thinks. Two teams made it out of the first round of the NCAAs, which is truly an accomplishment for most one through five seeds in this tournament of upsets. Three teams are making their pitches for an N.I.T. title.

Many teams, with a little improvement, could become solid contenders next year. Hopefully, Villanova will be among these with the advent of a possible Wallace Age for the Wildcats.

VILLANOVA UNIVERSITY SUMMER PROGRAM 1993
DIJON and PARIS, FRANCE
JULY 2-AUGUST 15, 1993

PROGRAM

The purpose of the Villanova intensive French language summer program is to increase proficiency in French and to introduce selected students to France.

The six-week Program is divided into two sessions: From July 5th to July 30th, all students will enroll in the Cours internationaux d'été at the Université de Bourgogne in Dijon, the medieval capital of the province of Burgundy. From August 2nd to August 13th, the program takes place in Paris. All students will choose one (1) three-credit course from the Dijon program and one (1) three-credit course from the Paris program:

Dijon Program:
• Intermediate French, I/II	Fre 1121 / Fre 1122	3 credits
• Contemporary French Language	Fre 3412-40 / 41	3 credits
• Explication de textes	Fre 2144	3 credits
Paris Program:
• Intermediate French, II	Fre 1121	3 credits
• Contemporary France	Fre 3412-42	3 credits

HOUSING

In Dijon, students are housed at the Cité d'Universitaire with other international students. Students who wish to stay with a French family must apply early. The Cité's facilities include offices, classrooms, lounges, sporting facilities, a theatre, cafe, and a restaurant.

In Paris, students stay at the Hôtel de Jeunes Le Fourcy in the city's center. The facilities include conference rooms, lounge, cafe and restaurant.

MEALS

In Dijon and Paris, students may use cafeterias on campus or restaurants in the area.

PROGRAM COSTS

The comprehensive cost for the six-week program is $3,250. The cost includes the Air France roundtrip ticket, in-country transfer from Paris to Dijon to Paris, tuition, room, some meals, transfers, and the Normandy tour. The cost does not include most meals, optional travel or personal expenses.

* * *

All Villanova students must receive their applications and initial interviews from Dr. Beatrice Waggaman, St. Augustine Center, Room 347/Villanova University/Villanova, PA 19085-1699/(215) 645-4388. Non-Villanova students must also contact Dr. Thomas M. Ricks, Director, Office of International Studies (215) 645-7393.

Stanczak leads baseball by quiet example

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Sports Editor

The road to recovery from an injury is often full of twists and turns and many unforeseen obstacles. It is often a long journey that wears on a person physically and mentally. But if successfully navigated, it can be one of the most rewarding paths traveled in life.

For Jack Stanczak, the 1992 season was filled with promise. He had been selected as the preseason Big East Player of the Year by Baseball America, which also listed him as one of its top 100 prospects.

But his season came to an abrupt halt before it even started. Stanczak suffered a broken wrist that would cause him to miss the entire season. Despite this, he was still selected in the 17th round of the June draft.

"I was operated on halfway through the season," said Stanczak. "I thought I would come back at the end of the season, but I didn't. It was pretty hard mentally."

Stanczak was down, but not out. He succeeded in his rehabilitation and is now ready to complete his comeback with a banner year.

"He's got unlimited potential that he's about to realize," said Head Coach George Bennett. "He's very confident, very determined."

Stanczak will seek to improve on his numbers from his sophomore year, when he batted .343 with 10 homers and 64 RBIs. The senior third baseman and co-captain has plenty of incentive to have his best season yet.

"My main goal for myself is getting signed," said Stanczak. "My goal for the team is to win the Big East, for starters. And if we win that we'd go to the regionals."

As far as the latter is concerned, the Cats are a young team that is relying on its talented but inexperienced pitching staff to make a significant contribution. Stanczak knows he is being counted on to provide leadership to the younger players.

"He's a good person to have around young players," said Bennett. "He brings stability. He's the same on the field and off, and he's not cocky. He's just a good person."

Stanczak prefers to lead by example.

"I try to be confident. I don't really scream and holler that much. It's just quiet confidence," said Stanczak.

Stanczak's confidence can be traced back to high school, where he was a standout performer in both baseball and football at nearby La Salle College High School. Stanczak was the Philadelphia Catholic League MVP in both sports during his senior year. He was also named as the Philadelphia Daily News Player of the Year in Baseball. To top it off, Stanczak was drafted in the fifth round of the 1989 June draft by the Houston Astros.

Stanczak was heavily recruited in both sports, leaving him with a tough decision.

"I thought about trying to play both in college. But it would have taken too much time," said Stanczak.

So instead he went with baseball, and the move has worked out well so far. Stanczak burst on to the scene his freshman year, as he batted .314 with eight homers and 44 RBIs. He also came up big with a team-high seven game-winning hits. All of this helped him to win a spot on Baseball America's 1990 All-Freshman Team.

The following year, 'Nova went 42-13 and advanced to the NCAA East Regional finals before losing to perennial power Miami. The memories of that season are still very vivid to Stanczak, who hopes the Cats can again make a run to the regionals this year.

'Nova holds a 4-5 record so far, as it has lost a couple of games it should have won, according to Stanczak. Because of the weather and poor field conditions, the team has not played since it demolished Rider College 24-7 back on March 11. In that contest, the Cats pounded out a season-high 13 hits.

Stanczak himself is off to a good start. He is batting .393 with a .679 slugging percentage. He leads the team with 12 runs and six extra base hits and is tied for the lead in hits and doubles with 11 and five, respectively.

"Winning the Big East sophomore year and going to the regionals is probably my nicest moment here," said Stanczak.

If the younger players continue to develop and the veterans such as Stanczak have career years, the Cats could again do well in the Big East Tournament and beyond.

If Dan Kusters and the young 'Nova pitchers pull through, the Cats should enjoy a successful season.

Big East in NCAAs, NITs

By BOB TRAVISANO
Assistant Sports Editor

"The best laid plans of mice and men often go awry ... ," as the saying goes. No one would have thought that Seton Hall would have been knocked off by Western Kentucky. Stranger things have happened ... or have they? If things had gone according to plan, the Pirates would have met their only competition in the quarterfinals versus Kentucky. St. John's got just as far, losing to Arkansas, 80-74, in the second round. Go figure. Pitt, just as planned, departed early, with a first round loss to Utah. However, in the "other tournament," a few Big East teams have been making waves.

In the N.I.T. Georgetown, Providence and Boston College have gained berths. As of this writing, Boston College and Providence played each other in the quarterfinals for a chance to be in the final four. Georgetown downed Texas El-Paso for a trip to the quarterfinals to play Miami of Ohio.

This raises a valid question: should the Big East have sent another team to the NCAA tournament? All three teams have basically dominated their competition, with the exception of Providence's one point victory over West Virginia. For example, B.C. blew out an overmatched Rice by a score of 101-68. The N.I.T. is known as the "best of the rest." It showcases the talents of many bubble teams. Many of these teams really should have been in the NCAA Tournament and make valid pitches in defense of this point in the N.I.T. This was never so true as in this year's tourney.

Back to the Big Dance, there are a few observations that need to be made. First off, Pitt would have gone further had they not played the likes of Utah. For a majority of the season the Utes were ranked in the teens nationally. This draw seemed to put the Panthers in a rough predicament from the start.

Seton Hall's first round opponent was a no-name little school, Tennessee St. The Hall put them away by a score of 81-59. It is little wonder that they went into their next round game feeling a little falsely secure. They beat

Lax notches first win of the season

By ED WASIELEWSKI

What a way to break out of a slump.

After losing three consecutive games to nationally-ranked schools, the Villanova men's lacrosse team notched their first win of the season, routing the Fairfield University Stags 19-4.

In a game that was decided early, the Cats scorched the Fairfield nets for six straight goals only 4:10 into the contest. The potent Villanova offense proved too much for the Stags, who are in their first season as a Division I lacrosse team after playing past years as a club team. With a decisive 6-0 advantage, the 'Nova starters and reserves shared playing time with 11 different players getting on the scoreboard.

Leading the way for the Cats, junior Scott Chisholm recorded a hat trick and fellow junior Rick Bontatibus chipped in two goals and six assists. Junior Ian Hinchcliffe also scored twice while a sophomores Kevin Crowley and Patrick Crohar and freshmen Mark Nagle and Mike Vecchio also netted two goals apiece.

Defensively, the Cats received an outstanding effort from senior goalkeeper Brian Kash, who shutdown the Stags, allowing only two goals in three periods. With his five saves, Kash improved his numbers to 48 saves on the season for a .457 save percentage.

In upcoming games, the Villanova lacrosse team takes its act on the road with back-to-back away games at Duke University March 27 and Drexel University March 31. The Cats then head back to the friendly confines of Villanova Stadium for an April 3 matchup against rival St. John's University.

Hopefully, the Cats can use the Fairfield game to build some momentum for the upcoming games and continue to produce victories.

NOTES: Although the season is only four games old, several Cats have already enjoyed considerable success, most notably Scott Chisholm and Rick Bontatibus. The two juniors rank 1-2 on this Villanova team in overall scoring. Bontatibus has earned 15 points, scoring five goals and earning 10 assists. Chisholm leads the team in goals scored with 11, while chipping in two assists as well. Freshman Mark Nagle is second on the team with six goals, tied for third with Patrick Grohar for overall points with seven. Goalie Brian Kash has played over 200 minutes, earning a 16.76 goals against average.

As a team, the Cats have given up considerably more goals then they have scored. 'Nova has scored 44 times with 117 shots on the net, for only a 37.6 percentage while opponents have collectively scored on 62.4 percent of their shots.

Sweet 16 left in NCAAs

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Senior Reporter

Every year there seem to be certain trends that jump out as the NCAAs progress. Since 1988, the biggest trend was seeing Duke in the Final Four. Not this year. Exit Bobby Hurley. Enter Jason Kidd. Not only is there a changing of the guard in this year's tourney, but a change of philosophy.

The latest trend has been hitting the three-point shot, the weapon Cal employed to shoot down the Blue Devils. Teams in this year's tournament either have to defend or shoot it in order to advance. As the Final Four comes into focus this weekend, the schools with backcourts that can deal with the trey will be the ones in New Orleans.

Basically what this trend means is that teams can advance only as far as their guards can take them. Witness Seton Hall. The lack of a legitimate point guard resulted in their loss to Western Kentucky. Besides Hurley, Duke had no one else from the guard position to lead them. Eliminate teams without leadership at the guard position. History says they will not win it all.

Trends aside, the two favorites right now have to be Kentucky and North Carolina. They seem to be on a collision course straight to the finals. But stranger things have happened. In this tournament, what is the likelihood of the two powerhouses reaching the championship? Not good. Count on one to be eliminated by then.

Never before have all the top seeds advanced to the Final Four. That still is a possibility this year, although Michigan and Indiana both survived scares and are ripe to be beaten, especially the Wolverines. But looking at the West Regional, the highest seed left besides Vanderbilt is No. 7 Temple. This gives Michigan what looks like an excellent chance to reach New Orleans.

For Indiana, Louisville and either Kansas or Cal are serious challenges in the Midwest Regional. The Hoosiers are winning without a healthy Alan Henderson but will be severely tested this weekend. Louisville has the nation's leading three-point shooter in Dwayne Morton and a solid supporting cast led by Clifford Rozier. If the Jayhawks advance over Cal in the other game, they will have history on their side in the regional final. KU has won five straight regional finals dating back to 1971.

It is pretty much a foregone conclusion that North Carolina is going to come out of the East Regional according to the experts. The interesting matchup in this regional is Virginia against Cincinnati. Can Virginia handle the suffocating pressure the Bearcats have inflicted on recent victims? If so, a third meeting with the Tar Heels is possible. If not, a UNC-Cincinnati matchup could be a great game.

Saving the best for last, Kentucky is probably the hottest team in the nation right now. But in order to advance, the Wildcats will have to beat two very dangerous ACC teams in Wake Forest and Florida St. to claim the Southeast Regional crown. When they are on, however, those two can beat anyone — including Kentucky.

Whatever the matchup, this weekend is the best for watching the Madness heighten to new levels. As the number of teams dwindles, the stakes and pressure increase. Only the strong survive. The only thing for certain is that four schools will be left standing on their way to New Orleans.

Five seniors lead softball

By TODD LESKANIC
Staff Reporter

It is not often that a coach gets five players who start for all four of their collegiate years. This, however, is exactly what happened to softball Head Coach Maria DiBernardi. For the past four years, seniors Amy Meisinger, Sharon Palmieri, Christine Kolatac, Amy Pawloski and Kim Kilpatrick have been starters on the Villanova softball team. In this, their final season, they are hopeful of putting the team over the top.

Meisinger, a pitcher out of Columbia, Md., has had an outstanding career on the mound as a 'Novan. She holds nine pitching records and for the past three seasons has been, according to Assistant Coach Linda Goss, the "bread and butter" of the team. Last season was no exception as she posted a 13-2 record with a 1.07 E.R.A. For these numbers she earned a place on the All-Big East team and was named an Academic All-American.

> We always lacked the pitching. But this year our pitching and hitting are are strong points. Our keys for success will be to get our freshmen to play well to solidify the left side of the infield.
> Assistant Coach Linda Goss

Palmieri, a catcher and designated hitter out of Lansdale, Pa., is a mainstay in the Cats' lineup. Last season she hit .317 and knocked in 13 runs from the leadoff spot.

"She is probably the best catcher I've ever seen. She's very smart and can handle any pitcher out there," said Goss.

"This team probably has the most ability and determination and I think once we start playing we'll gel to outperform last year's team," said Palmieri.

Kolatac returns this year from a solid .287, 18 RBI showing last year, for which she was named to the All-Big East team. She will start at first base and also will be called on to back up behind the plate. According to Goss, Kolatac is the best first baseman she has ever seen.

> This team probably has the most ability and determination and I think once we start playing we'll get to outperform last year's team.
> Senior Sharon Palmieri

"I think we're going to do good. This is one of the strongest teams since I've been here," said Kolatac.

Pawloski led the team last season with a .318 batting average, for which she was named to the All-Big East Academic Team. Pawloski boasts great defensive skills and a great bat, especially in the clutch. This season she will start in the outfield as she is probably the only natural outfielder on the team.

"We're really optimistic. We have five seniors, three juniors, and the freshmen look good, too. We also have a lot of pitching," said Pawloski.

Kilpatrick, an outfielder and firstbaseman out of Toms River, N.J., appeared in 27 games last year for the Cats and turned in a solid year. This year she will be counted on for senior leadership and to fill a spot in the outfield. Unfortunately, Kilpatrick is injured and will be out for the first four weeks of the season. She will, however, return for the Big East Tournament at the end of April, and could be a key to 'Nova's success.

"We always lacked the pitching. But this year our pitching and hitting are our strong points," said Goss. "Our keys for success will be to get our freshmen to play well to solidify the left side of the infield."

Laxsters lose to Penn, UVM

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Assistant Sports Editor

Throughout the past week, the field at Villanova Stadium was surrounded with a six-foot high snowbank, causing the women's lacrosse games to look more like box lacrosse contests. Unfortunately, the Wildcats could not recapture the promise they showed before the blizzard, as they saw their 1-0 record erode to 1-3. The consecutive losses came in home matchups against Penn, Haverford and Vermont.

The Wildcats "were getting beaten to ground balls," said Head Coach Megan Harlan. "They didn't have as much hustle or as much desire [as they did last week] ... Also, our shooting percentage has gone down, and we've allowed more shots in. We're just having mental lapses."

'Nova hosted the University of Vermont, a consistent national power, on March 22. The game was no contest. It took the Catamounts just over 10 minutes to run up a 3-0 lead before senior tri-captain Ann Magee brought 'Nova out of its funk by netting a goal with 12:54 left in the first half. UVM held a 6-1 lead by the time senior tri-captain Ciara Perrotti netted Villanova's second goal, and the Catamounts took an 8-2 lead into halftime.

Despite the lopsided score, Harlan found a silver lining in her squad's performance.

"We tried something new in playing a zone, and that really worked," said Harlan. "I was really proud of them because they stayed in the game ... They never let up at any point."

The Wildcats' tri-captains went three-for-three in scoring when senior Leigh Ann Leone scored a pair late in the second half. Those were the last goals of the game for the Cats, and UVM went on to win 15-4. More discouraging news came for Villanova when it lost its backup goalie, sophomore Kendra Geoghegan, when she hurt her knee in the second half.

Even more frustrating for 'Nova was its 9-8 loss to Haverford on March 19. This was clearly a winnable game for the Wildcats, as they squandered a 4-3 halftime lead. 'Nova led by as much as 6-4 when Leone crossed in front of the Haverford goal and scored at 24:43. However, the Wildcats allowed the Havs to get right back into the contest. Haverford scored the next four goals, and led 8-6 with 8:41 to go.

> [Penn and Haverford] were most definitely winnable games. We lost those games because we beat ourselves. We didn't play up to our potential.
> Head Coach Megan Harlan

Leone, the Cats' leading scorer with 17 goals, refused to let 'Nova die. While Haverford's eighth goal was still being announced on the public address system, she narrowed Haverford's lead to one with 8:23 remaining in the game. But five minutes later, Haverford buried the Wildcats' hopes of coming back, scoring a ninth insurance goal. A last-ditch 'Nova effort produced only one goal, and the upset was complete.

Once again, Leone was among the Villanova scoring leaders, as she and Perrotti scored three goals apiece.

"Last year [Leone] was second in the nation in goals scored per game," said Harlan. "I anticipate that she'll be right there again in the top three. She's doing just what I thought she'd do."

The Cats began their losing streak when they dropped an 11-9 match to UPenn. Leone's seven goals were not enough to carry 'Nova past the Quakers. Also contributing to the Wildcats' scoring effort were sophomore Heidi Connor with one goal and an assist, and freshman Nicole Nigrelli with one goal and two assists.

"They were most definitely winnable games," said Harlan, referring to the Penn and Haverford contests. "We lost those games because we beat ourselves. We didn't play up to our potential."

In goal, senior Stacey Rozzi has been turning in consistently good efforts, averaging 16.3 saves per game. With Geoghegan injured, the Cats are going to depend upon Rozzi for similar efforts in the upcoming games.

"I think for now [Rozzi] will be a one-person act, and hopefully the need [for a backup] won't arise," said Harlan.

The Cats hope to get back in the win column when they face Georgetown on the road this Sunday. Their next home game will be on April 1 against Drexel.

"[We must improve] the fundamentals," said Harlan. "We need a lot of concentration in terms of passing and catching, going for ground balls, and marking up tight on your man. It's a matter of getting back to basics and perfecting the basics."

Kennedy elected president

By KATE SZUMANSKI

Sophomore Patrick Kennedy was elected Student Government president March 30 in a run-off election. His opponent junior Rosanna Picillo publicly congratulated Kennedy and his running mate junior Kristin Burns after the results were announced.

Over 1,800 students voted in the run-off election. An election committee member said the voting turnout was excellent for a run-off election and attributed the high number of voters to the candidates' effective campaigning.

An exact voting count was not available when the results were announced because the ballot counting machine broke down. The ballots were counted by hand by election committee members and Kennedy was declared the winner. Voting percentages will be available at a later date.

Kozol discusses Savage Inequalities

By JANE PAPACCIO
Assistant News Editor

Author and child rights advocate Jonathan Kozol discussed Savage Inequalities: Children in America's Schools, his best-selling book, March 24 in the Connelly Center Cinema.

The lecture was sponsored by the Social Science Forum and the University Sesquicentennial committee. The University instituted the annual forum lecture in honor of Fritz Nova, a University professor emeritus who taught political science from 1953 to 1985.

Kozol's book criticizes the inequality of the nation's public education system, explaining how the inbalance has largely been caused by the unequal distribution of public funds. He believes that the way to improve all schools is to distribute revenue fairly among the school districts.

Kozol grew up in a rich suburb outside of Boston. He attended Harvard University, was a Rhodes Scholar and studied at Oxford University.

"I felt lost coming back from Europe to the United States. I didn't know what I wanted to do with my life," said Kozol. He never intended to be a teacher, he added.

"The Civil Rights movement of 1964 kept me from returning to graduate school," said Kozol. College students throughout the nation were planning a "Freedom Summer" in Mississippi to stop segregation, he added.

Three of the principal coordinators of the "Freedom Summer" went to Mississippi early to get the plans underway. "Not long after they got there, the three

The University has announced that the 1993 Lindback Award for Outstanding Teaching will be awarded to Dr. J. Porter Tuck, psychology, and Professor Daniel O'Mara, Class of 1962, accountancy, at the 1993 Commencement.

The award is funded through a grant from the Christian R. and Mary F. Lindback Foundation which gives $1,000 to each of the two faculty members chosen annually by the University for distinguished undergraduate teaching, said Dr. Charles Cherry, associate vice president for Academic Affairs.

The Lindback Award recipients are chosen from eight finalists, said Cherry. The five candidates

David R. Cook Chair awarded to Caputo

By KATE SZUMANSKI
News Editor

Dr. John D. Caputo was awarded the David R. Cook Endowed Chair in Philosophy March 30 in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center. This Endowed Chair marks the second in the University's history and the first for the philosophy department.

Faculty and administrators processed into the Villanova Room to the music of the Villanova University Band. Dr. John Immerwahr, chair of the philosophy department, welcomed the congregation to the ceremony. Caputo "exemplifies the phrase teacher-scholar and never sacrifices his commitment to teaching," said Immerwahr. He is an excellent teacher and an academic leader, he said. Immerwahre also thanked Cook for his generosity and commitment to the University.

University President the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., delivered the opening remarks. The Endowed Chair in Philosophy marks the University's "renewed commitment to quality liberal learning," Dobbin said. Open discourse and interaction among disciplines and cross disciplinary learning are key to a liberal education, he said. These first two endowed chairs are just the beginning for the University, he added.

David R. Cook, president of Turkey Hill Minit Markets, recognizes the need for a well-rounded education. "Catholic philosophy should be a part of the Villanova picture," Cook said.

"I wanted to do something nice for Villanova," Cook said. "If you want to be happy for a lifetime, give something to someone else. Hopefully this will motivate other people to do the same," he added.

Cook is a member of the University's Board of Trustees and its Athletic, Student Life and Alumni/Affairs committees, according to the event's program. "In 1992, Cook joined the steering committee of the Villanova Campaign, a five-year capital campaign which will facilitate the objectives of the University's ten-year strategic plan," according to the program.

The Villanova University Pastoral Musicians sang a musical interlude, and Dobbin inaugurated the David R. Cook Endowed Chair in Philosophy.

"As a discipline, Philosophy emphasizes critical reflection on the most basic questions: the existence and nature of God, our relationship to nature, the sources of human knowledge and the search for answers to the ethical questions that underlie every significant human activity," said Dobbin. "Today, philosophy stands at the crossroads of intellectual life, and it continually transcends disciplinary boundaries, seeking integration with other fields in the humanities and the sciences," he said. "This chair will maintain a means to ensure faculty and curriculum excellence so that our students receive the finest education possible," he added.

The Rev. Kail C. Ellis, O.S.A., dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, introduced Caputo to the assembly. Caputo "is recognized for his ability to move easily between the most recent developments in contemporary continental thought and the classical Catholic tradition. The recurrent theme of all of his writing is his commitment to preserving a certain sanctity of existence and resisting totalitarian thought or practice," Ellis said. "He is an exciting and dynamic teacher who has inspired countless students at Villanova," he said.

Caputo delivered the inaugural lecture, affirming the University's commitment to the centrality of a liberal arts education. The University is swiftly assuming a position as one of the major Catholic institutions in the United States, Caputo said.

Caputo discussed post-modernism from a philosophical perspective. "What makes things the same is that they are different," said Caputo. It is better to ask who we are, not what we are, for each of us is something very singular, he said. Caputo stressed the importance of learning to live with dissent and respecting differences.

Dr. Barbara E. Wall, O.P., associate professor of philosophy, delivered the closing prayer, and the ceremony concluded with a recessional.

Abdirahman assesses situation in war-torn Somalia

By JENNIFER MUNDY
Staff Reporter

The Center for Peace and Justice sponsored the lecture "Somalia: Updates from the Field" presented by Mohamed Abdirahman March 25 to commemorate Peace and Justice Week.

Abdirahman was born in Somalia and has lived there for the duration of the civil war. For the past 12 years he has served as the director of the Somalia division of the American Friends Service Committee which is located in Philadelphia. Abdirahman said he is visiting the United States in the hope that he will provide U.S. citizens with a first-hand account of what the situation is in Somalia.

The first part of Abdirahman's lecture was designed to give the audience a better idea of what Somalia was like prior to U.S. military intervention. For 21 years, the nation has been under a militant-dictatorship rule.

There is one political party, said Abdiraham. However, the nation is divided into many different clans. Most members of the different clans agree that they would like to have a multi-party system.

As the clans grew tired of dictatorship rule they began to fight among one another, he said. Eventually, all of the clans came together. The problem worsened, however, because there was no link or umbrella leader, he added.

The clans could have worked the situation out on their own, said Abdiraham. The elders and the intellectual leaders were in the process of coming up with a solution, he added. However, when the people of Somalia heard of Bush's approval of U.S. military intervention in their nation, everything fell apart.

"We were unaware of the strategy of the U.S. military. It was without discussion. They did not ask us what was good for us," said Abdirahman. "The worst night of my life was the night President Bush was with us in Somalia," said Abdirahman. The worst fighting occurred that night, he said.

We were unaware of the strategy of the U.S. military. It was without discussion. They did not ask us what was good for us.
Mohamed Abdirahman

The second part of Abdirahman's lecture dealt with the state of Somalia now that there has been U.S. intervention. Abdirahman posed the question: has there been any improvement? The answer to this question is multi-faceted, he said.

There is great improvement in some areas of Somalia. In the areas where the UNITEF (United Task Force) troops are present there is much more security, he added. "The starvation has become less; however, there is still a lot of malnutrition. Starvation and malnutrition are two entirely different things," said Abdirahman.

Unfortunately, improvement has only been seen around the cities in the southeastern region of the country, said Abdiraham. This is primarily where the troops are stationed. The problems that once plagued these areas have migrated to the countryside. There is now new civil war in places where there was not any before, he added.

From the Somalian perspective, U.S. military intervention has done more harm than good, he said. The American culture is far too different from that of the Somalian culture therefore the Somalis feel that it is difficult for the United States to understand their needs, he added.

The way Somalia was at the time of U.S. intervention was the way of the country; Somalia needed help but not in the form of military assistance, he said. The nation needed to be helped in a way that would fit into their culture. "Don't change it," said Abdirahman, "Assist me in the way that I ask you to."

Students react to Clinton's program

By Press Service

Students reacted favorably to President Clinton's call for a national service program to pay college tuition, although some tempered their enthusiasm with concerns about how the plan would be carried out.

Questions also were raised about the low number of students who would be involved the first year and the cost effectiveness of the plan, which will be introduced to Congress this spring.

"We're not saying that the national service program is a bad idea; it's a fine idea. And Clinton's strong emphasis on serving the common good is a welcome change from the dog-eat-dog ethics of the Reagan-Bush era," read an editorial in the Daily of the University of Washington in Seattle. "But national service isn't, and couldn't possibly be, for everybody."

Clinton, making good on a campaign promise, announced his plan in early March at Rutgers University in New Brunswick, N.J. He called for $7.4 billion to finance the national service corps over the next four years. Students would earn credit for college money by performing public service.

By 1997, there would be approximately 100,000 students involved in the program. An effort will be made this summer to train 1,000 young people for community projects. It is expected to cost $15 million, and Clinton has said he will hold a Youth Service Summit at the end of the project to get feedback from the participants.

Another proposal is to reform the student loan program by allowing college graduates to pay back their loans based on a percentage of their income. Loans would no longer originate from banks or thrifts, but would be managed by a central government agency.

The editorial board at the Daily supported the loan-payback program as a more realistic approach to pay tuition, which is now averaging about $14,000.

"It's basically a recycling of one of Michael Dukakis' better proposals; giving loans to students which are paid back with payroll deductions, the size of which would be based on income," the editorial said. "Dukakis proposed that the deductions continue until retirement; Clinton is thinking 26 years. Either way, the plan would do wonders for the millions of students graduating with large loan debts."

Ryan Ravinsky, a junior at the University of Florida in Gainesville, told the Independent Florida Alligator he supports Clinton's community service plan. "If someone cares enough about their education to apply for financial aid then I don't understand why they can't work for it," Havinkey said.

Another Univesity of Florida student who favors Clinton's plan was Susan Summers, a doctoral candidate in higher education administration. "The debt burden is becoming terrific for higher education," she told the paper. "It's time for relief, and this program bears a lot of thought."

Not all students quoted in the press seemed impressed, Shirley Leung, editor of Princeton University's the Daily Princetonian, expressed indifference in The Chronicle of Higher Education. "A lot of people are involved in community service here, but I'm not sure that a lot of students see it as a viable way to pay for college," she told the national publication. "The rationale here is that we can get high-paying jobs when we graduate."

I want to empower young people and their communities, not empower a new bureaucracy in Washington.
President Clinton

The president of Harvard University gave Clinton stronger support but was still somewhat lukewarm. He told the Harvard Crimson that he agrees with the concept of public service for tuition, but that many details need to be worked out before it can become a viable plan.

"There's an awful lot of hand-tooled, custom tailoring that has to go on," Neil L. Rudenstine told the Crimson. "Fortunately, there are quite a few good programs in place already around the country . . . and I think if the government chooses to build quite a bit on those and go about it in a way of gradually scaling up . . . then it has a good chance of working."

And what of students currently in high school? At least one — Cassie Nylen of Ashfield, Mass. — went public in a big way when she wrote in Newsweek magazine's "My Turn" column of her endorsement. Nylen is a high school senior and wrote that she will be attending Haverford College, in Haverford, Pa., beginning in the fall.

Kozol analyzes conditions in America's public schools disappeared. They were murdered by the Ku Klux Klan," said Kozol.

"This had a devastating effect on me. Boston is a very segregated city. I got on the subway in Boston and rode it all the way to Roxbury, the worst neighborhood," Kozol said. "The 20-minute trip across the city of Boston was the longest and most important trip of my life. It was the only trip from which I never returned," he added.

He became a teacher in the fourth grade of a segregated Roxbury school. "The kids had never had a permanent teacher. I was their 13th teacher in four months. They were broken hearted, defeated and passive. I wished they were angry so they would show some energy," he said.

They are all American children; they all put their hands over their hearts to pledge allegiance to one nation, indivisible. There's irony in indivisible.
Jonathan Kozol

Only one girl showed any emotion — bitterness, he said. "She alone knew they were wronged by the nation and she would not forgive me, as a white man," he added.

The books the children used were old and ruined. "I knew this material wasn't right for children," said Kozol.

He went to the book store and bought a Langston Hughes poetry book and a Robert Frost poetry book. "I bought the two books because I wanted the kids to see the new ones. First, I held up the Hughes book. You could've heard a pin drop. Everyone was sitting on the edge of their chair, staring at the back cover. It was the first time they had ever seen a book written by a black person," he said.

He read the poem "What Happens to a Dream Deferred?" to the class. "When I read that poem, the bitter girl got up, crying, and asked if she could bring the book home to show her mother. The next day, she had the poem memorized, and I was fired from the Boston School system for curriculum deviation," he added.

"Four years ago I decided to see how much, if anything, had changed," he said. "Schools almost everywhere in the United States are still separate and unequal. The most desegregated and equal public schools are in the deep South. The most segregated in New York City," Kozol added.

He gave detailed accounts of the schools he visited. "I traveled through a country that was more segregated than ever but cared less about it. I saw school after school in ruins, much worse than anything in the 60's. I talked to countless children who had lost, or were about to lose, the only thing they ever had — hope," Kozol said.

"East St. Louis is the only all-black city in America. It is like a third world country in the middle of the United States," he said. The sewage system in East St. Louis was 100 years old, and it had just exploded, he said. The high school was filled to the second floor with raw sewage, he said.

"Every inner city in America has a school, usually a segregated one, named after Martin Luther King. I always find that ironic," he added. He spoke to an eighth grade student from East St. Louis. "Her reasoning was so mature and yet, so sad," he said.

"My school is full of sewer water, the doors are chained shut. There are only blacks that go here. Why is it named Martin Luther King? It's a terrible joke on history," said the student.

"Sometimes I come out of these schools and I don't feel like writing, I feel like crying. So many years, so many lives, so little change," Kozol said.

Camden, the fourth poorest small city in America, is spending $4,000 per pupil, said Kozol. Princeton spends $8,000 and Great Neck, N.Y. spends $16,000 per pupil.

"If you want a $4,000-baby go to Camden; you can find an $8,000 one in Princeton. If you want a baby that America really values, go to Great Neck for a $16,000 one. They are all American children; they all put their hands over their hearts to pledge allegiance to one nation, indivisible. There's irony in indivisible," said Kozol.

"The injuries inflicted on some Americans are directly related to the victories of others," said Kozol.

Schools almost everywhere in the United States are still separate and unequal.
Jonathan Kozol

Savage Inequalities exposes shocking disparities in school funding, school resources and the outcome of students' lives.

"These children have done nothing wrong. They have committed no crime. They are too young to have offended us in any way at all," Kozol said.

The devastated condition of our public schools and of the children who pass through them remains a challenge to conservatives and liberals alike, Kozol said. "This is absolute evil; a just society would not permit this. It must be changed," added Kozol.

Greek Week fosters panhellenic unity

By KATHLEEN COONEY
Assistant News Editor

The week of March 27 to April 3 marks Greek Week. The purpose of Greek Week is "to allow all the Greeks on the campus to come together," said Gary Bonas, associate director of student activities.

Each chapter usually only associates with members of their own fraternity or sorority, or with another chapter with which they are participating in an event. Greek Week gives campus fraternities and sororities an opportunity to interact with each other, said Bonas.

Greek Week events include basketball, arm wrestling, football, relays, college bowl, an obstacle course, skits, chariot race, tug of war and softball. Each chapter chooses the best people for each event, said Bonas. Then the rest of the fraternity or sorority attends the event to cheer on their team, he added.

Each chapter has a can to raise money for the Special Olympics. All chapters are supposed to raise at least twenty dollars each, said Bonas. Cans are located in the Corner Grille in Dougherty Hall.

Junior Chris Nichols of the Interfraternity Council (IFC) said there have been some changes this year. A ruling body has been set up to oversee the chair and the committee. Also, this year the referees are football and baseball players so that decisions are unbiased, Nichols said.

At the end of Greek Week there will be an Easter egg hunt for the children of the faculty, staff and the surrounding community, said Bonas. It will be held April 3 on the lawn in front of the chapel.

Representatives from each chapter hide the 2,000 eggs and 300 to 400 children look for them, Bonas said. The children can win chocolate bunnies when they find special eggs, he added.

Sesquicentennial Minutes

Everyday Life at Old Villanova

When measured against today's standards and expectations, the daily lives of early Villanovans appear rigid and lacking in creature comforts. Until the early 20th century, for example, students slept in open rooms, where there was little privacy or space. Heat came from coal and wood stoves, which in 1874 gave way to coal-fired furnaces and steam radiators. It was also in 1874 that gas lights first appeared on campus, replacing the candles and oil lamps which had provided illumination before that time. The first electric lights came in 1896, superceding gas altogether within several years.

The earliest bathing facilities were quite crude in comparison to what students have enjoyed in recent decades. In 1843, the year the college opened, students washed themselves every morning in an old, unheated carriage house, fitted up with a wooden trough which held several wash basins. The water came from a well about 100 feet away. There were no showers or bathtubs — and there would be none for many years to come.

For their most basic needs students had to use an outdoor privy, known in local parlance as the "chateau," a bit of Villanova slang which survived well into the 20th century as a euphemism for the bathroom. According to a persistent oral tradition the term was brought to Villanova by Augustinians who had studied in Belgium or France.

In the 1850s students arose at 5:30 a.m. and attended mass at 6:30 p.m. before eating breakfast. There were prayers at noon and again in the evening, with lights out at 9 p.m. Students had to remain silent in the dining room, study hall, dormitory and wash room. And as late as the 1890s they could not go walking off campus unless accompanied by one of the perfects.

Breakfast in the 1850s consisted of milk, coffee, tea, bread, molasses and fried potatoes. For the noonday meal the students had bread and molasses and sometimes pie or pudding for dessert. At night the typical fare was mutton or pork, served with potatoes and gravy. They appear to have had few green vegetables, which were available only the summer months, and most assuredly did not worry about fat or cholesterol in the diet.

Throughout the 19th century students seem to have worn suits and ties (or cravats, as neck wear was then called). During the first decade of the present century the juniors and seniors had to wear academic caps and gowns around campus on a daily basis, as did the faculty.

From the opening of the college in 1843 until well after World War I, most students arrived at Villanova by train. Beginning in 1872, they also went down to the post office in the train station for their mail. Shortly after 1900 the Philadelphia and Western interurban rail line opened just south of Lancaster Pike, connecting Villanova directly with West Philadelphia and creating another much used transportation facility for students.

Those Villanovans who now have automobiles would find the inflexibility of rail schedules and destinations a major nuisance. The rigid rules, monotonous food and lack of hot and cold running water at the college would be downright intolerable. But for the students at old Villanova, such conditions were part of everyday life.

Graduate focuses on gender equality in the workplace

By JENNIFER TRZASKA
Staff Reporter

The University sponsored the third in a series of lectures on women in the work place March 29. Dr. Barbara Wall, director of Women's Studies program, explained that the lecture series is coordinated with a seminar that is offered to Women's Studies minors in the spring.

Marina Tsatalis, the guest lecturer for the evening, is a recent alumna of the University and graduate of Harvard Law School. She is an associate in a law firm in Philadelphia and specializes in labor law.

Tsatalis chose this field of law because "the law is always changing in labor law, for what may be discrimination this year may not have been last year." Labor law is very involved with women in the work place because it deals with such things as sexual discrimination and sexual harassment, she said.

Many people believe that sexual discrimination has subsided on the job, but that is not so, said Tsatalis. "It's not that it does not exist, it's just more subtle and disguised. Employers have become more clever to protect themselves against discrimination," she said.

Sexual discrimination seemed to begin in the 19th century with the case Bradwell vs. Illinois, where a woman was prohibited from becoming a lawyer on the basis of her sex by both the Illinois and U.S. Supreme Court.

There are many subtle ways in which sexual discrimination is implemented, such as height or weight requirements, or a set number of years experience in a field in which women have just entered, she added.

Fetal protection policies are enforced to guard fetuses against toxic chemicals which may be encountered in the work place. Tsatalis said these policies often "exclude fertile women from the work place." Surprisingly, these policies do not exist in "pink collar" jobs — such as beauty shops, dry cleaning establishments or the nursing field — where women dominate the positions. There are many chemicals that can be encountered here as well, said Tsatalis.

Unwelcome advances are the core of sexual harassment.

Marina Tsatalis

Sexual harassment, which is a very popular topic in today's society, is also a form of sexual discrimination, said Tsatalis. There are two forms of sexual discrimination — one in which the woman is promised something, such as a promotion or a raise, and one which creates a hostile and intimidating environment, she added.

"The unwelcome advances are the core of sexual harassment," said Tsatalis. Offensive language and visual displays are also considered to be sexual discrimination, she said.

President Clinton passed the Family and Medical Leave Act which states that eligible employees are entitled to a 12-week leave due to adoption, child birth and serious ailments.

Ali discusses homelessness problem

By DANA BOGACKI
Staff Reporter

Students Against Sexual Stereotyping (SASS) and the Villanova Committee for the Philadelphia Homeless co-sponsored "Homelessness and the Takeover Movement," a film presentation and lecture delivered March 25 in the Belle Air Terrace of Connelly Center.

There is power in numbers and today there is an army of homeless.

Habeebah Ali of the Dignity Housing Corporation

Habeebah Ali of the Dignity Housing Corporation introduced the film "Takeover," which analyzed the national movement of homeless people who fought to takeover abandoned houses, now owned by the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), and place homeless families and adults in these homes.

Ali, a mother of four, who was once homeless herself, lived in a shelter with her children and now lives in house taken by Dignity, the local organization responsible for taking over houses in the Philadelphia area. A group of over 300 homeless people from New York City marched by foot to Washington, D.C., four years ago to question HUD about the use of profits made from repossessed, abandoned houses, said Ali. The marchers also demanded more assistance for the homeless. As a result of this protest, the head of HUD at the time, Jack Kemp, issued a letter promising 10 percent of the department's repossessed houses or profits from these properties to aid the homeless, said Ali.

After seeing that HUD had not fulfilled its promise, the takeovers began, said Ali. Groups in eight cities, including New York City, Philadelphia, Minneapolis, Detroit, Los Angeles, Tucson, Oakland and Chicago, participated in takeovers, she said.

It [homelessness] is something most affluent college students don't ever see.

Habeebah Ali of the Dignity Housing Corporation

In addition to discussing the movie, Ali also told of her own homeless experience in what she called "real America." She described her time in a women's shelter as "humiliating but spiritual." She realized how widespread and important the problem is today. "There is power in numbers and today there is an army of homeless," she added.

"It [homelessness] is something most affluent college students don't ever see," said Ali. She encouraged students "to take their education and use it to make a difference" because homelessness can affect anyone.

Ali added that as a result of the homeless groups' efforts, HUD now recognizes organizations such as Dignity Housing Corporation and provides 70 percent aid for about 134 families living in takeover houses, but emphasized that there are still 15,000 to 18,000 homeless people and over 20,000 abandoned properties in the Philadelphia area alone.

Cult activity surfaces

By KATE SZUMANSKI
News Editor

The Greater Philadelphia Church of Christ, an alleged cult group, re-emerged two to three weeks ago and is targeting Rosemont College students, said the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of Students. This is definitely the same group that recruited members on campus last year, said Stack.

"Cult activity is not primarily here [at the University], but a suspected member of this group does frequent the pool room in Connelly Center," Stack said. "It is important this information reaches students, especially those who are new members of the Villanova community," he added.

"This group has at least two non-Rosemonters coming on to campus [Rosemont College] to entice unsuspecting students to attend 'Bible Study,' and one or possibly two Rosemont students are actively recruiting," according to a letter sent to the Rosemont community.

The group members typically approach students who appear alone or vulnerable and offer them friendship, according to the letter. "Groups of this nature are very sophisticated, using highly effective psychological techniques to seduce recruits into joining them. Once a person shows any interest the recruiter monopolizes their free time with stronger enticements to join the group," according to the letter.

According to Rosemont College officials, the group's "approaches are destructive of truly authentic religious experiences and a violation of the principle of religious freedom."

Importance of recognizing child abuse stressed by family law attorneys

By MELISSA LEE
Staff Reporter

The Villanova School of Law Family Law Society sponsored a symposium on child abuse March 29 in Garey Hall.

Panel members included Cheryl Young, Esq., family law attorney from a firm in Norristown, Pa., and co-chair of the Montgomery County Bar Association Family Law Section Custody Committee; Richard Spargo, case worker with Children and Youth Services; Bruce Mapes, Ph.D., clinical psychologist from Paoli Memorial Hospital, consultant to Chester County Juvenile Court and member of the Chester County Neuropsychological Associates; and Thomas Egan, Esq., district attorney for Montgomery County and captain of the sex crimes team in the district attorney's office.

The moderator was Donald N. Bersoff, JD, Ph.D., director of the law and psychology program and law professor at the University's School of Law.

Prior to the actual discussion, information pertaining to the terms and laws was presented. The term "abused child," as taken from child protective service law, refers to a child under 18 years of age who exhibits evidence of serious physical or mental history not explained by the available medical history as being accidental, sexual abuse, or serious physical neglect. Injury, abuse or neglect caused by abusive acts, neglect by the child's parents or by a person responsible for the child's welfare are characteristic of an abused child.

The four types of child abuse were defined as physical abuse, sexual abuse, mental or emotional abuse or serious physical neglect.

The panel members stressed the importance of reporting any suspected abuse and discussed the processes of evaluation and court proceedings, both criminal and civil.

There is no typical family, no profile of an abuser or a victim. Child abuse crosses all social, economic and cultural levels.

Richard Spargo, case worker with Children and Youth services

"There is no typical family, no profile of an abuser or a victim. Child abuse crosses all social, economic and cultural levels," said Spargo. Abuse cases may be referred by schools, "usually to Child-Line, the statewide hotline, or to their local municipalities," said Egan.

According to Young, lawyers' involvements usually begin with divorce or custody proceedings. Young said that a different counsel is provided for the parents and the children involved in the custody cases.

Each panel member was given an opportunity to discuss proper tactics of reporting and examining cases of suspected abuse. Pre-trial arrangements, the trial itself and post-trial activities were addressed.

All panel members unanimously agreed to improve public education and increase awareness of the signs of child abuse. The panel also believes the legal process needs to proceed quicker with greater skilled involvement.

O'Mara then joined the faculty of the University in the accounting department and was named as the chair of accountancy two years later.

"I was delighted to hear that I had won," said O'Mara. "I was particularly pleased because as chairman of the department you teach a reduced course load and do not come in contact with as many students. I was pleased that enough students who had been exposed to me voted for me."

"It's easy to get an award when you teach students like the ones here at Villanova. I find the students to be very receptive. They make the classroom a very enjoyable place to teach," added O'Mara.

Several University communication arts students delivered a presentation entitled, "Pro Social Behaviors in Thirty Years of Family Sitcoms," at the 15th "Annual Conference and Luncheon with the Broadcasters," sponsored by Citizens Action for Better Television (CABTV) March 18, at Williamson's restaurant atop the GSB Building, Bala Cynwyd.

The presentation was sponsored by Dr. Teresa A. Rance, professor of communication arts. Dr. Benedict A. Paparella, professor of philosophy and a member of the board of directors of CABTV, sponsored Lisa Teevan and Ann Hammer, communication arts students. Students from Cabrini and Ursinus College also gave presentations.

Dr. George Gerbner, dean emeritus of the Annenberg School of Communications and founding president of the Cultural Environment Movement, gave the principal address in which he implored "parents, professionals and other interested citizens to participate in making decisions that shape the mainstream of our common cultural environment."

Citizens Action for Better Television was founded in Philadelphia in 1978 by civic leaders and other individuals concerned about the quality of family television programming.

Nursing College celebrates 40 years of excellence

Press Release

The Villanova University College of Nursing is celebrating its 40th anniversary. The College, the first collegiate nursing program under Catholic auspices in Pennsylvania, is the largest nursing program in the state within a private institution.

Nursing at Villanova actually began in 1932, when the University began offering college level courses for diploma-prepared registered nurses.

In 1953, the first full-time undergraduates were admitted to the newly developed baccalaureate program. These students, the first full-time female undergraduates, inititated coeducation at Villanova.

Sr. M. Alma Lawler, CRSM, and Sr. M. Margarella O'Neill, OSF, were the first co-directors of the nursing program. Over the years, the College has grown and developed and now offers undergraduate, graduate and continuing education programs. Currently, approximately 450 undergraduate and 200 graduate students are enrolled in the college.

Dean M. Louise Fitzpatrick, Ed.D., F.A.A.N., said, "The accomplishments of our alumni, students and faculty have contributed to our reputation of excellence."

Distinguished alumni include a college president, national and international nursing faculty, researchers and administrators. A majority of the faculty are doctorally prepared and many hold leadership positions in community, regional and national professional organizations.

Students have received a number of prestigious scholarships and fellowships and have been extremely active in nursing student professional organizations. In 1988-89, Cindy Rich Schmus, Class of 1989, was elected president of the National Student Nurses' Association.

Menu alternatives available in Grille

By KAREN ABBOTT
Staff Reporter

The Corner Grille, located across from the Day Hop in Dougherty Hall, had its "soft opening" March 9. Staff and students were randomly invited to be the first to experience the new diner. The grand opening which was open to all took place the following day.

The idea for the Corner Grille came from Dining Services' general manager Tim Dietzler, said Joanna Findeison, unit manager. "Tim wanted to offer another option to students on the meal plan, as well as to cash customers," said Findeison.

Findeison expressed surprise at the immediate success of the Grille. "We expected to do well, but not this well. The numbers far exceed our expectations. The Grille is definitely here to stay," Findeison said.

Student response toward the food has been positive.

"I am happy that it is over with and am elated that we've won," said Kennedy. "We are ready to begin work and will go through an orientation process with Ken Batchelor [Student Government president] and Kathy Breen [Student Government vice president]," he said.

"I am shocked that we've won," said Burns. "It doesn't feel real," she added.

"We plan on scheduling meetings with University administrators soon," said Kennedy. Items on Kennedy's and Burns' agenda receiving top priority include campus recycling, a 24-hour study lounge, a campus night club and a permanent shuttle bus service.

Hasty condemnation complicates issues

Within the past week, since on-campus housing notifications were sent out, there has been a strong undercurrent of discontent on campus. Can we really say we are surprised? It seems students have been grumbling about Villanova housing since the first dorm was erected. Currently, the majority of gripes are coming from outraged rising sophomores who failed to receive their desired placements in either Sheehan or Sullivan halls.

What is surprising is the bitterness with which students have rushed to blame the University for their plight. Before seeking a logical explanation, before even consulting other students to find out if their situation was unique, students assumed the University was at fault and complained resentfully about — as one student christened it — "the V.U. screw."

After contacting the Office of Residence Life, we discovered that much of the student animosity was unfounded. According to Dan Remley of Residence Life, the percentage of rooms set aside for freshmen in Sullivan and Sheehan next year has not changed. The reason rising sophomores failed to obtain rooms in these dorms is due to excessive numbers of upperclassmen remaining on campus next year.

There was no plot, policy change, or scheme to dissolve Quad life, as had been rumored among discontented students.. Perhaps the Office of Residence Life could have made it more obvious that lottery numbers, which would have secured students a room in the Quad dorms in the past, might not work this year. The fact remains that the students' premature assumptions and irate reactions immediately cast the administration in the role of the enemy. If, instead of seeking conflict and quickly condemning, we sought to find our answers through open communications, perhaps issues at Villanova would not be so complex.

Students hold power to critique professors

It is important to recognize the outstanding achievements of professors in the classroom. It is even more important that these professors be chosen by those who know their merits and their faults the best. Students.

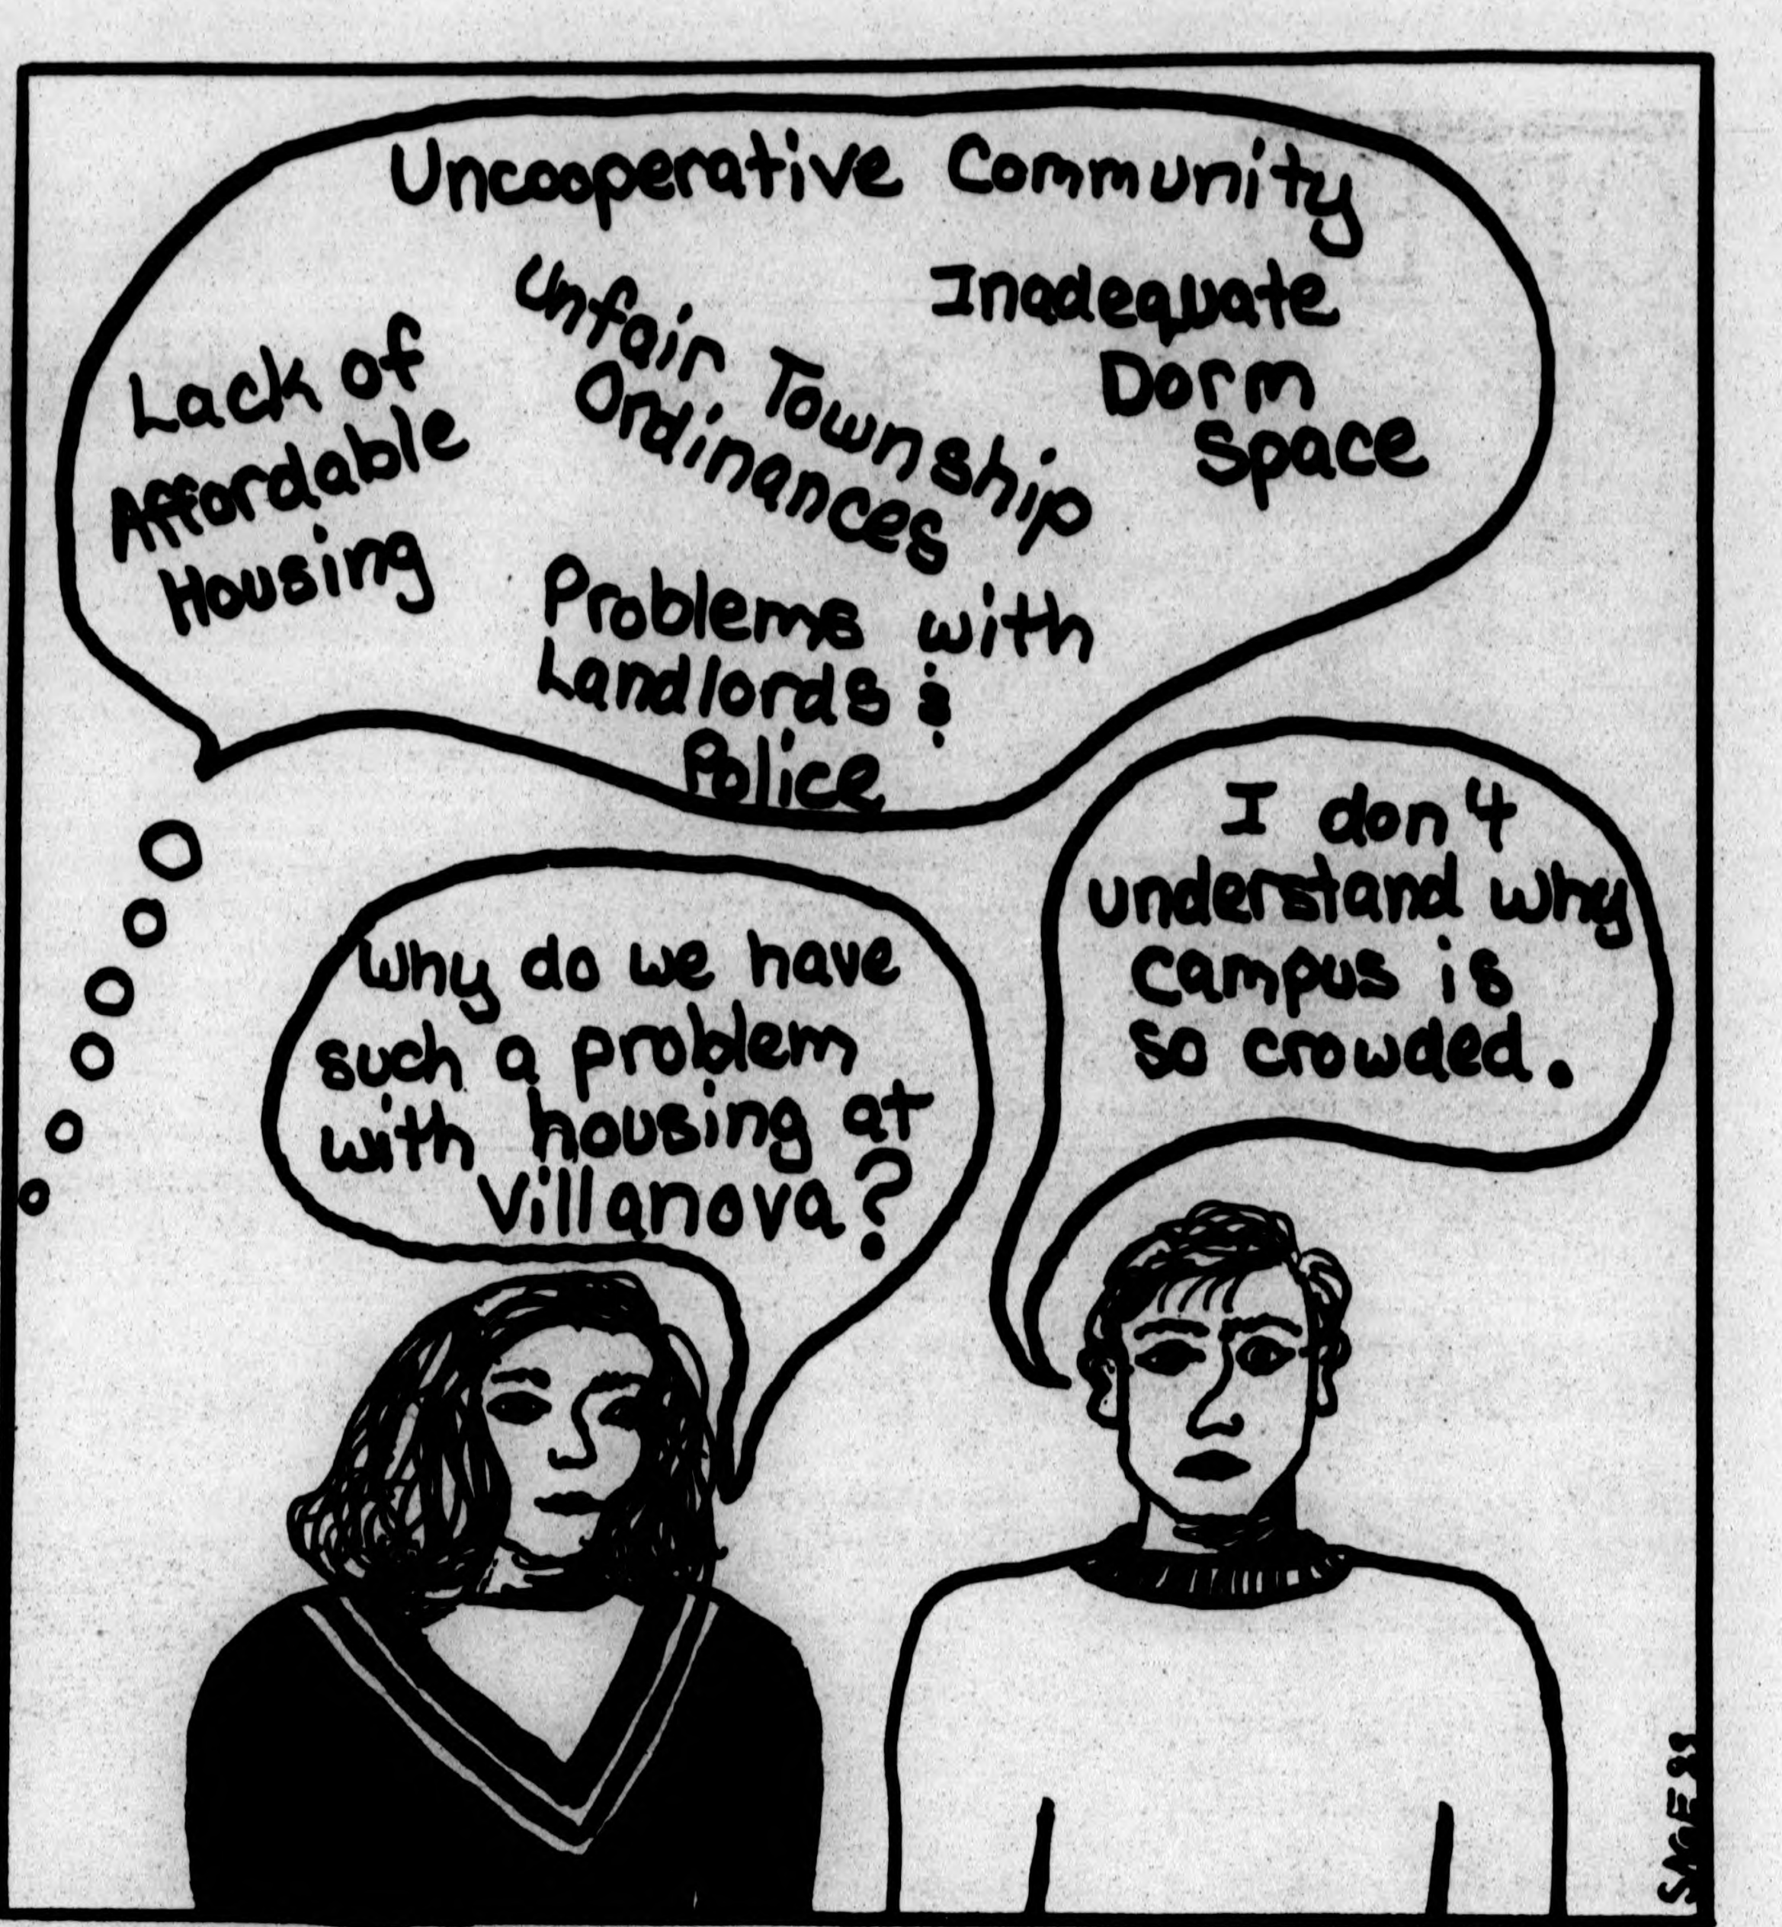
The University has announced that the 1993 Lindback Award for Outstanding Teaching will be awarded to Dr. J. Porter Tuck, psychology, and Dr. Daniel O'Mara, accountancy. These professors were chosen by students, the students who see and listen to these professors on a daily basis.

It's true. Students do have some say at Villanova. It is our responsibility to make sure professors who deserve recognition and praise receive it. However, our responsibility does not end there.

It is also our duty to recognize poor teaching ability in the classroom. We have all experienced bad teaching at one time or another. If you have a professor who is not teaching well, you must let the administration know. The administration is unaware of much that goes on in the classroom, and we are the only ones that can tell them.

However, we are not talking about a teacher that is simply hard or tough. We are not talking about a teacher that you don't like because he or she made you write a 20-page paper. We want teachers who will challenge and guide us. But, we can all recognize when this is not being done in a class.

Villanova is known for its academic excellence, and we cannot let that reputation be blemished. It is our responsibility to make sure that the quality of education we are paying for equals the quality of education we are receiving.



Uncooperative Community
Lack of Affordable Housing
Unfair Township Ordinances
Inadequate Dorm Space
Problems with Landlords & Police
Why do we have such a problem with housing at Villanova?
I don't understand why campus is so crowded.

Response proves shuttle's success

To the Editor:

We would like to thank every student who used the Wildcat Shuttle the past three weekends. Also, we want to thank all of the student drivers and the students who stayed in the command center.

The trial period, which covered the weekends of March 12, 19 and 26 was a terrific success. We kept track of how many students used the Wildcat Shuttle each night of the trial period. The log sheets show that approximately 2,500 students used the shuttle, which is an average of 500 a night. This shows those of us who ran the shuttle that the idea was a good one.

> The more support you continue to show, the better the case we have and the easier it will be for us to secure the shuttle for you next year.

We are also happy to say that there were no problems with any students on any of the nights. This is particularly good, since it makes our case even stronger when we present it to the administration. We can prove that there is a genuine need for this program to be implemented on a permanent basis. In addition, we also showed that we are mature enough to realize that if we want something bad enough, we can't abuse the privilege.

The next step is to present our case to the administration. We in Student Government hope to have the Wildcat Shuttle implemented on a permanent basis for the beginning of school in the fall.

We encourage all students to continue to show your support for the shuttle. We ask every student who is interested in seeing the shuttle start up again next year to write a letter to the administration, stating why you feel the Wildcat Shuttle should remain. The letters can be dropped off in the Student Government office, which is on the second floor of Dougherty Hall, room 204.

The more support you continue to show, the better the case we have and the easier it will be for us to secure the shuttle for you next year.

Again, thanks to all the students who used the Wildcat Shuttle. Thank you for using it frequently and wisely.

Senator's terminology indicates ignorance

To the Editor:

This letter is in response to Kevin Haggerty's reference to African-Americans as "colored people" during the electoral debates. This deliberate derogatory remark made by the newly elected arts senator is inexcusable and will prove to be problematic for him in the future. Mr. Haggerty was, astonishingly, elected and has now taken on the responsibility of the new arts senator. His job consists of listening to, representing and leading his fellow students in the arts school. How will he effectively accomplish this when he doesn't even know who he is representing? Mr. Haggerty, you are representing African-Americans in the arts school, not "colored people." I think it is unfortunate that you are representing anyone at all. How will you understand their needs and equally represent them when you don't know who they are?

Villanova has taken a step back (probably 40 or 50 years), rather than a positive step forward by electing Mr. Haggerty. Before he had even accomplished anything in office, he has already proven to be an inadaquate leader at Villanova. The strength of this University has been its promotion of its diversity in a positive manner. How can Villanova continue on this track if "officials" such as Mr. Haggerty are elected? There were other more qualified candidates running for arts senator who have deep concerns for representing all of Villanova, not just a majority or a minority. I propose that Mr. Haggerty be impeached and a re-election take place for the benefit of Villanova as a whole.

OP-ED

Modern day conservatives and liberals are not so distinct

By ELLEN GOODMAN

I am just off the plane when my welcoming and perhaps warning committee offers me a description of their hometown. "Well, first of all, our town is really conservative."

This one-sentence briefing is given confidentially, F.Y.I. The three greeters are like-minded women who are happy in their place and yet regard themselves as exceptions to its political rule. They agree, in unison, that conservatism is the rule.

But by this morning, I have become attuned to such political proclamations. I have spent the past week in middle-sized cities in middle America. In Michigan, Indiana, Kentucky.

At each stop, invariably, I have been told the same thing: "This city is really conservative." It is uttered in a tone that is one part pride and two parts caution — and all-over conviction.

> At times it still seems that many people whose politics went into the deep freezer in the '80s have trouble believing in a thaw.

I hear these words Monday from a woman who runs a shelter for battered women and their children. Once such a shelter would have been suspect as a feminist plot to subvert the family. This night a good part of the town's establishment has come out to support the shelter. But this is a conservative place.

I hear them Tuesday from another woman who runs a YWCA using both her social conscience and her carefulness. Her community has come in full force this day to give awards to local women whose work would have once been considered radical. But this is a conservative place.

I hear them Wednesday as well from a man whose town is hosting a conference on families and children that does not in any way limit itself to the old pro-family agenda. But this too, he assures me, is really a conservative place.

As an outsider, in each town for only a day or two, I can't dispute the lifelong expertise of these natives. Indeed, there is more than enough evidence in each place of people who value tradition, long for stability and are uneasy with neighbors who shake the boat. As for social conservatism, one newspaper editor tells me about the hundreds of cancelled subscriptions that came after a Valentine's Day piece on relationships that included a gay couple.

But I have heard this phrase — "this town is really conservative" — too often in the past year, in too many places, in too many unexpected and even inappropriate circumstances. I have heard it uttered again and again by people who consider themselves exceptions. And now I wonder.

Words like "liberal" and "conservative" don't mean as much anymore, especially when we are talking about women, men and families. Is it liberal or conservative to be appalled at Tailhook, in favor of Head Start, sick of violence in the movies and worried about teen-age mothers in the community?

Yet at the same time, people who are concerned about the women's movement, for both themselves and their children, will often tell me that feminism is a no-no, a suspect word in their town's vocabulary. Men whose own lives and marriages are changing will say and believe that they are unique in their neighborhoods.

Could these local self-images lag behind reality? Could this time warp, in turn, undermine the people who see themselves at a vulnerable cutting edge instead of in a mainstream?

In many polite and careful places, it seems, we deal with it — change — by not talking about it. As one or two or three "exceptions," we may never find strength in numbers.

I suppose that this political reticence is a legacy of the years between 1980 and 1992. First we learned that the country was more traditional than many of us believed. Then we became convinced that the country was more conservative than it is.

In theory the Clarence Thomas/Anita Hill hearings ended the long backlash against women. In theory the election of Bill Clinton brought change back into fashion.

But the belief in change is as news as the administration. At times it still seems that many people whose politics went into the deep freezer in the '80s have trouble believing in a thaw.

They move ahead with the speed and confidence of runners looking over their shoulders all the time. They talk as fluently as speakers worrying that they will stutter on an L-word.

So, in my travels through middle-sized towns in middle America, people still believe their town is "really conservative." What I hear, however, may be a quiet, if not silent, majority for change.

Despite advances, racism still exists

To the Editor:

The things that I see and hear around this campus truly never cease to amaze me. A prime example of this is a comment made by a friend and hallmate of mine during one of our usual breakfast conversations. The conversation had turned toward the merits of a certain well known comedian, who happens to be black, and each of us who were present were throwing out our opinions of his work. The entire discussion seemed innocent enough until one of my hallmates used the word "nigger" as a means of describing this entertainer.

The conversation came to an abrupt halt. Everyone turned to each other with looks of shock and dismay, not knowing what to say. When I told this girl that what she had said was horrible, she simple justified her remark by maintaining that she uses the word very infrequently but that it was the only word she felt would accurately describe this celebrity.

Maybe I'm just unbearably naive, but I really thought that society had come a long way in 30 years. After all, schools are no longer segregated, blacks and whites are no longer expected to use different drinking fountains, and it's been a long time since anyone was forced to sit at the back of the bus because of the color of their skin.

Acts of racism may not be as blatant as they were 30 years ago but such acts still occur in society everyday, and although these actions may not compare in size or magnitude to the recent riots in Los Angeles they are nonetheless as destructive and detrimental to society. How can we as a nation claim to have made greater strides toward respecting the civil rights of all men and women regardless of race, when there are still people exhibiting the mindset of my unbelievably ignorant breakfast companion?

I know that we live in an imperfect world and that racism and prejudice are two very big reasons for this, but for some reason I thought we had really gotten past the point when someone's merit, personal worth or character was equated with their race. Then again, I never thought I'd be sitting in the Day Hop on a rainy Tuesday morning listening to someone of my generation describing another human being as a "nigger."

Society of St. Augustine questions morality of our society

By THORA FORIZS

The Society of St. Augustine has been established due to a growing concern that the possibility of making the world a better place is disappearing. As a result of increasing ignorance and anti-intellectualism popularized by the media and many educational institutions, we feel our country is losing its ability to solve problems.

Rather than providing an environment in which fellow citizens can inform themselves, we are provided with incomplete, fragmented and even inaccurate information sources. This is apparent in news broadcasts which are far more subjective than objective, in classrooms which are politicized and in political campaigns which are akin to visual circuses that make no real attempt to solve national problems.

It is a wonder that our generation is accused of ignoring the newspapers, appearing academically unstimulated and politically apathetic — many of us are skeptical of the validity of information presented to us. I offer a recent example. On Feb. 9, "Dateline NBC" admitted that they staged the seemingly actual portrayal of an explosion of a GM truck. If NBC, a major source of information misleads the public or is careless in this way, how are we to assess, analyze and rectify the issues which concern citizens not only in the United States, but around the world.

The media achieve great rewards for publicizing social problems and packing these issues into powerful images as seen in Dateline's popularity. But they lose benefits for actually solving them. What would happen to Dateline if the world was finally perfect? I argue that the pursuit of objectivity and truth is rapidly disappearing.

The major tool of this movement is the creation of a seemingly chaotic and unsolvable reality. I argue that education, the media and the government (lobbyists and special interest gain their subsistence for the perpetuation of their constituents) is guilty of all of this. All three refuse to provide citizens with complete and accurate information presented in totality.

Although a seemingly passe notion, we have not fully realized what we have lost when we disregard truth. Our University was founded on the assumption that truth exists. I think we must reevaluate society's rejection of truth and God's role.

The Society of St. Augustine has been created out of these concerns. What prerequisites are expected of those joining the Society of St. Augustine? A genuine interest in maintaining an intellectual environment in the pursuit of knowledge and truth is a must.

We welcome anyone who is truly interested in pursuing the solutions of today's problems by going the extra mile to become informed. The Society of St. Augustine also supports Villanova University's freedom to exercise its Catholic religion, recognizes its vision of Truth founded in Christ, and seeks to promote an intellectual environment in the pursuit of truth and knowledge. If you are interested, please attend a round-table discussion of current events Monday, April 5, at 7:30 p.m. in Bartley 108.

Residents of Stanford deserve accessibility

To the Editor:

I am writing to the Villanovan to talk about Stanford Hall's accessibility or total lack of it. I am fed up with the fact that Stanford residents get a hassle instead of their money's worth when it comes to their living situation. Think of how much money we pay to live in dorms that we can hardly get in and out of!

The only door available for use in Stanford Hall is the main entrance. Because of the layout of south campus, this is wholly unsatisfactory due to the mud that exists in front of the dorm. We would have grass instead, if only there were a reasonable way to go in and out. Anyone going from Stanford toward Bartley (or the opposite) has to run a veritable obstacle course all the way around the dorm to get there.

Because residents pay big bucks to live here, they have the right to demand satisfaction. It's a hassle to live in Stanford and I demand a change. There is really only one other door that needs to be made accessible. This is the door on the end of "C" wing.

So what about security? A good compromise would be for the University to add another of its swell door systems to the "C" wing door while keeping the entrance to the first floor wings locked as usual. Two sets of locked doors is overkill, and that's not done anywhere else anyway. The first floor will remain secure. Doing it this way would eliminate the need for any extra security guards at night since getting in the wings housing female residents would still require going to the main lobby where a guard is posted.

The access situation is a slightly perplexing problem with a simple answer. We don't need a poll, a referendum, a study or a debate — just an open door. Residents must get what they are paying for — a dorm, not an obstacle course. Personally, my campus residency is over. I can't leave, however, without saying my piece. Residence Life charged me big bucks and then, literally, gave me the run around.

Candidate reviews election issues

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to thank all of the students and faculty who helped me in my arts senatorial and vice presidential bids in this year's Student Government elections. I could never list all of the names of the people who gave me their time, energy and enthusiasm. But I send my sincere thanks to each of them.

I would also like to congratulate the winners of the senate elections. The debates showed that there are many issues that face us as a University; I have faith that you will succeed.

I would also like to extend my congratulations to whomever wins the presidential run-off. Their new administration faces many challenges in the upcoming year, from West Campus to making the Wildcat Shuttle a permanent feature at Villanova.

I would also like to close by commenting on something that bothered me about this election: the insinuation that every person on campus is apathetic and the administration has a closed-door policy to students.

Thank you once again to all who supported me. I ask that, now that the election is over, we work together to make Villanova the school that it can and should be for all.

I visited virtually every dorm during the campaign and, this may surprise the cynics, but the vast majority of the students displayed a very deep knowledge of the issues and their importance. On the issue of the administation, I met with virtually all the members and found them open and receptive to realistic and attainable student goals.

Thank you once again to all who supported me. I ask that now that the election is over, we work together to make Villanova the school that it can and should be for all.

Student says, "Everybody says, 'Clean up your room!' "

By PETER SHAUGER

I do a lot of stupid things around the house, like leaving my shoes in the line of traffic. However, after my mom trips over them, she doesn't yell at me for just that, but she adds something unrelated to yell at me about. "Why are your shoes always in the way? — and clean your room!"

Congress uses a similiar tactic. When they really want a bill to pass, no matter how ridiculous it is, they attach it to a bill that is likely to pass and hope that it slides by. Mom would be great in Congress. "In this bill I propose that we attempt to help out the world in any way we can, and I'm attaching to it a bill that will get us mint chocolate chip ice cream at all of our committee and subcommittee meetings for helping out the world."

She's also good at attaching irrelevant complaints to other irrelevant complaints, which means I don't necessarily have to do something stupid to get told to clean up my room. For instance, when my mom does something stupid, she still feels that the anger of the situation can only be properly expressed by yelling at me to clean up my room.

There are two possible ways to avoid this. One would be for my mom and I to stop doing stupid things. This is very unlikely. The other solution might be for me to clean up my room more often. This is also very unlikely, but I probably wouldn't get yelled at nearly as much if it were clean.

When I meet people here at school, I usually appear clean and neat (neat as in non-messy, not neat as in neato), therefore, they have no immediate reason to yell at me. Then, slowly, as people get to know me, they learn that I am an unorganized person and then they find out that I keep a messy bedroom and then they yell at me.

And it's not like I save important things. I still have the tag that says my jeans were inspected by inspector 34. As if I'm going to run into I-34 (a term used by only the closest friends) on the street someday, buy I-34 a cup of coffee and just say thanks for a really comfy pair of dungarees.

And don't think that my lack of organization doesn't bother me. Sometimes I have to chastise myself because my room is so cluttered. Like a couple months ago when I lost my watch, I thought to to myself, "What a dufus, and clean up your room!"

And it's not like I save important things. I still have the tag that says my jeans were inspected by Inspector 34.

And the other day, when I was late for class, my teacher said to me, "You're late for class, and clean your room!"

And the other day, when I fell asleep on the train and missed my stop, the conductor of the train said, "You missed your stop, and clean your room!"

As far as the newspaper is concerned, all of us do our part to maintain a fairly messy office. It was messy when I started working here freshmen year, and it's messy now.

Recently, our billing department hasn't been quite as on the ball as it has been in the past, and since the University counts on revenues from the Villanovan, they get a little annoyed, as anyone would, when money doesn't come in as fast as it should. People used to walk by our office and say, "Oh those crazy newspaper people are so messy, but they get the job done, and boy are they cool!" Now they say things like, "Maybe they could do a better job if they weren't so darn messy!" or "Clean up your room!"

The new editors tried to run a clean and neat ship the first few weeks of their term, but it didn't last long. Pretty soon they were resorting to phrases like, "You guys gotta get your articles done earlier, and clean up this office."

I've noticed this double standard even exists in the wide world of sports, with a little twist, however. There, the dirtier and messier you are, the more respect you command. And wouldn't you know it, the only time I keep a neat working/playing area, I get yelled at for it. "Shauger, why are you always so clean? None of the other players are clean. Maybe if you showed a little hustle out there you wouldn't be so darn clean and neat all the time. I bet your room is all clean and neat. Shauger, you make me sick." Too clean for sports but not clean enough for life.

All this has taught me a valuable lesson; either you can avoid making mistakes, or you can do stupid things and make up for them by being clean and neat. Just because I'm too stupid to learn from my mistakes doesn't mean you can't learn from them.

Pete Shauger is a junior English major who often gets lost in the forest also known as his bedroom.

NATURE ZONE

Project promises to beautify trails

By MARY JO MOYER

Hey, speed readers slow it down for a bit! This is important! Last week the Villanovan introduced you to the new club in town, (give yourself a pat on the back if you remember the name) called NATURE ZONE.

Just to give you an idea about what this club is like, at last week's meeting, the topics discussed included the impact of bringing our own utensils to meals in the cafeteria to a hot new subject nicknamed "Rails to Trails."

But this group is not all fun and games! When it comes to the environment, this new group of "green" students means business. We are starting plans and already implementing ideas for next semester. If the Earth and its future is at all a concern for you, April 5 at Rosemont College, 7:30 p.m. in the "T" is the place to be.

Because NATURE ZONE is a co-institutional organization, our two colleges (Villanova and Rosemont) unite in the face of what are pretty much negative governmental incentives to help make our respective campuses and our community more environmentally aware. This is a great opportunity, not only for helping the planet, but also to think of the bigger picture and increase action. Imagine the good we can do.

"Rails to Trails," mentioned before, is one of the first projects NATURE ZONE has decided to tackle. It is a movement, currently involving nearby Radnor Township, to convert our county's run down, weather beaten, archaic railroad tracks to, yes, you guessed it, bicycle trails. (Give yourself another pat on the back if you knew what it was.) Imagine the mainline and all of the continental United States connected by a thin line of 10-foot wide blacktop. Pedestrians, bicyclers and romantic couples (of two only) please. Cars are not allowed, void where prohibited, do not pass go and thank you for playing.

Surprisingly, and unfortunately, this idea has met with a lot of opposition in our nearby neighborhood. Home owners whose backyards border the old tracks are afraid of decreased property value, vagrants, grafitti, privacy intrusion, security, upkeep and a host of other related problems.

What these people do not see are the long-term benefits. Don't they know that jogging could improve their sex life? But seriously, local law authorities would be able to use this path to respond to crimes more quickly (if certain proposals go through). It would take an eyesore and make it into a safe place to walk, jog, reflect and practice any innate artistic abilities you might have.

Back in my neighborhood of Northeast Philly, my best friend's house bordered a set of abandoned railroad lines. A local gang caused a lot of trouble, ruined a lot of property and scared a lot of residents. They used the old railroad tracks as their "base," an easily accessible get away route from cops who could not follow in their cars. A bike trail would not offer them this safe haven.

Bike trails would unite our community, give college students a safe place to cycle and provide a romantic setting for walks and talks to share with a loved one. They would help preserve the surrounding natural environment and help people reduce their (not so) little love handles.

NATURE ZONE, as a group, supports the conversion of the outmoded transportation lines. It helps the environment and the community. Our group encompasses a lot more than you might expect. If you are at all interested, don't be shy, come join the fun. Till then, stay green everyone!

Gee, this is my land

Sung to the tune of "Gilligan's Island."

Just sit right back
And sing a song
A song about you and me
As we live out our days and nights
Aboard this tiny earth
Out fate is a mighty pow'rful thing
But if we are brave and sure
We can make a difference because
THE EARTH IS MINE AND YOURS
THE EARTH IS MINE AND YOURS
And yet the times are getting tough
Our tiny earth needs help
If not for the courage of fearless me and you
OUR EARTH WILL BE LOST
OUR EARTH WILL BE LOST
We can help save the land and shore of earth
By doing little things
Like recycle cans
And paper too
Don't pollute
Or waste water
No styrofoam
The main point is
Respect all life
Here on our Mother Earth

So here's the tale of our status quo

Reconnect with nature today

By LIZ NOLAN

Nature is not something that should be or can be ignored. By ignoring or mistreating nature, we are in essence denying our own identity as an integral part of natural existence. For this reason, apathy (insensibility or indifference) is not acceptable behavior for anyone. Such indifference is almost painful to witness when it is exhibited by ourselves and our peers.

Of course, such apathy did not originate with our generation. It took many years to perfect the state of isolation from nature which many of us experience. Those who live in the city might only see green in their salad bowls, or perhaps a 5-by-7-foot gap in their concrete for a front lawn. Those in the suburbs fortunately have a greater exposure to landscape. Yet, is it very obvious that humans as a race have consciosly removed themselves from nature. These elements of nature which do manage to filter into daily society are clearly controlled by humanity. Examples of this are manicured landscapes, domesticated house pets, etc.

Now, a front lawn with a sculptured bush and a pet dog named Wuffy are not at all the root of environmental evil. But they are symptoms on a very small scale of the manner in which modern society and technology treat human interaction with nature. It must be overcome, tamed, trimmed, cleaned and controlled by humans.

This is where the problems start. A mentality which advocates control of one aspect of nature over the existence and upkeep of another reduces the oneness of nature. We tend, as a society, to have a condescending view of the elements of nature around us. So much so, that when it comes time to care about the needy members of our environmental family, many of us do not feel any connection with nature and thus adopt apathetic attitudes.

Please, do not let this happen to you. Go outside just to go outside! Breathe the air and appreciate the fact that it keeps you alive. Just sit and feel the warmth of the sun on your face. Start to appreciate nature and a desire to preserve it will come naturally. So, why not go for a walk, and hey, take Wuffy with you.

Poetry Reading

The English Department will sponsor a reading by the English poet Dannie Abse at 4:15 p.m. in the Radnor Room of Connelly Center. Abse is one of the most established and popular poets working in England today. He is a physician as well as a writer, and these several combinations make for a distinctive and strong voice. He has published over a dozen books of verse, several volumes of prose memoirs and criticism and has received several major awards. His career as a surgeon supplies his poems with a special material and a unique perspective. Like William Carlos Williams, another physician-poet, Dannie Abse insists on "no ideas but in things"; the surface of life in his poems is at once sharply detailed and imaginatively remade. These poems spring from a world actually known and loved, and they testify to values recognizably different from the self-indulgent fantasies and verbal gamesmanship of much contemporary poetry. He is a poet who commands attention, gently. Refreshments will follow the reading and the public is invited.

Students step back in time to Renaissance in Urbino

By TARA CAMPITIELLO
Assistant Features Editor

Located high in the Appenines exists the romantic Renaissance town of Urbino, Italy. According to the New York Times, Urbino is a "time capsule . . . [which gives] . . . a better idea of what life in the Renaissance must have been like than all the monuments and collections of Florence and Rome."

Just south of Florence, near Bologna, approximately 35-40 minutes west of the Adriatic Sea stands the University of Urbino, established in 1506. The University of Urbino will host Villanova University's Summer Program in Italy July 1-Aug. 14 for the second consecutive year.
for the second consecutive year.

"The Urbino program provides a unique experience because it affords students the opportunity to make contacts with many natives and other students from all over the world," stated Gaetano Pastore, professor of modern languages and director of the program. Urbino may be classified as a university town due to the great number of international students which it hosts during the summer months, he said.
catering to its guests," said Pastore. Besides Villanova, Urbino's guests also include Rutgers State University of New Jersey, University of Miami, Florida, Miami University of Ohio and the University of Southern Connecticut, just to name a few.

Through this program students are afforded the opportunity to earn between six and eight credits while experiencing the rich culture of Italy. The approximate cost of the program is $3,250, which includes the flight, transfer transportation while in Italy, tuition, room and board, weekend excursions and insurance.

Language classes are offered on the elementary, intermediate and advanced levels. Courses including Italian culture, literature and civilization are also offered. Students can expect to be held in class for an average of three to four hours a day. Classes are taught by both accompanying Villanova faculty and local faculty of Urbino. Students are accommodated in "collegi," campus dormitories.

On the weekends students travel to various surrounding towns and cities, including Perugia, Florence, Assisi and San Marino. Perugia and Assisi are favorites of many students due to their great Renaissance traditions. In Assisi, the Cathedral of St. Francis is a popular highlight. San Marino is a republic, a state

Honor societies highlight 'Nova best

By ROSEANNE MILLER
Staff Reporter

Recent inductions have called attention to honor societies, which are an important aspect of Villanova life for many students. Villanova has 24 honor societies, which strive for the recognition of academic and professional excellence in specific disciplines of general areas.

The honor societies cover a range from specific academic fields of study to more general programs, such as a fraternity/sorority honor society and a leadership honor society.

Most of the societies acquire new members by invitation only. Each has different functions, although most of the academic societies offer tutoring programs.

Omicron Delta Kappa (ODK), the honor society for leadership inducted new members March 21. ODK was founded in 1914 by students and faculty members at Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Va. The circle at Villanova was installed Sept. 25, 1988.

The purpose of ODK is to recognize students who have achieved high efficiency in collegiate activities and inspire other students to strive to reach high aspirations.

The major areas in which this society looks for achievement are: scholarship, athletics, campus and community service, journalism, speech and creative and performing arts.

When seeking new members, ODK looks for certain criteria to be met. They look for students with exemplary character, responsible leadership and service in campus and community life, superior scholarship, genuine fellowship and consecration to democratic ideals.

President of ODK, senior Dean Libutti said, "300 students were nominated for ODK and 160 applied." Out of the 160 applicants, 37 students were chosen.

One major activity in which the society is involved is meeting with faculty and administration for discussion of campus issues, problems and development. ODK also

Learn how to help a friend

Special to the Villanovan

Michelle did some strange things during her freshman year of college to satisfy here abnormal food craving: she dug pizza out of trash cans, stole peanut butter and made midnight trips to McDonald's to binge on burgers and fries.

She knew she had a problem, but apparently no one around her did.

"When I was acting this way, I knew I had a problem with compulsive eating and exercise but I couldn't help myself," said Michelle. To lose the weight she gained she would spend up to four hours a day dancing to rock music in her room. "Although my behavior was bizarre and my moods were erratic, no one talked to me about it. No roommate, professor or college counselor said a word."

Jason drank in high school, but never had a problem until he got to college. His first year was one big blur of parties, concerts and hanging out at night clubs. He barely passed his courses, but he scored high enough to return for his sophomore year, although on academic probation.

Early in his second year, his drinking was moderate and he really seemed to be trying to change. But by mid-semester Jason had returned to his "commode hugging," passed out, drunken behavior and ended up flunking out of school.

"All my friends were real sorry I flunked out," Jason said. "None of them ever said anything about my drinking or that I needed to get help even though they knew that was why I flunked out. We all pretended I would be back after I sat out a semester."

> Although my behavior was bizarre and my moods were erratic, no one talked to me about it.

Michelle and Jason's stories are not unusual. Despite the many signs students with eating disorders or alcoholism show, roommates, friends or professors either minimize or often ignore the symptoms.

"Because most individuals do not understand the nature of the disorders and their devastating consequences, they either believe the problem will go away on its own or honestly don't know what to do," said Dr. Virginia Condello, attending physician at The Willough at Naples, a licensed psychiatric hospital in Naples, Florida specializing in the treatment of eating disorders and chemical dependency.

"When college students are unable to seek help on their own, intervention is critical and may save their lives," said Condello.

Students mistakenly believe they can handle it and do not realize they have a disease that is progressive and potentially fatal.

Twenty percent of anorexics die, and bulimics can suffer heart failure as well as damage to the kidneys and liver.

Alcohol poisoning and accidents due to drunk driving has increasingly become a killer on campus.

In addition to these serious problems, students may also experience declining grades, loss of friendships and relationships, financial difficulties, depression, a sense of hopelessness and poor self-esteem.

When a student has a problem with alcohol, it is often very obvious due to their drunken behavior. This is not the case, however, with anorexia or bulimia. "Eating disorder clients tend

Wayne family business satisfies 'Nova's sweet tooth

By PETE SMOCK
Staff Reporter

If you have ever travelled through downtown Wayne, you have most likely noticed the unique store that stands at the corner of Lancaster and N. Wayne avenues.

Sweet Daddy's was founded by John and Marilyn Cooper in January of 1992 and has captured the interest of Main Line residents and Villanova students alike. By retailing a full line of specialty desserts, baked goods and ice cream, as well as gourmet coffees and candy, the Coopers have reintroduced the idea of the small family business to area residents.

Before beginning Sweet Daddy's, the Coopers owned a baking business in Philadelphia. However, as residents of Wayne for nearly 17 years, they wanted to open their own retail store due to the development that was occurring within their hometown.

"We felt that the downtown area of Wayne needed to be revitalized with stores that people could feel comfortable about congregating in. We wanted to create a more family-like atmosphere," explained Marilyn.

A major goal the Coopers hoped to accomplish with Sweet Daddy's was to provide quality products in a very homey, friendly atmosphere. A visitor to Sweet Daddy's is usually greeted with a friendly hello, and the Coopers are constantly emerging from the bakery to converse with their patrons.

John Cooper's philosophy is simple. "The customers have always been our number one priority, and we like them to know that we are willing to accommodate any of their needs as well as accept their suggestions for improvement," he said.

Examples of this customer service includes baking a diabetic wedding cake as well as grounding coffee beans to a particular customer's choice. The residents of Wayne take time to tour the bakery, browse the candy selections and let their children sample the diverse ice cream flavors.

Sweet Daddy's has captured the interest of Main Line residents and Villanova students alike.

While Sweet Daddy's has attracted many visitors, it is the quality products that are beginning to gain notoriety. Last August, "Philadelphia Magazine" honored Sweet Daddy's "chocolate Chunk" cookie with a Best of Philly award. Sweet Daddy's was also honored as the best ice cream/candy store in the annual Main Line awards competition.

Along with the success, the Coopers have entertained thoughts of limited test marketing of some of their products as well as opening another branch. "One of the exciting things behind a small business is the prospect to keep changing and keep growing to meet a larger demand," noted Marilyn Cooper.

Even with this unmeasured success in only a year of operation, the Coopers have not lost their focus toward the community. Their donation of unused food to the local homeless shelter as well as an active participation in the Wayne Business Association are just two examples of their efforts.

The last market the Coopers feel they need to conquer is Villanova students. While there are a few regular student customers, the most significant contribution the school has made has been the student employees. Yuka Honda and Marleen Miller, both juniors at Villanova, began working at Sweet Daddy's last September.

"It has been interesting to witness first-hand how a small business operates and what kind of growing pains it experiences. I think Sweet Daddy's will only keep getting more popular, and eventually more students will become regular visitors," said Miller.

The Coopers would like to encourage students with interesting suggestions for ice cream flavors to visit the store. Sweet Daddy's is open from Sunday to Thursday until 9 p.m. and on Friday and Saturday nights until 11 p.m.

Friends should intervene in dangerous addictions

Signs That Food May Be A Problem

- Obsession with weight and body size. Making decisions based on the weight scale.
- Continued talk about being "fat" even when obviously underweight.
- Frequent mood swings controlled by the availability or lack of food.
- Frequent binges where abnormally large amounts of food are consumed.

to look normal and are fairly well functioning, but it is just as important to get them help as it is to help a person who has been injured in an accident," Condello said. "You have to remember they have a disease that is progressive and potentially fatal."

The question is how do you get a friend to get professional help for his or her problem? You conduct an intervention on them; because if you do not, they will likely get worse and will suffer major consequences before admitting they have a problem on their own.

Intervention is the method by which the reality of a person's illness can be presented in an acceptable way to the person who suffers. It involves sitting down and discussing in a loving and caring way the concerns you have about the person's eating disorder or harmful use of alcohol. It is not an "in your face" confrontation.

The most successful interventions are ones that are well planned and that involve close friends, family members, advisors, coaches and a skilled therapist. It is easy for an individual to deny he has a problem when confronted by just one person, but it is very hard to deny he or she has a problem when confronted by all the significant people in their life.

"Before confronting an individual, I highly recommend contacting the health and counseling center on campus in order to solicit the help of a therapist," offered Condello. "A therapist skilled in interventions will be able to guide and direct the whole process."

Steps usually involved in conducting an intervention include:

1. Write down specific information about a person's behavior and changes in their character. Also make notes about how you feel about the behavior such as embarrassed, sad, fearful, etc.

2. Identify other individuals to be involved in the intervention, and have them do step number one.

3. Secure a person trained in interventions, if possible, to help you.

4. Meet as a group to plan out the intervention and determine what type of help you want the person to get. Also determine what the consequences will be if the person refuses to get help, such as no longer covering for his or her mistakes, losing a scholarship, losing membership in extracurricular activities, academic probation, etc.

5. Role play the intervention as a group or at least talk it through by phone.

6. Conduct the intervention.

The most important thing to remember is that the person in trouble must hear that you do care, you do love him or her and are concerned about what is happening. Tell them it is not their fault, nor is it a matter of lack of willpower that they can't stop or moderate their behavior. They have a disease, and they need professional help. They also need to know you are not going to stand by and watch them self-destruct without trying to help.

Do not be discouraged if your friend does not respond positively to your actions. Remember that no intervention is a failure because interventions usually force people to "hit bottom" long before they would have otherwise. Be proud of the fact you were willing to step forward and let your friend know help is available.

For more information or a free Intervention Guide call the Willough at 1-800-722-0100, or write to: The Willough at Naples, 901 Tamiami Trail Esat, Naples, Florida 33962. For information from Villanova how to help a friend, call the Counseling Center at 645-4050.

Students mistakenly believe they can handle it and do not realize they have a disease that is progressive and potentially fatal.

Symptoms of Alcohol or Drug Abuse

- Decreased academic performance.
  Classes seem to be an inconvenience.
- Change in friendships and relationships because of drug or alcohol use.
- Social activities revolve around chemical use.
- Apathetic attitude toward life.
  Loss of other interests.
- Financial difficulties due to chemical use.
- Physical and moral deterioration.

Sigma Xi sponsors lecture on universe

Special to the Villanovan

The Villanova Chapter of Sigma Xi, The Scientific Research Society, will sponsor a presentation by Lawrence M. Krauss, Ph.D., on "The Beginning and End of the Universe." This public lecture will be held on Friday, April 2, at 5 p.m. in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center.

Sigma Xi is an honor society which serves for scientists and engineers much the same function that Phi Beta Kappa does for the humanities. The mission of Sigma Xi is to honor scientific accomplishments, to encourage and to enhance worldwide appreciation and support of original investigation in science and technology and to foster worldwide a creative and dynamic interaction among science, technology and society.

The members of Sigma Xi are acutely aware of the fact that while only a small portion of the population will ultimately become scientists, in the contemporary world a broad understanding of science — science literacy — seems essential for everyone.

Thus the Villanova Chapter of Sigma Xi is pleased to sponsor Krauss's lecture.

Krauss is a theoretical physicist with wide research interests, including the interface between elementary particle physics and cosmology, where his studies include the early universe, the nature of dark matter, and neutrino astrophysics.

He received his doctorate in physics from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (1982), then joined the Harvard Society of Fellows (1982-85) before moving to Yale University, where he is associate professor in physics and astronomy.

Krauss is the author of more than 90 scientific publications, as well as numerous popular articles on physics and astronomy. He is the author of "The Fifth Essence: The Search for Dark Matter in the Universe" (1989) and is writing a second book, "Fear of Physics."

He has received numerous awards, including the Gravity Research Foundation First Prize Award (1984) and the Presidential Investigator Award (1986).

He has lectured extensively to audiences at the Smithsonian Air and Space Museum and the Museum of Natural History. He is also involved in current issues of physics and society.

Prospective freshman visit

By MARJORIE TORCHON
Special to the Villanovan

On Sunday, April 18, the Office of Full-Time Undergraduate Admissions, in conjunction with the colleges of Liberal Arts and Sciences, Engineering and Commerce and Finance, will host the Second Annual General Candidates' Day.

Candidates' Day is an opportunity for prospective "Villanovans" and their families to learn more about our academic programs and campus activities.

The families will be welcomed by the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., president, the Rev. William A. McGuire, O.S.A., dean of Enrollment Management and Stephen R. Merritt, director of Undergraduate Admissions.

George Walter, Director of Financial Aid, Nancy Dudak, director of Career Planning and Placement and Christopher Janosik, director of Resident Life, will discuss issues pertaining to their respective offices.

The students will then adjourn to presentations and discussion groups relating to their fields of study. During the campus-wide open house, they will speak to student organizations about the various services available to them.

Approximately 2,700 students and their families participated last year. Many candidates were impressed with the campus' location, student faculty ratio, the quality of courses offered and the strength of our faculty.

We anticipate some 3,000 visitors for this year's event and look forward to greeting the prospective freshman class!

If you would like to volunteer to help with Candidates' Day, please contact Marjorie Torchon from Undergraduate Admissions at extension 4554.

The program tries to avoid "typical tourist attractions" so that students may experience Italian culture, as well as others represented by the various students, untainted. In merging so many different cultures together, many notable experiences often occur. One such experience occurred between a male New Jersey student and a female German student. In hopes of becoming more friendly with the German girl, the young gentleman dropped the casual question, "So, is this your first time in Europe?"

If you are interested in experiencing Italian culture and language firsthand while having the time of your life, contact Dr. Pastore of the Modern Languages Department at 645-4696. Interested students can still reserve a spot in this summer's program until the end of April. Ciao!

Honor societies

holds leadership conferences and workshops for faculty and students, as well as public forums on local, national and world issues.

Another activity entails collaborating with student government in surveys and seminars to plan for improvements. Members are also involved in planning dinner meetings of student organization presidents and honor society dinner programs.

One recent event being planned is the ODK faculty appreciation picnic to take place April 24. The picnic is planned to thank faculty members for their help with ODK over the years it has been a part of Villanova.

Most of the societies acquire new members by invitation only.

One unique aspect about this honor society is that members are comprised not only of students but also faculty members. Some faculty members who are part of Villanova's cricle of Omicron Delta Kappa are the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., University president; Dr. Helen Lafferty, University vice president; Dan Remley of Residence Life; Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities; Christine Lysionek, managing director of Sesquicentennial; the Rev. William McGuire, dean of Enrollment Management; and Dr. Robert Stokes, of continuing education, who is also the faculty advisor for ODK.

Each year, the national chapter of ODK recognizes outstanding members of their society through awards. Five graduate scholarships are given out annually, along with a Student Leader of the Year award.

Executive members of ODK include Libutti, Vice-President Laura Schiller and Ritual Chairperson Kelly Ann Walsh.

Dave Brubeck headlines Jazz Festival

By KATE SZUMANSKI
News Editor

The Office of Music Activities is sponsoring the 1993 Jazz Festival April 3 and 4 in the Jake Nevin Fieldhouse. Jazz great Dave Brubeck will perform April 3 at 7:30 p.m. Brubeck joins the list of jazz musicians (Dizzy Gillespie, Maynard Ferguson, Freddie Hubbard, Denis DiBlasio, Woody Herman and the Yellowjackets who have performed at the University, said Jazz Festival committee member Janine Wingerter.

Brubeck is a jazz pianist and composer whose lightly swinging sound is known as "West Coast Cool." His emphasis on improvisation and adventurous experimentation, however, creates the unique and distinctive sound which defies categorization.

"Improvisation — that's what I love to do. I don't know what I'm going to do next. Just before I play I don't know what I'm going to do. That, to me, is the biggest and most important thing in jazz," Brubeck said.

"The Dave Brubeck Quartet became the sound that identifed an era. It was they who started the wave of popularity of jazz on college campuses in the '50s," according to Brubeck's biography. By 1954, Brubeck's picture had appeared on the cover of Time magazine along with a feature story heralding the rebirth of jazz, according to Brubeck's biography.

Over his long career Brubeck has received many honors. He was inducted into the first Playboy Jazz Hall of Fame along with Louis Armstrong and Frank Sinatra. He was one of the first musicians to have a star placed on the Hollywood Walk of Fame. He is a Duke Ellington Fellow at Yale University and holds six honorary doctorate degrees.

The high school jazz band competition will begin April 3 at 9 a.m. The winning high school band will open for Brubeck in the evening, said John Gorman, executive chair of the Jazz Festival committee.

The college jazz band competition begins at 10 a.m. April 4. The winner will open for West Point's Jazz Knights at 5 p.m. "The Jazz Knights are one of the premiere military bands in the country," said Gorman.

"The Jazz Knights are truly an exciting and refreshing complement to the long-established U.S. Military Academy Band and bring unequaled musical excellence and variety to their audiences," according to the Jazz Knights' biography.

Special guest musician Jeff Jarvis will perform at 7:30 p.m. "Active in educational circles, Jeff is a Yamaha artist performer and serves on the advisory council for the International Association of Jazz Educators," according to Jarvis' biography. Jarvis has been described as a "superb jazz trumpet player [and] an outstanding composer" by many music publications.

"If you like jazz, the 1993 Jazz Festival will give you an opportunity to hear music you may not otherwise hear," said Gorman. The Jazz Festival is unique because it is completely student-run, he said. "We encourage everyone to attend," he added.

The Office of Music Activities' Jazz Festival was [illegible] popular in the 1960s, said Wingerter. "Four years ago, the Jazz Festival was revived."

Admission to the high school jazz band competition April 3 is $3. The admission charge for Brubeck's concert is $9 for students, $14 for adults.

The college jazz band competition is April 4 at 10 a.m. and the admission charge is $3. The Jazz Knights' concert at 5 p.m. is free of charge and Jarvis' performance at 7:30 p.m. costs $9 for students, $14 for adults.

P.M. Dawn creates a new blissful album

By ERIC CHEUNG
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Wasting no time following up a successful debut album, P.M. Dawn has already released their exciting sophomore effort. The Bliss Album . . . ? (Vibrations of Love and Anger and The Ponderance of Life and Existence) picks up where the first album, Of The Heart, Of The Soul, Of The Cross: The Utopian Experience, left off.

After achieving utopia, the only thing that can exist is pure Bliss, defined in a press release as "The ecstasy of salvation: spiritual joy." P.M. Dawn continues to examine spirituality and metaphysical experiences with an album that touches the soul.

After the success of a number one single, "Set Adrift on Memory Bliss," many people thought of P.M. Dawn as a rap group, albeit a different breed of rap. In recent years, P.M. Dawn has been grouped with other rap acts such as Arrested Development, Digable Planets and De La Soul as a kind of "alternative rap" (or music that pushes the limits of rap.)

However, for those who have no idea who P.M. Dawn is, to call them a rap group (even an alternative rap group) is to make a grave misrepresentation of their kind of music.

P.M. Dawn (composed of Prince Be, and DJ Minutemix) is a group that experiments. First and foremost, P.M. Dawn's music is very spiritual, not in the Catholic tradition, but in the Eastern philosophies of spirituality.

P.M. Dawn's music reflects the new-age notions of discovering the essence of the universe, of reaching ultimate ecstasy, of transcending the material world for the sake of the metaphysical one. The subject matter and the lyrics of P.M. Dawn's music are in a class of their own.

The experimentation arises in how P.M. Dawn absorbs these messages with music that crosses many genres, in sounds that fuse many styles. On one level, P.M. Dawn can be hip-hop, such as with "Plastic" or "Nocturnal Is In the House." On another level, they can be very much a new-age act with songs like "The Ways of the Wind." But how they fuse these elements together produces eclectic masterpieces such as "When Midnight Sighs" or "Beyond Infinite Affections."

Sometimes P.M. Dawn chooses to rap, sometimes to sing, and sometimes even to "rap-sing" (where there seem to be no clear boundaries between the two). In fact, half of the songs P.M. Dawn has on their album have no rapping whatsoever. How people can designate P.M. Dawn as a rap act is mind-boggling, considering their recent success with the phenomenal ballad, "I'd Die Without You" (included on this album). P.M. Dawn uses far more than just rap in their music. They break all barriers.

It is very difficult to formulate opinions on P.M. Dawn's music with just one listen. Their words and their styles are extremely complex. Fortunately, with songs like "Norwegian Wood" and "Looking Through Patient Eyes," P.M. Dawn can ensnare a wide range of listeners merely upon initial contact. The former reworks (not just remakes) a Beatles song and the latter combines a brilliant sampling of George Michael's "Father Figure" with catchy choruses and synthesizers to produce an unstoppable hit.

King Missile detonates crowd at Chestnut

By MARC ROSSI
Staff Reporter

King Missile recently emerged on the college scene with its combination of raw, elemental rock and outrageous lyrics. Their second Atlantic Records outing, Happy Hour, has been rising on the college charts for the past few months with songs such as "Detachable Penis" and their latest single, "(Why Are We) Trapped?"

Frontman John S. Hall is the offbeat storyteller for the band, sometimes speaking or singing his lyrics. King Missile performed to an eager crowd at the Chestnut Cabaret March 24.

Joining Hall are Dave Rick (guitars), Chris Xefos (bass, keyboards) and new member Roger Murdock (drums). The band's creative sound boldly offsets Hall's lyrical insights.

Highlights of the show included "Jesus Was Way Cool," "Detachable Penis," "Cheesecake Truck" and "Martin Scorsese." During long instrumental segments, Hall repeatedly jumped off stage to personally greet his fans.

"Jesus Was Way Cool" is a song about the miracles that Jesus performed in the past and those that he could perform today. The crowd went wild when Hall changed "Jesus could score more goals than Wayne Gretsky" to the Philadelphia star Eric Lindros.

About "Detachable Penis" Hall sings, "I can leave it at home/ when I think its gonna get me in trouble, or I can rent it out/when I don't need it." The poignant but humorous tale describes losing it at a party but finding it again on a vendor's blanket on Second Avenue.

The band's creative sound boldly offsets Hall's lyrical insights.

"Cheesecake Truck" is a track from Missile's breakthrough album Mystical Shit, which spent 12 weeks on Rockpool's Rock Independent chart. The song describes a man's desire to drive a cheesecake truck in order to gain the sweet benefits.

"Martin Scorsese," a song from Happy Hour, is a violently loving tribute to the film director. Some of the shocking lyrics include, "Then I'd pick him up by the hair/ swing him over my head a few times/and throw him across the room" to thank Scorsese for his films.

"Sometimes we're silly, sometimes we're funny, sometimes we're angry, sometimes we make nice songs and sometimes we try to make a nice song and something goes wrong," comments Hall about the band.

Other songs from the Cabaret show included, "Sink," "Take Me Home," "The VulvaVoid," "Heaven" and the title track "Happy Hour." During the encore, Missile played a cover of the Elton John classic, "Love Lies Bleeding."

"The title [Happy Hour] is ironic because the words talk about self-denigration, low self-esteem, isolation, being trapped and the driving need to just end it all. Happy Hour is exactly an hour long . . . kinda happy, definitely an hour," Hall said.

'And the Oscar went to...'

By AARON NICODEMUS
Senior Reporter

Nic's Picks

Watching Monday night's 65th Academy Awards ceremony was like sitting in a world issues class taught by your least favorite and (most unyielding) professor. Standing at the podium berating ignorant, idle, lethargic and underactive students, a teacher can make the class feel it is their fault the world is such an ugly place.

This appeared to be the goal of many of the presenters, nominees and winners at the Oscars. Star after star ranted about social injustices while paradoxically clad in gleaming tuxes or flowing gowns. How do they expect us to value their speeches when their overblown ceremony symbolizes that same ignorance?

While such shows in the past have been full of gallantry, outlandish evening attire, awkward hand-held speeches and a few shining moments, this year's extravaganza did very little to justify the enormous hype. Richard Gere (on human rights abuses in China) and Susan Sarandon (Haitian immigrants) each trumpeted their own off-beat political views (did anyone know or care that Gere is a practicing Buddhist?).

The audience really squirmed when a documentary winner stood and lambasted Americans for their participation in the atrocities in Panama. Listen, accept your award and get on with it. I have never been to Panama, never intend to go, and furthermore, care very little about your obscure documentary.

One actually relevant complaint came from Barbara Streisand, who had a legitimate beef with the Academy's theme, "Oscar Salutes Women and the Movies." She was passed over for Best Director for 1992's "Prince of Tides" (which was nominated for Best Picture), so she encouraged the Academy to stop creating themes about women and to begin giving them recognition for their talent and dedication.

She also noted that there have been very few quality roles for women in film recently, a disturbing trend on a night dedicated to women in film.

Billy Crystal, in his fourth appearance as the host of the show, pounced on the theme's token gesture as the mainstay of his jokes throughout the evening. He began by being pulled onstage on a giant Oscar by Jack Palance, last year's Best Supporting Actor, and by taking that award a bit literally. Crystal started strong but petered out by the end, looking as if the three-and-a-half hour show was just too much for him. Maybe Palance should host it next year.

But despite all the annoyances, the Oscars still provided an appropriate mix of surprises and sure-bets. The biggest shocker was to Marisa Tomei's award (Best Supporting Actress) for her performance as Joe Pesci's eternal fiance in "My Cousin Vinny."

Less so was Al Pacino's victory after eight Best Actor nominations for his performance in "Scent of a Woman." Here, the Academy based its judgement on his noble past performances, combined with the fact that Clint Eastwood was up for other awards and Denzel Washington had won an Oscar not too long ago. Bogus rationale, you say? Hollywood rewards itself in strange ways.

The rest of the night belonged to Clint Eastwood and "Unforgiven," which won Best Picture and garnered Eastwood a Best Director prize. "Unforgiven" was a great film, no argument here. But Eastwood basically did his best "Dirty Harry" impression in the film, an act which until now had never even gotten him a nomination. And "The Crying Game" fell victim to being too new and daring, or maybe unfamiliar to voters, for in six nominations it only won Best Screenplay.

As for the Villanovan's predictions, not one of the "should win's" got an Oscar, but three of the four categories were correctly picked for who would win (Best Director proved elusive).

FAST FORWARD: For all you Shelley Long fans out there (are there any left?), not only will she be appearing in the last episode of Cheers May 20, but she also debuts in the new show "Good Advice" tonight on CBS at 9:30 p.m. In the show, Long is a marriage counselor named Susan DeRuzza who steals clients from the waiting room of divorce attorney Jack Harold (Treat Williams). The two will inevitably begin a Sam and Diane-like romance, but it is unlikely that it will have more than a season to develop.

Censors weaken freedom

By COLEEN KENIREY

The Cutting Edge

Ice-T's recent separation from Warner Bros. Records points to the necessity for the music industry to take a look in the proverbial mirror. The record companies' compliance with increasingly stringent demands regarding lyric content sets up a pattern of self-censorship that is beneficial to no one.

It all began in the mid '80s with Tipper Gore and her Parents Music Resource Center (PMRC) holding Congressional hearings to emphasize the need for parental-advisory stickers on albums with "explicit" contents.

Musicians, in particular Frank Zappa, complained to the media about the future censorial consequences of passing legislature regarding labeling. Everyone, except for other musicians, treated Zappa as the boy who cried wolf, since the PMRC's intentions only stipulated labeling, not censorship.

This integrity questioning paved the way for a Florida judge's 1990 decision that the lyrics of 2 Live Crew's As Nasty as They Wanna Be were obscene, making sale of the album grounds for legal action. This ruling, and a similar one in Alabama, led to the arrest of two record store owners, one in each state, who continued to sell the album.

This wave of censorial attitudes and actions, praised by its proponents as a crackdown on the filthy thoughts supposedly inspired by rock music, sets the stage for future restrictions. The most significant and covert blow dealt to artistic expression is the increase in self-censorship that has resulted.

Ice-T became a classic case of self-censorship before leaving his former record label. Despite the rapper's insistence that he has remained completely true to the faith, he did buckle under record company pressure during the working stages of Home Invasion. He conceded to requests that he drop "Ricochet" from the new album and alter lyrics of other songs.

Ice also made alterations in the original cover art (which now adorns the version produced on Ice's own label) before finally ending his contract with the company. The fact that a strong-willed person such as Ice-T was willing to make certain concessions to please the executive forces indicates the degree of power that record companies can have over artists. Someone like Ice is fortunate to have enough financial clout to create his own label (Rhyme Syndicate Records), but other up-and-coming musicians may not be so fortunate.

Record store owners also impose self-censorship on the industry by their compliance with local governmental threats of punishment for selling certain albums. Stickering is fine as a tool for parents to screen what 11-year-olds can buy, but limitations should not be placed on what is made available to adults. That which is offensive to some adults is good music to others. Who is qualified to determine the lines of obscenity? Somehow it seems that Tipper Gore and Jesse Helms do not adequately represent the morals of the majority of Americans.

Another argument has been made that this wave of censorship is linked to racism since many of the blacklisted songs have been gangsta rap songs of black artists. The issue, however, transcends the lines of black and white because although black musicians have been the primary targets, they are not the only victims. This was evidenced by Jello Biafra and the Dead Kennedys. The truth is that the First Amendment rights of all musicians are on the line.

Americans should not accept music censorship any more willingly than they should tolerate the banning of "The Catcher in the Rye" or the closing of a Robert Mapplethorpe exhibit. The greatest danger does not lie in being exposed to diverse art forms, but in the Orwellian Tipperthink which would homogenize American society by squashing marginal points of view in favor of the mainstream.

Kate Pierson, lead singer for the B-52s, summed up the situation best in a 1990 Rolling Stone article when she commented, "As a woman, I find 2 Live Crew to be offensive, but as an American, I feel everyone has the right to be stupid. In America you have the inalienable right to be wrong, as long as you're not hurting anybody. There's a surrealist saying, 'It's forbidden to forbid.' I think that's applicable. You can't legislate culture."

Music listeners must remember that each new chip in the First Amendment weakens its overall effect and sets legal precedents for tightening the governmental grip on all American throats.

P.M. Dawn achieves 'Bliss'

Already "Patient Eyes" has its sights set on the top of the charts.

Compare those songs with "When Midnight Sighs" and it is like jumping from elementary school to college. This particular track is hard to evaluate given its many references to numerological symbols and mysticisms. Just a snippet of the lyrics, "If I'm betting on an if and if that if might have a chance to survive. It runs into 12 different ways of existing. Each with a capacity to change if's mind. The vibes say six, so be six, now if has a clone," taxes the brain. One needs his or her own personal Zen Buddhist mentor to try and understand the meaning of P.M. Dawn's music.

Spiritual themes aside, P.M. Dawn's greatest creations seem to come when they discuss the issues of love. Their ballads are out of this world and yet earthy in a way. However they might come across to listeners, the ballads are all quite stunning in beauty.

> P.M. Dawn uses for more than just rap in their music.

"To Love Me More" is thrillingly romantic with its use of lush strings. "More Than Likely" is a duet between Prince Be and the hip-all-over-again Boy George that harmonizes each singer's distinctive vocals.

Still it is the already well-known and well-received "I'd Die Without You" that is the high-point of the album. This is a love song that surpasses all other love songs in recent memory. Lyrics like "If I have to give away . . . This feeling that I feel. If I have to sacrifice ... whatever baby. If I have to take apart ... all that I am ... Is there anything that I would not do, 'cause inside I'd die without you" strike deeply into the recesses of the heart. Add a gorgeous piano solo and a new-age feel, and this song has expanded the range of popular music today.

P.M. Dawn is moving into the forefront of not only rap music but of all kinds of music. For spiritual satisfaction, this is a powerful album to have. For meditative purposes, P.M. Dawn's music operates on a wavelength beyond the normal human consciousness. For just plain good music that challenges and innovates, P.M. Dawn is simply one of the best.

Berries spice up music scene

By REGGIE BEEHNER
Staff Reporter

The Irish band, The Cranberries, have released their newest CD, Everyone Else Is Doing It, So Why Can't We. This album is filled with 12 songs containing an eminent pop feel but with a distinguishable new weapon. This weapon is the overwhelming vocal performance by the band's new female singer, Delores O'Riordan. Her powerful, yet unique and hauntingly beautiful voice is the definite substance to every song on the album. It draws comparison to that of Sinead O'Connor, but without the harshness.

The Cranberries originally started as The Cranberry Saw Us in 1990. Having decided that their music was "too feminine" for a male interpretation, they replaced their previous singer with church singer O'Riordan. The four-piece band has already received great praise from the British music papers.

The album is a definite product of Irish music. The vocals move fluently from tasteful yodeling to alluring, double-female harmonizing. The gentle background collage of orchestrated strings, guitar arpeggios and percussions keeps the tracks moving along effortlessly. "How" is a powerful, chunky musical performance, while the follow-up track "Put Me Down" contrasts abruptly with slow and wistful beauty. "I Still Do," the album's opening track, immediately subdues the listener with O'Riordan's ethereal vocals. All of the songs are definitely about the hopes and hardships of love, but they thankfully leave out the typical cliched references.

Overall, Everyone Else Is Doing It, So Why Can't We is one remarkably beautiful album, easily comparable to that of Tori Amos, among others. The Cranberries have crafted a wonderful album that adds a great new flavor to a musical scene that seems overridden with banality.

Frank Black ventures far from Pixies sound

By MARK McCREARY
Staff Reporter

There are two things that can be commonly observed about the Pixies: first, a person either loves or hates them, and if they had any attraction for them, it is generally in the past tense. Second, no one has come along and reproduced their sound.

In an age of "bands" such as Coverdale/Page, in which offshoots sound just like their roots (Page sounding like himself in Led Zeppelin, and Coverdale sounding like Robert Plantin Whitesnake, just like he always did), Frank Black sounds absolutely nothing like the Pixies. The voice is unmistakable, but this is actually very listenable music, unlike the Pixies were at times.

Doolittle was terrific, but they should have left it at that. Black should have gone solo at that point, taking into account what he has to offer as a solo artist.

Chances are the name Frank Black is unfamiliar. Black is the jovial, but not-that-funny fat boy that led the Pixies before their break-up. It would be difficult to say the detrimental break-up broke millions of hearts, but it would be easy to say that it was a surprise to see Black go full force into a solo endeavor. It is also easy to say that it was worth the effort, and anybody who has heard the disc already knows that it is not the Pixies, and that it is great.

Ever find yourself in the situation that you are alone, outside, a cool breeze blowing over you, and your body metaphysically complacent in your environment? You subconsciously think that there is nothing that could really make the moment flow more naturally, flow more surrealistically than the sense experience that you are endeavoring upon.

Well, here is the music to massage your speakers, your thoughts, and your "self." What Frank Black has created here is something that should be renamed. it should be called a gift — gift in the sense that Bob Mould's Workbook was a gift. It is a disc that is rarely appreciated fully, and has to be seen on more levels than what is just apparent on the surface.

Anyone who caught Black's interview on Alternative Nation with the insatiable Kennedy, got a good impression of what this man is like. He is full of irony, bad jokes and flab. And for some reason, not a single one of those adjectives is meant to have a negative connotation.

His self-titled disc starts off with a jumpin' little tune entitled "Los Angeles," which is the most rockin' track and one of the better tracks. When a Black track is described as rockin', the adjective must be taken with moderation, and not in the traditional sense.

Black ladens his tracks with heavy guitars, and omnipresent drums, but his voice really is what dominates the gist of it all. His voice pervades in a style that is not overbearing, and yet it remains the dominant factor in the formula of the songs. To say that Frank Black leaves a message that is strange in his music would be redundant. His lyrics are indecipherable in terms of meaning, yet leaves the impression that he has an incredibly personal, multi-level meaning with his lyrics.

There is not really a way to pinpoint a description of Black in his solo adventure. It is easy to say that the music is not overbearing, and it is a relaxing state-of-listening. It is ot really possible to compare Black to any current singer, at least in giving him proper justice. The disc is listener-friendly and leaves one feeling happy that he/she exerted the energy of putting it in the player.

Whether you are a former Pixies fan, or have just found new interest in Frank Black's promising career, you are sure to be totally satisfied with this CD purchase, though Black may appear to be a little intimidating with his large disposition and his "I'm way too happy" style of entertainment.

If you have some deep-seated interest in attaining this disc, then follow your instinct. If not, then the old rule that good music never gets big applies here. Maybe you shold just stick to your new Depeche Mode disc.

Superchunk tells offbeat stories

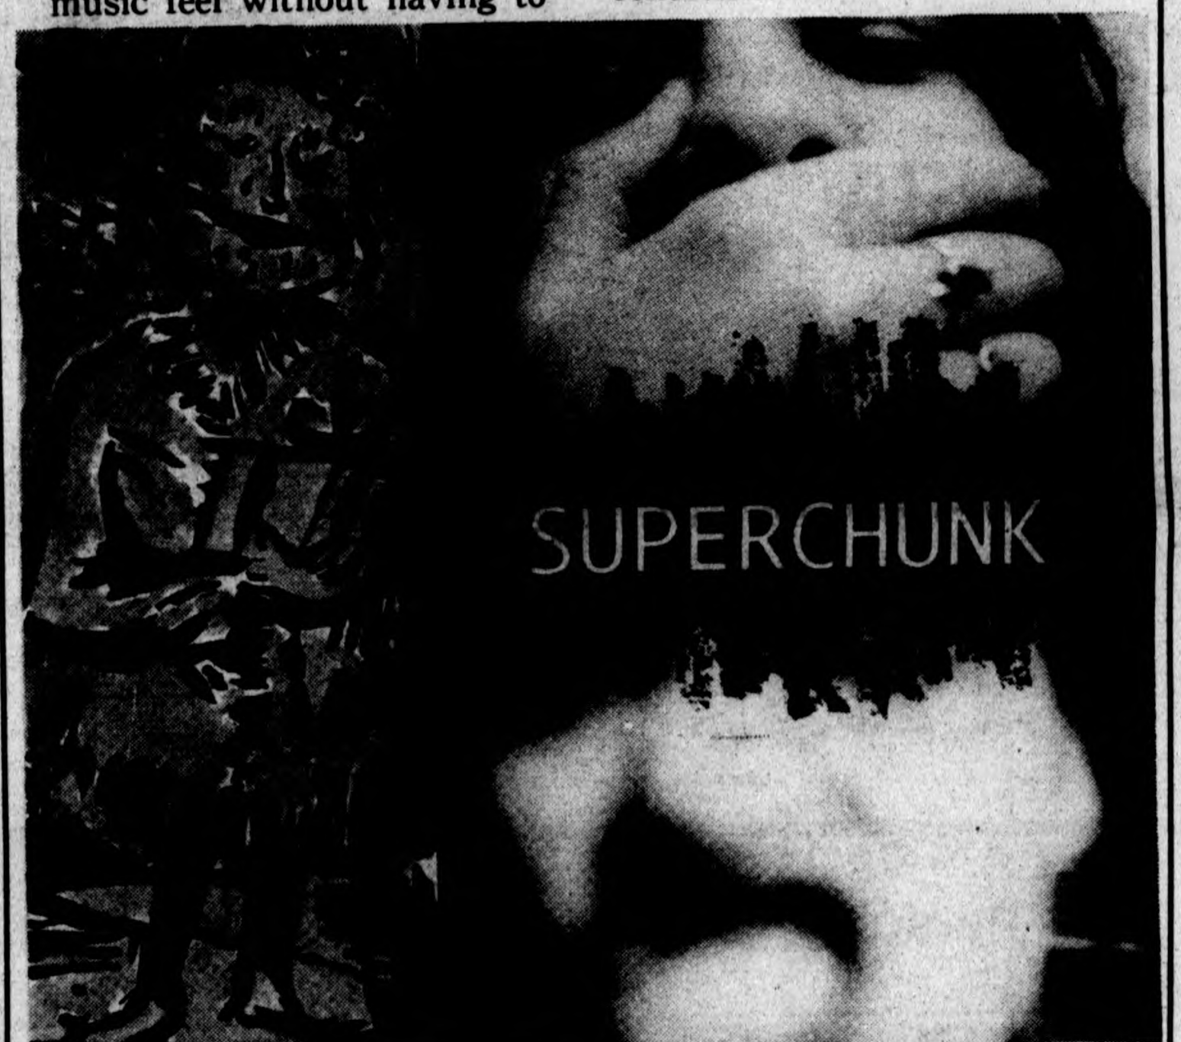
By REGGIE BEEHNER
Staff Reporter

Straight from the top of the college charts comes a band of gigantic proportions. Their new album, On The Mouth, swims upstream in a musical river whose origins seem rooted in the Seattle area. This band, consisting of one woman and three men, is similar to none. Their music contains all the influences of typical popular "college" bands, but it is what this band does with those influences that makes them so unique. "Well, who are these people?" is the question raised as the Pearl Jam CD glued to the player is replaced by this fresh sound.

The band is Superchunk. They have been around long enough to release nearly a half dozen albums, yet theirs is still anything but a household name. Their new album rocks with an energy comparable to few bands. The music is intense, raw, grungy and darn likeable. Released by Matador Records, the album is well produced, but keeps its garage-music feel without having to use any fancy effects.

The songs are well thought out, crafty pieces of musicianship. They probably are best classified as grunge, but the lyrics are sung quite clearly. The singing is unique in its backward approach. Instead of standing out above the instruments, the singing seems turned down in this mix. This brings out the instruments more, giving the album its unusual mellowness. The album's best tune, "Package Thief" cooks with high energy and has a nifty harmonized chorus. "Swallow That" is a mellow, bass-driven song that has a few characteristics similar to Pixies' tunes. "Trash Heap" has a laid-back feel to it with its drifty, distorted guitars and great, harmonized chorus (a la Midnight Oil).

Superchunk is a definite originator of a great new sound with 13 hefty songs to back them up. If you are searching for an album with a new kind of powerful quality to it, On the Mouth just might be the refreshing new breath of air for your collection.



'CB4' condemns real rap

By LYN MAHLER
Staff Reporter

One would think with the combined efforts of Chris Rock, Allen Payne, Deezer D, Charlie Murphy and Phil Hartman, even untalented producers could create an hysterically funny film capable of entertaining the audience for at least an hour and a half. Well, in this instance, that assumption would be wrong. Nelson George assembled this cast and yet failed to produce the expected results.

Though there were funny moments randomly dispersed throughout "CB4," the film as a whole lacked humor and interest. Several one-liners amused the audience briefly. However, the laughter quickly died since the jokes never lasted for more than a minute.

Several one-liners amused the audience briefly.

The movie takes place in the fictitious town of Locash, Calif. The name of the town obviously refers to the depressed economic status of its residents. Albert, played by Chris Rock, is an unsatisfied, frustrated and poor young man anxious to start his rap career. His two best friends, Otis and Rip (played by Deezer D. and Allen Payne) also eagerly await fortune and fame.

After many failed attempts during open-mike night at Gusto's, the local club run by Gusto (Charlie Murphy), the three decide that drastic measures must be taken for them to be noticed by Trustus Productions.

The opportunity arises when Gusto, busted for purchasing large amounts of cocaine, is sent away to prison. Albert seizes the opportunity by capturing Gusto's identity and creating Cell Block 4 (CB4), a gangsta-rapper group.

Albert becomes MC Gusto, the lead rapper and instigator in the development and success of the group. Otis becomes Star Master Arson, the mixer of the group. Rip transforms into Dead Mike, the secondary vocalist and spiritual leader of the rappers.

With new identities and a bogus criminal reputation, CB4 storms the American airwaves. Their raps focus on brutality toward women, violence in the streets, drugs and money. The lyrics satirize the rap offered to listeners today. The main message of CB4, condemning and belittling the messages of real rap, is clearly presented in the film.

Along with fame and fortune come corruption and dishonesty. After time, the three young men lose their old friends, family and sense of morality. Their worlds turn upside down leading each one to a different destruction. Fortunately for the audience, it is not as gloomy as it sounds. George articulates the changes inside these men comically, without depressing the viewers.

Even though the actors were not very funny, their actual acting performances were executed rather well. Phil Hartman, of "Saturday Night Live" fame, successfully portrayed the mayor of Locash. He made a valiant, though futile, attempt to accomplish his goal of punishing CB4 for their explicit lyrics and harm to children.

To add interest through the course of the movie, there are cameo appearances by Ice-T, Halle Berry, Ice Cube, Flavor Flav, Shaquille O'Neal, Easy E, Butthole Surfers and Virgil Robinson.

Maybe viewers' expectations are too high, but overall "CB4" does not live up to successful comedy standards. "CB4" would be an excellent rental choice, but it is not worth seeing in the theater.

What were those flapping, foamy yellow things at Greek Week?

Arnold Thetas — Happy Easter! Get plenty of Fun Bun over break. Don't go through hammah withdrawal. But most of all, rustle up a lot of beefcakes for our bar-b-que when we get back. — Larisa.

Congratulations — Elizabeth Hartnett, 1993 panhellenic philanthropy chair — We're proud of you — Your Sisters of Theta.

Personals

Partner In Crime, Hey, it was a good weekend, wasn't it? Even if one night was screwy. Don't go looking for a Friendly Stranger, come talk to me. Let's see if it works this weekend. Love, Sally.

Nash, When was the last time you went out with us? It's been a few months. We miss seeing you with too many cold beverages in you! Love, St. Monica Crew.

61 W. Hillcrest — You must be the only Villanovans with their own karaoke — dare to dream. I wish I was there to do my version of "Mandy" — a duet with that ex-b-ball star who keeps turning up in your living room. Jenn — You are so lucky! Let's hope it's true love — I'm very jealous. — Steve the flaming liberal.

Karen — We are the photo-fun masters. I can't wait till our next caper . . . the banquet perhaps? Liz — You are next on the stalker stare list. Great minds think alike. Shawger — Keep making fun of the accent & I'll turn you into a conehead again. I still don't believe you remember "cigars." T.C. — Look out for the guacamole — those avocados will get you every time (so will chimps). Chad — The next time you wear fishnets, shave your legs. Can I, eh, have a free one? Poppe — I'm getting punchy again. — Clean Canary.

Maria & Jen — Gallagher & I will make dinner Sat. — I swear — it's a date. J.G. — Thank you for listening to my boring problems, I'm so glad we're getting to know each other better — you're the best! Ren & Stimp — Su casa es mi casa!! Ancona — Mmm Mmm Mmm Mmm — You a fine looking woman. — COL.

Jerry — You say you want to come over but then never do. Promises, promises! Take advantage of not having the guard dog around. But look out for Fifi. — Arnold Thetas.

Homey, I'd like to say I had P.C., but let's just wait and see. I had a great time. I know I told you 4,000 times. Thanks for listening . . . over and over. Love, Screwdriver.

Fitz — The Cubbies will never finish ahead of the Pirates. The best manager in the history of baseball will lead the Buccos to a FOURTH Division Title in a row. Wake up!

American League looks to be wide open

By MIKE VECHESKY
Staff Reporter

It's almost opening day for the "Boys of Summer" and in the American League, both divisions look to be in hot pennant races all summer long. Here's the Villanovan's pre-season picks for 1993.

In the Eastern Division the New York Yankees look like the team to beat. With off-season aquisitions of Wade Boggs and Paul O'Neil, they have strengthened their lineup and improved their defense. Don Mattingly and Danny Tartabull look to have big seasons while youngsters Bernie Williams, Pat Kelly and Kevin Maas should finally produce. What puts the Yanks over the top is that they now have strong pitching in new comers Jim Abbott (2.77 ERA) and Jimmy Key (3.53 ERA), as well as underrated returnees, Melido Perez (2.87 ERA) and Steve Farr (30 saves). The only two things that might hold the Bronx Bombers back are injuries and the return of their unpredictable boss, George Steinbrenner.

The reigning World Champion Toronto Blue Jays are once again a very tough team, but they have a brand-new look. Although the Jays lost offensive stars Kelly Gruber, Candy Maldonaldo, Manny Lee and Dave Winfield, their lineup should remain strong with the likes of Joe Carter, Roberto Alomar, John Olerud, Devon White and the newly acquired Paul Molitor (.320 AVG.). Their starting rotation lost two big arms in David Cone and Jimmy Key and yet remains one of the league's best with Jack Morris, Juan Guzman and longtime Oakland ace Dave Stewart. The loss of closer Tom Henke leaves the Jays without a relief man. The time it takes for these new faces to mesh will tell whether they can repeat as champions.

The Baltimore Orioles might have the talent to surprise everyone and win the East. They definitely have the ballpark in which to do it. This year they should not only get more people but more wins. The Orioles have a great defensive team with outfielders Brady Anderson and Mike Deveraux and Gold Glove shortstop Cal Ripken. Each of those three can hit, too, which makes a solid all-around lineup when you add the power hitting of DH Glenn Davis and catcher Chris Hoiles (20 HR) with the speed of Harold Reynolds, who replaces Billy Ripken at second base. Although the O's have a great 1-2 pitching combo in starter Mike Mussina (18 wins) and reliever Gregg Olsen (36 saves), their staff then becomes pretty thin. Starters Ben McDonald and Rick Sutcliffe each had ERA's over 4.00 last year and must improve if Baltimore is going to contend.

The Detroit Tigers led the league in home runs and runs scored last year. They also had the league's highest ERA (4.60). Their pitching has improved by signing A's strongarm Mike Moore (17 wins). However, the Tigers must get more out of Bill Gullickson and Mark Leiter if closer Mike Henneman (24 saves) is to get many save opportunities. If the Tigers make a run, they will do it with their bats. The most powerful lineup in baseball features Cecil Feilder (35 HR), Travis Fryman (20 HR), Mickey Tettleton (32 HR), Rob Deer (32 HR), Lou Whitaker (19 HR) and slugger Alan Trammell.

Milwaukee Brewers manager Phil Garner took his scrappy team to a second place finish last year. He'll have to work miracles to compensate for losing the bats of solid hitters Paul Molitor, Scott Fletcher and Kevin Seitzer as well as his best pitcher, Chris Bosio. The Brewers' only bright spots look to be last year's standout rookies, shortstop Pat Listach and pitcher Cal Eldred, along with new ace Jaime Navarro (17 wins) and closer Doug Henry (29 saves).

Milwaukee's best — Robin Yount and cold beer — will have to make do for a long summer.

Speaking of long summers, the Boston Red Sox look to spend another one near the cellar. The Bosox have the best arm in baseball with Roger Clemens, not to mention Frank Viola and the newly acquired Scott Bankhead (2.93 ERA). What they do not have is any talented relievers. Boston lost Wade Boggs, Ellis Burks and Phil Plantier this off-season. Unless sluggers Mike Greenwell and Jack Clark can come back from sub-par seasons, not even the additions of power hitters Andre Dawson and Ivan Calderon will make Fenway a happy place this summer.

The Cleveland Indians have already faced a major setback during spring training. The recent boating accident that killed pitchers Steve Olin and Tim Crews, while critically injuring Bob Ojeda, stunned the sports world. A major crisis like this effects teams in different ways, so there is no telling whether it will help or hurt their quest to improve on last year's fourth place finish. The Tribe will look to the bats of Carlos Baerga (20 HR), Albert Belle (34 HR) and Paul Sorrento (18 HR) for their offense. Their already traumatized pitching staff must be steadied by Charles Nagy's leadership (17 wins).

In the AL West, the White Sox, Rangers, Mariners, Twins, A's and Royals all have a legitimate chance to win the division, while the Angels are going through a rebuilding year. It will be a close race between six balanced teams with the Chicago White Sox emerging on top.

The White Sox pitching staff will need more than Jack McDowell's, 20 wins and Bobby Thigpens 22 saves to contend. Dave Stieb's consistent arm was obtained from Toronto to help out but Kirk McCaskill, Scott Radinsky and last year's rookie star Roberto Hernandez (1.65 ERA) must come up with big years. The White Sox feature a lineup that includes a star at each position: Carlton Fisk catching, Frank Thomas at first, Steve Sax on second, Ozzie Guillen at shortstop, and Robin Ventura at the hot corner. The outfield will rotate between Tim Raines, Ellis Burks (from Boston), RBI-man George Bell and the speedy Lance Johnson. Bo Jackson's return to DH from his well-publicized hip injury proves that anything can happen with this team.

The Texas Rangers will again possess a potent lineup featuring the power of Jose Canseco (26 HR), Juan Gonzalez (43 HR), and Dean Palmer (26 HR), along with the solid bats of Julio Franco, Rafael Palmeiro and rookie all-star catcher Ivan Rodriguez. The Rangers will get help in relief from closer Tom Henke (34 saves with Toronto). However, Nolan Ryan, Kevin Brown (21 wins) and steady Charlie Leibrandt (from Atlanta), must pick up the slack for the now departed Jose Guzman (16 wins) and Jeff Russell (28 saves).

The Villanovan's surprise pick in the West is the Seattle Mariners. For a team that is noted for losing, they finally look like they have the talent and the manager in Lou Piniella to win the West. Their lineup includes a host of youngsters, featuring Edgar Martinez (.343 AVG.), Tino Martinez (16 HR), Jay Buhner (25 HR) and the incredible Ken Griffey Jr. By picking up Norm Charlton (26 saves) and Chris Bosio (16 wins) in the off-season, Seattle has improved on a staff which already possesses outstanding potential in Erik Hanson and Randy Johnson.

The Minnesota Twins' pitching staff will have to rebound from losing John Smiley's 16 wins and 241 innings if they are going to make another run at the title. Rick Aguilera (41 saves), Scott Erickson and Kevin Tapani will need help from some young arms to keep up. Kirby Puckett, Kent Hrbek, Chuck Knoblauch, Shane Mack and Brian Harper all have bats capable of carrying this team. Dave Winfield's leadership and 26 home runs should more than make up for the loss of Chili Davis.

The Oakland A's going from first to fifth place seems like an impossibility. Unless Tony LaRussa can get big seasons out of pitchers Bob Welch, Bobby Witt, Ron Darling and Storm Davis, the A's will not be able to repeat as division champs. Two of their best arms are gone in Mike Moore and Stewart, so the heat is on Dennis Eckersly to have another MVP and Cy Young Award-winning season. Although Canseco is gone, the A's still have plenty of pop in this lineup. Mark McGwire (42 HR), Harold Baines (16 HR) and Ruben Sierra (17 HR) will provide the power for leadoff man Rickey Henderson to steal the A's another shot at the playoffs.

The Kansas City Royals have enough talented arms to go all the way in pitchers Kevin Appier, David Cone, Mark Gubicza, Tom Gordon and Jeff Montgomery (39 saves). Unfortunately they do not have the bats. Not one player returns to this team with a batting average over .300, home runs past 17 or RBI's over 75. George Brett, Gregg Jeffries, Wally Joyner, Kevin McReynolds and Mike MacFarlane are the best of a group of hitters that are good but just not good enough.

The California Angels are rebuilding. They have replaced over-priced underachievers Von Hayes, Hubie Brooks, Lance Parrish, Alvin Davis and Don Robinson with a group of no-name youngsters. New acquisitions Kelly Gruber and Chili Davis will be the only big name veterans in their lineup. The pitching will be led by Chuck Finley and ace Mark Langston, who will have to make up for the loss of Jim Abbott to the Yankees.

A birthday? Greek get-together? Anniversary? Or even just a "hello" to that special someone. Make it known in the Villanovan personals.

Four teams remain in NCAA's

WEST

The Fab Five has been called everything from an NBA team in training to a bunch of self-centered underachievers, but love 'em or hate 'em, they are back in the Final Four. After nailbiting victories over ninth-seeded UCLA, twelfth-seeded George Washington, and seventh-seeded Temple, the Wolverines appear a different team from the one that rolled through the NCAA's a year ago. Nonetheless, the Wolverines are just glad to be back and hope to make the most of it.

SOUTHEAST

A year ago, Kentucky was 2.1 seconds from a Final Four, and possibly a national championship. The Wildcats decided to make things less interesting this year by adapting a new motto: kick rump. In the tournament thus far, Kentucky has won by an average of 31 points, including a 25 point romp over third-seeded Florida State. Travis Ford hit four of Kentucky's eleven three-pointers and freshman forward Jared Prickett led all scorers with 22 points. Kentucky stands as the team to beat in the Final Four.

EAST

UNC used a furious comeback to ward off the underrated Cincinnati Bearcats, 75-68, in OT. The Tarheels used a 12-0 run to take the lead 36-35 just before the half, after being down by as much as 15 early on. Montross, Lynch and Williams accounted for 56 of the Heels' 75 points. This is the ninth time Dean Smith will take the Heels to the Final Four, but it has been 10 years since a national title.

MIDWEST

Kansas used its depth and balanced scoring attack to wear out the No. 1 ranked Indiana Hoosiers and advance to its fourth Final Four since 1986. All five starters scored in double figures, but it was the strong bench showing that wore out the Hoosiers. Kansas appears to be back to its winning ways after a dismal final month, where the Jayhawks went 9-5.

Weekend Outlook:

Kentucky v. Michigan

Kentucky has made it clear that they are on a mission to win the national championship. Kentucky can go outside with Ford, Brown and Mashburn and inside with Prickett and Dent. Michigan must contest all three-point shots and dominate the boards to be competitive. Still, Kentucky has too many weapons.

Prediction:
Kentucky 94, Michigan 78

North Carolina v. Kansas

Dean Smith has to go all the way back to Michael Jordan for his last National Championship, and he realizes now is the time for another one. Standing in his way is his formal pupil, Roy Williams and the Kansas Jayhawks. The Heels showed against Cincinnati an ability to withstand a charge and drive forward. Kansas relies heavily on its three-point shooting, and should the treys go cold, the team will go cold as well.

Prediction:
North Carolina 73, Kansas 69
Championship Game:
Kentucky 81, North Carolina 75

Braves, Expos favored in National League race

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Senior Reporter

For the first time since 1977, the senior circuit will have a new look to it as it welcomes two new clubs to the mix, the Florida Marlins in the East and the Colorado Rockies in the West. Despite giving the National League 14 teams, matching the number in the American League, do not expect either one to contend, especially Colorado. No other team can match the pitching-rich Braves in the West. The East, however, is a different story. It is totally up for grabs.

NL WEST

1. Atlanta Braves

Tom Glavine. John Smoltz. Greg Maddux. Steve Avery. With all four of these starters capable of winning 20 games apiece, the Braves appear a lock to capture their third straight divisional crown. Ron Gant, Otis Nixon, Deion Sanders and Dave Justice combine to form one of the best outfields in the game. The Braves, having lost in the World Series the past two years, have good reason to think the third time is the charm.

2. Houston Astros

The winter signings of free agent pitchers Doug Drabek and Greg Swindell lift the Astros from pretenders to contenders. The experienced starters know how to win and will bolster a young team. The Astros have a lot of young talent that is eager to prove themselves.

3. Cincinnati Reds

This team is not at all short on talent. With the addition of outfielder Kevin Mitchell and pitcher John Smiley, the Reds have added needed depth in two important areas. First-year manager Tony Perez has the pieces to work with but will have to develop team chemistry.

4. San Francisco Giants

If teams were judged solely on hitting, the Giants would be near the top of the list. Their lineup consists of such heavyweights as Barry Bonds, Matt Williams, Willie McGee and Will Clark. However, without an ace the starting pitching is shakey. The bullpen could be a strong point with closers Rod Beck and Bill Swift.

5. San Diego Padres

The Padres boast one of the strongest hitting trios in the league in Tony Gwynn, Gary Sheffield and Fred McGriff. The three kept the team in contention last year but have little support behind them this year. The penny-pinching Padres lost key contributors Randy Myers and Tony Fernandez and got little in return. With starter Bruce Hurst on the way out, San Diego does not have the pitching to contend.

6. Los Angeles Dodgers

Hoping to rebound from last place, the Dodgers should do so. The Rockies are in this division. The keys to this club are starting pitchers Orel Hershiser and Ramon Martinez. Both must turn it around for the Dodgers to reach .500.

7. Colorado Rockies

Composed of castoffs from other teams, the Rockies are setting their sights on the future. Definitely not the near future. The club has some young talent in pitcher David Nied and outfielder Jerald Clark on which to build. Nevertheless, this club will be lucky to win 50 games.

NL EAST

1. Montreal Expos

The Expos are the best of a mediocre division. Potential superstars Delino DeShields, Marquis Grissom, Larry Walker and Moises Alou combine speed and power to give the Expos a solid lineup. Dennis Martinez and Ken Hill anchore the starting pitching and stopper John Wetteland had 37 saves a year ago.

2. Chicago Cubs

Despite losing Andre Dawson and Greg Maddux, the Cubs have an underrated pitching staff that could keep them in the hunt. Former American Leaguers Jose Guzman and Greg Hibbard are capable 15-game winners in addition to the consistent Mike Morgan and Frank Castillo. However, the Cubs lack power in their lineup.

3. New York Mets

It is an odd year, 1993, so pitcher Bret Saberhagen should have a good year, if he avoids the injury bug. That goes for the entire pitching staff. John Franco, Dwight Gooden and Sid Fernandez all seem to come down with nagging injuries that hinder the overrated Mets. Manager Jeff Torborg needs productive seasons from sluggers Howard Johnson and Bobby Bonilla to contend.

4. Philadelphia Phillies

Similar to the Giants in the West, the Phillies have one of the best lineups in the league behind Lenny Dykstra, Dave Hollins, John Kruk and Darren Daulton. The Phils are fine in that department. The pitching is the problem. After ace Terry Mulholland, the rest of the staff is unproven.

5. Pittsburgh Pirates

The defending NL East champs are reeling from the loss of stars Doug Drabek, Barry Bonds and Jose Lind. Manager Jim Leyland is in for a long year despite outfielder Andy Van Slyke and shortstop Jay Bell bolstering the lineup.

6. St. Louis Cardinals

The scrappy Cardinals are relying on the tremendous outfield duo of Ray Lankford and Bernard Gilkey to provide the punch with the bats. The team basically has an inexperienced starting pitching staff and one proven infielder in the aging Ozzie Smith.

7. Florida Marlins

Unlike the Rockies, Florida has built a team full of veterans who may be competitive. All-star catcher Benito Santiago will work with experienced starters Charlie Hough and Jack Armstrong as well as closer Bryan Harvey. With a mix of youth and experience, the Marlins will be competitive.

Major troubles confront major leagues

every two or three weeks, usually involving the same big market teams (Yankees, Mets, Dodgers, Braves), causing advertising revenue to decrease. ESPN has done a good job with its production: but as a cable station it can not easily get the number of potential viewers that CBS, a free network, can.

Free agency is driving salaries to astronomical proportions. A mediocre .230 hitter can now pull down $2 million a year. Paul Molitor, who played 15 years for the Milwaukee Brewers, will put on a Toronto Blue Jay uniform because Milwaukee, a small market team with low attendance and television revenues, could not meet the $13 million, three-year contract that Toronto, a team that draws four million in attendance each year, gave him. Should an oft-injured, 36-year-old designated hitter receive $4.25 million a year?

Or Barry Bonds, the big fish in the free agent pool last winter. The San Francisco Giants, who were a baby step away from moving to Tampa, dished out a whopping $43.75 million, six-year contract for the slugging outfielder.

The innocent game we knew a few years ago now appears to be more of a troubled business than a rite of summer.

The key buzzwords in baseball economics these days are revenue sharing and salary cap. Both of these concepts have helped stabilize the NBA, and the owners of small market teams are pushing hard for a similar system.

Milwaukee, Pittsburgh and San Diego — three competitive teams last year — have undergone "fire sales," unloading high priced stars for cheap prospects. They do not have the attendance base or local television contract like the New York or Chicago teams.

So teams must raise the prices of tickets and food at the games. For instance, the Chicago White Sox, a relatively high payroll, have ticket prices ranging from $7 to $18, and the Philadelphia Phillies, with a lower payroll, have ticket prices between $4 to $12.

Add in parking, programs, hot dogs, drinks and a family of four can spend upwards of $75 a game. But hey, at least the games are slower now, so you get more for your hard-earned dollar.

Not all is bad in baseball. The Colorado Rockies and Florida Marlins take the field for the first time this spring, though both are projected to finish well behind the pack. Rotisserie baseball and card collecting are still booming, and with the exception of Arena Football, there is no competition with other professional sports for most of the season. Basketball and football may be more exciting, but for now, see you at the Vet.

Quintana spurs on men's track

By LARRY LANZA
Staff Reporter

The Villanova men's track team opened the outdoor season by taking victories in three events at the March 26-27 Stanford Track and Field Festival in a meet that marked a homecoming for the team's four Californians.

Senior Brad Sumner brought the Cats to two of their wins by capturing first place in the 1500-meter and by leading off 'Nova's victorious distance medley relay, while sophomore Louie Quintana earned Villanova's other victory by winning the invitational mile.

Joining the Californian Quintana in a return to their home state were sophomore Dave Hartman, who enjoyed an excellent showing in the 10,000 meter, senior Terrence Mahon, who had solid efforts in the 1500 and 5000 meter, and sophomore Todd Tressler, who ran a heat in the 1500 meter.

Two weeks after his individual and relay workload of efforts at NCAA Indoor Championships, Sumner moved up from his usual 800 meter event at Stanford to show his outstanding strength in the longer 1500 meter race.

With his winning performance of three minutes, 51 seconds, Sumner led the Wildcats to three of the top six places in the 1500 event. Behind Sumner, freshman Scott Whiteman took fourth in 3:54, while freshman Kevin Christiani placed sixth in 3:55.

Also in the 1500, Mahon ran eighth in 3:58, while Tressler took eighth in his heat in 4:06.

Earlier in the meet, Sumner had set the tempo for 'Nova's winning distance medley relay team when he ran a strong 2:58 on the 1200 meter leadoff leg. Sumner's excellent start was followed up by good races from sophomore Chuck Silvester and Whiteman, who ran 47.9 seconds and 1:53 for their respective 400m and 800m legs. Veteran Wildcat miler Mike Going anchored 'Nova down with a 4:14 mile to bring VU to the line in 9:55.

The invitational mile saw Quintana turn a slow race around with a very fast final half-mile that brought him to victory in 4:04. After a 2:06 opening half-mile, Quintana came to the finish in the last half-mile of the race in 1:58 to defeat Washington's Neil Panchen.

Behind Quintana, Going finished third in 4:09 and sophomore Ken Nason placed ninth in 4:16.

"The weather was bad [rainy and cool], so it was a little hard to get motivated," said Quintana, who is used to better conditions in California. "But having family and friends from home sitting out there got me up to run well."

The home factor seemed to work as well for Dave Hartman, who fought to a second place finish in the 10,000 with a good time of 30:45. Like Quintana, Hartman ran a negative split by racing faster over the second half of his race.

Over the first 5000 meters, Hartman found himself in a lead pack of four that came through the halfway mark (3.1 miles) in 15:40. With two miles to go, that pack was whittled to two when Hartman made a surge that was followed only by the University of Portland's Matt Steidl.

Steidl stayed on Hartman's shoulder before passing Hartman with a half-mile to go and then going on to win by eight seconds.

Behind Hartman and Steidl, Wildcat freshman Matt Lamourie took seventh in 31:27.

"I'm happy with the result," said Hartman. "I wasn't really sure what to expect since this was my first 10 kilometers [10,000 meter] on the track."

"The fact that I haven't done any real speed work yet left me feeling a little flat at the end," continued Hartman, who will return to California with teammate Terrence Mahon to run another 10,000 meter race in two weeks.

In 'Nova's only other events at Stanford, Mahon took fourth in the 5000 in 14:24, and graduate student Greg Mirecki had a best throw of 140′ 10″ in the discus.

This weekend the Wildcats travel to the University of Miami to compete in the Miami Invitational.

Big East picks and pans

By PAT MEILER
Staff Reporter

The Georgetown Hoyas finished the 1992-93 rendition of Big East basketball on a down note as they fell in the NIT Championship game to the Minnesota Golden Gophers, 62-61, on March 31.

Coach John Thompson's crew (20-13) knocked off the likes of Arizona State and USC on their march to the championship game. Point guard Joey Brown led the Hoyas with 16 points and 8 assists.

Providence College, which played in the NIT consolation game previous to the Georgetown/Minnesota contest, fell to the University of Alabama-Birmingham by a score of 55-52. Power forward extraordinaire Michael Smith led P.C. (20-13) with 17 points and 14 boards. On their voyage to the NIT Final Four, the Friars took out James Madison University, West Virginia University and Boston College.

Boston College beat Niagara and Rice before again losing to Providence. UConn, the other Big East member in the NIT, was knocked off at home in round one by Jackson State.

Big East Commissioner no longer on the Defensive

The stats do not lie. The 1992-93 Big East NCAA teams: Three. The 1992-93 Sweet 16 teams: zero. The 1992-93 Big East out of conference record and percentage: 74-27, 73 percent. Do not fall out of your chair if I would suggest the conference is down a bit. The conference is down. All season, the coaches and conference commissioner defended the 10-league member teams. But, as stated previously, a league is judged by its post season record. 1992-93 was the first time in seven seasons the conference failed to get a team in the NCAA Sweet 16. The conference commissioner recently decided to put the chips on the table.

A March 24, 1993 Middlesex News article ran an interesting piece on the Big East Commissioner Mike Tranghese.

"You discover how good or bad you are in the NCAA's. I'm not going to sit and tell you things are fine. They're not. We've done a poor job recruiting and evaluating talent. I'm not going to sit here [as the commissioner] and lose. I am going to say a lot of things to our coaches and administratrators that they don't want to hear," Tranghese said.

"The bottom line is that our coaches have to go out and recruit better people. I can accept the fact we lose kids to Kentucky, Indiana and Duke, but when you start talking about other schools in the East, we should be winning those battles," said Tranghese.

We've done a poor job recruiting and evaluating talent. I'm not going to sit here and lose.
Commissioner Mike Tranghese

"We've got teams full of great athletes and teams that play excellent defense, but you have also got to be able to score, too. Right now the ACC and Big 10 are the two best conferences, and after that there are about four that are very even. We are one of those. But that's not what I want us to be. We have to go back and do the things we did in the beginning. The marketing, promotion and recruiting. We have to go back to square one," Tranghese added.

Tranghese may go to the extreme, but conference members must be aggressive in their recruiting methodology. It is true that Thompson, Boeheim, Massimino and Carnesecca were hungrier a decade ago. It is true that Georgetown's past five years of recruiting, sans Harrington/Spencer, have been depressing. It is true that the conference as a whole may have seemed content. But not anymore. The conference is at a crossroads.

Conference will improve in 1993-94.

The 1993-94 Big East campaign will mark the beginning of the resurgence of the conference.

The conference returns some 70 percent of this season's starters next year. For example, BC is almost entirely intact; Georgetown loses nobody.

Providence has alreadv notched a top-25 class for next season, SJU scooped St. Anthony High's star center, SU bagged a top-30 player and 'Nova signed athletic guard Alvin Williams. V.U. is battling G'town and two others for the best player in the nation — Rasheed Wallace. The Cats are also in the hunt to make the Main Line Mr. Lawson's (6-11 Olney High center Jason Lawson) neighborhood. Big East fans will be quite pleased with the incoming talent next season.

Tranghese has added fuel to the fire. He will not allow contentment to breed. He expects success.

Younger, more enthusiastic coaches such as Brian Mahoney, Leonard Hamilton, Rick Barnes and Steve Lappas are destined for success. They have determination and will.

Slow, foul-filled games will be a thing of the past.

Up is the only way to go. Players win the games. A multitude of returning starters plus top notch newcomers should add up to a bountiful 1993-94 Big East campaign. There is hope for the future.

Men find Tobacco Road to be a rough ride

By BOB TRAVISANO
Assistant Editor

This past week was bittersweet for the men's lacrosse team. 'Nova's 19-4 victory over Fairfield was almost a reverse carbon copy of their 17-5 loss versus Duke.

After three straight blowout losses to Virginia, Towson State and Pennsylvania, the team desperately needed a win. That win would come at the hands of Fairfield.

"We wanted to get a win badly. This was Fairfield's first year in Division I, so we just jumped out to a big lead," said sophomore midfielder Brian Goger.

Truthfully, this game was a total mismatch. 'Nova jumped out to a 9-0 lead, including eight scores in the first quarter.

"The freshmen usually look to Scott [Chisholm] and Rick [Bontatibus] for offense. They realized that these guys can't supply all the offense, so the freshmen really stepped up," said Goger.

The defense was also key in this game. Behind senior tri-captain Mike Buono, the "D" held Fairfield to only four goals, two per half.

Junior attackman Rick Bontatibus, last year's leading scorer with 45 points, is the same kind of explosive scorer this season. Versus Fairfield he had two goals and six assists, to lead the Cats with eight points. Junior middie Scott Chisholm, last year's fourth-leading scorer, had three goals and an assist.

We had a real tough time in transition. The offense seemed rushed because they were down by too many goals.
Sophomore Brian Goger

Others contributing were sophomores Kevin Crowley, Pat Grohar and Goger, each with two goals. Freshman Craig Scornavacca netted three goals; Mike Vecchio added two and Owen Cosgrove scored one.

The next game against Duke was not the type of game that any team would have wanted to play. In a reverse role, the Blue Devils got out to a 5-0 lead in the first quarter, a lead which would be insurmountable for the Wildcats.

"We had a real tough time in transition," said Goger. "The offense seemed rushed because they were down by too many goals. When the midfielders tried to score, they couldn't, because they got too tired of playing defense."

'Nova did get its shots, however, ringing up 25 total. The Duke "D" and goalkeeping proved to be too much as the Blue Devils stopped 14 shots and the defense forced a few errant shots.

The Cats' scoring came from Chisholm with three goals and from Goger and Crowley, who notched one each.

On the season Bontatibus and Chisholm lead the team with 16 points apiece. With only five games played thus far, Bontatibus is well on a pace to break last season's scoring mark. Mark Nagle and Grohar have seven points each and Crowley, Goger, Ian Hinchcliffe and Sol Mahoney all have four.

Starting goalie Brian Kash has 62 saves on the season.

The laxmen's 19-4 blowout of Fairfield was the Cats' first win of the season.

Laxwomen drop fifth straight

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Sports Editor

Your team has dropped three home games in a row. You now face two games on the road. And these are not any ordinary opponents your team faces.

One of the teams clobbered you last year 13-6 in an abbreviated game. The other team has a brand-new coach, brand-new talent and a brand-new attitude. This is not an enviable situation.

Such was the daunting challenge faced by the Villanova laxwomen last week. And try as they did, the Wildcats could not overcome the strength of University of Maryland-Baltimore County or Georgetown University. The Cats dropped both games, extending their losing streak to five games and slipping to a 1-5 record.

"We need to work together more as a team," said tri-captain Carrie Walsh assessing Villanova's difficulties. "It seems like everyone can do it on their own, but we're not working together."

'Nova headed down south to Loyola, MD to face UMBC on March 24. The Cats expected a tough road ahead, as the Retrievers had won decisively last season in a game that was postponed at halftime due to lighting. However, Villanova was in top form against UMBC this time around.

"We definitely played better than last year," said Head Coach Megan Harlan. "There were still some mistakes made, but it was definitely an improvement. Each game they're improving."

Freshman Nicole Nigrelli carried the Cats early on in this contest. Although it took the Retrievers less than two minutes to light up the scoreboard, Nigrelli quickly tied the game at one with a Heidi Connor assist. After UMBC scored again, Nigrelli retaliated and tied the game 2-2. Her third goal of the game came late in the second half, and brought her season total to four goals, five assists, and nine points.

'Nova was competitive throughout the first half. Consecutive Wildcat goals from Connor and tri-captain Ann Magee tied the game at four apiece. At halftime, UMBC held an 8-5 lead, which was padded with three lightning-quick goals within the first 2:30 of the second half. Although Villanova outscored the Retrievers 5-2 for the rest of the game, they could not overcome the six-goal deficit, and went on to lose 13-10. Senior Monica Hopson, one of the team's top offensive players last year, had her first big game of the season, scoring three goals toward the end of the second half.

The Cats' matchup against Georgetown four days later was not nearly as close. Villanova scored only one goal in the first half, and the Hoyas extended their 7-1 halftime lead into an 11-3 victory. Tri-captain Leigh Ann Leone led the Cats with two goals, and tri-captain Ciara Perrotti scored one. Nigrelli and junior Elena Rawson each registered one assist for the game.

"Georgetown was definitely a better team than us; they deserved to win," said Harlan. "The game should have been closer, but they're a good team, much improved from last year. They're starting six freshmen and they have a new coach."

Playing without a backup, the pressure was on senior goalie Stacey Rozzi to play a solid netminding game. Rozzi saved 12 shots against UMBC and 15 against Georgetown. She has now saved 68 of 116 shots, and her .586 save percentage is tenth in the nation.

"There's a lot of pressure on a goalie when there's no backup," said Harlan. "I think it's difficult, especially in practice, to be the only one . . . Stacey's doing a good job, though."

Also among the nation's leaders is Leone, who ranks fifth nationally with 21 points (17 goals, four assists). Leone is fourth in goals scored and eighth in goals per game.

After a brutal stretch of three top-notch opponents, the Wildcats now have five consecutive games against local opponents. 'Nova hosts Lehigh tomorrow at 11 a.m. in Villanova Stadium, and will face West Chester on the road on April 6. A strong showing against the regional competition can put the Cats back in the running for a winning season, but Harlan prefers not to look that far ahead.

"We're working hard at [a winning record], but you can't tell," she said. "We're taking it one game at a time and trying not to look at the end of the season."

Crew starts season

The Schuylkill River hosted Villanova's first crew race of the program's second season on March 27.

In their 11 varsity and novice entries, the boats pulled through George Washington University, St. Joe's, Lafayette, Loyola and Drexel crews.

Due to windy conditions and recent rains, the river ran rapidly, speeding the boats through the 2,000 meter course. The crews that remained controlled and quick in their motions reached the finish line first.

The women's varsity four, finishing each stroke strongly, prevailed in its category in front of Loyola by :13 and St. Joe's by :10. The men's lightweight eight achieved Villanova's fastest time of 5:33.0, only .3 seconds behind first place George Washington. Villanova's freshman novice women also impressed, notching a first place in their four competition against St. Joe's and Lafayette boats.

Results:

Men's lightweight eight: 1. George Washington, 5:32.7; 2. Villanova, 5:33.0; 3. Drexel, 5:34.7; 4. Villanova, 5:55.2.

Women's varsity eight: 1. George Washington A, 5:57.0; 2. George Washington B, 6:13.7; 3. St. Joseph's, 6:16.2; 4. Lafayette, 6:26.0; 5. Villanova, 6:41.5; 6. Loyola, 6:44.0.

Men's junior-varsity eight: 1. Penn, 5:31.6; 2. George Washington, 5:36.6; 3. Drexel, 5:41.5; 4. Villanova, 5:46.7.

Women's freshman novice eight: 1. George Washington, 6:13.2; 2. Villanova, 6:46.7; 3. Lafayette, 7:08.3; 4. St. Joseph's, 7:16.3.

Women's novice eight: 1. George Washington, 6:34.0; 2. Villanova, 7:20.8.

Women's varsity four: 1. Villanova, 6:51.0; 2. St. Joseph's, 7:01.6; 3. Loyola, 7:04.0.

Men's varsity four: 1. Loyola, 6:05.4; 2. Villanova A, 6:07.3; 3. Lafayette, 6:22.9; 4. Villanova B, 6:51.8.

Women's freshman novice four: 1. Villanova, 7:04.6; 2. Lafayette A, 7:15.6; 3. St. Joseph's A, 7:24.2; 4. Lafayette B, 7:30.4; 5. St. Joseph's B, 7:36.4.

Men's freshman novice four: 1. La Salle, 6:26.0; 2. Penn, no time; 3. Villanova, no time.

Tennis wins away, loses at home

By MICHEL DAVIES
Staff Reporter

Despite showing flashes of brilliance, 'Nova's men's tennis team all too often reveals its youth in losing crucial matches. After splitting their matches last week, the Cats needed to play tough tennis this week as they encountered Big East rival Seton Hall along with Colgate and West Chester.

It was obvious early on that the Cats' match against Colgate was going to be a close one. Junior Tom Boutrous, 'Nova's No. 1 player, was evident of this as he fought through a fiercely contested first set.

Showing why he is the top player on this team, Boutrous went on to set an example for the rest of the team by dropping Colgate's top seed 7-5 in the first set. Just as all strong players do, Boutrous used the momentum he had established to carry himself to an easy 6-1 victory in the second set to seal the match.

What the Cats failed to do was follow Boutrous' example. Although the singles players did play well, winning four of six matches behind strong performances from Andy Frick, Mike Flaherty and Bryan Cavalier, it was the doubles teams that failed to produce.

Normally, after winning four of the six singles matches, victory would seem evident. However, with one victory in doubles needed to secure the match, the Cats showed why Coach Robert Langran considers them young and inexperienced." Unable to win a doubles match, 'Nova wasted the chance for an easy victory losing to Colgate 5-4.

The next day, the Cats showed why they are considered a team with so much potential. Although West Chester College cannot be considered a top contender, it is still a formidable opponent. And with the tough loss against Colgate still lingering in their minds it was important for the Cats to shake off their loss from the day before and concentrate on the match at hand.

Indeed they did. 'Nova came out smoking, managing to sweep the first six matches of singles play. Perhaps most impressive was sophomore Cavalier's win. Previously Cavalier had played at the No. 5 singles spot, but Langran moved Cavalier up a notch to No. 4 against West Chester. Needless to say, Cavalier responded in first-class fashion by defeating his opponent 6-0, 6-3. The Cats went on to sweep the doubles segment of the match as well. In the end they crushed West Chester 9-0.

The most difficult match lay ahead for 'Nova. They now had to move on and face Big East rival Seton Hall. Although one would think that the Cats would be on fire after such a blowout victory over West Chester, this was not the case.

Boutrous lost his match handily, as did Robert Elliot and Sullivan. The early losses hurt the Cats too much and they entered the doubles portion with only two victories from Flaherty and Cavalier. Although the Cats swept the doubles portion for what would normally be a 5-4 win, the new Division I format, which minimizes the importance of doubles, gave Seton Hall a 4-3 win.

Although it has been said many times, the Cats are going to have to play more consistently if they want to challenge future opponents. The close matches against tough opponents Colgate and Seton Hall clearly illustrate that they have the talent. The true test of the season is going to be whether Langran can harness this team's talent and turn it into important victories.

Baseball in trouble

By JONATHAN PASSMAN

Baseball. The crack of the bat, the roar of the crowd, the diving catch, the smell of freshly cut grass — or freshly vacuumed astroturf at selected parks. It is still our national pastime, but for how long?

Sure, major league baseball stimulates the imagination of every little leaguer on every field across our great nation. But the innocent game we knew a few years ago now appears to be more of a troubled business than a rite of summer. Overpriced television contracts, free agency, rising ticket prices and bickering between management and the players' union are just some of the major problems that Major League Baseball faces.

The four year television contract with CBS and ESPN expires after this year, with both networks experiencing serious losses. It was naturally assumed four years ago that CBS would continue the "Game of the Week" tradition that NBC used to carry. However, CBS only shows a game

The 'Nova nine came through in the clutch to beat Rutgers

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Sports Editor

Though the economy may be suffering, there is still a great demand for lumber on the Main Line. The baseball team has been throwing a lot of it around lately, and opposing pitchers are finding out the hard way just how strong 'Nova's lineup can be.

Rutgers was the latest victim. The Scarlet Knights visited 'Nova on March 31 and for a while, they were able to keep the Cats' bats quiet. But 'Nova received à wake-up call from Larry Kleinz when the freshman shortstop launched his first homerun of the year to put the Cats on the board.

Despite this, Rutgers held a four-run lead in the eighth inning and seemed well in control of the game. But no lead is safe against 'Nova, as the Cats clawed their way back into the game.

Down 5-3 in the bottom of the ninth, Chris Massella stepped up to the plate with two outs in what was truly a pressure situation. But the junior second baseman came through with a clutch two-run single to tie the game up and force extra innings.

"I really didn't feel the pressure," said Massella. "I was just trying to hit the ball hard somewhere and help the team."

Steve Young led off the bottom of the 10th with a double to keep the momentum alive for the Cats. Jack Stanczak was then intentionally walked to bring up Mike Evangelista. The senior laid down a perfect bunt to load the bases with no outs. But Rutgers responded by coaxing a strikeout and a harmless fly ball to shallow left field.

The Cats stood in familiar territory with two outs and the game on the line. It looked as if Rutgers might escape the inning until senior Ed Deal ended the contest with a shot over the third baseman's head. With the 6-5 win, 'Nova evened its record on the season at 6-6.

"The whole game we felt like we could come back and tie it," said Massella. "Up and down the lineup, we can really hit well."

"It was a very good win," said excited Head Coach George Bennett. "We played poorly at the beginning and we squandered many opportunities. But it was just a good win."

Freshman Scott Reidenbach hurled two scoreless innings of relief to notch the win.

The Cats opened up Big East play March 27 with a doubleheader split against Pittsburgh. 'Nova won the first game in convincing fashion, 9-1, but came from ahead to lose the second game 13-10.

In the first contest, David Herr permitted just six hits while striking out four to earn a seven inning complete game victory. Stanczak was the main man at the plate for the Cats, as the senior third baseman went 4-for-4 with three RBIs. Kevin Armstrong collected three hits while Dan Marinello and Young had two hits apiece, as the Cats tallied a season-high 16 hits.

'Nova picked up the second game where it left off, as the Cats built a 7-0 lead after three innings on the strength of a three-run homer by Deal. But 'Nova could not preserve its lead and Pitt went on to take a 13-10 lead after eight innings, at which time the game was called because of darkness.

"We helped them to come back. We gave them 11 runs with two outs," said Bennett. "It was more mental mistakes than physical mistakes."

Stanczak was named the Big East Conference player of the week for his 5-for-7 effort and four RBIs in the doubleheader.

The Cats will travel to Chestnut Hill, MA to take on Boston College for two Big East contests Saturday and Sunday.

Women shine in Stanford meet

By SEAN KELLY
Assistant Sports Editor

The Villanova women's 1993 outdoor track and field season began last weekend on a rain-soaked track at the Stanford Invitational.

Not unlike the early portion of the indoor season, preliminary meets such as these are more or less tuneup events for the Big East Championships and the NCAA Championships, which do not take place for over a month. Actually, the Wildcats are using the first three meets in order to prepare for the highly-publicized Penn Relays beginning April 20.

Fortunately, the Stanford track was not wet enough to prevent Villanova from being victorious in three races. It was business as usual for the ladies who were looking to gain as many NCAA automatic and provisional qualifying times as possible.

Carol Zajac opened her third outdoor season with a superb race in the 5,000 meter event. She broke the tape at 16:17.0 which was enough to meet the NCAA automatic standard. Even through the day's showers, the race failed to remain close with Zajac heavily outrunning the rest of the field. The nearest competitor to 'Nova's long distance specialist was 48 seconds behind her winning time.

The relay teams appear to be in fantastic shape with two meets remaining prior to the Penn Relays. Villanova's 4x800 meter relay assembly looked particularly sharp with its first place time of 9:03.06. This time was 13 seconds faster than the second place finishers. The Wildcats featured seniors Cheri Goddard and Abby Hunte, as well as freshmen Stacey Robinson and Nikki Shaw, who is a native Californian. Goddard managed to run the fasted split of 2:13.9 with Shaw anchoring the victory.

The Distance Medley team also looked decent in its event, breaking the tape seven seconds ahead of the field at 11:40.7. This event also featured two seniors in addition to sophomore Tosha Woodward and freshman Cathalina Staye. Nnenna Lynch and Goddard ran the first and fourth legs with Staye and Woodward racing in the second and third.

In the 1500 meters, the Villanova trio of senior Reenie Ruopoli, freshman Jen Rhines and junior Emer Molloy finished in second, third and fourth. Sophomore Becky Spies raced to a fourth place finish in the 800 meters.

Once again Goddard, Lynch and Ruopoli will be looked to heavily for the duration of the outdoor campaign. With each of their consistent performances, as well as the tremendous abilities of Zajac and Hunte, the Cats definitely have plenty of leadership to carry them through the year.

Certainly the newcomers to the outdoor season will need to play a major role if the Wildcats are going to capture any championships, though. Keep in mind that Staye, Flowers, Shaw, Rhines and Robinson are still only freshmen, so their impressive indoor term should have really been a springboard for this season. Also, Tosha Woodward is running her premiere outdoor season as a Wildcat after transferring at the end of last year from Rutgers.

With the number of great athletes, both new and old, competing for Villanova this spring, the Wildcats certainly have what it takes to win numerous individual titles and perhaps a few team championships as well.

Softball sweeps Penn 4-3, 2-0

By TODD LESKANIC

Weather finally permitted the softball season to get underway and the 'Nova women took quick advantage of it. The Cats travelled down the Main Line to UPenn for a doubleheader on March 25. 'Nova topped the Quakers in the first game 4-3. In the second game, the Cats won even more convincingly, shutting out Penn 2-0.

The first game took eight innings to complete but the Cats pushed the winner across in the top of the eighth. Penn took an early 1-0 lead; however, it did not last long as Sharon Palmieri led off the top of the third with a base hit and scored on a ground out by Amy Pawloski. Penn retook the lead in the bottom of the sixth, 2-1. The Cats got two in the top of the seventh on singles by Carrie Dunn, Michele Arico, and an RBI single by Palmieri. Tina Sabunas knocked in another run on a ground-out. UPenn tied it in the bottom of the seventh. In the eighth, however, 'Nova scored one more on a sacrifice by Sheri Howarth to put an end to it. In the pitching department, senior Amy Meisinger threw all eight innings, giving up only two hits and striking out six to notch her first win of the year.

The second game was dominated by freshman pitcher Tina Sabunas. Sabunas pitched six innings giving up only one hit while striking out three and walking none.

"For my first college game, I was nervous. [Catcher] Sharon helped me out and gave me pointers. I had good control. It was a little awkward because it was a little farther away. But other than that, it was a good showing. Everyone played really well for the first time outside as a team," said a relieved Sabunas.

The only two runs needed for the victory were scored in the third inning, four consecutive singles by Palmieri, Courtney Gayeski, Kolatac and Palowski. One run scored on Pawloski's single and the other came in on a fielder's choice ground-out by Dina Squilanti.

Sophomore Carrie Dunn probably best voiced the team's attitude when she commented, "It's fun to be back playing again. We all worked together as a team. It's as if we never left the field."

In more recent news, the team was supposed to play on March 27 against St. John's. St. John's wasted everyone's time, including their own, by coming to 'Nova and then deciding the field was unplayable. Even the umpires said it was playable, but no, not St. John's. What a bunch of cry babies. The Big East is currently reviewing the game to decide if it should be a forfeit. It should be.

The SoftCats play this week against Providence, Boston College and UConn, all on the road. If I were these teams, I would pray for rain. Of course, if they did, it probably would.

The University Senate, the advisory group to the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., University president, and the Board of Trustees on policy and major decision-making issues, meets today at 4 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

"The date of organizational meeting of the Senate to elect officers and an Executive Committee for the academic year 1993-94" will be held at 5 p.m. after the last exam May 7, according to the Senate meeting agenda. Outgoing Student Government President Ken Baatchelor will then deliver a farewell speech.

Two motions from the Faculty Affairs Committee, according to the Senate agenda, have been resolved:

— "THAT evaluation of faculty in their final three years of service prior to retirement (when the fact is known) shall be eliminated unless it is requested by the retiring faculty member."

University named an official arboretum

By MELISSA LEE

The University will become an official arboretum April 28, two days before the official celebration of Arbor Day.

After more than one year of planning, beginning Jan. 1, 1992, the daylong celebration will officially declare the University an arboretum, a place for the cultivation and examination of various species of trees and plants, said Charles Leeds, horticultural supervisor for the University's Grounds Department.

This creation will provide educational opportunities for the botany, biology, engineering, and environmental science departments, enhance the University's relationship with the community, provide regional and national recognition for the trees on campus, provide direction and purpose with regards to the campus landscape and create lasting impressions upon prospective students and their parents, alumni and other visitors to the University, said Leeds.

While there is no specific criteria for a site to be considered an arboretum, a suggested one is the labeling of different plant and tree species. Labels are already highly visible throughout the campus, added Leeds. The University also is working to increase the diversity of the specimens. With these two aspects in mind, education will be the primary focus of the arboretum at Villanova, Leeds added.

The numerous improvements that will be made on campus include the new planting and restoration of the grounds near the University's Law School and the lawn in front of Fedigan Hall, said Leeds.

The day of the dedication will include various presentations from Hyland Johns, chair of the Outgoing SGA president recaps the year's accomplishments

By ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWSKI

"One of the greatest things about the Student Government Association is the ability we have to really voice our opinions to the administration, who has always been very open to us and has made sure that other departments of the University have been open to us as well," said Ken Batchelor, president of the 1992-1993 Student Government Association.

The Student Government has tried to help relations with town officials on the student level instead of the administrative level, said Batchelor. One way in which this was accomplished was by hosting a luncheon which provided a chance for the Student Government to meet with town officials and communicate their feelings on various issues, Batchelor added.

"Scott McBride, Michael Zubey and myself were able to meet with town officials and police chiefs individually. It gave the students here a chance to show them [the officials] that we came to them and that we want to know what we can do to help," he said.

The Student Government was also involved in the planning process for this year's Martin Luther King Jr. Day, said Batchelor. The SGA was involved mostly in the committee work beforehand, he added. "Every year I see this [Martin Luther King Jr. Day] growing in magnitude and importance around campus and more and more people are realizing that the lectures and different activities are going on," Batchelor said.

> One of the greatest things about the Student Government Association is the ability we have to really voice our opinions to the administration, who has always been very open to us.

The SGA also aided students looking for off-campus housing arrangements by holding forums which provided students with free legal advice and guidance in the housing market, said Batchelor. Kathleen Byrnes of the Dean of Students office was able to offer advice to students concerning what to look for in a lease and the Rev. Frank Farsaci, O.S.A. from the Office of Residence Life gave students advice about how to find housing, he said. Students were also present to offer personal experiences about living off-campus, he added.

One of the biggest accomplishments of this year's SGA was the implementation of a student shuttle on a trial basis, said Batchelor. The shuttle was offered on a trial basis and ran on three consecutive weekends from 4:30 p.m. to 1:30 a.m. on Friday and Saturday. "We're considering the shuttle program a huge success. Over 500 students used the shuttle round-trip each night that the shuttle was in operation," added Batchelor.

"The shuttle program sent a message to the Villanova University community that it [a shuttle program] is needed," he said. The shuttle service would limit the amount of drunk driving that occurs as well as prevent students from hitch hiking. This, in turn, would better the University's relations with the people of the community, said Batchelor. "The SGA would like to see the shuttle program implemented on a permanent basis on Fridays and Saturdays. We'd like to have it eventually run daily during the week," he added.

The SGA is also looking to the future by formulating a proposal which would ask that a Big Brother/Big Sister scholarship be established for those children who

Balloon Day benefits local charities

By JANE PAPACCIO
Assistant News Editor

The annual Balloon Day celebration will be held April 27 from 11:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the courtyard in front of Connelly Center. Because of forecasted rainy weather conditions, the date was moved from April 22. Balloon Day is sponsored by the University's Campus Ministry Office.

"Balloon Day raises money for a different cause each year. Our intent is always to raise money for the poor in the Philadelphia area," said Linda Jaczynski, moderator of the Balloon Day celebration. While the profits from Hunger Awareness Week go to charities all over the world, the money raised at Balloon Day goes to local charities, she added.

This year, Balloon Day will benefit the Catholic Worker House of Philadelphia, an organization that aids the poor in Philadelphia and also provides an after-school program for children in which University students participate, Jaczynski added.

Arches of brightly colored balloons will adorn the courtyard. "The balloon arches are a beautiful sight. We'll put up about 2,000 balloons to enliven the campus," said Jaczynski. The event will include food and game booths, a dunking booth and other activities sponsored by various student organizations. A raffle offering a variety of prizes to participants will be held, she said.

"We have 40 wonderful prizes for the raffle. Forty area businesses gave us gift certificates or whatever they could; that says a lot about their interest in the Villanova community," said Jaczynski. The grand prize of the raffle consists of two Continental Airlines tickets to anywhere in the continental United States, she added.

"It's always an awesome feeling to see so many people involved in volunteer work. We're having so much fun in the process of charity," said Jaczynski. It is also great to see that so many students give up their time to work for charity, she added.

The Villanova community spent the summer preparing for its 150th anniversary celebration, said Christine Lysionek, managing director of the Sesquicentennial. The year-long commemoration will commence with opening ceremonies Sept. 18 to 22.

Building and street banners wil be hung around campus and along Lancaster Avenue, said Lysionek. The Historical Projects Committee will also be plaqueing the oldest buildings on campus, she said.

"This is going to be the first landmark anniversary that we will be celebrating during peacetime. It will be the largest most elaborate celebration that this University has ever had," Lysionek said.

The Sesquicentennial will feature a series of lectures throughout the year.

As part of Diversity Awareness Day March 22, Dr. Maghan Keita of the history and the peace and justice departments, delivered a lecture entitled "Rodney King, Racism and Reconciliation: Urban America and the American Conscience." Keita discussed the process and political violence in a broad fashion, and led a discussion following the lecture.

The problem of racism goes beyond Rodney King to a question of history, said Keita. "The story of Rodney King is an accumulation of historical precedent," he said. Most people do not think of history in these terms, but "Blacks view their lives in a historical and constitutional framework," he added.

'Nova fights hunger

American Express is working in conjunction with Share Our Strength, a non-profit organization based in Washington, D.C., on a project to fight hunger entitled the Million Meals program, said Christine Parker, a representative for Share Our Strength.

The Million Meals program provides an easy way for students to become involved in the fight against hunger, said Parker. Every time a student used their American Express card during the month of April, American Express donated funds which would be allocated to fight hunger, said Parker.

This is not the first large scale project to solve the problem of hunger that Share Our Strength has been involved in. In the fall of 1992 Share Our Strength sponsored the Second Writer's Harvest, said Parker. Writers from around the country donated readings of their works at college campuses and the cost of admission to these readings was donated to Share Our Strength, Parker added. Forty-three thousand dollars was raised in one day, she said.

"The program is unique in that it allows people to give a skill, not a check," said Parker.

At the end of the month, Share Our Strenth is sponsoring another event for hunger relief titled "Taste the Nation," said Parker. Five thousand chefs have agreed to donate their catering skills to the food and wine tasting event. The price of the ticket for admission will be donated toward hunger relief.

"We're bringing people together, all to fight for a cause," said Parker.

Great Oxford Union debate surprises Villanova audience

The third annual Great Oxford Union Debate, sponsored by the lectures committee of the Student Programming Council (SPC), was held April 13 in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center.

Four visitors from Oxford University along with four Villanova students comprised the panel that debated the issue, "Current Levels of Pornography are Unacceptable in a Civilized Society." The moderator and master of ceremonies was Dr. Helen Lafferty, University vice president.

Those in favor of the proposition included University students Lynne Curry and Jeremy Green and Oxford Union members David Blair and Walter Breslin. University students Timothy Bowers and Mary Rossetti and Oxford Union members Patricia Booker and Tim Green argued against the proposition.

Pornography is very degrading, profoundly damaging and is the insult of sex.

Oxford Union member, Walter Breslin

"Pornography is a business concerned with the subordination of women ... and is harmful to all of us," said Curry. Blair said, "Pornography is very degrading, profoundly damaging and is the insult of sex." Current levels of pornography are a violation of civil rights, said Breslin. Jeremy Green also argued that current levels of pronography are uncivilized.

Pornography is subjective, something only the individual can determine.

Oxford Union member, Tim Green

Bowers said those arguing for the affirmative are "on a moral crusade" to transform society based on their own standards. "Pornography is subjective, something only the individual can determine," said Tim Green. Implicit in the affirmative position is censorship, he added. "Pornography is not inherently evil," Rosetti said. "Who are these folks [those arguing in favor of the proposition] to tell you what you should or should not read? It is our freedom," said Booker.

Four volunteer audience members were asked to present their opinions regarding the proposition. Their views of the proposition ranged from "a severe form of censorship" to the "degradation of women and children."

"The Oxford Union Society was founded in 1823 and is the oldest and most renowned student debating in the world," according to the debate program. The Oxford Union focuses primarily on "excellence in student debating."

"There are several aspects to an Oxford Union debate that make it entertaining as well as educational," according to the program. The audience is encouraged "to participate directly by seeking recognition from the speaker at any time in order to make a 'point of information,' whether it be critical or humorous. Thus, audience participation and the direct exchange from debating combatants are two aspects of the Union's format that ensure lively programs."

The debate reflects "the importance of and an appreciation for the power of language," said Lafferty.

There are several aspects to an Oxford Union Debate that make it educational

After the debate, the audience was asked to vote either "yea," current levels of pornography are unacceptable in a civilized society or "nae." The nae's won by a 59 to 34 vote.

Sesquicentennial Minutes: University milestones remembered

By David R. Contosta, Ph.D. and Rev. Dennis J. Gallagher, O.S.A., Ph.D.

During 150 years, Villanova has passed many milestones along the way to becoming a great university. As the Sesquicentennial year draws toward its close, it may be well to mention the most significant markers in Villanova's long history.

The first milestone came on Oct. 13, 1841, when the Augustinian community decided to purchase the 197-acre Belle-Air estate of the late John Rudolph. Almost two years later, in August 1843, the property was placed under the patronage of St. Thomas of Villanova, and on Sept. 18 of that same year, the first classes opened at Villanova College.

Villanova achieved legal standing as a corporation on March 10, 1848, when the Pennsylvania State legislature granted it an official charter. It was also in 1848 that Villanova began the east wing of its College Building. In 1874, this structure was completed through the addition of a center and west wing. Now called Alumni Hall, it is the oldest structure still standing on campus.

By 1874, Villanova had also survived two closings, the first from February 1845 to September 1846, and the second from 1857 to 1865. In the late 1880s and early 1890s, poor management and stiff competition from other colleges led to a serious decline in enrollment.

Villanova's salvation came with an ambitious building program (1898-1902), which resulted in a new College Hall (later Tolentine Hall) and a new St. Thomas of Villanova Monastery. College Hall allowed Villanova, for the first time, to separate its college students from the academy boys who had been a presence on campus from the very beginning. The new building, coupled with programs in engineering and science, sent enrollments to record levels by the time America entered World War I.

Behind each of these milestones lay the courage, dedication, and labor of thousands of men and women who have helped Villanova along the road to becoming one of the nation's great universities.

The 1920s brought even more gains to Villanova. The establishment of a School of Commerce and Finance, in addition to a nation-wide economic boom, resulted in further expansion. In 1923, Villanova relocated its academy several miles away under the name of Malvern Prep. For those who had come to believe that the college's reputation was compromised by the existence of an academy on its grounds, the move to Malvern was a great relief. A massive building program undertaken in the 1920s remained incomplete when the Great Depression and then World War. II made further construction impossible.

Villanovans took pride in reaching their 100th anniversary in 1942-43, even though the wartime emergency forced them to curtail the Centennial celebrations. Meanwhile, military needs threatened to empty the all-male institution. Disaster was averted when Villanova obtained a Navy V-12 unit, which used the college's facilities to train officers. This unit laid the basis for a permanent Navy ROTC contingent at Villanova after the war.

With the return of peace Villanova was inundated with students, many of them veterans who took advantage of generous educational benefits from the federal government. These enrollments led to another round of construction, including a new library and several other buildings which had been postponed for nearly two decades.

The 1960s and 1970s brought the baby boomers and coeducation to Villanova — and yet another wave of construction, culminating in plans for the Connelly Center.

In 1953, Villanova inaugurated a College of Nursing and a School of Law. These new divisions, in addition to the older engineering and commerce schools and expanding graduate programs, led Villanova to seek university status. A legislative act and then a court decree allowed the change to become official late in 1953.

The 1980s was a decade of recognition for Villanova. In April 1985, the Wildcat basketball won the NCAA championship. That same year the University received approval for a much coveted Phi Beta Kappa chapter and U.S. News and World Report rated Villanova the "No. 1" comprehensive university in the East.

As the Sesquicentennial year began, the University reemphasized its original commitment to liberal learning by dedicating the St. Augustine Center for the Liberal Arts. At the same time Villanova had moved to raise its academic standards still higher by admitting fewer but better qualified students. It had also begun developing its West Campus, where new residence halls would allow more students to live in University housing.

Behind each of these milestones lay the courage, dedication, and labor of thousands of men and women who have helped Villanova along the road to becoming one of the nation's great universities.

Stanford Hall residents voice complaints of dirty dorm

By KATHLEEN COONEY
Assistant News Editor

According to resident assistants, Stanford Hall has not been kept clean and some residents are complaining.

From cigarette stains on the hallway carpets to graffitti on the walls, Stanford Hall is not clean, said Stanford resident assistants. One night in January the water fountain was pulled out of the wall of the B wing on the fourth floor, said Matt Rice, the resident assistant of 4D.

Residents take the light bulbs from the hallways and throw their trash out the windows, said Damon Barbacci, resident assistant of 3D.

Another complaint among the residents is that the janitors do not do their share of the work. Some janitors never clean the mirrors or mop the floors, said Rice. A janitor on the fourth floor has cleaned the showers less than ten times this year, he said. There is mold on the shower curtains, and the toilets on the fourth floor have had to be repaired three times because they overflow, he added.

The unclean dorm is not entirely the janitors' fault; the residents grew disgusted and did not care, said Rice. The janitors should not have to pick up cigarette butts from the bathroom floors. The residents have no respect for their living area, he added.

Things were worse at the beginning of the year, things are getting better.
Paul Buttacavoli, Stanford resident assistant

There was a new janitor for a week this year in the D wing of the third floor, said Barbacci. He cleaned the whole bathroom, and the residents respected him. Once the bathroom is clean the residents will respect the cleanliness.

"After the weekend the place gets trashed," said Rice. The janitor is off Saturday and Sunday so "Monday morning is really bad," he added.

"Things were worse at the beginning of the year, things are getting better," said Paul Buttacavoli, resident assistant of fifth floor D wing.

Program terminated

The Board of Trustees voted to terminate the Doctoral Program in Chemistry at their October 1992 meeting. This decision was based on the recommendations of the Academic Strategic Planning Committee and culminated a process which started in May of 1991, with a task force study under the chairmanship of the dean of the graduate school. The decision was in keeping with the University's strategic plan and was aimed at directing existing resources into strengthening the masters program in chemistry.

The doctoral program was established in 1963, and the first doctoral degrees were awarded in 1970. Since that time 87 students received doctoral degrees, an average of four per year. Almost all graduates from the program have found professional positions as chemists. Fourteen are on the faculty of various colleges and universities, and four of these are currently chairpersons of their department.

Thirty-seven graduates have positions of significant responsibility in the chemical industry, including 15 in the pharmaceutical industry and 22 in the chemical manufacturing industry, many in the greater Philadelphia area. Other graduates are professionally active chemists in government laboratories, hospitals and small businesses. Finally, several recent graduates of the program are advancing their learning as postdoctoral fellows in various research institutions.

Through the program, chemists imbued with the values of this Augustinian institution are in positions where these values can be brought to bear on ethical issues of considerable concern to the chemical industry.

The program has trained chemists in the five areas of importance, analytical, inorganic, organic and physical chemistry and biochemistry. The doctoral program was centered upon thesis research. Students matriculated into the program took few courses beyond those required for the M.S. degree. The direction of thesis research involved considerable faculty-student interaction beyond the lecture course workload and so the program was largely tutorial.

The phasing out of the program will be a gradual process. Students enrolled in the graduate program before Oct. 15, 1992, will be given the opportunity to complete the degree requirements for the doctoral degree. A six-year time limit has been imposed for completion of requirements. At least 30 students remain eligible for receiving the doctoral degree.

An article in the Dec. 15 issue of BluePrints, noted that the board of trustees approved phasing out of the Ph.D. program in order to strengthen the masters program. The same article quoted the graduate dean as stating that "We can service those [chemical and pharmaceutical] businesses and prepare our graduate students for successful careers by ensuring that our master of science program in chemistry is of the highest possible caliber."

The BluePrints article further stated that "resources formerly devoted to both the Ph.D. and M.S. programs were reallocated to guarantee expansion and excellence in the master's program."

Proposed visitation policy awaits evaluation

By ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWSKI
News Editor

A formal report which included the results of a student survey on the current visitation policy was brought to the University Senate March 26, said Ken Batchelor, former Student Government Association (SGA) president.

The proposal put forth by the SGA called for the abolition of the current visitation policy and the creation of three types of dorms, each having a different visitation policy, said Batchelor.

The current University visitation policy would remain in effect in one type of dorm while the other two types of residence halls would adhere to policies which allowed for 24-hour visitation at different times of the day and week, Batchelor said. In this way, students would be able to choose which visitation policy they would like to live under, he added.

The proposal instigated much debate in the University Senate, said Batchelor. There were many questions raised as to the feasibility of such a policy which would provide students with a choice of visitation policies as well as how well the University was qualified for such a proposal in terms of the number of dorms on campus, he added. More research into the feasibility of this proposal is needed, Batchelor added.

A committee is expected to be formed which will more clearly study the proposal and research the visitation policy options which were suggested, said Dr. Richard Neville, vice president of Student Life.

Corr Counseling Center serves entire University community

By MARYANN PULLIA
Staff Reporter

The Corr Counseling Center provides services for over 14,000 people associated with the University with psychological problems ranging from acute psychotic episodes to homesickness, said Norman Pitt, assistant director of the University Counseling Center.

Last year the center assisted 677 people, according to the center's annual report. This number included anyone associated with the University including graduate, law and undergraduate students, faculty and University employees, said Pitt.

About 90 percent of the patients are average people who are having a developmental problem common to people of college age, such as dating, homesickness and job fear.
Norman Pitt, assistant director of University Counceling Center

The center is staffed with six persons holding doctorates in psychology, Pitt added. "Counseling ranges from everyday problems to more severe problems that need urgent intervention," he added. "About 90 percent of the patients are average people who are having a developmental problem common to people of college age, such as dating, homesickness and job fear," said Pitt.

The center offers counseling for depression, roommate conflicts, lack of motivation, family problems, low self-confidence, anorexia, bulimia, as well as academic concerns such as improving study habits and test anxiety, said Pitt.

Although the center is open to all people associated with the University, it does have a limit on the number of times a person may receive counseling, said Pitt. The center has a basic rule that persons may only receive counseling 10 times during their time at the University.

The main reason for this limitation on the facilities is because the counseling office is responsible for 14,000 individuals and they do not have a large enough staff, added Pitt. Due to these limitations, individuals are referred to professionals in private practices or clinics off campus where students may receive treatment more steadily, Pitt said.

The limitation on the number of visits has not caused a problem since the average number of times a person visits the center is six, said Pitt. This is also the average across the nation for college counseling services, he added.

Corr counseling services are strictly for personal and academic concerns. The center is not associated with the Career Counseling Center, said Pitt.

An individual does not have to have a major problem to receive counseling. Any persons who has any kind of dilemma or anyone who just needs to talk things over should visit the counseling center in Corr Hall, added Pitt.

Counseling ranges from everyday problems to more severe problems that need urgent intervention.

Professor Lucy McDiarmid of the English department

The Guggenheim fellowships have been awarded for the past 69 years and are appointed on the basis of "unusually distinguished achievement in the past and exceptional promise for future accomplishment," according to a statement released by the Guggenheim Memorial Foundation.

McDiarmid has served as the associate director of the Yeats International Summer School, Sligo, Ireland. She is also the author of Saving Civilization: Yeats, Eliot, and Auden Between Wars as well as Auden's Apologies for Poetry and a frequent reviewer for the New York Times Sunday Book Review and the Irish Literary Supplement.

"Villanova is a particularly good place to do research on Irish subjects because the library has extensive holdings in the area of Irish Studies. The McGarrity collection of manuscripts, letters and books is a wonderful resource," said McDiarmid.

The 1991 Committee of Selection for the Guggenheim Memorial Foundation fellowship has chosen "146 artists, scholars, and scientists from among 2,989 applicants for Fellowship awards totaling $3,925,000," according to the Foundation press release. Among those selected this year were poets, novelists, film makers, a choreographer, physical and biological scientists and scholars in the humanities.

Seventy-two institutions are represented by one or more Fellows. In addition, a large number of Fellows who are not associated with academic institutions have been chosen for this honor, according to the press release.

"This year I've been teaching the first graduate seminar in the area of Irish Studies, Modern Irish Playwrights, to a group of lively, wonderful graduate students. It has been great fun teaching them and we enjoyed ourselves celebrating the Guggenheim last week," added McDiarmid.

Multicultural Evening stresses diversity

By KATE SZUMANSKI

The second annual Multicultural Evening was held April 1 in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center. The "free festival of food, friends, and fun" was sponsored by the International Student Office.

Fourteen campus cultural and ethnic organizations participated in the evening's activities, said Piros Mar, student coordinator of the event.

Students presented displays and demonstrations, served food, and provided entertainment, said Mar. "We blended formal and informal activities to make the evening special," she said. By bringing the ethnic and cultural clubs together, "diversity is put into action and is not just talk," she added.

"We are always looking for ways to encourage interaction among students," said Foreign Student Advisor Stephen T. McWilliams. Events like this help "build bridges between students," he said. Approximately 500 students attended the Multicultural Night, he said. "We had a very successful turnout," he added.

"Although Villanova is not a very diverse university, people are interested in diversity," said Mar. Nobody was forced to attend, she said. "This represents the desire Villanova students have to learn more about different cultures."

"I was ecstatic about the evening," said Mar. "The night also proves that you do not need alcohol to have a good time," she said.

"We hope to have many more [Multicultural Evenings]," said McWilliams. "I hope the seed has been planted that will grow into a Villanova tradition," he added.

Student interest Black clubs rises

By Karen Keustadt
Staff Writer
College Press Service

African-American student unions throughout the country report an upsurge in membership since the fiery Los Angeles riots of last April, and many say that while race relations are still strained, the black voice on campus is stronger than ever.

LeVoid Carter, vice president of the Black Student Alliance and a senior at Georgia State University, said last year's three days of rioting in Los Angeles was "the awakening" for many who thought racism was dying.

There are 1.3 million black college students on U.S. campuses and, according to a recent U.S. News & World Report survey of college students, half the respondents reported that campus race relations today can be characterized only as "fair" or "poor."

"The riots were a spark that initiated the immediate consciousness. They (the riots) said: 'The problem has not left us, it is only camouflaged. It can still sneak up on you,' " said Carter, who is a criminal justice major.

Alliance membership has skyrocketed from 45 last April to 400 currently, and members are intensely interested in the political life of the university community, Carter reported.

The year has not been easy for the campus. In November, 70 students staged a two-day sit-in and successfully demanded an African-American studies department.

"We fought for seven and a half years to get an African-American Studies Department," Carter said. "Atlanta is the heart of the civil rights struggle. Seventy percent of this school is black. If there is anywhere that should have an African-American Studies Department, it is here.

"Initially, we received resistance from white students. They thought we were silly, militant. Now they have no problem that we stuck our necks out. It was reality. We started making the administration become accountable," Carter said.

In the fall of 1991, Fabiola Narcisse, a sophomore majoring in English, received a hate flier in her University of Massachusetts at Amherst mailbox. That's when she and a handful of friends got angry and formed the school's first Black Student Union.

"We had to create a voice for ourselves," she said.

About six months later, she said, they were a group to be reckoned with as the televised Los Angeles rioting brought their cause to a head.

"There was a lot of interest in the union due to the Rodney King verdict. People had a lot of enthusiasm," she said. "We got ourselves together and asked for more scholarships, which we got, and asked to be put on committees, like search committees, which we have.

Narcisse noted that Chancellor Richard D. O'Brien is leaving the university, and that a member of the Black Student Unionis sitting on the search committee that will choose his successor. "That was a big step," she said.

At the time of the riots, African-American students, particularly those in the union, took the opportunity to vent their feelings to the administration, who were attentive, according to Narcisse.

"We got our voice heard definitely. We met with the president and top officials and we were heard, loud and clear. They took us seriously. We put pressure on them. We told them we would take things into our own hands," Narcisse added.

At Kent State University of Ohio, the Black United Students has been a strong presence on campus since 1968, when a group of African-American students banded together and demanded one of the first black studies department in the country.

Last year's riots made a strong organization even stronger, according to Nikki Marchmon, president of Black United Students (BUS) and a senior majoring in social studies. The group will celebrate its 25th anniversary May 21, she said.

Marchmon reported that membership consists of "nearly every black student on the campus" and a core group of about 100 students.

"The riots were a wake-up call," she said, noting that the group acted as an outlet for black students to express their emotions at the time of the Rodney King verdict.

participate in the Big Brother/Big Sister program here at the University, said Batchelor.

The scholarship would enable any academically qualified student from Philadelphia who participates in the program as a "little" for four years to attend the University by providing anywhere from one-third to one-half of that student's tuition.

"This scholarship would provide the "little" with the chance for a college education as well as make a strong impact on that child's life as well as on the life of that child's family," added Batchelor.

"The student government was extremely successful. We accomplished a lot this year and it's because of the people in student government. Kathy Breen, the vice president, was always on top of everything and organizing everyone. The senators and the Cabinet deserve all the credit. Together we worked to show that there's a lot that students can do to make big strides in improving student life," said Batchelor.

Students Bare Breasts in Protest

NEW BRUNSWICK, NJ. — Police were called to break up a student protest that involved 30 female students who bared their breasts during a student government meeting at Rutgers University's Douglass College.

"There were no arrests," said college spokeswoman Pam Orel. "As far as we know, there will be no disciplinary actions, either."

Kerry Riordan, 20, a sophomore and political science major, said the demonstration was in protest of the student government's treatment of some of the students that included "gaveling down" students in meetings who attempt to question authority.

Riordan said that the patronizing attitude included not allowing students to have a 24-hour study center, and not supplying security and additional lights on campus after several rapes.

The demonstration, said Riordan, was modeled after a gesture made by Soujourner Truth, a 19th-century abolitionist who bared her breasts to prove that she was a woman after being criticized for "not behaving like a woman."

"It was a liberating act. They have an idea of a stereotype of women," she said.

Lehigh Students Mentor Teen Mothers

BETHLEHEM, Pa. — Women at Lehigh University in Bethlehem, Pa., are reaching out to help pregnant teens in local schools build their self-esteem through an unusual mentoring program that promotes positive friendships.

The mentor group creates programs such as seminars on sexual harassment or how to get a job. The teen mothers are invited to visit the campus.

"These are young women who've had support and opportunities reaching out to those who haven't," said Kathy Calabrese, director of Lehigh's Women's Center. "Many of them say, 'That could have been me.' "

Number Of african Students Dwindle

By College Press Service

STANFORD, Calif. — The number of African college students who are able to come to the United States to study is dwindling mostly because of deteriorating economic factors, officials at Stanford University said.

The Institute for International Education reported that 21,890, or 5.2 percent, of all international students in the United in 1992 were from Africa, the lowest percentage in 30 years.

At Stanford, the number of students from sub-Saharan Africa dropped from a high of 60 in 1985-86 to 28 this year, or 1 percent of the university's total international student population of 2,373.

African governments used topay the bills for their students overseas, but they don't have the capacity to do that anymore," said David Abernethy, a stanford political scientist. "Most countries there are very deeply in debt."

Graduate School Tuition Rises

By College Press Service

PRINCETON, NJ. — Tuition increases for public and private graduate schools ranged from 3 percent to 9 percent this year, according to Peterson's Annual Survey of Graduate Institutions.

Enrollment in graduate programs also is on the rise, the survey found.

The average cost, which includes tuition and fees, rose the most at public institutions. State residents paid an average of $2,445 for the academic year, an 8.2 percent increase over last year, and out-of-state residents said an average of $5,713, or 9.1 percent more from last year.

Graduate students at private institutions paid $6,996, a 3.1 percent increase. "Considering the effects of our nation's lingering recession on both public and private sources of educational funding, these increases might be considered quite reasonable," said Peter Hegener, president of Peterson's Guides.

Enrollment in graduate programs for the 1991-1992 year was 1.3 million, up 3.2 percent from 1.2 million in 1990-1991. Only dentistry and agricultural sciences had a decline in enrollment, the survey found.

International Society of Arboriculture's Research Trust; Barbara Olejnik, manager, Philadelphia Green, Pennsylvania Horticultural Society; Kevin O'Donnell, superintendent of University Grounds and Jeff Jabco, assistant director and Superintendent of the Scott Arboretum and Grounds, Swarthmore College.

The Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., University president will preside at a tree planting in front of St. Rita Hall, and Dr. David Contosta will host the luncheon and slide presentation entitled, "History of Villanova Campus," said Leeds. Two classes of elementary school students will be in attendance for this occasion, he added.

Funding for "Arboretum Villanova" was provided in part by private donations and fundraisers, said Leeds. Memberships are being offered with four options: A Charter Membership, $35 a year, renewable annually at $20. These memberships will be offered only before dedication day. These members will be documented in the University Archives as Charter Members: An Annual Sponsor, for $20, renewable annually; a Perennial Garden Membership, $500 renewable annually, which includes an inscribed plaque on the tree with the donor's name and presentation of a certificate; and a Student Membership, at $10 a year, renewable annually. These can be mailed to Kevin O'Donnell, care of Villanova University. A book containing the naes of the donors will be available in Falvey Library.

"Arboretum Villanova" emphasizes the work done by the University to continue to strive for excellence in education, said Leeds. "The creation of the arboretum speaks well for the University's plan and dedication for improving the aesthetic of the campus," Leeds added.

Judicial Affairs, or do nothing about it. She decided not to prosecute and go through Judicial Affairs at Villanova.

In the month of March, there were two burglaries on campus, as well as 12 thefts. One case of a stolen automobile was reviewed by the Radnor Police. Five cases of vandalism occurred, in addition to two graffitti incidents.

An incident of a weapons offense involving a pellet gun went to Judicial Affairs, as well as three possessions of alcohol and two cases of disorderly conduct. Three citations for drunkenness were issued by the Radnor Police. A case of trespassing resulted in an arrest. Public Safety had six false alarms here on campus, Conway added.

Update On Rails To Trails

By JOHANNA LEI

Last night, at the Center for Peace and Justice, Third Ward Commissioner Bill Spingler gave a presentation at the NatureZone meeting on Rails to Trails. The trail currently being evaluated is the Radnor P&W line which runs 2.2 miles. The P&W line has been abandoned for 35 years and runs parallel to Conestoga Road. This trail would provide an alternative to driving as well as providing a safe trail for cyclists and pedestrians.

However, the trail runs behind some houses, and those owners have expressed concerns about this project. For instance, the issues include a loss of privacy for the homeowners and a possible increase in crime.

Spingler addressed those issues last night. He told NatureZone members that in low crime areas, such as Radnor, the trail would not affect the crime rate. In other words, Radnor will remain a low crime area regardless of the trail. With regards to privacy, the county would plant pine trees running along the trail and the houses, install wire fences and plant an additional row of pine trees. The trail would provide privacy as well as beautify the surrounding areas.

How does this affect Villanova University? The proposed P&W line would give Villanova's campus close access to the trail. The county would install sidewalks on the Radnor-Chester Road. That sidewalk would connect to the trail. The P&W also crosses streets that 'Nova students live near. Some streets include: Old Eagle School Road, Eagle Road, Lancaster Avenue, South Devon Avenue, West Wayne Avenue, Bloomingdale Avenue, Maplewood Avenue, Louella, Iven, Brookside Avenue. Aberdeen Avenue, Conestoga Road and Radnor Chester Road.

If you support the trail and want to see it come into being, register to vote. The P&W line runs across two wards, the third and the sixth. The decision will be made dependent on community support. To find out more information about the P&W trail, contact Spingler or come down to the NatureZone office located in the Center for Peace and Justice.

Welcome Students,

As members of the Wildcat Community, I would like to take this opportunity to welcome you and to share some information about Villanova's Recycling program.

Initiated in August of 1990, in response to the state mandated recycling law (PA act 101), the program has been recycling Aluminum beverage cans, corrugated cardboard, white and computer office papers, used motor oil, and leaves.

With the enthusiastic support and efforts of staff and students, we were able to divert over 300,000 lbs. from area landfills! That is roughly enough trash to fill the football field from end zone to end zone / side line to side line, more than 10 feet deep!

This year we hope to do even better – by expanding the program to include clear, brown and green glass, and to encourage everyone to participate!

How can you help?

- Post the recycling guide in your room (see other side) and follow the guidelines.
- Offer to take turns in bringing recyclable material to the designated collection sites.
- Contact Student Government at Extension 7956 with your ideas or to serve on the recycling committee.
- Encourage other members of the campus community to participate in the recycling effort.
- Reduce – Reuse – Recycle.

Please retain this letter and use the recycling guide on the opposite side to "RECYCLE THE WILDCAT WAY!"

Thank you for your support,

Kevin O'Donnell

Idea Of A Green University

By JOHANNA LEI

The success of any recycling program is dependent upon consumer response. The sole responsibility rests upon us, the Villanova community. Many efforts are being made to change over our campus into a "Green University". However, apathy or carelessness or laziness has not allowed these efforts to reach their peak potential.

Throughout the University there are recycling bins. Unfortunately, some bins are not being used as intended. For instance, I spoke with Villanova's Recycling Coordinator, Kevin O'Donnell. He told me that some bins had been defecated in, vomited in and urinated in. This is not acceptable. The University is providing an earth-friendly service!

We thank the conscientious students who have been doing their best to utilize these services. Although some students have been apathetic, others have made an exceptional difference. To help make the University's recycling program reach and maintain its peak potential, please recycle!

If you take a bottled beverage into your dorm room, make the effort to put them in the proper bin. If glass recycling bins are not availabe in your dorm, deposit them in Connelly Centers' bins, or take them to the "igloo" located on south campus. The bottom line is simple: if you take recyclable materials with you, it is your responsibility to dispose those items in the proper fashion. Recycle now!

Waco events emphasize importance of choice

After being inundated with news of the tragedy that occurred earlier this week outside of Waco, Texas, we wanted to target this incident for the topic of our final editorial for the school year.

We found ourselves with drastically differing opinions concerning blame, tactics and a variety of other elements which surrounded the event. Our views were so varied we could not arrive at a united editorial opinion on any aspect of the situation. But our heated discussion did serve to bring a tangential issue to light: the vital importance and necessity of choice.

Some find it easy to criticize members of the cult for pledging allegiance to David Koresh. These individuals exercised their right to choose, but opted for a decision which restricted future freedoms. Their deliberate choice prevents them from being considered blameless bystanders. But under the hold of Koresh, their judgement can be judged, at best, impaired.

The element that made the deaths of the 17 Branch Davidian children especially hard to bear was the fact that these children were victims of a standoff which afforded them no choices. They were not granted the opportunity to voice their dissent or extract themselves from the situation. As a result, they became a part of its fiery resolution.

In the university setting students are exposed to a multitude of viewpoints and ideas from which we can draw information and form opinions. We exist in an atmosphere in which diverse options and free thought are encouraged, yet often taken for granted. There are still many who refuse to make educated choices or even voice opinions about campus or worldwide concerns. As evidenced by the outcome of the Branch Davidian standoff, choice is a luxury we cannot afford to surrender to others.

Treat Earth Day as more than a trend

Tomorrow the University will hold a festival to mark Earth Day. Through activities and music, students are reminded that they are partly responsible for the condition of their planet.

Earth Day centers around the importance of putting good intentions into practice. People at the event will present information and suggestions about what you can do everyday to preserve the planet.

Concern for the environment is a relatively new concept in its present wide-spread form. It almost has become a cliche to talk about planting a tree, recycling aluminum and never using styrofoam. However, the more people who hear these messages repeated, the more likely they will follow them.

Today some of you may have carpooled to school as suggested by an Earth Day flyer. Maybe some permanent carpools were formed for the remaining class days. Definitely some gasoline was saved and the atmosphere got a small break.

The Villanovan recently added a page to its editions that addresses the issues involved in Earth Day. The NatureZone page brings truth to the saying that Earth Day is everyday.

Some of the popularity of the save the earth movement may diminish over time, but events such as Earth Day will act as annual reminders for the cause. Hopefully, people who see the necessity of caring for the planet's future will outnumber those who view it as a trend. In the meantime, enjoy the festivities of Earth Day knowing that your participation will be an investment in the quality of your future.

Racial issues pervade campus

Peaceful memorial incites anger

To the Editor:

On the evening of Saturday, April 17, 1993, various black students came together in front of the Oreo, to unify our minds, our voices and our souls in memory of the travesty of the Rodney King incident. We felt a moment of prayer and a peaceful march would be a sufficient vehicle for remembering the injustice served to King, since the jurors had reached a final verdict that morning.

We prayed and marched after a party given to entertain minority candidates interested in Villanova, all a part of Candidates' Day. Of course the hour was late, many of us were tired and the temperature felt about 40 degrees. However, when we marched down to the Quad singing "We Shall Overcome" and held hands in one big circle, mixed obscenities were shouted at us from various windows in Sheehan Hall. Another "enlightened" soul stuck up his middle finger from Sullivan Hall.

As I witnessed the president of my organization with tears in her eyes, it provoked me to question "How much have we actually overcome?"

Of course tempers rose but we managed to let things not get out of hand. As I witnessed the president of my organization with tears in her eyes, it provoked me to question "How much have we actually overcome?"

Now some one may read this and think "Well, we have integrated schools, buses and bathrooms." However, that is not enough … we need to share an integrated consciousness so the obscenities will cease being shouted and the outright, blatant examples of injustice to Rodney King and the countless other minorities that have suffered at the hands of the police will become extinct.

It is a crying shame that after years and years of what we claim to be advancement and enlightenment, we still have those that linger in the mentality of the days of segregated bathrooms and buses, not only on the national level, but also right here at this very institution in Villanova. And for those of you who will not or can not understand what it is like to be a minority or a Rodney King, what I have just described to you is a perfect example.

Senator's remarks not representative of views

To the Editor:

This letter is in response to the recent yet foolish article written by Kellie Shannon. Shannon wrote about the terminology used by arts senator Kevin Haggerty when referring to African-Americans.

I don't know if Shannon attended the senatorial debate, although her comments make me believe she did not. However, I was in attendance and am shocked to see how off base Shannon was with her remarks. Haggerty was obviously interrupted after making the comment about "colored people" and was unable to explain what he wanted to say.

After consulting with Haggerty I was amazed to learn the amount of knowledge he possessed dealing with all kinds of adversity. I also learned about a trip Haggerty took this year to learn more about diversity, but Shannon obviously looks beyond important issues.

It's too bad that students such as Haggerty who care about Villanova have to be knocked by someone obviously lacking knowledge of certain subjects. If Shannon cares so much for our school, maybe she should have devoted her time to run for a Student Government position.

As for Haggerty, if I were him I would try and meet with Shannon and enlighten her as to what diversity really means. I hope in the future students writing letters contact candidates before making ridiculous remarks.

It's too bad that students such as Haggerty who care about Villanova have to be knocked by someone obviously lacking knowledge of certain subjects.

If Shannon had only spoken to Haggerty, instead of being irrational, she would have found out how much he believes in diversity. Instead a letter was written that unsuccessfully tried to damage the reputation of a officer capable of doing many great things for Villanova University. As for the comment about setting Villanova back (40 or 50 years) we all know who has accomplished that.

Gender equity absent from athletics

Special to the Villanovan:
By the Varsity Women Soccer Team

Athlete: one who is trained or skilled in sports or games requiring physical strength, agility or stamina.

Now if the Webster's dictionary definition of athlete doesn't differentiate between men and women athletes, treating one superior to the other, then why does Villanova University discriminate based upon gender? This question has stumped us for some time now and it seems to have done the same to the administration.

By allowing the men's teams to stack their rosters, the opportunities available to the women hardly seem equal to those given to the men.

Approximately three weeks ago both of the athletic directors, Ted Aceto and Maryanne Dowling, along with the Rev. Edmond Dobbin, O.S.A., received a letter from the varsity women's soccer team addressing the issue. Unfortunately, the response to this letter has been limited and ineffective. In fact, to this date, the president of the school, Fr. Dobbin, has not responded in any fashion. Why have there been no answers? Maybe inequality really exists here.

Allow us to shed some light upon the existing situation and you can decide for yourselves if there is a dire need for some changes.

Title IX, the existing gender law, states that scholarships must be allotted equally to both sexes proportional to the percentage of athletes from each sex, at Villanova that breaks down to 66 percent male and 34 percent female. The 66 percent of male athletes includes football, for which there is no equivalent female sport. Besides this, the football program receives 66 full scholarships for approximately 90 players, when NFL teams only allow 46-man rosters. Now if it is possible to play the game with 46 men, why do college teams need to double that amount?

And why is it necessary to give football players five-year scholarships, when a degree only requires four years of study? We are an educational institution, right?

However, football is not the main issue here. Inequality is. Aside from football, when comparing equivalent sport teams, the ratio of participants is different. Why does the men's baseball team have a 35-man roster? This exhibits that even with cuts, padding still exists. What is even more surprising is the padding that occurs with lacrosse. The men's lacrosse team carries a 39-man roster without cuts; and the women's lacrosse team only holds 21 players with cuts. Is this extra padding of players used just as insurance to secure the misproportion of male athletes, therefore allowing for their team to have a larger budget?

There is inequality here. How could we solve this fairly? Maybe by limiting the rosters of each team, therefore allowing for only a certain number of walk-ons. Thus, the imbalance among male and female athletes would become more proportional, allowing for a more even distribution of scholarship money.

But how do you justify having Division I programs compete against top 20 teams without granting these teams any money at all? Is it fair to expect them to succeed when all their competitors are receiving scholarships of some sort?

The Villanova Blue Book states that "Villanova University is committed to a policy of providing equal opportunity for all." However, by allowing the men's teams to stack their rosters the opportunities available to the women hardly seem equal to those given to the men. Villanova teaches us many things and one is to be leaders. Let us see Villanova follow its doctrine and solve the problem of gender inequality at our school.

Is there inequality here? You decide.

St. Mary's gives workout, not luxury

Dear Editor:

Where does this guy from Stanford get off? Does he truly think living in Stanford is reeealy bad? I lived there this summer during football summer practice and they have big carpeted rooms, cable and telephones available in all of the rooms.

I do feel sympathy for the unnecessary locked doors, but you can find that innately stupid university policy followed in all the dorms. One of the reasons given to me by an assistant dean for this policy was a rape/murder incident at another college in addition to the fact that some mental institute is less than 60 miles away. He must think that when there is a breakout at this institution, the first thing the mentally ill people will do is get in a car and drive to Villanova and kill someone.

My real reason for writing this is to tell you what it is like to be a guy living in St. Mary's Hall. I live in what is called the Priory or the Dungeon of St. Mary's. It is in the basement of the building. We have no phones, no cable and no freedom of movement. Our rooms have no carpet and are like bottle necks, 11 feet by 7 feet, give or take a foot. Our hallway is about 35 feet long, at the end of which is a locked door that is a pain when you are going in and out of the rooms. For you guys in Stanford Hall it would be like each wing of each floor having its own separate Wildcard door.

I have friends that live directly above me and to get to them is somewhat of a hike. I would judge the walk to be at least a quarter of a mile. The first thing I have to do to go upstairs to their room is walk out of my hall and look directly to the right and see a stairway I can't use because it is locked. I say a few curse words and continue on.

Next I pass the elevator that you need a key to use, but you can only keep the key for two weeks before being fined $25.

Then I travel up another set of stairs that can only be used to go between the basement and the ground floors. Say some curse words and continue on.

Now I'm on the ground floor. I pass the cafeteria (which, I might add, does have the best food on campus, but they play adult contemporary music. You know the stuff. It is the same music that almost makes one vomit when you enter the so-called student center).

Now I walk down the main hallway which is about two football fields long, slide my Wildcard through the stupid door, walk up the stairs and down the two football fields and knock on the door. If he is not there I just have to catch my breath and go back to my room.

Oh yeah, and I just love waking up at 7 a.m. to the blissful sound of bulldozers and backhoes. Plus I love walking in the mud to class due to the construction work on the bridge. I know the University can do nothing about the construction work. I just wanted to show that guy over at Stanford how bad it can be at Villanointelligence.

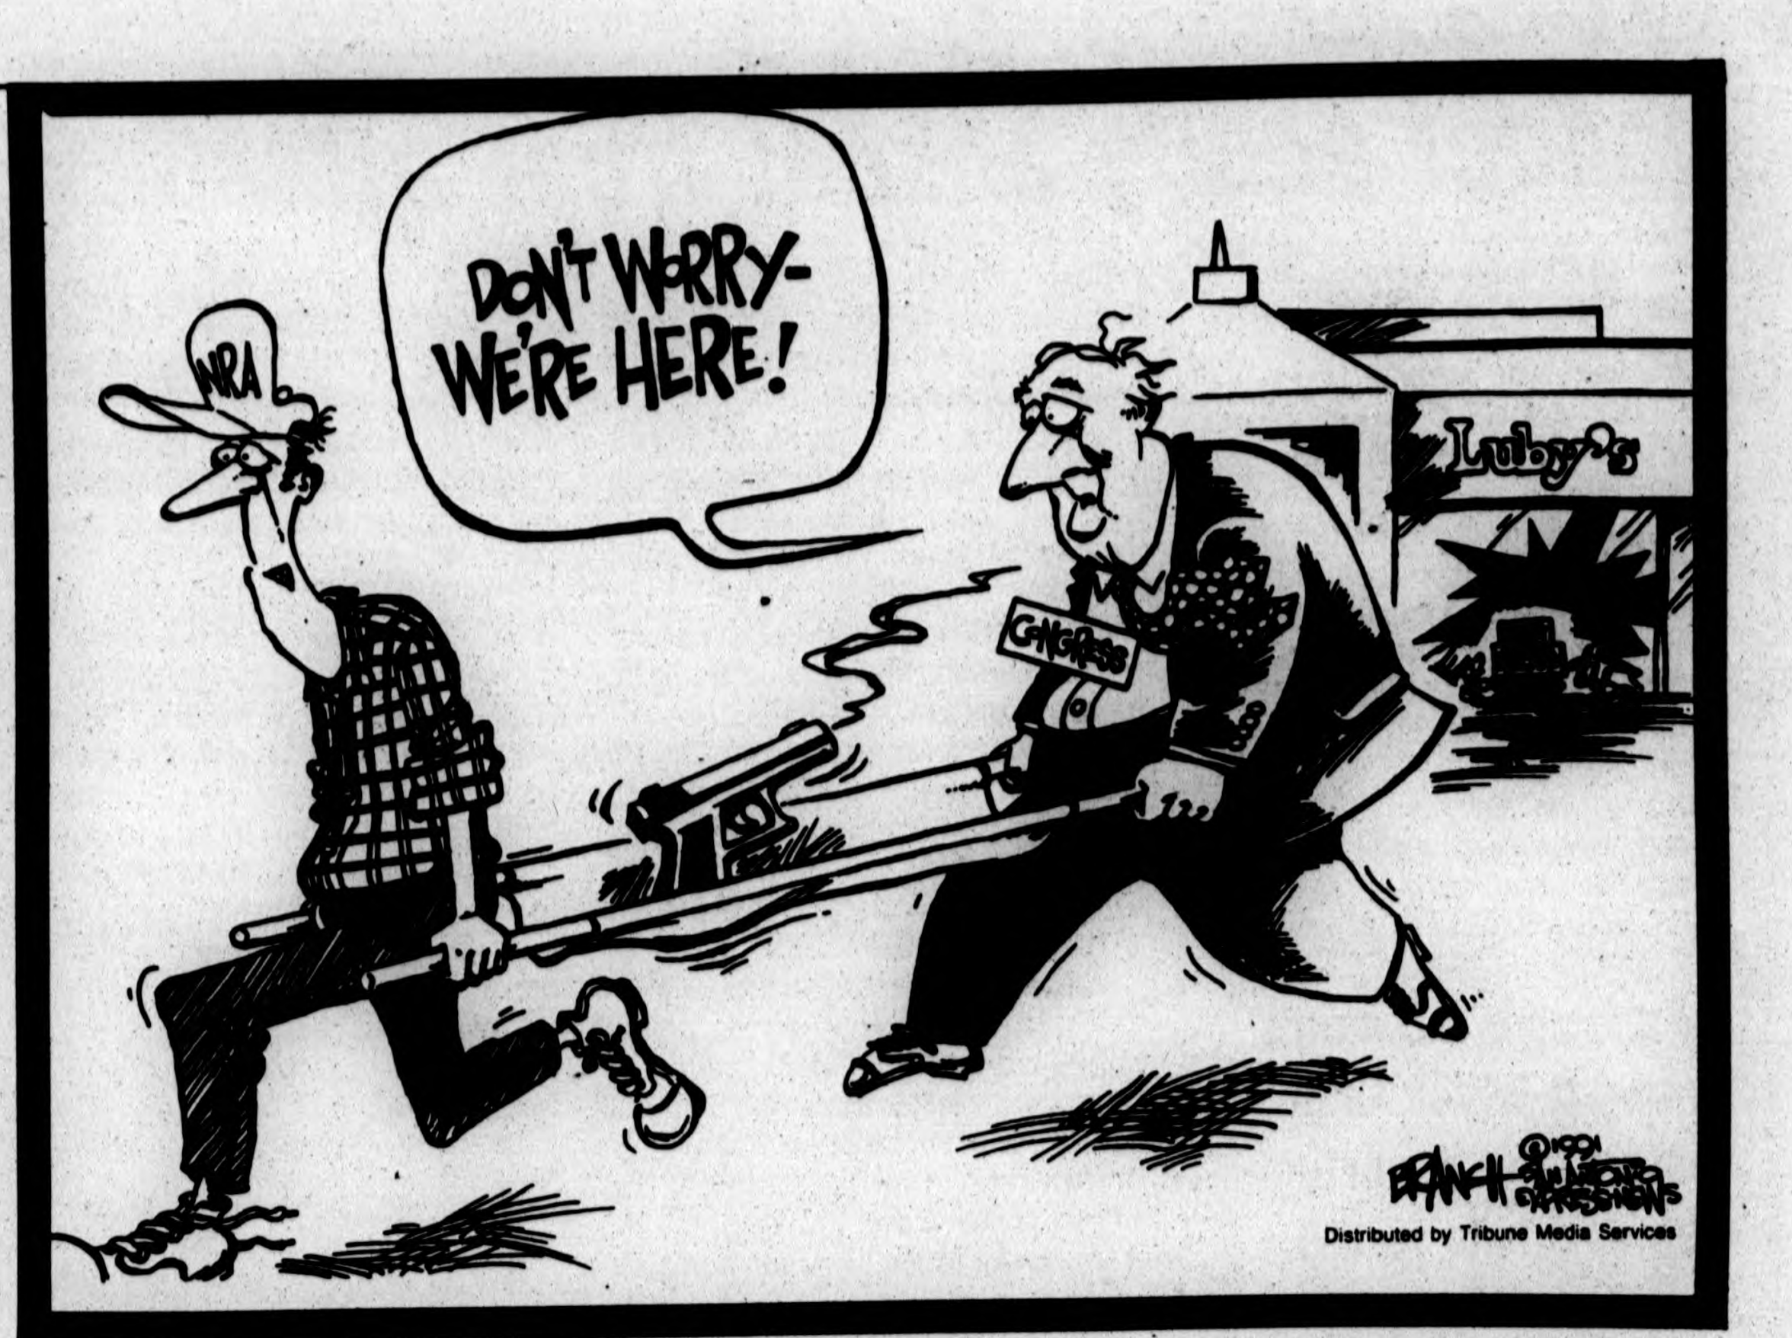
Buy back your sense of safety on the streets

By ELLEN GOODMAN



Distributed by Tribune Media Services

I bought a gun today. I bought another one for my husband. And one for my daughter. And one for my mother.

I can't say that I feel safer than I did yesterday. Not yet. But there are times when it seems important to do something, to pursue some protection in a violent world.

But let me explain. I'm not suddenly joining the National Rifle Association. I'm not contributing to the handgun sales figures that jumped in the anxious atmosphere after one Los Angeles riot and in fear of another. You won't find me standing in line at the Shooter's Paradise range.

I have not become a gun owner. Just a buyer.

I made my purchase at a small office on a busy Boston street that is housing a program called Buyback Boston. A group of people, working down the hall from a Fred Astaire Dance Studio and one floor below a Kung Fu teacher, are collecting money to buy back guns from the streets and the homes of the city. Retail, one by one, $50 a pop.

They are hoping to raise between $25,000 and $50,000 by mid-June. That would take about 500 to 1,000 guns out of circulation.

This is not their original idea. Buyback Boston is modeled after programs in St. Louis, Minneapolis, Philadelphia, New York and San Francisco. Altogether buybacks have removed some 25,000 guns — and that's not counting the toy guns they bought for 50 cents apiece in one city. The Brookings Institution has recommended a federal buyback to the new administration.

I can't say how much difference my small purchase will make. There are 200 million guns in this country. There were 24,000 handgun murders in 1991 alone. Hardened criminals are not about to turn in the tools of their trade. A gun can always be replaced. But it seems to me that there are many ways to measure a "difference."

Katherine Mainzer, who is helping run the Boston buyback through Citizens for Safety, has chosen to measure it in small increments. She knows how easy it is to get overwhelmed thinking about violence. When a 14-year-old boy was shot in her daughter's school playground, she remembers, "I flipped out. I think it is outrageous that I have to worry that my child might be killed by taking a bus to school." But when you consider violence in all its gore from child abuse to mass murder, anyone can become paralyzed. "It's one example of a problem that looks so big," she said, "you have to break it down to one step at a time." Two weeks since the buyback was announced, the group has collected over $10,000, much of it tucked into notes that read, "If it saves one life . . ."

No one knows how many lives a buyback will save. Other cities have reported a drop in homicides during or after their buyouts, but there is no rigorous research.

As Deborah Prothrow-Stith, the assistant dean of the Harvard School of Public Health and author of "Deadly Consequences," says: "The buyback is not the solution to violence." But it should be considered, she added, "not just in terms of fewer homicides, but by its impact on attitudes and the sense of helplessness."

And maybe that's the way you measure "difference."

Today, feelings of helplessness are pervasive. Some people fight the feeling by buying guns. Others fight it by buying them back. To buy back a gun is to place yourself squarely with those who see weapons as part of the problem, not the solution. It's to choose sides with violence prevention. That's no small step.

It took 30 years for professionals to have an impact on smoking. It took just a handful of years for ordinary citizens to have an impact on drinking and driving. Maybe these things grow faster when they start at the grass root.

In public health, they say that you can try to save the bodies floating down the rives, but at some time you have to move upstream to deal with the cause. In violence you can watch the victims floating across the television screen and the front page or you can move upstream.

Sooner or later you have to go further upstream from thinking about the gun to thinking about the seller, the manufacturer, the lawmaker. You have to go upstream to the family, the neighborhood, the television, the culture.

But first you have to begin. This is one way. One gun at a time. One less gun at a time.

Ellen Goodman is a syndicated columnist who appears weekly in the Villanovan.

Constitution guarantees preborn right to life

By ANTHONY PATTERSON

There are those who would claim that the fetus (Latin for "small child") is not a human, but rather a glob of tissue with no inherent worth or rights of its own. If it could be proven that human life begins in the womb, the rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness under the Constitution should be extended to include even the silent, innocent and most helpless of human society, preborn babies.

With ever-increasing technological advances, it has been proven that the human heartbeat of a preborn baby begins at 24 days, brain waves are recorded in the fifth week and by the eleventh week, all organs are present and the lungs need only to mature. From the moment of conception until adolescence, all of the genetic information necessary for life is present, even though organs continue to grow and develop. It is a continuum from conception until adolescence that produces a fully independent and reproducing human being. This continuum can not be broken and a particular stage designated as the beginning of human life. Life begins at conception, when the genetic information, genetically separate from the mother, is first present.

Since science demonstrates that preborn babies are humans, preborn babies that are a result of rape or incest likewise should be extended the protection of the Constitution. The conceived baby is not at fault in either of these cases and should not be punished for someone else's crime. Abortion only creates an additional victim (other than the mother) since the act of rape or incest is not the baby's fault. Therefore, if the Constitution guarantees the right to life for all innocent humans, and if preborn babies are innocent humans, then the Constitution must extend the right to life to all preborn babies.

Student says, "More school, please."

By PETER SHAUGER

School was two weeks longer this year than last year. Next year it will be another two weeks longer. That extends each semester to 14 weeks instead of 12 weeks like it was two years ago.

Sure, we'll be starting school a little earlier and having a shorter Christmas break, but I'm looking forward to the longer semesters.

You see, with the 12-week semesters of my freshman and sophomore years, I never had enough procrastination time before I began my work. I was always rushing to turn in assignments and doing a poor job on them because teachers weren't allowing me any extra time. By extra time I mean time after the project was assigned but before actual work was done on it.

Some of the more conscientious students will probably protest the added weeks of school, but since their number is small, their complaints are expected to be drowned out by the sound of cheers from the rest of us.

As far as the administration is concerned, I think this demonstrates a new level of concern for and consideration of the students. So much concern that the teachers, many of whom seem like they don't want to be here in the first place, are a little resentful and jealous of the new attention that the students are getting that was never there before. One teacher upset with the decision commented, "Who is this university here for anyway, the students?"

Some students are so excited about the 14-week semesters that they are planning to take off the third and fifth weeks of school to make room for the 13th and 14th weeks.

One student even said he thought the decision to extend school "shows real pizzazz, cause it [school] is just too short." This was the first time in Villanova history that the word "pizzazz" was used in regards to a major decision of the administration.

So all of the students I've talked to seem pretty positive about having shorter breaks and shorter summers and short attention spans. Everybody that is, but one person — Chad (as if you couldn't have guessed). Chad loves school and all, but he told me he's terribly worried that students might do something drastic by attending so much school.

Chad said that in the early days, people loved school. People loved it so much, they wanted to go more often. Pretty soon, Chad said in his chilling low voice, school stopped being fun. "Too much of a good thing," Chad solemnly said to me. "That's my only problem with the longer semesters. It's not me I'm worried about, it's the naive, knowledge-hungry children here who may not be able to handle all of this good stuff."

Chad couldn't continue. Handing him a tissue, I stood speechless, thinking about the wisdom of his words, as everyone is compelled to do after listening to one of his sermons.

It made perfect sense. The less school we have, the more we will appreciate it. Since school is such a treat, we should not have nearly as much of it as we now do. More will only spoil our appetite.

One of Chad's disciples, Janet, suggested that for this reason, maybe instead of lengthening school we should shorten it.

But how short is short enough? Ten weeks? Eight weeks? I think if the administration looks deeper into the dilemma they will see that the answer is one day.

Twenty-four solid, fun-packed hours of classes every year. Make it a Wednesday so as to break up the week. The first semester would last from midnight until noon. We'd schedule for the second semester (noon to midnight) at around 6 a.m., and schedule for the following Wednesday (one year later) at 6 p.m. This would solve the problem of losing interest since the students would have 364 days to get revved up for the school day.

Also it might solve the mysterious problem of truancy. Once you give students an opportunity to miss classes, even though they love school, there is a terrible force of nature which makes them absent. Even if they cut school down to two days, students would probably cut out early on the second day.

There would be every kind of caffeine and sugar products available all day long, just in case students and teachers momentarily lose their focus. And everybody knows how bad it is to lose their focus. Keeping focus would be the focal point of that day.

Now I don't want anyone to think that it is okay to go skipping classes next fall just because there is more of an opportunity to do so. If you must skip, make sure that you have absolutely no choice and that you might lose a limb if you don't.

So over the summer, if you agree with what Chad, Janet and I have expressed in this article, I feel it is your duty to write the administration and tell them that since you love school so much, for everybody's sake, let's make it once a year. Any more is overkill.

Boycott to protest inhuman labor conditions in Chester County

Special to the Villanovan

We, the staff at the Center for Peace and Justice Education, would like to inform the Villanova community about serious social injustices in nearby Chester County and urge you to learn about an participate in attempts to alleviate these injustices. Many mushroom pickers near Kennett Square are currently on strike to protest what they feel are oppressive working and living conditions. They are to form a union that would bargain collectively for improvements in these conditions.

Recent stories in The Philadelphia Inquirer have documented some of these horrible conditions. For instance, pickers work in damp, dark growing houses where they must bend and stoop for ten hours or more at a time. Rest breaks are infrequent and some workers tell stories about urinating in the growing houses because there are no bathrooms nearby and they lose money by walking to a bathroom (they are paid by the box, not by the hour).

These piece-rate wages are extremely low and force pickers to live in conditions that even off-campus Villanova students would find inhuman. There are often four and five people living in leaky one-bedroom basement apartments. Some of these apartments are owned by the growers, and rents of $500 to $600 a month are not uncommon.

Most of the pickers are of Mexican descent and speak little or no English. This limits their ability to find more affordable housing and often leads to discrimination by those in the surrounding community.

It was conditions such as these which led past generations of American workers, many of them our immigrant ancestors, to form labor unions and fight for better living conditions. The relatively high standard of living we now enjoy in the United States was built on the backs of those workers who fought against exploitation.

We have minimum wage laws, child labor laws, and safety laws in this country because working people fought for them. Unfortunately, most of these laws explicitly omit farm workers. The mushroom pickers in Chester County, like many farm workers in California, are seeking to address this social injustice.

The farm workers and other local labor organizations have called for a boycott on Chester County Mushrooms (especially from the Kaolin farm) until their union is recognized and their grievances adequately addressed. We urge individuals in the Villanovan community to respect this boycott.

Support these workers who put food on our tables and seek only those sorts of living and working conditions that many of us take for granted. We hope that the food services at Villanova also boycott local mushrooms when purchasing supplies.

Giving up some fungus seems like an easy way to help remedy the injustices these workers face every day.

Students spend summer on adventurous activities

By PETE SMOCK
Staff Reporter

While most students will wander home at the end of the year to endure their 40-hour-a-week jobs, there are others who are somewhat adventurous. These students decided long ago they were going to make the most of a three-month hiatus from the scheduled routine of attending classes. Their priorities lie not in economic gain but rather fun, excitement and adventure.

For the government-minded student, the political science department offers a three-week minimester in Washington, D.C. The program helps to raise political awareness of certain issues as well as give students an insight into the functions of the policy-makers in Washington.

A normal day for this three-week period is not spent in the classroom but in attending lectures, speaking with lobbyists and observing congressional procedures. All students are also encouraged to make an appointment to meet with their local member of the House of Representatives.

Political science professor Jeff Hahn travels with the student group as a representative for Villanova and acts as their guide. Accommodations are provided by the residence life association of American University, and students gain three credits for the experience.

Junior Suzie Liptack was one of the first students to sign up for this highly competitive program and welcomes the prospect for a different experience. "It makes no sense to me why all students can not be given this kind of opportunity. Rather than being confined to the four walls of a classroom, I am out there getting hands-on experiences," she said.

> Their priorities lie not in economic gain but rather fun, excitement and adventure.

And then there are other students who are making their appointments to commune with nature. Junior John Bielski will serve as assistant first mate on a commercial Alaskan fishing vessel. Bielski's duties include cleaning all the fish that are netted as well as making general repairs on the boat.

This kind of work is much harder than most will experience, as it consists of 16-hour days and the constant stench of fish. However, the money can not be beat and few can argue with the beauty of an Alaskan sunset. It was for this reason that Bielski made these plans.

"I know the work will be hard but I can't complain. I am an outdoors kind of person and the Alaskan coast is the kind of thing I dream of," said Bielski.

Other students will be spending their summer hiking the Colorado woods. The company Outward Bound sponsors all kinds of these excursions for the adventuresome soul. The trips emphasize living off the land as much as possible as well as nature preservation. Participants on these trips learn a greater appreciation of plants and animals as well as an understanding of why the environment is so vitally important. The duration can range anywhere from two weeks to two months.

Brynn McGovern, a junior at Villanova, is excited for her summer in Colorado but is also somewhat apprehensive. "As a resident of Boston, I am not sure what it will be like in Colorado. I am afraid everything will be so drastically different, I won't know what to do," she said.

Either way, students should be commended for opting for the alternative summer lifestyle. It is experiences like these that they will carry with them for a lifetime.

Outward Bound trips are one of the many unique ways students will spend their summer.

Classes raise consciousness

Is freedom of expression just another empty liberal phrase when inside the walls of a private Catholic university? What will happen when our fossil fuels are finally depleted? Should land in the United States be given back to the American Indians?

Although you probably have not discussed these issues in your everyday classes, many departments offer unique courses which deal with specific ethical issues. The Center for Peace and Justice Education is one such department, offering a variety of courses each semester which address such topics as freedom of speech in the university, environmental concerns and the plight of American Indians.

> Many departments offer unique courses which deal with specific ethical issues.

Dr. William Werpehowski currently teaches a course entitled "Justice and Power in the University," which he created for this semester in honor of Villanova's Sesquicentennial. The course addresses many ethical concerns as they are encountered on the college campus. Throughout the semester, the class has debated such issues as hate speech, visitation policies in dorms and whether or not professors and students should become friends.

Werpehowski noted that there is more to Villanova than the fact that it is a Catholic university. "I felt this was a contribution I could make as a teacher to the Sesquicentennial celebration — to reflect the celebration by looking at what

Annual collection helps local needy

By ROSEANNE MILLER
Staff Reporter

Do you remember early September? You are packing the car which will soon be Villanova-bound. That one time "huge trunk" now seems minuscule as you struggle to stuff in the assortment of valuables, necessities and prized possessions which you can't possibly survive without until May.

This is an inevitable event which not only occurs every September. but also every November, December, etc., when we return from our breaks. The end result — our tiny little dorm rooms and apartments are brimming with excessive items which will never make it home in one trip.

This leaves us with two options. The first option would entail discarding perfectly good items such as furniture and clothes. The second is much more reasonable. For the past four years Campus Ministry has sponsored the St. Vincent de Paul Collection, which enables students, faculty and staff to donate goods which they no longer need or want. (This is a much better option than throwing away that used but working fridge.)

Barbara Haenn of Campus Ministry, who runs the collection, says its purpose is to "provide physical services for the poor" in our area. Campus Ministry will accept any item in good condition which anyone wishes to donate.

Donated items such as lamps, mirrors, blankets, sheets, refrigerators, furniture and spring/summer clothing, etc., are picked up on campus and brought to a warehouse. Those in need are brought to the warehouse to purchase the donated items at extremely deflated prices. The fact that items are purchased alleviates feelings of loss of dignity which are often felt when people in need receive things for nothing.

This year's collection will begin on May 3 and will end on May 7. There will be three collection sights on campus this year. The sites are: the second floor of Sheehan Hall, Fedigan Hall lobby and Good Counsel Hall lobby.

Haenn says that Villanova first became involved in the collection four years ago, with the realization that much of what is wasted and taken for granted can be used and appreciated by those in real need. Although there was not a huge response to the first collection, she stated that "success has grown with each passing year."

Haenn also stresses that this is an invitation not only to students, but also to faculty and staff. Every RA in each of the dorms will have an informational sheet on their door, announcing the Collection and the sites mentioned above. Faculty will also be asked to help participate. Announcements will be sent to each department through electronic mail.

As you finish your exams this semester and begin everybody's least favorite activity — packing to go home, do not stress yourself out with over packing and being forced to ride home on the roof rack. Chances are the contents of many of those boxes and crates will sit and collect dust or just be discarded. Instead, do something for someone in need — drop off any item you can as contribution to this worthy cause.

Save the earth, help the hungry

By AMANDA MILES
Staff Reporter

Villanova's campus jumps into spring on Saturday, April 24 with a festival celebrating our earth and attempting to help the less fortunate of our area. Earth Day, sponsored by the Villanova Environmental Group, and "Hunt for Hunger," sponsored by Pi Kappa Alpha and Alpha Chi Omega fraternities, have combined, with the help of the Student Programming Council, for a day-long event entitled "Think Globally, Act Locally."

SAVE THE PLANET
SL

Stressing the idea of "acting locally," Villanova's fraternities and sororities will spend the day competing in a scavenger hunt gathering donations of food, household items, and even money from area neighborhoods.

While these students are out on their hunt, 'Nova's campus will rock. This year's "Hunt for Hunger" chairperson, Chris Hickey of Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity, stresses that this is a day for the Villanova student body to come together on campus and just enjoy themselves like any other outdoor music festival.

"Lollapalooza has music, we have music. Lollapalooza has food, we have food. Lollapalooza has a bunch of people hanging out having a good time; we will too," Hickey stated.

From 11 a.m. until 5 p.m., the walkway between Dougherty and Kennedy will be filled with the sounds of the bands "To the Limit," "Tequila Mockingbird" and "The Mill."

During this outdoor concert, student volunteers will be grilling hamburgers and hot dogs and selling these along with sodas.

All money made and goods collected will be contributed to the Valley Forge REACT Organization. This group works throughout the year to distribute food baskets and special items to needy families on holidays.

These families in need live throughout the Paoli-Villanova area — an area not normally associated with poverty, according to the founder of "Hunt for Hunger," Gina Bruzzichesi.

"A lot of people aren't aware of those who go hungry in our immediate area," Bruzzichesi stated. "They think the 'Main Line' means money and you have to go into Philadelphia to help the needy — that is just not the case."

A born consumer...

In his or her lifetime, a child born today in a typical middle-class American home will:

- Go through 12,000 paper grocery bags
- Drive 700,000 miles, using more than 28,000 gallons of gasoline
- Wear and discard 250 shirts and 115 pairs of shoes
- Use and discard 27,500 newspapers, 3,900 weekly newsmagazines and 225 pounds of phone directories
- Purchase a dozen automobiles
- Make 110,250 pounds of trash
- Go through 28,627 aluminum beverage cans, weighing 1,022 pounds, of which 17,700 will be recycled
- Consume enough commercially produced electricity to burn 16,610 pounds of coal
- Burn out 750 light bulbs
- Account for the use of 69,250 pounds of steel and 47,000 pounds of cement
- Eat 8,486 pounds of red meat
- Eat 17,591 eggs (equal to the lifetime production of 35 chickens)

However, many people in the United States will not be fortunate enough to go through even a quarter of the amount in their lifetime. Support these people and your earth at the upcoming Earth Day Spring Festival and Run for Hunger tomorrow on campus.

Life of St. Francis explored

By CHRISTINE M. SCOMA
Special to the Villanovan

The Cultural Film Series recently featured the film "Brother Sun, Sister Moon" which was directed by Franco Zeffirelli and centers on the life of St. Francis of Assisi. This film presents this subject matter from a different perspective and emphasizes the saint's asceticism and his mysticism about nature.

It is interesting that one of the most popular directors in the industry would choose St. Francis of Assisi as subject matter for a film, but anyone who knows their Catechism and the life of the saints would be able to see why Zeffirelli was interested.

Francis of Assisi has been hailed as the most popular and loved saint among Catholics, Protestants and even non-Christians. His love of nature, his vow of total poverty, his loving attitude toward the sick and his absolute dedication to the crucified Christ are all characteristics that have been recorded about this humble man.

Francis was born at Assisi in Umbria in 1181 to wealthy parents. As a young man he enjoyed his wealth, and spent his money lavishly on his friends and the good times they had. At age 20, when war erupted between the cities of Perugia and Assisi, Francis was imprisoned by the Perugians, Upon his release a year later he was determined to join forces fighting in southern Italy.

> Francis' life is both interesting and inspirational, and the order he founded proved itself to be influential throughout the world.

It was at this time that Francis experienced a spiritual conversion and abandoned these warrior ideas. He was still unsure of where this conversion was leading him, so he resumed his old lifestyle, but was unfulfilled. Eventually, his dissatisfaction with this lifestyle caused him to immerse himself totally in prayer and eventually sell all that he had.

Francis was disinherited by his disappointed father because of his sincere dedication to his cause. As part of his service to Christ, Francis took the Gospel very literally. He absolutely believed that God would care for him like He cares for the lilies of the field and the birds in the air, as Jesus promises in the Gospel of Matthew.

Therefore, his major vow was one of absolute poverty. He chose the very simple clothing of shepherds, and this later became the garb of the order of brothers that grew from his guidance. He lived from day to day and frequently relied on humbling himself to take alms from generous people.

He declared that he was married to Lady Poverty throughout his life. Eventually, this issue of absolute poverty was challenged by Rome, who desired to bring Francis' followers in line with other religious orders, but Francis was able to hold steadfast to his vow his whole life because he declared this was how Christ lived.

The Franciscan order grew slowly, but eventually many cities desired to have these inspiring brothers in their areas. Francis' orders still survive today in three branches called the Friars Minors, Friars Minor Capuchin, and

Is alien life on other planets?

Special to the Villanovan

Is there intelligent life on other worlds? Does it resemble the cuddly, pear-shaped creature of Steven Spielberg's "ET" of maybe the 9-foot-tall, gas-breathing Psychlos of L. Ron Hubbard's "Battlefield Earth"? And if they decide to visit Earth, will they come as friend or foe?

A nationwide poll of nearly 1,500 people — including a number of leading astronomers and astrophysicists — conducted by the nationally syndicated television show "Dateline: USA" found that more than 70 percent of those surveyed believe that there is intelligent life elsewhere in the universe, perhaps even in our own Milky Way galaxy.

Opinion was evenly divided on whether they would be hostile or lovable if they came here, but nearly 80 percent were convinced that alien technology would be more advanced than ours: it would have to be to permit them to cross millions of light years of space.

Sixty-five percent of the "Dateline: USA" respondents felt that we would be conquered or annihilated if an alien race invaded Earth, while 25 percent were sure we would ultimately defeat the invaders, no matter who was technologically superior. Ten percent had no opinion or felt they "would not be around" to find out how such a confrontation turned out.

Producers of the cable television show said the national survey was inspired by three current developments — the $100 million NASA/SETI (Search for Extra Terrestrial Intelligence) project, the new edition of Hubbard's international science fiction bestseller "Battlefield Earth" and the release of the film "Fire In The Sky" depicting Travis Walton's account of his abduction by alien beings.

Dr. Yoji Kondo, astrophysicist at Goddard Space Labs, told Dateline: USA that we cannot assume that the thinking processes of another intelligent species on another planet, revolving around an alien sun in some distant galaxy, would be similar to ours. If they are technologically advanced, we cannot be sure they would even think it worthwhile to attack and plunder a chemical wasteland."

Astronomer and Physicist Kevin J. Anderson said that despite the current view of biologists "who is to say that totally alien forms of life — not based on our carbon-cycle — cannot be born in a sea of magnetic fields on the surface of a star, or that civilizations of carbon-based life 'similar' to ours could not develop under oceans, flying high in clouds or burrowing underground?"

Virtually all of the people surveyed agreed that alien beings from other worlds will not look like us." Opinions on extra terrestrial shapes and sizes varied widely from pear-shaped creatures and furred, taloned giants to winged lizards and intelligent light-forms.

Friars Minor Conventual. The order of sisters started by St. Clare began as a result of her close friendship and inspiration by St. Francis of Assisi.

In order to be declared a saint one must perform some miracle or prophecy, and there are several credited to Francis. It is said that he prophesied the founding of the St. Clare order five years before it began. He experienced the stigmata later in his life. Although these wounds of Christ caused him to suffer great pain, he patiently and joyfully endured them. He is probably best known for his uncanny ability to subdue and befriend small animals, whether it was birds, rabbits or even wolves.

Francis' life is both interesting and inspirational, and the order he founded proved itself to be influential throughout the world. It is no wonder that Zeffirelli, with his love and veneration of things past, would choose to do a film that glorifies and honors the works and beliefs of this man.

The film was shown on April 17, 18 and 19. At the showing on Monday, April 19, Xavier Seubert, the director of The St. Francis Retreat Center in Rye Beach, hosted a lecture prior to the showing of the film and fielded questions afterward. He has taught theology at Christ the King Seminary, Washington Theological Union, and Villanova University.

Spring festival

Bruzzichesi started this philanthropic event with the support of her sorority, Alpha Chi Omega, and Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity. Since its start, "Hunt for Hunger" has grown progressively larger and has become a greatly anticipated outdoor festival.

When "Hunt for Hunger" began, only one band played during the day. This year, there will be three musical acts performing.

Since this April 24 also celebrates Earth Day, the festivities offer an even better opportunity to recognize and enjoy the beauty of the outdoors. This day gives students a chance to come together on campus, hear some great music and benefit two very worthwhile causes.

University courses focused on ethics

it is Villanova does from a moral perspective," he said.

One objective Werpehowski desired from the course was for "different opinions on controversial issues to come together and find common ground." Class participation is not only encouraged but emphasized to provide a forum for debate.

Werpehowski noted that when he quoted excerpts from the Blue Book in class, students were often surprised by what was in it. He said he was unsure of "the degree to which these matters are discussed" in the University.

A criticism often heard of Villanova is that certain diverse issues are not openly discussed or given any special priority. Werpehowski thinks that it is important to hear from "voices not often heard" and to try to discuss issues including that particular perspective. "We need to discuss Villanova's relationship to these issues," he said.

Even some of Villanova's staunchest critics will admit that the University is taking steps to improve both its own diversity and to facilitate open discussion of all viewpoints, both of which are essential. For example, the new core has a required course in college ethics, and students now have a much wider range of courses in ethics such as Werpehowski's from which to choose.

Thanks for being such a good friend and always being there! I mean it — I really do! Have a great summer! Love, Your "Corrupted" Friend

USCGA Marc — Good luck with your exam! Maybe I'll see you afterwards. Thanks for everything. — Larisa

943 Glenbrook: How many days 'til graduation?! Better finalize those party plans . . . and don't forget to invite the guys across the street (HMM). It's been real — Your favorite roomie!

K.C. — What a year! LESSP — oh baby, oh baby. I must admit that a small part of me still knows I could find Heaven in the arms of a certain Zombie we both know. I fear that Fate has passed me by, yet again. It was fun while it lasted wasn't it? Next time I freak out at 3 a.m. I promise that it will be your door I knock on. Next year, we definitely need to do more Wednesday trips to the printers/McDonald's when all our secret confessions will be revealed. Love, ya!

Holy Spirit, You who solve all problems, who light all roads so that I can attain my goal, You who give me the divine gift to forgive and forget all evil against me and that in all instances of my life You are with me. I want in this short prayer to thank You for all things and to confirm once again that I never want to be separated from You, even in spite of all material illusion. I wish to be with You in eternal Glory. (Say this prayer for 3 consecutive days. After favor is granted, promise publication) LCM

To My St. Mary's Hallmates: Thanks for a terrific year. I will miss you all this summer. Your Newsie Flewsie

Kevin — Who would have thought that we would go from the bitterest of enemies to two people who barely tolerate each other? Time can work miracles. Maybe in another five years we'll be able to have a decent conversation. I'm only teasing. Actually, we've had our friendly moments over the past couple years and those are the things I'll always remember about you, along with the best advice anyone's ever given me: Just Jump Him! P.S. Can I have a backrub? I will miss you.

Marc, Mike, Bob — I'll miss you guys, drink up! — M.D.

Gia & Meghan — Thanks for a wonderful 4 years! Good luck in everything! What are you doing August 28? Friends forever! Love, Reg

Beth & Dianna — Thanks for a great year! Never forget "The Great Pumpkin." I'll miss you! Love, Reg

Thank you Blessed Mother, St. Jude, St. Martha. LCM

The Port Richmond Floosie — How many more issues do we have!? I definitely never would have made it this far without you, (or gotten over so many scopes, for that matter). I'll miss our Tuesdays together but remember, Penn State is only three and a half hours away. Get psyched for the banquet! News is just going to be way too sexy. But, then again, aren't we always!? Fritos and Cheese Whiz Forever. Love ya! The FORMER chain-smoking Floosie.

Play script broadens consciousness

By JOSEPH R. McCABE
Staff Reporter

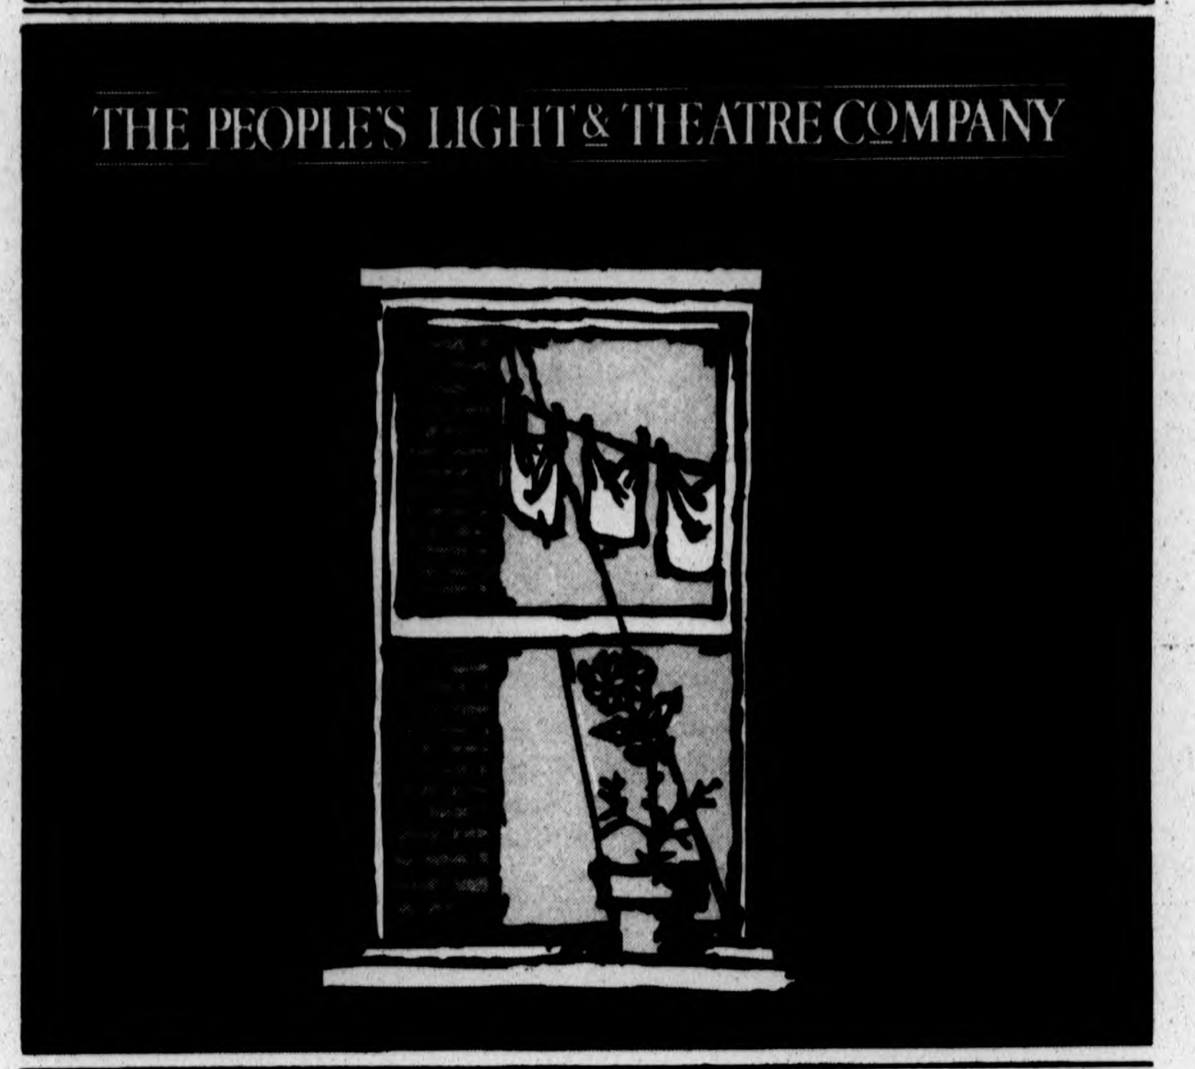
James Baldwin, quoted in the play's program, wrote about "A Raisin in the Sun," " ... as an historical achievement ... no one can gainsay its importance. What is relevant here is that I had never in my life seen so many black people in the theater. And the reason was that never before, in the entire history of the American theater, had so much of the truth of black people's lives been seen on the stage. Black people ignored the theater because the theater had always ignored them. But, in "Raisin," black people recognized that house and all the people in it ... and Lorraine Hansberry [the playwright] was being corroborated and confirmed ... as not merely an artist but as a witness."

The importance of "A Raisin in the Sun," which is running until May 2 at The People's Light and Theatre Company in Malvern, in bringing African-American drama back to Broadway cannot be denied. That it is hardly dated, could unfortunately be a living testament to society's stupidity as well as to the clarity of its playwright. Never mind that later writers such as August Wilson found a more lyrical way of dealing with the same themes, "A Raisin in the Sun" was designed to put a dent in America's consciousness by being honest, to get its foot firmly in the door. In this it succeeded.

The play deals with several weeks in the life of an African-American family in Chicago's South Side in 1959. Cramped in their apartment, the three generations of Youngers all yearn for something better. Their conflicts arise from their different ideas on how to achieve that "something." Lena, the grandmother, wants a home for her family, Walter, the father, wants self-respect and a voice in the family and his sister, Beneatha, wants an education.

It is a shame, however, that the cast of the current run could not better appreciate the play's meaning. Their performances are not bad, they are just shortchanging the material, mistaking simple truths for character acting.

Daniel Whitner, as Walter Lee Younger, and Alicia Rene Washington, as Ruth Younger, lead a cast in which the supporting roles are the only standouts. Benjamin Brown, as Joseph Asagai and Clayton LeBouef, as George Murchison, do fine jobs with their characters. In all fairness though, it must be said that they have the easiest jobs. The leads carry the play to where it is watchable, but not on all levels. Its words deserve better.

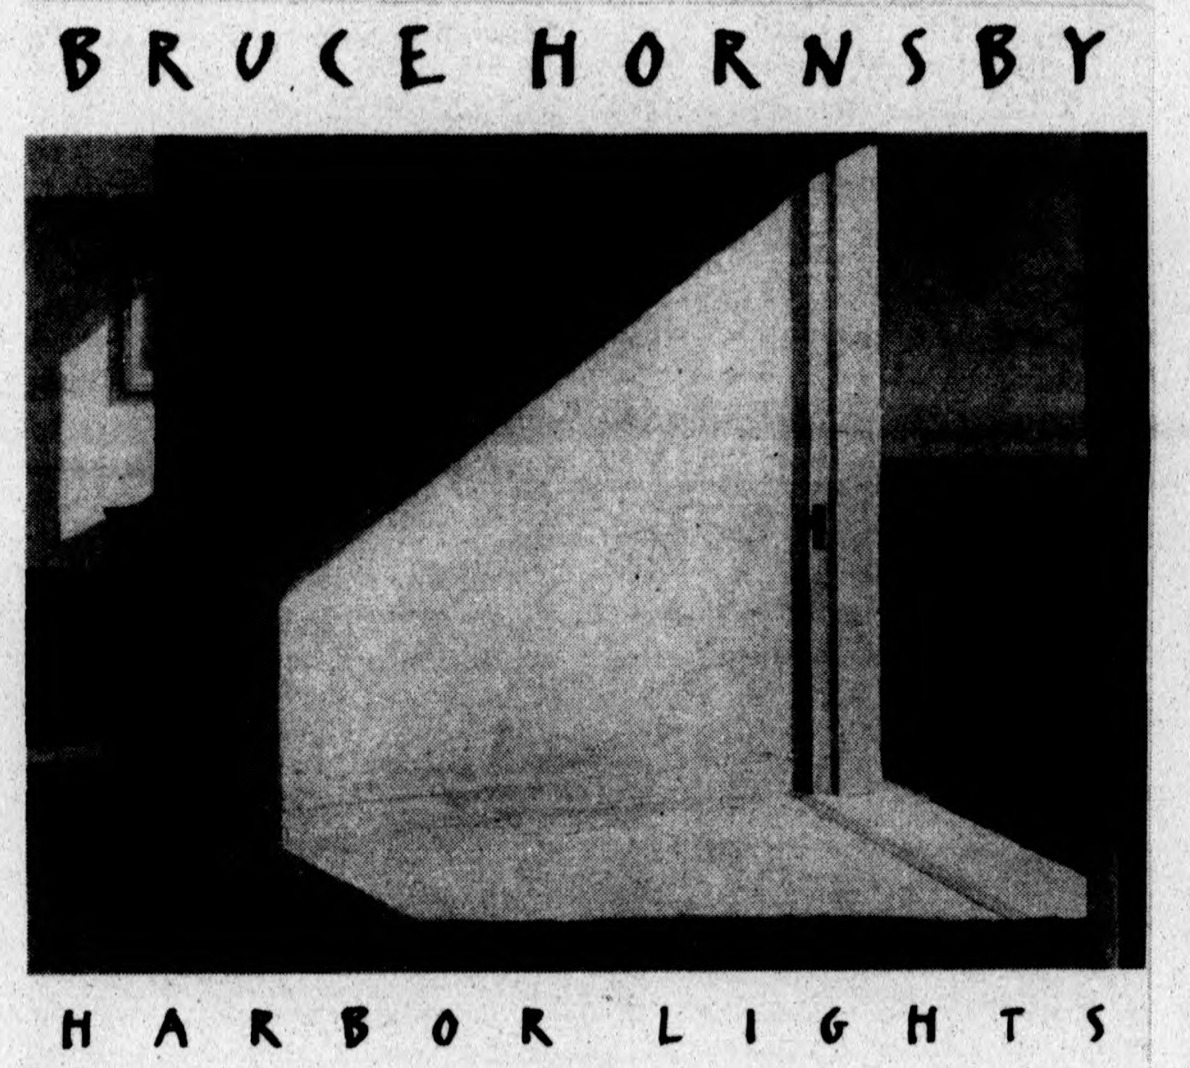


THE PEOPLE'S LIGHT & THEATRE COMPANY

Hornsby's versatile piano crosses genres

By JOHN KAZMIERCZAK
Staff Reporter

It is often pleasing and always interesting to witness the results of an established artist moving on to another style of music. Harbor Lights, Bruce Hornsby's fourth album, features a distinctly "jazzier and edgier" sound (his publicist's words), and proves to be an excellent example of just how versatile his piano talents are.



Harbor Lights marks not only a departure from Hornsby's trademark middle-of-the-road-pop motif, but also from his former backup band, The Range. Said Hornsby in a press release, "This fourth album marks a big turning point for me ... making the record the way we did resulted in some extensive jamming, most of which was left untouched to preserve the basic spirit and feel of the sessions; a freer, more improvisational approach to playing songs."

Hornsby's configuration for this album is a piano trio, featuring John Molo, the one holdover from The Range, and jazz bassist Jimmy Haslip. Guest artists include Phil Collins (performing backup vocals and tambourine) and guitarists John Bigham of Fishbone and Grateful Dead frontman Jerry Garcia.

To clear up the question on everyone's mind, "Can this guy actually play jazz?" the answer is yes. As is common among first experiments with a new genre, there are some flaws that need to be dealt with. Initially, this album does not represent a complete departure from his previous style; traces of his earlier, light-pop orientation occasionally sneak back in, most noticeably on "Fields of Gray." Perhaps this is a concession to fans of his earlier works. Also, despite supremely competent performances by such venerable artists as Glenn Wilson and Branford Marsalis, Hornsby's piano, at times, goes completely unsupported by his band.

Now that Harbor Light's negative aspects have been examined, we can take a look at its better points. While A Night On The Town, Hornsby's last album, was a group effort designed to showcase the talents of each bandmember, this is essentially a solo effort by Hornsby (and is marketed as such). From the initial track, "Harbor Lights," his piano moves squarely to the forefront of the music, where it remains throughout the album. The performance is exceptional, ranging from lackadaisical-bordering-on-lazy in "Talk Of The Town," to jittery on "What A Time," which features an extremely intricate syncopation of interwoven piano and guitar. Even the vocals, an important facet of jazz, take a back seat to the keyboards.

In addition to the piano trio, there is a section of string players who Hornsby became acquainted with while performing with the Virginia and Richmond symphonies last April. They make a contribution to "Fields of Gray" and, combined with Phil Collins' background vocals, add a distinctive flavor that rescues the piece from the realm of the ordinary. Because of the piano's presence, the lyrics unfortunately tend to fade from the listener's perception. If one can manage to tune them in, however, the power of their abstract imagery is striking.

Harbor Lights is unquestionably a solo effort for Hornsby, despite the presence of Molo and Haslip. In this new format he is able to make the most of his skill at the keyboard, which was essentially the determining factor in his success with The Range. Rarely, however, is a divergence of this nature so successful. The toughest challenge with this album is trying to convince yourself that this is actually Bruce "The Way It Is" Hornsby playing jazz and playing it well.

Resident pianist releases Jongen album

By ERIC CHEUNG
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Since 1988 Gary Stegall has contributed greatly to Villanova as the Director of Pastoral Music. Stegall helps to choose, coordinate and direct much of the music heard at the Sunday night masses. During the past year he has begun what could be a promising career as a recording artist. Though he obviously enjoys directing pastoral music and teaching at the Bryn Mawr Conservatory, he has a great talent as a pianist. His very first recording, Joseph Jongen Piano Music, not only honors a little-known but splendid composer, it also paves the way for an emerging new star in the classical music industry.

Gary Stegall has released his first classical recording.

In a recent interview and discussion with Stegall, he talked about the significance of what he and other artists like him were doing. With the advent of the CD in the modern era, classical music has found a new medium in which to reach its audience. For centuries the world's greatest composers had to find ways of marketing themselves. In addition they needed to be exceptionally good performers as well as composers because it was they who would end up having to present their works.

People like Bach, Beethoven, Mozart and Handel were talented geniuses in music but they had to make their music heard before they got popularity. Struggling composers would play at concert halls like the famous ones in Vienna or Paris

CDs are making concert halls obsolete. With the virtually flawless sound of digital recordings and the ability of compact discs to last indefinitely, powerful performances of unforgettable compositions have found their ways into the living rooms of average households. In the past it was the cultural elite who could afford to hear the current masterpieces, but now anyone can buy a concert experience, sacrificing a mere $17. Stegall noted that this trend had its positive and negative aspects.

The negative side can be traced back to the turn of the century. Before World War I, music evolved steadily through such eras as Baroque, Classical and Romantic. Music was accessible to audiences over the world. However, after the disillusionment of the Great War, people all over the world felt that life was bleak and no longer beautiful. Lush symphonies of the past were replaced with more experimental, abstract music which broke all the known rules that determined what music was.

People looked to the tonal music of the past to find the types of works they liked. The modern styles were unfamiliar and inaccessible. But Bach and Betthoven were universal. Thus CDs helped to turn older compositions into permanent performances that could be played over and over again. That is why it seems that most of the classical music heard on the radio stations or in the concert halls is by composers of the distant past. No one really wants to listen to music of the modern era, so the older works have flooded the market.

In the meantime, the composers who are attempting to create new material are often in competition with each other for listeners. Classical music is not exclusive anymore. The composers do not have to get their works heard in Vienna to gain popularity. The massive bulk of recordings in the market means that it is a lot harder for an individual to stand out from the crowd since just about anyone can make a recording. Sadly, one has to wonder who will be today's version of a Mozart or a Debussy. A legend could be making revolutionary music and the world would barely even know it.

On the positive side of CD recordings is the reason why Stegall has made this album in the first place. Lesser-known musicians of the past have been brought to the surface by the sheer accessibility of CD technology. In Stegall's case, Joseph Jongen was a contemporary of Debussy. With this recording, Stegall is attempting to gain more recognition for a composer who would otherwise have been forgotten.

Jongen was a Belgium composer who lived through two world wars and who created music in the same vein as Debussy and Ravel. Not only was he lauded as a talented pianist and composer, Jongen was an esteemed music educator of his time. He influenced and was influenced by Debussy. Still, Stegall commented that Debussy was a genius of the era. Both composers experimented, but Debussy took classical music to new heights while Jongen did so only less successfully. Thus, Debussy gained fame and honor even as the music of Jongen was destined for an eternal captivity in the dust-covered National Archives to await someone's rediscovery. People like Stegall, who perform what he calls "repertoire music" are bringing new light upon relatively unknowns like Jongen. Recognizing not only the masters but their contemporaries as well, it is bringing a sense of completion and wholeness to the music of the past.

86 scores on musical and lyrical levels

By ELIZABETH TACELOSKY
Staff Reporter

If you were at new band night at the Barbary earlier this month, you too may have been struck by the powerful sounds of 86. A hard yet musical band, they provide listeners with a strong sense of energy and excitement, both musically and lyrically.

The sound of 86 cannot really be likened to any specific band, rather they are a "mixture of U2 and Tin Machine," according to guitarist Jim Kehoe. The band successfully attempts to achieve a hard rock style without being obnoxious. The band is influenced by U2, David Bowie, the Clash, Generation X and Peter Gabriel. The combination of these styles leads to a unique musical experience that is duly coming of age.

The music clearly is meant to capture attention, and the lyrics do an excellent job of keeping it. "We write about things that are going to stick in people's minds," said percussionist Mike Kennedy. The lyrics are meant to challenge the listener to think through his or her ideas and make sure that any inconsistency is confronted.

The Barbary show opened with "In God We Trust," a definite attention-getter. This song characterizes the strong musical component of the band, as well as challenging lyrics mocking the hypocrisy of televangelists. "Family Affair" is what singer/guitarist Jered Gallagher introduced as "a fugitive from the '70s" with its psychedelic guitar and enigmatic lyrics. "Best Seller," a newer tune, challenges the origins of the idea of racism. In "Recall," another new song, with haunting echoes and guitar tones, 86 asks the questions applicable to all who live in this perplexing time: "Why this anger? Why this confusion? Why this hatred? Why me?"

The band started in 1986 (hence the name) with lead vocalist and guitarist, Jered Gallagher and bassist Mike Miduski. In 1987 guitarist Jim Kehoe joined them, followed by percussionist, Mike Kennedy, in 1988. At that time all of the members were in high school. Although they played several local gigs, they admit that they did not take their music seriously until this past summer, after a car accident involving Jim Kehoe. This experience brought reality closer and enabled them to focus their musical goals. 86 is very serious now, and they are currently in the studio working on an independent release of six songs. Listen for these new releases on WXVU and watch for 86 in clubs in the Philadelphia area. Rodgers' guitarists tap into the blues roots

By CAROLYN POPPE
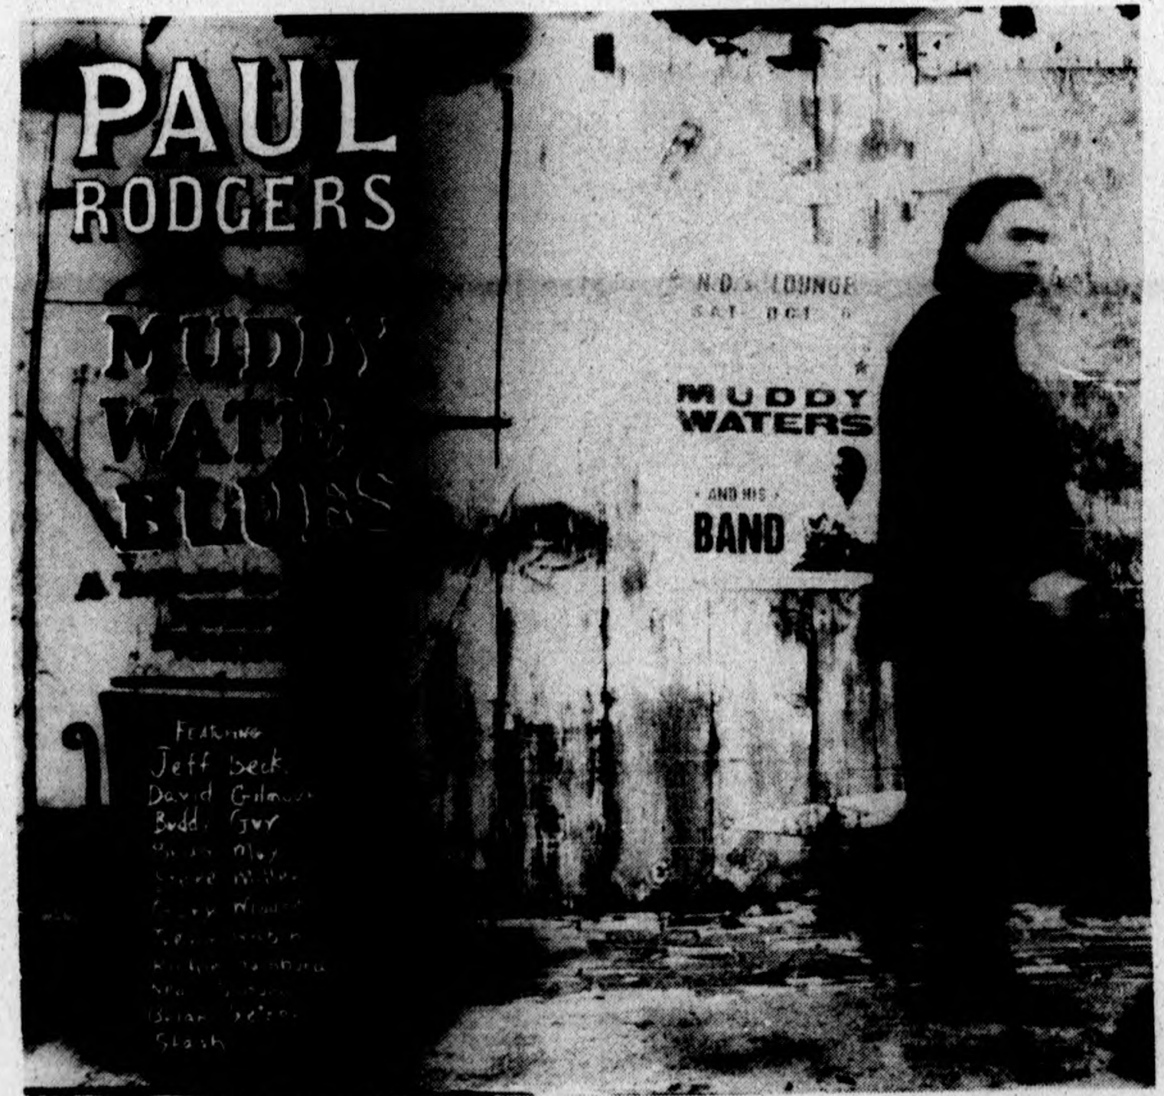
Assistant Entertainment Editor

What do Pink Floyd, Guns 'n' Roses, Yes, Queen, Bon Jovi, The Yardbirds, The Stray Cats, Journey and The Steve Miller Band have in common? Besides being some of the most influential rock bands of the last quarter century or so, they all contribute legendary guitarists to Paul Rodgers' new effort.

The album, Muddy Water Blues — A Tribute to Muddy Waters, celebrates the undying soul of Waters' blues. Rodgers attempts to reach a similar, soulful feeling in vocalizing his own blues roots within some of Muddy Waters' classic tunes.



Rodgers was a product of the '60s British blues rock explosion. He first became known in the band Free, and went on to record with Bad Company, The Firm and more recently The Law. His tough, but resounding voice became his trademark.

Now bringing in an astounding list of guitar players, Rodgers interprets Muddy Waters' compositions in variegated styles that are both classic and creative. He considers the project a blues jam, involving David Gilmour, Brian Setzer, Neal Schon, Trevor Rabin, Richie Sambora, Slash, Buddy Guy, Brian May, Steve Miller, Jeff Beck and other guitar masters. Each shines on his own tune. Rodgers stated in a press release that "the album gets its strength from each of the individuals bringing in their unique artistic approach." He expressed that "the variety of talents and abilities has been the key ingredient in the creation of this album."

It may seem farfetched that such a variety of guitarists could do justice to the interpreted work of a legend like Muddy Waters, but virtually all show appreciation of his blues. In fact, some of them may surprise you with their ability to cross over to this genre.

Some of the talents excel in accompanying the style Rodgers initiates. No one reaches the soul of blues on this album, like Buddy Guy, an original himself. He joins in on an acoustic version of Rodgers' own "Muddy Water Blues," written for the album. The song, deliberate at a walking pace, exhibits the historical ability of Guy as a blues great.

David Gilmour, the Pink Floyd guitarist, also gives a fine blues performance. With his laid-back style, Gilmour sighs his way through "Standing Around Crying." The tune has a more romantic mood, and Gilmour cooly breathes the emotion with Floydish clarity.

The young and underrated Yes guitarist Trevor Rabin makes appearances on "Louisiana Blues" and "She's Alright." His style brings blues to date with a fuller electric guitar sound and occasional rapidity. A sweeter, even slightly jazzier tone in "She's Alright" hints at his guitar potential.

Another fun track is "I'm Ready" with Queen's Brian May. The tune explodes with typical Queen force when May lets his solo rip. His sharp, whiny tone and slightly-clashing guitar harmonies fill the tune with character.

A surprising performance comes from The Stray Cats' Brian Setzer on the track "I Can't Be Satisfied." Setzer succeeds with the Memphis-bluesy work that both begins the piece and finishes it. Parts of the tune bring a different style to Waters' composition.

Familiar tracks include Waters' "Born Under a Bad Sign," made famous in rock by the group Cream. Here the light guitar of Journey's Neal Schon gives a less-inspiring rendition. Also recognizable is "Good Morning Little School Girl," given two different versions by Rodgers on the album. But the interpretations deviate from the Yardbirds' remake usually associated with it. Part I is a wonderfully sneaky, moving piece, performed with Jeff Beck on guitar, which gives a new dimension to the classic song. The Part II version highlights Bon Jovi's Richie Sambora to give it a new speed. But unfortunately set up to be compared with Beck, Sambora sounds weak.

The guitarists almost all work well with Rodgers. Though his voice does not accomplish the thick, soulful tone that original blues often did, it hits on the emotion. In constructing the album, Rodgers showed that the diverse sounds of guitar rock all reach back to their father in music, blues. The legendary contributions on Muddy Water Blues make it a decent asset to rock CD collections.

Undertow echoes potential of Tool debut

By MARK McCREARY
Staff Reporter

Chances are most people have no idea who Tool is, and probably do not care much. Well, there are two reasons that it is time that everyone adds this band to his or her vocabulary of bands. First, they are going to be playing in the Lollapalooza concert (coming to a town year you) this summer, so everyone is going to be waiting in line for a four-dollar lemonade while they play. Secondly, theirs is one of the best new CDs to hit the market, and the best that Zoo Entertainment (their label) has put out. But this may be a little more than the average connoisseur of music might be able to handle.

This is not the first disc from the Los Angeles band, which put out a six-track EP in 1992 entitled Opiate. The title track from this incredible debut disc had every potential of reaching epic proportions, but it would have had to have been released to reach any kind of status, wouldn't it? Anyway, it seemed to the five people who bought this CD that it would be difficult to put out something as creatively wonderful as what was produced on Opiate. But fans of old and new, fear not: Undertow is now available to meet your CD player and something contributes to the possibility that they will become very good friends. Since their meeting is predestined, the time has come to tell you a smidgen of information about the CD.

The 69-minute, disturbing, picture-laden jewel will be sure to do three things: scare you, hate you and force you to love it. And if the pictures of the 300-pound woman inside the cover does not give listeners an impression of the strangeness that they are about to encounter, then the fact that the first 21 seconds are dedicated to a bong hit should clue them in quick enough. The bass and drums that pervade this disc give a feeling of dominance which listeners are forced to succumb to, and makes them have an automatic feeling that this is the type of band that is worthy of seeing live. Though what Tool still manages to make come through on disc is terrific, it is nirvana to be able to experience it live. Lead singer, Maynard James Keehan heads this four-man ensemble with a voice that manages to be very forthright and powerful, yet with the ability to do a complete 180-degree turn and be melodic and extremely clean. His voice is very unique, and fits the music to a tee. The song that this comes through most clearly on is "Sober," in which he combines both of these styles. It is unclear if they will release any of these tracks, though they are all potential number ones, but "Sober" seems to have the best likelihood.

The sound will scare you, hate you and force you to love it.

Interestingly, Henry Rollins throws his personal irateness into the melee of music occurring on the disc by contrasting vocals with Maynard on the fourth track, "Bottom." It is one of the stronger tracks on the disc, and Rollins' voice fits in wonderfully, if that gives any further indication of what the music is like. It would be wonderful if they did some further collaborating together, which seems possible, now that they will have both played in the Woodstock of today's generation.

Possibly the scariest part of this disc, even though the sleeve is hard to beat, is the 15-minute track at the end of the disc, "Disgustipated." It begins with random, almost melancholy drums, overlaid with the sound of farm animals. A preacher with a Southern accent warns of the carrot holocaust in the Midwest. Then the listener is told, "This is necessary. Life feeds on life, feeds on life, feeds on life," until halfway into the track, when it goes to the sound of only crickets (presumably the post-carrot holocaust). Finally, there is an incorrect answering machine message at the end, which is given credit to Bill the Landlord, a scary landlord without a doubt.

Do not buy this disc. Chances are, you will see them on the Lollapalooza tour and not like them too much; yet notice that the pit will be the largest of the entire show. That does not mean that it is for you. You will probably never hear of them again, and Tool would not be too well accepted by your friends, so let this one go.

'Benny' lacks importance

By AARON NICODEMUS
Senior Reporter

Every family has one slightly off-center relative who appears to the rest of the clan as endearing and comic, but crazy as a loon to the rest of the world. Often it is through the family's nurturing commitment and steadfast love that this eccentric aunt or mixed-up brother can find a comfortable niche in life. "Benny and Joon" presents both the sane and insane in a non-judgemental light and appears by the end to like them both.

"Benny and Joon have been together forever" is a line that echoes throughout the movie, as does the catchy tune "I'm Gonna Be (500 Miles)" by the Scottish band, the Proclaimers. Nothing else in the film really keeps the story focused. Benny (Aidan Quinn) is a handsome auto mechanic who shares his house with his schizophrenic sister Joon (Mary Stuart Masterson). He nearly obsesses about Joon and is not annoyed by her constant calls to the shop reminding Benny they are low on crunchy peanut butter or tapioca. While Benny labors underneath greasy engines, Joon gets equally covered in the paint she uses for her abstract art. It is her only release from the torment of "the voices" until a wacky house guest named Sam (Johnny Depp) is forced upon them.

Sam appears at first to be a dippy illiterate, always dressed in a worn top hat and found sitting in the nearest tree. While the intention to make Sam loveable does not fail, the combination of Edward Scissorhands (without the cutlery) and Charlie Chaplin (without the mustache) grates on the nerves. The inevitable love story between Sam and Joon makes them the perfect odd couple waiting to find each other, and themselves.

Since Benny has always cared for Joon, at the expense of his own emotional life, he can hardly stand to imagine her life in an institution. So he sacrifices himself as a martyr to his sister, without asking her exactly what it is she wants. When a local waitress with a short B-movie film career expresses an interest in the blue-eyed Benny, he cannot act on his feelings.

Whimsical and fluffy, "Benny and Joon" does make crazy people look less like drones and more like people. A comedy that has light characters may not always be funny, but it can at least make you happy. The serious side to mental illness, however, is portrayed more like a big misunderstanding of personality than a medical problem. The message: give them space, another equally affected love and some paint, and presto! You can have sanity for everyone.

But that realistic slip aside, "Benny and Joon" does create two believable, if not overly sentimental, love stories. Much of the flaky fun in the kitchen antics by Depp (like grilled cheese sandwiches made with an iron, mashed potatoes with a tennis racket) is merely cute. Of the bunch, Masterson comes the closest to a real breakthrough as Joon, edging ever-so-close to a meaningful insight into mental illness. Depp reprises an old role, and Quinn is forthright in his down-home mode. But as a whole, "Benny and Joon" lacks any statement of importance, or any emotion worth consideration.

FAST FORWARD: First, there were comic book movies like "Superman" and "Batman." Then Saturday morning cartoons established cinematic status in the "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles" series, a veritable turtle trilogy. But now they have gone too far. "Super Mario Bros." opens May 28, and brings those famous brothers, Mario and Luigi, to the big screen. Bob Hoskins plays Mario, and Fisher Stevens is his colorful sidekick. Hoskins has experience working with cartoons ("Roger Rabbit"), but as one? Since, by any video hack's standards, Mario's popularity went out the way of Pac-Man and Space Invaders, what "Mario" will be about is anyone's guess.

REWIND: When "Night and the City" with Robert DeNiro and Jessica Lange came out less than a year ago, it met with harsh cynicism from critics and moviegoers alike. DeNiro, who seems to have a new film every week, is Hollywood's ultimate overworked actor. But it is taking its toll. In "Night in the City," he plays Harry Fabian, a street-smart New Yorker who seizes his chance to make a fortune promoting boxing fights, only to watch his dream (and life) slip away. While it has all the earmarks of a gritty urban fairy tale, it never fully captivates the audience's attention. Through the murky New York smog, all that is visible are two lonely people we care nothing about.

David Bowie gets soulful

By COLEEN KENIREY
Entertainment Editor

David Bowie has finally satisfied his fans' cravings by releasing a new selection of solo material. His projects with Tin Machine held fans over and the recent airplay of "Jump They Say" whetted their appetites in anticipation of the main course, Black Tie White Noise. The new songs are juicy prime cuts of a soulful persuasion, dripping with trumpet and saxophone sweetness.

The offbeat pop icon has again proven himself to be a musical chameleon with his latest effort. A glance inside the CD cover makes it hard to believe that this is the man who once inhabited the persona of Ziggy Stardust. Bowie looks like a crooner from another era, similar to Harry Connick Jr. However, it is a shame that he continues to hide his facial oddity (eyes of two different colors) by wearing contact lenses.

Bowie's songs attest to his incessant quest to reinvent himself and to prevent his sound from becoming static. The offerings are slick, polished trinkets with hard-driving bass pulsating under the surface and brass punctuating the foreground. Black Tie White Noise displays a Bowie who has succeeded in staying on the modern edge, while incorporating traditional influences to create a balanced style.

Bowie's supporting cast features some heavy hitters, such as producer Nile Rodgers who produced his incredibly successful Let's Dance and who assumes guitar duties on the new CD. Lester Bowie (no relation) who founded the Art Ensemble of Chicago lights up the mix with his trumpet and is joined by Tin Machine guitarist Reeves Gabrels. Bowie himself delivers masterful sax and is joined in vocals by Al B. Sure! on the title track.

Star power also adds to the album's lyrical fortitude with Morrissey's "I Know It's Gonna Happen Someday." This song accentuates Bowie's smooth vocals which are accompanied by backup that resembles a gospel choir. Bowie reaches his vocal peak as he pleads "I know wherever you are/whatever you are/ don't lose faith/ I know it's gonna happen someday to you/ please wait." His voice wails out in emotional '50s-style waves, augmented by passionate moans.

Instrumentals are unusually abundant on Black Tie, there being three in all. Although on many albums, these are the tracks listeners tend to scan past, here they are engaging and blend well with the surrounding tracks. The opening prelude, "The Wedding," is interesting as it is constructed layer by layer. It begins with the attention-getting sound of church bells, soon joined by slick bass and a rhythmic, slightly hip-hop beat and finally topped off with searing saxophone. It is a haunting post-modern anthem which is redone later on the CD as "The Wedding Song." In the second version lyrics are added in which Bowie gives an angelic description of the blessed event.

Another song which appears in two different forms on Black Tie is the first single "Jump They Say." The radio version contains a stronger saxophone element and the alternate mix puts the focus on a hard drum beat. Background moaning is also added to the remix, giving it a sexual tone absent from the other track.

The singer's marriage to Iman is reflected in the many romantic lyrical images present in these songs. The eighth track, "Miracle Goodnight" contains such newlywed ideas: "I love you in the morning sun/ I love you in my dreams/ I love the sound of making love/ the feeling of your skin/ I never want to say goodnight." This song, with its spirited beat and periodic spoken parts, is possibly one of the best cuts on the album. The romantic feel is maintained with Lester Bowie's sexy trumpeting and the singer's deepened tone. The lyrics, however, are not idealistic as Bowie exclaims, "I'm sick and tired of telling you/ don't let me down and down/ still I keep my love for you."

In the title track Bowie and Al B. Sure! put forth a social commentary and a call for racial unity: "Getting my facts from a Benetton ad/ looking through African eyes/ lit by the glare of an L.A. fire/ black tie white noise/ I've got my face not just my race." The rhythm is a funky urban sound that sometimes is reminiscent of '70s movie soundtracks. The music of Marvin Gaye is echoed by posing the question "What's going on?" Although positive attitudes are promoted, the skeptical doubt adds a tinge of realism: "There will be some blood no doubt about it/ I look into your eyes and I know you won't kill me/ but sometimes I look into your eyes and I wonder."

Days refines Chris Issak

By CHRISTOPHER GONNELLI
Staff Reporter

At the Bay Area Music Awards in San Francisco last year, Chris Isaak jokingly characterized his music as "wimpy." After viewing a performance of Metallica, fellow Bay Area musicians, Isaak sarcastically claimed he would discuss with his band members the idea of producing music with the same raw energy as that of Metallica.

The fact that Isaak attended the Bay Area award show last year may be attributed to movie director David Lynch. In 1989, Isaak released his third compact disc, Heart Shaped World. For the third time few people took notice, until 1991, when Lynch used the song "Wicked Game" as the theme song to his movie "Wild At Heart." The sensual "Wicked Game" propelled Isaak to a successful 1991, though he had not released a CD in two years.

Two years after his newly acquired fame and four years since the release of Heart Shaped World, this San Francisco native releases the appropriately titled, San Francisco Days. With this fourth release, Isaak sounds nothing at all like Metallica, in fact, he steers away from the straightforward rock and roll of Heart Shaped World.

On Days, he experiments with a variety of musical styles ranging from a '50s brand of rock, blues, jazz, and he experiments with a country sound in a few of the songs. Lyrically, Isaak moves away from the vindictiveness he has exhibited in the past by exploring the route of reminiscence in his songs. The vocal work of this Roy Orbison prototype is more relaxed on Days than on past releases, where anger and tension defined the vocal style of Isaak.

The themes of lost chances at love and the need to dream pervade Days. The song "Can't Do a Thing (To Stop Me)" is the "Wicked Game" of his latest release. "Can't Do a Thing" is the response to "Wicked Game." In "Wicked Game" Isaak sings, "What a wicked thing to do/To make me dream of you." In "Can't Do a Thing," Isaak finds security in his dreams, as he confidently sings in this seductive ballad, "Days can be lonely/Nights, dreams come true/Making love with somebody/Exactly like you/And you can't do a thing to stop me."

The theme of lost love and failed relationships is expressed on a number of tracks on Days, including "Beautiful Homes," a song which expresses a '50s-rock quality. The bluesy "Move Along" also displays this theme. The title track, "San Francisco Days," combines the two themes. Isaak anxiously sings, "I'm headed for that Golden Gate/Hoping I won't be too late/To find the one that I still love/It's you I'm dreaming of." Isaak allows the listener to decide if Isaak dreams of a woman from a past relationship or the city of San Francisco. It suggests a return to the city which has observed the highs and lows, mostly lows, of his music career.

The closing track, "Solitary Man," exhibits a country rock sound similar to that of Hal Ketchum. With "Solitary Man," Isaak stops pretending and uncovers what he truly desires. Isaak yearningly sings, "Don't know if I will/But until I can find me/A girl who will stay and won't play games behind me./I'll be what I am . . . a solitary man."

With Days, the listener receives a musically refined and lyrically regretful Isaak and not a rushed follow-up replete with catchy radio songs. Success has not spoiled Chris Isaak, in fact, on Days, he experiments with his success. He only has to maintain the expectations of one person, himself.

Chris Issak expands his style with San Francisco Days.

Pablo refreshes

Ever listen to an album that just takes you away from actuality, and sets you in some wild, mischievous land where you are free to dance and roam? But when you finally open your eyes to the clicking of the tape reel, you realize your journey only consisted of dancing on your own bed. It is a foolish and ridiculous, but definitely, enjoyable feeling. Well, get out your road maps because the new Radiohead album Pablo Honey, will send you far beyond the familiarity of your Sealy-Posturepedic.

Pablo Honey is the combined effort of the five-man, three-guitarist band from Oxford. On the strength of their demo (Drill), the band was signed and delivered, and now are proud owners of numerous music awards. This is quite an accomplishment coming from a band that has only just released their first album.

The music borders on punk, alternative and rock, but comes across with so much impact that it probably does not matter how the band is classified. The three guitar lines combine to form some shape of intricate, sometimes edgy, sometimes beautiful music. The vocals' styles range from that of Frank Black (a.k.a. Black Francis of the Pixies) to Bono, but still keep the individuality that lead singer Thom E. Yorke powerfully displays. Radiohead's first U.S. single, "Creep," is one of the band's slower tunes that just knocks you out. It also ranked forth in "Critics' Top 50 Singles of the Year." However, this is not to say that the music has any of the promotional glamour that most "radio music" has, because it is far from that. "Anyone Can Play Guitar" is the most gung-ho musical piece that often instigates a mad desire to drop your fancy books and join the first traveling band that you stumble upon. "Thinking About You" is a wonderful acoustic piece with a great mild flavor to it. The list goes on. The music here is some of the freshest anywhere.

Radiohead is a leader of the new musical movement of the '90s. Their sound is so versatile, the listener could never tire of the almost sinful pleasures attained as the play button is smacked. Perhaps Radiohead means more than we know. To listen is to understand.

Stegall

Jongen's work. As a talented musician who has played world-wide, solo and with many famous orchestras, Stegall, too, deserves some long-overdue honor and recognition. Fanfare magazine said of his work, "Pianist Gary Stegall makes an eloquent case for the validity of Jongen's piano output. His performances are poised, lovingly nuanced, muscular where called for, and technically impeccable . . . In terms of significance of repertoire, brilliance of performance, and quality of recording, this one is Want List material."

Of the tracks themselves, Joseph Jongen Piano Music, contains some wonderful pieces worth listening to. "Claire de Lune" captures the imagination even as it smacks of Ravel and attempts techniques that Debussy would later popularize. Meanwhile "Soleil a Midi" is simply enthralling and perhaps one of the most inspirational tracks on the album. "Sarabande Triste, Op. 58" deals with the effects of a global-shattering war and the four movements of "Suite En Forme De Sonate, Op. 60" is a "grandiose fullscale work for the piano."

Villanova should be proud of its talented faculty member, Gary Stegall. He is one of the few people on campus who can say that he has a commercial CD out on the markets. Stegall likes to add that one can "even buy it at Border's Bookstore." This means that he is legitimate. He has a recording that has gained some national recognition and even has been heard on classical stations. Gary Stegall's success is only beginning; both he and Jongen are fortunate because of it.

Tennis serves up four- match winning streak

By MICHEL DAVIES
Staff Writer

All year, it seems that 'Nova tennis has been on the verge of excellence. No one ever questioned the talent that the team possessed. The young squad in several instances showed flashes of brilliance, albeit short-lived.

But then, just when it seemed that the Cats were beginning to emerge as a team that should be feared, they would drop an easy match. 'Nova was, in fact, victim to the virus that all young teams face — inconsistency.

That is until recently. As 'Nova entered the week of April 13, it was clear that the five days that lay ahead would serve as a measuring stick of the team's progress. It would have to play four matches in the five day period, and all but one of them was away. Amazingly enough, the road did not seem to bother the Cats, as they swept the four matches in impressive fashion.

The Cats would start their four match swing at Kings College. This match would serve as a tuneup for the coming week, as 'Nova obliterated Kings 9-0. But the Cats would not be given time to appreciate the victory, because they knew that city rival St. Joseph's was waiting for them the next day.

This would be a key match for 'Nova. In the past, after easy victories the Cats would often suffer from the famous "letdown" syndrome. And if 'Nova desired to be a contender, no such letdown would be possible.

And none was. 'Nova began the match against the Hawks with quick singles wins from four of the top six players. Most impressive was Andrew Frick's 6-0, 6-0 win at No. 6 singles.

Other easy victories came from No. 5 singles player Andrew Sullivan, who defeated his opponent 6-1, 6-2, and from Robert Elliot, who moved by his opponent 6-2, 6-1.

To finish off the day, 'Nova parlayed its impressive singles wins into three doubles victories, including an 8-4 Pro Set win by sophomore Brendan Farley and Sullivan.

The back-to-back victories over Kings College and St. Joe's would serve as a season high two-game winning streak for the Cats. And as they came home to play a tough Franklin and Marshall team on April 17, visions of extending that steak lay in their minds.

Clearly, Franklin and Marshall would be the toughest match of the week. The school always attracts the top area players, and this season would be no different.

Early victories from No. 1 singles player Tom Boutrous and No. 3 singles player Mike Flaherty would be the keys to victory. This was an important aspect of the match because it enabled 'Nova to go into the doubles play with a 4-2 lead. And as it turned out, the Cats needed every victory they could get. 'Nova secured the team victory in the last match as sophomores Brian Cavalier and Frick teamed up to clinch with a 6-3, 6-3 win.

'Nova was obviously on a roll, as they returned to the road on April 18 to defeat Fairfield University 6-3. This victory gave the Cats their fourth straight victory. As the Cats entér the Big East Conference Championships beginning April 23, they will, for the first time this season, be recognized for their maturity and accomplishments, not their youth and potential.

Football

Cobaugh returns at outside linebacker, where he earned second-team All-Conference honors last season. Joining Cobaugh on the outside is Delmon Robertson. Sophomore Tyrone Frazier has performed very well in practice and should also see time at outside linebacker. Chris Adler and transfer Preston Walker will start at inside linebacker. Jack Ledbetter will look to back up inside.

The secondary should give opposing quarterbacks many problems. Alvis is back from reconstructive knee surgery at free safety. Alvis earned first team All-Conference honors as a junior two years ago. Matt Smith returns at strong safety, while the speedy Devian Logan moves from safety to cornerback, where he will be joined by Tim Davis.

"The secondary is as strong a group as we've ever had," said Talley.

The Spring Game will serve as a preview of the 1993 Cats. Admission is free and students are encouraged to attend.

NOTES: The Cats' season opener against Yankee Conference newcomer Northeastern at home has been moved to September 10 at 7 p.m. ... Several Wildcats will be paying close attention to the NFL draft this weekend. Chris Grychowski (DT), Eller and Donald all have the potential to be drafted, though this will be more difficult this year with the draft being cut from 12 to seven rounds.

Legendary babe magnet and former Sports Editor Andy Fitzpatrick will graduate in May.

Athlete of the Week

Jack Stanczak

This week the Villanovan and the Wildcat Club recognize Jack Stanczak from the baseball team. The junior third baseman and tri-captain belted a Ruthian game-tying homerun with two outs in the ninth at Providence and drove in three runs to help the Cats to a 14-12 win. He is batting .425 and leads the team in homers, walks and slugging percentage. Stanczak's play is one of the reasons the Cats currently own an 11-game winning streak and first place in the Big East Conference.

Laxwomen end losing streak

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Sports Editor

The 1993 season for the Villanova laxwomen will draw to a close today when they host St. Joseph's, and the Hawks will face a team with a huge burden lifted off its collective shoulders. The Wildcats crawled from the wreckage of a demoralizing eleven-game losing streak when they beat UMass 11-8 on April 18.

"They thought that they could win it from the beginning," said Head Coach Megan Harlan. "They really believed in themselves, and the shooting came together along with quick passing."

'Nova went into the half with the score tied at five apiece, and senior goalie Stacey Rozzi held the Minutewomen to three goals in the second half, finishing the game with nine saves.

Leading the way once again for the Cats was tri-captain Leigh Ann Leone, who scored five goals and notched two assists in the victorious effort. Her totals were raised to a team-high 42 goals and 11 assists (53 points) for the season. Sophomore Heidi Connor attacked UMass for three goals and an assist, and is currently second on the team in scoring (14 goals, seven assists, 21 points).

Also pitching in on the 'Nova scoring effort were senior Monica Hopson (one goal, one assist), freshman Nicole Nigrelli (one goal), freshman Kate Harvey (one goal), and tri-captain Ciara Perrotti (one assist).

The win over UMass was the second game in a difficult two-day road trip for the Wildcats, who faced women's lax giant University of New Hampshire the previous day. The other Wildcats were strong performers in last year's ECAC tournament, and this year's squad looked even more formidable in clobbering 'Nova 17-5.

"We were definitely intimidated by UNH," said Harlan. "They're a very strong and physical team, but we did all right. The game was close (3-1) in the middle of the first half, but we couldn't keep up after that."

Not even a powerhouse like New Hampshire could stop the offensive force that is Leone, who had two goals and two assists. Harvey scored her first Villanova goal, as did freshman Annie Garland. Perrotti (10 goals, four assists, 14 points for the season) had one goal as well.

Today's season finale takes place at 4 p.m. in Villanova Stadium, and will be the swan song for six seniors on the 'Nova squad.

"These seniors are unique in that they came into the program in its first year as a varsity sport," said Harlan. "Although this year's record doesn't reflect it, they've really taken this program somewhere. They've put their hearts and souls into the sport ... and have brought Villanova some respect as a lacrosse program."

Leone, who has been one of the nation's leading scorers all season, will be the most notable absence from the team next year. Her fellow tri-captains, Perrotti and Ann Magee, are both graduating as well.

"Leigh Ann is going to be missed," said Harlan. "She's the most prolific scorer we've had at Villanova. Ciara Perrotti and Ann Magee are hustlers. They get the most ground balls [respectively, 69 and 65 for the season] in every game, and they've probably worked the hardest of the whole team."

The other three seniors rounding out their 'Nova careers are Rozzi (.533 save percentage, 12.38 goals allowed average), Hopson (10 goals, three assists, 13 points for the season) and defensive starter Carrie Walsh (52 ground balls for the season).

"Stacey Rozzi has done so well, and has really improved at a difficult position," said Harlan. "Monica Hopson also improved. She had to adapt to playing new positions and did a really good job. Carrie Walsh is the backbone of the defense. She got many of the interceptions and ground balls."

Cats step up play; record to 5-6

By BOB TRAVISANO
Assistant Sports Editor

The men's lacrosse team has been on a mini-tear. The Wildcats gained victories over Drexel (9-7), St. John's (11-6), Maryland-Baltimore County (14-8), and most recently versus Lafayette 11-6. The team has steadily been improving, as the losses have been by lesser margins and the wins have increased.

The Cats were visited by Lafayette this past week. 'Nova roared out to a 6-1 lead with six unanswered goals in the second quarter. Lafayette only scored one goal in the first period and one in the third before netting four more in the last to make the score closer at 11-6. The Cats got three goals from Mark Nagle on the game. Rick Bontatibus chipped in four goals and two assists. Scott Chisholm threw in a goal and an assist as did Kevin Crowley and Sol Mahoney. Brian Goger also registered an assist. Goalie Brian Kash also played well in goal, stopping a total of 24 shots on the cage.

Last Saturday, Villanova ventured down south to Maryland and Mount St. Mary's College. This game would prove to be a test of wills for the two teams. The teams traded goals for the whole first quarter, going back and forth, leaving the Cats ahead 6-4 at the end of the period. By the end of the first half 'Nova led by two goals, 9-7. Lafayette kept up the scoring pace in the fourth quarter and at the end of regulation play, the teams were tied at 12. In the overtime period, Lafayette scored 4:35 into sudden death to take the victory out from under the noses of a hard-playing Wildcat team. On the game, the Cats got high scoring from their old reliables. Chisholm dumped in five goals and an assist, while Bontatibus got three goals and four assists. Owen Cosgrove also contributed two goals and Kevin Crowley and Craig Scornavacca each beat the goalie for a score apiece. Brian Kash racked up 16 saves on the day.

The season is almost over and the team's record stands at 5-6 overall. The two games remaining should be a split for the team. The team played Rutgers on April 21. This (as this is written before the teams play) will prove to be a tough one. Rutgers is nationally ranked and the game is on its home turf. West Chester visits 'Nova on April 24. This should give the Cats another win. If they should win against Rutgers, it would provide a shot in the arm and almost insure a winning season. A big win this late in the season could be a momentum builder for next season.

On the season thus far, the leading scorer is Bontatibus with 22 goals and 24 assists for 46 points. Next is Chisholm with 31 points, pat Grohar with 14, Nagle with 13, Crowley with 15 and Scornavaca with 11. Goger and Mahoney each have nine points. In goal Brian Kash has 168 saves in 625 minutes, with 11 games started.

'Nova set for Spring Game

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Sports Editor

The football team will hold its annual Blue-White Spring Game tomorrow at Villanova Stadium at 1 p.m. The contest will match the first-team offense against the first-team defense, as a format will be used that allows each squad to score points for certain situations.

A split-squad game is not possible at this time because of the graduation of current seniors and the absence of incoming recruits.

"I think the game will give us an opportunity to see if the defense can come up with some big plays and to see what they can do against the run," said Head Coach Andy Talley. "On offense, we'll see if we can get some rhythm. We're going to try to move the ball on the ground."

The Wildcats are coming off a season in which they went 9-3 and posted a 6-2 Yankee Conference mark before losing a heartbreaker at Youngstown St. in the first round of the I-AA Playoffs. The Cats are losing 23 lettermen, 12 of them starters. New captains Brad Parpan, Barry Alvis, and Matt Smith will be looked to for leadership on and off the field.

Despite losing five starters on offense, the 'Nova arsenal looks to be well stocked with potent firepower. Parpan will direct the squad from the quarterback position, where he started one game last season and saw action in seven others. The strongarmed senior has looked sharp this Spring and will be counted on to have a solid 1993 campaign.

He is joined in the backfield by the best trio of tailbacks in Division I-AA. Kevin Mosley heads this talented group that includes Eric Hunt and Vernon Smith, all of whom have started in the past. Talley plans to feature the tailback more this season in both the running and passing attacks. Anthony Carangi will assume the fullback role.

Parpan will see familiar faces at receiver, as starters Harold Hart and Straughn Lumpkin and backups Pat Friend and George Brown all return to form one of the best receiving corps in the Conference. Brent McCracken will step in at tight end to replace former All-American Scott Donald.

In the trenches, the Cats will have to replace the talents of Randy Crane and Tim Tarpey. Bill Lacey and Dick Ras return at the offensive tackles and Jose Ramirez moves from guard to center. JuCo transfer Jim Trischan should step in at guard while Ante Benzija has been performing well this spring and looks to start as the other guard.

All-Conference selection Bill Hoffman returns as the placekicker and punter. The senior led the team in scoring last season.

"I think we have a very nice offensive team that's going to be explosive," said Talley.

On the other side of the ball, the secondary should be the strength of the defense, which loses seven starters from a unit that ranked first against the run last season. The Cats will be smaller but faster on the defensive front. Talley expects to blitz and stunt more to make up for the Cats' lack of size.

Up front, tackle Mike Hoffman is the lone returning starter. Remo Guarnieri will play the other tackle and Greg Ziegler and Nate McIntyre will both see time at nose guard. They are not as big as the players they are replacing, but they do have more quickness.

The linebacking corps seems decimated with the loss of All American linebacker Curtis Eller as well as starters Phil DiMaria and Dan Summers. Andy

Cats take 11 straight; Bennett sets coaching mark

Ed Deal receives congratulations from Dan Mariniello and Steve Young after blasting a homerun.

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Assistant Sports Editor

It has been a week that Villanova baseball will not soon forget. For starters, the Wildcats won their eleventh straight game when they rocked the Temple Owls 8-2 on April 21, giving 'Nova its longest winning streak since 1989. Furthermore, the Cats' 4-0 win over Providence on April 17 was the 237th win for Head Coach George Bennett, thus making him the winningest skipper in Villanova history. The swing through Providence also witnessed a monster home run by senior Jack Stanczak that the Cats are still talking about.

When the 'Nova nine completed their three-game sweep of Providence, they found themselves atop the Big East standings with an 8-3 conference record. The series began with Bennett's milestone victory. Sophomore David Herr hurled the shutout, allowing a paltry two hits and raising his record to 5-2. Herr's performance landed him with his second consecutive Big East Pitcher of the Week award. Herr's gain was Bennett's gain as well, as the coach left the field that day enshrined in Villanova history.

"I was aware of the record; it was one of those games you'll always remember," said Bennett. "Villanova has a big tradition in baseball, and I had played against ['Nova's previous record holder] Coach Mahan. It's an honor to be up there with him."

The Wildcats kicked off a doubleheader the following day with a 6-2 waltz over the Friars. On the mound, sophomore Dan Kusters was responsible for the heroics, surrendering only four hits. Junior Dan Mariniello and senior Kevin Armstrong carried the offensive load, each hitting two-run round-trippers.

However, the Cats' fine effort in game one is forever destined to seem melodramatic in the wake of their 14-12 win in the second game. Somewhere on a Providence parking lot, a Villanova-bound bus was warming up as the Wildcats entered the seventh inning trailing 12-6. But that bus driver should have spared the lovely city of Providence all the exhaust pollution.

Stanczak became the main performer in a drama that seemed straight out of a Hollywood script. It was the bottom of the ninth with two outs. The Cats were down 12-10 with a runner on third and Stanczak at the plate.

Some swore his line-drive home run never moved vertically before it hit a building on the distant P.C. campus. Some swore the ball would have killed any Friar foolish enough to try and thwart its progress out of the park.

"It was a dramatic, two-out, ninth inning blast; a gargantuan shot that was traveling, it seemed, at M.A.C.H. 5," said awestruck junior Alex DelVecchio. "The towering high-speed projectile landed about 500 feet away. It was reminiscent, at least to myself, of the patented Roy Hobbes homer in 'The Natural.' To put it bluntly, he knocked the cover off the ball."

A dumbfounded Providence team was utterly unable to counter Stanczakk's late-inning heroics, so freshman Larry Kleinz finished the Friars off with a two-run single to give the Cats the final 14-12 lead.

The Cats continued to ride the wave of winning momentum as they obliterated Lafayette 17-9 on April 20. Stanczak churned out two homers in the winning effort. Mariniello and freshmen Steve Young and Dave Marlow each had a home run as well.

"The whole team has really contributed recently," said Bennett. "Different people have been pitching in at different times."

The Wildcats face some tough Big East competition in the weeks to come, but chances are good that they will be one of the four teams invited to play in the Conference tournament May 18-21.

Lawson signs

V.U. His strengths lie in his penetrating ability and defensive skills.

"He likes to put the ball on the floor. He will compete for substantial time at both guard slots," said Pinone.

This writer sees Williams battling Roscoe Harris for a starting spot.

The coaching staff is also looking to solidify this class with a power forward. Last weekend, two 6-foot-8 rebounders visited 'Nova. Arthur Quarterman from Savannah, Ga. averaged 29 p.p.g., and 15 r.p.g. this year. The Daily News said he earned the reputation as a "rebounding machine at the Nike Camp." His college choice is between V.U. and Auburn. Kevin Ward from St. John's, Md. netted 13 p.p.g. and seven r.p.g this year. Ward is down to 'Nova, Alabama and James Madison. Both players' decisions are pending at the time of this writing. Quarterman should have announced his decision on April 22, and Ward on April 23. Villanova is in dire need of a strong rebounder. Should either player sign, look for that person to compete for substantial playing time.

Villanova's recruiting efforts this year should be applauded. The staff is looking to make the Cats an athletic, defensive-minded squad. This incoming class should help solidify that goal.

NOTES: The '93-94 basketball schedule is nearly set. According to Pinone, V.U. will play Temple and LaSalle at the Spectrum, St. Mary's (CA), and American at DuPont. It will play in a Christmas tourney at Arizona State, drawing Mississippi in the first game, and the winner/loser of Arizona St./Northern Arizona in the second game. In addition, the Cats should ink home-and-home series with two of these three teams: Notre Dame, Florida and Virginia. This should be a challenging schedule, to say the least.

As a senior, this marks my last basketball article for the Villanovan. The program has given me many memories, both good and bad. Villanova is and always will be a basketball school. This was a down year. Next year's young squad will gain valuable experience and may take its lumps. Coach Pinone on '93-94: "We look to improve upon this season, and hope the returnees step it up next year. We hope to get better every night."

As I move on to the real world, I hope the underclassmen keep their faith in the staff and team. Lappas is building a young, talented, athletic team that should and will develop into a successful one. Best wishes to the coaching staff and players.

Softball wins doubleheader

By TODD LESKANIC
Staff Reporter

After starting the season 9-9, the Villanova softball team has stumbled to a sub-.500 record, winning only four of its last 10. Lack of scoring has plagued the team as it scored only nine runs in the six losses.

The skid began on April 13 at LaSalle. The Explorers took game one by a score of 3-1, while holding the Cats to just seven hits. Still, 'Nova had many scoring chances and by the end of the game had left 12 runners on base. Sheri Howarth went 2-for-4 and knocked in the only run of the game for 'Nova. Sharon Palmieri continued to hit with a 2-for-3 performance.

Much of the same was true for the second game of the twin bill. The SoftCats managed only two hits, while getting shut out 1-0. Freshman Tina Sabunas was the hard-luck loser. She tossed six innings and gave up seven hits, while striking out six and walking none. Again Palmieri and Howarth provided the only 'Nova offense, each going 1-for-3.

The Cats then came home and took two from West Chester. In game one, they pounded out 12 hits en route to a 12-2 shellacking of the Rams, capped by a four-run fifth and an five-run sixth inning. Senior firstbaseman Christine Kolotac went 4-for-4, including two singles, a double, a triple and two RBIs to pace the offense. Howarth went 2-for-3 with three RBIs and two runs scored. Palmieri and Courtenay Gayeski both turned in 2-for-3 performances. Sabunas pitched five-plus innings, giving up one hit and striking out a school record 11 to notch the victory.

'Nova took game two by a 2-1 count. Palmieri went 1-for-2 with a run scored and Kim Bullock scored the winning run. Freshman Lisa Miller also had two singles. Sophomore Beth Woosnam pitched six innings and gave up only six hits and one run while striking out three to get the victory. Sabunas pitched the seventh to notch the save.

The winning would not last long, however, as the Cats got swept by Providence in a doubleheader on April 17. In game one, the lack of offense again wrought havoc with 'Nova as they went down, 5-0. The Friars held them to just five hits, while collecting 10 of their own. 'Nova's number two through five hitters were a combined 0-for-11 in the game. Palmieri was the only Cat with more than one hit, as she turned in another 2-for-3 showing. Sabunas took the loss for Villanova.

In the second game, the Friars had 10 hits and took advantage of three 'Nova errors to complete the sweep, 10-3. This time the offense managed seven hits, but the pitching failed the Cats. Leading the offense, again, was Palmieri with a 2-for-3 performance. Amy Pawloski, Kolatac, Miller and Carrie Dunn all managed a hit apiece. Pitcher Amy Meisinger suffered through a rare performance giving up six hits in four-plus innings. The errors really hurt 'Nova, however, as only four of the eight runs given up by Meisinger were earned.

The SoftCats stayed at home the following day and split two with Boston College. The Eagles took game one by a score of 5-3. The Cats had only five hits and left ten on base. Bullock went 2-for-3 with a run scored and freshman Michele Arico went 1-for-3 with a run scored to lead the offense. Meisinger pitched seven innings, giving up only four earned runs for the tough loss.

In game two, the Cats rebounded for the 4-1 victory. Sabunas pitched six innings, striking out seven and giving up only four hits. Sabunas also went 2-for-2 with a run and an RBI. Dunn also contributed as well, going 2-for-3 with 2 RBIs as did Woosnam, who went 2-for-3 with an RBI.

On April 19, the SoftCats played a doubleheader against St. John's for a place in the Big East playoffs. The Express won the first game 6-2 while holding 'Nova to just four hits. Dunn went 2-for-3 with 'Nova's only two RBIs. Game two was a must-win situation if the Cats expected to make the playoffs.

And that is just what they did. The SoftCats exploded for six runs in the third inning en route to a 9-2 whipping of St. John's. Kolatac went 2-for-4 with RBIs and Pawloski chipped in another two hits and two RBIs to lead the charge. Sabunas pitched a complete game and surrendered only three hits and no earned runs.

Women's track poised for Penn Relays

By SEAN KELLY
Staff Reporter

The coaching offices of Villanova's women's track and field staff have been somewhat sedated for the last few weeks as the entire organization has been setting its sights to this weekend's Penn Relays Carnival. Indeed their anxieties have been lingering heavily for what Head Coach Marty Stern calls "our season."

In some regards, the Penn Relays is not unlike a final recital for many of the nation's most talented programs. Of course the 65,000 some-odd people who flock to historic Franklin Field are interested in nothing less than running excellence.

If it was up to Stern, however, the final showdown might not be as crucial an event as this.

"Sometimes I think I'd like to be a music teacher but never have a recital," said Stern during the heat of the moment at Monday's intense practice.

It is not as if the Villanova mentor does not like competing in the illustrious relays; rather, the Wildcat leader is feeling pressure from all directions. Incidentally, Stern has been involved with the Penn Relays since high school. Even Stern admitted that "things have been getting rough."

Undoubtedly pressure is not a strong enough word to describe the constraint that Stern as well as assistant coaches John Marshall and Judy West are dealing with these days. To understand this entire ordeal, you must keep in mind the tremendous amount of tradition and pride Villanova University has in this annual event. The women's and men's teams have collected 101 Championship of America plaques between them dating back to 1955. This number is by far the most out of any program ever to participate in the competition. The Championship of America plaques overwhelm the narrow corridors leading to the duPont Pavilion. Surely the pressure is on to meet the standard of Villanova greatness that has been carried out for years.

"We have to show everyone how good we've gotten in the last year," Stern commented. "We have such a great tradition so this is it."

The "it," of course, is the season and the "this" is the Carnival. To put it in perspective, as Stern described, the Wildcat Club has a magnetic calendar that they send out to alumni. Three things make up the calendar including the basketball season, the football season and the Penn Relays Carnival. Obviously the alumni think this event is important, too.

We travelled to Arkansas to run fast and compete against the best competition we could find.
Head Coach Marty Stern

"It's really special to him. It's a big meet. He ran it in high school, college, and he's coached it," said senior Cheri Goddard about her coach. "I really enjoy the Penn Relays too. Even though it's exciting and there's a lot of pressure, it's exhilarating being an athlete out there, being competitive."

As for the competition itself, which actually started on April 22, the Villanova women will be competing in three events. The distance medley took place on April 22 with the Cats' main competitors being Wisconsin and fellow Big East members Georgetown. Reenie Ruopoli (1200 meter leg), Abby Hunte (400 meters), Tosha Woodward (800 meters), and Goddard (1600 meters) will compete in this race. Friday's crowd will witness the Cats running in the 4x1500 meter relay against talented Michigan and Georgetown programs. Becky Spies will run the first leg with Carole Zajac and Megan Flowers running the second and third. Goddard will run the anchor leg. 'Nova's final event will be the 4x800 meter relay on Saturday. Hunte, Woodward and Ruopoli will all be competing again with the fourth spot being held by either Goddard or freshman Nikki Shaw.

Much to the disappointment of the coaching staff and team, senior Nnenna Lynch will not be taking part in any of the races. Unfortunately, she has been suffering from asthma which has certainly hindered her abilities. Physically she is fine, however, her asthma problem is too overbearing at this point for her to compete.

"It's very upsetting that someone with that talent isn't able to show her talents to the 65,000 people that are going to be there. It's upsetting to me because it's upsetting to her," said Stern. "The problem doesn't have to do with winning or losing. I really feel sorry for Nnenna that she's not able to complete her career here the way she wanted to. I'm not giving up though and neither is she."

The lineup Villanova's women will carry into the Carnival is certainly talented enough to add to the superiority that distinguishes this program far above the rest. Competing in front of a home crowd as the definite crowd favorite is what Stern and his team thrive on. Indeed the pressure is on this weekend to perform, but yet another legendary performance from the Wildcats is very much in the making.

'Nova lands prized recruits

By PAT MEILER
Staff Reporter

The Villanova University men's basketball coaching staff received a huge shot in the arm when Jason Lawson, the 6-foot-10, 230 lb. center from Olney High and a member of the Philly Fab 5, signed a letter of intent to play basketball at V.U. on April 15. Lawson cancelled a press conference that morning, but later in the day solidified his decision. He donned a 'Nova sweatshirt to school the next day. Lawson netted 24.7 points, grabbed 14.9 boards, and swatted 8.2 shots per game in his senior season. Lawson, a national top-25 player, earned All-State honors as well. As has been documented, this coaching staff will be judged by its local recruiting efforts. With the signing of Alvin Williams and Lawson, this writer feels the staff has done a very good job.

Rasheed Wallace signed a letter to play at North Carolina. He has yet to achieve the 700 on his SAT. Should he fail in his remaining attempt, he will choose "either Temple or Villanova,". according to Dick Vitale.

Back to 'Nova. Lawson's signing in some ways restored some fans' hope for the future of Villanova basketball. Villanova needed Lawson. Lappas on Lawson: "We feel that he will become a premier big man in the conference." Assistant Coach Steve Pinone: "He's a top-flight recruit. He's a strong rebounder and shotblocker with range up to 15 feet. He has the stability to come in and have a chance to start."

This writer sees the Main Line as Mr. Lawson's Neighborhood. He may anchor the post for the next four years.

V.U. also received a written commitment from 6-foot-6 Zeffy Penn, a small forward who played high school in Harrisburg last year and prepped at Maine Central Institute this year. He averaged 14.7 p.p.g. Penn embodies the mold of a "Lappas" recruit.

"He is an athletic, well built, hard nosed defensive player who will compete for time at the three slot," said Pinone.

Penn has a nice inside/outside game.

Alvin Williams, the 6-foot-4 Germantown Academy point guard who verbally committed in the fall, signed last week. He averaged 22 p.p.g., eight r.p.g. and six a.p.g. this year. Williams, another Philly Fab-5 member, earned All-State honors as well. He is another Lappas prototype recruit — an athletic guard who will play both guard positions at

'Nova capitalizes at Arkansas meet

Senior half-miler Brad Sumner and sophomore miler Louie Quintana produced their fastest performances of the season for the Villanova men's track team at the April 10 Hot Springs Invitational in Arkansas, confirming their high levels of fitness for this weekend's Penn Relays.

Sumner provisionally qualified for the NCAA Championships with a second-place mark of 1:48 in the 800 meters, while Quintana automatically qualified for the NCAA's by winning the 1500 meters in a personal best time of 3:40.

The excellent results for the two middle-distance men could not have come at a better time of year for the Wildcats. This weekend at the University of Pennsylvania, Villanova will be looking to the pair as its backbone in three relays at the biggest event of the year.

At Hot Springs, Quintana captured a 1500 meter race that featured a few of the same Razorback runners who will make Arkansas the main favorite at the Penn Relays.

Following the pace-setting of Arkansas alumnus Joe Falcon, the world's No. 1-ranked miler in 1990, Quintana showed great style in turning back the Razorback group that was looking to follow Falcon to NCAA-qualifying times.

After spending the first three laps gradually moving from eighth into second, Quintana found the explosion to jump away from the pack 300 meters from the finish. None in the field had the finishing strength to challenge Quintana, as runnerup Michael Morin of Arkansas could come no closer than 1.66 seconds behind.

Quintana's finishing time of 3:40.9 was the equivalent of a 3:58 mile.

Meanwhile, in the 800 meters, Sumner came through with another of his powerful efforts down the backstretch, nearly overtaking winner John Schmitz of Iowa St., who finished a half second ahead in 1:47.

Following Sumner's lead, freshman Scott Whiteman also made a strong charge down the final straightaway of that race, placing third in a personal best time of 1:49.

Head Coach Marty Stern cited both Sumner and Quintana for their excellent runs.

"Brad Sumner appears ready to run at any level successfully," said Stern, "and Louie Quintana was awesome in winning the first major race of his career."

Also enjoying encouraging results in Arkansas was a group of Wildcats that competed in the 1500 meters. That group was led by junior Mike Going and sophomore Ken Nason, who secured seventh and eighth for Villanova with outstanding respective times of 3:47 and 3:48.

Sophomore Kyle Watson, meanwhile, ran 3:51 to take 14th, while freshman Kevin Christiani was 18th in 3:55.

Also in the meet, sophomore David Seung ran 15:15 in his first 5000 meter race of the season, while Chuck Silvester took 14th in the 400 meters in 49.05.

"We travelled to Arkansas to run fast and compete against the best competition we could find, and the athletes responded to the mission of the trip very positively and successfully," said Stern.
